Yesterday there arrived here a kinsman of mine named James Davie, of Lyme Regis, who, being taken the last year by Sallee men-of-war, hath been a miserable captive in Sallee this 12 month, and being redeemed, for a great ransom, he came from thence. He reports movements of Turkish ships about the Land's End. There are in Sallee 870 English, Scots and Welshmen, who had conspired to have persuaded the Turks to have come into the Channel with their forces united, where they might carry away good store of people and booty. Hearing they might be redeemed this summer they have desisted, but if they be not, they vowed they will invite the Turks to do mischief in these western parts.

1636, May 20. (Date endorsed.) Viscount Conway and Kilulta to Sir J. Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary of State.

To-morrow we set sail for the west. Captain Carteret in the Happy Entrance is left here, and Captain Slingsby in a pinnace, any Dunning in the Dunkirk frigate, for the securing of the sea in this part, and a Merchant with two Whelps, whereof one is sent to convoy Colonel Goring into the Low Countries, shall stay here. I am sorry to hear of the insolency committed by the Dutch in taking a frigate of Dunkirk out of a harbour. The Whelp wherein Sir Ellis Hicks is captain is sent to Portsmouth to be mended of a very great leak.

1636, May 23. At the Court at Hampton Court.—Tho. Aylesbury.

Reference to Mr. Secretary Coke of the petition of Thomas Nethway and Edward Arundel, English merchants of Bristol, for means into France for redelivery of their ship, originally Dutch, taken by the Dunkirkers and sold there, and purchased by the petitioners, and on a voyage from Norway to Bristol taken by a French man-of-war and detained at Calais.

1636, May 24.—Indorsed, "Complaints of some English pillaged."

William Tomkins, master of the barque Charles of Southampton, freighted with High Country wines bound for London, pillaged betwixt Beche (Beechy) and Farelee by a French man-of-war, of Calais, being a sloop of 15 or 16 tons, having one piece of ordnance of iron and about 30 men, one being an old man with a great nose and a brand beard, being very black as if it were a Turk.

James Nugent, Walter Davis, Bartholomew Hadsor pillaged in a pinck called the John of London off the North Foreland by a sloop of Calais with some 25 men, who took from James Nugent in gold, jewels and his apparel and his wife's, which was stripped to her very smock and linen, to the sum of 70*l.*

1636, May 24. Hampton Court.—Weckherlin to Sir J. Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary to His Majesty.

Since your Honour's departure, the Court is so small, and the King so much at leisure, that I wish your Honour had rather past the time here than there. His Majesty signed all the licences yesterday, and I have sent them to Mr. Nicholas this day, and having gotten by Mr. Pitcairne (as to whom, being His Majesty's master falconer, or master of the hawks, it properly belongs) a licence to fly upon a setting dog for Sir Wm. Brereton, he will present the same to your Honour for the signet unto it. Order is given to Sir John Finet to find out some house out of London for the Poland Ambassador, who is said to be very much afraid to be in a town or place infected or suspected. It is said here that the Duke of Bouillon is come to London in hope to get passage into Holland. This day (being Sermon day) the Court was only increased by the Earl of Salisbury, Earl of Bristol, and some few Knights who are now again going away.

COKE MSS.

1636, May 24. Hampton Court.—Henry Rich, Earl of Holland, to Sir Frances Windebank, Knight, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State.

Sir Pierce Crosby may be discharged from the custody of the messenger, and may travel into France according to His Majesty's licence, he first giving caution for his return into England within one month after His Majesty's command.

1636, May 26. Tilbury.—Sir Henry Palmer to Sir John Coke.

The Anne is weighed, we may stop her leak and bring her into any Dock and make her serviceable. The sickness is come into Gravesend; four houses shut up.

1636, May 30. Hampton Court.—Weckherlin to Sir J. Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary to His Majesty.

Presenting this morning unto His Majesty's signature the order your Honour had drawn, His Majesty hath caused me to write the same again, with an addition that he would have all the keys of the lodgings and chambers to be delivered up into the keeper's of the house his hands. For the gentlemen that were about the King said that the last sickness time almost all the chambers there were broken into and robbed; whereupon the King did say, That the keeper should be answerable for all those that he did or should receive the keys of.

1636, May 30. On board His Majesty's Royal Ship Triumph, riding before Plymouth.—Algernon Percy, Earl of Northumberland. [No address.]

I am this night going on towards the West. If you send any commands to me, I think Falmouth will be the readiest place to have them conveyed unto me.

1636, May 30.—Edward Reed to Sir J. Coke, Knight, [the Younger], at his house at Melbourne.

I am sorry to hear that the falcon which I brought down is not like to show herself in her fogle apparel this summer; yet she may prove herself a strong hawk, and be fully mewed for the river flying, though not for the fight. I will do my best to provide you of a falconer: I will be well informed both of his behaviour and sufficiency. I am glad you intend a more near conveniency for your sport, it will make you more in love with so gentlemanlike a recreation, and I hope to attend you at some of it. An ambassador is to arrive today from Poland: the match between the King and the Queen of Bohemia's daughter is like to be speedily concluded. The sickness doth increase. My humble service unto my Lady Coke.

1636, June 2. On board the Triumph, over against the Lizard.—Algernon Percy, Earl of Northumberland. "For your Lordships" (of the Council).

Has plied to and again at the Lizard, now going to Scilly. Fleet strengthened by 6 ships; 8 Holland men of war avoided them, as they had done us. Captain Kirke brought to me a French shallop whom he found chasing of a small English bark upon our coast. I have sent the shallop to the vice-admiral at Plymouth. I send the complaints of some of His Majesty's subjects that have been lately pillaged by the shallops of Calais and Ostend. I understand by some English that were now taken by us from the Captain of the Black Bull of Amsterdam that this John Van Gallen is he that about a year since committed the insolency at Scarborough.

1636, June 3. Aboard His Majesty's ship Entrance, riding in the Downs.—Captain G. Carterett. [No address.]

Being in Dover Road there came unto me one Mr. Thomas Witherings (who is also called Postmaster General) for to have Captain Dunning's vessel to carry him over for Calais having a packet (as he said) from your Honour to my Lord Ambassador at Paris. I told him he should have the Roebuck, or I would go over with him myself. I desired him to show me the packet, but he told me he would neither show me order nor packet: he began to use me in very rough and coarse language, notwithstanding that I did use him with all the civility I could. I have heard that he had never a packet, but only went over to Calais about his own businesses. He gave out that he doth belong to your Honour. I am now ready to set sail to convoy a fleet of 16 sails for Dunkirk.

1636, June 7. Long Acre.—Sir Filibert Vernatt to Sir John Coke.

I ask a letter from the King to the Commissioners of Sewers for Hatfield Chase that my lands may be restored, and that I do not sustain any prejudice during my enforced absence. I have taken sufficient care that my scots be paid. I hope you have remembered to speak to the Lord Treasurer concerning my offer of 4,000*l.* per annum for one circuit to reform the abuses of maltmaking.

1636, June 8. Hereford.—Harb. Westfaling to Sir John Coke.

I am glad that my poor endeavour may be available to our new worthy Lord Bishop Elect (Dr. George Coke), whose tenant I am. As concerning Hampton Stanke, I acquainted Mrs. Field the Stanke would be a dilapidation; it has been agreed that 30*l.* would repair all decays, and I will see it shall be well done.

1636, June 9. The Groyne.—Copy of Captain Steward's letter to my Lord Aston.

The resident of Spain in England told me that all the money that was to pass hence at this time to Flanders should embark in my ship. My Lord Cottington and Mr. Secretary Windebank told me that Mr. Horton must share with me. I entreat your Lordship to move the Conde Duque that I may not suffer in my due.

1636 June 12. Compton.—Grevill Verney to Sir John Coke.

I am bound to you for answering heartily in my behalf at the Council concerning the neglect objected of not returning with more speed the ship money. About 200*l.* rests in our hands, and we are in prosecution to gather more, having sent out a warrant to distrain.

1636, June 12. Duchy House.—Lord Newburgh (Edward Barrett) to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

Give me leave to recommend Sir Lorenzo Carey. I beseech you be a means for him to put the King in mind of the merits of his unfortunate deceased father. That way he hopes His Majesty's goodness may be inclined to reflect upon the low condition that he is in, and to enable him to do him better service: for the young gentleman hath very good spirits and hopeful parts in him. And here my suit must not end. I must also beg your pardon for this trouble: but for my presumption of your favour, I will never disavow it, so long as you will allow me to be your faithful humble servant.

COKE MSS.

1636, June 16.—Endorsed, "The Lord Bishop of Lincoln's reasons for his denial of Institution."

— to Dr. Clare, bringing a presentation under the Great Seal, and the King's letter, to the Rectory of Hinxworth in Hertfordshire, viz., two Caveats (impediments in the Canon Law) entered by and for the Viscountess of Dorchester, and a Ne admittas, issued out of the Chancery (an impediment at Common Law), whereof the King's letter takes no notice.

1636, June 18. London.—Art. Hopton [to Sir John Coke. No address].

According to the significations I have received from your Honour of His Majesty's pleasure for my speedy going to Brussels, I am purposed to send a servant thither to make such provisions as are usual in the like occasions. The bearer hereof is the man. I should be glad he might carry your Honour's letter to Mr. Gerbier that he may see the general concurrence in His Majesty's service. And if there be anything else for your Honour's particular service both mine and myself shall always be ready.

1636, June 19.—Captain W. (?) Steuart to "My honourable Lord."

What concerneth your commands touching the passage in our ship a gentlewoman, in obedience to your Lordship, as also by my own inclination which hath been always ready to serve ladies, shall not be negligent to obey your Lordship: notwithstanding the great company I shall have, not only of an ambassador and his train, but also a great lady the Condes of Sevia and hers, who hath at least in women a ii besides men servants. As touching the other part of your commands I am sorry that I cannot serve you; and if I had known your mind a little sooner, I could have supplied out of my own private store, which are all gone three weeks agone that I have not three pair left. [Urges his claim to transport all the money to Flanders in his ship only, and requests that the Conde Duca may be moved in his behalf.] I shall leave this wholly to your Lordship's favour and industry which, if all will not do, I will express my sense so far forth, that as I came alone I will return alone. My commission is only to attend the ambassador, but to consort with none in that which may endanger King's ships in the company of such that hath so many strong enemies. Notwithstanding of the ambassador being here and his readiness to go, I will not stir hence till I hear from your Lordship touching this business.

1636, June 21. Welbeck.—William Cavendish, Earl of Newcastle, to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary to His Majesty.

There is a suit commenced against Mr. Cooper (and others) a very worthy gentleman and good friend of mine in the Court of Requests by one Susan Purslowe (in forma pauperis), and it is for some land in his possession, and wherein he hopes to make it appear that he hath a good estate, if the large testimony of a desperate witness of no reputation do not prejudice his right. I have taken the boldness to write to my Lord Privy Seal, and to move his Lordship to accept of the testimony of some witnesses of good reputation for the approbation of the truth in Mr. Cooper's behalf, and of the misinformation of his adversaries. I entreat you will for my sake promote this humble suit of his to my Lord Privy Seal, and allow him your respect therein. I am the more earnest because I know him to be a most honest, modest gentleman, and free from offering the least injury to any.

1636, June 22.—Series agendorum in præsentatione Authenticæ Codicis Statutorum. (Oxford.)

1. Mr. Secretary Coke, &c. deliver his Majesty's letter to Mr. Vice-Chancellor in Convocation.
2. Those being read the Vice-Chancellor produces his Grace's letters.
3. After them his Grace's (the Archbishop of Canterbury) confirmation of the Statutes, and then his Majesty's are read.
4. Then Mr. Secretary, &c. speak to the Convocation.
5. Then Mr. Vice-Chancellor speaks.
6. After that the Heads of Houses proceed to subscription and take the oath, the Vice-Chancellor exacting it.

(1636, June).—A paper endorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Effect of His Majesty's letter to Oxford."

Headed The effect of His Majesty's letters to the University.

. . . The Statutes of the University being by His Majesty's order and command compiled into a body he hath confirmed them under his seal to add the more strength and authority to them. And for the procuring more respect and obedience unto them he hath appointed the Reverend Father in God John Lord Bishop of Oxford and his Principal Secretary Sir John Coke, Henry Marten, Knight, and Judge of the Admiralty and Prerogative, and Thomas Ryves his Advocate and Doctor of the Civil Law, to let them understand his pleasure that they shall conform themselves to these statutes, and to that end to take an acknowledgment from the several Heads of Houses under their hands that they accept of those Statutes as the rule by which they shall be governed and govern. . . . .

1636, June 24. Leadbury.—John Phillipps to Sir John Coke.

Asks that his son, a four years Master of Arts, may be recommended to the Bishop of Hereford for his Chaplain or some preferment.

1636, June 25. The Earl of Stirling's house.—John Erskine, Earl of Mar, to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary of England.

Having heard that the Lord Deputy is come over of late, I am to entreat your favour to let me hear from you by the first occasion when you think His Majesty will resolve anent the plantation in Ireland; for upon advertisement I intend God willing to attend His Majesty how schone (soon) I can. I entreat you to put his Majesty in mind of me, that I may have a good large proportion, whereby I may be the more enabled to do His Majesty service, and in recompence of your favour I shall not fail to express my thankfulness.

(1636). Indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Captain Steward's Journal."

In obedience to His Majesty's commands I here present to your Honour a short and true journal of my voyage into Spain with my return. Upon the 4th of April 1636 I received a Warrant from my Lord Admiral to go aboard His Majesty's ship called the Victory, and to be ready with what speed might be to fetch over the Spanish Ambassador. Upon the 14th of the same I went aboard, and was within three hours after under sail to steer my course for the Groyne, where we arrived the 28th of that instant. My stay at the Groyne was until the last of June; the occasion of this long stay was the Ambassador's sickness. So soon as he and his company were aboard me, the next day after we set sail, and upon the 8th of July we arrived in the Downs. By leave of my Lord Admiral I came to Court myself to learn His Majesty's pleasure. I took the boldness to acquaint His Majesty with the sense of the Spaniards concerning the one and a half per centum which they said was more than ever had been formerly taken. His Majesty's answer was that I should not trouble myself for he would give order to my Lord Treasurer and my Lord Cottington, who understood it better. The next day after there was sent to my lodging from their Lordships two letters, the one for my Lord Admiral and the other for the Customer. My purser brought the Deputy Customer aboard me, who demanded according to his Privy Seal one and a half per centum, in lieu of which I delivered to him five chests of the best coined plate, with a declaration that for what was remaining I would account to him at my return. Then he pressed his own fees, which I inquiring of my master concerning, and finding they did not belong to him, I refused them, until further information. For the account itself, the best way to clear that will be by the bills of receipt at the Groyne and the acquittance at the unlading at Dunkirk, which I have all ready to produce; and concerning the truth of them, if His Majesty have any doubt, the master, the purser, and myself are ready to make oath, though I believe the like inquisition hath not been usual to any Captain trusted with his Majesty's ships.

Coke MSS

1636, June 27.—Endorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Plate transported."

"A particular of the plate transported from the Groyne in His Majesty's ship the Victory." Laden aboard in Royals of 8 and in bars, 459 chests.

Notes by Sir J. Coke.—The King's part of 459 chests 1½ p. c. came to six chests each 20,000 reals (and 12^{m}200 reals). Monies are of two stamps: the Civil (Seville?) stamp is the best worth 4*s.* 5*d.*; the Peru stamp worth but 4*s.* farthing.

1636, June 28. On board your Majesty's ship Triumph, now riding at the Downs.—Algernon Percy, Earl of Northumberland. "For His Majesty."

We are here expecting to receive the honour of your Majesty's commands, for it is now time that we look after the fishing business. But I am doubtful whether your Majesty will think fit to leave these seas without the whole fleet until the French designs be known; and if we go not within a few days to the Northward, I do not perceive that we can perform that service without much danger to your Majesty's ships: of this I have written at large to the Lords Commissioners.

(1636?) Endorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Part of the instructions for the Earl of Northumberland."

We challenge the guarding of all these seas as our proper right exclusively to all others . . . This guarding and protection is chiefly to be performed by scouring all our seas from pirates, rovers, and men-of-war of what nation soever; And whereas the inveterate extremities of the wars betwixt the crown of Spain and the United Provinces have produced innovations contrary to justice and all laws and treaties, by seizing and confiscating the persons, ships and goods, of common friends trading with their enemies . . . for which they pretend their own temporary edicts . . . we following the worthy example of our progenitors require you to oppose and vindicate such wrongful restraint of trade either by recovering what shall be so taken, or by way of reprisal.

The fishing betwixt the English and French coasts the French King acknowledgeth to belong unto us by taking licences from the Warden of our Cinque Ports to fish there for his own provision, which is granted with limitation only to twelve boats, which are to fish under our protection . . . For the herring fishing along our British coasts, though we do not absolutely prohibit our neighbours to partake with us in God's abundant blessings in this kind, yet we require you so to regulate them by your power and discretion, first that our own subjects may have precedence and advantage for their better encouragement in the fishing trade; and secondly, that you suffer none to fish save only such as do homage and take licence from us.

1636, June 29.—H. Palmer, Ken. Edisbury, Den. Flemyng, Phinees Pett, Officers of the Navy, to the Lords and other Commissioners of the Admiralty of England.

We conceive that we cannot have such meet trees to convert into treenails and cloveboards as may be had in His Majesty's own woods in the New Forest in the County of Southampton, and therefore we desire your Honours to be pleased to procure a Warrant from the Lord Treasurer and Under Treasurer of His Majesty's Exchequer to the Earl of Holland, Lord Chief Justice in Eyre of His Majesty's forests and parks on this side Trent, for the felling of 500 fitting trees.

1636, July 4. Oatlands.—Weckherlin. "For your Honour." [Sir John Coke.]

I here send back the bill touching my Lord Viscount of Hereford signed by His Majesty: and a packet to Mr. Rustorf containing some letters from the Prince Elector to some Electors in Germany [Other letters to various persons]. The King hath now commanded me to prepare a letter from him to a Marquis of Brandenburg for the Elks, which are to be brought from Prussia hither; and another letter to the Prince of Orange for his favour and countenance to a merchant that goes hence to redeem some of His Majesty's jewels. Now the Elector sends another letter written to the King of Spain to be sent under your cover to our Ambassador there. Here is Sir Peter Wentworth also an humble suitor to your honour that you would be pleased to let him have an effectual reference upon his petition in the words as he hath caused me to set it down; and to have the petition so apostilled sent back to him hither. I heartily crave pardon for this haste, pray for your Honour's constant health and happiness, and long for the time that I may wait and continue with you as your Honour's truly loving, honouring and obedient servant.

Reference desired for Sir Peter Wentworth. His Majesty's pleasure is that the order made at Oxford by Sir Nathaniel Brent annexed to this petition shall stand in force [and the seats therein mentioned be taken down accordingly. Whereof the Churchwardens taking notice are to see the execution]. For the passage within brackets there is substituted by Sir J. Coke "or if the Churchwardens or any other forbear to do their duties therein, that the Lord Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield take order therein, and settle the difference in a peaceable manner without further suit in law."

1636, July 4. Petition of Theophilus Howard, Earl of Suffolk, to the King.

Your Majesty was pleased by Sir James Oughterlony to give directions to Lord Cottington for settling of the debts due from your

COKE MSS.

Petitioner to your Majesty and to your Petitioner from your Majesty. My Lord Cottington was unwilling to make such allowances, defalcations and payments as was directed by your Majesty, in regard your Majesty hath since appointed a Lord High Treasurer of England. Your Petitioner's debts to your Majesty being defalked hath exposed his whole estate to be extended and thereby himself ruined.

At the Court at Oatlands, 4th July 1636. Referred to the Lord Treasurer and Lord Cottington. (Signed) J. Coke.

Report of William Juxon, Bishop of London, and Lord Cottington. The debts to your Majesty from the Earl of Suffolk are proven due for subsidies granted in parliament and for fee farm rents of lands which he holds from the Crown. The debt which he claims from your Majesty is the remain of a privy seal, in which there is given him of mere grace 5,000*l*. Your Majesty may be pleased to consider how precisely your fee farm rents and your subsidies ought to be paid unto you, and not to be defalked or failed upon any pretence whatsoever, and therefore your Majesty's ministers have avoided this dangerous example. For failing in his recognizance, the Extents are now gone out against him, but instead of payment he returns again and petitions to your Majesty, desiring that he should pay you with defalcation, which we do not conceive to be fitting nor just.

1636, July 5. Oatlands.—The King to the Lord Deputy of Ireland. (Copy.)

We are given to understand that the castle, manor, town and lands of Castle Kevyn, and the whole territory or precinct called the Feartry, alias Ferter (Vartry), in the County of Wicklow, in our Kingdom of Ireland, with all the lands, tenements, and hereditaments thereunto belonging, or enjoyed as part or parcel thereof, by whatsoever names they be known or distinguished, are in our gift and disposal in the right of our Crown. Our will and pleasure is, and we do hereby authorize and require you upon receipt hereof, to cause one or more effectual grant or grants to be made by advice of our learned counsel and passed under our great seal there, unto our right trusty and well beloved councillor Sir John Coke, Knight, one of our Principal Secretaries of State, and his heirs, in consideration of his good and faithful service to us and our Crown, of the said castle, manor, town, and lands of Castle Kevyn and the whole territory or precinct called the Feartry, alias Ferter, with all lands, tenements, and hereditaments thereunto belonging or enjoyed as part or parcel thereof, by whatsoever names they are known or distinguished, in our said County of Wicklow, the same to be held by the former tenure, and reserving unto us for the premises the yearly rent of fifty pounds sterling, together with such other clauses as are usual in grants of the like nature. And for so doing these our letters shall be unto you our Deputy now being as unto any other our Deputy, Chief Governor or Governors, Chancellor or Keeper of our Great Seal there, that hereafter for the time being shall be, and to all other our officers and ministers whom it may concern sufficient warrant and discharge. Given under our Signet at our Court at Oatland.

1636, July 8. On board your Majesty's ship Triumph, now in the Downs. — Algernon Percy, Earl of Northumberland. "For His Majesty."

I have received a signification of your Majesty's pleasure from the Lords Commissioners for my going to the Northward. Two of the lesser ships I have left in the West to secure them from the Turks that haunt those coasts. I conceive your Majesty intends I shall likewise leave some ships here for the guard of these seas, and for convoying such as shall desire it. Your Majesty was pleased to command me to make stay of some frigates of Calais, resolving by that course to take satisfaction for the Ketch they seized on; this hath been performed. I do now humbly desire to know whether the ships I leave here shall look after any more of them or not.

1636, July 9.—Thomas Smythe to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary to His Majesty.

I pereceived by your Honour's words yesterday that Mr. Burrell had been with you desiring satisfaction, which I cannot give him except I might see his leases of the wharves, and have his engines and lighters valued and delivered, which he himself hinders. If the patent may pass I will deposit 200*l.* or 3 to be clearly given to the Burrell's, and pay for their engines as they are now worth after 15 years use, that so the service may proceed, for if it must not pass without them it will never be done at all.

1636, July 10. Plymouth.—Thomas Cramppone, Mayor, to the Lords of His Majesty's most honourable Privy Council.

This day there arrived here one John Dennell, Master of a barque of Salcombe lately taken near Mount's Bay, together with three other English barques, by a Turkish man-of-war, whose examination, with the examination of William Whyte, Master of a ship belonging to Eredagh in Ireland (who speak of much other mischief and hurt of late done by the Turks on the coast, and much more like to be done without timely prevention) your Lordships shall here inclosed receive.

1636, July 13.—William Juxon, Bishop of London (Lord Treasurer), and Francis Lord Cottington to Mr. Braems, His Majesty's Customer at Dover, or in his absence to his Deputies at Dover. (A copy.)

Whereas there is lately come out of Spain great sums of money consigned over to Dunkirk for the use of that King, with plate and treasure, we command you with all diligence to go aboard all such ships as have brought any the aforesaid moneys, plate, or treasure, and thereupon to levy His Majesty's duties; and we require you to be careful to give all expedition and due despatch in this service to the end those persons of quality which lie aboard those ships may find all due respects in the hastening their departure.

According to these directions I have been aboard of His Majesty's ship the Victory, and received the duties of Captain Walter Steward for the silver by him brought from Spain and exported to Dunkirk, this 21st of July.—(Signed) JACOB BRAEMS, Cust^r.

1636, July 13. Canterbury, 11 o'clock at night.—W. Steuart to Mr. Braems, His Majesty's Customer at Dover.

I have sent you here inclosed a letter from my Lord Treasurer. I pray you slake no time, since these persons of quality are impatient of their stay. I am going hence to be aboard with all the speed I can to give order for bringing our anchors aboard betimes, that we may be gone by six in the morning. I shall desire you to be there before 4.

Dover, July 14.—Mr. Winsor. This letter came not till 8 o'clock this morning. Mr. Braems thought fit to send to you to the end you may go suddenly to the ship for the business.—TIMO: FAUNT.

1636, July 14. The Triumph. Lord Conway and Kilulta to Sir John Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary of State.

We shall be gone from hence with all expedition. My Lord of Northumberland would not have stayed, if he had not been much persuaded by the Vice-Admiral, Rear-Admiral, and the Captain of his ship. First there came hither a command from the King by a letter of my Lord of Holland to stay the Spanish money, upon which Mr. Stuart went to the Court: afterwards letters came from the Commissioners of the Admiralty and from you to command the stay. This morning Mr. Stuart is come with a command from the Lord Treasurer and my Lord Cottington for the discharge of it, so he is gone to Dunkirk. I would gladly know, it being lawful for the French to take prohibited goods, whether it be lawful for the King's ships to carry prohibited goods. I believe that what the Spanish Ambassador brings will be still in the clouds, for he will never tell you plainly that the Palatinate shall not be restored. I think the Dutch will not fight with us.

1636, July 16. Weybridge.—Sir Richard Yonge to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

The King told me he never intended to make Mr. Myne any new officer in the Chancery, for the decree of the Star Chamber and my letters patent hath made him uncapable of an office. My Lord Keeper told me that he had speech with the King and my Lord's Grace of Canterbury (being prepared by me) touching this new intended office for Mr. Myne which my Lord Cottington doth so much advance, and my Lord Keeper told me His Majesty was satisfied and content to stay it. Yesterday I was with Mr. Attorney, and he thought there was reason to make no grant of such a new officer; but advised me to get some signification of the King's pleasure unto him, that he should grant him his privileges of a chancery man, but not to make him a new officer: in performance whereof I have drawn a draft of a letter to signify the King's pleasure, not to give him any power of an officer to examine and review any accompt there, and sent it here inclosed praying you very humbly to get it despatched, for Myne makes haste. Sir, Myne doth vex me, and I trouble you, but I shall take time to deserve all your favours towards me.

1636, July 17. Richmond.—Sir Robert Pye to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary.

You know of what importance Burlamachi his accounts are to His Majesty both in honour and profit. His public declaration upon His Majesty going into Scotland will testify (made by his late Treasurer) in point of honour. His great and exorbitant demand for exchanges, factorage and negotiating both in the French account and in the Jewels will appear above 20,000*l.*, besides interests and gifts, in all little less than 80,000*l.* more. The diversion of payment in the Ordnance, which patent was granted to sell merely for redeeming of jewels, and converted to pay all arrears, as Colonel Morgan for one, also in the French accounts, divers payments allowed to him, and not paid the parties, as Earl of Holland, Treasurer Edmonds, Lady Duchess, with divers others. I know the Lord Treasurer doth make a query, and if you do not by some means by my Lord of Canterbury or yourself give him caution, you know one will slyly bring it about with your fellow Secretaries' help and the Lord Treasurer's Secretary, who doth not understand and is very forward. Calendrini was accused by Garrett that he said and published in the Low Countries that His Majesty did but use Burlamachi to cover his wants, or such like words, which he never answered, only a stout denial.

1636, July 19. Tottenham.—Sir John Coke to the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury. (Draft.)

This inclosed letter came yesterday to my hands. The importance of the business and honest heart of the writer and the interest we have in His Majesty's service with the trust we had of late in the Treasury make me desire you both to give such caution to the Lord Treasurer as the case requires, and to give me advice whether it be not necessary at my going to Court to impart to His Majesty the contents of the letter. I am of Sir Robert Pye's mind that not only His Majesty's profit but his honour is much concerned in it. And for my Lord Treasurer to be drawn to the passing of such allowances, sums, and accounts which have had no regular proceeding nor authentical warrant, specially if they now procure warrants ex post facto to make the King the author of his own prejudice, both now and hereafter may prove more dangerous to his Lordship than I know your Grace will think fit to pass without warning. If this account be shuffled up and discharge gotten from the King it may prove of as bad consequence to his service as the posting away of the Spanish money is like to be. Pardon my zeal, which love and oath do bind me to. Before I came to Windsor I spake with the Bishop of Lincoln concerning the Dutch Church in Vernacks Draining. His answer is that five years since Vernack moved him for a license, but his answer was that except they would conform themself to our common prayer book and follow our liturgy he would never permit them within his diocese to officiate otherwise. I have sent word to the Lord Mayor that their committees may attend your Lordships at Star Chamber on Friday norning at eight o'clock, and I send the reference here indorsed to your Grace.

1636, July 22.—Endorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Copy to Mr. Westphaling for the Bishop of Hereford."

When I dwelt in those parts, as I knew you for your worth, so I had the favour of some acquaintance with you by the means of common friends. Out of this ancient interest I take occasion to recommend unto you the continuance to my brother the Bishop of Bristol, whom His Majesty hath now designed to the Bishopric of Hereford, that care of his affairs for the present which you have been pleased to afford to his predecessors. Your friend and mine Mr. Boughton telleth me that no man is so well informed in all things which may concern him in the whole extent of that place as yourself. Particularly in the present reparation of Hampton Stanck, which will multiply charge above measure if it be not finished in this summer season. What you shall therein disburse shall be satisfied to the full. I will be glad of any occasion whereby I may desire this favour of you.

[The above written within a letter dated 22 July 1631 from W. Moorhead to Sir J. Coke, respecting bills of exchange drawn upon him by my Lord Ambassador Sir George Douglas, to be repaid by his bill of extraordinaries.]

1636, July 24. Aboard His Majesty's ship Happy Entrance, riding in the Downs.—Captain G. Carterett to the Lords Commissioners for the Admiralty.

The postmaster of Deal told me he recived two packets for my Lord Admiral, both which he has sent by Captain Steward, who went this morning after the Fleet. The French Fleet at Belle Isle, consisting of about 60 sails, not above 12 or 13 to be reckoned good ships, reported to be coming for the coast of Flanders. Mr. Skinner, a merchant of Dover, wrote me there is come a passage from Calais to Dover, with them three Englishmen that had lately been taken by a small Turk man-of-war of 37 Turks mingled with other nations which were cast away near the river of Somme (betwixt Dieppe and Boulogne); the three English coming ashore were stript by the French and turned off almost naked. They told Mr. Skinner there were two others the like vessels which hovered up and down betwixt England and France, and that they heard a report of twenty sail more that were to come upon the French coast. I am to set sail to-morrow to play to and again betwixt Dover, Calais, and Dunkirk.

COKE MSS.

1636, July 25. Bishop Auckland.—Thomas, Bishop of Durham, Thomas Tempest, John Conyers, George Tong, Thomas Burwell, T. Swinburn, John Richardson, H. Vane, William Belasys, John Savile, Ferd. Morecroft, Ralph Allenson (Mayor), and Hugh Wright to the Lords of the Privy Council.

The Council charged the Counties of Northumberland and Durham with the carriage of 3,000 loads of timber from Brancepeth and Chepwell for the building of a ship, and afterwards granted the assistance of Cumberland, Westmorland and the North Riding of Yorkshire. The Justices of Durham humbly request that some present course may be taken with the rest of the Counties for the paying of their proportionate parts.

1636, July 27.—William Juxon, Bishop of London, Lord Treasurer. "For your Honour.' (Received at Rufford.)

His Grace informed me of an advertisement of yours touching Burlamachi's accounts. [States his objections to the double search referred to him.] These reasons with my former of my being altogether unversed in these accounts have made me presume to return the consideration of their allowance or disallowance to His Majesty. What Burlamachi hath already by Privy Seals, and we have seemed to allow, cometh almost to 70,000*l.*, and what he pretends unto to 147,000*l.*: whereas His Majesty, in Burlamachi's protection, declares that he failed and the State owed him little. He often appeals to his Majesty's own remembrance. Whoever makes haste in passing this account, I shall not in paying or assigning it, till his Majesty's occasions make me fitter. The business of the powder I had much ado to order. Evelyn's contracts must be ended before Cordwell's be on foot. You may please to signify to His Majesty that, if it be his pleasure those new contractors have supplies (of saltpetre) to set on work their new mill, I must necessarily have some signification of his pleasure to warrant me.

1636, July 28.—William Perkins to Sir J. Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary to His Majesty, at Court.

These letters, brought by a gentleman of the Lady Vere's from the Queen of Bohemia at the Hague to the Prince Elector, I should have presented, had it been fit for me to have appeared at Court in this time of danger. Asks favour to his suit to the King for satisfaction of the debts due to Sir Dodmer Cotton and Captain Walter Reynell; the one died in Persia, the other slain at the Isle of Rhé, the sum of both being 407*l.* Asks to be satisfied by some small portion of land in Connaught in the intended plantation. Your Honour did promise to do me good for satisfaction of that debt of Mr. Leigh, which I have now stayed for eleven years. Now the opportunity being so fairly offered, his Lordship the Deputy being here and your Honour having the principal hand in that business, I presume that the Lord Deputy will the rather hearken to it, for that I am known to his Lordship by the recommendation of my Lord Clifford, when I was in Ireland two years since. My most humble prayer is that your Honour would be pleased to cast a favourable eye upon your servant and his long stay and patience to the gentleman indebted to him.

1636, July 30.—William Juxon, Bishop of London, Lord Treasurer. "For your Honour." (Received at Rufford.)

His Majesty at his departure gave me express order for the despatch of Job Herbey (Harbie) for bringing home his jewels. The Commission gave him assignments for 47,000*l.* We gave order for his Privy Seal for 7,500*l.*; but since there hath arisen a further demand of 12,000*l.*, and another of 13,000*l.*, which sums were owing to Calendrini from Burlamachi; and until these sums were paid him he would not deliver those jewels were in his custody. It was shown Burlamachi had commission to pawn and repawn the jewels as often as he listed. His Majesty was informed, and was pleased to say since he had given commission to Burlamachi to pawn them the 12,000*l.* must be paid; and I assure you the payment of the 13,000*l.* also was pressed hard upon me until it was found I would not give way. For the 12,000*l.* it is proposed that a new Privy Seal be procured for the payment of so much to Job Herbey, with instructions under His Majesty's sign manual to pay the same over to Calendrini, and to take Burlamachi's acquittance to discharge His Majesty of so much due to him. The draft both of Privy Seal and instructions I have sent to your Honour. One thing more is endeavoured, that he should have another privy seal for the transportation of 10,000*l.* in reals of eight. It is His Majesty's pleasure Mr. Herbey be solely trusted with the bringing over the jewels. I have nothing to do but assigning the money as His Majesty shall command and you procure me warrant.

1636, July 30. Edinburgh Castle.—John Erskine, Earl of Mar, to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of England.

The distemper of my health would not suffer me to adventure the journey to have attended His Majesty at Rufford. My desire is that His Majesty may be pleased to signify His pleasure to the Deputy that I may have ane good proportion in the Plantation, in some sort answerable to my quality, whereby I may be the better enabled to do His Majesty service. I had your letter at Christmas last, that His Majesty had given order that my name should be insert amongst those that were to have proportions in the plantation of Connaught. I will remit further credit to Sir Alexander Hume. This business has already been chargeable to me, both by my journey into Ireland and since by my last journey into England. His Majesty may be pleased to recommend me to the Deputy both for the goodness of the place and for the quantity that I shall have.

1636, July 30. His house, Haynes Hill.—Secretary Sir Francis Windebank. "For your Honour." [Sir John Coke.]

I made a despatch to you of the 23rd after a meeting of my Lords, concerning the offer and demands of the City. I have not received any word from you since your being in the Progress. In the same packet I sent you a proclamation to be signed by His Majesty for prohibiting Bartholomew Fair and another fair in Southwark. I send a copy of letters from the Mayor of Plymouth and of an examination concerning Turkish pirates. I have ventured a despatch to my Lord of Northumberland by Witherings, desiring my Lord to take order for the pirates as soon as he shall have ended the service of the fishing. Long boats left by his Lordship may stay till he give further direction. Supply of victuals needed by the fleet. A note from Mr. Nicholas of the present estate of the moneys levied for shipping. A warrant to be signed by His Majesty for 500 trees out of New Forest in Hampshire for treenails and cloveboards.

COKE MSS.

1636, August 1. Richmond.—Doctor J. Chambers to Sir John Coke.

I desire to know his Majesty's pleasure on the petition of Mr. Harwood and my own servant Horne concerning the concealments which were granted to Newman, and discovered by my servant, which was referred to the Lord Treasurer. Before his lordship I offered on behalf of my servant the yearly rent of 60*l.* for the same, and none offered more. My servant shall come to you himself, and give you satisfaction for your pains.

1636, August 1. At sea aboard the Triumph.—Viscount Conway and Kilulta. [No address.]

It was the 28th of July, before we came so far as the Firth, the going in to Leith, where we discovered some busses and a ship of war. Captain Dunning was sent to them; he brought the ship. The Captain being stayed aboard, the Admiral did assure himself that if his ship went to the busses they would come to us. It went; a little they consulted, and away they all went together to the southward. The Captain sat weeping upon the deck three or four hours, then went to bed supperless. The next morning brought near us another Dutch ship of war, and some few busses. They were not willing to part with any money; but when they saw they must lose their nets, they found money, one fetched it out of the sole of his shoe. They seemed very well content to give money, and take licenses. We expected a force to fight with us, but we find no appearance of any contradiction. If the busses do force us to chase them, there is not any ship will reach them but the frigate. The Hollanders have built twelve ships after the model of the Dunkirkers, and it were worth the consideration whether a ship so built under water were not best. Our pinnaces are little worth. My Lord of Northumberland doth take great care to obey the King's command to his satisfaction, and that the Dutch may receive no cause of complaint, and I assure myself you will hear from everybody reports of his good government, equality, and courtesy.

1636, August 2. Bishop Auckland.—Thomas Morton, Bishop of Durham, to Sir John Coke.

The occasion of these presents is to signify that the carriage of wood for the great ship is now at length accomplished. Captain Pett and his nephew have been faithful and diligent in the service. This County Palatine hath not been awanting, but has had little assistance from Northumberland, and none at all from the North Riding of Yorkshire, Cumberland, or Westmorland.

1636, August 2. Weybridge.—Sir Richard Yonge to Sir John North, knight of the noble order of the Bath.

Though the King hath been pleased to quit me from Myne's superintendency of my office, yet I am vexed with him still. I have written unto Mr. Secretary Coke to move His Majesty for me. Perhaps he will freely discover unto you the matter, but be not curious to enquire of it more than he shall discover unto you, for he is a reserved man, and if you should engage yourself in my business I may then lose him. My business, in a word, is but this: the King by his letter did command Mr. Attorney to take Myne's bond not to do any act to prejudice my interest in my office. Mr. Attorney hath not done so. I desire to have the business wholly referred unto my Lord Keeper. I was at Cambury yesterday. Thank God they are all well there.

1636, August 3.—Endorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Copy to Lord Treasurer" (William Juxon, Bishop of London).

Right honourable and right reverend Lord,—I have received your letters of the 22nd and 30th of July, and have acquainted His Majesty with what therein did concern his service, whereupon it hath pleased him to sign both the privy seals as well that for payment of 12,000*l.* as the other for the importation of 10,000*l.* in Spanish coin. He hath also signed the letter of instruction. I marvel not that your Lordship findeth difficulty in passing Mr. Burlamachi's accounts. For though we laboured in nothing more all the time of the commission yet we could never bring it to any perfect state. Whosoever will induce a King to any other than legal accounts doth not only open a way to deceit, which every one is guilty of that declineth a just account, but brings confusion into the government of the revenue of the Crown, the consequence whereof is worse than any particular loss. And though Mr. Burlamachi hath written also to me that his desire is to come to Rufford, yet I confess I shall not be forward to persuade either your Lordship or him to that course, which can have no other effect than but either to give way to inordinate precedents, or to cast upon his Majesty the refusal of giving allowance to those demands which appear by your letter to be no less than 147,000*l.*, it being a rule of honour that though graces and affirmations should proceed from princes, yet censures and negations should be given by their ministers.

Draft Warrant to the Lord Treasurer for delivery of a new supply of saltpetre to the new contractors.

1636, August 4. Rufford.—Sir J. Coke to the Lord Treasurer (Bishop of London). (Draft.)

Your letters of the 22nd and 30th July came to my hands on the 2nd of August, and I speedily acquainted His Majesty with what concerned his service. Now it hath pleased him to sign both the privy seals, that for payment of 12,000*l.*, and the other for licence to export 10,000*l.* in Spanish coin. I marvel not that your Lordship findeth difficulty in passing those accounts of Mr. Burlamachi. You may be pleased to consider whether it be convenient to return the labour and envy of examining, allowing, and disallowing thereof to His Majesty. What monies soever are once received by record, they must by like record be accounted for upon legal and regular warrants: And whosoever shall advise any other to be accepted than such legal accounts shall give way to much deceit, and besides will bring confusion into the revenue of the Crown; the consequence whereof is much greater than any particular loss. Mr. Burlamachi hath written to me that his desire is to come to Rufford. I shall not be forward to persuade your Lordship or him to that course, which can have no other effect than either to give way to inordinate precedents, or to cast upon His Majesty the refusal of those demands which appear by your Lordship's letter to be no less than 147,000*l.* The rule of honour prescribing that graces and affirmations should proceed from princes, but refusals and negatives from their ministers alone, my opinion is therefore that your Lordship shall do well to direct some other issue. His Majesty understanding that the ship monies come slowly in, hath commanded me to call on the sheriffs in those parts, and requireth your Lordships to meet speedily, and by some round course hasten in the payments, that they may be no interruption to the new writs.

1636, August 4. Tottenham.—Richard Poole. "For your Honour."

I hope your Honour will pardon me in sending this particular letter [from Sir Richard Yonge] this way which so much concerns that noble gentleman, who I presume truly loves and honours you. Yesterday I sent the bills of the sickness, whereby you will find that the sickness is much increased, and spreads very much. I give God thanks we are all here in good health, and hope that your honour with all yours enjoy the like. The children remember their duties to your honour, my lady, and their father. Sir Richard Yonge hath desired my conveyance of your answer by some messenger of purpose to his house at Weybridge.

COKE MSS.

1636, August 8. Rufford Abbey. — Weckherlin to Sir J. Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary to His Majesty.

The States Ambassador now at Nottingham hath sent hither to crave an audience, and His Majesty is pleased to give it him on Wednesday: when willing your Honour to be with him I am commanded to give you notice thereof, and that you will be expected betimes. It will therefore be well that this bearer bring back word to-morrow night, that there may rest no doubt of your Honour's following and coming to be present at the said audience, which I suppose it is to be as soon as His Majesty shall have dined.

1636, August 8. Dublin.—Doctor Alane Cooke. [No address.]

I went to view the lands of the Vartry, where I stayed all the last week, and did observe every parcel thereof, for which I was beholden unto Sir Edward Winkfield, who is your new neighbour. The names of all the towns are as following—

1. Castlekevin, the town where the Castle doth stand. This hath a goodly wood, but no great timber, but very fine young oaks.
2. Tomolan, a pretty wood but no timber.
3. Tondarragh and Balincor, a very goodly wood but no timber.
4. Rahin, a very small village, no wood.
5. Baltomane, Carrickro, and Bolelin, the largest town in the Vartries, a very good wood, by which runneth the great river.
6. Leitrim, joining to the river of the Vartries, a very pretty wood but no timber.
7. Molenabige and Bolincas, a town, hath no wood.
8. Bahinto, where Mr. Masterson doth dwell; he is a friend to Mr. Toole's mother; he hath this and the above town. This town hath no wood.
9. Glasmolin, joining to the Manor of Powerscourt, no wood.

All the whole lands very dry, and a very wholesome air (it is all coach way) it is all in length six miles and in breadth a mile of good lands, it is all entire within itself. Castlekevin is the fittest place to build the manor house, because of the strength; the Bawne is very good, very near 20 foot high; all the castle is down, and the bounds are very near 50 yards square, a fine small river running at the foot of the castle; and at the back of the castle, half a mile from the same, runneth the great river, which did afford a of salmon, which did come out of the sea to spawn, but the Lord of Esmonde hath set a weir upon the river. I have caused a presentment to be made unto myself, as being Judge of the Vice Admiralty of Leinster; and whatsoever power the law hath shall be put in execution to make this weir to be pulled down. Between Tomolan and Tondarragh is the best place to set the town [facilities for timber and lime (from Dublin) enumerated]. There is a very fair civate (?) within the Bawne of the Castle, which will serve to dwell in until the town be built, and very secure. Let me give you this encouragement for to plant, because I shall be able to plant it had you twice as much land, and with most able tenants of good worth and quality. Castlekevin will be a fit place for a man of good fashion to live in, which must defend the tenants until they be fully settled, which being built I will take, giving as much as anyone for the same. I presume there will be 10,000 acres of land which will be fit for corn or grazing both winter and summer, which cannot yield less than 500*l.* per annum, although Luke Toole never made 200*l.* per annum. I would wish that your grants were passed and the land surveyed. The furthest part of your land is but 14 miles from Dublin, and the next but 8 miles. When I came to the Castle they shut the gates against me, but in the end, after they had made a great cry, they used me very kindly. When I had conference with the eldest son of the said Toole, who is a very modest gentleman, he seemed to be very well contented to part with the land. He carried me into a room where he showed me 16 more of the children of the said Toole, all which, as he affirmed, must beg, unless your Honour were gracious unto them in seeing them provided for elsewhere. I cannot learn that anyone hath any interest in any part of the land but his mother, in the two towns of Molenabige and Balinto, which is her jointure. Mr. Luke Toole's eldest son requested me to send these inclosed unto his father, one unsealed, by which I presume he adviseth his father to make your favour. I beseech you get me a reference on my petition.

1636, August 10. Knocklevin.—Brirne (?) Toole to Mr. Luke Toole in London.

Much respected Father,—I know my brother Barnaby writes unto you of Mr. Cooke's coming to view the Farderye (Vartry), but if the matter goes to the worst I hope in God you can agree with Secretary Coke, who I understand had the land passed unto [him]. Robert Dowling denied that the key of your trunk was left with him. He did not use you well in not sending you the Earl of Antrim's letter, who was given unto him 3 or 4 weeks ago. You are not to blame me for your nag, for my brother Barnaby would not suffer me to handle him. Aillen (Alane) Cooke was mightily displeased when he saw the wids (woods) of Baltimany so spoiled, until my brother Barnaby and I followed him to Powerscourt, and there qualified part of his anger by telling him that most part of the wid was spoiled in Mr. Barnewall's time. My mother is in good health and so is all the children, your mother and all your friends. I go daily to comfort my mother, according to your direction unto me. Your daughter, my wife, remembers her duty unto you. My love and service unto Sir Donagh.

1636, August 13. London.—Edward Reed to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

Mr. Richaut, since the coming over of this new Ambassador from Spain, hath made so good conditions for himself that his complaining humour is spent against that nation: he hath lately received 5,000*l.* of his 14,000*l.* The later complaint of his against Captain Stewart was that Captain Stewart had delivered unto him in Spain, consigned unto Mr. Richaut at Dover, 16 chests of reals, but the haste of Captain Stewart was such that without any warrant from Mr. Richaut he, with the other moneys, posted it away to Dunkirk, and it was 100*l.* out of Mr. Richaut's way. Mr. Richaut now is shut up and not willing to renew what he hath formerly told me of the particulars between Nicolardo and himself concerning his contract with him for his adventure unto the West Indies: but I hope by the end of the week your Honour shall receive from me all the circumstances as it hath been carried from the beginning. The sickness doth daily increase.

Coke MSS.

1636, August 15. At sea before Scarborough.—Viscount Conway and Kilulta. [No address.]

My last letter told you how the fleet was divided and sought for the fishers, but found none. At the last we discovered some busses, about fourscore, and with them two Dutch men-of-war. We took their ships and manned them with our men, to whom they all came, but they set all the sail they could, and although every ship shot, through the hazard of being sunk they went away, those ships only staying that could not escape. They said they knew not how they should be used, therefore they came not to us; the money demanded they did willingly give. That night we met with Sir John Penington, who told us he had been divers leagues to the northward of Buffen Ness; he met only with three busses which were stragglers of the covey we flew at. Within a night or two afterwards we came amongst a fleet of busses, whereof about 150 came to us and took licences. Our sudden coming among them in the night frighted the most remote, and spoiled many of their nets. My Lord left Captain Mennes, Captain Stradling, and the Whelp. That night, not to hurt their nets, we anchored; the wind blowing extreme hard, so soon as it was day we weighed: with a very great gale we came to Scarborough. There hath not been any care wanting in him [my Lord of Northumberland] to do the business whereto he was sent faithfully, and I believe that the greater his employment shall be the more cause he will give of being esteemed.

1636, August 15. Swithland.—William D'anvers to Sir J. Coke at Melbourne.

The Constable of our town brought me this warrant from John Cobly, the postmaster of Loughborough, as he styles himself. Sir, he is a very poor fellow and this is no post road; he pills and polls the country extremely, taking corn of some, hay of others, and money of all, for they must all drink at his house. These progress times are his harvest. He hath been examined by Mr. Benbrigg (Bainbrigge) and my father Babington once or twice, and they have found him no postmaster, but an impostor; yet they say he hath my Lord Stanhope's warrant, but I hope not to take bribes: he hath had 8*s*. apiece of 3 several men in this town. There is not a country town in all these parts that officii colore he hath not abused, and this we will prove by the oath of 100 men, if required. If your Honour will do our country but this right as to suppress this knave, we shall all pray for you. Give my noble cousin your son many thanks for our great entertainment. I hope he will be as good as his word to come to Swithland with his hawks: he will change his leaf here, but will think better of his own at his return. My service to the good ladies and all my fair cousins, with the good company at Trusley when you see them, all but Will. Coke.

1636, August 16. Aboard the Triumph, now before Scarborough.—Algernon Percy, Earl of Northumberland, to Secretary Coke. (Received at Tutbury.)

Upon the 3rd I received your packet of the 20th of July, by which I perceive that a distaste is taken at Captain Steward's carrying over the Spanish money to Dunkirk. I am very well assured that I have those clear and absolute warrants for what I did that will free me from all blame, when they shall come to be seen. From the 1st day of August to the 9th we ranged all the Scottish coast from the Firth almost to Boffom Ness. (Describes operations of the ships among the busses.) I have now made them so to understand this business that the poor men now seek to us for licences, and are willing to pay anything, so they may have the King's protection. They all complain that the States abused them in making them believe that the King would either have 16 guelders upon every last, or he would take their nets and vessels. On the 12th we came to an anchor southward of Berwick, at night, because we would make no spoil among their nets. Before all our company could weigh a storm took us, that divers of our ships were in danger of losing their anchors, but (God be thanked) we received no harm, only some of the men were a little hurt at the capstans. When the 100 licences signed by the King were disposed of I gave them licences according to your direction. We can neither see nor hear of any more busses in these seas: here being no employment for us, and our victuals drawing to an end, I resolve to stand for the Downs.

1636, August 16. On board the Triumph, before Scarborough.—Algernon Percy, Earl of Northumberland, to Secretary Coke. (Received at Tutbury.)

I received yours of the 7th of August. I perceive by your letter there is a purpose of supplying the whole fleet with a month's victual more, to scour the Channel to the Land's End, and to free those parts from the Turks. The St. Andrew and Swallow are yet victualled for three months. I should think these, with the help of some of the whelps or pinnaces, would be fitter for that service than such a fleet as this; but I leave the fleet and myself to be disposed of according to the order I expect to find at the Downs.

1636, August 17. London.—Job Harbie and Thomas Bownest to Sir J. Coke.

Your Honour's letter directed unto us from Rufford, dated the 4th of this month, came seasonably to our hands. The two privy seals have taken effect according to our expectations. We tender our thanks, as likewise for the wholesome advice you are pleased to give us touching the disposal of the 12,000*l.*; which we shall undoubtedly follow, and shall not part with the same, or any parcel thereof, until we shall be assured of the jewels. Some more rubs we may expect in Holland. I, Job Harbie, am to-morrow to begin my journey for those parts. Mr. Secretary Windebank gave me a letter to Sir William Boswell, together with my instructions signed by His Majesty.

1636, August 19.—Edward Reed to Sir J. Coke. (Received at Woodstock.)

This new Spanish Ambassador hath so possessed Mr. Richaut of the good will and love that he beareth him that he will adventure his estate and credit in this French commodity for Spain. Of one that knoweth the passages concerning the adventurers with him to the West Indies I learn this, that my Lord Marshal did adventure 500*l.*, and Mr. Secretary Windebank 300*l.*, Pieter himself in goods 3,000*l.*, and Nichobaldo as much. The ship was first to touch at St. Sebastian: a commission from the King of Spain was promised by the Conte D'Olivares, Nichobaldo's great friend. The ship arrived there, the goods by the command of the King's officers were unshipped and disposed of without hope of any commission. What recompence since these adventurers have had, by my former letter you have had notice, and the promise of gains for those adventurers were 20 for 1. The Exchange doth speak much of the great sums of money that are gone for Dunkirk. I hear of much more money than Mr. Stewart brought with him is gone to Flanders in English vessels; and that Mr. Richaut hath a ship that is by this time in Spain to transport more.

COKE MSS.

1636, August 20. The Hague.—Sir Thomas Colepepyr to Sir John Coke. (Received at Woodstock.)

My late sickness since my arrival here hath made me more backward to write than otherwise. Now at the importunity of the French the Prince of Orange is going into the field. At the arrival of my Lord of Northumberland among the Dutch fishers they did all disperse. Here is a speech that the King of Hungary will march in person with a strong army into France. It is now more than a month ago that I have sent over divers workmasters, to make a beginning of our hopeful affairs of the salt and turf, wherein I hope that God will bless our honest designs with as good success there in England as it hath here, that it may not only be beneficial in general, but profitable to His Majesty. The Prince of Orange goeth to-morrow out of the Hague to the army. Our rendezvous is near Ferme Sconce by Bumble [Fuerm Sconce by Bommel ?].

1636, August 22. Warr. (Warwick).—Edward Raynsford to Sir J. Coke, at Bilsley.

Mr. High Sheriff, being prevented by his attendance on the King to write to your honour himself, hath required me to perform the same, to make known to your honour what is done touching the ship money payable by this county, which will appear by the note inclosed.

1636, August 23. On board the Triumph, now riding at the Downs. —Algernon Percy, Earl of Northumberland, to Mr. Secretary Coke. (Received at Woodstock.)

I suppose that most of the Lords Commissioners will now wait upon His Majesty at his coming to Woodstock or Oxford, and therefore I have here sent their Lordships a relation of all my proceedings from the time of my going from hence until yesterday that we returned here again. Of the Nonsuch's losing her anchor the morning before our coming to Scarborough I could say nothing in my last letters. Your letter to me for appointing a ship to transport my Lord of Danby from the Isle of Guernsey I have here received, and will accordingly give order for one.

1636, August 23. Ragland.—Edward, Lord Herbert [to Sir John Coke. No address].

If you find His Majesty inclined unto it, I pray write me a letter to this effect, that his Majesty took well the account I gave him, and my endeavours to serve him, but he should receive more satisfaction in my personal attendance, and doth desire it as soon as may be; which he had done sooner, but that he thought to have seen me at Woodstock. The form you know best; this is the substance I desire, it being but to satisfy my parents that my endeavours to serve His Majesty and my attendance is acceptable unto him, which for my own part I believe. I expect no invitation, but for others' satisfaction, esteeming it my duty and my greatest happiness to please and serve him.

1636, August 26. Whitburne.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford, to Secretary Sir John Coke.

Sir,—By God's great blessing we are now all settled at Whitburn, a goodly place with a fair and competent means, where I trust to lead and end my days in peace, and where, as I am bound, I will ever remember you and yours in my daily prayers. I have sent my son John to intreat your favour in getting him the degree of a master of arts, if by any convenient means you may. It is the height of his ambition, and will be a great encouragement to him in study, and an establishment of him in that way to which God hath been pleased to reduce and call him, to his happiness and our comfort. He is both sober in life, and very studious, labouring to be a scholar, inasmuch that, had he not been too much superannuated, and I uncertain of my time in this world, I could very well have been content that he should have merited his degree by his residence and study in the university, which I find would have made him more capable of all kinds of preferment in the Church than this will do. The money I borrowed of you we have laid out in provision for our housekeeping, and more we could yet do if our store would afford it. We could not possibly have come hither without it, or so much elsewhere gotten, which would have been to some loss unto us. And therefore we are the more beholding unto you for it, and bound with all honest care and endeavour in due time to make repayment of it. There is one John Williams, late of Cardiff, but now dwelling about Bristoll, of whom I complained to his Grace of Canterbury for most unchristianly abusing the dead corpse of a grave and reverend Alderman of Bristoll, and a worthy friend of mine, Mr. John Barker, both as it was carrying to the place of his earthly rest, and also as he was laying down in the same. This man, with his Grace's liking and direction, I put into the High Commission, whereupon by an attachment and special warrant he was sent to the Fleet; from whence having got out (I know not by what means) is come again to Bristoll. Where, after a most insulting manner carrying himself, he was arrested for having two wives; whence, yet again, by the fraud and connivance of an unfriendly justice, he is escaped and fled, and is, as I am informed, come to Court to get a pardon from the King. Which I heartily intreat you, so far as you shall think fit, and as you can conveniently, to stop. And if you think fit, also to acquaint his Grace of Canterbury with the case, that by his and your good means so ungodly and scandalous a fellow may not pass unpunished, for such unchristian disposition against the dead, and such shameful offence against His Majesty's laws.

I was in my coming hither much wearied, being on horseback, both with the hardness of the journey and foulness of the weather; but now, by God's blessing, through care and rest, I am well again as before; as also my wife with all our household.

1636, August 30. Oxford.—Sir J. Coke to the Earl of Northumberland. (Copy.)

Your letters sent unto me since your coming into the Downs have been showed at Woodstock both to His Majesty and the Commissioners, and the resolution taken thereupon is that you must presently send for the guard of the West countries three or four of those ships which are victualled for the longest time. It is thought expedient by His Majesty, by the advice of His Committee for foreign affairs, that your Lordship shall remain at sea with a fleet of ten sail, such as you shall choose out of the whole complement which is under your charge. All the rest must be forthwith sent to Chatham and there discharged. That part of the fleet which is to go westward must ply along the coast as far as the Land's End and Scilly, so as the Newfoundland fishermen and those that pass towards Bristol fair may be protected by them. The other part of your fleet remaining with yourself is to be employed to convoy our own or foreign merchants. If you find any number of [herring] fishermen still employed you must send a proportionable strength to bring them to conformity, or to protect them, as their carriage shall deserve. For the French which were lately sent in at the Hyde, His Majesty well approves your Lordship's order for their discharge with courtesy and respect; and with admonition to the captains not to proceed harshly but with courtesy and favour to that nation if they be no wrong doers, and shall do the homage due to His Majesty's ships. By the Lord Conway's information those complaints, which have from time to time much troubled the State from Southampton, Exeter, Plymouth, Dartmouth, and other parts, of ships and men taken by the Turks in a most miserable manner, are found to be untrue. Your Lordship may be pleased to examine carefully the truth of these reports, which I recommend to your Lordship as a matter much concerning His Majesty's service and the quieting of his people, which are apt to take fear upon such complaints.

Coke MSS.

1636, August 30. The Court at Oxford. Ulick de Burgh, Earl of St. Albans and Clanrickard. [No address.] Indorsed, "A copy of the Earl of St. Alban's letter sent to me from Oxford by his servant."

My Lord,—I have not long since received a despatch out of Ireland from the jury of the County of Galway and divers of the Lords and Gentlemen of that county who are much grieved and afflicted to find themselves in His Majesty's displeasure; and that it may appear that what hath hitherto passed was not out of any wilful opposition to His Majesty's claim or right of inheritance to that county, nor by any sinister way to decline or interrupt your Lordship's intended proceedings for His Majesty's service, but of want of science, and an opinion which they conceived of their own right and long possession. Their earnest desires and my own judgment call upon me to give you an account, they hoping that your Lordship will take compassion of their present sufferings and be a means to convey mercy and favour to them from His Majesty by his gracious acceptance of this their humble submission; since in points of so great difficulty their consciences did not direct them to find his Majesty's title in that manner, as your Lordship and others of abler judgment than theirs did expect. They profess themselves most ready to perform anything that be required from dutiful and obedient subjects.

1636, [August?]. Draft by Sir John Coke of a commission to the Earl of Lindsey.

Whereas complaint is made that Sir Walter Norton, late Sheriff of Lincolnshire, being lately required by earnest letters from the Lords of our Council to make speedy payment of the monies collected by him for the payment of our fleet, doth not only still retain those monies in his hands, but is also backward in giving account and in assisting his successor for the better performance of his duty; and which is yet more unsufferable, that he hath also by his ministers extorted monies from our loving subjects, and thereby freeing the more able from payment hath laid the burden unequally upon those which are of meaner estate, contrary to our intention and declaration in that behalf. We therefore, not willing to believe reports without proof, do hereby require and authorize you, with the assistance of two or more of your Deputy Lieutenants, to call before you both the said Sir Walter Norton, and the present Sheriff, Sir William Pelham, and such others as may give you due information and proofs. And also yourself return unto us a true and speedy report of his carriage, and whether you find him guilty of these charges, that we may thereupon give order for an exemplary proceeding against him in a legal and just course, that by his contempt and disobedience our service may not suffer.

1636, September 2. His house at Albins (in Essex).—Sir Thomas Edmondes to Sir J. Coke.

Because you require to be speedily satisfied from me whether there were anything contained in the treaty which was concluded with me at my last employment in France that might import an obligation for mutual assistance between the two crowns in case of a foreign invasion, my errand was only to receive the French King's oath and satisfaction of the treaty of peace which had been made after the last irruptions. All the parts of my negotiation you will find orderly digested and laid up amongst my Lord of Dorchester's papers. I was commanded, on the by, to solicit the redress of sundry great wrongs to our merchants in their trade, whereof I was promised a reformation: but they drew that business to so great a length as I forced to leave the further prosecution thereof to Sir Isaac Wake, who came to succeed in the place of his Majesty's resident Ambassador. When I understand where his Majesty intendeth to fix his Court, I will not fail to wait on him.

1636, September 3. On board the Triumph, at the Downs.—Algernon Percy, Earl of Northumberland. "For yourself."

I have received your two letters of 30 and 31 August. I am sending for the guard of the West parts, under th ecommand of Sir John Penington, the St. Andrew, Bonadventure, 10*th Whelp*, and the frigate. This day I am told by an English ship come from the Straits that he and a Fleming met two Turks off of Scilly and gave them chase, but the Turks being clean and nimble ships went away from them. The fair at Bristol is past a month since. That the herring fishing is now ended I never heard it pretended; only that the season to the Northward is past, for all the while the herrings are passing between Flamborough Head and Yarmouth the fishing ceaseth, which is now at this time; but in 10 or 12 days the busses will be coming again to Yarmouth, and continue in those parts till the beginning of November. This is their usual course.

[This is in a cover endorsed in the writing of Mr. Vice Chamberlain Coke, "1636, Sept. 5th," and within it a diagram of a dial, "The South Dial."]

1636, September 5. Stanwell.—Sir John Bankes (Attorney General) to Sir J. Coke, Secretary of State.

Having received a letter from my Lord Keeper, I have accordingly drawn a proclamation for adjournment of the term until mense Michaelis, which is 27th October next. I have formed an additional clause, if his Majesty think fit, that diseased persons to be cured of the King's Evil shall in this time of infection be adjourned until Easter next. A space in which the clause may be added by any of your Honour's servants.

1636, September 6. On board the Triumph, at the Downs.—Algernon Percy, Earl of Northumberland. [No address.]

Whereas yesterday I gave an account of a complaint by some of the chief merchants in Dover against that French captain for whose release you had lately sent me instructions from his Majesty, I have this day received by a letter from my Lord of Suffolk an assurance that upon his examination of the business he found the merchants to be mistaken, and the captain innocent. He hath thereupon set the Captain with his company at liberty, with restitution of all that belonged to them.

1636, September 9. Lewisham.—Thomas Smythe to Sir John Coke.

Letters patent shown to the Trinity House. Intended work of cleansing the river. His Majesty's rent for ballasting will be augmented. Asks the Royal Sign Manual to the warrant.

1636, September 9. Westminster.—Justice Peter Heywood to Sir J. Coke, at Oatlands.

According to his Majesty's command, I have been at Mrs. Marshall's house, Mr. John Coburne lodging over against the Mews, and have locked up his study that looketh into the Spring Garden, of which I have given especial charge to the said Mrs. Marshall. My honourable good Lord Keeper hath quickened up the Lord Mayor and the Justices to be more carefull in looking unto the constables and other officers that their watches and wardings be more substantial than of late; but for breaking open of many houses and robberies more now than at other times, surely there is not any of consequence but Sir W. Hewett's house above Charing Cross, which was ransacked, there being no person left therein: I have the fellows fast in prison. I shall not be lacking in my uttermost care for my neighbour Mr. Weekherlin's house in Gardener's Lane. I fear this sickness of the plague will this week prove heavy.

Coke MSS.

1636, Septembre 13.—Guillaume de St. Laurens.

Je suis du pays d'Aquitaine, gentilhomme, natif au pays de Medoc en la terre de St. Laurens, dont je porte le nom. Il y a un an que je suis pressé de venir vers la Majesté du sérénissime Roi d'Angleterre pour le supplier de la part des principaux du pays d'avoir pitié d'eux, à cause qu'ils n'en pouvaient plus pour les gabelles et impositions, qui leur étaient mises sus par le Cardinal Richelieu. Ayant demeuré trois mois à Paris, les Espagnols sont entrés en Picardie: sur ce commandement fut fait à Paris a tous gentilhommes de s'en aller promptement au secours de la Picardie. Je me mets dans la compagnie de chevaux légers du Comte de Castries et étant arrivé près la ville de Compiègne, où étaient toutes les troupes françaises, je reçus une lettre signé du Comte de Curson, par laquelle il me mandait qu'on n'en pouvait plus en Guienne, et que maintenant il me supplioit de venir trouver le Roi d'Angleterre, pour avoir pitié de ce pays, et que sans difficulté ils se mettraient sur son obéissance, s'il y envoyait son armée: ce qu'il pourrait faire facilement, vu que l'armée navale des Français n'était plus sur la côte de France et avait passé le détroit de Gibraltar. Je reçu des lettres pendant le temps que j'étais à Paris du Marquis de Duras, du Baron de la Tour en Medoc, du Seigneur de la Cousade, de M. de Citran (qui a querelle à M. d'Espernon, Lieutenant pour le Roi en Guienne) et encore des principaux de la ville de Bordeaux. Le peur d'être surpris avec ces lettres qui venaient du côté de Guienne a été cause que je les ai brulées, et tout ce que j'ai écrit est pour le service de la majesté du Roi d'Angleterre au peril de ma vie.

[Enclosed with the foregoing letter.]

1636, Septembre 13. Castries.—Passport. Nous, le Comte de Castries, Capitaine d'une compagnie de chevaux légers entretenue pour le service du Roi à son armée en Picardie, certifions à tous qu'il appartiendra avoir permis au Sieur de Saint Laurens, notre domestique, s'en aller à Paris pour nos expresses affaires. Faits à nostre quartier de Venette.

1636, September 15. Lordington, in Sussex.—Philip Jermyn to Mr. Secretary Coke, at Court.

All times and every occasion require me to present my service unto you, but times of danger and scarcity of conveyance do more than command. I am much obliged to you for your many fatherly respects, especially in my last great business.

The incertainty of health in these perilous times occasion irresolutions I know not where important affairs may guide His Majesty's abode. I heartily beseech the favour that if opportunity afford it I may be blest to see you here at Lordington; and that, if the journey to Tottenham be not safe, your Lady may make her stay here. Your dutiful and thankful son-in-law.

1636, September 15. Dover.—Jacob Braems to Sir J. Coke, Secretary of State.

I send herewith copies of the letters received from my Lord Treasurer Weston, one approving the farmers composition, the other approving me for demanding bonds to preserve His Majesty's impositions and other duties. I did demand but one bond of each merchant in 1,000*l.* for a whole year, and not for every particular entry. I understand of about 40,000 pounds of silver arrived from St. Lucar into the Downs, and some presented to be exported as formerly, at one and a half per cent., which I refuse to permit in regard of the question now in agitation. Specifies many other ships passing between Dunkirk and Spain arrived or arriving in the Downs, some with ordnance, all which purpose to make no composition, unless some course be taken to prevent their intention; and if this practice be not restrained, it may cause a diversion of the greatest part (if not all) of the composition of silver and other goods, now amounting to about 30,000*l.* per annum. My Lord of Suffolk will take care to make stay of the ships that intend to pass without making composition.

1636, September 16. The Triumph, in the Downs.—Viscount Conway and Kilulta. [No address.]

We are now resolved to set sail for Yarmouth. The Adventure that was sent for Madame la Nourice stayed 12 days at Dieppe, on Sunday last was forced away by extremity of weather, and hath brought with him the host of the house where Madame la Nourice should lie, that came to see the ship and could not get back. I hear that the King's displeasure for the carriage of the Spanish silver to Dunkirk is not yet passed over. I have a very strong argument to prove that the carriage of it over by Captain Steuart was contrary to the desire of my Lord of Northumberland. If the silver had been landed and carried from Dover by a convoy of the fleet, there would have been a large sum to have been divided among the captains, for which they would have owed thanks to my Lord.

1636, September 17. Dover.—Jacob Braems to Sir J. Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary to His Majesty.

By yours of the 15th, I understand you expect me at Oatlands this present Saturday. I am heartily sorry that neither the time nor ability of body at present will permit my personal attendance. It is true that from this port hath been transported great store of victuals for Flanders, imported to that purpose all by composition made with the farmers, some at half subsidy, some more and some less. Those that appear here to receive and export these goods are Arnold Braems [and 23 other names]. Of the three ships which came in about the time Captain Steward arrived, I now send you an account of the silver imported by them, and of several other ships which came in about that time. The ship of Bryant Hamond my Lord Warden hath since caused to be stayed in the Downs.

1636, September 22.—Nathaniel Smith to Weckherlin.

Has command from Mr. Secretary Windebank to deliver the bill for Sir Anthony Thomas his protection, notwithstanding caveat entered by Sir Sydney Montague.

On the above is endorsed a draft, in the writing of Sir J. Coke, of Instructions to a Minister [the Earl of Leicester] engaged upon a treaty.

The third, fourth, and sixth Articles must be altogether varied, and generally your Lordship must take care of two points in your instructions, first, not to engage His Majesty into any direct war or contravention of his treaties; and secondly, that all the assistance to be given on His Majesty's part be tied and restrained to the general peace, the liberty of Germany, and the restitution of the Princes. What in your last letter of $\frac{1}{2}\frac{2}{9}$ concerneth the Lord Scudamore, as if he had in answer fallen upon recrimination is altogether mistaken; neither is there any cause of giving matter to further contestation; but rather to let you know how much your good agreement concerneth both His Majesty's service and your own houses; which I doubt not but your Lordship will consider and press no further answer. Mr. de Vic, we hear, is upon his return.

1636, September 22. Lordington.—Philip Jermyn to Mr. Secretary Coke, at Court. (Received at Windsor.)

The good hope much encouraged by your good prayers hath, by God's gracious working, received its accomplishment. My wife was safely delivered of a son, and both (blessed be God) are in such health as to like occasions is usually incident. Your Lady's presence and help were a great cause of my wife's safety. I shall heartily desire you to continue your kind resolution of seeing Lordington. My great business I patiently submit to God and the King's pleasure, with humble request of your continuing furtherance. The keeping of the term at Westminster will be I conceive and pray of more safety than elsewhere.

1636, September 24.—Endorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Mr. Braem's (Customer of Dover) declaration concerning the 'Victory.'" (A copy.)

Captain Steward in the Victory sailed away, paying insufficient composition, with promise to pay the rest, but refusing to pay fees due to the officers of Customs. Captain Steward, at his return, delivered in the Downs 815*l.* in Spanish money, in full of 3,315*l.* due to His Majesty for 443 chests.

1636, September 25. Memorial concerning His Majesty's jewels in the Low Countries, delivered by Mr. Cockshutt.

That Mr. Job Harbie may be authorised by commission under the great seal to redeem His Majesty's jewels, and to discharge the parties who have them in deposit; although he give something more than his first instructions. That His Majesty's letters may be sent to the magistrates of Amsterdam, and to the States General, and the Prince of Orange, taking notice of Calendrini's perverseness, and to demand speedy justice. That Sir W. Boswell and Mr. Harbie may be authorised to negotiate in the redemption of the jewels by suits or otherwise, as they shall find most expedient. That Sir William Boswell may have warrant under the King's signet to deliver Mr. Job Harbie the jewels redeemed from the Queen of Bohemia.

1636, September 26. His house at Eresby.—Robert Bertie, Earl of Lindsey, to Sir J. Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary to His Majesty.

Sir,—Since my receipt of His Majesty's letter, which did command and authorize me to make an especial and diligent enquiry into those courses which Sir Walter Norton the late sheriff of the County of Lincoln hath taken in the levying the 8,000*l.* for the ship of war in His Majesty's service for the year 1635, that thereby His Majesty might be certified concerning the complaints made against him whether the same were true or no. I, having done my endeavour with the help of my deputy lieutenants to trace out his intricate and unimitable ways in that his service, have thought it high time to send this relation thereof to your Honour, which though it be a work as yet imperfect by reason his many windings and turnings, perhaps on purpose to disguise the same, that the ends he aimed at might be kept undiscovered

* He hath uncivilly towards me, and I think very unwisely for himself, hitherto refused attendance, with aspersions unfit for him to vent upon a man of my place. He sticks not to boast of some ways to disengage him from the issue thereof, which I must needs think he very much feareth, for doubtless truth would seek no corners.

1636, September 27. At sea aboard the Triumph.—Viscount Conway and Kilulta to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

According to the command you sent we are here at sea. The bailiffs and principal men of Yarmouth did assure us that at this time of the year there is no fishing further northward than Cromer or further into the sea than land to; that the fisher boats of Yarmouth, which are small boats and do fish nearer the sands than the Dutch, do take their marks for the shooting of their nets by the lights in the Dutch busses, running directly into the sea until they see them. Although my Lord of Northumberland had this information, and he could not hear by any fisherman that there were any busses in these seas, and a ship that came out of the Low Countries from Campheere said that the States had given a command that no buss should go to fish this year, yet he put to sea, where we have had foul weather, were forced to come to anchor. We see no busses, neither hear of any.

1636, Septembre 29. Pottney (Putney).—Philippe Burlamachi. [To Sir John Coke. No address.]

Je fais ces deux mots pour prier votre Excellence que la commission pour Monsieur Harbie sous le grand sceau soit dépêchée. Je m'étonne comme il l'ait oublié de prendre cette commission avec lui, car les joyaux ayant été mis ès mains de mon frére Calandrini sous une commission avec le grand sceau il était bien apparent qu'il ne les livrerait pas à personne sans pareille autorité. J'envoie à Monsieur Harbie preuves suffisantes pour montrer que leur allégation d'avoir engagé les joyaux par mon ordre est très fausse. Aussi je supplie votre Excellence de vouloir m'assister de sa faveur pour la fin de mes affaires, sachant que sa bonne recommandation y peut beaucoup.

1636, September —. Coddington.—Thomas Wentworth, Earl of Cleveland, to Mr. Secretary Coke.

I am entreated by the bearer hereof, Mr. John Falkener (who hath been an humble petitioner to His Majesty for the place of clerk of the Cheque at Deptford), that you would vouchsafe him your favour in that behalf, for which he will express as much thankfulness to you as any man shall who may be recommended thereunto. He hath been trained up therein all his lifetime under his deceased father.

1636, September. The King to the Earl of Lindsey. (Copy.)

Right trusty and well beloved Cosen and Councellor. Wee greete you well. [Wee send herewith unto you both a copie of that letter which wee writt at your motion, and of a warrant thereupon sent by you and your sonne and one of your Lieutenants to some cheife constables, which warrants being not only contrarie to our Royall meaninge, expressed in the said letters, but alsoe to our justice, laying a heavy charge upon soe considerable a minister as the High Sherife of the Countie, and for want of pretended proofe cause inquisition to bee made upon him contrarie to our lawes and the usuall justice of our kingdome]. Whereas we ar not well satisfied concerning the execution of a Comand we gave you by a letter concerning some complaints made to us against Sir Walter Norton our late Sherife, Wee have therefore thought it fitt [were therefore pleased] hereby to require you and all others authorised by the said letter to forbeare any further proceeding in the execution thereof [or in the manner of examination which you have begun]. And [further] because we desyer to have full enformation of the same. Our pleasure is that you take a convenient tyme to repare to us [our presence] and that you cause your Lieutenants who have pursued [this warrant] against Sir Walter Norton to appear before our Councell [and there to answeare for their carriage, that our lovinge subjects may knowe that Wee will give no countenance or allowance to such vexatious courses, if they shall so appear at your comeing up.] Given at Our Court at Windsor Castle the day of September in the twelveth yeare of our reigne 1636.

COKE MSS.

This document as printed in roman letters shows the original paper as presented to the King, the passages within brackets [ ] are lined out, and the words in italics appear to be in the King's own writing.

1636, October 2. Yarmouth. — John Marvyn and John Lucas, Bailiffs of Yarmouth, to Sir John Coke.

On Thursday the 29th of September we received a packet from your Honour, dated Windsor Castle, directed to the Right Honourable the Earl of Northumberland, Lord General of His Majesty's royal forces at sea; but by reason of such extraordinary violence and rage of easterly winds we could not possibly send the same to his Lordship. And now having received from his Lordship this packet by His Majesty's ketch we intend to send your Honour's former packet by the said ketch.

1636, October 6. On board your Majesty's ship the Triumph.— Algernon Percy, Earl of Northumberland, K.G. For His Majesty. (Received at Windsor.)

The Holland busses have here assembled, and are joined all together in one body. There are above 400 of them, guarded by 15 men-of-war. These eight days they have found us employment. I think we have left very few of them unexamined. To those that wanted we have distributed your Majesty's licences. Neither the men-of-war nor the busses do willingly come near us, though we use them with all the civility and gentleness that might be; yet both of them have paid the several acknowledgments of your Majesty's sovereignty in these seas.

1636, October 6. On board the Triumph, in Yarmouth Road.— Algernon Percy, Earl of Northumberland, K.G., to Mr. Secretary Coke. (Received at Windsor.)

Ever since my last letter of the 1st of this month we have been busied among the busses. To about 200 of them we have now given licences, and most of the others were furnished when formerly we were amongst them in the North. Both the men-of-war and busses do assure me that there will not any more come forth this year. We came into the road this evening, where I now stay expecting a dismission for myself and the ship. I have here sent you the names of eight ships which, in my opinion, are the fittest to continue abroad, and to what places the others may be disposed of. Out of these eight you may choose four to stay out the rest of the winter. If you please that Captain Slingsby may be removed out of the Roebuck into a whelp, I think it will be a fitter vessel for the winter than a pinnace.

1636, October 6. Dover Castle.—[Theophilus Howard, Earl of] Suffolk to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State (Received at Windsor.)

If I should acquaint you with the several complaints against the French for robbing the English, especially by those of Calais, I should tire you by my letters; but the packet boat being now again newly robbed I thought it convenient to acquaint you withal. This examination will tell you the particulars.

1636, October 6.—An examination taken before the Right Honourable the Earl of Suffolk. The mark of William × Smith.

W. Smith, servant to the master of His Majesty's packet boat, saith, That on the 5th of October the said boat riding at anchor near the fort of Dunkirk there came up a French shallop of Calais, manned with 26 men with their ammunition, and boarded them, there being eight merchants in the boat, and drew their swords and pointed them at their breasts, and did threaten that if they did not confess where their money lay they would kill them. And they took from one of the said merchants 250*l.* sterling, and from another a gold ring and 10*l.* in money, and a watch, and from the rest they took all they had to their wearing clothes.

1636, Octobre 8. Battersea.—Cr. Berser (?) [Endorsed, Monsieur l'Ambassadeur des Etats Généraux. Received at Windsor the 9th.]

Leonard Cornelis, Capitaine et Maître du navire nommé l'Espérance, est sorti de notre pays 1 Septembre 1634, pour aller aux Indes Occidentales avec Commission de Mons. le Prince d'Orange et attaché des Commis de la Compagnie des Indes Occidentales à la Chambre de Zélande, ayant parachevé le dit voyage et y pris sur notres ennemis une barque marchande, étant venu avec celle au havre de Milfort au pays de Galles, est enlevé de là avec la ditte prise par le capitaine Beverley, commandant le ix^me^ whelp, et emmené à Dublin en Irlande sous prétexte d'être pirate. Mon devoir est d'y ajuster et vous assurer que Messieurs les Etats de Zélande par leur lettre dernier me confirmant bien expressément la qualité et la dite commission et attache du dit capitaine, qu'il vous plaise de tendre tellement la main favorable à la dite requête, que le suppliant puisse obtenir la main levée du dit navire et prise, et pour le moins qu'il soit par provision commandé au capitaine Beverley de les transporter aussitôt que possible est de Dublin au dit havre de Milfort.

1636, October 11. Stanwell.—Sir John Bankes to Sir J. Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary to His Majesty. (Received at Newmarket.)

This enclosed petition contains the offer and desires of the oastmen of Newcastle touching the bargain with His Majesty for coals.

Your Honour may acquaint His Majesty that I have treated with these men, and I did discern that if the duty to be laid on Scots coals be but half so much as the duties upon English coals, or something less, it will give the English coal owners content, and the owners of the Scots coals may take it as a favour from His Majesty. This petition I draw by His Majesty's special direction, that he might have the better ground to treat with the Lords and other coal owners of Scotland, and the sooner it is done the more it will advance His Majesty's service.

1636, October 13. Aboard His Majesty's ship St. Andrew, in Falmouth. — Sir J. Penington to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, at Court or elsewhere.

(Received at Penryn at 6 afternoon, at Fowey at 12 night, at Looe at 2½ in the morning, at Plymouth at 7 at night, Friday; at Ashburton, 14th October at 12; at Exeter, Saturday 15th October past 11 before noon; at Sherborne at 4 in the morning; at Andover past 2 in the afternoon.)

I will, with the first opportunity of wind and weather, bring the four ships and pinnaces I have here with me for Portsmouth, and there deliver them over to Sir Henry Mervyn.

COKE MSS.

1636, October 20. Sion.—Algernon Percy, Earl of Northumberland to Sir John Coke.

It hath much troubled me to be all this while debarred from waiting on His Majesty at Newmarket, which now I intended to have done (though without the consent of my physician), had I not by your letter received a dispensation from His Majesty. Before my coming from Yarmouth I heard the Unicorn was leaky, as well as the James. When I received a direction from the Lords Commissioners I was obliged to dispose of those ships accordingly.

1636, October 30. Whitburne.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford, to Secretary Sir John Coke, at his house at Tottenham.

I have sent you these enclosed, desiring that you will be pleased to read them, and either to deliver that to his Grace, either by yourself or servant, as you think fit, or else to send them both to cousin Streethay, that he may take care for the delivery of them. As also, in case you mislike anything in them, that you will either suppress them yourself, or send them back to me with advertisement what you mislike. I was too much overjoyed with Whitburne, and therefore it hath pleased God by this cross to teach me moderation. The cause of all this, I suppose, you know by a gentleman from Whitburne, from whence doubtless both this and some other have proceeded; otherways would no reasonable man have raked so many things out of a place so well left as that was by me. Tantæne animis cœlestibus! Surely it will lie heavy upon me at this time, who am to pay this year 700*l.* above all charges of housekeeping, of keeping ourselves and children, and of fees by patents, and all other servants' wages issuing out. So that I have no way to help myself but to sell that little land at Baldock, which upon twenty-six years' frugality I purchased, being parson of Bygrave And in case God call me out of this world before I can recover all this and the like rack fall upon my executors for Hereford and Whitburne, what will become of them God knows! But I must leave all to God's blessed will, as truly and meekly I do.

1636, October 25. Portsmouth. Ken. Edisbury to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary to His Majesty.

Being here at the pay of the James, Convertine, and Roebuck, I find the third Lion's Whelp (to be made ready for six months) manned, victualled, and furnished, but the gunner hath none of his stores aboard. Sir H. Mervyn hath given order for the Garland to sail to the Downs with all speed. I have desired him to hasten some ship to guard the Narrow Seas, lest the Happy Entrance be come into Chatham. Captain Carteret will be still in the Downs to guard the packets till Sir H. Mervyn send some of the fleet staying out this winter.

1636, November 3. Hampton Court.—Lord Goring to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary to His Majesty.

My good brother Bingley, now in Ireland, sends for an account of his petition. His Majesty was pleased it might be referred to the Lord Deputy. Let this bearer receive it from you, who hath order to carry it to my sister his wife, who being at Nonsuch will there deliver it to the Deputy at his return thither. A kind word of yours to the Deputy in the good old man's behalf will not a little advance our work.

1636, November 9. Etherope.—Edward, Lord Herbert, to Mr. Secretary Coke.

A daughter of mine, who is here with her grandmother, being not well stayed my intended sudden journey for Wales, but I sent away the King's workman with such directions that he might not lose his time; and this morning I am hastening after him, having myself yesterday carried to my Lord President of Wales His Majesty's gracious letter in my father's behalf. I had no resolute answer when or what my Lord would write to his deputy lieutenants, but I am confident he will obey His Majesty, to whom I esteem myself most infinitely bound. I beseech you in my behalf to give the acknowledgment of my most humble thankfulness, which to express I shall esteem my whole life too short, and all the service within my power too little.

1636, November 10, Thursday. Hampton Court.—The Lord Marquis Hamilton to Secretary Coke.

I am commanded by His Majesty to let you know it is his pleasure you prepare a letter for His Majesty's hand to the Lord Cottington, mentioning that whereas formerly he has been pleased to signify his pleasure that the custody of the person and estate of Anne Mustard (Musters?), lunatic, should be committed to Master David Ramsey, Gentleman of the Privy Chamber—He is now farther pleased that His Lordship give order for the present passing allowance of the profit of the said lunatic's estate, for the which he is to entertain her according to her quality and the remnant to be disposed of for his own use, and likewise that his Lordship dispense with the said Master Ramsey's oath, he and his sureties being always tied at the said lunatic's death to make good the principal. I shall entreat you to add such further recommendation for the despatch of the business as is fit for His Majesty to write in the behalf of a servant that he intends good to.

1636, November 20. Lewisham.—Thomas Smythe to Sir John Coke.

On the subject of his Letters Patent and Warrant. Asks that the Burrells may by a day prefixed, either sell or accept his offer of 200*l.* Cannot come to Court at Hampton, because of sickness at Lewisham.

1636, November 22. Bristol.—Captain Giles Penn [to Sir John Coke. No address].

About six days since I wrote about a merchant ship of this City bound for Sallee in trade, which is very improper at this time, in respect of what His Majesty pretends for the surprizing of those people. His Majesty and the Privy Council may give order to this place, he may not proceed until His Majesty's ships be first gone to sea. The business of the bearer, Mr. James Dyer, Town Clerk of this City, is abatement of some part of this last thousand pounds sessed on this city about ship money now to be collected, which those of this place hold an opinion they are sessed higher (rata por cantidad) than any other cities in these western parts are. If it shall please His Majesty to cut off any part of that 1,000*l.* from the city, then to order this city to give me 100*l.* of that so cut off. I am confident I shall deserve both that and much more on this voyage (en ayuda de costos). The Lord Deputy hath now a ship of his own (called the St. Patrick) come from New England to Kinsale, and reported is to come to this city: she is of 300 tons, and will carry 26 pieces of ordnance: she is a Catalonia built. The like of her for sailing by all reports of seamen hath not been seen, which ship would do great service on this Sallee business. Also there is at Portsmouth a Holland ship of 300 tons, called the Black Bull, which is a great sailer by all reports. I formerly spoke with you for an order to be sent me for the pressing of 100 good able seamen about this city. In March those people of Sallee doth come forth; and by advice I have they pretends to come more ships from thence this summer than ever did, as well against France as for

COKE MSS.

England. I beseech that order be given for 150 tons of cider. Cider is convenient for the health of men on those coasts, and profitable to make three or four of one for beverage, for beer most proves bad and dead. It is requisite, under correction, my place should be of good command, command and fights at sea being so common as they have been unto me for many years. If your Lordship please to command me to come up by way of Winchester to confer with those Mores (Moors) to see if I know any of them, as also to collect anything out of them which may be any way beneficial in this service of Sallee, and what Christians they will redeem for their liberty, which I hear they have offered to redeem two for each one.

1636, November 22. Dover Road.—Sir Thomas Colepepyr. "For your Honour."

This present Tuesday the 22nd of November His Majesty's ship the Swallow, Captain Kirk, is safe arrived at Dover, having brought into England Mr. Harbie with His Majesty's jewels, the Landgrave of Hessen his brother, and myself. The Queen of Bohemia hath commanded me to conduct the Landgrave to the Court. We have cast it to lodge the Landgrave at Mr. Harbie's house on Thursday night, to avoid going to London because of the sickness, and thence to Court.

1636, November 22, Tuesday. Dover.—Sir Thomas Colepepyr to Lord Craven, at Court or elsewhere.

I am this day landed, with His Majesty's ship the Swallow, at Dover. Here is come with me the Landgrave of Hessen's brother, whom the Queen hath commanded me to conduct to the Court to kiss His Majesty's hands. Here is likewise come Mr. Harbie with the King's jewels. We intend to lodge the Landgrave at Mr. Harbie's house on Thursday to avoid going to London because of the sickness.

1636, November 28. The Downs. — Sir Henry Mervin to Sir J. Coke, Secretary of State.

I have made stay of Thomas Gibbs, master of the Sarah, of London, who had laden goods for Spain from Dunkirk with intent to defraud the King of his Customs: making satisfaction at Dover for His Majesty's duties, and giving security there to make entry at his return from Spain, as also then to answer his contempt and disobedience. I am of opinion it would give great content to the Flemish merchants, who otherwise will receive great damage and discouragement if his voyage be stayed.

1636, December 7. Dublin.—Sir John Bingley to Sir John Coke.

I have conferred with Doctor Cooke about the Fartrye (Vartry). There is no question to be made, but the right is in the King; and my desire is that your honour may know the true value of it, and to that end I will go to my son-in-law, the Earl of Meath, these holidays, which is but 4 or 5 miles from Fartree; and I hope to get the tenants' names and what quantity and what value every man holds, and to give your honour as perfect an account as may be for your honour's better information whether it please you to keep it or part from it. I beseech you take notice in your next to my Lord Deputy of my bounden thankfulness. I have not found the like since the death of the Lord Treasurer Salisbury. As I live I have not seen so complete a gentleman in this kingdom. Every man inclines to peace and the land prospers exceedingly. I have presented his Majesty's letter to his Lordship, and he respected me above my expectation. Ye the thing which I expected is omitted, namely, the charges that I was at in the examination of the first commission against the Londoners ; it cost me above 800*l.* in the 10 months that I attended the execution thereof.

1635, December 7. Frankfort.—Jean Pors à Monsieur M. Coke, Secrétaire d'Etat de la Grande Bretagne, Londres.

Monsieur mon très cher et honoré ami,—Puis que Mnsr. le Comte d'Arundel, &c., en son ambassade à Ratisbone honora ma personne pour les services de sa Majesté de la Grande Bretagne pour resider en cette ville de Francfort, et ayant oui de votre estimation, et grandes qualités, j'ai pris la hardiesse de m'adresser à votre personne, vous suppliant de me vouloir prendre au nombre de vos fidèles serviteurs, avec assurance que je n'épargnerai ni ma vie ni mes biens pour les services de sa Majesté. M. le Comte d'Arundel j'espére recommandera ma personne. Pour donner aucun signe de mon affection je vous envoie ici une mémoire d' Empereur Constantin, qu'il a été un prince qu'il a aimé les Anglais.

1636, December 12. London. — Thomas Withrings. "For your honour."

Your packet to Sir Richard Graham I shall send forward by an ordinary of the North. Sir Henry Mervyn the last week refused Captain Dunning to carry the mail over in the 3rd Whelp, who lay with the mail aboard, in the Road of Dunkirk, suffering many boats to come from Dunkirk to Dover, and kept the mail there. The reason was that he convoyed some ships contrary to Sir H. Mervyn's orders.

1636, December 13. The Downs.—Sir Henry Mervin. "For your honour."

I have given order to the Captain of the Garland to wait the coming of the Earl of Arundel to Gore ; so soon as the weather serves she will set sail thither. I have recommended the humble suit of our poor men to the Lords, and hope your Honour will be pleased to pity their misery and encourage them by some relief. A Flemish merchant was on board me, and by him it seems there is much discontent at Dunkirk about stay of their goods in Gibbs his ship. They hold it some injustice that their goods should be stayed to pay duties here, being subjects to the King of Spain, for whom it is lawful, as for the Hollander or any other, to ship away their goods in the vessels of any nation that shall seek freight from them.

1636, December 14. Camberwell.—Den. Fleming to Sir John Coke.

By my infirmity and indisposition of body, especially in my speech, I find myself less fit and able than I have formerly been to execute the place I hold as Clerk of His Majesty's Navy. I did by your leave repair unto the Baths last summer, but the year being almost spent, and the coldness drawing on, I did not receive so much benefit thereby as others of the like nature have formerly done, and happily by God's goodness may do this next spring. I entreat your Honour to move His Majesty in my behalf that I may resign it to a friend, but such as your Honour shall think fit, the office having hitherto been rather a matter of charge than any advantage or gain unto me.

1636, December 20. Ratcliffe, Trinity House.—William Ewen, Walter Coke, J. Bennett, S. Dores, A. Tutchen, and J. Totton to Sir John Coke.

Recommending two merchant ships to be employed in His Majesty's service for 9 months in lying before Sallee to keep in the Moors men of war.

Coke MSS.

1636, December 23. Fulham.—W. Raylton [to Sir John Coke. No address].

Your Honour having two letters from His Majesty, whereof one to my Lord Deputy and the other to the Lord Primate, I offer to your consideration whether it will be fit for His Majesty to appear so far in it; or rather to write only only one letter to the Lord Deputy, who may acquaint the Lord Primate with His Majesty's pleasure, who may thereupon privately intimate so much to the other Bishops as may be needful in the business.

1636, December 28. Aboard the 3rd Whelp in Portsmouth Harbour —Captain R. Slingesbie to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

Being by stress of weather and a dangerous leak forced from my anchor in Dover Road, my ship is now in Portsmouth Harbour, where I am getting out the guns, that I may bring her on ground to search for her leak; and within four or five days I hope I shall be ready to put to sea again and return to Sir H. Mervin in the Downs.

1636, December 28. Latimer.—Charles, Viscount Wilmot of Athlone, to Sir J. Coke.

I despatched a servant into Ireland to invite the purchasers of Athlone to a surrender, as the King commanded, with the offer of their moneys that I received formerly from them; which if it take effect I shall be most glad of for His Majesty's service. But if it should not, I shall hope the King's Majesty did not mean to limit his mercy upon the acceptance of my submission to any conditions of impossibility; if they will either receive it, or may be compelled to take it, I shall be always ready to pay what is justly due to them. And so much, if you be pleased, you may acquaint his Majesty of my willingness and obedience to his service.

1636. A Certificate from Sir Francis Coke and Sir John Fitzherbert, Knights, concerning the contention betwixt the inhabitants of Middlesale (Bowden Chapel le Frith), Com. Derby, and Francis Eare, Petty Constable thereof, concerning the collecting of 6*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.* over and above the moneys assessed upon the said inhabitants for ship moneys; and also, in the case of certain persons who paid their assessments, taking and detaining their cows.

1636. For Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

The grievances which the Fellowship of Merchants Adventurers have against the General States and States of Holland in particular.

The first is the impost which is by them laid and raised upon the English cloth consumed and uttered in those countries, by which, as they burthen our manufacture and lay no charge on their own cloth, they do tacitly seek to banish our cloth out of their countries. Particulars of the beginning (1577) and increase of that impost.

The second, that when the Company had removed from Delft to Rotterdam, the States of Holland did obtrude a règlement upon the company, whereby they not only struck at the whole trade of this land in all other manufactures except white cloth, but also did seek to restrain the exercise of our Church discipline: this was anno 1634.

(Two other heads of grievance stated.)

All which particulars being contrary to the safe conducts, octrois, placcaets and several acts of the States General, and accordingly represented by Sir W. Boswell; yet neither the States of Holland would desist from their violence, nor the States General give any relief unto the Company. Therefore the Company asks that, before the Ambassadors of the States do return, some course may be taken for the re-establishment of the Company in their ancient privileges.

1636. Draft letter of Sir J. Coke (probably to the Governor of Dover).

Finding our foreign letters come with less expedition than they were used to do, and requiring account thereof from the postmaster for foreign parts; he excused himself by a certificate that Captain Cartright [Carteret], who is trusted with that business, refuses to put to sea with merchants' letters only. He formerly charged Mr. Withrings with uncivil usage, which I discovered to have no ground. His Majesty requires your Lordship to rectify this disorder, and to charge Captain Cartright, to whom you give this trust, to be as careful to convoy the merchants' packets as his own. And if he be not conformable, that you appoint some other more proper for that duty, which Captain Drury before him performed with good content, and may haply be still ready to undertake.

Notes by Sir J. Coke of provisions transported from Dover to Dunkirk in several ships. If these had not come from Dover, they could not have had sufficient for their army. Captain Cartright hath conveyed in one day 90 sail from Dover to Dunkirk, and 20 another, and so from time to time at least 20 a week.

1636.—The humble Petition of Arthur Annesley, son to the Lord Mountnorris, to the Queen's most Excellent Majesty.

My distressed father having merely in obedience to His Majesty's command (which hath ever been a law to him) implicitly signed to such a submission as the Lord Deputy and Council of Ireland have prescribed, though I may confidently say so much to his dishonour and prejudice that never the like was required from any subject, much less from an old servant after above thirty years faithful service, is newly committed prisoner to the Castle of Dublin. Your Majesty's petitioner's humble suit on his knees is that his father's submission being made, and he remaining useless in that kingdom (unless to be a mark and butt for his enemies' rage) may by your Majesty's continued gracious mediation to His Majesty have leave to end his days (which cannot be long) in his native country. And his wife and eleven poor children will pray for your sacred Majesty's long and happy reign over us.

1636–7, January 2. Lewisham.—Thomas Smythe to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary.

We sent the Proclamation under His Majesty's Sign Manual to the Seal, but my Lord Keeper desired to confer with the Lords of the Admiralty, and to that intent proposed to confer with your Honour at Hampton Court, but your absence frustrated the conference. It may please your Honour to satisfy either his Lordship or Mr. Dashfield by letters that we may begin the new year, seeing the last year hath yielded nothing towards the rent now to be paid. But we hope well if we may presently begin, and have the proclamation sealed.

1636–7, January 11. Fulham.—W. Raylton [to Sir John Coke. No address].

These inclosed came in a packet yesternight after my return from Court. There is one business now recommended by my Lord Deputy to your Honour about the Judge's place for Mr. Fletcher. My Lord doth much desire to have him in Ireland presently to go the circuit. I am now going to London to inquire of him, as my Lord hath commanded me, and shall afterwards attend your Honour with the letter for His Majesty's royal signature.

COKE MSS.

1636–7, January 12. Durham House.—Thomas Alured to Mr. Mayo.

Soliciting his aid to procure for George Leigh (late of the household at Ludlow of three Lord Presidents of Wales) a pensioner's place, and for Lawrence Thompson (whose father serving as a gentleman on horseback was killed in the Isle of Rhé) a scholar's place at the next election for Sutton's Hospital, and offering to requite Mr. Mayo's kindness with 20 pieces, if Mr. Secretary will please to do so charitable an act.

1636–7, January 12. Buckden.—John Williams, Bishop of Lincoln, to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary.

Because His Majesty has declared his pleasure in Shelley's business, I will not offer to reply any further. But desiring to be retained in your good opinion, I do send you Mr. Sheriff's letter. I conceived, as he did, the order would not be so peremptory for the first sessment, opposed, as you may perceive, by the Sheriff himself. I expected that that imaginary foul and indiscreet language, which I should have used against this fellow, had been charged upon me, but it is not. And therefore as I never used any such unto him, so I cannot tell how to satisfy His Majesty and the Board in that particular. Be pleased to let my good friend Mr. Weckherlin keep these frivolous papers until the 3rd of February.

1636–7, January 14. Mincing Lane.—Ken. Edisbury to Sir John Coke.

As to vessels to be despatched to sea from Chatham. Two new pinnaces on the stocks at Mr. Graves' and Mr. Trankmoore's yards were this day surveyed by London shipwrights.

1636–7, January 14. Latimer.—Charles, Viscount Wilmot of Athlone, to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary.

The favour that I now seek from you is but to know whether you have been pleased to offer the paper that I sent unto you to His Majesty, and whether he gave any liking to it. Where there is so much religion and sense of a gentleman, I shall no ways doubt you favour my honest and just proceeding in this unfortunate business, fallen upon me certainly for my sins, and for no intent ever to offend His Majesty.

1636–7. January 20. Dublin.—Lord Deputy Wentworth to Sir John Coke.

A few words, if it shall please you, of your own business with my own hand. I have been very diligent to inform myself of your lands yonder in the Fartree (Vartry), and find it answers my opinion of it with the better, for the which I protest unto you I am not a little pleased. It proves, they say, near thirty thousand acres of ground; but, to put water in your wine, much of it is very bad, yet nevertheless tel quel; you have quantum milvus oberrat. Very confident I am it might be let for you at five hundred pounds by year, but if I might advise, you should not be too hasty in letting of it. This is a growing kingdom, and no loss in not being too greedy to close with the first chapman. Doctor Cooke, who you employ, I find would have the sole disposing of the business to himself: is not very willing to impart himself in his intentions, either to the Vice Treasurer (who best understands it) or to Sir George Radcliff, that I dare swear means as zealously to your service as the Doctor can do. It were very good, I am persuaded, that you should direct him to advise with us in it, before he conclude you in anything. This I am well assured of, if we do your profit and service no good, we will certainly do it no hurt. May it prove as good as I wish it, and send you as many good years to enjoy it, and then shall it be worth your long keeping of it, and your children after you. And so praying this new year, that God may bless unto you this new acquirement, together with all else that belongs you, I rest your most faithful humble servant.

1636–7, January 28. Hampton Court.—Weckherlin to Sir J. Coke, Secretary of State.

This inclosed Protest coming but now from London, and the King being earlier gone to his new park, I have well perused and considered the same, and find it wholly agreeable and concordant with the Latin, being in a German language and in such terms as are usual in the said tongue, which your Honour knoweth well is very copious. His Electoral Highness doth beseech your Honour to take order with his secretary that one and the other copy thereof be sent over to the Emperor and Elector of Mentz.

1636–7, January 28. Handforth.—Sir William Brereton to Sir John Coke.

A reference has been made to the Earl of Derby, the Lord Strange, and his Majesty's Justices of Assize at Chester for examining of some differences betwixt me and the City of Chester. They have been my antagonists in suit these ten years, concerning some privileges which I ought to enjoy in the City, granted by the same charter wherein this of watch being the matter now questioned before the Board is comprehended. One of my tenants was committed by them to their common goal for not watching, whereas with my charter of exemption the inhabitants of that house have had use time out of mind of this freedom, as hath been proved in a former suit in the Court of Wards touching murage, in which I obtained a decree and 40 marks costs. As concerning the other branch of complaint touching ship money, I shall hope also to give full satisfaction into your Honour and the Board.

1636–7, January 31. Buckden.—John Williams, Bishop of Lincoln, to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary.

I have troubled you too much with the relation of Shelley's business and clamour, and I humbly thank you that you have acquainted the Lords with Mr. Sheriff's letters unto you. Now the Sheriff by direction certifieth the whole Table. And it will appear what he conceived of this cesment (assessment) before I interposed: Also by two letters sent down to Shelley by Mr. Kilvert and published by him in all our alehouses. It appears that Kilvert drew the petition and manageth all this business against me, which I pray God may receive such a determination as that His Majesty's service in these parts do not suffer by the favour this felon hath found. For I hear of two cesments more are snatched away from the hostelries by particular persons, but no Justice of the Peace can (warned by my example) be drawn to interpose. However my cause is in good hands, nor do I desire better judges.

1636–7, February 6. Sir Robert Heath to Sir J. Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary to His Majesty.

I last waited upon you with the humble desire of me and my partners concerning the river of Derwent in Derbyshire. My humble suit is to move His Majesty therein. This Lent will be a fit time to execute the commission, and the summer a fit time to perfect the work. We hope it will incline others to agree thereto, in hope of ease by water carriage. Besides the Commission, my humble suit is that His Majesty will direct his royal letters to the Earl of Newcastle and others the Commissioners.

It is likely they will take the work the more to heart; although the general good of the whole country will so visibly appear therein, that I hope it will be generally well entertained, seeing it shall be performed without a penny charge to any of them.

1636–7, February 8. Doctors Commons.—Sir Henry Marten to Sir John Coke.

In obedience to an order of His Majesty, I have caused the Dunkirk ships to be sold; the money has been brought into the Court of Admiralty. I desire to know whether it is His Majesty's pleasure that it be paid over to the Jerseymen, and whether Peers may be released from prison.

1636–7, Février 10. Philippe Burlamachi à Monseigneur M. Jean Coke, Chevalier, Principal Secrétaire de sa Majesté, en Cour.

Je me suis informé des navires qui portent l'argent d'Espagne. Je trouve que l'une, nommée the Helen and George, est arrivée qui a environ trente ou quarante mille livres sterling. Deux autres, à savoir l'une le Beaver et l'autre le St. Hierosme, ont trois cents cinquante cassettes, chacune cassette contenant cinq cents livres sterling. Il y a encore des autres navires, mais ne portent elles aucune somme considerable.

1636–7, February 13. Whitburne.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford, to Secretary Sir John Coke.

I most heartily thank God and you for excusing me from my journey to London at this time, which indeed I could not possibly have been able to endure. I had one whole night a sore fit of a fever, and after for nine or ten days was so very ill, that had not God sent me a physician, by the natural strength of my body I could hardly have escaped. But I thank God I am now better, and hope the worst is past. I have here inclosed sent you my letters to his Grace and Dr. Eden, the best motives and directions I could at this time; with all the particular demands, and my answers to the Lord Bishop of Bristoll's view. As you see cause and your time will give you leave, you may peruse them, or otherways seal and send them as you shall see cause. His Grace of Canterbury conceives far higher of the Bishopric of Hereford, grounded upon my Lord of Norwidge's information, than I shall ever find. I say not this to diminish God's blessing, but to excuse myself from hurt and loss.

1636, February 15 (? N.S.). Paris.—Sir Kenelm Digby. [No address.]

I thank your Honour most humbly both for your letters of the 15th January, and likewise for the packet you sent me, which without your exceeding goodness to me had miscarried. The world here is much more apprehensive of your sea preparations than you need be of theirs. Whatsoever you hear from Holland, I believe there will be no great naval attempts from hence made this year upon us. I rather conceive they will bend all their marine forces to drive the Spaniards out of their islands in the Mediterranean sea. I acknowledge myself excessively bound to my Lord's Grace of Canterbury for his wonderful goodness and affection shown to me. I know I am bound to your Honour for a great part of it. I profess you two to be the best friends I have. For the knowledge of what I have written to my Lord's Grace, I will humbly refer your Honour to his Grace. What censure soever I may at first incur, I assure your Honour I recede not one hair's breadth from the public maxims I formerly held, and my private tenets are as little dissonant in substance, and such as I assure myself your Honour would not disallow of, should you sift them in particular.

1636–7, February 17. York.—W. Wentworth to Sir John Coke.

Having received from your Honour much gracious and noble usage both touching myself and my estate, which being undeserved on my part did argue unto me that your courtesies were derived from your innate goodness, and therefore would continue still, for a noble nature and disposition is a fountain of goodness that will not be dried up: now I understand, whereas my Lord Deputy of Ireland hath lately recommended me to His Majesty to be one of the Council of York in fee, your Honour hath not only done that, but you have given my small business a more speedy dispatch than usual, and hath been graciously pleased to remit your own due, and as it were to rob yourself to benefit him, who was tied to retribute symbols of a thankful remembrance in the greatest measure that he could. I beseech you to uphold the reputation of your judgment so far as to think I am as thankful in my heart as you who best know the greatness of my obligation think I ought to be. In this he will never be defective, who desires no greater honour than to be your most devoted and thrice humble servant.

1636–7, February 20. Dublin.—G. Hamilton to Sir John Coke.

Asks for a copy of His Majesty's letter recommending him to the Lord Deputy for some part of the plantation.

1636–7, February 21. Duchy House.—Lord Newburgh [Edward Barrett] to Mr. Secretary Coke, at Court.

To signify His Majesty's pleasure to Mr. Attorney-General and Mr. Solicitor that they examine the matter of the fines that were the last summer Assizes set upon the High Sheriff of Lancaster; and to confer with the Chancellor of the Duchy, and the Lord Chief Baron, and the rest of the Barons of the Exchequer, that the King may be fully informed what interest he hath in those fines in the right of the Crown or in the right of the Duchy. Sir, I pray acquaint the King with this direction of the reference that I may not incur the danger of misrelating his commands therein.

1636–7, February 21. Dublin.—Lord Deputy Wentworth to Sir John Coke. (Not signed.)

One word in a bye paper concerning your own business. I have given warrant by signing of the Fiant for the passing of your grant: but it receives some rub at the seal. Yet my Lord saith he hath sealed it, yet whether it be or no, I have not yet seen. The querelle d'Almande that he takes against it, I have desired my cousin Radcliffe to write fully unto you, and the reason why we thought it best for you it should be so: especially when we conceived I had warrant to do it that way as well as the other. But he shall be called upon for it, and either do it, or give me a very good account for his refusal at the Council board. If it be done before the closing up this packet you shall be certified thereof. But this cause at the Council board, which is hitherto held by us all to be a most foul and dishonourable cause, and fit for His Majesty in honour and justice to see redressed, makes him hugely displeased with us all; so as, if that proceed, it will be impossible to persuade him further than we shall have power to enforce him unto, as well in this as in everything else: which they here tell me is according to nature, and as he hath used to carry himself in other times upon like accidents, and so it seems he is very good only as long as he is very well pleased.

My Cousin Radcliff saith he hath your patent sealed.

COKE MSS.

1636–7, February 27.—René Augier, His Majesty's Agent in France and Secretary of His Extraordinary Ambassage to the French King, humbly demandeth allowance of 238*l.* for his extraordinary expenses, port of letters, voyages from Paris to the French Court from the 1st of August 1636 to the 13th February following; also for his journey and transport into England.

1636–7, February 27. Lavington.—Sir Ferdinand Gorges to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary.

I am bold to recommend the bearer hereof, Captain William Gorges, my nephew, to be so employed as may sort with his reputation, bred up by me in His Majesty's service, and exercised in the practice of the war by sea and land at home and abroad. I am grown a little doubtful of the state of my own body, not able to endure the sea any long time. I will be ready to give my attendance to give an account to His Majesty or your Honour of my opinion for the carriage of the war intended in the behalf of the Prince Palatinate. It is a maxim amongst men of war, that such as are the enterprizers such will be the success of the enterprize. The art of war is a mystery, understood by few. I say no more, referring to your wisdom to judge of the rest.

1636–7, February 27. Whitburne.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford, to Sir J. Coke, at his house in Garlick Hithe, London.

My desire was not for a legal commission, but with consent to have one or two fit and honest neighbours on either part chosen, who might give true notice in their judgment of those things which are only needful and reasonable; or without this, upon consideration of the demands in my view against my predecessor, and what I was by sentence allowed for them, and what is now over and above that of mine required by this of my Lord of Bristol, never conceived as dilapidations in any Bishop's time this hundred years. In either of which two ways, what it shall please his Grace to proportion I willingly submit myself unto.

1636–7, March 4. St. Peter's College, Cambridge.—Doctor Jo: Cosin, Master of Peterhouse, to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary.

My Lord the Bishop of Durham hath lately employed my care in the publishing of a new book, which he hath composed against the popish doctrine of merit. And now that the treatise is finished, it is his special direction that two copies be sent to your Honour, one to be in his name presented by your Honour to His sacred Majesty, and the other to be kept for your own use. For which purpose I have appointed the bearer to attend your Honour with the books.

1636–7, March 7.—Copy grant by Letters Patent under the Great Seal of Ireland to Sir John Coke and his heirs of the territory or precinct of land called Feartry, alias Ferter, in County Wicklow, also the Castle of the Manor of Castlekevin and the towns and lands of Castlekevin, Tomrelann, Tomedarough, Leytrim, Baltynamyne, Melenemigg, Bolenestavoy, Glassemollen, Cooletromoke, Tullaghgory, Bolekerarre, Bolenenalge, Bolenecconbegg, Rahin, Ashtowne, Downemore, Carrickroe, Knockrahenbegg, Luggelah, Corboylt, Boylenrush, and Bollyballygoogch, subject to the service of one knight's fee and the annual rent of forty pounds of Irish money.

1636, March —.—No signature. Endorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Mr. Doctor Cooke, from Dublin.. His own business only."

Relates to "a man who I will not brand with recrimination"; his treatment of two ships which he calls pirates, and their officers. Sir George Ratcliffe told me that he had spoken with the Lord Deputy, and that his Lordship wished him to tell me that that hand which had wronged me had righted me. The Lord Chancellor sent for me and wished me to examine the whole proceedings had before the Commissioners, and to make as good a certificate as I could, which to the uttermost of my power I did as much as the proceedings will bear.

1637, April 6.—Endorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Copy to Sir George Ratcliffe."

I have received your letter with my patent and survey. Though I must still rely upon your help and friendship, yet I will ease you what I can by my addresses for the solicitation of my business to Doctor Cooke. I thank you for your good opinion and kindness towards my Cousin Gilbert, hoping you will direct him in performing that service which may deserve his Lordship's good opinion.

[Within is a copy of a letter from Sir J. Coke to Doctor Cooke.]

It pleased the Lord Deputy to signify both to the Lord Archbishop and to myself that he had received satisfaction, and had no further exception against you. I have now received by Sir G. Ratcliffe's means both my grant for the Fartrey (Vartry) under the Great Seal of that kingdom, and a survey thereof drawn by Mr. Raven; whereby I understand what great care and how much pains my worthy friends, especially Sir George, hath taken for me. I have written to the Lord Deputy and to him to desire the continuance of their favour, both in removing O'Toole into Connaught upon the new plantation now in hand, and in buying out the mother for a yearly annuity or a sum of money, as Sir George shall direct.

1637, April 14.—John Broughton to Sir John Coke.

The Farmers [in Dean Forest?] by this new grant have 13,500 cords of wood granted yearly unto them at 10*s.* per cord; annual rent, 6,750*l.* My undertakers will pay 9,450*l.*, and will be tied to have at the most 20 cabins in the whole forest, whereas the present farmers had lately 159 cabins and cottages there, whereby, besides contentment to the commonwealth by strangers being excluded, there will be saved above 2,000 pounds of wood and timber which is yearly spent by them. If your Honour can procure this petition to be granted the present farmers will in a snuff make a show to yield up their patent, and then His Majesty may take them at their words and thereby obtain his right.

1637, April 18. Lavington.—Sir Ferdinand Gorges to Sir J. Coke.

At the meeting of the justices this last sessions the inequality of the rates of the several Hundreds for all payments were complained of, with desire of speedy reformation, that so His Majesty's service (for all levies) might with more ease be borne, and the complaints of the poorer sort be taken away. I have thought it a principal part of my duty to commend the same to your consideration, that His Majesty might be moved to give order that letters may be directed to the Lieutenants and Justices to the same purpose.

1637, April 25. Dover.—Sir Thomas Colepepyr to Sir John Coke.

The Dutch gentleman is returned out of Cambridgeshire, where he hath had a very happy beginning of our turf business; it shall give His Majesty more content and benefit than is expected out of so mean a material. This bearer, Ensign Carmarden, is sent over by my Lieutenant Colonel for a supply of men. I beseech you to afford him 15 or 20 more than the ordinary Capt. do take. I have resigned my charge of Dover Castle to Sir John Alanwood.

Coke MSS.

1637, April —.—J. Egerton, Earl of Bridgewater, to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary to His Majesty.

Encloses petition of a neighbour he hath the report of an honest man, and hath been at charge to prepare his house and to furnish himself with horses.

Endorsed by Sir J. Coke, "For the post in Barbican."

1637, May 5.—Articles of peace accorded and agreed upon between the High and Mighty Prince Charles by the grace of God King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, and the Right Excellent and Renowned Lord Sidde Hamet Laiaski, His Majesty of Great Britain's forces besieging New Sallee by sea and the said Sidde Hamet Laiaski by land.

That the subjects of both parts shall have free trade and enter into any of the ports of the other by the way of merchandize. . . . It is covenanted on the part of His Majesty of Great Britain that the forces he hath in Sallee Road shall to the uttermost of their power keep any ships from going in or out into New Sallee during this present siege, and that he will not make peace with them of New Sallee without the consent of the right excellent Saint. Upon the part of the right excellent Saint it is covenanted that all the captives that be His Majesty's subjects within his dominions be freely set at liberty, and that he suffer none hereafter to be made captives. . . . If he make peace with them of New Sallee that he cause them before the peace be confirmed to [de]liver to His Majesty's deputy all the captives they now have, and to enter pledge to fetch them back that are sold by them to Algiers and Tunis, or else to deliver to His Majesty's deputy so much money as will redeem them.

Signed aboard His Majesty's ship the Leopard, Admiral, in Sallee Road. Wm. Rainborowe.

An Arabic signature at the head.

1637, May 10. Camberwell.—Den. Flemyng to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

I did the last year lose the opportunity of the spring at the bath by reason of my late going, wherefore I am desirous to take hold of this present as the fittest season if you please to give me leave to repair thither. In regard the fleet is gone to sea and most part of that business done. I beseech you pardon my not waiting upon you, in regard of my dullness and defect of speech, which I hope will be repaired by God's goodness ere my return.

1637, May 22. Whitburne.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford, to Secretary Sir John Coke.

Sir,—The parsonage of Whitburne, now in the possession of Dr. Godwin, but when it falls being in my gift, I fear lest by some means it may be put or found in lapse, and so fall to the Lord Keeper's gift, and by that means be taken out of my hands. I pray you, therefore, if you will be pleased by some means to put in a caveat either by Mr. Alured or Mr. Brett (one who, when I was Bishop of Bristol, would acknowledge himself beholding to me) or by some other means as you shall think fit. That in case it so fall out to be begged as in lapse, it may either be begged for me, to be disposed to one of mine, or that I may have notice of it in time to do my best endeavour to prevent it. This I thought fit to acquaint you with, not willing to write more of it, or other things which of late have fallen otherways than I expected.

1637, May 24. London.—Archibald Campbell, Lord Lorne, to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

The King's Majesty was graciously pleased to allow me to signify His pleasure to you for drawing up a letter to Sir Paul Pinder, showing that His Majesty had given an assignment to the Marquis of Huntly the last March last 1637 bearing the sum of seven thousand eight hundred and thirty-three pounds six shillings and eight pence upon tallies stricken upon Sir Harry Knowles and the Earl of Berkshire and Edward Lord Howard, which sums are now assigned by the Marquis of Huntly to Andrew Bethune. Therefore in respect the tallies are only stricken upon the year 1639, His Majesty is pleased to desire Sir Paul Pinder to advance Mr. Bethune the said moneys as they can agree, taking it as an acceptable service to him. This I am bold to signify to you, entreating for a speedy despatch.

1637, May 27. Aboard the Swiftsure, in the Downs.—Captain J. Penington. [To Sir John Coke. No address.]

I have been requested by this bearer, Mr. Robert Smith, Deputy Postmaster of the town of Deal, to write unto your Honour that you would be pleased to confer the Postmaster's place on him. A careful diligent man in sending away the King's packets, and in making fires at all hours both night and day, to give us notice when he receives any for us: and further he keeps good hoys, which his predecessor never did.

1637, May 28. Tower Hill, London.—Bartholomew Haggett to Sir J. Coke, Secretary of State.

The inclosed Italian letter was found in a passenger's trunk, with beads, painted saints, and other popish matters and writings about a fortnight since, but brought to me to read to-day. I considered it might be fit for your Lordship's knowledge.

1637, June 10. Swithland.—William d'Anvers to Sir J. Coke, at his Chamber in Whitehall.

I am this day summoned by Mr. Only, a messenger of Wymondham in this county, to appear at the Council Table this term at London for my inclosures and depopulations and decay of tillage here at Swithland. I will never do these things. Neither did my father nor my grandfather that have lived here these fourscore years. But what was in tillage within the memory of any man alive is now tilled by us, the inhabitants of Swithland. We have planted some more families than formerly there hath been, and they live now better than ever they did, and not one of them that troubles or charges either the town or country, saving two old people that are relieved by us. This messenger hath summoned three poor men of this town at this time also, that in this kind are as guiltless as your Honour is of any such thing. I humbly entreat you to stop these unjust clamours and false accusations against us. I cannot well travel so far as London, unless there be some great necessity in it. As I hear from your Honour I shall direct my course. Your Honour's poor kinsman.

1637, June 13. Whitburne.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford, to Secretary Sir John Coke, at his lodging in Whitehall.

Sir,—I am very hardly dealt with by the Dean of Arches, as you may perceive by this inclosed, which I have sent to his Grace to give him information of it, and withal to try if thereby I may get some power from his Grace for relief. If you like it you may please to seal and send it; or if you think it not fit for me to give such an hint to his Grace, you may conceal it, as you think fit. Your two sons came to me this day, and are now with me at Whitburne, in good health; and I doubt not but to draw them with me to Hereford, whither I am now to go, upon my visitation of the Church there. They both remember their humble service to you, as doeth also, in his devoted prayers, your ever loving brother and servant.

COKE MSS.

1637, June 15. Bishop Auckland.—Thomas Morton, Bishop of Durham, to Sir J. Coke.

Salutem in Christo Jesu. Your favours are more than I can express: they have proceeded so cordially as from a father, a brother, a self. Gladly would I understand how it pleased His sacred Majesty to accept of my last book; I persuaded myself better by reason of your tender. Your former favours invite more troubles, if that either myself or this bearer, Richard Baddeley, my secretary, shall have any necessary occasion.

(1637, June 16.)—In an old handwriting.

Mr. Secretary Coke's censure of the Bishop of Lincoln.

We are now to censure a great prelate of the Church, who if he had less meddled with temporal affairs, and applied himself wholly to his proper function, might happily have prevented any censure in this Court.

Mr. Attorney hath pressed six charges against him; but the substance of all is, that he hath been too busy by himself and his servants in tampering with witnesses for the perversion of justice. This tampering is proved by sufficient evidence, and is a misdemeanour punishable by fine and imprisonment. And for his fine I concur with those that have spoken to be a terror to offenders in this kind. But for his deprivation or any declaration to that purpose, I find no matter proved worthy such a censure against a prelate of the Church, and my conscience doth not warrant me to proceed so far for these reasons.

First, the deprivation and degradation of a Bishop is to be governed (as I conceive) both for the causes and judicature by the canons and orders of the Church, whereof this Court hath no cognizance; at least they are not within my comprehension, and therefore I dare not take upon me to give sentence which may reflect beyond my knowledge upon the privileges and honour of the Church.

Secondly, I am not satisfied with the precedents Mr. Attorney hath presented; because one was decreed in the spiritual court, to which it was more proper, and the other was for an offence of a far different nature—for falsifying a will. And if the Bishop of Lincoln had been here convinced for perjury, subornation of perjury, forgery, or any such heinous sin as might justify a prelate's deprivation to all the world, this precedent might perhaps be extended to it.

But the Court having no action against him for perjury or subornation, and no forgery being proved, I dare not for the honour I bear to the prelacy and the Church consent to such a censure to be declared in this Court.

A third reason swayeth with me very much. That, if we now make a precedent of degrading upon a misdemeanour which is not limited (as heresy, blasphemy, or murder) but an indefinite offence, I fear what the consequence may be in after times, and how far it may concern all men in their offices and honours. For if [for] such an offence of arbitrary interpretation a Bishop may be degraded, why may not a nobleman, a knight, and an officer of what degree soever be deprived of his dignity and degree for the like? I dare not therefore decree a precedent of that consequence which may trench in future times, God only knoweth to how many and how far. So I leave the Bishop with the fine above-named and with imprisonment according to the order of this Court.

1637, June 22. At sea, aboard the Triumph.—Lord Conway and Kilulta to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

We have had very foul weather since the 9th. We could not keep the sea so well, but some Turks have come upon the coast and have carried away some fishermen, about 36. The Earl of Northumberland has sent two ships about the Land's End and into St. George's Channel, if peradventure they may be there to take them.

1637, July 3. The Triumph, Dover Road.—Lord Conway and Kilulta [to Sir J. Coke]. [No address.]

Sir William Howard, who undertook the delivery of my last letter, is gone into Holland with the Prince Elector, and with him young Mr. Porter, neither of them with any more clothes or shirts than what they had on their backs. The fleet brought the Prince Elector to the entrance into the Maes. It was purposed that the Prince should have gone into the pinnace, which should have carried him to Maezland Sluice, but the wind was so galliard that he could not go out of his ship; so the St. George and the Vanguard, wherein were many of his followers, went into Goeree, and we are now come to the Road before Dover. Captain Rainborough complains of the want of the pinnace. I have heard much talk of a West India Company to be erected in England. There is not anything I should have a better affection to, if it be well directed. With a sudden gust of wind the St. George lost her main topmast and mizzen topmast: her lower ports were open and much water came in.

1637, July 18. Zachary Billingherst, Deputy; John Bankes, Vicar; William Parker; John Busher; Francis Parker; Fab Digges, Commissioners for Passage at Margate in the parish of St. John the Baptist in Thanet, to the Lords of His Majesty's most honourable Privy Council, "together with a bundle of letters."

On the last week here were at our port at Margate certain gentlemen landed who came from Rome, who testifying that they had divers presents for the Queen, upon sight of a Warrant in Latin from one William Hamilton of Her Majesty's Bedchamber were discharged. Within a while after whose departure this bundle of letters was found. In them we finding letters directed to great personages, and one of them to one of the Board, we thought fit rather to present them unto your Honours jointly.

[Enclosure.] The letters enclosed in the leathern bag are one to Sir Francis Windebank. One with the Pope's Nuntio's seal, without direction. Four to one Mr. George Corne. One to Father Philip, the Queen's Confessor.

1637, July 19. The Triumph, in the Downs.—Viscount Conway and Kilulta to Sir J. Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary of State.

The wind hath been long south-west, so that the ships which are at Goerée cannot come from thence, neither can the ships appointed for Sallee go from this place. The Whelp, which in company with two other ships went to convoy the Prince Elector's goods into Holland, in the return sprung a great leak, the ship did sink, 17 were drowned, the Captain and 40 were saved in the boat; they rowed about a day and a night and came to the Brill. The Prince of Orange is entrenched before Breda.

COKE MSS.

1637, July 19. On board the Triumph, in the Downs.—Algernon Percy, Earl of Northumberland. "For your Honour."

The Prince Elector coming this way for transportation to Holland I received order from Court to send three or four vessels to attend towards the King's channel the coming down of three vessels freighted with some of His Highness's train horses and goods, and to waft them over to some port of Holland; which was performed by the Pleiades, the Industry, and the 5th Whelp. On the 29th, going over to attend the Prince, I met the two first. This day the pilot came unto me with this letter from Captain Popham, who was the Captain of the 5th Whelp. I have sent the letter that you may inform His Majesty of the misfortune which has happened to her. I am also to desire you to know His Majesty's pleasure concerning the release of the three Dunkirkers long ago taken by the said Captain, and detained in Dover till we could have notice of the releasement of the two French pilots, which now is come, but under the hand only of a public notary, no minister of State; when I shall understand from you that His Majesty is satisfied with that certificate I shall give order suddenly herein. Last night here came to an anchor the London, from the East Indies, richly laden with pepper and cloves, &c.

1637, July 29. Windsor.—Thomas Erskine, Earl of Kellie, to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

The bearer hereof is an old servant of mine, to whom (when I was Captain of the Guard) I gave a yeoman's place, which by my consent he exchanged with one Mortimer, a servant to this Lord Stanhope's father, for the next post place that should fall in his gift; which happened to be Stamford, which being become void by the death of one Falkingham, the Lord Stanhope admitted him, with a condition that he should suffer the widow of Falkingham to execute the said place of postmaster of Stamford, she paying unto this my servant. 5*l* per annum; which rather than he would bring himself into his Lordship's displeasure he yielded unto. Since when the new Lord Stanhope hath commanded him to make a lease of the deputation thereof unto the said widow's son I earnestly entreat you to take this poor man's case into your serious consideration, and either authorize him to execute his place or else give some order for payment of his arrear of 250*l*.

1637, July.—The first part of a letter from the Lord Deputy and the Council of Ireland touching their relations with the Earl of Antrim.

We crave leave to make known to His Majesty that the Earl of Antrim hath not in this business dealt with this State with that clearness which might beget in us a belief of his real purpose or ability to go through with the pretended designs. At the Council the Earl having first pressed that it should be deferred to the spring, now said that it was not to be done by any other than himself whom they in the Isles admired, as he affirmed, nor yet by himself at any other time than this summer. The Earl professeth to be uncertain as to the purposes of Sir Donald McDonnell's journey into England, but they are clearly known to his Excellency and his servant Archibald Stuart from Sir Donald himself. Those Islands are not of the consideration nor the Earl so powerful there as he pretends. He asks for more barrels of powder than are here in the King's stores. If the ammunition and arms he requires should miscarry in the expedition they could not be supplied of new for the defence of the kingdom. The Earl's Regiments are in great part the sons of habituated traitors, and would be dangerous to the great body of Scottish amongst us to be secured and the intended Plantation to be settled. He told us he would send into Spain for some Commanders of the Irish Regiments there. [Rest wanting.]

1637, August 4. The Triumph, in the Downs.—Viscount Conway and Kilulta to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

We are with all speed preparing to go to the west parts. I believe the Captains had rather be there than here, for the plenty and cheapness of those parts; but I conceive that our being there will be altogether useless. The narrowness of the sea in these parts and the joining of the countries of the Kings of France and Spain and that of the States do make this place the most likely to keep or hinder the which of them you please. The ships appointed to be sent to Captain Rainborough are gone * 1637, August 5. Tottenham.—Sir John Coke to Sir John Coke the Younger.

I had written by your brother Thomas and shall be glad to hear of his safe coming to Melbourne, and whether the sickness spreadeth any farther at Derby. We have had it near us in Tottenham divers months. The careful watch you keep will by God's favour preserve you, and the better if you suffer no free passage over Swarkeston Bridge, specially by wanderers, who in times of infection are to be restrained. Keep your own people at home, and draw to your house as little company as you can. Your letters come sometimes late. I hope that will by Mr. Withring's posts be amended. For we, the Postmasters General, have made him our deputy, that he may the better accommodate his letter office. For the good entertainment you had at Whitburn I have also given thanks to my brother. Now by you I see clearly how Bury hath dealt with us both and with our friends. I will meddle no more with him, nor suffer him to meddle with ought of mine. You brother out of like charity bestowed pains for him in a suit against Sir Erasmus Fountain, who can best tell you how he deserted both his advocate and his cause. I sent you a warrant for a buck by your brother; and herewith you shall receive two warrants, whereof one is signed by the King, the other is to the Earl of Newcastle. You shall do well to send Mr. Sydenham's letter by a stranger, and not discover it is for you. If you see cause to disperse your family, give me notice by the post and I will send for your sisters. Our progress now beginneth, and will not continue in any remote place above 20 days. Now your harvest draweth near the end I recommend you to your hawks, and advise your brother to bear them company and spare his study till his return. If the sickness continue in Derby the Commissioners must meet at Wirksworth or Ashbourne.

1637, August 8. Canbury.—Thomas Lord Coventry to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary of State, at Court. (Received 9th, at London.)

The last night Sir James Bagg delivered to me a warrant, signed by His Majesty, to vacate and cancel the decree and all the proceedings in the cause wherein Sir Anthony Pell was plaintiff in Star Chamber against Sir James Bagg and others. It so falleth out that the Register in whose custody that decree is at this present is out of town: what delay that might occasion (were the business in itself clear) I cannot well tell. But remembering, what I assure myself you do not forget, what a business it made when upon a like warrant from His Majesty to Sir Robert Heath, then Attorney-General, an information for His Majesty against Mr. Carver was taken off the file in a vacation time, and that after many debates in open court it was restored to the file, and the cause proceeded and Carver sentenced, I held it my duty for avoiding the like inconvenience, to desire you to represent from me in all humility to his Majesty that in this case sentence being passed Sir Anthony Pell is so far interested in it that I do not know that His Majesty, who is most zealous to observe the rules of justice, hath at any time in any like case without the party's assent prejudiced the party's interest. The King's pardon may discharge the King's fine, but although His Majesty grant a pardon after sentence the party's interest stands good: but if the records be defaced, both the fine to the King and the interest of the party do all fall away and perish. And, as I remember, a sentence being given by the votes of the court for one Robinson against Musgrave and others for a foul conspiracy, Sir Richard Grymes, who married the daughter of Musgrave, did much importune His Majesty, before the sentence entered, that Musgrave might be omitted in the sentence for his reputation, which His Majesty in favour to Sir R. Grymes required to be done; but being informed by the Lords that it was not to be done after sentence pronounced without the consent of the party, Robinson was prevailed with to consent, and so Musgrave was omitted: and Robinson was knighted by his Majesty. And therefore, in this case, if his Majesty will be pleased to respite the execution of this warrant until his return from progress, he may then upon advice with the Lords and his learned Counsel come to such a resolution as shall be most agreeable to his own honour and justice. The fine of 3,000*l.*, which is the great matter of moment, he may without doubt pardon, and that which concerns Sir Anthony Pell being, as I remember, chiefly matter of costs, it is not unlike he may be drawn to consent, as Robinson did, and then Consensus tollit errorem. And in truth I have, ever since I served His Majesty at the Seal, constantly avoided all cancellation of Star Chamber records, as matter of high consequence in vacation time, or to do it in term but either upon motion in open court, or if it be fit to be done with more privacy in the Inner Star Chamber in the presence of the Lords. I beseech you move His Majesty herein, and let me understand his pleasure as soon as may be. You may also acquaint him that my Lord Treasurer and myself have resolved on Thursday next to examine the Bishop of Lincoln, and then he shall receive an account of that business.

Coke MSS.

1637, August 8.—Timothy Pusey to Sir John Coke.

Asks on behalf of one Thompson, postmaster of Wetherby, which town is wholly my Lady of Devonshire's, that he may continue the said office in the same place and not to be removed to York or any other place, a loss to the honest man and the town.

1637, August 13. Fulham.—William Juxon, Bishop of London, to Sir J. Coke, Secretary of State.

I have now sent you the book of rates for the Irish customs, examined by Sir Abraham Dawes: I believe you will take the first opportunity of transmitting it to my Lord Deputy. I have heard no news of Colonel Hamilton, who your Honour said would furnish Mr. Fleming; but so soon as he appears your recommendation shall make us dispense with some of our own necessities to furnish his.

1637, August 14. The Downs.—Richard Donnell, Captain of the First Whelp, to Secretary Coke.

Be pleased to entertain your poor servant into your worthy thoughts to think upon him for a winter ship. My Lord General hath promised me that he will not be backward. If ever I be ungrateful, then let me be a monster hateful, detestable, more than wonderful. All my employment is for the convoy at Ostend. The Prince hath besieged Breda so strongly that their own side expected the yielding of it up every day, and they are fearful of his coming to Ostend, for they took in 500 soldiers the other day.

1637, August 17. The Triumph, Plymouth Road.—Viscount Conway and Kilulta to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

This harbour is full of merchant ships bound for the West, being stayed here by the extremity of the weather, which doth exceed both in wind and rain. These parts are free from the Turkish pirates. Three Dutch ships that come from Pernambuco told us that the Dutch will certainly take Brazil; which if they do they will make it a very considerable place, and more to be thought on than as the Spaniard did order it. The men of Plymouth say the fishing at Newfoundland is worse than it was, and that this new charge will make it yet worse.

1637, August 20. Buckminster.—Sir Edward Hartopp, the younger, to Sir John Coke.

Thanks for preferment of my old servant Charnock, a place of more value and convenience than I expected. He is much opposed in his business with false pretences. He is advised by many friends to look to himself—they have been overheard to say that if he got this office they would get his life.

1637, August 21. Haines Hill.—Secretary Sir Francis Windebank to Sir John Coke.

Your letters from Lyndhurst of the 16th came not to my hands until yesterday, Sunday the 20th. For the business of my Lord of St. Alban's it is very true that upon a petition of his to His Majesty, representing the motives which you will find in the letter from the Lord Deputy and Council to me, which goes herewith, his Majesty holding them reasonable gave me order to prepare a letter to the Lord Deputy to warrant the allowance of 1,500*l.* to the said Earl, which letter was signed by His Majesty, and is that which you conceive to have been a Privy Seal. If this (as it seems by my Lord Deputy and the Council's letter) be contrary to the establishment, it is most fit to be stayed. But that the business passed the examination of certain lords referees, of which my Lord Marshal was one, is most certain: upon whose certificate to the purpose mentioned in this letter the whole proceeding in this business was grounded.

1637, August 30. Chiswick.—Sir John Finet to Sir John Coke.

The Poland Ambassador has come from Harwich to Greenwich, hoping His Majesty will permit him to remain there till he may receive His Majesty's more comfortable answer. I durst not make offer of personal repair to him, knowing His Majesty's just resentment. I perceive he thinks he may, by our merchants trading to Poland and remonstrating their and others danger to follow in case of utter refusal, procure access to your Honour, and from and by your Honour to His Majesty. I present to your Honour the Venetian Ambassador's humble request to His Majesty for an audience.

1637, August .—Sir Ranulph Crewe to Sir J. Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary to His Majesty, at Court.

By your letters I see the King's pleasure, and may discern the strength of my Lady Savage, who hath her end. The petition exhibited by my son for redress of that exhorbitant patent procured by the late Lord Savage was truth. The late Lord Savage was the first man that procured a grant of 20 bucks and deer, whereas all former Rangers had never more than four, and those he holds at his pleasure and pays no fees to the poor Keepers. Your Honour may see by this petition how my Lord Savage upholds the profession he made before you of respects to me and my son; the right of my son in the bestowing of a principal Keeper's place in the Forest is sought to be invaded. That keepers dependent upon my Lord Savage may hold places there he may have reason enough, and the Forest suffer, and my son may retain the title but not the right of a Forester. I most humbly beseech your Honour help my son off this rock. The place being granted to an able man before the receipt of the King's letter methinks should be a satisfactory answer, with this that it behoves the Forester to make choice of able and trusty keepers.

COKE MSS.

(1637, September 2.) Dated and endorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Lord Keeper," but not signed.

I am in truth very sensible of this business put on me in a progress when I cannot attend His Majesty nor have conference with the Lords. I pray you do your best in it to change the King's purpose. And in good faith if it should be done it will be a precedent of very ill consequence and will much weaken the honour and estimation of the justice of that court. If you would of yourself get Mr. Comptroller and some other of the Lords to set in with you, I suppose it would do no harm. Thus much I have culled in this paper, thinking you may have cause to show my letter to His Majesty.

1637, September 4. The Triumph, in the Downs.—Algernon Percy, Earl of Northumberland. "For Mr. Secretary Coke."

The 26th August we went out to sea and there spent some days between Plymouth and the Land's End. Wanting some days of a month's victuals caused me to make use of the fair wind to bring us away for the Downs. Upon Saturday the 2nd, in the afternoon, we came out of Plymouth Sound; ever since we had a gale of wind, which made our passage shorter, and this day by noon we came here to an anchor. One of the Holland men-of-war now riding before Dunkirk missed staying, and was cast away on the sands there. The King of Spain's ships that have been so long a fitting at Dunkirk are now come out of the harbour, and ride under the fort within the Splinter. The Holland fleet that lay on the other side of the sand made divers shot at them: it will be a hard matter for them to escape the Hollanders. I am told that the Dunkirk frigates that went to the Northward have taken at least 60 Holland busses, which I am not very sorry for, since they refused His Majesty's protection.

1637, September 6.—Thomas Smythe to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary.

My Lord Treasurer's answer was, he must take more time to consider it. Withal I met with Sir Charles Harborde, who tells me that the Commissioners in Fleet Street have nothing to do with that business, but my Lord Treasurer only can do as he pleaseth, by reason the Prince hath not sued out his livery. They will take my place from me: their aims are only at me, whom they have not only discredited and defamed, but now strive to undo. My humble request is that His Majesty may understand my case, and to be assisted with your discreet advice.

(1637), September 21 (St. Nov.). Narbonne.—A. Mildemay. [No address.]

It being now more than three weeks since the Spaniards have besieged Leucata without any interruption, they have so fortified all places and passages to their intrenchments that it is not possible for the French to hinder the taking this strong fort. Two thirds of the army are of the religion. The nobility repair hither in great numbers hourly, and are going with great cheerfulness upon apparent dangers. The two Archbishops with the General are continually in council. The greatest consolation that those of the religion have in these parts is that the papists acknowledge that, in ruining them, they are destroyed themselves.

1637, September 30.—Copy of a Royal letter to the Dean and Chapter of Bristol requiring them in nowise to suffer their lessee Pierce to build any new house or stables at the east end of the Cathedral Church to the further profanation of that place, and on the expiration of his lease his then house to become the sixth prebendal house, and so continue for ever.

1637, September.—Edward Nicholas.

A note of such public businesses as were left unperfected in September 1637.

Mr. Attorney General is to take examination of the entertainment, &c. of Prynne and Burton in their passage to their places of imprisonment.

The Merchants Adventurers are to give an account whether they will undertake to do the King's business, if he approve their choice of a Deputy for Rotterdam: and until they shall undertake the same His Majesty will suspend his approbation of their choice.

The Mayors of Newbury and Reading are the 2nd of October to give an account to the Board how the money given by Mr. Kenerick for the good of clothing in those towns is disposed of.

The Justices of the Peace of Middlesex are to attend the Board the first sitting after Michaelmas about the buildings which lead from Covent Garden to the New Exchange, in case the Earl of Bedford doth not rectify the uneven and crooked passage there upon notice from the said Justices. This was ordered 17th August last.

(?) 1637, September. London.—Philippe Burlamachi. [No address.]

Monseigneur,—On m'a envoyé de Paris la sentence que les commissaires de sa Majesté Très Chrétienne ont donné sur le fait qui était en question entre Claude Voille et moi. Je vois par icelle qu'ils ont pris connaissance de beaucoup de choses qui concernent les officiers de la maison de la Majesté de la Reine renvoyés en France, qui ont reçu leur satisfaction. Ce que je trouve et que je suis forcé de remontrer à sa Majesté est que, nonobstant l'ordre très expres qui fut donné à Monsieur Augier de maintenir et poursuivre le rabbat des six pour cent, que j'avais ordonné, fut fait aux officiers qui recoivent leurs assignations hors de l'argent de sa Majesté pour remplacer le récompense payée au dit Voille, les dits commissaires ont defendu au Sieur Laurent Vannalli de les rabattre sur les parties qui ne sont payées; Ce qui viendra au préjudice de sa Majesté. Encore que le Sieur du Jardin qui devait avoir 107,000 livres tournois hors du fonds laissé eût refusé de subir le dit rabbat, pour les prétentions d'interest qu'il avait contre sa Majesté . . . diminuat beaucoup la somme, . . . sa Majesté vient frustrée de tous côtés de ce qui était destiné pour la satisfaction des dits officiers, et sera forcé de pourvoir autres fonds pour les payer: pour lesquels il y avait provision suffisante ès les mains de Monsieur de Guinegauld sans les clauses de l'arrêt susdit. Le rèméde sera d'essayer par l'entremise des Ambassadeurs de sa Majesté de faire ôter la clause qui contient la défense de prendre le six pour cent sur les sommes qui restent encore à satisfaire. Je supplierai sa Majesté . . . prevenir le dommage qu'on cherche de me faire, séquestrant les arrérages qui me sont ajugés. Ayant payé des les mois de Juillet et Août tout l'argent que j'ai reçu pour sa Majesté en France en l'échiquier, et à ceux auxquels j'avais ordre, encore que je ne peusse être maître des assignations qu'on m'avait données jusqu'au mois de Mai 1633 . . . m'ont couté pour certain plus de quinze ou vingt pour cent par an, outre un déchet au prix des rentes de dix ou douze pour cent. Ce que je fais en ceci n'étant pas pour mettre l'argent en ma bourse, mais pour payer ceux auxquels je suis endetté, je veus espérer que sa Majesté ne me refusera sa Royale assistance, qui me peut beaucoup avancer.

Coke MSS.

1637, October 1–10. Bruges.—Arthur Wilson to the Earl of Warwick, at Warwick House, London.

The fair easterly winds since my unlucky departure out of Zealand into these parts makes me conceive your Lordship may be in England before my letter comes to you. Notwithstanding my passport from Sir W. Boswell, and your Lordship's letter to Monsieur le Comte de Fontaine, I am detained here a prisoner in Bruges, my letters taken from me and sent to the Cardinal Infanta. They pretend this hard usage of me comes from a restraint that the Cardinal hath lately made that no man shall come from the country of rebels into these parts without his passport. I lie at the sign of the White Hart: I have written to Monsieur Jarbier [Gerbier] to Bruxelles: I doubt not he will further my release . . . My restraint here doth not so much afflict me as the interruption of my letters, besides the neglect of your Lordship's occasions.

1637, October 2. Breda Leager.—Gilbert Coke to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

Our good successes in taking the town of Breda makes me not a little ambitious to acquaint your Honour with them. What we have undertaken to attempt hath been substantially performed, even to the last works of extraordinary strength carried by us as if we could not have admitted of any opposition; but it hath not been altogether so with the Scotch, who being foully mismatched with the Dutch have been by them left in the lurch, to the loss of several very brave Scotsmen. Our three galleries were over the moat of the town and mines in the wall begun. The parley betwixt us was first beaten before the head of the English gallery; but the French, seeing the drum, little regarding the breach of civility, plucked him into their gallery, and thus rudely entertained the parley, of whose nation were also the hostages by this means. Thus is our dispute for Breda ended, methinks with ease in respect of what we suffered at Skink Sconce. Our siege hath lasted 11 weeks, and Marquis Spinola was so many months about it. We agreed of articles September 27th, they marched out 30th.

1637, October 7. Hatfield House.—Dr. John Whincop to Sir John Coke.

Thanks for your Honour's great favour in effecting that by virtue whereof I was enabled to perform all scholastical duties in the public commencement house, and consequently to receive that honour thereupon which they pleased to confer upon me. I shall be ready to testify humble thankfulness either to His Majesty or my Lord of Holland. If it please your Honour to direct this gentleman to whom the fees and duties belong, he shall discharge all.

1637, October 13. Christ Church, in Oxford.—Dr. Samuel Fell to Sir J. Coke, Chief Secretary of State.

Those many favours heretofore received from your Honour make me bold to become a humble suitor again. Heretofore I had some conference with you concerning the Bishopric of Rochester, which now, as I am informed, is become void. My suit is that you would be pleased to join with my Lord Treasurer (of whose favour I am confident) to move my Lord's Grace of Canterbury on my behalf. I conceive good hopes of his Grace's favour towards me upon sundry occasions, and shall be glad to take any opportunity to increase his good opinion of me.

1637, October 25. Fleet.—Adam Moore to Mr. Drywood, in Covent Garden.

His Majesty has granted for 12,000*l.* his 4,000 acres in Sedgmoor, for which Mr. Wyndham says he will give 40,000*l.*, and I do confidently assure that after it is divided I can make 60,000*l.* of it. Please acquaint Mr. Secretary Coke.

1637, October 30. Whitborne.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford, to Secretary Sir John Coke, at his lodging in Whitehall.

I have sent this included to my Lord Keeper to excuse myself for not giving institution upon his presentation without any warrant under his Lordship's hand, but only the testimony of the party himself, whom I sent up about that business, he assuring me that both his Grace of Canterbury and my Lord Keeper himself did approve my act. Yet for my better security I thought fit to write unto him, that if anything be amiss, it may be amended in due time. This bearer, now my neighbour, once an honest kinsman of Sir Francis Coke's in Derbyshire, desired to be the bearer of this letter. His name is Mr. Flacket.

1637, November 2.—Thomas Smythe to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary.

I waited on my Lord Marquis Hamilton this morning, who told me that your Honour was to make the certificate, not himself; that His Majesty would not take any forfeiture for not accounting and paying at the precise days and times mentioned in the statute, which is as much as I desire. For other my misdemeanours my humble request is that it may be referred to my Lord Treasurer, Lord Cottington, and other the Commissioners in Fleet Street to notify, that I may not be condemned unheard, especially seeing my judge and accuser is one man, Sir Charles Harborde. I humbly beseech your Honour not to think me so weak as to expect so noble a favour as this and not to be thankful, for I protest before God I intended and do still 300*l.* to my Lord Marquis and yourself for this business.

1637, November 8.—Humphrey Leigh to Sir J. Coke, His Majesty's Principal Secretary.

Since I know your love to my Lord the Lord Keeper, you will be pleased if any of the Lords Committees (besides yourself) for my imprisonment be at Theobalds to present this inclosed petition and to gain my liberty after nine days' restraint. My petition to His Majesty was delivered by Sir W. Becher on Sunday last, and His Majesty did read it himself, but laid it down, and gave no answer.

1637, November 9. Yarmouth.—Henry Davie and John Robins, Bailiffs, to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

By your Honour's noble favours we have heretofore obtained from the Honourable Board a licence yearly for the exportation of 1,000 last of herrings in strangers' bottoms, for an encouragement to the poor fishery here, and some help towards the repair of our very much decayed haven and piers. In most years we have not exported above the half. Now since it hath pleased God this year to send us such store of herrings as are sufficient, not only to serve this kingdom, but a good overplus for the supply of foreign parts, we have made suit that we may have a licence to export 1,000 last of herrings in strangers' bottoms, to endure and continue in force until the whole be exported.

COKE MSS.

1637, November 14. Rotterdam.—Robert Gore to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary.

Right Honourable and most dear Father,—Desiring your favourable pardon for the omission of that duty since my arrival here which is always loyable to your command. Your Honour will be pleased to vouchsafe the acceptance of this small mite as a token from a thankful and willing heart, which is a tierce of Rhenish wine with some green rummers which is as good as these countries can afford, and is sent me for excellent good, and in my opinion is so. I have shipped it in our cloth ship in good condition. Your obedient son to command.

1637, November 19. Buckminster.—Sir Edward Hartopp, the Younger, to Sir John Coke.

Charnock's wife being a gentlewoman, and a widow of a reasonable good fortune, taking a liking to him, cast both herself and her children's fortunes into his hands; but three or four unseasonable years succeeding that preferment, together with his own ignorance of husbandry, cast him much behindhand: but he being a dead man, his wife and children will not know how to subsist unless you continue to her son the same place. I would undertake myself to see that the place be honestly and sufficiently discharged.

1637, November 25. Trusley.—Sir Francis Coke to Sir John Coke.

Asks that his noble friend, Lady Corbet, having a certificate of showing arms and horse in this country, may be discharged by the Lords of the Council from showing them in other countries where she is not resident.

1637, November 30. Trusley.—Sir Francis Coke to Sir John Coke.

Asks consideration for Francis Eyre, who was constable when cousin Gell gathered the King's money for ships. One Ridgway doth persecute him for gathering some little money more. They are rich and he is poor.

1637, December 4.—Timothy Pusey to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

I have joined with my neighbour Justices of the Peace in a letter to the Lords to certify their Lordships how much our High Sheriff of this County of Nottingham would in the assessment for ship money abate the Hundred wherein he inhabiteth and some other Hundreds adjoining, and lay more money on our side of the country. My neighbours have entreated my particular letter to your Honour; we are willing to pay, and would not hinder the service, but loth to have such a new precedent put upon us.

1637, December 9.—Francis, Lord Cottington.

May it please your Majesty,—I have in another paper expressed the true estate of the business touching the Lord Butler's heir, the custody of whom is sought by so many pretenders. Considering how many pretenders there are of equal degree, with how much importunity to your Majesty and animosity amongst themselves, I hold it my duty to let your Majesty know what I conceive of it. By the rules of the Court of Wards and by the instructions your Majesty is there pleased to give us, no one of these pretenders is capable of the trust pretended concerning the body of the idiot and the estate descended upon him, because they are all co-heirs. Why then may not some third person have this trust, accounting for the profits as your Majesty shall ordain? The trust made by deed and conveyance from the Lord Butler himself cannot be altered, but the Lord Dunsmore and Mr. Porter may (as by the law they are bound) give your Majesty a just account of the performance of that trust, and so in effect all comes within your Majesty's disposing, and peradventure no just exception to be taken by any party.

1637, December 22. Dublin.—Dr. Alan Cooke to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary.

I am bold at this time in the behalf of Sir Edward Winkfield; he is your neighbour in the Vartries. As for the difference of land between your Honour and himself, which is not much, I presume he hath written that he will give you satisfaction; and he will be a necessary instrument in the countenancing those which shall come to plant the land. I presume some letters will come over to your Honour against me concerning the exercising of admiral jurisdiction within the Province of Leinster, a thing never heard of before now, but every man living by the seaside that is but a freeholder challengeth all wrecks and droits either by grant or prescription. I intend to send a messenger of purpose to Sir Henry Marten of all my proceedings sithence I had my patent. Generally it is opposed, and my pains returns wholly to the benefit of His Majesty and the Vice-Admiral. I must confess without the assistance of friends it is impossible for one man to undergo so great a burden, it being the general cause of the whole kingdom against His Majesty, as the particulars when they come to be seen will demonstrate.

1637, St. Stephen's Day, December 26.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford, to Secretary Sir John Coke.

I most heartily thank you for your care of me about Hampton, which against all conscience and equity hath been of late years laid upon the Bishops by the cunning of those that of right ought to do it, and held all those lands of the Bishop, which when he had them in his own hands did enable him to do it. I have sent my account to his Grace, humbly craving favour as not suspecting any offence, if it came any time before New Year's day (as I did from Bristoll) which I had not passed, though I had had no notice from you of it. I have given a little touch again to his Grace about Hampton, begging only some means to remove it from our quarter sessions jury, who are in these cases, and in all other, against the church, and specially against the Bishop most partial. If my cousin Sergeant, or cousin Thomas could direct any fit way for me, I would willingly undergo it. If you can fairly get me left out for the Lent sermons, I should be heartily glad of it; but if no, I will be prepared to prevent the worst so well as I can. Nothing so much discourageth me in it as the defect of my eyes, which my bad memory hath always in my sermons enforced me to use, which now I cannot at all, except in a very light place, without spectacles.

(1637, about.) A printed sheet headed:

"By the King.—Orders for Thorow Postes and Carriers riding in Poste in Our Affairs." Subscribed by "Charles Stanhope, Knight of the Bath, Lord Stanhope of Harington, Master and Comptroller General of His Highness Postes."

The preamble states the Lords of the Privy Council, endeavouring heretofore the like furtherance of the service of the State as well in having such as ride in their Prince's affairs as the speedy dispatch of packets in all places where posts were erected and ordained, considering that for the service of the one a daily fee is allowed, and for the other no certain wages at all, but the hire of the horses let out, and that often ill paid, whereby they stand not so bound to the one as to attend to the other: and that the towns and countries besides became many ways vexed and perplexed by the over great liberty of riders in post, especially by such as pretend public service by special commission, contrary to the King's meaning, or their Lordships' orders, for the benefit and relief of his Highness' servants and subjects, and more regard to the good usage of all owners of horses and the beasts themselves, think it expedient to direct and set down sundry necessary orders indifferent for all parties to observe and follow.

Coke MSS.

1. In all places where posts are laid for the packet they, as persons most fit, shall have pre-eminence of furnishing of horses to all riding in post (that is to say) with horn and guide by commission. And if it fall out that couriers or thorough posts riding in our affairs by special commission come so thick or in such numbers that their ordinary provision will not suffice, then the posts shall be supplied with horses taken up where they may be hired.

2. That none be holden to ride on public affairs but with special commission signed by one of the Principal Secretaries of State, or six at least of the Privy Council or the Master and Comptroller-General of the Posts, for all journeys outwards and from the Court only: and to the Court the Lords of the Privy Council of Scotland, the Deputy in Ireland, the President or Vice-President of the Council established in the North, or in the Marches of Wales, the Governor of Berwick, any ambassador, governors of towns or agents beyond the seas, the Warden of the Cinque Ports, or his Lieutenant of Dover, specially sending to the Court, to the body of the Council or Secretaries of State. The posts or owners of horses may demand for the hire of each horse after the rate of 2½*d.* the mile, besides the guide's groats. But of all others riding post with horn and guide about their private business the hire and prices are left to the parties' discretions to agree and compound within themselves.

3. No person, riding in post by commission or otherwise, to ride away the horse of any man, post or other, not having first paid and satisfied for the hire, nor ride them further than the next immediate stage without consent, nor charge any horse so taken to ride in post with any mail or burden (besides his rider) that exceedeth 30 lbs., nor offer to ride any man's horse above seven miles the hour in summer, viz., from April 1 to September 30, nor above six in winter, which shall be accounted the rest of the year; the parties offending to be stayed until they have given present satisfaction or security.

4. In case the post be overburdened, from any cause, the constables and magistrates of the places shall take order from time to time that horses be provided for all riding in post by commission or specially sent as aforesaid, in such sort as they were subject to do before there were any posts there, and as in places where are yet no standing posts at all.

No date.—Petition to the King of Walter Long, "prisoner in the Tower of London," having manifested his hearty sorrow and in all humble submission acknowledged his error, and having also given satisfaction for the fine of 2,000 marks imposed upon him by the censure of the High Court of Star Chamber, asks release.

1637–8, January 16. Whitborne.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford, to Secretary Sir John Coke, at his lodging at Whitehall.

I humbly thank you for both your letter about Hampton Stanke, and am well disposed, as in all events, what I can no more for help, to do no less than to be patient. Mr. Westfaleing hath gone beyond the Bishops of late days in that business, having been so serviceable to the Bishops that, having got into his hand all the records, he hath produced only those that made against the Bishop, but conceals those that may make for him. And this I can declare by so probable a reason that I would willingly adventure the cause upon the hearing before any wise and just judge or arbitrator: but he is so politic and so plies the justices in the country that he hath so far got the advantage of me, that were it not for Sir Robert Harly, and one Mr. Scudamore, and one or two more, I should have scarce any to speak for me. He also leads all tenants so strongly, and is so well acquainted with all the jurymen of the country that there is no standing against him. And I know he will do as much with the Judges when they come down as may be done to attempt such good men. If therefore by your means I might obtain but reasonable favour from them, or either of them (which I think are Judge Jones and Judge Davenport) that they would be pleased to show any reasonable inclination to my part, I doubt not but by their means I might bring the matter to a reasonable composition, which now is the uttermost of my aim. My son John lives with us at home, I thank God, like an honest man, and takes exceeding great pains at his book: and my son William also as yet lives very orderly at Oxford, as Dr. Radeclif, the Principal of Brasennose, by his letter hath signified unto me, a man whom before I never heard of. My son Thomas is about to sell his parsonage of Histon, with the advowson of the vicarages: he is offered 1,500*l.* for it by my cousin Bates. I beseech you what you think fit to advise him, let him have your counsel and direction; lest he lay out his money either in a worse purchase, or use it in a more dangerous way.

1637–8, January 25. Whitborne Court.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford, to Secretary Sir John Coke, at his lodging in Whitehall.

I am at this time straitened for the sending up of the monies I owe to the King for tenths and first fruits, and 45*l.* for dilapidations to be paid in to these several places, as this note included signifies. I have the money lying by me, but can neither change it into gold nor by way of return get any man in these parts to pay it for me at London, I delivering him so much for it here, which was always my usual fashion. I beseech you therefore that you will speak to my Lord Treasurer to spare me for it till the beginning of Easter term next, at what time, by God's gracious permission, I will not fail to pay it. And that his Lordship will be pleased to save me from all charges or arrearages which by that delay may haply fall upon me if he help me not.

1637-8, January 27.—Docket.

1. License to W. Child to inclose a coney warren at Cuddesden, Oxon.
2. 6,420*l.* to be paid to Henry Percy, acknowledged by his Majesty to be due to him.
3. Edward Walter to be Chester Herald.
4. Henry Litton to be Rouge Dragon.

1637–8, January.—Edward Nicholas to Mr. Secretary Coke.

"A note of such public businesses as were left unfinished."

Ships to be sent against the pirates of Algiers.

Concerning castles and forts.

Ling, constable of Fifield, in Essex, who is prisoner in the Fleet, and under Mr. Attorney-General's examination concerning a refractory return made by him touching shipmoney.

Josias Wood, constable of the hundred of Harlowe, in Essex, now prisoner in Newgate for refusing to submit to execute the warrant of the Sheriff of Essex for shipping business.

COKE MSS.

Mr. Solicitor to give accompt of the business of Starch.

Captain Duppa to give an answer to the petition of the Brewers of London, who complain that they have not malt sufficient.

1637–8, January 26 (N.S.) Cologne.—Bilderbeck. [No address.]

Je prends la hardiesse de vous importuner pour une affaire qui me touche, lequel est le paiement des arriérages de plusieurs années de la pension que je tire de 30 livres sterlings par an, duquel jusque en çâ je n'ai su avoir satisfaction, nonobstant tous les devoirs y employés. Je me réjouirai d'avoir de moyen de vous témoigner par des effets que je suis votre très humble et obéissant serviteur.

1637–8, February 2. London.—Endorsed by Sir John Coke,

"Prince Elector's Declaration for restitution of the Palatinate." Historical Statement and Protestation (in Latin).

1637–8, February 3. The Earl of Warwick to Mr. Secretary Coke.

Mr. Solicitor hath prepared this commission fit for His Majesty's signature, and I have sent it to you earnestly entreating your favour to get it despatched; for I have a tall ship in the Downs stayed upon nothing but this Commission. It must be signed inside and outside, that so it may have the speedier despatch.

1637–8, February 3. Manor at York.—Sir Edward Osborne. [No address.]

There is one William Barker of this county, who it seems hath been lately convicted and condemned at a late sessions holden for the county of Middlesex for clipping His Majesty's coin, and being reprieved is within 40 days to be transported by one Captain Timothy Casselton to the parts beyond the seas, as is pretended by Thomas Barker his brother, who for that purpose is deputed by the said Captain Casselton. Before the said William Barker's departure he repairs into Yorkshire. He is now prisoner with the pursuivant attending this Council, and being in execution for the said money (under a decree) cannot be set at liberty, unless it be really true that this be the very William Barker that was condemned, and that the reprieve which here I send be under His Majesty's own hand, whereof we are somewhat doubtful, in regard it is so unevenly written.[1] I beseech your direction by the next post, otherwise the 40 days will be out, and then if these things be true the fellow will be in danger of his life.

1637–8, February 5. Docket.—A licence to travel to Henry Philpott, of the county of Southampton, Esquire, with two servants, 40*l.* in money, and his necessary carriages, for three years from the time of his departure. His Majesty's pleasure signified and procured by Mr. Secretary Coke.

(Signed) Jo. More.

1637–8, February 12. Handforth.—Sir William Brereton to Sir John Coke.

I cannot by any endeavour shape or proportion my expressions to those obligations which your multiplied respects have placed with me. I beseech you accept such maimed returns of gratitude as I am able to present, which are at this season no better than a taste of my cornfowl.

1637–8, February 14. Whitburne Court.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford, to Sir J. Coke, at his lodgings in Whitehall. (Received at Newmarket.)

---

[1] "It is the King's hand." [Note by Sir J. Coke.]

I cannot avoid a hearing at these Lent Assizes for Hampton, in which I am like to be drowned, partly by the late inundations, and specially by Mr. Westfaling's storms, which he will bring upon me; who is now at London, to solicit the judges and to get counsel against me. My desire is no more than that it be referred to arbitrators the best in the country to determine it, or that it be discharged for the present at the equal charges of Mr. Westfaling, myself, and the tenants, and after upon a legal trial without disadvantage on either side for him to defray all upon whom it shall be cast by law. I fear Mr. Westfaling, who is now at London, will prevent me of all the best counsel that come this circuit. If I could be provided by any means with counsel as may be equal with his I should less fear. I hear by cousin Streethay that my cousin Bess hath been a wife and now is a widow, and I should be glad to hear that she is like to be a mother.

1637–8, February 15.—Philippe Burlamachi. [No address.]

M. le Sécretaire Windebank a preparé la bille et l'envoyé en Court pour la Royale signature. Les lettres de Paris venues hier moi portent avis de la réception de mes lettres avec les documents envoyés à mon frère pour présenter à Monsieur le Comte de Leicester.

Il monstra grande intention de me favoriser, mais disant qu'il ne vouloit recevoir règle ni direction en ce particulier. Je supplie votre Excellence de prendre à cœur l'intérêt da sa Majesté qu'on fasse solliciter les parties, pour les tirer hors des mains des Français, car les dits deniers ne sont bien ou ils sont. Que sa Majesté fasse donner ordre à Monsieur le Comte et à Monsieur l'Ambassadeur ordinaire de solliciter jointement l'altération de l'arrêt, car comme il est, il est infiniment préjudiciable à sa Majesté. Le même pour une partie de 2,500 livres sterlings ou 25,000 livres tournais que effectivement appartiennent à sa Majesté. * Si le Trésorier défunt ne m'eut abusé par ses promesses je n'eusse eu que faire à solliciter en France, mais j'eusse retenu l'argent en mes mains. M. le Vicomte Falkland était présent quand il m'abusa outre toute honnéteté pour avoir refusé lui payer 4,000 livres sterlings. Les douces paroles et promesses du commencement, et puis ses dures menaces et insolences après qu'il m'eut embarqué, sont cause de ma ruine. Si votre Excellence, avec Monseigneur le Grand Trésorier, voulussent prendre la peine, avec un auditeur en une demie heure le tout serait liquide. Le Duc de Rohan est arrivé à Zurie, ayant parlé et conféré avec le Duc Bernard en son passage en une villette de Messieurs de Berne.

1637–8, February 19. Westminster.—Secretary Sir Francis Windebank. "For your Honour."

The Sheriffs of London were yesterday at the Board, called thither by their Lordships and reprehended for their slowness in that great service of the shipping. They have undertaken to provide three, amounting in the total to 1,400 tons, to be in a readiness to go out with the rest of the fleet. Sir J. Penington advises that Dunkirk French and Holland men-of-war daily pillage His Majesty's subjects. My Lords of the Admiralty order him to continue at sea till the great fleet is ready. Antelope defective, Convertine to take her place. Council of War to consider Earl of Newport's survey of the ports and forts. Asks that instructions for Sir Arthur Hopton into Spain and revocation of the Lord Aston may be prepared. A ship is ordered by the Admiralty to be ready in 20 days. Withrings will send an express into Spain to warn the Lord Aston to be at the seaside. I find

Mr. Fanshawe unwilling to undertake this service. The express should have His Majesty's safe conduct.

1637–8, February 20. London.—Jam. Howell to Sir J. Coke, Knight, His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State, at Newmarket.

I presume Sir J. North hath before now been with your Honour about a manuscript of mine, which contains some small fruits of my observations abroad by way of historical discourse, couched under a disguise. There are many things that redound much to the honour of our King and State, and all is truth and res gestæ. I humbly crave a favourable construction and attend your perusal.

1637–8, February 20.—William Juxon, Bishop of London and Lord Treasurer, to Sir J. Coke, Knight, His Majesty's Principal Secretary, at Court.

Mr. Bray, His Majesty's servant, hath attended me to peruse this warrant for His Majesty's signature for erecting the office of Aulnage of Linen Cloths, which I find by His Majesty's Counsel is a very ancient office, but hath not been thought fit to be revived since Edward the 3rd's time. The Schedule of fees are too great. I have abated upon every particular about one half. I have caused Guernsey and Jersey to be omitted. A power sought to search ships I have caused to be left out. The proclamation prepared by Mr. Attorney General for every man to sow hemp and flax, he is of opinion, and I agree with him, should be made stay of for a time: because it will else be rumoured to be only to usher in that office of Aulnage.

1637–8, February 27. London.—Sir Job Harbie to Sir John Coke.

Having understood that Symonds, the adversary of the widow and orphans of my deceased brother and myself, soliciteth at Newmarket to cross His Majesty's gracious reference, I will manifest proof of my zeal to end the business, and at your happy return be an humble suitor to have the cause heard and determined.

1637–8, February. Draft by Sir J. Coke, "Proclamation put forth at Newmarket."

His Majesty understanding that by the liberty now taken to keep greyhounds about his Court, and in the places adjoining, the game of hares is destroyed, where they ought to be preserved for his royal desport, doth thereupon strictly hereby inhibit and forbid as well the followers of his Court as other gentlemen, and all persons of what quality so ever, to keep or suffer to be kept any greyhounds or mongrels within ten miles where his Court shall reside. And withal commandeth all his gamekeepers and such as have charge thereof diligently to search and inquire for all such greyhounds and mongrels as shall remain within that compass, and to seize the same, and cause them to be presently put away, hanged up, or otherwise destroyed, as they will answer the contrary at their perils.

1637–8, March 2. Suffolke House.—Theophilus Howard, Earl of Suffolke to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

For His Majesty's especial service. A letter from my Lieutenant of Dover Castle that a ship from the Canaries four or five days since met with the French King's fleet in two parts, one by Plymouth 18 ships, and by Portland 24 ships, the Admiral 250 tons, all the rest very small ships but full of men.

1637–8, March 7. Westminster.—Edward Nicholas to Sir J. Coke. Principal Secretary of State, at Tottenham.

According to His Majesty's pleasure, signified in your letter of the 6th, I have inclosed sent your Honour the paper which by His Majesty's command I drew and presented to him at Beaulieu near seven years since. I shall obey your directions in keeping secret this great alteration, to my loss, but I hope it may be to His Majesty's advantage.

1637–8. March 8. A paper endorsed, "A true copy of the Emperor of Russia his letters to His Majesty in answer to the letters sent him for the release of Mrs. Anne Barnsley, an English imprisoned gentlewoman. Translated out of Russ into English by the Emperor's sworn interpreter."

Through the mercy of our God, hath visited us in the East, and guided our feet in the way of peace: the same our God in Trinity we praise his merits.

We, Great Lord Emperor and Great Duke Michael Feodorvich, of all Russia absolute Upholder, &c.

Whereas in the year 1637 to our Imperial Majesty your Kingly Majesty have written that you, our loving brother, have been informed by your subjects of Barnesley Hall, in Worcestershire, that their kinswoman, Anna Barnesley, hath been married in our empiredom of Russia unto a French Baron; and he afterwards, under colour to show her the manner of living of the nuns in our dominions, brought her into a cloister, where, much against her expectation and will, she was long detained, and at last rebaptized after the manner of our Church.

After this, as you, our loving brother, hath heard, the said Frenchman died a violent death: and thereupon a second marriage was offered unto her (your, our loving brother's, subject) which she refusing brought upon her a greater mischance, and she sent into a close prison, far into the country where she is kept far from all her friends and country.

And our Imperial Majesty you, our loving brother, cannot believe doth approve of any forcible proceedings in that kind, which you, our loving brother, is informed is contrary to the laws of our Church. And that our Imperial Majesty, as you, our loving brother, are informed, doth so respect strangers in our dominions as to give freedom and liberty of conscience to all to use their religion free and to force none, especially your, our loving brother's, subjects.

And therefore to our Imperial Majesty you, our loving brother, have thought good to recommend her grievous case that we, Great Lord, will give our strict commands that she and her children be forthwith released, and have the common benefit and freedom with all other strangers in our dominions; or else to return to you our loving brother's realm, her native country, the which of our Imperial Majesty you our loving brother do most earnestly desire.

For answer whereof in the first place—

To our Imperial Majesty in your letters you have not given us our titles of Vatskey, Rustoveskey, Yereslaveskey, Udorskey, Condinskey: and in place of Everskey Land is written Everskey Mewe, and in place of Cuberdinskey is written Cuberdinskey Mewe, and the Duke of Udorskey is not written. But you should have written Cuberdinskey Land Charraskey Udorskey Dukes.

Also to our Imperial Majesty in your letters is not written according to the old fashion. But you our brother have therein sent your picture, wherein we cannot conceive what should be your meaning therefore. For in all former times hath been sent to our Imperial Majesty by our loving brother the King's Majesty Jacobus and your father, whom God hath now taken to himself, all whose letters were written unto us in another fashion.

Therefore we our Imperial Majesty now desire your Kingly Majesty our brother Carolus in your Kingly letters hereafter to write our name and true titles, as all other great potentates write unto us, both Christian and Heathen Princes, for the Heathens do give us our full titles and name.

And for your picture neither you nor your father have ever heretofore sent us the like, so that these your letters are not written as in all former times.

And we the Emperor's Majesty do greatly marvel that our Imperial Majesty's titles in many places are so miswritten, and your Kingly Majesty's picture sent us, whereof we know no reason, which makes us wonder exceedingly.

Also by our Imperial Majesty's officers in the Presulskey office we have demanded of your Agent, Simon Digby, who hath seen these your letters, the reason thereof. He saith they have been written by some new Secretary, who is unacquainted and knew no better, in regard the old Secretary was absent on some occasion: for which neglect when your Kingly Majesty shall know thereof, he will be severely punished. Also your Agent, Simon Digby, informed us that in regard your Kingly Majesty our brother's old Secretary might be in some other city where the plague was hot, and so not admitted to your Kingly Majesty's Court. But howsoever now, we our Imperial Majesty desire you our brother that you will always hereafter give order to your Secretaries that they shall not leave out any of our titles which always have been sent unto your Majesty out of our Presulskey office by our State Chancellor, that our Imperial Majesty may not lose our reputation in the least point.

And that to our Imperial Majesty your Kingly Majesty our brother will cause that your Secretaries may write to our Imperial Majesty our name and titles right, according to the old fashion and without your Majesty's picture, as it is written to us from all other Princes, both Christian and Heathen, and as it hath been always written to our Imperial Majesty by the great King our brother of blessed memory, Jacobus, your Kingly Majesty's father, and as to our Imperial Majesty you our brother have always formerly written. And the Secretary that hath been so disrespective to lessen and leave out our titles which formerly have been given us, to our Imperial Majesty's great dishonour, we our Imperial Majesty desire you our Kingly brother to give order that he may be punished according to his desert, that others may take example not to do the like.

And whereas to our Imperial Majesty your Kingly Majesty doth write concerning the widow Anna Barnesley, who was married to the French Baron, that she might have her liberty of conscience to hold her own religion, or to give her liberty to come to her country.

Thereof we the great Emperor give you our brother to understand that the same wife's man was a Frenchman, Jean Dexamon by name, who hath christened themselves in our Christian faith, which is the only glorious Grecian faith: and that of their own free will, without any forcing of them thereunto. And they have also children that are christened of the true Christian faith, which are here in our country in good men's keeping, and are brought up in the true Christian faith. And whosoever desireth of any nation to be of the true Christian faith, and will willingly rebaptize themselves, they hold our true Christian religion fast without any alteration, insomuch that they desire not to be of any other religion so long as they live upon earth.

And further it is not unknown to your Kingly Majesty our brother that your subjects that here live with us are none of them christened of the true Christian faith against their will and desire. Also here are in our Imperial Majesty's dominions of other nations of several religions from several Princes that here live and keep their religion free; which are not forced to the true Christian religion.

Also her father hath lived here many years in our dominions, and in the true Christian faith he is not christened. And by force, neither he nor any else, are christened here, unless they have a desire thereunto. And for the widow Anna Barnesley being christened into the only true faith, which is the glorious Grecian faith according to the holy apostles and holy fathers, which God hath ordained, therefore she cannot be released to go into her former belief, neither can she be admitted to depart from hence to come for England to you our brother, according to your desire, because she is christened with her own free will. So that if we should let her go free, our glorious Grecian faith would be thereby greatly scandalized.

And whereas our Imperial Majesty hath received letters from your Kingly Majesty that the widow Anna is in prison many miles from Muscoe, therein your Majesty is not truly informed, for we have given no such order, neither is she at all in prison. But she is sent to be under command to be taught to learn truly to understand the true glorious Grecian holy faith, that she may not be a scandal to our true and holy religion. And her children are free from all wrong or oppression.

Dated in Muscoe our Royal Palace the 8th day of March 1637.

1637–8, March 12.—Edward Cecil, Viscount Wimbledon, to Sir John Coke.

Asks when Mr. Secretary Coke will certify His Majesty's pleasure concerning the appointment by the Commissioners of their clerks, and the settling the salaries of such clerks. The Commissioners will not sit often before the blessed time.

1637–8, March 17. Docquett.—A license under the Signet for Thomas Scott Esq. to travel into the parts beyond the seas with two servants and 50*l.* in money.

1637–8, March 19. St James.—Ma. Countess of Dorset, to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary to His Majesty.

I am a suitor to you now in the behalf of Mr. Perkins whom formerly you have written for to the Lord Deputy: if you do him the like favour again, it will now be more available unto him, he being in Ireland. Once more a letter from you to the Lord Deputy will make this honest man a possessor of his own, which if he lose he is undone. I have received some curtesies from him, and you can never do good to an honester man.

1637–8, March 21. His lodging at the Seven Stars in the Strand.—Sir Richard Cave. [No address]. Endorsed by Sir J. Coke "Ordnance."

I am commanded by His Majesty to declare to you the sense of my master the Prince Elector concerning his request and desires of His Majesty's approbation of His Highness taking arms and of such assistance as His Majesty shall be pleased to bestow upon him. His Highness, thinking it necessary for his honour and fortunes to appear in his own cause, having a fair opportunity offered, doth beseech His Majesty to approve thereof as an action befitting the condition wherein he lives and the expectation of the world. He desires a free gift of money and munition, or cannon, or victual or whatsoever His Majesty can best spare, and leave to raise troops within His Majesty's dominions, and to favour the undertaking of any voluntary cavaliers that will for love or honour follow his fortune: and that in this course His Majesty will vouchsafe protection, as a nephew that will attempt nothing but with his allowance.

Coke MSS.

1637–8, March 23. Whitehall.—Endorsed "Copy to the Lord Deputy in favour of Luke Toole."

This gentleman Mr. Luke Toole came from Ireland, as he hopeth by your permission and without offence. His journey as he protesteth had no other end but to make his particular condition known to me, and to entreat my intercession to your Lordship to dispose of him in some convenient place, where by his honest industry he may sustain his many children. He extolleth your Lordship's justice and confesseth it to be equal to the poor as to the rich. I had heretofore sent him word that your Lordship of your own noble and compassionate disposition had resolved to provide for him, and that it might be more for his advantage to forbear that troublesome journey. He knoweth by this time that the friend who drew him over gave him no good counsel, and that it cost him more and to less purpose than if he had stayed at home. My request to your Lordship is that this mischance may not make him less in your favour, or hinder your good intention towards him.

1637–8, March 24. Docket, signed Abra. Williams. Grant to Thomas Myan Knight Harbinger of 5,000*l.* out of arrearages of rents &c. due to King James at the time of his decease, in consideration of release of a debt of 3,774*l.* due to him from His Majesty.

1638, April 1. Copy of a letter from His Majesty's Postmasters (at Whitehall) to Sir Robert Chester, who has committed to prison the postmaster of Royston, without complaint made to them. They desire him to hasten the proofs of those particulars wherewith he is charged. It seemeth that a horse taken for Sir W. Penniman was the occasion of Haggett's commitment: we have sufficient testimony to justify his carriage.

1638, April 2. Copy of a letter to the Lord Deputy for Luke O'Toole and Edward Byrne.

1638, April 5. Docket.

1. Grant to Prince James of Office of Lord High Admiral.

2. Sir Basil Dixwell to be His Majesty's Game Preserver at Folkestone.

3. 541*l.* to be paid to Alexander Herriot for jewellery.

4. Allowance of 6*l.* per diem to Sir Arthur Hopton, appointed Ambassador to Spain.

1638, April 6. The King to the Corporation of Derby.

The King understanding that the Bailiffs and Burgesses of Derby with the rest of that Corporation are owners of a house near the town on the Darwent side desires that they will make choice to be their tenant of Sir Cornelius Vermuyden, who with his partners had undertaken a work very acceptable to the King about the lead works at Wirksworth and to make the river of Darwent to be navigable till it fall into Trent. Indorsed by Sir John Coke. "Wm. Bates house"—

1638, April 10. Sherborne.—John Digby, Earl of Bristol. [No address.]

Having married my eldest daughter unto Arthur Chichester son and heir to the now Lord Viscount Chichester in Ireland, I am informed that there hath been of late a suit commenced against the said Lord Chichester by John Chichester Esquire His Majesty's ward, who hath laid claim to all the lands the said Lord now possesseth in Ireland: which lands being of the acquiring of the Lord Arthur Chichester deceased were settled upon Edward now Lord Viscount Chichester his brother, and he hath thereof remained quietly possessed for the space of 13 or 14 years. My request unto you is for your assistance that the answer of my Lord Deputy may not, by the means of those that procured His Majesty's letter, be detained from His Majesty's sight, whereby His Majesty shall not have true information of the cause and so may be moved likewise hereafter upon other undue suggestions to write other letters in the cause, which may be of great prejudice and trouble unto my sons estate. But that His Majesty will be pleased that cause may be left to due course of law. My son Chichester and his father are absent in Ireland and have no friends in Court.

1638, April 12. Thurleton.—Mr. Robert Pullen to Sir John Coke. Having had offer of your noble favours for Sir Edward Hartopp's sake, I move your honour to be recommended to the Lord Keeper in whose gifture is the Vicarage of Trinity in the City of Coventry, where I am not unknown and not unbeloved. I have promised to wait on my good friends at Buckminster.

1638, April 12. Sir George Chudleigh to Sir John Coke.
Recommends Thomas Camerton to the favour of the Officers of His Majesty's Navy to procure him some constant employment worthy of his age and experience.

1638, April 13. Dover Castle.—Sir John Manwood to the Governor of Calais. Endorsed "copy of my letter to the Governor of Callais touching John Gross, Richard Stevenson, and Thomas Huxton of Yarmouth."
The esteem your merits most justly challenge assures me that you will indifferently balance the injury done to some of His Majesty's subjects of Great Britain by some Frenchmen in a sloop of Calais. The examination of the Englishmen I send you, and am confident you will strictly examine the Frenchmen under your command, and certify the errors are committed on those Frenchmen, as also satisfy the damage they have committed according to the examination, wherein I suppose you will do an acceptable service to your King, and also satisfy His Majesty of Great Britain.

1638, April 25. Whitburn Court.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford, to Sir J. Coke, at his house in Garlick Hill, London.
My payments in London are 600*l.* which I promised to pay this term; which I thought to have paid by the sale of my land at Baldock. I have sent by Periam my servant 235*l.*, all the gold I could possibly get in the country, beseeching you to give help either for payment, or deferring till next term. Upon my word I have in my hand so much present money as will satisfy all, only it is in silver a burden too heavy for one man to bear. If I could know what recusants have compounded for in this diocese, I am informed that I might get particular notice of all the rest that have not compounded and yet are convict, by which I think the King suffers loss.
Endorsed by Sir J. Coke "Hereupon lent to his servant Periam for the use here expressed 100*l.* per acquittance." 1638, May 3. Wallingford House—James, Marquis of Hamilton, to Sir John Coke.
Asks favour for the cause of William Moorhead referred to Sir John Coke.
Draft of Sir John Coke's report in the matter showing that 500*l.* allowed by the King for the funeral of Sir George Douglas late Ambassador in Poland and paid to William Moorhead had been paid as to 180*l.* upon the corpse and servants, and as to 320*l.* to his brother and administrator James Douglas.

COKE MSS.

1638, May 3. Norwich.—Robert Sumpter, Mayor, and others, to Sir John Coke.

Asks favourable consideration of the great inconveniences that have befallen the city by means of a proclamation commanding the carriage of all our stuffs and other commodities made of wool and part of wool to Blackwell Hall in London to be viewed and searched, contrary to the practice of former times. Petition for a reference to the Honourable Board.

1638, May 4. Sir Henry Marten, Judge of the Admiralty Court, to Sir John Coke.

Refers to His Majesty's pleasure having been intimated that the French ship Fortune be restored at the instance of the French Ambassador. The parties must come before him, and he must determine the matter in a legal way.

1638, May 5. Sir Miles Fletewood to Sir John Coke Principal Secretary to His Majesty.

I have been lately employed by His Majesty's immediate command to contract with the tenants of Hanslop within the Honor of Grafton, and I was directed to have treated with one Mr. Tyrrell that hath lately obtained a grant of this manor, of whom the King is desirous to resume that manor and to give satisfaction for the money that he disbursed, which Tyrrell hath refused and now it is to be considered whether Mr. Tyrrell's grant be sure. It pleased His Majesty to refer the hearing and report of this business by the motion of the Earl of Dorset, the chief Steward of that Honor, to the Lord Treasurer and the Lord Cottington. The poor tenants cannot persuade Mr. Warwick to get them a day of hearing, therefore I beseech your Honour to move the Lord Treasurer and the Lord Cottington tomorrow that they will appoint a speedy day for the hearing thereof.

1638, May 13. His house in Bray in Berkshire.—Sir Henry Marten (Judge of the Admiralty Court) to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary to His Majesty.

I received your Honours letter signifying His Majesty's pleasure concerning the letters of reprisal granted unto Henly and Polhill, that they should not be put in execution until His Majesty should give further order. Henly's answer was that his ships were out and he knew not where, and he could not tell how to restrain them or call them back. Concerning Polhill I make no doubt but I shall receive from him the like or a more untoward answer. I am out of hope that this course will have that effect which either the Ambassador for the States expecteth, or His Majesty graciously intendeth. I should advise that a supersedeas should be granted under the Great Seal of England unto them both, to stay the execution of their Commission until Michaelmas or Allhallowtide next. I know Polhill will be of the two the more refractory and peremptory, and my words will have no power with him.

1638, May 15. Whitborne Court.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford, to Secretary Sir John Coke at his lodging in Whitehall.

Sir, How far my son hath gone with cousin Bates I cannot tell, only I know that he hath always told me that he never gave promise of any bargain or sale of Histon parsonage, but with caution of my liking and consent, which as yet I never have given. I was about two years since willing it should be sold, and thereupon gave way both to cousin Streethay and my son to get a chapman for it, and was acquainted with their offer of it, as to some others, so at last to cousin Bates, with her desire and resolution to deal for it. But about Christmas last, as I remember, or before, finding good cause to alter my mind, I required my son to signify so much both to cousin Streethay, and cousin Bates, which belike came not to her in such due time, but that she had provided some of her money for it. Thus as I take it stands the case that either my cousin must suffer loss by her money lying void, or my son both against my will and to his own and the rest of his brothers' danger of undoing be compelled to sell it. I fear not to make any just and indifferent man my judge; and though I love my niece Bates well, as I have good cause both for her own and her honoured father's sake, yet I intreat leave first to care for my own, without offence or pressure. Cousin Bates may bestore her money better otherwhere; or in case this be sold she shall doubtless have the first offer. I humbly thank you for the money you have laid out for me which, by God's grace, I will be careful in due time to repay. The grange which you mention with all the particulars I will not fail, so soon as possibly I can, to give you account of. Mr. Watts I know, as also how regarded by my Lord Keeper's having heretofore had a letter from his Honour concerning him; in regard to whom I will be ready to do him what favour I can.

1638, May 17. Examinations received from the Lord Warden [of the Cinque Ports] of John Grosse, Richard Stevenson and Thomas Hunton of Yarmouth taken before Sir John Manwood, Lieutenant of Dover Castle. Their fisher boat in a voyage from Yarmouth to Hampton boarded off Folkestone by a shallop from Calais manned by 10 Frenchmen who took from them 300 of their best codfish and did strike and beat many of them. Their losses more than 50*l*. (With copy of Sir John Manwood's letter of April 13 to the Governor of Calais).

1638, May 20. London.—Lord Wilmot [No address]. Endorsed (probably by the Lord Deputy). "Duplicate of my Lord Wilmot's letters to me."

My honoured Lord, I received a message from your Lordship by Mr. Secretary Coke that you marvelled you did not hear from me concerning Athlone. My servant Skinner, who is only well instructed in that business, your Lordship will not please to admit of to follow it for me. Neither can I appoint anybody that is there to do it for me that I know how to make understand all the passages of the truth of it at this distance, it being more than 20 years since I began to dispose of things there. But all I can do as it stands with me is to entreat my Lord Ranelagh to take the trouble upon him to acquaint your Lordship with what he knows of it. I pray your Lordship to conclude the business with him, and to speak no more of the law, which I had hoped you had laid aside those thoughts long since upon my several reasonable letters to your Lordship.

1638, May 21. Whitborne Court.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford to Secretary Sir John Coke at his lodging in Whitehall.

I have received those letters, one from my Lord of Clare, another from my cousin Bates, and a third from Dr. Micklethwaite, all about the sale of the impropriation of Histon, of which I have written an answer to my Lord, which I hope will give him and them satisfaction. I have told his lordship that if it be at all sold my niece shall have it before any other, and at the same price, and that what loss she hath suffered by providing her money for it, upon reasonable arbitration I will make it good to her. And so I intreat both his lordship, and her, as also I do you, that I may not be pressed against my will, and to the hurt and loss of my other children, to sell it before I can provide some other way and means by which my son may employ the money in the same assurance to himself and in the like hope to his brethren as now it is. If it be in ready money in his dispose, and God please to take me away, I fear much how it will last.

COKE MSS.

1638, May 21. Harwich.—Sir Richard Cave "For your Honour."

After Captain Hall (the Captain of the Adventure) had endeavoured five days and nights at sea against the cross wind to carry his charge for Holland, the wind increasing forced him to return back again into the harbour at Harwich. Though I am not where I could wish myself (by my most gracious Master) yet the charge committed to me is in safety and shall with faithful diligence be transported according to the trust and commands laid upon me.

1638, May 21. Windsor.—Edward Lord Herbert (of Cherbury) to Sir J. Coke.

I here enclosed send a letter from an honest man used in many businesses for me, that you would be pleased to set such a stop with the Clerk of the Council that his business be not proceeded in until His Majesty's pleasure be further known.

1638, May 26. Covent Garden.—Sir George Hamilton to Sir John Coke Secretary of State.

I have made bold to entreat my cousin the bearer hereof to wait upon you, and put in mind to receive His Majesty's directions touching a letter His Majesty was graciously pleased to promise, when I kissed his hand, he would write to my Lord Deputy of Ireland for me, wherein he would recommend me to his Lordship for a proportion of plantation land lately found for His Majesty in Ireland.

1638, May 28. London. Philippus Koch, Pastor in Fussenberg, Johannes Georgius Vernius, Pastor in Mehrenberg, Illustrissimo Domino Domino Johanni Coke, Equiti Aurato, serenissimi et potentissimi Magnae Britanniae Regis Secretario Status Domino observandissimo.

Ex mandato generosorum comitum â Nassau Sarbrücken, qui Metis nunc per triennium exules agant, nos duo pastores ex Germania in hoc regnum missi sumus, ut in nomine omnium pastorum, ludi magistrorum, et viduarum (quorum sunt praeter liberos et orphanos ducenti undecim pressi extremâ penuriâ et fame) subsidium liberale apud serenissimam majestatem regiam supplices solicitaremus . . . Insuper nos non per totum regnum et generalem collectam affectemus, sed per unam atque alteram provinciam immo cum micas et guttulas saltem ex fonte opulentiorum uberrimo desideremus, et supplices imploremus, rogatam volumus humillime Magnificentiam vestram, ut in hac cultus divini parte non ultimâ nobis auxilium et suppetias ferat.

1638, May 28. Barwardcote.—Dorothy Bonyngton to her cousin Sir John Coke.

Asks Sir J. Coke to persuade Mr. Sacheverell to take the money of her son Peter, and if he will not that the Court may order him to take it. Their diabolically invented false and feigned detractions and odious calumnies suggested by Satan are acted by themselves. No malicious blast of any foul-mouthed backbiter can prevail with you that an old building should be shaken by such abusive, nay I may say abyssive blasts.

1638, May 29. Holland, our rendezvous by Furne Skonce (near Gorkum), where we are at an hour's warning to march.—Gilbert Coke to Sir J. Coke, principal Secretary.

Seeing my affairs here go with me but as formerly, I have not at all any benefit or hope of it from those that your Honour hath employed in the business of my preferment. . . . I see younger soldiers than myself preferred to better fortunes, and that by the letters and favours of great ones. . . . I must yet stick notwithstanding my own Colonel's attestation two years since to your Honour of my sufficiency. . . . Sir Alexander Humes his brother, my comrade in garrison, formerly went for England, procured His Majesty's letters for the next company of the whole Scotch that should fall, by which the last summer he was made Captain. The like I know your honour can do for me.

1638, June 4.—Endorsed by Sir John Coke "Reference for Mr. Crew to the Lord Marshal."

Rough draft by Sir J. Coke of an Order by the King, upon a Report by his Serjeant, Sir Ralph Whitfield, and his Solicitor-General, Sir Edward Littleton, concerning the rights of the Ranger and the Forester of his Forest of Delamere; that the Earl Marshal, Lord Justice in Eyre beyond the Trent, shall order the same to be accordingly settled and performed. Limits of the grant to Lord Rocksavage as to taking bucks and does, and re-chasing deer into the Forest.

1638, June 7. His house at Charing Cross.—George Kirke to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary.

Anthony Borrett of Great Yarmouth, has lost 1,000*l.* by shipwreck. I have asked Lord Keeper for a protection for him for the Benevolence of certain cities and counties, but the Lord Keeper cannot grant it for losses at sea. Be pleased to assist him that he may obtain His Majesty's warrant for the Benevolence of those cities and counties therein desired.

1638, June 7–17. Hague.—Charles, Prince Elector Palatine, to Sir John Coke.

How sensible I am of your constant kindness, at Sir R. Cave's return you shall hear at large. Only I must desire another from you which is to assist this bearer to levy men in England for my guard speedily, and with beating of drums, which will infinitely further it. . . . If any other officers come to you from me for that purpose, I pray let them have the same power.

1638, June 16.—Thomas Smythe to Sir J. Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary to His Majesty, &c.

I understand one Croxton, a tenant to Sir Thomas Swann for a land ballast wharf at Greenhithe, desires His Majesty's leave to ballast ships, which if permitted will overthrow our patent. Be pleased to send for his petition, and let nothing be concluded until we may answer the objections.

1638, June 16. Aboard His Majesty's ship St. Andrew in the Downs.—Sir J. Penington to Sir J. Coke, Knight, one of the Principal Secretaries of State at Court.

The Mary Rose arrived from the Elbe from transporting Sir Thomas Roe, Lord Ambassador for those parts. Hears from Dunkirk that Prince Thomas has raised the siege of St. Marys and retaken Callowe, and put to the sword and taken prisoners 4,000 of the States army. The French King hath 15 sail of ships coming out of Holland, all completely fitted, victualled and manned, of which, 8 sail carry 44 pieces of ordnance apiece, and 4 sail 30 pieces.

1638, June 18. Yorkshire.—Randal Macdonell, Earl of Antrim, to Sir John Coke.

Asks Sir John Coke to recommend his cousin Hugh MacMahon to the Lord Deputy, before whom his name is.

COKE MSS.

1638, June 23. Docket, signed Jo. More, for a warrant from the Lord Chamberlain to the Exchequer to pay 800*l.* to Jacques Duart, the King's jeweller, for a facet diamond set in a ring sold to His Majesty, and delivered for the use of Signor Bernino who cut His Majesty's statue in marble.

1638, June 23. Mitcham.—Richard Daye to Mr. Ralph Weekherlin, Secretary to the Right honourable Sir John Coke.

There are two especial causes which I have followed a long time together, namely, the planting and propagating of the word of God by redeeming impropriations to the Church, and the planting and increasing of wood and timber. I am assured that within these few months I shall help the King to such and so great a yearly sum of money to His Majesty and his heirs as shall countervail the ship money, the re-edifying of Whitehall, which they say His Majesty hath a desire to build new again in a more uniform sort, and the yearly value of all these burdenous projects that I have heard of. I shall do it in a lawful way justifiable at a Parliament. Mr. Secretary Coke will be pleased to let me know what reward his Honour may judge me worthy of. . . . The King's portion will be so great and the way so easy, that Mr. Secretary may have a good matter out of it, and so likewise yourself, who are now grown ancient in the Court of England and have taken good pains under divers of His Majesty's Secretaries.

1638, June 28.—Philippe Burlamachi [to Sir John Coke. No address.]

J'envoya mon frére a Whitehall, pour rencontrer V.E. pour lui montrer la contrariété que je rencontre à ce que Monsieur le Grand Trésorier m'avait dit que sa Majesté avait commandé que fut écrit à Messieurs les Ambassadeurs. Si leurs Excellences ont ordre de recevoir les deniers qui sont affectés à ma satisfaction, ce serait folie à moi de contester, déspendre [dépenser] inutilement à faire poursuivre une affaire laquelle est destinée pour autre service, et négliger la sollicitation de ma satisfaction par autre voie près de Sa Majesté. . . . Je scai bien qu'en France on ne desirera pas moins que de voir des oppositions pour cependant garder l'argent, et faire vrai la proverbe, inter duos litigantes gaudet tertius. Je presse V. E. pour scavoir son opinion à fin que je puisse ecrire par cet ordinaire, et me décharger des dépens extraordinaires que je souffre et ai souffert ces douze mois pour cette affaire.

1638, June 29 and 30.—Philipe Burlamachi à Monseigneur Monseigneur Jean Coke, Chevalier, Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté en Cour.

Je remercie V. E. de la reponse qu'il lui a plu me donner. M.M. les Ambassadeurs eussent pas avoir toute la satisfaction de mes amis et de mon frére, s'ils voulussent se contenter de donner lieu à la raison du commencement, comme en fin ils ont fait apres trois heures et demie de contestation. M. Cantarini se montra tres prompt de rendre l'obligation de M. de Ghinegaud, desirant seulement que les saisies faites en les mains de M. Vannelli fussent reláchées. V. E. plaira rechercher la lettre de Monseigneur le Conte, par la quelle il écrirait que j'avais reçu ou joui de 50,000 livres pour un an de rente de 600,000 livres. . . . Je me fais foi de prouver l'impossibilité de l'accusation.

1638, June 29. Drury Lane.—Alb. Joachimi à M. le Conte de Perbroque (Pembroke) et Montgomerie Chevalier de la Jarretière, Grand Chamberlain et Conseiller du Conseil Privé d'Etat de sa Majesté de la Grande Bretagne etc.

Je remercie votre Excellence pour la peine qu'il lui a plu prendre en l'enquête des causes qui auraient emnenés le Barbier Hemins et le Serjeant Thurigood de se méprendre contre ma maison . . . Les femmes des dites personnes se lamentent fort de la détention de leurs maris . . . Je serai d'avis qu'on pourrait donner les dites deux prisonniers aux larmes de leurs femmes. Si par ce qu'ils souffrent maintenant ils n'ont appris de se comporter plus modestement á l'avenir, ils pourront être alors punis selon ce qu'ils auront merité.

1638, July 1. Endorsed by Sir J. Coke "Mr. Attorney. Scotland." Your Majesty may command all holding offices or lands in the posts adjoining Scotland to repair well arrayed and to stay there during your pleasure — also the arraying of men in those parts and the keeping of them in readiness for the defence of the realm the furnishing of towns with munitions and the fortifying them at their own charges. The navy may keep provisions from Scotland by sea, and their means to furnish them with moneys by the sale of their commodities may be hindered.

1638, July 3. Dover Castle.—Sir John Manwood to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

His Majesty was pleased to look upon a petition I gave him which the Magistrates of Dover here do not well like . . . Their pretentions will be that his Majesty's grant to me will be prejudicial to his Majesty's profits. I beseech you let me not receive any prejudice in your favour till you have satisfied yourself about it from Mr. Secretary Windebank through whose hands his Majesty's grant of my petition hath issued. . . . You will know of the relief of the St. Omare before my letter can come to you, or else I should have writ some particulars.

1638, July 6. Otley.—Sir Edward Kinerston to Sir J. Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary.

The restless spirit of my unnatural son is still working my further vexation as by this letter herewith will appear, but forasmuch as I received this neither from any bedchamber man nor by any direction from your honour, I have forborne to do anything therein till I understand your pleasure. Some things I have intrusted this bearer my kinsman to inform your Honour of to whom I beseech you give credit.

1638, July 7. Custom House, London.—Sir Paule Pynder, and Sir John Wolstenholme to Sir J. Coke, principal Secretary of State, at Greenwich.

About two years since the Lords &c. did appoint a room to be created and kept at Dover Pier for preservation of His Majesty's Customs, and that the shipping and trade might not be burthened with new charge did order that the said room should be kept and maintained at the charge of the town without any fee at all. The bearers hereof employed by the town of Dover inform us that Sir John Manwood, Knight, Lieutenant of Dover Castle, hath lately brought a warrant under His Majesty's hand and signet for keeping the said room, and demands great fees for that and other pretences to be levied upon all ships that come or trade there. Now, for as much as the execution and keeping of the said room as aforesaid was . . . well and considerately settled by the Lords of His Majesty's Privy Council, we pray your Honour's assistance to the petition, that the trade may not be drawn away by new charges to the prejudice of His Majesty's Customs and impoverishing of the town.

1638, July 8. Thomas Smythe to Sir J. Coke.

I find to my cost that your Honour did not without reason ask me why Streets his name was inserted into the patent for ballasting of ships, for, whereas he was nominated only in trust as the others were, now he challengeth a full fourth part. Sir Charles Harborde has made a most false report and urgeth my Lord Privy Seal to have his report confirmed. My suit to your Honour is that his Lordship may defer the concluding of anything upon Sir Charles his report until the hearing of the cause in open court. But if he will proceed to order anything before the hearing, then be pleased to advise me some course that by his Majesty's immediate warrant I may avoid the report of him who hath taken away my place and proceeds to undo me if he can.

COKE MSS.

1638, July 9. Ludlow.—M. LL. (Marmaduke Lloyd) to the Lord President of Wales.

Touching the equal rating of the people of the county of Cardigan in the divisions of Uch Eyron and Ysse Eyron we have taken a speedy course for the appearance before us of some of the chiefest persons in each division. We have ordered that the ship money be levied according to the former rates. For the petition of Kenrick Williams against Peter Wynne Esquire of Flintshire, we have settled the petitioner in possession until a trial at law. There happened an unfortunate accident this week in Monmouthshire. A young gallant riding on the highway that came from Bristol unto those parts, meeting a poor woman by the way that begged alms of him, he drew out a shilling and told her that if she would kneel down and worship the cross that was on the shilling he would give it her. The poor women said she would never kneel nor worship the cross: the other then said he would kill her, and thereupon this bad young gallant (who is thought to be a Jesuit or priest disguised) drew his sword and gave her divers wounds through the body, and left her as dead on the highway, and fled; but by God's providence he was apprehended and taken between St. Julians and Newport, and there remains in gaol. What he is no man knows: but upon his examination it is said, he changeth his name, and I would he would change his religion too.

1638, June 11. Bellhouse.—Lord Newburgh [Edward Barrett] to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

Give all the expedition you can to the procuring the King's hand to the bill which I send by this bearer (Mr. Bedingfield the new Attorney of the Duchy). . . . He is obliged to go out of London towards Suffolk on Monday next. . . . By your favour I hope I shall upon Sunday next bring him to Greenwich to kiss the King's hand, and present him qualified by his patent under the seal and the taking of his oath.

1638, July 13. Dover.—Sir John Manwood to Mr. Secretary [Coke].

The Count of Egmond's sister came out of France with the Venetian Ambassador, and hath been here these 7 or 8 days; she intends to go for Flanders on Sunday night, and desires liberty to carry such silver vessels as she hath with her which I presume is but little, for I believe she is in a poor estate for so great a personage, and in danger to be imprisoned when she comes home. If I have no prohibition to the contrary I intend to give her all the fair assistance I can befitting a personage of her quality. She goes in the packet boat for Dunkirk.

1638, July 13. Barbican.—John Egerton, Earl of Bridgewater to Sir J. Coke.

Sends Sir Marmaduke Lloyd's letter. I know not of what spirit they are which do such cruel barbarous and irreligious acts. Too busy in packing to have time for ceremony. Asks Sir J. Coke to be mindful of him and to prevent the clouds or eclipses which may befal his services at so great a distance.

1638, July 23. Arnheim.—Sir Richard Cave, "For your Honour." By His Highness' (my master's) vigorous industry and earnest diligence the wheel is loose and going. He hath himself been twice with the Prince of Orange at the States army; he hath left nothing unpressed to the States, to the Land Gravinne [Landgravine] or Milander. The Prince of Orange refuseth not his counsel, and assureth him of his best furtherance. The most hopeful business is that the conjunction between His Highness and Lieutenant-General King's troops is resolved. His Highness intends to send me back to Minden, to consummate the business, and to come along with those troops to the place of meeting which His Highness will name in a letter and the day. His Highness will give a better testimony of himself to his friends and enemies than I may here without suspicion of flattery express.

1638, July 27. Thomas Smythe. [No address.]
I entreat your Honour to call to remembrance a petition preferred by you to His Majesty, wherein I proffered one third part (of what benefit could be raised by cleansing the river of Thames) to His Majesty and we to be at all the charges. Now I hear the city hath gotten a grant to the same effect. Be pleased to stop these proceedings at the Docket. I intreat Mr. Raleigh Sanderson to wait on you because he is equally engaged in the business with me.

1638, July 28.—Thomas Smythe to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary.
I am bold to put your Honour in mind of a business long since presented by you to His Majesty concerning certain lands given for the taking away shelps out of the river of Thames. I intreat that it may now be assured and delivered, because we intend to put in execution the same. I presume your remembrance of it by the division made by the King himself, who would needs have a third part. I desire the petition may be in Mr. Raleigh Sanderson's name.

1638, July 30. London.—[To Sir J. Coke. No address.]
These inclosed were sent after me from the Prince Elector to the King's Majesty before I departed from the Hague. They had been sooner here if the master of the cloth ship had not deceived me, which cast me into so tedious and bad a passage that my poor wife feeleth it at the present and lieth in great extremity. This keepeth me from presenting these letters as I ought to do.

(1638, July —).—Sir Edward Osborne. [No address.]
Upon signification of His Majesty's pleasure to have the forces of this county in readiness I called together the Deputy-Lieutenants at York, where we resolved presently to proceed with viewing the arms and mustering the men, and to train and exercise them. But I must beseech you to take into consideration the great number of soldiers charged upon this county, (being 12,000 foot and 400 horse); that their commanders are only gentlemen of the country, and all so ignorant in the use of arms, that, unless His Majesty at his own charge sent down 8 or 10 expert men, it will not be possible for us to bring them into any useful order in many months. I believe some of the further northern counties are in worse condition than we, having few or no arms at all but what was used anciently in the border services.

1638, July —.—Inventory of Berwick munition made the 8 January 1627–8 signed by Sir Robert Jackson, Maior, and given to His Majesty by Alexander Hume. Indorsed "this must be safe kept being the only evident whereby the town can be charged for the safe keeping of the within written particulars."

COKE MSS.

1638, August 3. Skipton Castle.—Henry Lord Clifford to Sir J. Coke, principal Secretary of State.

My cousin, Sir Philip Musgrave, and Sir George Dallston are now with me, who are two of our Deputy Lieutenants, in Cumberland and Westmoreland. All defects in those counties will be supplied at our meeting next week at the Assizes, and the horse and foot exercised without any umbrage at all given to our neighbours. Hoping all will be well upon my Lord Marquis's return to Scotland; for I cannot hear but they are very quiet there and silent. I will carry all things secretly, only I have sent to London for some private arms for myself. The late sickness hath not a little disfurnished Newcastle both of men and horses. The Mayor (who it seems is a careful minister) writes that they will not be awanting in anything to their power.

1638, August 3. Paris.—Battier à Monsieur Monsieur Calendrini.

Son Excellence dit que Mr. Burlamachi devrait se purger du blame qu'il pourrait avoir en l'omission en ses comptes d'une telle somme de £50,000 qui sont dûes au Roi. Ce ne serait point justifier Mr. Burlamachi que de faire voir qu'il n'a pas reçu la dite somme; ainsi il faudroit prouver que la dite somme n'était point due, et partant non éntrée en compte.

1638, August 8. London.—Philippe Burlamachi [to Sir John Coke. No address.]

La sollicitation que fait faire le Comte de Leicester n'est nullement au profit de sa Majesté. Les fonds qui est ès mains de Madame de Guinegaud ne compete au Roi; si non entant qu'il doit servir pour satisfaire Madame de St. George pour le Conte de Cipiere et quelques autres qui ne sont encore payés des assignations. Ce qui importe au profit de sa Majesté sont les arrierages des rentes acerues depuis le 1er d'Avril 1632. Cela devait etre poursuit. J'entends par une lettre de Mr. Battier son Excellence voudrait que je me fusse chargé de £50,000 d'une année de rente des huit cent mille livres échues le 23 Mars 1633. Je ne veus plus chercher de me justifier de cette imputation. Il apparaitra par les attestations que Monsieur de Vic et Augier ont faits que Sa Majesté ne pouvait prétendre, ni moi en son nom, que le 23 Mars 1633 lui fut dû £50,000. Je vous envoye la lettre originale de M. Battier.

1638, August 8.—Thomas Waad to Sir John Coke.

Yesterday I found my master (Mr. Withrings) ill at Ware, intending this day to set forward to Walthamstow. I have forwarded packets to Lord Clifford and Lord Howard. The French and Antwerp mails this instant arrived.

1638, August 9. Philippe Burlamachi to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

Monseigneur, Puisque Witherings est mort je m'adresse à votre Excellence lui offrir mon service; l'assurant qu'elle pourra disposer de moi, et que j'espère que je ne serai moins capable d'avancer ce qui sera du service de sa Majesté que lui a été.

1638, August 11. London.—Thomas Waad "for your Honour."

This instant I received this inclosed packet from Yarmouth by way of Norwich for your Honour: it came from sea. My master [Withrings] remains yet at Ware not daring to adventure on the way in regard of his weakness.

1638, August 14. Walthamstow. Thomas Withrings to Sir J. Coke, Secretary of State and Master Controller-General of the Posts, at Windsor.

It pleased the Lord in this last northern journey (wherein I was sent by Mr. Secretary Windebank) to inflict upon me two great fevers, which have been so heavy that indeed, had not the Lord been more merciful gracious and favourable towards me, I should no ways have been able to endure them for one hour of the time. I am a weak and miserable man, yet no doubt of life nor fear of health, if God (for my manifold sins) do not again lay His heavy hand upon me. To-morrow (God willing) I shall be at London. I infinitely rejoice to hear of your Honour's good health, which I did this morning by Mr. May.

1638, August 15-25. "Duplicate of mine."—Sir Arthur Hopton from Madrid.

Particulars of movements of French and Spanish armies attacking and defending Fontarabia.

1638, August 15. Aboard the St. Andrew in the Downs. Sir J. Penington to Sir J. Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary of State, at Court or elsewhere.

Has sent the Happy Entrance and the Providence to ply upon the coast of Scotland to search and intercept all Hollanders or Low Country or Scottish vessels as shall transport any manner of arms or munition of war for that kingdom. The Providence is to land one Cole (a messenger) at the Brill. The Sovereign set sail this morning to ply it up for the Isle of Wight. I have sent the London and the Leopard westward in pursuit of Henlie and Polehill's men of war that hath the letters of reprisal against the Hollanders.

1638, August 16. London.—Thomas Withrings to Sir John Coke.

I last writ from Walthamstow. These came by the ordinary from Antwerp.

1638, August 17. H.M.S. "Swallow" at Kinsale.—Captain Thomas Ketelby to Sir John Coke.

Your Lordship's letter concerning the Dutch came to my hands, they behave themselves civilly. That of the 9th for transportation of the Duchess of Buckingham came yesterday. I doubt not to be at Beaumaris near the prefixed time.

1638, August 18. London.—Nicholas Murford to Sir John Coke.

Asks assistance with Lord Treasurer for allowance of his security for farming the salt; it is referred to the Lord Treasurer and Lord Cottington; the former he takes for his friend but the latter labours to the contrary.

1638, August 18. John Harwood, Mayor of the town and county of Poole, George Skutt and Alexander Wayte, Justices. Examinations of:—

1. W. Nurrey of this town and county of Poole, mariner and master under God of the good ship called the Concord of Poole, burthen 80 tons with six guns, 12 men and two boys, being about six or seven leagues off from Ushant coming from Rochelle laden with salt, was set upon by a man-of-war of Algiers having 15 pieces of ordnance and full of men with the colours of Holland displayed, . . and then put out their Turkey colours and bade him amain for the King of Algiers, whereupon this examinant refusing to strike his sails at their command, the Turk boarded his ship in his quarter with great store of men, whereby they continued in fight board and board together by the space of three hours, and the Turk being weary of the battery took occasion to cut away this examinant's sprit sail yard to clear himself away, and then stood to the northward. . . . . This examinant saith that he killed a great many of the Turks and beat them out of his top into the sea with his muskets, and then surprized and brought into this harbour of Poole one Turk and three Christians, viz., a Dutchman, a Frenchman, and a Biscayner.

COKE MSS.

2. Anthony Ricard of Taloone in the Straits French sailor hath been a captive in Algiers by the space of 7 years and 4 months, came in a Turkey man-of-war about 7 weeks past, and at his coming from thence there were in Algiers about 20,000 Christians, whereof 3,000 English; and about the number of 30 men of war some of them bound for the coast of Spain, and others for the coasts of England and France. . . . This examinant being a captive in a Turkish man-of-war burthen 240 tons with 15 guns and 124 men, whereof there were 19 Christians, 6 of them English and three of them renegades. . . . This examinant being a Christian, and crying for mercy out of the Concord's top the master received him to mercy.

3. Oliver Megg of Lubeck, hath been a captive in Algiers by the space of 8 months, and was lately employed as a pilot in a Turkish man-of-war, and on Tuesday last, being the 14th of the month, not far from Ushant did set upon the Concord, and continued in fight for three hours, and then the Turks being weary of the fight, fell off with his ship and left this examinant with two other Christians in the Concord's top.

1638, August 19. Weymouth and Melcombe Regis. Henry Michell, Mayor, to the Lords and others of the Privy Council.

Certificate. Abigail of this port arrived. Masters mate and others come ashore, state on their oaths that the said ship sailing from Rochelle towards Ireland met with a Turks man-of-war near Scilly, who set on them and took six of their company, viz., their master, their merchant, their gunner and his mate, the cooper and one more. . . . During the two ships being together one John Rolf, born in Ireland, taken captive on that coast two years since, a slave, got by accidental means aboard the Abigail. He relates that the said Turkish ship-of-war with 9 others came about 6 weeks since from Algiers, and were all bound for the Channel to take Newfoundland ships and others as they return from their trading; . . . and 17 more sail were provided and ready to set to sea for the same places and purpose.

1638, August 19. Endorsed "Mr. Richard Harding."

Upon the answer of the Earl and Countess of Suffolk to the King's letter, His Majesty taking the pretended poverty of the Countess into consideration hath thought fit to propose an accommodation between them and Mr. Harding. If therefore the Earl and Countess shall think fit to buy in the £300 per annum, which is justly paid by the Earl to Mistress Harding and out of controversy, His Majesty will command Mr. Harding to accept of £3,000 for that annuity . . . provided that the annuity of £200 which is now in controversy be so settled that it may be hereafter constantly paid. If this be not accepted, Mr. Harding is left free and entire to the advantage of the decree in Chancery and His Majesty's royal order upon the hearing at Greenwich. Oatlands. Indorsed by Sir J. Coke "A letter written to the Earl of Suffolk to this effect 30th August 1638."

1638, August 20. Poole.—John Harwood, Mayor, George Skutt and Alexander Wayte to the Lords of the Privy Council.

Concerning a fight at sea with the Turks of Algiers, on August 14. Same details as in examinations relating to the Concord of Poole (above, August 18).

1638, August 22. Dublin.—Doctor Alane Cooke to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary.

None of your three or four letters before the last came to my hands, for Mr. Dean Spicer died by the way, and Luke Toole although he hath been here this quarter of a year hath not delivered me my letter, neither will he come in my sight; he hath delivered your letters to the Lord Deputy, but as yet never spoke with my lord. Your favourable and gracious letter hath afforded me much content; your willingness to show your favourable respects unto my cousin Sir Walsingham Cooke shall not only pleasure Sir W., but also Sir William Parsons; for this land, after the death of Sir Walsingham and his lady, is to come unto Sir William Parsons his son who hath married Sir Walsingham's daughter. . . . If your son should come into this kingdom, there is no man that can afford him better content for hawking and hunting than Sir Walsingham, who hath abundance of game both of partridge and pheasant, and as good hawks and dogs as any be in this kingdom. I make no question but your letter to my Lord Deputy in Sir Walsingham's behalf will be very acceptable, for he seems to favour him very much because he is so good a commonwealths man. Sir Walsingham hath sent the fee for the letter by this bearer his man.

1638, August 24. Westminster.—Secretary Sir Francis Windebank, "for your Honour."

The certificate from Weymouth and Melcombe Regis . . . raises much clamour in those parts, the pirates having since taken two English ships. I beseech you acquaint His Majesty with it, that some speedy order be given to cause Captain Pennington or some other to repair thither, and secure those seas; otherwise I fear it will give impediment to the levying of the ship money in arrear, which that service hath little need of at this time.

1638, August 25. Certificate of Captain Neale, as to his treatment at Daventry by Nathaniel Wheatley and Thomas Glover, when employed under the King's commission in taking up men for the service of the Prince Elector Palatine.

1638, August 26. Aboard His Majesty's ship Swallow riding in the road of Beaumaris.—Captain Thomas Ketelbye. [No address.]

By order from my Lord Deputy I am this day arrived to attend your Lordship for transportation of yourself and the Duchess of Buckingham's Grace for Dublin, for that it is not thought safe to venture a ship of this charge farther to the northward so near upon September. I shall humbly entreat your Lordship to hasten with what convenient speed you may. . . . Our provisions end the 15th of September, at which time we are to lay up our ship at Kinsale.

1638, August 27. Fulham.—W. Raylton "for your Honour."

I shall observe your Honour's command in writing to my Lord Deputy touching the military list. But for Dollard's petition I have no copy of it. . . . Herewith I do make bold to send the bill ready for His Majesty's signature for the defective titles. Together with it I send a letter which my Lord Deputy sent with the last packet for the Bishop of Cork, for adding a non obstante for Mr. Chappell, Provost of Trinity College, to hold that bishopric notwithstanding the statutes of that house. There is also a letter for concordatum moneys. . . . That letter which your Honour gave me in charge for the Lord Viscount Wilmot I have caused to be left at his house near Charing Cross.

COKE MSS.

1638, August 29. The Army by Nimeguen.—Sir Jacob Asteley to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary.

I asked leave of the Prince of Orange who referred me to the States. He told me that if any fortune fell he would not do for the absent, but those that were present; this he spake upon a bruit that Colonel Colepeper is dead. I would willingly part from hence with civility, having served this State this 40 years and shall leave behind me four sons officers in their service. This summer hath not been successful to this State. Describes movements of the Prince of Orange and the Cardinal Infanta.

(1638, August —). Mountjoy Blount, Earl of Newport. For Mr. Secretary Coke.

Captain Coningsby is too ill to be sent to you. Mr. Sherburn being now a prisoner, there is none but the keeper of the stores to attend His Majesty's service in the office. If the times prove active it is impossible I can execute myself the places that are under my charge.

1638, (August).—Viscount Chaworth to Sir John Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary.

In regard of the ill news overtook my wife and me of our daughter in law her being given over by the physicians and left far gone of a dropsy and consumption, we have left considering ourselves and are turned into the northward to take care of her if she live, and of her poor children if she die. And now, Sir, I will only give you humble thanks for your many favours to me, and if you will command me anything, I shall be happy (if God give us health) in being the neighbour to your good brother Mr. Pusey.

1638, September 5. Ansley (Annesley).—Viscount Chaworth to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary.

My good cousin Sacheverell acquainting me formerly with his treaty with you about a match for his son, I desire to hear of your happy conclusion, for a fitter match I know not for him that is my nearest kinsman. I would beg the favour to know whether the Queen Mother be come into England for in truth whilst the question and the discourse continueth, I am loth to look into the South, in regard that by my Lord of Dorchester's ill will I suffered for seeing her, and was said to be the seducer of her to come for England, when I have testimony yet living that in case I had not dissuaded it, she had been in England then before me. I am a poor mourner in country for the loss of my daughter-in law.

1638, September 10. Endorsed "For Mr. Comptroller and Mr. Secretary Coke."

Minute of Council at Oatlands. Present:—Lord Treasurer, Earl Marshall, Lord High Admiral, Earl of Newport, Lord Cottington, Mr. Comptroller, Mr. Secretary Coke.

It was this day resolved by their Lordships that it is fit there be forthwith provided arms complete for 12,000 foot and 400 horse.

It is, moreover, held very fit that the Fort of Tynemouth be slighted and a fort made about half a mile from the same for defence of that river. A letter to be written to the Earl of Monmouth, Captain of that Fort.

It is held fit by this Committee that His Majesty should be moved that a proclamation should forthwith be made to prohibit the carrying of any horses out of any part of England or Wales without special licence from His Majesty.

1638, September 10. James, Marquis of Hamilton, to Sir John Coke.

The business between Sir Edward Powell and his wife to be heard at the Council the first Sunday in November.

1638, September 12. Botburrigh.—Colonel James King to Sir J. Coke, Chief Secretary of State.

I owe a great share of thanks to you for a most gracious letter which His Majesty vouchsafed me in approbation of my intentions for the Prince Elector's service. His Highness's affairs in a hopeful way, if he be timely and proportionally supplied. Sir Richard Cave will inform what rubs I have had both from the Commanders-in-Chief and from the Statesmen of the Crown of Sweden.

1638, September 18. Canbury.—Thomas, Lord Coventry (Lord Keeper), to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

His Majesty last summer was pleased to grant to my servant Dashfield the office of Clerk of the Appeals for writing all commissions of Appeal to the Great Seal. He died yesterday having served me almost four and thirty years. Do me the favour to acquaint His Majesty and prefer this humble petition of another of my servants as recommended by me in all humbleness to His Majesty.

1638, September 20. Drury Lane.—Secretary Sir Francis Windebank [no address].

The proceeding of the Lord Deputy in the business between the Lord Chichester and the ward is to my understanding so just and reasonable that I am fully satisfied. Wherefore I beseech you let no former interposition of mine which was at the suit of Sir Ralph Sydenham give longer impediment to His Majesty's service.

1638, September 28. Chester.—Sir Thomas Milward to Sir John Coke.

If my colleague now second justice of Chester his name shall be recommended to His Majesty to succeed Sir Nicholas Overbury in the Council of the Marches, you will be pleased to afford him your good word to His Majesty.

1638, September 20–30. Amsterdam.—Sir Richard Cave "For your Honour."

On Friday last the 14th, I left the Prince Elector at Braunske near Offenberg with Lieutenant-General King, which was the 16th day after their meeting. What great contentment that meeting gave to the troops on all parts Sir W. Boswell may have informed your Honour. I am on my way to the Hague for the Queen of Bohemia's commands. I inclose a letter for my Lord Goring that the moneys for His Highness may be ready against my arrival.

1638, September 29. London.—Thomas Withrings [no address].

It was my unhappy fortune to meet with Mr. Smyth, Secretary to the Earl of Northumberland who told me that His Lordship had sent a warrant directed to a messenger for me. . . . I went to his Lordship's house . . . was there by 6 of the clock in the morning where after two hours' stay I spoke with his Honour and the weather being extreme cold I got an ague and am now forced to keep my bed. . . . The Stage at Farnham he told me was a stage in pay, and I promised (if it were so) I would move your Honour to compel him to carry his Lordship's packets. He also told me I had abused his Lordship in not sending forward the packets which were brought to my house, to which I answered that belonged not to me but to the ordinary posts of the roads.

COKE MSS.

I also told his Honour that I had sent for the packet books of all the posts betwixt London and Dover to the intent if any abuse were committed it might be punished. Notwithstanding his Honour was very well satisfied with my answers to him, his servant Smyth delivered the warrant to the messenger, and though I was in bed yet he came up to my chamber and in a very violent way asked me if I would obey the warrant or not, to whom I answered that in regard of my sickness I could not at this time do it. . . . Your Honour may be pleased to satisfy his Lordship in this business.

1638, September. Dockets.

1. Leases of the Manors of Crossbrook and Beamondhall in the parish of Cheshunt, Herts.

2. Lease of mines in counties of Denbigh and Carnarvon.

3. Payments to be made to Sir William Russell, Treasurer of the Navy.

4. Patents for making gun-carriages, to be drawn by men not seen.

5. Southampton House, Holborn.

6. Grants to Arnold Spencer of privileges in parts of the Ouse (Cambridgeshire) and the Stour (Essex) made navigable by him.

7. Incorporation of the Glovers of the City of London.

1638, October 6. The Hague.—Sir Jacob Asteley [to Sir John Coke. No address].

No inducement by frowns or promises could keep me from obedience to his Majesty's commands. I am busy with Mr. Quarles visiting the army. The 4,000 muskets shipped have a bore less than that common according to the custom of this country or in general use in England. . . . They must be delivered back to the merchants, whose contract was to deliver them according to accustomed bore. In five or six weeks the whole number of 8,000 muskets bespoken by Mr. Quarles will be ready to be transported from hence. The Scotch buy arms in great quantities. . . . If some of His Majesty's ships should meet with ships transporting these arms, you might better remedy what you mislike. I will make all possible speed to repair to Hull. You will see the Queen Mother of France speedily in England, for these people are glad to be rid of her. The inclosed note is the list of arms I bring now with me to Hull.

List.—4,000 bandoleers, 4,000 swords, 4,000 belts, 2,000 armours for pikemen, (as each a back and breast plate, gorget and taces and head piece), 2,000 pikes. The rest for the foot will be ready in six weeks, with 12 pieces of ordnance, 4 mortars and 500 grenadoes. For the horse all will be ready before Christmas (saddles, bits, stirrups, girths and bridles). The models for the pistols and their cases, the carbines and the belts to hang them in, I have seen and find them good and serviceable.

1638, October 7. Ditton.—Weckherlin to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

I have written a pass for the Count Cizé, agent of Savoy, who is to return home. I hope your Honour will take order that M. de Vic prepare his recredential with some court holy water whereof this M. Cizé is extremely greedy. If I can possibly find myself able to come over, I will come this afternoon to entreat your Honour's leave to absent myself till Wednesday or Thursday. . . . M. de Vic (who as himself saith, knoweth better and more the office of a Secretary than anybody else,) will be quick to make that only letter from His Majesty to the Duchess of Savoy; and if your Honour please to get His Majesty's signature to this pass, Mr. Mayo can easily put the signet to it. I ever remain your Honour's unfainedly devoted servant.

1638, October 7. Whitbourne Court.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford, to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary at Whitehall.

I beseech you read the inclosed [his letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury] and as you like it either send it by cousin Streethay, or repress it. It's a business much concerning me in this place, and indeed the honour both of myself and the Church which especially I seek. Thus humbly commending myself unto you and my good sister with my daily prayers to God for you and yours, I rest your ever loving brother.

1638, October 9. Twyford.—Sir Henry Mildmay to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

I had not absented myself so long from Court had not the hand of God hindered; and it hath pleased God to restore me into a reasonable way of recovery. My wife who was the cause under God of cherishing me in my sickness is fallen desperately ill herself which causes me to make some stay from my attendance upon His Majesty to give her that reciprocal comfort that becomes an honest husband to so good a wife in this country, where I am very loth to leave her as a stranger. . . . This truth I humbly desire you to present to His Majesty which is the best present a faithful servant can give to his master.

1638, October 9. Foston.—Sir William Faunt to Sir John Coke.

I do hope I shall be able to attend my hearing in person although I am wasted by a flux of blood issuing both ways from me. I had resolved to be with you at the beginning of the term to have craved your favour about propounding for my depopulation.

1638, October 13.—Paul Davys certifies a copy of a deposition of Thomas Gwynn that he attached Robert Barr merchant by virtue of a warrant of the Lord Deputy, but that Robert Barr produced another warrant of the Lord Deputy of a different effect and therefore he had not brought Robert Barr before the Lord Deputy.

1638, October 18.—William Moysey and John Barbutt, Bailiffs of Ipswich, to the King's most excellent Majesty for His Majesty's special service.

We do in all dutiful manner signify unto your Majesty that the most renowned lady the Queen Mother of France is lately come into your Majesty's port of Harwich this day about 12 o'clock at noon.

1638, October 20. St. Martin's Lane.—W. Raylton to Sir John Coke.

Asks as a favour to my Lord Deputy that Robert Rockley of Rockley in Yorkshire may be excused from being Sheriff, because he has divers children that will be impoverished by this access of charge and because he manages the Lord Deputy's estate in Yorkshire.

1638, October 22. St. Martin's Lane.—W. Raylton [No address].

My recovery by God's blessing I have very good hopes of, being but begun with a cold taken on Wednesday last and knowing how I got it (next to God's help) I applied myself strictly two days to forbear all bread and meat till Saturday noon, and yet a very little then and since seems and proves a great deal to me striving with abundance of wind that is not yet expelled. For His Majesty's letter I will speedily send it away by an express according to His Majesty's gracious command; but the wind is so much at South-west as I hold it speediest way to send by Scotland . . . I will not fail to let my Lord Deputy know your faithful and fitting advice in that other business you are pleased to mention and so shall I for that concerning Mr. Rockley.

COKE MSS.

1638, October 23.—William Frankland, a Justice of the Peace for the North Riding of Yorkshire, certifies informations taken by him of four charges of horse stealing against Richard Newsom, and that within three or four years last past there hath been stolen at least fifty or sixty horses within the compass of six miles from the place where Newsom dwelt.

1638, October 27. Lambeth.—William Land Archbishop of Canterbury to George Coke Bishop of Hereford.

My very good Lord, I have received two letters from you, the one of the 9th the other of the 18th of October; and they came to my hands together now by your servant. And since Mr. Secretary kept your former letter by him so long without delivering it to me you must blame him and not me that you had not your answer sooner.

Concerning Mr. Thomas Godwin and his remove of the chair in which your Lordship used to sit at sermons, and that without giving you any notice, was in the very best construction a very foolish and a peevish action. (1) But you must not look that I will take upon me to censure any man, where I have nothing to do, being out of my visitations and (2) without knowledge of the circumstances of the action. But I leave you to order and punish those things, as you shall find fit. (3) This I find by your Lordship's letters, that Dr. Burghill continues the lecture (if I mistake you not). But (4) that is directly against the statutes of the Church: and therefore I do hereby pray and require you that he do presently leave the lecture; and that the Church proceed to the choice of a new, according to statute. But whether the Dean and Prebends will think it fit to have two brothers residentiaries at the same time I leave to themselves to judge. For my own part, if my judgment be asked, I cannot approve it.

Your Lordship's second letter needs no answer, but the note inclosed containing your answer to the information against you needs one, and a larger than I have now leisure to give.

1. And for the first, which concerns your cutting down of timber, 'tis every way insufficient. You say Bishop Field cut down more: and I say I am sorry for it. But he being dead I must think he meant to have bestowed it upon necessary reparations had he lived. You say Bishop Lyndsell cut down as much, (5) but that he laid it upon reparations. And then I tell your Lordship that he did that which well became him. You say that you sold some of this timber, or gave it in exchange for seasoned wood, to make carts, tubs, tables, and other utensils. And I say this is no use to which you ought to put bishopric timber; for all these utensils are household stuff, and your own proper goods, and will be accounted when you die, or leave the place. And whereas you add that you have bestowed some upon repair, and mean to do more, I have two things to say. The one, that you be careful to have that which you do done substantially. And the other (which but for this occasion I would not have spoken) that I am not very confident of the reparations you make: and yourself (I pray pardon the freedom) is the cause of it. For you told me you had left a good house at Bygrave, and in very good repair for a parsonage house, but afterwards, (7) hearing it was otherwise (but not much believing it, because of your inhabiting it so long) I caused a view to be made, and found it (8) stark nought and unfit for any man's habitation. So I am altogether unsatisfied in this first.

2. For the second I have received a fair testimony concerning Mr. Harvey his life and skill to serve the quire. So for that I rest satisfied, (9) though if I were jealous, I might say it were an easy thing for a bishop to get such a testimony for a man not very sufficient. And I assure you, my Lord, the information given me comes from very good hands, and not from any of the Godwins, whom I see you may have just cause to suspect.

3. For the third, which concerns your son, and your making of him Chanter of the Church, I am not only unsatisfied in the business, but ashamed of it. Had you given him (being no better bred and having either none, or no fitting degree) some competent living in the country, it had been more than enough for him. But to put him into a prime (10) dignity of the Church (being not a man (11) statutable) was a very ill act of yours, and was as ill done by them that admitted him, whose example so ever you might seem to follow. And were my visitation to come I would remove him out of the place. And if any of the Prebends complain to the King, you will not be able to answer it. Besides there are two passages in this answer that do deeply discontent me. The one is that when you speak of the lease, you say it was cast upon you by an (12) Overruling Providence. And this is the answer which is commonly given by some hardhearted men, when they have taken the extremity of forfeited bands. But a very unworthy thing it is to patronage unworthy actions by God's providence, and to call that overruling, when their own gain guides them. The second passage is as bad as this. For there you compare your son's running to sea from an apprenticeship and his meeting with a storm to Jonas. This would have been well foreborne, for, for ought I see, he neither went from (13) God's errand, nor returned to it in the way yourself mention. And truly, my Lord, you must pardon me; for I cannot believe that any wise and good men could for the benefit of a lease advise you to give such a preferment to a son (14) no otherwise qualified.

4. For the last, I do confess to your Lordship, it was more brokenly delivered to me than the other parts of the information were. And as for the Lecturer all that I require is that Dr. Burghill (15) leave that place according to statute. And if he have not left it already he is much to blame, and somebody else too. And for my part, let them choose whom they will, so he be an honest and an able man. For Dr. Rogers, I think I know him; and if I do, he is of good learning and conformable. But whether he be parson of Whitborne or no, I cannot tell; nor whether any be that is of the same, or like name; for the information (16) sent me is on that particular ill written. And howsoever, I should not stand much upon it, if the first and the third had not been too true.

My Lord, I am sorry to have this occasion to write this to you, but I hope you will redeem this as well as you can and be more wary for hereafter, and I shall forbear to acquaint the King of it, unless farther complaint or other necessity urge me to it. Though I confess I did little expect to hear such news given from Hereford. So I leave you to God's blessed protection and rest your Lordship's very loving friend and brother, W. Cant.

Notes written by the Bishop in the margin of the Archbishop's letter at the places referred to by corresponding numbers.

(1.) At another time in the very like case he gave present charge to suspend.

(2.) I gave full notice of all needful circumstances.

(3.) He found no such thing by my letter, but absolutely the contrary.

COKE MSS.

(4.) And yet before this time, gave me thanks for continuing him in the same a whole year.

(5.) I said not he did so, but that he left at least 30, which were all sold.

(6.) Though they be household stuff, yet I doubt not but they may be reasonably supplied by the woods, as all before me have done, and ten times worse.

(7.) This is strange to me to be said of Bygrave house, where I laid above 200*l.* as is yet visible; and dare appeal to any man how it was left in good case.

(8.) This must needs be Mr. Boughton's information, always my good friend, as I fear also all the rest were. doubtless fit for as good a man as Mr. Boughton who both I conceive to be the informers of all this.

(9.) But nothing is said against them that gave this false information.

(10.) My Lord Bishop of Wells made his son, being newly Bachelor of Arts, Archdeacon, another greater (?) dignity than a Chanter, without reproof.

(11.) My son is by statute capable of it.

(12.) It was God's overruling providence that put it from Mr. Westfalling, who for himself kept it unlet till this time, and when it was letable, within two months God taking away Mr. Bull the Chanter, cast it into my hands.

(13.) His true calling was to be a priest, as appears by the event, which he missing in going to sea, God by a storm sent him back.

(14.) Morgan Godwin, from one of the boys in London was made Archdeacon.

(15.) He knows that it is void, and that the Dean and Chapter, against statute, delay it of purpose to keep out Dr. Rogers.

(16.) Dr. Godwin is Parson of Whitborne, and would have given me that parsonage for my son, if I would have given him my help for the Lecture, which I refused, and this is turned upon Dr. Rogers.

Subjoined to the letter of the Archbishop is the following draft reply of the Bishop of Hereford.

I humbly thank your Grace for your letter by my servant, and beseech you still to make as friendly construction of me in the informations against me, as your wisdom and goodness will admit. And by God's blessing, in his good time, I doubt not but I shall redeem your good opinion of me, which, how dear it is, and ever hath been to me, none of the best professors of this service to your Grace can more truly aver, nor can be more sensible of the want of it, than myself. Though I can neither foresee nor prevent the ill dispositions of men, yet I shall endeavour hereafter to give no just cause nor occasion of any misconception, and withal be careful to make that good use of secret enemies, by giving no advantage to them, which is hard to do with an open and professed friend. In this hope and confidence, without discouragement in my place, I will still be bold as heretofore to go on, by giving you notice, and begging your discretion as occasions fall.

1638, October 29. Whitehall.—Sir John Coke to the Bishop of Hereford. (Draft endorsed on the Bishop's letter of 1638, October 7.)

You complain in your last letter of my Lord's censure of you, and how much you suffered by it. This made me, for fear of like offence, not to take upon me to change anything in that you write to the Archbishop; the rather because you aver your integrity in all the things objected, whereunto by his answer you now find you have not given satisfaction.

And fearing you might therein also reflect on me, I had forborne to write any more in this business, if my affection had not forced me to strain my best credit for the mitigation of this displeasure. Your man had told me how your letter had not satisfied his Grace, and yesterday, though I found him engaged in conference with the Lord Keeper, yet he broke off to come to me, and told me how your letter aggravated your charges: he pressed the objections, and replied upon your answers, as I conceive he hath expressed in his own letter I will not repeat anything, that you may not take the acrimony to be mine. Only this I must tell you, that I had not the skill nor confidence to take upon me your justification; and therefore was forced to make use on your behalf of that liberty you gave me in your letter to me, to let him know that if his Grace misliked your son as unfit for the Chanter's place, you would willingly, when he hath let the lease, put another fit and capable man into it, who shall freely enjoy the same. And I added that the man should be allowed by his Grace, if he so pleased. In conclusion, I expressing my own interest and passion in your case, he was pleased to tell me that, for my sake, so this were performed, he would pass over all the rest and make the best of it, without further complaint against you: and gave me power to signify thus much unto you, notwithstanding whatsoever he had written unto you. And herein I presume you will pardon me, though your confidence in your integrity be never so great. For I dare assure you this hath saved you from a dangerous storm. So advising you to be careful to see the condition performed for your own sake and mine, I shall not hereafter importune you in anything against your own liking, for any interest of my own.

A paper endorsed by Sir J. Coke, "An Act for the Prebends of Hereford."

Ex Canonicis sive Prebendariis neminem in majorem Residentiam assumi permittimus, qui non Presbiter, Magister saltem in Artibus (modo quo præfertur) vel superioris alicujus gradus, et concinnator tam doctus quam sedulus fuerit: quique tam Canonicas ædes, aut ad Ecclesiam spectantes aut aliter opportunas habeat vel proxime habiturus sit; qui etiam quadraginta libris annuis vel proprii patrimonii vel facultatum Ecclesiarum ad eam Curationem honestius sustinendam, communi hominum estimatione, dotatus fuerit.

1638, November 2, aboard H. M. S. Great St. Andrew, in the Downs.—Sir John Penington to Sir John Coke.

Have made stop of the Hopewell of London that is supposed to be bound for Barbary, which Clements the merchant denies who is repairing to your Honour to solicit her discharge.

1638, November 3. St. Martin's Lane.—W. Raylton to Sir John Coke.

Asks presentation of an inclosure and that His Majesty's answer may be obtained to be taken on Tuesday by this gentleman sent expressly by the Lord Deputy.

1638, November 10.—Timothy Pusey to Sir John Coke.

Cuppe hath been lately with my servants again to demand a noble a ton for marking iron; it was reported that patent was called in or void. It seemeth strange to me that the King's Majesty should have so small a rent and they to gain so many thousands yearly as it will come to.

1638, November 5.—Sir J. Coke to Sir Jacob Astley. (Draft.)

That which you mention concerning your purpose to see delivery of the arms at Hull and the disposing of them there is so well advised and directed by you that there needeth no other order to be given but therein to follow your own way, which is here well approved and commended; and when you have settled things there for the present then His Majesty's pleasure is that you repair hither to His presence, to understand his further pleasure. . . . The money disbursed at Yarmouth will be here repaid.

COKE MSS.

1638, November 6. Ansley (Annesley).—Viscount Chaworth to Sir John Coke. You well know what hath befallen me in Court. His Majesty hath pleased to make me his sheriff of a county, which the world (not I) takes both as a mark of his displeasure and as a disparagement to me. I have therefore most humbly besought his goodness to change his choice, at this time, and unto him only do I appeal in the lowest manner I can. And I beseech you, Sir, even for all the friendship sake and respect I bear you that you present my supplication to His Majesty. And if it succeed, I shall hold the favour from your hand: if not I vow to you, Sir, were it to be the King's dog keeper I would do it and readily too.

1638, November 6.—Copy of an order of the Lord Deputy and the Council in Ireland as to a settlement of jointure between Sir Robert Loftus and the Dame Eleanor his wife.

1638, November 13.—Sir Henry Marten to Sir John Coke.

Under favour I conceived it proper for them who would have a ship released to complain of the supposed grievance. Mr. John Kirk doth signify that upon an action entered in the Court of Admiralty by his partners this ship was arrested by virtue of a warrant out of the Court and not by virtue of any letter of reprisal, and if bail be given they are ready to give way to the discharge of this arrest and to put in sufficient caution for costs and damages. This course of proceeding being ordinary and agreeable to the law and practice of the Admiralty I hope will be maintained.

Enclosed. Remonstrance in French by Captain of the St. Jacques de Dieppe to the Ambassador of the most Christian King in Great Britain—his ship and crew arrested at Falmouth.

A series of papers consisting of—1636, November 14.—Copy of the translation of the King of Morocco his letter to the King of England (Spanish).

1637, September 20.—Articles of the Treaty with the King of Morocco (Captain Rainsborough).

1638, May 8.—Instructions for Robert Blake, Gentleman of the King's Chamber, and his agent with the Emperor of Morocco and Barbary.

——. ——.—Copy to the King of Morocco sent by Blake.

1638, July 26.—Mr. Blake's letter of credence to the King of Morocco.

1638, October 24.—Interpretation of the letter of the King of Morocco.

1638.—Draft by Sir J. Coke of "Articles agreed betwixt the Crowns of Great Britain and Morocco."

A copy of the same, endorsed by Sir J. Coke "Subscribed by the Ambassadors for Morocco, Lord Archbishop, Lord Treasurer, Lord Marshal, Earl of Holland, and the two Secretaries of State."

A Paper in Arabic signed "per me, Wm. Rainborowe," and endorsed by Sir J. Coke "Articles with the Sanct at Sallee."

1638, November 16. Durham House.—Thomas, Lord Coventry, Lord Keeper, to Sir J. Coke.

Upon Wednesday night I was seized on with a painful fit of the gout in my knee which extremely vexed me and kept me in my bed ever since. I remember the appointment to be at Council this afternoon: rather than be wanting in my duty I would adventure either relapse or what else God shall appoint. I pray you advise me in two lines what you wish me do. I know well what physic doth advise, but you can give me advice from Court.

1638, November 19. Ansley (Annesley).—Viscount Chaworth to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary.

After my letter to the King touching my Shrievalty I sent another also to the Queen; the effect whereof I have received that His Majesty said thereon that he did marvel that I moved him again therein, since that he had sent me his resolution by Secretary Coke. Now, Sir, in regard I have sent to Newark to the post, and to Nottingham, and find no letter from you to me, I hold it strange. I know not whether if you have not written to me, you will thereby show me how low I am and my unworthiness of any Court favours. Nevertheless, Sir, had His Majesty's words been to command me to keep his dog kennel (as I did write to you) the words would have been worthy to have been received by me, and whatsoever they be they shall be obeyed by me.

1638, November 25. Whitehall.—Sir J. Coke to Viscount Chaworth. (Draft within Lord Chaworth's letter of November 19.)

You were pleased by your letter to blame me, your humble servant, for that I did not write unto you the news of your shrievalty, as if I had not esteemed you worthy of any Court favour. Your Lordship is an old courtier, and you know well that it is not esteemed at court any favour to send unwelcome news; but what you required by your letter I carefully performed. I brought your son to His Majesty's presence, so as he delivered your letter to his own royal hand: and both from his Majesty and from me was willed to tell you, that your election must stand: but whereas you did interpret it as a mark of his disfavour, he willed him to tell you that you were therein mistaken, for he chooseth none to be sheriffs whom he thinketh not well affected to his service. To that you have since written, I doubt not you have received answer from another hand. And if it be my fault that I am not forward to trouble my noble friends with advertisements which sort not with their good liking, I will be more ready to write when I can send them good news. And I hope you will accept this for excuse from your Lordship's humble servant.

1638, November 19–29. Turin.—Basil, Viscount Feilding to Sir John Coke.

Encloses bill of his extraordinaries, and asks furthering the passing and the payment thereof.

1638, November 28.—Draft letter from Sir J. Coke to the Lord Feilding, with instructions on his leaving Turin to return to his first station with a recredential for his revocation from that Court, and new credentials for his address to the Duke of Venice. The present disgust against that State taken by the Grand Signor moveth them by their Ambassadors in all Courts to labour how to interest all Christian princes in their defence. . . . Further, at the instance of their Ambassador here, His Majesty hath commanded me to write effectually to both his Ambassadors at Constantinople, the old and the new, to do joint offices for that Buglio of Venice whom they now keep in restraint ... Hereof you may give notice to that Prince and senate; that by this experience of his Majesty's readiness to expouse their occasion, you may ingratiate your return. This Ambassador hath complained against one Simons for some miscarriage in his Consulate at Zante, I conceive in keeping down the price of currants in that Island. Your Lordship shall do well to inform yourself by our merchants there, as I will also here. Your Lordship well knoweth it is one of the chief business of our Ambassador there to protect our merchants and procure them free and ample trade.

1638, December 1. Kiveton.—Sir Edward Osborne [to Sir J. Coke. No address].

Some disaffected persons endeavour to make use of my absence from York to my prejudice. It is Sir William Savile's act out of the pride of his heart, and disdain of the person and authority of any person of equal rank in the country. Before my access to his place no friends could be greater than we were. I have been absent for five weeks because house at York made uninhabitable by the late violent and dismal tempest. . . . The Council are enforced to eat in a Guard Chamber and the rest of my family now there (which are at least 50 persons), shift as they can. Want of a Lieutenant-Colonel over the Master of the Rolls his regiment. I have no power to appoint any without my Lord's own hand. In the absence of the Lord Lieutenant the Vice President and the Council should have his authority. . . . I desire explanation of your advice that, considering the expected troubles, I keep as many as I can about me this feasting time of Christmas. My own company I shall be sure to keep together, and the Council too, if you please so to command me, but for all others, I cannot stay them against their will.

(1638, December 8.) London House.—William Juxon, Bishop of London and Lord High Treasurer. [No address.]

Mr. Secretary, Being pressed for a despatch of letters of credit for 15,000*l.* by this post who will be gone at noon, as the Prince Elector's ministers affirm, . . . my request is that you would represent to His Majesty what Sir Thomas Roe's last letters speak touching the probability of casting away the 15,000*l.* in the way it is, and take his pleasure whether I shall not at least delay it till the next week, that he may have further time to consider of it.

1638, December 18. Annesley.—Viscount Chaworth to the King.

May it please your Majesiy since you have been pleased to ordain me your sheriff of this County, and part of my oath being that I shall tell your Majesty what happeneth in my County which doth concern your profit, I beseech you give me leave to advertise your Majesty that since I received your Majesty's writ for my levying ship money, together with the Lords of the Council their favourable and full directions therein, I have lately received also from their Lordships a letter directed to our last year's sheriff and to me commanding him to gather and pay in 500l., which is yet due from him, and that I should give him my warrants for levying the same. But, may it please your Majesty, I have only the copy of their Lordships' letter remaining with me, and no writ from your Majesty which (as I humbly conceive) should be the ground work for that service, and the original by which all my copies and warrants are to be framed. I therefore humbly beg that your Majesty will be pleased to give order therein, to the end your service, and I your servitor, may not receive any stop or prejudice thereby. And as touching that part of your ship money which your Majesty hath pleased to command me to collect, although I have the misfortune to have the worst inlet into the service that is possible, a prepossession of the whole country that I am in your Majesty's disfavour, and am, in sign of it, from a Viscount of a kingdom and Parliament made a Vice Comes of a County; and thereupon if my industry should fail in any point through any's averseness, it would only add to my particular prejudice. Yet, Sir, I so seriously and devoutly affect all your service, and this in particular, as notwithstanding this, with the interruption of the said arrears, and the apprehension of further charge coming by wars (which here they are too full of) I have hopes to give your Majesty as good an account of the service as any other of this country could do. And so humbly begging your Majesty's pardon for any errors herein, I rest your Majesty's most humble and most devoted servant.

1638, December 19. Manor at York.—P. Stanhope, Ar. Ingram, Hugh Cholmeley, Willm. Alston (?), George Buttler, R. Rockley, Henry Goodricke, Edward Osborne, William Scott (Mayor), John Hotham, Henry Griffith, Thomas Metham, William Lister, H. Sheiffielde, Lieutenants of Yorkshire, to the Lords of the Privy Council.

Have received letter for mustering and training the forces of this County. But the price of powder is excessive. Humbly desiring that either we may have the powder at twelve pence a pound, or that our merchants may be left at liberty to furnish us.

1638, December 31.—Sir J. Coke to the Viscount Wentworth, Lord Deputy of Ireland.

Yesterday being the 20th of December I received your last letters of 21 and 30 November and 11 December. That of the 21st brought the Captains' acknowledgments and thanks to his Majesty for the increase of their pay, and which his Majesty most graciously accepted, together with the professions which they make thereby to increase their endeavors for his service. The other of the 30th concerneth the garrisoning of 500 men in Ulster, and the provisions wherewith they are supplied. Your caution and care herein his Majesty much commendeth, and alloweth your directions in every part thereof. For that later clause, which sheweth how the Lord Chancellor, under pretence and profession of performing all things, hath hitherto done nothing of all that was injoined him by his Majesty's letter, this displeases very much; and therefore his Majesty requireth your Lordship and the Board to let the Lord Chancellor know that he recedeth not at all from that letter: but requireth him to yield his obedience thereto, and that being performed he may come over, and shall be graciously heard in all he can allege for his own justification. And this direction may suffice until the particulars you mention shall be received. The last letter of 11 December concerneth the Earl of Cork, to whom I have by his Majesty's command given express order according to your desire, either himself to go in person, or to substitute an assignee authorised to solicit his causes, and to answer all such complaints as are or shall be made against him. This I hope his Lordship will readily perform: for this testimony I must give him, that during his late abode at Court he much commended your Lordship's government and justice, and expressed as much desire to conform himself in all things to your Lordship, as could be expected or desired; insomuch that his Majesty took notice of these expressions for your advantage, as coming from a man who could not be esteemed partial for any interests of his own.

1638, December 31.—John Egerton, Earl of Bridgewater, to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary.

COKE MSS.

I send you this remembrance, served unto you in a dish or two which sometimes you may fill either with your Tottenham cream or the fruits of your garden and orchard there, where I had a loving and friendly discourse with you before my going into Wales the last summer. Since my return thence my indisposition hath so confined me to my house that I have not been able to come to you, to second the discourse we parted with. You shall have my good wishes that this near approaching New Year may increase your happiness and good fortunes, together with your favourable and friendly motives to your very affectionate and well wishing friend and servant.

1638, December.—Di Casa, questo Martedi, sera, Gio. Giustina, Venetian Ambassador, to Sir John Coke.

Ho inteso essersi creduto che nell' espositione fatta da me hoggi à sua maestà io habbia detto d' essere Ministro di Principi Italiani, il che se bene impugna intieramente al fatto e alla credenza etiandio. Sono obligato a replicare a V. S. Ill^ma^ che io dissi non dover parere strano alla Maestà sua che io Ministro di Principe Italiano ne essendovi a questa corte altro ambassadore di Principi Italiani, raccomandassi con vera humiltà gl' interessi giustissimi di gentilhuomo Italiano. Come tale per appunto furono le voci mie, . . . vi compiaccia di rappresentare à sua Maestà di nuovo quello che dissi.

(1638).—A Paper endorsed by Sir J. Coke "Scotland. Memorandum."

Notes by a Scotch Councillor of advice to be given to the King.

The matter being cleared that not only the places of Session which they hold only by a presentation on bare leave (?) but the whole procurations or offices of the Crown which are under seal are void except they be of new granted by King Charles. Then may His Majesty justly challenge that he hath not been well used by them, then may your Majesty express that you are well pleased now that you did not confirm them in these places they held of your father as you intended, considering they have proved so far contrary to that you looked for at their hands.

4. Declare how it hath come to your ears that bragging words hath been used against Sir John Scott; if ever it shall be found that man receive harm, their necks shall pay for it.

7. Last, the necessity of their being in Scotland would be declared and a commandment given that they should take their journeys home some day in this week; considering now the matter of the parliament of England approaches, whereanent there is no need of their attendance.

Remember to speak [to] the King anent the Petition.

(1638).—Endorsed "The paper sent to your honour by my Lord Sterling."

"His Majesty out of his zeal to the glory of God and out of an earnest desire that all the Churches of his dominions (as they do agree in doctrine) might likewise agree in the manner of Divine Service, did give order to some of the Bishops of Scotland and learned divines for making of a Book of Common Prayer; which was accordingly done and sent to be perused by his Majesty: who being pleased therewith caused print the same and present it to the Lords of his Privy Council there, who did approve thereof and appoint it to be received in all the Churches of the Kingdom."

The Ministers there assisted by noblemen, gentlemen and others, did insist upon their petition to the Council that some objections which they had against the Book might be heard; the Bishop and the Provost were abused by the multitude in Edinburgh. His Majesty did send down the Earl of Roxburgh, Lord Privy Seal, and by a public proclamation show the integrity of his intentions to secure them from any fears they could justly conceive for any ground to the advantage of Popery. This was so far from appeasing them in any sort that they rose to a greater height. His Majesty gave order to the Earl of Traquair, his Treasurer, to withdraw them from the way wherein they were. He went to Stirling and by a proclamation did command all such as could not show a necessary cause of their stay to retire themselves under pain of treason. After this with a band they combined together to persist in what they had begun, persuading and pressing all they could have to set their hands thereunto, taking their oath likewise in a most solemn manner thereupon for observing all that was contained therein. Yet His Majesty being extreme desirous to reclaim them by fair means, sent down the Marquis of Hamilton with a large commission from him having power to do what he might have done if he himself had been there present in person ; who did offer them more than they had formerly demanded.

(1638?) — Paper endorsed by Sir J. Coke "Lord Newport's Memorial."

For avoiding of exchanging and borrowing of arms the Musters would be annually over the whole Kingdom on a certain day. Every Captain should take order that all his muskatiers about Whitsuntide be exercised to know the art of their weapons and postures.

At Whitsuntide every band should be brought together and trained all together, and at the first general meeting there should be two deputy lieutenants present to put in execution the Statute of Musters upon those that are absent. For training of the Horse, in every County the whole number as make up one Cornitt should be brought together annually and kept as long as shall be thought fit for the service which may be best done when the days are long and winter geldings not put to grass.

To prevent the disabling of men's bodies by drinking it was fit that they should be produced on holy days after divine service to manlike exercises as archery, running, leaping, wrestling, football, casting of the bar or sledge and the like; and that all alehouses be shut up at that time.

1638.—Endorsed by Sir J. Coke "Designation for the quartering of the Imperial Army."

Luxemburg and Brunswick, L'Archevêché de Bremen, L'Evêché de Hildesheim, L'Evêché de Vorden, Le pays de Hadeln, Le paysage de Hambourg, Celui de Lubeck, L'Evêché de Lubeck et son Altena, de Arensborck, Sassen, Lowenberg, Mechelnbourg, Sachsen et Brandenbourg 52 Regts. Compagnies de Corps de Gallas, cavellerie et dragons.

1638.—Relation touching the West India Company's and Count Maurice's proceedings in Brazil. The ship "Sacramento" taken 18th of April coming from Brazil and brought into Holland, and bringeth news of the blocking up of La Baya.

(1638–9, January 1.)—John Holles, Earl of Clare, to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary.

Give me leave to wish you a good new year. Words being (as the proverb saith) women and deeds men, I will say no more of this theme, till God shall enable me to a more real retribution. Only for the present I earnestly desire this addition of favour from you, to afford house room to this little box till I call for it, which will the more oblige me to profess myself your most affectionate friend to do you service.

COKE MSS.

1638–9, January 7. Dockets.—1. Licence to Lord Dunsmore to empark for deer 150 acres of the demesne lands of the manor of Apscourt, between Hampton Court and Oatlands.

2. Grant to Rowland Lloyd, Clerk, of certain fines imposed on Peirce Lloyd, sheriff of Anglesey.

3. Order to the officers of the Exchequer and the officers of the King's household, commanding the officers of the household to make a perfect book of account for the first six years of His Majesty's reign. The sums due from clerks, sergeants, purveyors, and other officers of His Majesty's house to be paid to Sir Henry Vane, Knight, late Cofferer of His Majesty's household, to be by him paid out for clearing off the debts owing upon the several surplusages of the accounts of the said Sir H. Vane and Sir Marmaduke Darell, Cofferers.

4. Warrant to the Exchequer for payment of £6,786 to John Acton, His Majesty's goldsmith, for gilt plate chains and medals of gold given in New Year's gifts and to sundry ambassadors and others, and for new making and mending of broken plate and for other necessaries in the office of His Majesty's household, for one year ending the 25th of March 1637. Subscribed by Sir Henry Mildmay and other officers of His Majesty's household.

1638–9, January 8. Helmsley.—Thomas Gower, Hugh Cholmeley, Thomas Hebblethwaite, Robert Wyvell, William Cayley, J. Legarde, Deputy Lieutenants of Yorkshire, to Sir Edward Osborne, Bart., Vice President of His Majesty's Honourable Council established in the North parts.

In respect the sessions we now hold is not a united sessions wherein matters of consequence are usually decided, we have respited the consideration of your letter until the next sessions.

1638–9, January 11. Whitborne Court.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford, to Secretary Sir John Coke, at his house at Garlick Hithe.

I have sent this inclosed to his Grace of Canterbury, desiring that one of these two may be accepted, but have withal given direction to my man that, in case he find his Grace disposed for any other, he may nominate two other doctors, one of them his Grace's chaplain, both of great work and without all exception. And this I do of purpose to put off Mr. Boughton, who I conceive hath been the informer against me, and a confederate with Mr. Westfaleing, who by the unexpected sudden death of the last Chanter his kinsman, perceiving that he could not now get it for himself, laid this plot to have got it for Mr. Boughton, and so by him again to himself. Doctor Rogers, for whom you wrote to me, hath by my means got the lectureship, and I doubt not but will thank you for it. So commending you to God's blessing, with all hearty thanks again and again for shrouding me from this storm, I rest ever obliged, your loving brother in all service.

1638–9, January 10 [Copy].—Edward Osborne, W. Scott (Mayor), W. Savile, John Hotham, Henry Griffith, William Pennyman, Thomas Metham, Henry Goodricke, William Lister, Arthur Ingram, John Ramsden, William Sherfield, Humphrey Cholmeley, Thomas Danby, Edward Rodes, George Wentworth, William Mallory, George Butler, Robert Rockley and Robert Strickland, Deputy Lieutenants and Colonels of Yorkshire, to the King.

Having heard and considered of divers propositions made unto them by Sir Jacob Astley, Serjeant and Major-General of the Field, and by Sir Thomas Morton and Colonels, state their readiness to march to any place of rendezvous, but ask consideration of the defenceless state in which their country, fortunes, wives and children will be left. At no time before were all at once employed out of their own country.

1638-9, January 12. York.—Sir John Melton [to Sir John Coke. No address].

Had tried to cause the Deputy Lieutenants who signed the letter to His Majesty to alter their minds, but they were not to be driven from it.

1638-9, January 15.—Robert Bertie, Earl of Lindsey, K.G., to Mr. Secretary Coke.

I received by this messenger your letter signifying His Majesty's pleasure for my present repair to the Court, which I shall with all obedience perform as speedily as I can.

(1638-9), January 16. Annesley.—Viscount Chaworth to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary.

Although I am assured there hath comed to your hands a letter from me, wherein I presumed to enclose one for His Majesty as touching the arrears of the last year's ship money which I was by the Lords of the Council commanded to give Sir F. Thorney warrant to levy; but in regard there came to me no writ for it, as hath done for that which is charged on me for this year, I desired to understand His Majesty's further order therein, lest his service might suffer thereby in case of any legal question, as hath been on that which hath been levied by writ. Now, Sir, these are to desire you favour me herein, and that you will be further informed that I have given Sir F. Thorney meeting hereabouts and urging him for the parties names that were in arrears of the ship money, he could not give it (as he said), for the head constables, whom it seems he trusted too much, had not given them to him. Whereupon I did give him warrant for the head constables, and what issue it hath had I must leave to him to tell your Honour, and this is all the account I am yet able to give hereof. And therefore with my true condolence with you for the loss of your son, my cousin Sacheverell, I rest your honour's humble servant.

1638-9, January 15.—Docket.

1. The Earl of Rutland to be Game Preserver in Sherwood Forest.

2. License to the Lord Slane to transport silver from Chester to Ireland.

3. Doctor Duppa to be Bishop of Chichester.

4. An almsroom for R. Parsons in the Cathedral of Worcester.

1638-9, January 20.—Warrant for assessment of inhabitants of Baggrave, co. Leicester, to raise 4*l.* 18*s.* for building and furnishing a ship of 400 tons. (Signed) "J. Wilkes."

1639, January 22, New Style. Despatch from Madrid.—Preparations for war in Spain against France. Scarcity of silver coin. Private vessels of silver may be taken for coin, unless a Fleet bring silver. Illness of the Infanta; the physicians and her women disagree.

1638-9, January 22. Gloucester.—Edmund Graile to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

Asks protection for his son who is beginning to enter into occupation of his farm (for the purchase of which he is indebted almost 400*l.*) and is accused to be a transgressor of the law concerning tillage. For my part, though I am as I have formerly been a Bartholomew physician for the fee of five marks per annum, and so the King's poor servant, yet hath my tenant ever kept a sufficient plough as formerly, and kept the same field in tillage still, and I have broken up pasture according to the true intent of the statute.

Coke MSS.

1638–9, January 22 to February 7.—Sir J. Coke's Notes "Council of War."

At the Lord Chamberlain's lodging, Marquis Hamilton, Lord Chamberlain, Mr. Comptroller, Secretary Coke.

Resolved to send the Surveyor to York to advise the state of the King's house there.

The King's journey to be ordered, concerning the persons to attend and their equipage.

First the Chamber, then the Household, 3, the Stable.

For the Chamber. 1 Privy Chamber, 2, the Presence, 3, the Guard Chamber.

The Privy Chamber. Gentlemen in ordinary.

Of these in ordinary, those which have noble places, his Majesty to be moved that they may have letters sent to them to choose a sufficient deputy, a gentleman of quality with fitting equipage, to serve in that place where he serveth not in person, such as his Majesty shall approve.

The number is 48, 12 in every quarter.

The persons to whom letters are to be written to that effect :—

Sir Arthur Mainwaring, Sir Edmund Verney, Sir Alexander Hamilton (his Majesty to be moved to put another in his place), Sir Richard Winne, Sir Francis Leigh or Lee, Sir William Balfour, Sir John Penington, Sir James Scott, Sir Alexander Erskine, Sir William Steward.

The rest to be admonished by the Lord Chamberlain's letters to prepare themselves in the fit equipage for this service.

For the extraordinary gentlemen of the Privy Chamber, the Lord Chamberlain to make a list of all who are fit to have letters sent to them. Those that are in the States service, or in Ireland, not to have letters.

Presence Chamber. In all, the ordinary 67.

Pensioners, Ordinary 50, besides officers. And Extraordinary the Earl of Salisbury to deliver the account.

Guard Chamber. Ordinary of the guard 240, whereof waiters at the Tower 40, so ordinary of the chamber but 200. The Earl of Morton to be spoken to by the Lord Marquis.

Of the 200, attend the Queen 60, on the Prince 30: attending on the King 110.

Household. Mr. Comptroller to meet with the officers. What will be necessary to remain with the Queen, and how many necessary to attend his Majesty's diet, and the rest of the diet, and how many remain: and how the rest may be disposed to serve on horseback, or on foot, as guards for his Majesty's person.

Stables. The Lord Marquis will bring his book.

Sir John Borough. Nothing of Queen Elizabeth's time. Henry 8 (1520 to Guien) had books of appointment, containing the names of all, every officer and horseman, and servants, and how many horses every sworn servant in the chambers and house shall carry with him. All these listed and their ranks in the army. For the appointments—

Marquis, Lord Privy Seal - - -	4	chaplains,	8	gentlemen,	44	servants,	26	horses.
Earls - - -	3	,,	6	,,	33	,,	20	,,
Barons - - -	2	,,	2	,,	18	,,	12	,,

Knights of the Garter the same proportion.

Knights Councillors and Secretary, 1 chaplain, 11 servants, 8 horses.

Guard 200, whereof 100 had horses, 100 on foot.

Officers of the House. Of the officers there will be 260, besides those appointed to stay with the Queen. A third part of these 260 are for the diets, so rest 160, left to be disposed of by the chief officers. The like course to be taken by the Lord Chamberlain. The Lord Marquis the like. 2 clerks of the Council and 2 of the Signet.

1638–9, January 23.—Petition of Mr. James Cleghorn, a Gentleman Usher Daily Waiter, for goods of T. Nixon, felo de se, after conviction at the Gloucester Assizes for poisoning a child.

Opinion of Sir R. Heath, Attorney General, that they belong to the King, not to the Lord Almoner.

At the Court at Whitehall, 13th February 1638. Order thereon that the grant be made to the Petitioner. (Signed) SYDNEY MONTAGU.

1638–9, January 26. York.—Sir Edward Osborne. [No address.]

Asks whether he is to go with his troop of horse if the forces of his country are drawn towards Scotland, or to remain Vice President? How His Majesty received the letter of the Deputy Lieutenants? Yorkshire charged with more soldiers than other counties. The King's house unfit for residence.

1638–9, January 26. Whitborne Court.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford, to Secretary Sir John Coke, at his lodging in Whitehall.

I have written this inclosed to his Grace, which upon view and liking you may please to read. I have also sent for cousin Franc Coke to come to me, and to that end have written both to my nephew Sir John and to my brother Sir Francis, to certify them of the quality of the place, and of your liking of it for him; and thereupon as they like and think fit, to send him to me. I received this inclosed from cousin Bates, and will be willing what yourself, or nephew Thomas, shall think fit upon reasonable computation of her loss to repay. In which I think none can give better light and direction than cousin Streethay: in which I pray mitigate your censure of me. It was for my son, who is nearer to me than my niece; and that to save him from ruin, as I fear by this time you know, and is like more and more to appear. And for no intent, as my Lord of Clare charged, of a greater sum in the sale. And in case it ever be sold with my consent, so far as is in me she shall have the offer of it at the same price; besides which I never yet made her any offer of it. This with all other I refer to your favourable opinion and charitable interpretation; and for the present give you thanks for bringing me into this calm, in which I hope I shall rest, yet with care and fear, beseeching you to accept a "quid retribuam?" when nothing else is in my power, but only in devoted prayers for you and yours.

1638–9, January 28. Dublin.—Rod. Hollingworth to Sir John Coke.

Thanks for letters of recommendation to Lord Deputy and Lord Primate. Asks further recommendation to be appointed one of the Lord Deputy's Chaplains.

1638–9, February 2. Manor at York.—Sir Edward Osborne to The Lords of the Privy Council.

Upon receipt of your letters of the 22nd of January to the Deputy Lieutenants of this county concerning the price of gunpowder, I took speedy course to give them notice. Also for receiving and vending all such arms as Sir Jacob Astley shall appoint to send from Hull to York for the use and supply of this country, and there were divers arms sent to York by Sir Jacob Astley's direction and put into the charge and custody of Sir Robert Farre, muster master of this county, who doth sell and deliver the said arms as they are called for, and pays over the moneys from time to time to Captain Legge. I shall humbly desire that this service may rest where it is (in their hands). . . . His Majesty's Council here have taken the best and speediest course we can to prevent the selling and conveying of horses, mares, and geldings into Scotland; but as we are informed some hundreds have been bought and carried into Scotland long since. In observance of your Lordships' letters of the 5th of December last commanding me to see your Lordships' order of 8th November 1637 for the levying of 300*l.* within the North Riding of this county towards the charge of His Majesty's carriages of ship timber within the county of Durham to be speedily put in execution, I writ as powerfully and effectually as I could to the justices of the peace of that Riding at their Quarter Sessions holden at Helmsley, the business being of such a natures as lies not within my power, or this Council's.

1638–9, February 2. Manor [at York].—Sir Edward Osborne to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

I presumed the last week upon the rumour of His Majesty's intentions for York to acquaint you with the present state of his house there; but since I am informed by some workmen that the roofs may be so supported under the hangings as will be little blemish to the rooms, I doubt not but the house may be made fit and safe against his coming, for I imagine he will be loth to lodge out of his own, if it may be helped. And indeed there is no house in York else fit to receive him, but Sir Arthur Ingram's, where some think he would not willingly lie. I do humbly desire you would please to help me out of that employment of receiving and selling the arms to this county, having so much other service for His Majesty laid upon me.

1638–9, February 4. Belvoir.—George Manners, Earl of Rutland, to Sir John Coke.

A letter from His Gracious Majesty intimating unto me His Majesty's resolution and state of his affairs for the defence and safety of this realm, withal requiring my personal attendance on His Majesty's royal person and standard at York on 1st April with such forces of horses as my birth, honour, and interest in the public safety do oblige me unto. Wherefore in regard the warning is so short, and I am altogether unprovided of horses and arms for such employment, yet (by help of Almighty God) I will not fail of my personal attendance with such provision of men and horses as upon this short warning I can furnish myself withal.

1638–9, February 11. Tissington.—Sir John FitzHerbert to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary.

Divers of my neighbours had in my absence coursed with greyhounds within the Lordship of Tissington and destroyed many hares, and when I was to hunt my own hounds, having kept a good cry of dogs, my huntsman could scarce find one hare. A friend told me that my worthy friend Mr. Manners was abused in the same nature, and that you procured him a warrant signed by His Majesty, by which warrant he had power to take such dogs from such as were offensive in that kind of coursing. My humble suit to you is that your honour will be pleased to procure me the like favour.

1638–9, February 15. Barbacan.—John Egerton, Earl of Bridgewater, to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary.

This letter being now delivered unto me I send it to you with all the speed I may. Though the letter be scribbled and the enclosed but a copy, yet perhaps you may make use of them. . . . Mr. Hugh Owen, who made the letter to Mr. George Ellis, is one of my Deputy Lieutenants in the County of Pembroke.

1638–9, February 25–15. Paris.—Robert Sydney, Earl of Leycester, K.G. [To Sir J. Coke. No address.]

I have lately received His Majesty's royal signature, not from any of the King's Ministers but from a private friend of mine in England. . . . My case differs from theirs to whom His Majesty hath been pleased to direct the like signatures, for I do not think it was ever known that one who had the honour to be the King's ambassador should be recalled without His Majesty's recredential letters; . . . as was the other day practised in my Lord Scudamore's person. Yet I am commanded by the said royal signature to attend His Majesty at York by the 2nd of April next commencing, which all things considered is in a manner impossible. . . . I am in a great strait between the inobservance of the King's commandment and the abandoning of his affairs which now are in my hands only. Another article of the royal mandate enjoins me within 15 days after the receipt thereof (which a man that hath the sea to pass cannot be assured of) to certify unto one of the King's Principal Secretaries of State what assistance shall be expected of me, to which I can say no more than that my life and poor fortune are and ever shall be dutifully and humbly devoted to His Majesty's service.

1638–9, February 16. York.—W. Sheiffeilde to Sir Matthew Lister, Knight, at his house in the Strand near the New Exchange.

Your patient, my dear wife, by her cold and extreme cough is brought to great danger of her life, and she thinketh she shall have small help till she come to you again, and I intended to have brought her up this spring, albeit she come in a horse litter. But there is a proclamation come down commanding us to reside at our houses. Be pleased to move some of your court friends for a licence for me to bring her up.

1638–9, February 19. Edward Norgate.

Docquet of Confirmation to the Mayor and Burgesses of Devizes of their former Charters with these additions, viz., Justices of Peace of the County shall not intermeddle with the Borough; the Mayor and Burgesses have power to hold plea of accounts personal and mixt arising within the Borough; to purchase lands in mortmain not exceeding 100*l.* per annum; and to name a Recorder.

1638–9, February 22. Docket.—A presentation of John Boraston, Clerk, to the Rectory of Rybsford (Ribbesford) with the chapel of Bewdley annexed, within the diocese of Hereford, in His Majesty's gift pro hac vice. (Signed) Edward Norgate.

1638–9, February 28 (received 18 March).—Earl of Argyll to (the Archbishop of Canterbury ?)

Indorsed "Duplicate of the Earl of Argyle his letter to me. For your Grace."

My verie honourable good Lord. Your Lordship's of the 25 November came not to my hands till the 5th of this instant, whereby I find ane new occasion to thank your Lordship for the continuance of your good opinion, and although your Lordship's modesty will not suffer you to assume anie thinge to your selfe, yet I have your Lordship's evidence in soe greate estimacion that I thinke your Lordship will doe nothing in vaine. Soe whether in generall or in perticuler your Lordship being pleased to take notish of me by your letter, I fynde it my dutie to thanke your Lordship.

COKE MSS.

And although I doe not undertake to excuse anie thing his Majestie is pleased to disallow, yet with your Lordship's favour I believe you shall find that the complaint of the presbiterie your Lordship mentions, which we call our church or generall assemblie, is concerning verie essentiall differences betwixt the Reformed Church and that of Rome; and so far onlie against bishops as they transgress the lawes and lawfull constitutions of this Church and Kingdom. For whither or not that be ane foundamentall point in religion is not heir questioned nor determined; nor what is foundamentall exclusive doe I think anie man will presume to defyne, so as it may be ane sufficient rule for others.

Soe I shall be verie sorie to wrong the memorie of these reverend men who sealled their departeur from Rome with their bloods. And I thinke I doe it not, though I saie they were not arainged because they allowed such things as ar questioned heir. But rather because they would not allow much moir, yea even such things as ar complained of and disallowed heir, for it is the cause and not the paine that maks the mertyr. And thes men wer only in Ecclesia constituenda, and thought it a great journey for the first day (as it faires with all other travellours) to leave ane good towne with manie freinds and acquaintances where they had lived for manie yeares. But we have ours constitute by her lawfull Assemblies, wherein your Lordship will fynd great difference.

Soe with your Lordship's good leive I most saie still your Lordship is mistaken if you thinke the booke that was offered and pressed heir was onlie the English service, for in the verie readinge anie man maie see the contraye.

Yet truelie I think all his Majesty's subjects ought to thank God for his Majesty's paternall care of his own children, and as all (I hoip) do acknowledge it to proceede from his Majesty's owin goodnes, soe, I beleeve, they ar the loather to come under the hands of indiscreet pedantis or rude taskmasters that want the affection and moderation of a father.

And I am verie sorie, with your Lordship's favour I saie it, that you wrest the meaning of those your Lordship mentions in their expression of sinceritie and want of hipocrisie, as if they opposed them to their obedience to the lawfull and undenyable subjection which they owe to their gratious soveraigne, when truelie they onlie oppose voluntar and constrained actions in religions duties in relation to him who requires their fullnes at our hands, which I hoip noe Christian will deny.

Nor beleeve I anie man will esteeme of antiquitie but wher it is waranted with veritie, and noe veritie is sure in religion but scripture. Soe I will not deny to your Lordship if such antiquitie be not their warrant they deserve to have their portion with hipocrits and to be unto every good worke reprobate. But it seemes they desire rather to be lyke Moses, who would not suffer ane huife to remain in Egipt lest it should give occasion to returne. Nor the people that longed for the flesh pottes againe, or lyke Lott that durst not looke back to Sodome, nor his wyfe, that got her reward, or lyke Paull when he was converted, advysing noe moir with flesh and blood, nor Ananias and Saphira still keeping bake something.

Soe I wish your Lordship and all others of the Reformed Church (not knowing the constitutions of this) war als charitable to it and medled als little in disquieting her peace as (I hoip) they have cairfully prevented that fault by their proceedings heir. And whosoever is guiltie of this trespass I pray God they may both repent it and mend it, according to their power, and not bring upon us all greater evills, which we maie all repent, when it cannot be soe easily mendit.

And soe I rest your Lordship's most humble servant.

ARGYLL.

Inverraray, Feb. 20, 1639.

Since your Lordship has been pleased to be at soe much paines as to reid what past the press heretofoir your Lordship maie be pleased to receive what hes passed since, except the answers to the bishops declinatour which is not yet come from the press.

1638–9, March 1. Plymouth.—William Hele, Mayor, to the Lords of the Privy Council.

Persons arrived from Newhaven in Normandy and from Rochelle report great preparation of ships, soldiers, seamen, and victuals there and at Brest.

1638–9, March 2. Exeter.—John Crookhorne to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

For His Majesty's service. Great preparation of ships and men reported from St. Malo. Edict published by sound of three drums that no French ship nor seaman should go out of the kingdom on pain of death; and that no corn nor any other provisions for war either by sea or land should be exported upon pain of death.

1638–9, March 3. Whitehall.—E. Taverner to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

Forwards a packet.

[Within is a portion of a Draft by Sir J. Coke of Instructions for negotiations with the Emperor respecting restitution of the rights and territories of the Prince Elector, with précis of negotiations in 1638.]

1638–9, March 5. Constantinople.—"Duplicate of my despatch of the 5th of March." To Mr. Secretary Coke.

Receipt of your letter of 28th November which was an instruction in His Majesty's name both unto myself and my successor Sir Sackville Crowe for our guidance in the Venetian affairs in this port. There is little change of the estate of the Venetian business, the Venice Bayle remaining still confined within the walls of Galata. It is observed that since the Grand Seignior's great victory and taking from the Persians the place of Bagdad or Babylon he hath despatched one of his Capugi Bassis in quality of Ambassador unto the Emperor of Germany; suspicion that the main scope is to make a discovery how the affairs of Germany stand, and how the Christian princes are engaged against each other. The Caymacan pretendeth not to dare to alter the first answer from the Grand Seignior that it was not the use to license and discharge ambassadors in his absence. I hope I may be thought worthy to enjoy my entertainment during my being upon the place. I sent to Sir S. Crowe seven of the principalest merchants of our nation, for a joint concurrence in all things betwixt us, but he endeavoureth to wrest it to himself. I humbly crave your Honour's directions, and that your letters in His Majesty's name may come jointly to us both.

1638–9, March 6. Whitehall.—M. Oldisworth [to Sir J. Coke No address].

The like warrants have been heretofore signed by his Majesty whenever any ships have been sent out to Newfoundland by the Company in 1637 and 1638.

(1638–9), March 11. Christ Church, Oxford.—Doctor Samuel Fell (Dean of Christ Church) to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary.

You wonder that Hall Court should be charged with a light horse. I fear it is a plot upon me to make me weary and compel me to sell my land. I hope in due time to answer the Lieutenants. I am further bold to desire you to tender this petition, which this gentleman belonging to my Lord's Grace will put into your hands. The business much concerneth both societies and the peace of them.

1638–9, March 14. Ashridge.—John Egerton, Earl of Bridgewater, to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary.

The King having desired that I would serve him with twelve men and horses rather than the other way (payment of 1,000*l.* offered instead) they have been prepared. Now is come a message by Sir W. Uvedale that the King is pleased to spare my horse, and expecteth to receive from me 1,000*l.* Mr. Secretary, I cannot expend and disburse my moneys and have them ready lying by me. I have no mint or spring out of which moneys may flow into my purse or chest. I do not forget his Majesty's advice to us at Theobalds that we of the Council should take our directions from himself or one of his Secretaries of State, and not by the messages or informations of others. I cannot now possibly pay in the 1,000*l.* at or before the day of rendezvous.

1638–9, March 16. Ashridge.—John Egerton, Earl of Bridgewater, to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary.

I return you my kind thanks for your letter, and since I find by it that His Majesty will be better satisfied with my sending of money than of men and horses I will God willing apply myself thereto. This only I desire that such moneys as I have paid for arms to be received at Kingston upon Hull may be allowed unto me as paid by me, and I will (God willing) before this day sevennight pay in 500*l.* more unto the Treasurer of the Army and the rest with all the speed I may. I had well hoped to have made this my resolution known to his Majesty by word, but a troublesome and painful fit of the stone hindereth my return to London.

1639, March 25. Walcot.—Sir Robert Jenkinson to Sir J. Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary.

Darby Bantre, an Irishman, apprehended at Euston for begging . . . in his knapsack 3*l.* 11*s.* 0*d.*, 31 strings of beads with pictures and crosses at them, and five books called Officium beatæ virginis Mariæ . . . I have committed him, and herewith send your Honour his pass and examination.

1639, March 25.—Sir Percy Crosbie to Mr. Owen O'Sulivan.

Gives him the choice of being Captain of 100 horse in Sir Percy Crosbie's regiment or Lieutenant Colonel of Sir Percy Crosbie's foot regiment by appointment of the French King: with a warrant from the Deputy to transport 100 men, under colour of which he may transport 300. Colonel Fitzwilliam hath the King's letters to the Deputy, which will much facilitate the work. Your elder brother will discern what good may move thereby to his own house whatever change or chance may hereafter happen. Enjoins secrecy and that his letter be burnt.

1639, March 26. Manchester.—W. Radclyff to Sir John Coke and Sir Francis Windebank, Principal Secretaries of Estate.

Refers to the King's Proclamation of 27 February 1638–9 against libellous pamphlets from Scotland importing his Majesty's intention to force an innovation of religion established in that kingdom. Upon the reading of which proclamation in the public market in Manchester one Robert Cowper of Crumsall in Lancashire, Linendraper, a man illiterate, brought to Mr. Radclyff, a Justice of the Peace, the book inclosed, received by Cowper of one Alexander Johnson of Edinburgh, a Scottish chapman who useth to frequent the town of Manchester, and is a young flaxen haired man with long locks curled.

[This paper is endorsed with a note by Sir John Coke, dated 1 April 1639. "500 arms for horse to be presently sent by sea to Selby, where is the rendezvous, and within 2 days after 500 more. 8 Pieces of Cannon, whereof 6 of 3 lbs. bullet and 2 of 6 lbs. all Drake's, with 100 shot rounds if so many to be sent away by land presently, with all their equipage."]

1639, March 26.—J. Sempill to Lord Semple.

My very noble Lord and loving Father.—These are to inform your Lordship and my Lady my mother that I am in good health, and is only sorry that I have not the happiness to hear and see what estate your Lordship is in. I am going on towards Newcastle in my aunt and Sir John's company; the reason of our parting from Berwick was upon a rumour that the town was to be taken in. I humbly beseech your Lordship to acquaint me with your farther pleasure. Sir John and my Aunt willed me to remember their love and service to your Lordship and my Lady.

1639, March 28. Holy Island.—Captain Robert Rugge to Sir Jacob Astley at Newcastle.

The reported arrival of Lord Leslie and 9,000 Scots mistaken. Readiness of garrison and gentlemen of Berwick.

1639, March 28. Berwick.—William Nemo (Mayor), Richard Sellsy, Robert Jackson, Andrew Moor, William Grigson, and John Sleigh to the Earl of Essex, Lord Lieutenant General of all His Majesty's forces.

We are informed the Covenanters intend to take in this town . . . and we have called on the Scotsmen in this town of all degrees before us this morning, who have taken the oaths of supremacy and allegiance willingly. The Lord Semple's son and one Hugh Semple, his servant, we sent yesterday to the Lord Clifford; the said Hugh Semple is a Covenanter. . . . The Lord Clifford's letters to us have been much neglected by the Postmaster, for they are always about 15 hours coming 'twixt Newcastle and here. . . . We have put three old iron pieces upon carriages for defence of the bridge and thereabouts . . . and shall do what further we can for His Majesty's honour and our present safety. Captain Muschamp came here this afternoon, to our great content. Most humbly thanking your Lordship for your honourable favour therein and care of us.

Inclosed in the foregoing letter is the following:

1639, March 31. St. John's.—Grey, Earl of Stamford, to Mr. Secretary Coke, at Court. (Received 7th April.)

His Majesty told my Lady of Exeter that upon his word her son Stanford should not receive an affront. His Majesty's promise was that I should be joined in the commission of Lieutenancy with my Lord of Huntingdon. If you please to assure His Majesty that I have done him faithful and acceptable service as well to His Majesty's satisfaction as to the content of my countrymen, I doubt not but the work may be done quietly without further impediment.

1639, April 1. Sleaford.—Dame Anna Carr to Earl of Roxburgh, at York.

I send some of that sort of tobacco that you were pleased so well to like of. I beseech that the King may order the children of my son (Rochester Carr) to be left in the care of their mother.

1639, April 1. Corpus Christi College in Oxon.—Doctor Thomas Jackson to Sir John Coke, Knight, Secretary of State unto His Majesty.

I received this enclosed [none] from the Right Reverend Lord Bishop of Hereford by the hands of his son, Mr. John Coke, whom he hath committed to my tuition for his study in Divinity, and is after his return from the Isle of Wight to be admitted Commoner of our College, to take his diet with me in the Hall, or in my absence with the Vice-President of our College. I shall endeavour to do as well as I can for the good of this young gentleman, whom I like very well.

1639, April 2–12. The Hague.—Charles, Prince Elector Palatine, to Sir John Coke (received 3 June at Berwick).

This bearer, Captain Ogle, having let me know how prone you have been in furthering the cause against such by whom he was thwarted in his undertaking for my service, I cannot omit, through the opportunity of his return, to render you many thanks for it, desiring you further in case he shall need the continuance of your good offices therein or in any other lawful occasion to afford it unto him, to the end that he may have so much the more cause to acknowledge your favour, and I to remain your very affectionate friend Charles.

1639, April 3. Hexham.—Richard Carr to Alexander Davison, Mayor of Newcastle.

Information of an intended invasion of Riddesdale and Tyndale by Earl of Cranstoun and Sheriff of Tivydale. The time and occasion require a present supply of munition.

1639, April 3. London.—Thomas Viscount Somerset, of Cashel, to Sir John Coke. Asks on behalf of Lord Roche a letter from His Majesty to the Lord Deputy, that no proceedings pass against Lord Roche till His Majesty's pleasure be further known.

(Within.) Draft by Sir John Coke of his answer. He will himself write to the Lord Deputy to inquire how the Lord Roche's cause stands in the Courts. Condoles with Lord Somerset on the death of his sister, the Countess of Worcester.

1639, April 5. London.—Sir William Russell to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

My Lord Treasurer is well pleased that I shall present the inclosed petition to His Majesty; favour me so much as to present the same and to signify his royal pleasure. I have foreborne to send Mr. Clobery's bill, mentioned in the petition.

[Within 5 drafts by Sir J. Coke.]

1. (To the Lord Treasurer.) His Majesty, for the encouragement of the trade of Barbary, is pleased to refer the consideration of this desired licence to the Lord Treasurer, who finding Mr. Clobery's debt to be just and fit to be passed, the petitioner may enter the same on his account for the Navy.

2. (To Sir William Russell.) Sir,—I have made the reference to the Lord Treasurer as you desire, which I send here inclosed. I pray you let me know what ships are now at sea, and how the ship money cometh in.

3. My Lord [Mayor of York.] Being here at York I understand that the City intendeth to call one George Byard to be one of their sheriffs. Since he hath not been enabled by his trade here to discharge that office as the place requireth for the honour of the City, I, having interest in his well doing, am an earnest suitor to your Lordship and the rest of the Aldermen and Burgesses that they will exempt him from this office.

4. Sir,—The next day after the receipt of your grant I presented it to His Majesty, and got it signed by him. It hath stayed at the Signet. . . . I send it by the ordinary. When you send your proclamation I hope to make a speedier return thereof.

5. (To Sir Edward Hartopp.) Good Son,—I was most glad by Mr. Bury to understand from you of my daughter's safe delivery, and pray God with all my heart to bless your little infant, together with your son (spouse?) and to continue both your health and increase all your comforts. What satisfaction I have given Mr. Pound for Mr. Byard you shall best know by himself, and be assured it pleaseth me very well when you give me any occasion to express my love to you in any of your friends.

1639, April 5. London.—Sir Francis Windebank (Principal Secretary), to Sir John Coke.

The Lords of the Council glad to understand His Majesty's safe arrival: also the securing of Berwick and Carlisle. Sends a view of the shipping monies. Wishes health and safety without blows.

1639, April 6. Burton Latimer.—Dr. Robert Sibthorpe to Mr. Richard Kilvers, at St. Martin's.

Asks release of the Constable of Burton Latimer, one of three pressed from that place to be sent soldiers to York, in excess of those from other places.

1639, April 7. London.—Sir Francis Windebank (Principal Secretary), to Sir John Coke.

Encloses a proclamation to be signed by the King for revocation of such grants and commissions as are accounted grievances by the Lords of the Council. Also two drafts (a longer and a shorter) to the gentry inviting them to assist His Majesty in the expedition.

1639, April 5. The two drafts referred to are signed by W. Cant: (Archbishop Laud), Thomas Coventry (Custos), H. (Earl of) Manchester, Guil: London (Bishop Juxon), A. (Earl of) Northumberland, J. (Earl of) Bridgewater (Lord President of Wales), (Earl of) Berkshire, E. (Earl of) Newburgh, Fr: Windebank, D. Carleton, and are addressed "For your Majesty's own Royal hands."

[One is also signed by (Earl of) Salisbury.]

1639, April 7.—"Translation of the Dutch letter directed to Napier" by his brother L. Napier (in French), disclosing plans with respect to Edinburgh Castle and cannon; and assistance in cavalry expected from Bremen and Embden. The French King offers through Cardinal Richelieu that his Fleet shall make an attack on Weymouth and Southampton. The ancestors of our cousin Stratherne have more right to the crown than the House of Stuart. "Le Roi est résolu de mettre garnisons dans les places frontières et Edimbourg et nous imposer une Vice Monarchie Irlandaise."

1639, April 8. Newcastle.—W. Cavendish, Earl of Newcastle, to Sir John Coke.

Asks delivery of a letter to the King, and the honour of a line or two now and then.

Coke MSS.

1639, April 8. Dublin.—Lord Cromwell to Sir John Coke (delivered by Sir George Ratcliffe).

Had received at Lecale the King's summons to join him at York, but the Lord General of this Army held there might be use of his service in this Kingdom. I beseech Your Honour to favour me, your poor neighbour in Derbyshire, with some of your powerful language, and let the King know I will live no longer than I am his dutiful subject. Asks completion of the grant of plantation land in Ormonde.

1639, April 9. Alnwick.—Sir William Pennyman to Sir John Coke.

I send a pamphlet of damnable positions and doctrines taken from Mr. Clapperton, a Scotch Minister. I came here last night; good provision for the soldiers, but at an excessive rate. James Rowley, a friend of the Earl of Rothes, has been taken near the walls of Berwick. He says he is a Covenanter, and refuses to take the Oath of Allegiance. I should advise that all the inhabitants of Berwick and strangers there out of Scotland should take the oath.

1639, April 10. Richmond.—John Leigh to his cousin Sir John Coke.

I received a letter from Mr. Owlesworth by my Lord Chamberlain's command to wait on him with the keys of your lodgings at Whitehall, and to void them of your presses of papers and the stuff you left there for my Lord Northumberland's use. He was very smart with me, and told me he did once move you for your favour about a ship, and he found you very strait in your office, and he knew no reason but that he should be so in his. You have the King's private papers there, and till I hear from you I will not part with the keys.

1639, April 12, N.S. The Hague.—Sir Henry Herbert to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary.

The difference betwixt His Majesty and the Scotch makes our soldiers abandon our companies. I employ this bearer into England to recruit my company with 30 men. I beseech your furtherance whereby he may find liberty in the expedition without restraint.

1639, April 13. Edinburgh.—Earl of Rothes to William Willoughby, son to Sir Francis Willoughby, at Carlisle.

We have averred upon our oath in our information that we mind not to invade England. But since men are brought to lie upon our borders to look over us in a menacing way we could do no less than send some to wait upon our borders that we receive no wrong. If we be invaded, or by the keeping garrisons upon your side wearied and wasted with waiting, we will be forced upon thoughts which have not yet entered in our minds, and to visit you with far more numbers than you expect.

1639, April 13–20.—Copy letter of safe conduct for a trunk belonging to William Willoughby, left with his sister Lady Rossie in Fifeshire, to Carlisle, signed by Argyle, Rothes Sinclair, Yester Killberryens, Balmerino, addressed to the Earl of Home and Lord Johnston.

1639, April 13. Edinburgh.—John Leslie, Earl of Rothes, to the Lady Rossie, at Rossie.

Telling her that her brother desires a pass for his trunk out of Rossie to Carlisle. Since you have this occasion you may write to your father (Sir Francis Willoughby, at Carlisle), and show him your mind freely that he cannot be so void of religion as to be an instrument of violence against we here who stand for the liberty of our religion according to the word of God, the laws and constitution of the Kirk and Kingdom: so void of reason as to assist an hostile invasion of the friends who mind no evil to their neighbours, but to defend the liberties of their own kingdom; so destitute of natural affection as to bring his children under the bondage both of their conscience and estate.

1639, April 13. Rose Castle.—Barnabas Potter, Bishop of Carlisle, to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

I presume upon your former favours and Sir John Tonstall's large testimony of your loving affection towards me. . . . I entreat your direction in a doubtful case. I am commanded not to remove from my house or family. I am bound in duty to present my service to our gracious sovereign, my good master. I know not well how to perform both. I pray you therefore to take occasion to know His Majesty's pleasure whether, when, or where I shall attend His Majesty. I must tell you in counsel that I am not earnest, not well able in body to press into his Majesty's presence, or to preach there. . . . . If I shall be commanded I will (with God's help) most readily attend.

1639, April 17. London.—Sir Job Harbie to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

My humble suit is that your Honour will move His Majesty, whilst my Lord of Leicester is in Court, to ask his Lordship in what state he left the old business of the French Ambassador's debt due to myself and divers others of His Majesty's subjects at Constantinople. The French from whom the monies should come will find stops more than enow; and, which is worse, some of the creditors suppose that private respects hinder the general cause. Therefore they have written unto Sir P. Wyche to deliver up the original specialties to Sir Sackville Crow, to be by him sent into France unto the King's Minister's, when we are in hope to receive some satisfaction, especially if His Majesty will be graciously pleased to recommend it cordially to my Lord Ambassador, who hath already taken much pains therein.

1639, April 17. Newcastle.—John Gibbon to Sir John Coke. Asks six duplicates more of Commissions from the Lords of the Council for appointment of deputies for the supply of the forces under the Lord General, my Lord of Essex, in the North. My Lord of Newcastle desires you to grant him a warrant, that his packets may go post to London from Berwick.

1639, April 18. London.—Sir John Heydon to Sir J. Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary.

For my own particular who during the space of 7 months did continually solicit the timely nominating and instructing of the respective officers and members of that train of artillery, for the quickening whereof I adventured to acquaint and to move His Majesty therein . . . by no industry or mediation I could prevail therein; insomuch that even at the departure of the Master of the Ordnance [Lord Newport], for that and all things else I was referred to his Lordship's Secretary, who (of the whole train listed and settled under the hands of the Lords Committees) only delivered unto me a duplicate of the enclosed (13), as the only persons that he understood to be nominated and appointed by his Lordship before his departure. . . Mr. de la Maine and three other engineers are now at York. . . Mr. Rudd, by command of my Lords, is making an exact survey and estimate of the cost of repairing the fortifications at Portsmouth. Officers absent on divers special duties (Mr. Clerke, Mr. Sherburne, and Mr. Bassano). . . .Provisions for the train of Artillery long since issued. The Dutch Ambassador affirmeth that he will rather go out of the Kingdom than serve under the command of my Lord Newport. . . . For supplement we have not received any money. . . Long sithence all might have been duly performed, if the directions might have been seasonably received and the accustomed course of the office observed. I crave that your Honour will be pleased to signify His Majesty's further pleasure whether the magazine here shall be so far exhausted, and these parts so deprived of engineers, of gunners, and of other the necessary provisions and ministers, that no possibility shall be left, what occasion soever may happen, for the setting out of another train according to an order of the 26th of the last month: there being already sent to Hull and Newcastle a far greater proportion of munition and all other provisions belonging to a train of artillery than within the memory of any man belonging to this office was ever known to have been issued out of his magazine in the Tower. And whereas it was formerly doubtful whether the full number of able gunners and of other officers and ministers necessary for the northern train of artillery could be found in this kingdom, a second train for the 40 pieces of Ordnance, &c. this month shipped northward hath been drawn out of it; and a third since that to attend the Marquis Hamilton. And now by the direction of your Honour's letters all that are known to remain being called for to those parts, I cannot understand how it will be possible to provide for another train in those parts. The list of gunners hath hitherto been kept by my Lord of Newport's secretary only. Divers other particulars of late are appropriated and assumed to belong to the Master of the Ordnance only. . . . Those persons that by the said note and your Honour's letter are required to repair to Newcastle being gone, there will not remain here any engineer or proofmaster, few or rather no able gunners, and very few clerks or others to give any due despatch to His Majesty's services here.

Coke MSS.

Inclosed.—Two lists of names of officers, &c. of the Ordnance.

1639, April 22. Newcastle.—Henry, Lord Clifford, to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary.

This distressed gentleman, the Laird of Drum, would present his lamentable case to His Majesty, being spoiled by the Covenanters of all his goods upon their coming from Aberdeen. He will likewise inform you of the imprisonment of Marquis Huntley and his eldest son. The news are so ill, as with grief I present them to you.

1639, April 22. His Majesty's Castle of Carlisle.— Sir Francis Willoughby to Sir John Coke, at York.

Since I was called out of the Low Countries to attend His Majesty's service no more hath been my endeavour than truly and well to serve and most humbly to obey His Majesty's command. I am ready to lay down my life and fortunes at His Majesty's feet. I lost my company in the Low Countries, and my 25 years spent in that service without any recompence. After I had been Serjeant Major General of his Army, and a Colonel also, I was commanded into Ireland to receive a company of 50 men. Never man took more pains than my Lord Deputy to make them good and perfect men in the use of their arms. We, having made some wheelbarrows, have begun some necessary work for the safety and defence of His Majesty's Castle here. A Scotch gent gave me this day notice that there was come into Dumfries at several times 830 men. I hereupon thought fit to strengthen my watch 50 men more than ordinary, although I confidently believe they intend not to look this way.

1639, April 23. Netherby.—Sir Richard Graham (no address). (received at York 24th.)

My Lord Johnston, my Lord Dumlanerick hath taken in the Castle of the Sanquhar; their work was soon done, being none to defend the castle there was no blood shed. At Dumfries there met them the Laird of Applegarth, the Laird of Hempsfield, and the Laird of Lagg, some 16 or 17 score men in all; they expected 200 men to come out of the Highlands. On Thursday next they will muster all their forces at Gretna Kirk within a mile of my lands. I shall endeavour there to know their full strength, and presently wait on His Majesty and give an account.

1639, April 24. Carlisle.—Sir Patricius Curwen, Bart., to the Lord General of His Majesty's army.

Lord Barrymore's regiment not expected from Ireland for a month. 600 Scots men at Dumfries under Lord Kirkcudbright and 300 men at Annan under Lord Johnston with eight field pieces. The people in these parts are very hearty. I shall present to your consideration the nakedness of the sea coast about Workington: 100 good men could keep more from landing than the Scots could send over. Could find the men among his own tenants. Asks that Mayor of Newcastle may furnish pikes, muskets, powder, match and bullets.

1639, April 26. London. — William [Laud, Archbishop of] Canterbury, Thomas Lord Coventrye [Lord Keeper], William [Juxon, Bishop of] London, Henry [Montague, Earl of] Manchester, [Edward Sackville, Earl of] Dorset, [William Cecil, Earl of] Exeter, Francis, Lord Cottington, [Sir] Thomas Jermyn, [Edward Barrett, Lord] Newburgh, and [Secretary Sir] Francis Windebank, Lords of the Council, to Sir J. Coke.

Whereas the body of His Majesty's Council is now divided . . . we conceive it fit that there should be a strict correspondence and communication of affairs and occurrences, except such things as it shall please His Majesty to reserve from our knowledge . . . Things grow common and public here before we have knowledge of them . . . For want of timely advertisements oftentimes we cannot do that which in discharge of our duties we ought to do. We pray you to provide that the same may be hereafter redressed by your letters.

1639, April 27. London.—Francis, Lord Cottington. [No address.]

I have been very sick. You may imagine how busy I am in gathering money for His Majesty's supplies there, and truly I am in much hope that it will be done. The Lords of the Council do diligently meet thrice every week, and thanks be to God all things here are very well and quiet.

1639, April 30. Whitehall.—William (Laud, Archbishop of) Canterbury, Thomas (Lord) Coventrye Lord Keeper, William (Juxon, Bishop of) London, Henry (Montague, Earl of) Manchester, Algernon (Percy, Earl of) Northumberland, (Robert Sydney, Earl of) Leicester, Francis (Lord) Cottington, (Edward Barrett, Lord) Newburgh, (Sir) Thomas Jermyn, (Secretary Sir) Francis Windebank, Lords of the Council, to Sir J. Coke.

We have been made acquainted by the Recorder of the City of London with a reference made unto him by His Majesty, under the hand of Sir Ralph Freeman, Master of Requests, upon the petition of Richard Greenwood, a prisoner in Newgate, as also with the foul and manifold crimes of robbing on the highway, burglary, horse stealing and other felonies committed by the said Greenwood. [He was pardoned and again convicted of two highway robberies.] We have thought fit to present unto His Majesty our sense herein, and to move His Majesty that due exeution of justice may be done upon the person of the said Greenwood.

Coke MSS.

1639, April 30. Drury Lane.—Sir Francis Windebank, Joint Secretary of State. "For your Honour."

I received the papers of the examinations of the two Lords Saye and Brooke. I send account of the shipping monies for the last week; certificate of the Lords concerning the Corporation of the Brickmakers. . . . There is an Engineer, one Du Boys, for whose repair to the Court you gave order; he represented to the Board that being a stranger, and having here 20*s.* per diem for another employment, he thought it very hard to be taken from that and put upon another for which he should have but 6*s.* 8*d.* The Lords desire your further direction if there be necessity of his service.

1639, April —. Docket.

1. The Deanery of Durham for Walter Balconquall, D.D. (void by death of Dr. Hunt).

1639, May 2. London.—Thomas Withrings. "For your Honour."

I have spoken with Sir Robert Pye, who promiseth to procure the Warrant signed by my Lord Treasurer this week, and the next the money to be paid. . . . You will be pleased to let Mr. Weckerlin deliver this packet speedily to the Lord Chamberlain.

1639, May 2. York.—Dudley, Lord North, to Sir John Coke.

Hindered in my attendance on His Majesty by distemper and sickness, have given my Lord General intimation concerning my petition, and humbly beg his favour in assisting you to His Majesty to procure it favourably. My son very conformable and my brother largely obliged.

1639, May 4. York.—Sir Edward Osborne (Vice President of the Council of the North), W. Dalton, W. Wentworth and John Melton to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary.

We have received from the Aldermen and Recorder of the town of Richmond within the County of York the examinations here inclosed concerning one Henry Appleby . . . the matters confessed by him relate unto Scotland, and the brass coin which he made hath been uttered to a Covenanter. We desire you to give us your direction herein, that we may give order to the said Aldermen and Recorder for their proceeding.

1639, May 8. London.—Sir Miles Fleetwood to Sir John Coke.

Asks to be allowed to sue Mr. Sherbourne that is lately attained to be one of the officers of the ordnance.

1639, May 13. Drury Lane.—Sir Francis Windebank to Sir John Coke, at Newcastle.

Sir Thomas Rowe is apprehensive lest his treaty with the King of Denmark should not be complied with for want of money. The Lord Treasurer will endeavour all he possibly can to procure monies of the farmers of the Customs. On Thursday last I sent 200 proclamations more for Scotland of the effect of which we are here in great expectation.

[With this a draft of letter from Sir J. Coke.

His Majesty will go to Berwick next week. Precautions to be taken in retailing powder. Mr. Taylor to account for the King of Hungary and other Princes making use of his letter to His Majesty's dishonour for the treaty thereby set forward at Brussels. The French complain of impositions on strangers at Newfoundland.]

1639, May 13. Edinburgh.—Archibald Campbell, Earl of Argyll, to George, Earl of Kinnoul.

Although your Lordship has given over writing to your friends here, I cannot but let you know they are all, blessed be God, in good health, and are very great deal satisfied with my Lord Marquis in coming to determine some difficult questions which were among us before his coming; but now I hope whosoever has advised His Majesty to engage himself by degrees, as he has done, will be clearly seen traitors to King and country for their own private ends.

1639, May 13. — William Juxon, Bishop of London, (Lord Treasurer) [no address].

Sir John Monson, according to His Majesty's commandment, hath attended me with his particulars concerning the Law of Sewers . . . whether it be sufficiently drained cannot be judged of here, and the time of the judgment by the Commissioners being in February last was so dry a season that from thence I give myself no satisfaction. . . . I find an unusual clause that, if the land shall revert to his former nature, yet the undertaker shall lose but 2,000 acres of his proportion. But what I mainly except against is that in so great an undertaking His Majesty hath no part reserved. . . . Since this business hath gone thus far and in these ways, I cannot see any ground to make stay of it; . . . it agreeing not with my rules to let his Majesty's profit shock with his honour.

1639, May 15. London.—Sir William Howard [no address]. Received 20th at Newcastle.

The hearing of the cause between Mr. Bramston and Sir Baynam Frogmorton (Throgmorton) with his fellow farmers of the Forest of Dean is now well on . . . I know not what the issue will be . . . Our Counsel are of opinion that they will be deeply fined, and think they find more favour than they deserve if they keep their patent * You will be pleased, if the fine be considerable, to have that eye on it as that His Majesty may not grant it to any, but that Mr. Bramston may be thought on in the first place: whose charge hath been so great in the prosecution of it. His Grace of Canterbury has continued a constant friend to the business.

1639, May 15. Berwick.—Robert Bertie, Earl of Lindsey, to Sir John Coke.

(1.) 20 pieces of artillery brought to Berwick, 6 pieces were found in the town, 20 pieces will be brought from the Island. (2.) The soldiers work at the fortifications, and the outworks are followed with all speed. (3.) A place for a magazine is already set out. (4.) A good watch is kept. I will acquaint my Lord General and my Lord of Essex with all occurrents. I thank you for stopping the clamour of the Lincolnshire petitioners. I believe the offence of the soldiers was nothing so heinous as they would now make it. There came yesterday one Dr. Moseley, Vicar of Newark upon Trent, who hath been into Scotland out of his own charity, as he calleth it, to reconcile differences, and hath brought many letters from the Covenanters to divers Lords in England. I conceive him to be a Nonconformist. I have sent him and his papers sealed up.

1639, Mai 16–26. À Londres.—Sir Albert Joachimi à M.M. le Chevalier Coke, Conseiller et Premier Secrétaire des commandements du Sérénissime Roi de la Grande Bretagne, etc.

C'est ici la seconde fois que je vous envoie des lettres pour le Roi de mes Seigneurs les Etats Généraux des Provinces Unies des Pays Bas, une pour le Roi et une à Messieurs du Conseil de sa Majesté en Ecosse.

COKE MSS.

Il vous plaise de me faire savoir ce que mes dits seigneurs peuvent attendre des recrues mentionées en ici. L'armée se met en campagne. La garde de Monsieur le Prince d'Orange était partie de la Haye jeudi dernier.

Enclosure.—The following (a copy not signed):

1639, May 13. À la Haye. Au Roi de la Grande Bretagne.

Avons avec communication et délibération de son Altesse le Prince d'Orange ordonné aux hauts officiers des dits regiments Ecossais en notre service d'envoyer en votre royaume d'Ecosse leurs serjeants et autres officiers pour y faire recrues au renforcement des dits regiments. Nous doutons grandement que les troubles entre votre Majesté et ceux d'Ecosse pourraient donner quelque empêchement au transport des dites recrues; qu'il plaise selon sa bienveillance envers notre République, de donner des ordres à ceux qui commandent en vos flottes et armées navales qu'ils laissent passer librement les dits serjeants, &c. en notre service avec les dites recrues.

1639, May 18. Drury Lane.—Sir Francis Windebank, Principal Secretary, to Sir John Coke.

Have acquainted the French Ambassador with the complaints of the English merchants. The Scots by the ancient treaties between Scotland and France may challenge greater privileges than the English. I have received His Majesty's answer to the Lords concerning the business of the two Lords Saye and Brooke. I believe the Lord Deputy and Crosbie's cause will be sentenced next week. I beseech God the Scotch forces come not on too fast before His Majesty be in a readiness for them. According to your success there will be our condition here which I hope shall be glorious to His Majesty according to the justness of his cause.

1639, May 18. Twizel-on-Tweed.—Henry Rich, Earl of Holland, to Sir John Coke.

I am much satisfied with the wisdom of those answers given by His Majesty to the French Ambassador. There are some forces they say considerable close to the place where I am: the certainty I will know to-morrow.

1639, May 20. Durham House.—Thomas, Lord Coventry (Lord Keeper) to Sir John Coke.

Explains alterations he has made in Charter for Devizes, reducing limit of actions from £200 to £40, and removing clause excluding Justices of the Peace of Wiltshire from intermeddling in the Borough.

1639, May 20. London.—Edward Reed to Sir John Coke.

The wants of moneys begin to be very great, and with that the trading both at home and abroad declineth very fast, which in a very short time will decay many in this town if the troubles with Scotland should continue. Sir Greville Verney, being moved by the Alderman before me concerning his son, did acknowledge himself much bound to your Honour, and answered that as he would not have any part of the portion that his son should get, so he would not direct him in his choice, and his estate being in debt he could part but with little of his revenue. In your family a troublesome ague doth continue.

1639, May 20.—Dr. John Moseley, Vicar of Newark-upon-Trent. (See Earl of Lindsey's letter above.)

"Examination by the Lord Berkshire, Mr. Treasurer, and myself" (Sir J. Coke). Dr. Moseley's statement of discourses in Scotland with Earls of Argyll, Leslie, and other Covenanters.

1639, May 21. Manor, York.—Sir Edward Osborne to Sir John Coke.

By drawing of three entire regiments more out of this county both of the common and private men, and all the horse of the West and East Ridings, the Lord General would either forget the King's directions or not observe them. If almost all the gentry and justices of peace are likely to go, having some command in those regiments, one half of the county will be in a very weak condition both in defence and government. I beseech you prevent that the rest of our forces be sent for. Our poor county hath been at treble the charge of any other. I hear not of any considerable number of trained bands called out of any other county in England except Lincolnshire.

Draft of Sir John Coke's answer.—His Majesty's answer was that he left you 4,000, and that it was for your safety that those were called away. We hear this morning that General Leslie will have this week 18,000 foot and 2,000 horse near the borders.

1639, May 21. Dublin.—Viscount Wentworth to Sir John Coke.

"Duplicate of my despatch to Mr. Treasurer, for yourself alone." If all concurring means were obtained the sooner His Majesty did actively force those mutinous subjects to obedience it were the better: but I presume to say "Fight not with an imperfectly disciplined and knowing army." I do not see what can be done this summer against Argyle—perchance the next year he might be spoken withal to purpose. States employment of ships on Irish coasts. The "Dreadnought" an old ship. The "Swallow" in excellent trim, and Captain Ketelbie a man very careful and vigilant. In those things His Majesty shall find good to command my service, the sooner he honours me with his trusts the better I shall be able to serve him. I shall be most ready to keep and observe a correspondence with my Lord Marquis Hamilton as becomes the dignity of the person and the good of His Majesty's affairs. The insolence of those Covenanters is beyond all modesty or bounds. Their admitting of Popish Lords into their party will show what their religion is perchance to the holy brotherhood in England. And (if that for their hypocritical winking and wringing at their prayers God have not struck them stone blind) let them see that this is not a war of piety for Christ's sake but a war of liberty for their own unbridled inordinate lusts and ambitions, such as threw Lucifer forth of Heaven and may, without their repentance, bring these to shake hands with those gainsaying Spirits below.

1639, May 21. Berwick.—Robert Bertie, Earl of Lindsey, to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

I am informed that you liked well of the lodging that you had when you were last at Berwick; therefore I have caused the same to be reserved for you. Sir Robert Jackson, whom His Majesty hath made muster master of this garrison, is by me most willingly accepted, being a man who for his fidelity and integrity I do much approve of.

1639, May 22. Berwick.—Robert Bertie Earl of Lindsey to Sir John Coke.

I am obliged for despatch of my business at Court. I assure myself that there is no considerable number of the Covenanters within 8 or 10 miles.

Draft of Sir John Coke's reply:

This morning I received from His Majesty the list of the names of divers officers which came out of Germany to serve the Scots, but were taken by the Lord Marquis Hamilton and now pretend they will serve the King. Cause a safe guard to be set over them that they may not escape from Berwick. His Majesty this night will be at Alnwick and to-morrow at his quarter. I thank your Lordship for your favour in my lodging at Berwick. We hear that General Leslie will be this week near the borders with 18,000 foot and 2,000 horse, the truth whereof will be discovered by your Lordship.

COKE MSS.

1639, May 22.—Sir Patricius Curwen, Bart., and Nicholas Herbert of Ravinglass, owner of a barque.

Articles of agreement that Nicholas Herbert's barque with one sufficient master and other meet and able sailors will be attendant in the harbour of Whitehaven to carry the letters of His Majesty or the Council to the Lord Deputy at Dublin and shall receive 10*l.* per lunar month.

1639, May 22. Newcastle. — William Cavendish, Earl of Devonshire, to Thomas, Lord Cromwell; Sir Henry Willoughby and Sir John Curzon, Baronets; Sir Francis Coke, Sir Edward Vernon, Sir John Harpur, Sir John Fitzherbert of Norbury and Sir John Coke, Knights; Mr. John Manners and Mr. John Frecheville, Esquires, Deputy Lieutenants of the County of Derby.

Because the exercising of the soldiers hath been intermitted ever since the 22nd of March I thought fit to pray you to assemble all the forces of the county horse and foot trained and private together with those of the clergy, and immediately to cause them to be carefully exercised and trained; the need thereof being every day more apparent than other. For the times and places of these trainings I leave it to you. Only I desire you to be as many of you as is possible present at them, and to be very careful to see that all those that stand charged with horse send in their arms and horses complete and serviceable. I caused your indented Roll of the soldiers' names to be delivered in to the Council Board before my coming away from London.

1639, May 23. Manor, York.—Sir Edward Osborne to Sir John Coke [received at Berwick].

Asks explanation of His Majesty's letter respecting the Earl of Roxburgh's imprisonment, which was that he may write to his Lady, his son, and his tenants in Scotland, also that he may go to the Bath about ten miles distant; there is no Bath but the waters of Knaresborough. One Fox is here in gaol charged with words of a transcendent nature. I send the paper which Fox delivered us containing Shipton wives prophecy, to the end you may see what a ridiculous and senseless thing it is. One Telfate is committed to the Castle for scandalous words spoken against the Earl of Northumberland; asks directions. Proclamations for Wales should be sent to the Council for Wales.

Draft of Sir John Coke's reply from Berwick.

His Majesty has been pleased to set the Earl of Roxburgh at liberty. Fox and the other should be left to the ordinary course of justice. The Lord General hath given order for the advance of 500*l.* to Sir Ferdinand Fairfax and the rest of the Colonels at Newcastle. The Scottish army are in sight, but how strong we do not know, nor into what fortune we shall put ourselves to fight or to be safe.

1639, May 24, 12 o'clock at night. Manor, at York.—Sir Edward Osborne to Sir John Coke.

I have sent to Sir Ferdinand Fairfax, who is Colonel in his father's room, and intends to march away to-morrow if he can get his regiment together. Sir Thomas Metham asks some present pay or longer time for his moving to get money from the country for the regiment. I pray, Sir, get order for advance to them all.

1639, May 24. Drury Lane.—Sir Francis Windebank to Sir John Coke, at Berwick.

My Lords desire to know His Majesty's pleasure as to the oath by the Scottish nation in Ireland being tendered to those of that nation here. My Lord Treasurer and Lord Admiral inquire after a privy seal of 18,000*l.* for supplies to the Lord Marquis Hamilton. I desire the bill may be signed by His Majesty and returned to me. My Lord Archbishop of Canterbury and Lord Treasurer doubt not His Majesty will be pleased at the first motion to grant the petition of the Bishop of Ely in so just a cause. We have copies here of letters by some of the Lords of the Covenant to the Lord Marquis Hamilton to be presented to His Majesty, to which the Lords here give little credit. We have at last made an end of the Deputy and Crosbie's cause. Crosbie is fined 4,000*l.* to his Majesty, the Lord Esmond 3,000*l.*, Cheevers 1,000*l.*, and two others 500*l.* each, and among them all 5,000*l.* damages to the Lord Deputy. Archer and Fitzharris to be pilloried.

1639, May 28. London.—Jane Lady Wych to Sir John Coke.

Incloses a letter from her husband, by reason it hath received so large a cut at Venice. Thanks for many favours to him, in especial that done now lately at York. I beseech you he may not be suffered to receive so great a dishonour as his successor would put upon him there; but by your own goodness to keep him in the good opinion of His Majesty.

1639, May 29. London.—Francis, Lord Cottington, to Sir John Coke. [Received at 3 p.m. Berwick.]

I understand from Constantinople how Sir Sackville Crowe, out of pride and ignorance, labours to disgrace Sir Peter Weich (Wych), and not to acknowledge him for his fellow Ambassador, when the truth is he himself ought not to be so acknowledged until he hath had his audience and delivered his letters of credence. So without doubt he deserves a sharp reprehension for the scandal that may thereby arise amongst those barbarous people, to the disservice of His Majesty.

1639, May 30. Dublin.—Viscount Wentworth to Sir Henry Vane, Treasurer of the Household. [Received June 8 at Berwick.]

Recommends delay on the part of the King. Rather to lie still on the Border till towards the end of August, intrenching and exercising his army. It should be kept together in quarters of strength and safety. There is more need of a Fabius among us than of a Marcellus. It is quite a differing business in private councils to foresee, forecast the worst that an enemy can do: and lavishly loosely to ring it forth in the ears of an army; it being the wisdom of a general to apprehend an enemy himself rather stronger than weaker, yet so to govern himself to the soldier as he shall rather undermeasure than overmeasure an enemy. I am sorry of the doubtful opinion you have of Sir F. Willoughby, that he should be so ill accepted where he is will prove to be utterly mistaken. He writes of a young gentleman, Sir Nicholas Slaneing, having a hope to be Governor of Carlisle. Certainly if he be substituted His Majesty shall change for the worse and less capable of so important a charge. And for that Regiment from this side I wish his Majesty had no worse men in his Army. As for any party the Scottish rebels should have in England I do not fear it; when it comes to the point their boasts shall all vapour into smoke. His Majesty signified his desire to have the Earl of Antrim pass over into the Isles of Scotland: without money forth of England (for here is none) that matter must rest at least for this year. Sir Henry Bruce is to be despatched to the Earl to inform himself of the designs of His Lordship. That 1,000 of this army more are expected to be landed on the other side startled me much, as that which I dare not advise in any respect. There are 100,000 of the Scottish nation on this side—their inclinations may be with the Covenant—there ought a good hand to be held upon them. The province of Connaught is unsettled where he that loseth least is to have a full fourth of all his lands taken for the King. A great part of Munster is in the like condition. The beggarly desperate natives fell into a very wicked course of burning the Englishmen's houses this last winter in the Queen's (and) King's Counties, Carlow, Wicklow, and Wexford. I caused these villains to be so closely pursued as most of them have been taken and past the hand of justice. There are some 40 freebooters out in Donegal. These I fear not to fetch in shortly. The chief control we have over this great people of so tickle a condition is the countenance and opinion of this small army of 1,000 horse and 2,000 foot. With the assistance of the Army I shall be able to keep this Kingdom going on a right wheel, and that nothing shall stir against His Majesty but to their own ruin, and this I assume at the peril of my head: nay I will say more, to do it with the contentment of this subject, notwithstanding all these lions' and tigers' teeth some are delighted to paint me withal. Quo quid crudelius fictum, facilius creditur. I do not conceive 1,000 men taken from hence can procure His Majesty any considerable diversion of the Covenanters. I offer what I judge may be done. I will march this army to the North. The ships should be sent to Knockfergus, by which means I shall raise such a rattle as may occasion them to rest the less. I am confident by these false fires more to perplex and distract the Covenanters. Methinks it were good by quietness and show of treaty to amuse them and spin out this summer; so wasting them a petit feu and dissolving them through their own wants, distrusts, and discontentments amongst themselves. As for the officers taken coming forth of Germany, methinks there would some example be made of them that should depart so far from the duty of subjects as to leave their employments abroad to mutine their countrymen at home.

COKE MSS.

1639, May 31. Drury Lane.—Secretary Sir Francis Windebank. "For your Honour." (Received at Berwick 3 June.)

My last were of the 29th, with the Articles between His Majesty and the King of Denmark. The day before I sent you a note of the shipping business, and to know His Majesty's pleasure whether the ships of such Scotchmen in Ireland as have taken the oath there and have been arrested here shall be dismissed. There goeth herewith an account of John Taylor's negotiation at Vienna; likewise a letter from Sir Peter Wych. There goeth likewise a paper herewith brought by some Russia merchants, which they desire your Honour to consider, and to direct what shall be done upon their complaint.

1639, May —. Newcastle.—Sir John Coke to the Bishop of Durham. On a Paper (originally a cover, having on it For His Majesty's Special Affairs, The Right Honble. Sir John Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary of State to His Majesty and one of His Majesty's Privy Council, at the Court at Newcastle, Haste Haste Post [haste] with all speed. Fran: Windebank. London the ninth of May at twelve [ ]) is a rough draft by Sir J. Coke, endorsed by him "Copy to the Bishop of Duresme" (Durham).

His Majesty being informed both of your letter and the report inclosed, concerning the demolishing of the houses for the drawbridge at Newcastle, doth again clear his intention—that no more houses be pulled down than are necessary to be taken away for the building of the drawbridge in such sort as was agreed. And for particular designation of those houses Sir Jacob Astley is to come to Newcastle next week to call unto him the engineer and give such order therein as the work shall require. I thank your Lordship for your invitation to Auckland. Mr. Hodges is willing to help me to a chapman for my woods, and is desirous to see those particular notes which I left with your steward, who will be pleased to impart them to Mr. Hodges.

1639, June 2.—John Broughton to Sir John Coke.

As to proceedings by the Attorney-General relative to Dean Forest. The country prayeth for my Lord of Berkshire, and that he may have the Forest, if Sir John Wintour cannot perform his bargain.

1639, June 3. London. — William Ashwell to Sir John Coke. [Received at Berwick.]

I lately received a letter from a noble friend at Hamburg to furnish with money the King of Denmark's son: he came to town some days since, and is gone for the Bath with only 6 persons, one of great quality. They write his name Lord Hannibal Sehestett—the Prince his name is unknown. My servant brought Lord Hannibal Sehestett 200*l*. They desire to be unknown to any. I pray your Honour to keep it private but from his Majesty.

1639, June 6.—Duplicate letter to Sir Henry Vane, Treasurer of the Household, from Lord Wentworth (Deputy), and R. Dillon, W. Parsons, Gerrard Lowther, and Robert Meredith, Lords of the Council in Ireland, giving reasons why His Majesty's Pinnace should not go so far north as Skye; but lie upon the entrance of Dumbarton Firth, to hinder the Scottish shipping which lie at Ayr from trade and from making any attempt in this Kingdom.

1639, June 4. Drury Lane.—Secretary Sir Francis Windebank. "For your Honour." (Received June 8 at Berwick.)

Your letters of the 29th came slowly, and I received them not till the 2nd of June late at night. I shall acquaint the Lords with your advertisements and the proclamation that came with them. There hath been yet no meeting in Council since the Holy days, neither have I yet any certificate of the shipping monies for the last week.

1639, June 6.—Copy application of Rothes, Lothian, Lindsay, Louden, Douglas, Hume to Lords (of Council) in England to meet in some convenient place that matters may be accommodated to a fair and peaceable way: we desire nothing but the preservation of our religion and laws.

1639, June 6. London.—Algernon Percy, Earl of Northumberland, to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary of State. [Received 16th at Berwick.]

My Lord Chamberlain hath appointed your lodgings at Whitehall for me and hath designed those that were Sir Thomas Edmonds for you: some alterations I have caused to be made in those rooms, but cannot conveniently use them until your papers and trunks be removed out of the two studies. You shall oblige me by giving directions to somebody here to dispose of them.

1639, June 9.—The Information of Cuthbert Wilson of the City of Durham and the Examination of Thomas Dallison (Donalsond) a Scotchman dwelling in King Street, Westminster, (a carrier of letters between London and gentlemen and servants at the Court) taken before John Richardson, Esquire, one of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace and quorum in the County of Durham.

Dallison met two men near Durham who said, "Lashley (Leslie?) is a very politic fellow, and whatsoever he took in hand he would either do it or die, and that he would win Berwick in two hours: and that he and his Company were 100,000 strong: and that he and his army were in sight of the King's army."

1639, June 10.—Endorsed by Sir John Coke "Warrant for Hay." Charles R. Our will and pleasure is that out of such hay as you have provided for the use of our army and is now remaining with you from time to time you deliver as they shall have cause such convenient proportions of the same to our well beloved servants of the regiment of Horse for the safeguard of our person, at such moderate prices as the army hath it. Given at our pavilion in Hartley Field. To our well beloved servant John Pulford.

1639, June 10. Bishop Auckland.—Thomas Morton, Bishop of Durham, to Thomas, Earl of Arundel and Surrey, His Excellency, His Majesty's General of the Forces in the North, at the Camp.

Salutem in Christo Jesu. Upon the examination here inclosed concerning one Thomas Dallison, a Scottish man now in prison in Durham, who made himself suspicious both by his nation and by his superfluous talk, I thought it my duty to send unto your Excellency all the letters found about him in a bag; myself having read but one of the letters, which was directed to the house of one Blackstone in Newcastle, who is known to be a refractory man. I am desirous to know what is to be done with Dallison after the perusal of the letters by your Excellency.

1639, June 10. Whitborne Court.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford, to Secretary Sir John Coke. (Received at Berwick.) (Endorsed "for Mr. Mease.")

What this petitioner requires his letter tells you; what motion may incite you to hearken to it yourself best knows, who better than I know the man. Yet I may add this, that since I came into these parts, where I found him, I find also his worth for learning above the best, and his carriage for life not behind any. The place is very opportune for him; and the more by reason of an honest and able man seated by that noble and worthy Lord Craven within one mile distance, his neighbour, one Mr. Atkinson, whom also to bring into and settle in that place my endeavour and service hath not been wanting. Mr. Broughton, your humble servant, dined with me this day, and prays for you and yours daily.

1639, June 11. Drury Lane.—Sir Francis Windebank to Sir John Coke.

Certificate of Shipping monies. Oath tendered to Scottish nation here. Many have taken it. Have received the King of Denmark's business under the great seal. Sir Thomas Rowe's Secretary will be gone to-morrow. Mr. Angier's letter first advertisement from France of the disaster at Thionville. I doubt not you had the full cry of it from Brussels. With the Lord Scudamore's demands the Lord Treasurer will not meddle until the Secretary have allowed them.

1639, June 14. Manor at York.—Sir Edward Osborne to Sir John Coke, at the Camp.

Sir George Radcliffe is gone for Ireland. Report here that a meeting was to be held at the Lord General's tent on Tuesday last between some Commissioners from the Covenanters and some from His Majesty. I beseech God give it success; be pleased to afford me a line. I have a great desire to wait upon His Majesty at his Camp, and to see the army, if it please you to obtain leave for me.

1639, June 18. London House.—William Juxon, Bishop of London, Lord Treasurer, and Francis Lord Cottington to Sir John Coke.

As to farmers of Dean Forest, the proofs against them fall very many to be short, and those that remain not very considerable. It might best stand with his Majesty's honour to decline the suit. . . . . His Majesty's directions touching the payment of the Pensioners 3,000*l.* shall be observed. The Earl of Salisbury, their captain, may let them know, to the end they may appoint their paymaster.

1639, June 18.—Sir John Bankes (Attorney-General). No address. Respecting Dean Forest.

1639, June 19. The Castle, Dublin.—Viscount Wentworth and the Council in Ireland to Sir Henry Vane, Treasurer.

Sir Henry Bruce declared to us that he finds the Earl of Antrim not furnished with men or officers to conduct his design upon the Earl of Argyle's country. There is no benefit in taking in Cantyre. That all the Isles are not so valuable as the charge the King should undergo in gaining them. We then called unto us the Earl himself. He said the ways and grounds of the business are more than he knows himself—that if the Deputy would grant him a commission he would prepare for the service. His Majesty hath supplied Sir Donell Macdonell with 1,000 arms and a ship. Letters from Sir Henry Vane of June 10 he showed to the Deputy, but others of later date he showed not. He said he knew not anything to be communicated to me, the Deputy, but the calling for his Commission. The Earl's countenance, gestures, and speeches at that time expressed too much disregard of that authority with which we sat in Council. We, His Majesty's Ministers entrusted by him in this place, should thoroughly know and understand the designs to be here undertaken. Signatures (copied)—Wentworth; Ormond Oss.; R. Ranelagh; R. Dillon; Wm. St. Leger; Ad. Loftus; Ph. Mainwaring; Cha. Coote; George Radcliffe; Rob. Meredith.

1639, June 19. My Lodging against the Burse (London).—George, Viscount Chaworth, to Sir John Coke.

In case His Majesty have employment extraordinary, on the occasion of my Lord Marshal's employment or for that of the Ambassador of Poland or any other that may happen, your Honour will be pleased to propound me. You did never confer a favour on any man that did more liberally gratify you than I will do, and could I aim at the thing I would name the sum for your assurance, so much do I hate idleness and such is my desire to be in His Majesty's service.

1639, June 23. Castle of Carlisle.—Henry, Lord Clifford, to Sir John Coke, at Court.

Lord Barrymore landed yesterday at Whitehaven with his whole regiment, from whence packets for his stay in Ireland cannot get forth by reason of the wind. I have despatched Sir Patricius Curwen towards him. I am in perplexity in the behalf of this noble gentleman, whom I hear it hath cost at the least 6,000*l.* in raising this regiment: therefore I adventure to stay two days longer here, hoping to receive further directions from my Lord General and your Honour.

OKE MSS.

1639, June 29. Berwick.—Copy of the Lords letter about oats and beans. Owing to their badness, payment of warrants to be stayed.
(Signed) Hamilton, Lindsay, Arundell and Surrey, H. Vane, J. Coke.

1639, June. Berwick.—On a Paper (originally a cover having on it. For His Majesty's affairs, To the Right Honourable Sir John Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary of State and of His Majesty's most honourable Privy Council, these B. Gerbier) are rough drafts by Sir John Coke, endorsed by him "Copies from Berwick."

1. Sir J. Coke to the Earl of Northumberland.

I received your letter of the 6th June here at Berwick the 17th of the same. The books and papers which your Lordship desireth to be presently removed out of my chamber are His Majesty's letters, treaties, negotiations with foreign Princes and States, which are in my charge, and are of that weight that I neither dare nor can put them into any other hands. And when the Lord Chamberlain spake with me to accommodate your Lordship with my lodging in Whitehall till we should return to London, he neither thought it safe nor fit to remove these papers in my absence, nor assigned to me any other chamber where I might place myself and them. I know your Lordship's wisdom and moderation, and therefore cannot doubt you will excuse me in this sudden remove of these things, which so much concern His Majesty and may endanger both my place and my estate. When I shall have the happiness to wait upon you at London I shall be ready to comply with such directions as shall be given. The trunks, baskets, and presses full of papers, if your Lordship shall but look in at the window, you will see so many and so mingled that the sorting and removing cannot be done in my absence nor in a short time.

2. Sir John Coke to the Lords of the Council.

Having acquainted His Majesty with the inclosed letter from the Lord Deputy and Council in Ireland, it pleased him to give order that Sir Edward Loftus should be required to be conformable to the justice of that state; and His Majesty hath commanded me to signify to your Lordships that you may send for him to the Board, and there lay upon him the command of His Majesty and the Board.

(1639, June).—Two rough drafts by Sir J. Coke, endorsed by him "Letters for Spencer."

1. To the Lord Clifford, Lord Lieutenant of Cumberland.

The bearer hereof, John Spencer, a gunner of the Tower, hath by His Majesty's commandment been sent to Carlisle to take survey and account of the ordnance and munition which remain in that town or castle or near thereabout. The particulars found by him are contained in the note here inclosed, which His Majesty saw at Berwick, and thereupon commanded me to write to your Lordship to give speedy order that all the pieces contained in the note, and all the serviceable shot mortars and other munition, should be sent with speed to Newcastle upon Tyne by the fittest means under the conduct of the said gunner; who hath also order to see them shipped from Newcastle and sent thence to the Tower, there to be disposed as His Majesty shall think fit. And because I understand that some of the pieces contained in this note are in the custody of Sir George Dawson, Knight, I have also written to him to give his best furtherance in sending the same hither. And whereas the gunner informeth that there are divers shod carriages and other timbers and particulars, such thereof as your Lordship shall find serviceable and worth the sending up it may please [you] to take order for their transportation with the ordnance.

2. To Sir George Dawson.

By His Majesty's express commandment this bearer, John Spencer, a gunner of the Tower, is sent to Carlisle for all such ordnance and munition as is there found or in the places forts or castle in those parts. To which end I have written to the Lord Lieutenant the Lord Clifford, to take present care for transportation of the same to Newcastle. And because His Majesty is informed that some of the particulars are in your custody, he hath also commanded me to write unto yourself, and to will you to deliver the same to be so transported, and to give your best assistance for performance of this service.

Also a rough draft by Sir J. Coke (on No. 1).

3. No address. [To the Commandant at Berwick.]

My son by mischance brake one of the guards of the hilt of his rapier, and, as we passed by Berwick for Scotland, left it in the custody of Mr. Shels wife where we lodged, and forgot to call for it at our late coming from thence. The favour I now desire of you in his behalf is [that it may be delivered at my house in Garlick Hithe near Bow Lane in London]. I doubt not but Mr. Major [Mayor] hath acquainted you with the warrant I have given him, by the King's commandment, to send to the officers of the Ordnance both all those brass pieces which were lately brought from Norham and Wark, and also those ten brass pieces which are upon the walls at Berwick; and in place thereof to put the iron ordnance which came from the said castles. For those things which concern the town I will not fail to move His Majesty and the Board so soon as I return to London, and hope to effect something for the good of that place, which I assure you His Majesty doth respect very much.

1639, July 3. Auckland.—Thomas Morton, Bishop of Durham, to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

Salutem in Christo Jesu. His Majesty hath been pleased to command the pulling down the houses of Newcastle bridge belonging to the Bishop of Durham. The benefit which now accrueth to the Bishops by their rents is not worth the naming, but the case of the tenants themselves is most commiserable. I doubt not upon the perusal of the paper inclosed they shall find your honourable favour for some relief. . . I have written to put your Honour in mind of a promise to visit Auckland at your return southward.

1639, July 3. Sir John Coke to Secretary Sir Francis Windebank. (Draft.)

Of five letters mentioned by you only two have come to my hands. Your packet was found opened, and as it seemeth some letters taken out. The abuse is notorious and will deserve punishment. Mr. Withrings will use his best diligence to discover the offenders. We have but a small Court of English here, and for aught I know there will be none of our rank but Mr. Treasurer and myself to follow His Majesty into Scotland.

1639, July 3. Manor at York.—Sir Edward Osborne to Sir John Coke at Berwick.

This day I received a packet with your indorsement for discharge of the coaches by me appointed to attend His Majesty at several stages to-morrow. The noblemen and gentlemen whose coaches were sent to the stages have been put to needless trouble and charge by this delay.

OKE MSS.

Seeing that the troubles are in a fair way of accommodation, and that His Majesty intends not to pass southwards till after the end of August, I beseech you ask him leave for my going to attend my Lord Deputy in Ireland this summer. We have a rumour His Majesty intends to send for the Queen to York, which I should be glad to know in due time, because of my removal and providing another place for my family.

1639, July 6. Drury Lane.—Secretary Sir Francis Windebank. "For your honour." (Received 9th at Berwick.)

My last were of the 2nd, with a note of the shipping moneys for the last week. These that go herewith I received lately from Sir Art. Hopton . . . We are in great quietness here, and the Queen will be here this night from Oatlands. Other news there is none, and we wish we may receive no worse from your parts.

1639, July 9. Drury Lane.—Secretary Sir Francis Windebank. "For your honour." (Received 13th morning, Berwick.)

Yours of the 2nd came not to my hands until the 7th, by which I find your complaints concerning the negligences of the Postmasters too clearly justified. His Majesty doth likewise complain. I hope Withrings will make strict enquiry where the failing was, and cause it to be severely punished. I find that all gentlemen that come from your parts use more diligence than the posts, which is a great shame, seeing the King's packets should run day and night. I send a certificate of the shipping moneys for the last week; and desire that the inclosed to the Bishop of Rosse may be delivered by one of your servants. I am very sorry to understand your business in Scotland are so feverish, and wish them more settled, and yourself a safe return.

1639, July 9. London.—Robert Blake, "For your honour." [Received at Berwick.]

My Lord Chamberlain and Sir W. Russell have written your Honour at large of the solidity of my proposition. Inconvenience may arise if the ancient traders to Barbary be not hindered from their rash proceedings. Asks that Mr. Poole may come up with all possible speed to see things settled, that however it should please God to dispose of me, the benefit of His design may accrue to those for whom it is ordained.

1639, July 11.—Sir Francis Wiatt to Mr. Weckherlin, Secretary to Mr. Secretary Coke at the Court.

My suit is that my instructions may be signed by His Majesty and returned to me; being on the point of beginning my voyage I have deposited with Mr. Lucas six pieces for Mr. Secretary and four for yourself, which I desire you to accept. Pray be pleased to direct them to me at Mr. Mordaunt's house at the sign of the Golden Gridiron by the May Pole in the Strand.

1639, July 11.—Sir Francis Wiatt (Governor of Virginia) to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

I present my instructions, having passed the examination of the Sub-Commissioners for Foreign Plantations . . . together with the names of such persons as their Lordships approve of as fit to be of the Council in Virginia. . . . For the place of Muster Master Captain John West (a gentleman of noble quality) is an humble suitor to His Majesty, who being reccommended by my Lord of Holland I presume not to add anything in his behalf. I am now ready for my voyage, which His Majesty's service with the time of year call upon me to hasten.

Within.—Draft by Sir J. Coke of his answer of 22nd.

I now send you back your instructions signed by His Majesty, with the name of Captain John West inserted for your Muster master in His Majesty's own handwriting. . . . In wishing you a prosperous voyage with honour and contentment in your employment, I commend you to God's protection.

1639, July 11.—Robert Bertie, Earl of Lindsey. [No address.]
Forasmuch as Francis Barty, Esquire, hath since the first entrance of my regiment into Berwick till the dissolution thereof executed the same office and charges which Captain Mustian performed under my Lord of Essex before my coming hither. These are therefore to will and require you that you reckon with him for the time he hath served, and that you make payment unto him according to the rate heretofore allowed by my Lord of Essex to him who then supplied that place.

1639, July 13. Carlisle Castle.—Sir Francis Willoughby to Sir John Coke at Berwick.
Lord Barrymore arrived last night. Money wanting to finish the work about this Castle. Mr. Walter Montague came the last night, having been to see the Duchess of Buckingham at Carrickfergus; he says all things is quiet in Ireland.
Draft of Sir J. Coke's reply.
200*l.* is sent by Sir F. Howard and six gunners. Order sent to London to remove the Gaol from the Castle. Sir E. Osborne has leave to transport himself into Ireland to the Lord Deputy.

1639, July 14. Manor at York.—Sir Edward Osborne to Sir John Coke, Knight, His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State.
Having special occasion to wait upon my Lord Deputy this summer, and indeed being invited to that journey by his Lordship's commands, I made bold to write unto you about ten days since to desire you would be pleased to procure leave for me from His Majesty, but hearing nothing from you of the receipt of my letter, Sir, I presume now again to entreat this favour.

1639, July 15. Cologne.—Bilderbeeke to Le Chevalier Gerbier, Résident pour les Affaires de Sa Majesté de la Grande Bretagne à Bruxelles.
(In French.) Movements of Banier (Swedish General) towards Prague. In Pomerania an army is being formed to support him. M. d'Avoux, French Ambassador at Hamburg, and Marshal Ranzow are arranging new levies. The Duke of Bavaria will pass the Rhine into Alsace against Duke Bernard. The Bishop of Bois-le-Duc is here, alleging that he waits for Deputies from the States. Of the Prince Robert (Rupert) I learn nothing. His exchange for the Prince Casimir of Poland is spoken of.

1639, July 16. Drury Lane.—Secretary Sir Francis Windebanke. "For your Honour." (Received Berwick 19th.)
I have received yours of the 12th. I send the certificate for the shipping business for the last week, being sorry the moneys this year come in so slowly, the year being near expired and but half of the moneys collected. My Lords have used their uttermost care in advancing the business, but the disaffection of the chief movers in it is much beyond those of former times. I pray God send us good news of the success of the Scottish Lordships being with his Majesty.

1639, July 17. Whitehaven.—Sir Patricius Curwen and Sir George Dalston to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State. (Endorsed by Sir J. Coke "That the Irish may land in the north of Ireland, this country being exhausted.")

COKE MSS.

Whereas we have received a commission from His Majesty concerning the re-embarking of my Lord Barrymore his regiment. . . The whole regiment was drawn within few hours march unto the port of Whitehaven, being in all readiness to make use of the first opportunity of wind and tide; but since the winds continue contrary. The country being so quite exhausted of all manner of provision for their further supply, having been here since the 22nd of June, we shall desire your Honour that, if they shall land in the North of Ireland, in regard they have then a great distance to travel to their own countries they may have a pass. . . The most of them, especially the commanders, are very civil men and most willing and able in His Majesty's service.

1639, July 19. Westminster.—Sir Richard Cave to Sir John Coke.

The Queen of Bohemia and Prince Elector have sent letters desiring the King's favour for the Prince Rupert to be exchanged for Prince Casimir; the Earl of Leicester to move the French King to continue his favour as he hath promised, and to make known to his Ambassadors that he means not to set Prince Casimir free except Prince Rupert were set at liberty at the same time. Having this morning received a fresh letter from the Queen of Bohemia, I pray His Majesty may be moved that in the absence of my Lord Leicester you may write to Monsr. Augier.

1639, July 20. London.—Thomas, Viscount Somersett, to Sir J. Coke, one of the Principal Secretaries of State.

I cannot but presume so much on your goodness and patience as to acknowledge with humble thanks your noble and favourable letter by the Lord Roche his servant from York, and in his Lordship's behalf give your Honour many thanks for your favourable despatch to the Lord Deputy of Ireland for his Lordship; who still attends your safe and happy return, until when there will be little hopes of any further declaration concerning his Lordship's humble but just suit unto His Sacred Majesty, in which myself and wife do wholly confide in your Honour's noble and lawful favour.

1639, July 23. Drury Lane.—Sir Francis Windebank to Sir John Coke, at Berwick.

Sir Henry Hungate's business of Welsh butter. Papers relating to the order made two months ago for the apprehension of Sir Edward Loftus and his being sent into Ireland are wanting. Sends a note of the shipping business, which advances slowly this year. A letter in French exhibiting a complaint to be transmitted to His Majesty. My Lords are very sensible of the insolency. I am to inform Gerbier of it at Brussels, who is to demand speedy reparation as well to His Majesty for the affront offered in his port as to the Hollanders that were under his protection.

1639, July 28. Carlisle.—Sir Francis Willoughby to Sir John Coke.

Lord Barrymore with Sir Patricius Curwen is at Workington, and his regiment ready to embark when the wind is fair. Moneys promised to complete the works at this citadel not come: delay will cause what might be done for 6*d.* to cost 1*s.* 6*d.* In the time of my sickness two Welshmen went out to fight close by the town—one was killed the other much hurt—he is committed but I have no authority. I send my Commission and desire to know whether I may deal with it. I have spent 40 years in the service of His Majesty and of the Low Countries. I have observed that to keep great garrisons in the best obedience the proper course is to pay them well and to punish their misdemeanours.

1639, July 29.—William Juxon, Bishop of London, Lord Treasurer, to Sir J. Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary of State. (Received at Berwick.)

Concerning the establishment for the garrison at Berwick, their Lordships have referred over the business again to the Lord Cottington and myself, who having sent moneys for the immediate pay thereof intend to defer the settlement until His Majesty's return as you writ. Concerning the Gunners of Carlisle a warrant shall be immediately despatched to the Receiver for making stay of their pay, and Mr. Attorney shall be consulted how to question them for their wages received. The business of the shipping the Lords have quickened the sheriffs in: and I shall observe what operation those directions have.

1639, July 29.—Francis, Lord Willoughby of Parham to Jervase Knight, Underkeeper of Walthamstow Walk in the Forest of Essex.

These are to will and require you to kill a fat stag of this season within your charge, and deliver the same to the bearer hereof for the use of Sir John Coke, Knight, His Majesty's Principal Secretary, and this shall be your warrant for the same.

1639, August 8. Westminster.—R. Weckherlin to Sir John Coke.

The King arrived at Theobalds on the 1st. On 2nd went to London in the Queen Mother's coach. Bonfires everywhere. Present from the City of London to the King of 10,000 pounds refused by him. The most gracious inclination of Her Majesty towards the Archbishop is so increased that a most frequent correspondence and conference hath been observed betwixt them, and is not secretly spoken of. When the first news of the blessed peace was brought hither they both were seen equally affected at it. Lord Torquaire is his Majesty's Commissioner for the Assembly. Some will assure me that the Lord Marquis (Hamilton) is to go Commissioner for the Parliament. The Earl of Holland, the Lord Goring, and particularly the Lord Chamberlain, besides many knights and gentlemen entreat your speedy return. As to the order for sending Sir Edward Loftus over to Ireland, Mr. Raylton fears there is not plain dealing in the matter. Many of your friends and the most honestest men here assure that ill offices were done against your Honour. The Earl of Berkshire putteth me in hope that these blemishes are vanished. His Majesty's stuff is not yet returned; he dines and sups with the Queen. Your Honour's stuff is not heard of; but there are two ships from Berwick at Gravesend which perhaps bring your men and stuff. I have spoken with the Earl of Northumberland; he did not mention your chamber; I hope his lordship may be provided elsewhere. His Majesty goes to Oatlands. I intend according to the Earl of Holland's will to follow his Majesty, and will for so small a journey use your bay horse. We did daily bait your horses so well on our way that they were fresher at their journey's end here than when they came out of Melbourne. Foreign news. Cardinal de Richelieu troubled by his wonted hemorrhoids. De Chastillon besieges Montmedy. Meilleray hath taken four forts near Gravelines and St. Omer. Gallas is sent for to Vienna and Hatzfeld to be sole General.

1639, August 12. Garlick Hill.—Richard Poole to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

COKE MSS.

On Tuesday after our departure from Melbourne we got home and found all your family at Tottenham in good health. Your goods are arrived from Berwick, but no room can as yet be gotten at Whitehall to put them in. The Lord Ancram's lodgings are appointed for you. Mr. Weckherlin is now in the Forest with his family.

1639, August 13. London.—W. Raylton to Sir John Coke.

My Lord (Deputy) sent over a gentleman who had met his Majesty at Doncaster to show how the Lord Chancellor (Loftus) had misinformed his Majesty. My Lady Moore's messenger who calls himself Sergeant-Major Bridiman arrived in Ireland using His Majesty's name and got access to the Lord Chancellor (who was in restraint) before he had warrant and justified his actions. Your Honour's stuff is arrived here at London, but before it came your lodgings were appointed for my Lord Admiral Mr. Millington is labouring to get others.

1639, August 15. Westminster.—R. Weckherlin to Sir John Coke.

The declaration made by the Covenanters about which there was dispute at Berwick being at the representation of His Majesty declared false by those of the Lords of the Council here that were in the camp and assisted the treaty of pacification, the paper hath been condemned to be by the Hangman publicly burnt. His Majesty spent Sunday about Sir —— Thynne's testament: nothing was concluded contrary to the testament. His Majesty has declared his dispensation to the Lords to meet but on Sundays until Michaelmas. Your Honour's presence is much desired by the Earl of Holland, whom I see daily as also His Majesty. The cause of His Majesty staying was a long bred discontent in the Earl of Newcastle's breast which seemed would fain be broken out into a quarrel and duel with the Earl of Holland. The Earl of Newcastle came himself to my Lord of Holland's chamber and so received and gave all satisfaction. His Majesty did renew and confirm their accommodation. The Earl of Holland had for seconds Sir Edmund Verney and Mr. Mountagu. The Elector Palatine is here at leisure to wait on the Queen the Queen Mother and the Duchess of Chevreuse. He had twenty dishes a meal (being served in pewter) which have now been reducted to twelve. The Lord Feilding is indeed married with Dr. Lamb's daughter. Your servants Mr. Millington and Nathanael with the stuff arrived on Monday, the goods are laid up in a corner at Whitehall till we can get the Earl of Ancram's chamber, which I hope you will like better than the other. While his Majesty lieth here he observeth his former fashion in hunting diebus alternis.

1639, August 16.—La Warr to Sir J. Coke, Secretary of State. (Endorsed by Sir J. Coke "Lady De la Warr, received at Berwick 25th July.")

I presume to convey this petition desiring you to prefer it to His Majesty. I know your nobleness needs no solicitor to obtain a courtesy from you. I beseech you to present with it this reference which, being according to the measure of His Majesty's former grant, I hope not unlike to be allowed. I shall receive the more advantage if I may obtain a benefit in the manner I crave it from you. I shall upon the return of the petition show myself thankful for the same.

1639, August 16. Durham Castle.—Thomas Morton, Bishop of Durham, to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary.

Report upon a reference relative to sale of tobacco in alleged infringement of patent rights of Thomas Tunstall, Alderman of Durham.

1639, August 18. Carlisle.—Sir Francis Willoughby to Sir John Coke. [No address.] COKE MSS.

The Judges of Assize have been here unto whom I made known the offences of the two soldiers of ours in prison: the business rests as it did, the soldiers lie still in prison; and if we return into Ireland this winter, they must be left behind us and exposed to another full year's imprisonment, the Assizes being held here but once a year. I am daily in hand with the works of His Majesty's Castle, and if the weather will suffer me I hope in a short time to perfect what is amiss in that place. These parts afford no news since your departure from hence.

1639, August 19. Westminster.—R. Weckherlin to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

Yesterday the King sat awhile in Council, the account of the ship monies looked over and found it comes in reasonably well. The young Prince Radzivil took leave of his Majesty last evening. This morning the King is hunting. He hath thrice assured the Earl of Holland and the Gentlemen Ushers he would have your Honour in the Earl of Ancram's chamber, and the Earl should and would give them up. Perhaps I shall have occasion to understand His Majesty's mind thereof at Oatlands. I know not in what terms to express sufficiently how much your Honour's return is desired and without doubt very necessary and requisite, though I forbear to write the causes. Sometimes accidit in puncto quod non speratur in anno. The Lord Feilding, Sir William Boswell, and Sir Oliver Fleming wish all to see your Honour here to receive their instructions renewed from you before their going over.

1639, August 19.—Timothy Pusey (of Selston) to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

Asks for the bearer, Mr. James Collier, a gentleman and kinsman of Mr. Pusey's wife, being Postmaster at Stone in Staffordshire, the usual allowances and privileges.

1639, August 25. Whitehall.—R. Weckherlin to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

Tuesday I went following His Majesty to Oatlands in a continual rain so that nobody except His Majesty and such as prefer hunting to all other recreations did like that journey and abode. And though we did no great business for I wrote but two or three French letters of recommendation from and for His Majesty to the Prince of Orange yet I understood that His Majesty will still be waited on were it but for the foreign news and for pens and paper whereof he twice did make some use to write as I suppose to the Queen of Bohemia, both the Duke Radzivil and the young Marquis de la Vieuville being gone to Holland. Mr. Millington doth utterly oppose and reject to accept of the Earl of Ancram's lodging pretending it is too little for your use and especially for your table and diet: yet can I not see how to mend it, and do conceive that it is far better and more convenient for your going to His Majesty than that of Sir Thomas Edmonds. Tomorrow his Majesty shall go early from hence, his dinner being appointed at eight in the morning at Egham, and so thence to Bagshot. I will follow and wait close, God willing, though I find myself sometimes much wearied. I shall now from Bagshot have occasion to see my wife and family sometimes, they being but three small miles from thence at Easthampstead. In my last I told your Honour of the Lord Deputy's coming over to be Lord Treasurer here. The Elector Palatine hath sent into Scotland such a man as will not be welcome, nor willingly heard, being Colonel Henderson. The French Ambassador (protesting that he heartily wisheth that House's restitution) tells me he perceiveth the Prince to do as if he would not have his affairs well done. He, my Lord Keeper, Mr. Attorney, my Lord Cottington, and particularly the Earl of Holland, and Lord Goring remember their love and service to your Honour. I am in good hope shortly to fit my Lady Coke with some good German servant for her son. The Pope's Legate hath this day had audience of the Queen.

1639, August 26. Burton.—Sir John Monson to Sir John Coke, Knight, Chief Secretary to His Majesty.

I humbly beseech you to obtain the King's signature to a Privy Seal for making His Majesty's assent to my Law of Sewers a record in Chancery, and to a Warrant to remain with the Attorney-General. The bearer will wait upon for it with my acknowledgment.

1639, September 4. Whitehall.—R. Weckherlin to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary of State, at Tottenham. [Received at Melbourne, September 6.]

Your Honour's return is so much desired and expected that His Majesty doth now daily inquire after your coming, and hath again this morning commanded me to desire you from him to come unto him from Tottenham hither as soon as possibly you can, and shall be arrived there. Sir Oliver Fleming is to go away with speed, and his instructions are drawing by Sir Frances Windebank, but I believe it is desired that your Honour should add ultimam manum. I hourly will expect your coming.

1639, September 7. Rectory of Culmington.—Peter Mease. [No address.]

If your Honour would speak unto the Prince Elector for his good work in the business it would certainly be transacted. Also to obtain from Lord Craven to have the chief regard of me for presentation to Onibury. The incumbent will not outlive the autumn.

1639, September 9. Carlisle.—Sir Francis Willoughby to Sir John Coke. [No address.]

It is here reported for certain my Lord Deputy is sent for over, and will be at Court within ten days. Your Honour will be pleased to speak with him concerning our going or staying here. I made known unto your Honour that I had money to pay my regiment to the last of October. I most humbly desire that some course may be settled before that time, and accordingly for our payment, whereby our men may be kept in order as they have been hitherto. I desire your Honour also to advise with my Lord what shall be done with the two soldiers that are in apprehension for killing their fellows. I am daily busy in finishing the works in the castle. As soon as they are done I will send a model of it to your Honour. From Scotland I hear nothing, but all is quiet and like to be so.

1639, September 11. Edinburgh.—John Erskine, Earl of Mar, to Mr. Secretary Coke, Principal Secretary of England.

I must still entreat the continuance of your favour, seeing I know the plantation of Connaught will now be determined and the several distribution of the proportions. I beseech you recommend it to His Majesty, that I may have a large proportion; I will remit absolute credit to this noble gentleman, Sir Wm. Stewart, whatever he shall promise in my name I will make it good. I have writ to my Lord Duke of Lennox to deal with His Majesty in my favour who will concur with you to His Majesty.

1639, September 19.—Endorsed by Sir J. Coke "King of Denmark to me." "Copy of the King of Denmark's letter sent me with the inclosed to His Majesty."

Christianus Dei gratiâ Daniæ Norvegiæ Vandalorum Gothorumque Rex, Dux Slesvici Holsatiæ Stormariæ et Ditmarsiae, Comes in Oldenburg et Delmenhorst, etc. Multa nos impediunt quominus jam in Angliam mittere et cum serenissimo Rege vestro super negotio Palatino per internuncium communicare possimus. Itaque per literas id facere. . . consultius nobis visum est. Quid iis contineatur apographa illis juncta vos perdocebunt. Vobis gratiam nostram regiam benignè deferimus. Gluckstadii.

Endorsed (apparently by the King). "1. Granted. 2. When things shall be adjusted betwixt us. 3. To trust his choice, Hamburgh or any other. 4. A General Peace and Restitution of my nephew. 5. With this to be satisfied."

1639, September 23. Yarmouth.—Thomas Meadow and Thomas Manthorpe, Bailiffs, to Sir J. Coke, one of the Principal Secretaries of State.

Upon the 19th, by reason of great distress and foul weather here arrived in this haven a hoy called the Fortune of Margate in Kent, with about 250 Spaniards brought from the Downs taken out of a ship called the Royal Exchange of London, which ship John Brearcliffe is purser thereof (and as he saith ordered to go with the said Spaniards to Dunkirk), brought about 450 Spaniards from the Groyne. The hoymaster concealing the certainty either of the number of men, arms, freight and other particulars, which the purser revealed unto us; and for so much as it is suspected the infection to be amongst them, and in consideration of divers other evil consequences that might ensue, we have caused the said hoy to be ordered that not any of the said Spaniards may come ashore, and the said purser doth affirm unto us with the first fair wind to depart for Dunkirk.

1639, October 8. Docket.

1. Discharge to William Railton, agent to the Lord Deputy, for 360*l.* paid for two loads of powder sent into Ireland.

1639, October 8. London.—T. Wilmot to Sir John Coke.

Concerning the business of Athlone I have in all points made so full and free a submission that his Highness hath been pleased to think well of. I can plead forty years service with six wounds for my country that many of them almost had bled me to death, the places I have held and what I am now here will move you something. I presume to think it reasonable to put your hand to my delivery that it may not be disgracefully handled by those into whose hands it is likely to come, and to move the King's Majesty since it hath pleased him graciously to accept of my submission that the bill may be taken off from the file in the Star Chamber that it may hang there no longer to my dishonour.

1639, October 12. Ely House in Holborn.—Matthew Wren, Bishop of Ely, to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary.

My intentions were now to have waited upon you myself, but since my return from Windsor so violent a cold hath seized me that the physician doubts it may bring on a fever. I have purposely forborne to lay this complaint before the King, as having no desire at all to stumble Sir John Monson in the perfecting of his business. But if it may please you so far to resent the wrong done to my see by Sir Edward Aiscough as that you will not finish it till security be given to me that the said Sir Edward shall refer the cognizance of this matter to my Lord Treasurer and yourself, I shall reckon myself and my successors much indebted unto you. If I be able to stir abroad to-morrow I shall attend you about it.

1639, October 19.—John Wytton to Mr. Secretary Coke.

Anthony Buckbury, postmaster of the Court, had 10 shillings per diem to execute it.

In August 1mo Caroli Buckbury did assign the execution of the place to me and for my pains I was to receive the third part of his wages when it was paid. The office of Postmaster General being settled upon the Principal Secretaries I was in 37 put by the execution of the place, when there was eight years and a half due to me for execution thereof, which amounted to above 530*l.* I can make it appear by bills upon oath that during the time the debt grew I have disbursed almost 300*l.* out of purse in executing the place. And I do humbly conceive that my own attendance, my keeping of lodgings and horses in town for eight years and a half, may be thought worthy of the remainder of the sum above mentioned.

1639, October 27. Docket for Warrant to the Lord Treasurer, authorising him to give order to the farmers of the King's Alum works to make certain payments out of the profits thereof.—(Signed) "Abraham Williams."

1639, November 7. Westcombe.—James Sye (?) to Sir J. Coke, Knight, Principal Secretary of State.

When I heard that it had pleased the King's Majesty to take into his consideration the bad making of cloth and stuffs made of wools in this kingdom, I set down what I had observed in 40 years experience, which observations, with an objection made against the bringing in the Segovia wools, with an answer and a query, I leave to your Honour's wisdom to consider. I am doubtful that the clothier and his trade in this part are in a consuming disease and almost past recovery.

1639, November 9.—Philippe Burlamachi à Monseigneur M. Jean Coke, Chevalier, Principal Secretaire d'état de sa Majesté d'Angleterre, en Cour.

J'ai été si tormenté d'un accès de fièvre que je n'ai pu sortir. La violence de l'accès a été si extrême et m'a laissé si débile qu'a peine me puis je tenir sur mes jambes. Je supplie votre Excellence me favoriser de tant que je puisse savoir quelle résolution sa Majesté prendra touchant la requête que mes créanciers ont prétendu; si'l lui plait à dire à mon frère il me la fera savoir à Pottnei (Putney).

1639, November 25.—A Paper endorsed "Propositions of Commissioners of State to the States General for provision of moneys &c. towards the charges of their war A.D. 1640. Exhibit: 25th Novr 1639. Hagh."

For maintenance of the three states of war the 1st of A.D. 1621, the 2nd of 1626, the 3rd of 1628.

For maintenance of 500 men in garrison at Embden. For maintenance of 50 companies containing 10,000 men levied A.D. 1628, only to mark the actions of a feigned friend and to be in readiness to resist his power in case he should put off his mask as he did in the year following after, when he took hold of the occasion that the army was otherwise employed. To continue the allowance usual for the maintenance of two horse troops under Marquis Rouillac and Sir Charles Lucas. That in case of neglect of payment of the consents of the respective Provinces the Generality will be pleased to authorize the Council of State to negotiate the moneys to the charge of the deficient Provinces for the space of 6 months, and that then by defect thereof execution may be done on the inhabitants of the deficient Provinces by way of arrest, seizing on their goods &c.

	Mill.	Guild.	st.	d.
Sum total in guilders at 2*s.* a guilder comes to	17	923,796	17	11¾
			s.	d. f.
Which is in sterling money - - -		1,792,379*l.*	12	06 0

1639, November 28. Hungerton.—Thomas Hollier to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary.

I am bold yet once more to become a petitioner to you to commiserate my poor estate as Sir Robert Banaster, Mr. Ashby and other gentlemen in my parish have done. My living alas is so small being not forty marks by the year. I pay 19 shillings to the King for tenths and at Easter last the clergy was taxed as your Honour knows with a double tenth; besides yearly payments to the Bishop, Archdeacon &c. Indorsed by Sir John Coke "Sent V[l]."

December 5. Bishop Auckland.—Thomas Morton, Bishop of Durham, to Sir J. Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

Salutem in Christo Jesu. . . . As I cannot but joy much that he [not named, probably Richard Loe] hath obtained so honourable and favourable a patronage, so can I not but deplore the case of that people who shall now be deprived of so faithful a servant of God, and so profitable in his ministry. Well this I dare say, it will be a blessing of God unto them that shall enjoy him, and upon your Honour for selecting and patronising this Timothy.

1639 (?) December 13. Melbourne.—Sir J. Coke to Lord Newburgh.

Endorsed by Sir J. Coke "Copy to Lord Newburgh. Donington fines."

I understand that, notwithstanding Mr. Windham hath acknowledged himself satisfied in the case of the Donington fines, whereupon my counsel had procured attachments against them in open court, yet upon an unworthy certificate made by the said Mr. Windham that he gave me those for nothing out of his affection to me, and that the tenants might be well used, in which respects he thought it reasonable that I should accept 100*l.*, your Lordship, upon a motion surreptitiously made since the term, both reversed the order for my attachments and also ordered that his certificate shall be decreed, unless cause be shown to the contrary the first day of the next term. I think fit therefore for your Lordship's further satisfaction to inform you of the untruth of both the parts of his certificate. First that he gave me those fines for nothing out of his affection to me, I avow and shall prove that, before he applied himself to me to pass for him that and other suits, I had no acquaintance with him, but was a mere stranger to him and therefore could [not?] receive any such favour from him for his affection to me. And for this particular the truth was shortly this. I had bought the Manor of Donington at so dear a rate that, for above 1,400*l.* laid out so many years since, I have not received the yearly fee farm rent, but have been constrained of it out of my own purse; which happened by the suits I had about the uncertainty of the fines, and about Derby Hills, in which your Lordship hath done me noble justice, which I shall ever acknowledge to your Honour. Another reason was that the particular was charged with some rents which I could not receive, the parcel not being found; which notwithstanding His Majesty by his contract with the City had covenanted to make good. Then having notice given me by the City Solicitor and other friends that I might help myself without troubling His Majesty with a new grant of the manor, if I would obtain from him a grant of the arrearages of fines, Coke MSS. which were due to him in that manor, I thereupon resolved to move His Majesty in so reasonable a suit, which (as your Lordship may conceive) would not have been denied. But at that time, when I was preparing my petition, Mr. Windham came to me to move him to His Majesty for the general grant of those Duchy fines, and then I acquainted him with the particular I proposed to pass for myself, but if he would favour me to pass it in his book, I would pass it for his wife; which accordingly I did, and thereupon made the grant, which I now presume I shall enjoy for the fruit of my labours for him, both in that and other matters of great importance for lands in the Fens, and for windcasts and other businesses which he and his brother Sir Arthur Savage procured by my hand, and for which they have both privately and publicly acknowledged a greater obligation to me than the grant could satisfy. And touching the second point of his certificate, which pretendeth a condition interposed by him that the tenants should be used even, the grant itself will shew if such condition was at all in his consideration; and, besides my confident denial that he never mentioned to me any such matter, I can prove by his own letter and otherwise that he expressed always his great forwardness to assist me in making benefit of these fines, and was contented that his commissioners shall assist those whom I employed. But whether I have used the tenants reasonably in the rates I have required your Lordship can best judge, whose care of the tenants was much greater than his. What is here set down shall be justified by oath if cause require, and by as good proof as the matter can bear. What motives have procured this unworthy certificate from him who would have made the contrary, if I had continued in the place wherein I might have been of more use unto him. Yet am I confident your Lordship will not value his certificate above mine, since he now maketh himself a party and pretendeth to be my judge. Neither can I imagine that any verbal certificate shall be accepted for an averment against a record and his own act.

1639, December 25. Melbourne.—Richard Loe, (Vicar of Melbourne,) to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary of State.

I do no sooner answer your invitation to come under your patronicie but you accommodate me with those necessaries which I was (before) unprovided of. I do also experience your son's great respect [who vouch]safeth not only to entertain me in his house but also in his heart with [ ] favour. I shall contend [to make] my greatest gain to tithe souls . . . My Lord of Durham enjoined me to write his best remembrances to you. That your Honour may be had in everlasting remembrance prayeth your most sincerely devoted chaplain and servant.

1639, December 31. (?) Richmond.—Sir John Harpur to Sir John Coke (the younger).

It is now declared that His Majesty intends before long to call a Parliament: and to give satisfaction to those that I am bound to obey, rather than any other desire of mine, I purpose to try my friends to be elected one of the knights for Derbyshire, amongst whom I am bold to account you one. Though the obtaining of my desire therein be an honour to me, yet I shall hold it the greater if it come with your approbation on which I shall rely.

(1639.)—Sir John Coke to William Gilbert. [Draft.]

I am now taking my journey from hence to Melbourne, and hope to see your father and friends in those parts. My stay will not be long because I must be here again the 25th of this month to attend His Majesty at his return from London into Scotland for a Parliament and Assembly to be held there. I doubt not but you have heard of the happy peace which his Majesty hath concluded with his subjects of that kingdom. I have written to the Lord Deputy of my own particular concerning the Fartree (Vartry) which he promiseth to put into my quiet possession this next month. I have also written to Sir George Ratcliffe and Doctor Cooke, and shall be glad of the assistance of them all, and of yourself, to settle that remote affair, wherein I must depend upon the favour of my friends. I suppose you are yet upon your employment in the plantations.

1639.—A paper endorsed by Sir J. Coke "Rough draft of my letter to Sir Kenelm Digby out of Scotland."

I am indeed very sensible of your loss, but your complaint that the time of your life to perform any part upon the stage of the world is worn out troubleth me much more. . . . . I would gladly take you off from your passive thoughts by recommending unto you the perusal of this book which hath [been] presented unto me by the Herald Sir John Burrough, and may give you occasion to employ your time in a subject worthy your study, both to enlarge it out of ancient and modern authors, and to add your own knowledge and experience, what may be further said not only for His Majesty's right and interest in the seas but what hath been the proportion and effect of the naval power from time to time in this kingdom. . . .This journey into Scotland hath both enlarged my conceptions of the greatness of our master, even above other princes, and kindleth in me a grief and shame to see his service so neglected that the world should not be made more apprehensive of the worth both of his person and power.

(1639.)—The Description of the King's Camp according as it was quartered. Designed by R. D. [The plan is wanting.]

The whole figur here described represents the King's Camp as it lay two miles and a half to the West of Barwicke upon the River of Tweed; the other side of the water being the boundary of Scotland. The utmost line noted T T T signifieth the intrenchment: the two lines which are close together represent the parapet of the d'tch some 5 foot high and about 5 thick and the next utmost space is the ditch itself about 8 or 9 foot broad and 4 foot deep. Every two quadrangled figures within the intrenchment is a regiment of foot unto which it placed the name of the Colonel that commands the regiment, as Lord General, Colonel Vane Colonel Savill &c. Behind the Regiments are the tents belonging to the officers: the soldiers are hutted in files, every two files make up a company, every hut is a little house made like a dog kennel, and holds two soldiers: it is of 8 foot broade and near 8 foot long, the sides of earth and covered with turf where wood and straw is not to be had. The distance between the regiments and intrenchment is for the place of arms to exercise and draw out in order. The Quadrangle noted with Q.A. is a quarter of the artillery. K is the King's tent or pavilion: the pricked spaces are the Lords' tents and officers which are about the King: P.P. the tents of the Privy Chamber and Pensioners. The tents at H.I. are for the horses of state and nobility. L.L. stands for the tents of the larderers and other inferior officers. F.G. by the water side are foot guards of 6 or 8 companies to defend the passage there the places thereabouts being fordable. E. is a bridge of boards for the soldiers to go over into the horn work. The tent noted with L.W. by the second battery stands for my Lord Willoughby Captain of the Foot Guard. The tents at S.S. are sutlers (who were very few, and who sold nothing almost but wine). The pricked lines before the King's tent stand for palisadoes to keep off horses. The points at the corners of the palisadoes are sentries that stand with their musket or pike. The Yeomen of the Guard have their place to stand and watch in the impalement of the King's Tent in the first two turrets. North west towards S. stood the Scotch Camp seated on a hill in an open and wide country free from shelter yet near the town of Dunne.

COKE MSS.

1639.—"A true Remonstrance of the Spanish Armado this present year 1639, but for what invasion is not yet known."

Ships 380, land soldiers 60,000, sailors 13,000, galley slaves 3,000, poisoned bullets 42,000, hollow bullets with wild fire 20,000.

* * *

The names of the Commanders of the Fleet.

* * *

With these the Archduke is to meet with great forces and to be General of the whole, who is reported to have a ship thought to be cannon proof for his Admiral: there cometh with the Archduke Marquess Spinola the Younger, the Earl of Tiron and the Earl of Arquila * the second son of the Duke of Savoy is Admiral of the Spanish Navy. Sir Robert Dudley Vice Admiral Sir Griffin Markham and Sir Guy Stanley Colonels of Regiments. Also there is one Nevell, who termeth himself Earl of Westmorland, who hath a great command.

The names of the Cities that hath sent in ships—

Valentia, Lisbon, Groyne, Cadiz and Mary port, St. Sebastian, Naples, Barcelona.

* * *

There arrived lately at Lisbon 30 armed elephants sent from Persia but for what purpose is not yet known.

A copy of a letter from Malaga.

In this place is great preparations for war, the like hath not been in Spain.

There is also expected for this expedition from Dunkirk and other places in the Netherlands under the King of Spain's dominions 80 ships.

1639–40, January 2. London.—Secretary Sir John Coke to Sir John Coke the younger.

Son,—I was glad by your last of the 25th December to understand that your brother and James Mayo came safe to your house the 24th: and escaped the danger of the waters and the foulness of the ways. I shall be no less glad to hear that the great wind that hath done much spoil both by sea and land hath not harmed you in those parts. Since I writ last unto you mycousin Streethey hath received 200*l.* from Mr. Dunford: and I have also received 200*l.* from Mr. Henry Hastings, besides 60*l.* I fermerly writ to have paid to cousin Streethey by Sir Thomas Hartopp. So the whole return is 460*l.* Now I send my coach with 6 horses to meet you at Northampton, according to your appointment with Mr. Withrings, who cometh to join with you both in your hawking and in the better survey of Duston. I desire you both to view every ground, and take particular note, as correctly as you can, of the quantity quality and yearly worth thereof, and also to make an exact rental, what rent is now paid for every ground, and in whose tenure it is, and for what term. You shall also do well to speak with every tenant, that they may take notice of us as the lords of the manor from whom they may expect friendship and good usage, which we both intend towards them. I think you shall do well not now to speak of any improvement, specially of the castle, till we can settle the fee farm; and shall have agreed with Mr. Barker, whom you have no way to draw to reason but by keeping off and not seeking after him, nor treating with him till the motion shall proceed from himself. And for Mr. North he must be dealt with in the same manner. The Italian proverb is Col tempo e paglia maturiscono i nespoli: time and fit means bring all things to pass. I have now sent Mr. Loe cloth to make him a good gown, to keep him warm in his house, to which I shall be most willing to allow such reparation to make it convenient for him as I have formerly written, and as you now think expedient. Neither shall he want any encouragement I can give him. And I am exceedingly comforted that he gives you all so good contentment, and especially to yourself and my daughter, who shall enjoy his ministry most. Yet let me advise you not to cry him up too loud, that the eyes of our Churchmen be not cast upon him, who cannot endure any confluence to those that go not on their idle way. A like caution let me give you concerning the money to be brought up, that you suffer no notice to be taken by the way, or at Northampton, that the coach hath any such charge. For at this time good fellows are abroad, but seldom do hurt without foreknowledge of their booty. I wish your brother a convenient time of relaxation, how well so ever he was paid for his pains this last term. Commend me to your Lady, and to Mr. Loe. Remember me also to Mr. Burdett and to his son and daughters: and when you see him, to my cousin Coke and all his family. Forget not cousin Danvers; and let us hear by your brother what they do at Foston, and whether peace may be hoped for amongst them. I send you by my coach the patent for Baggrave, and one box of evidence for Over Haddon, and another for Baggrave. Lay them up safely, and make a book of these and all the rest, that you may know what you have and how to find them out, when there shall be cause. What your brother hath in his custody he will give you a list of. And when we can get all together that concern the castle of Northampton and Duston, they shall be sent in due time. Mr. Withrings is willing to plant his estate in those parts, and is on hand with an exchange of his land in Essex for Mr. Sydenham's land near Alton in the Peak. If he desire Rowland's help in the survey of it, I pray you let him view it in his way towards Over Haddon; but without giving him notice of Mr. Withrings' name or interest. I shall be glad to know whether you hear anything from Mr. Savile concerning the exchange or purchase of our Peak lands: and what your opinion is for the enfranchising of our tenants at Donington, and whether the Earl payeth his rents there. So wishing you a prosperous New Year, I leave you to God's blessing- Your loving Father.

1640, January 9, st. loci. The Hague.—J. Bouillon to Sir William Boswell, Knight, His Majesty's Resident, &c.

The levies resolved upon by the States General will consist of four regiments each of 2,000 men. Prince Radzivill, Count Waldeck, Schomberg, young Kniphausen, and Till are said [to be] of the nomination for Colonels of the same. My Lord Craven's disposition hath been sounded in that behalf, but seems reluctant. . . . . Some think a plot is laid to join again with France, and fall upon Gueldres, or some good town in Flanders as Dunkirk, &c. Others say that 5 or 6,000 stout soldiers thrown into both sides of the Sound might be able to take and keep that place, in case of a rupture with the Danes. But others perhaps more probably conjecture that it is only for reinforcement of the general army. . . . . The Prince of Orange hath summoned all his officers to be ready at their garrisons by the 15th of March upon pain of cashiering in case of absence. . . . . Upon Thursday last the other Ambassador Extraordinary (Mijn heer Coenders) arrived here from Denmark, but hath not yet made report; himself and his colleague the Heer Conradus (alias Verburgh) being to do it jointly within few days. In the meanwhile the States continue their frown against the Danes, as that King doth against them. The Elector of Cologne hath represented to the States General by his deputies that, although he will endeavour to repress some refractory spirits in the town of Liége, yet he sincerely intendeth to keep inviolate his neutrality with their Lordships. In the Maas before Rotterdam one of the States men of war of 38 pieces bound outwards was cast away. My Lord Craven remaining here ready in expectation of a good wind for England. I shall pray for his Lordship's good passage, and I shall continue in my devotions for your Honour's most happy return, whensoever it be appointed.

Coke MSS.

1639–40, January 26. Whitehall.—Sir John Coke to his eldest son.

I know you have heard of the resolution taken for my retreat from Court, yet I find both a gracious countenance and profession that no offence is taken against me, and so much expression of good opinion and good will towards me both in Court and City that I would never withdraw myself with more favourable aspect. You have often heard me declare my desire and endeavour to obtain in this evening of my age some time of repose at home, wherein nothing did more retard my resolution than the persuasions of my friends that I must not abandon the public, whilst my being upon the stage might either advance some good, or at least give interruption to the prevailing of some evil, therein, though I knew how little I could prevail in either, yet my tenderness was such that I durst not break out till God should make my way. And now, since the world is satisfied that it is not my own act, I both contentedly and cheerfully submit myself to God's will and the King's. What sense good men have of it you shall hear to (too) much by others. For me, assure yourself I shall come home unto you with as much quiet, and with as calm a mind, and with as little repining or complaining or spleen against any, as any servant from Court to a country life, after so many and so long employments.

I shall now bring upon you a great family to pester your house, but not to charge your purse. We shall contrive all things in a convenient manner; and my company shall not be, as heretofore, either great or disorderly, but such as shall well comport with convenience and order. Your sisters will presume that you will receive them till God dispose otherwise for their good, as I pray and hope He will.

Your adverse neighbour cometh often to us, and maketh us believe that his carriage is civil and no way offensive; nor will suffer himself by any company to be led into any excess. This maketh me believe he will prove no heavy adversary, who desireth so much good will, and is civilly used by us.

I thank you for your letter and accompts of the 20th of this month. We call upon the Earl's officers for the plot of Duston, and the counterparts of the tenants' leases. These are assured us to be delivered out of hand: but the surveyor's plot is not recoverable, being thought to have been burnt in the last fire in Staple Inn.

Cousin Danvers hath now returned by Mr. Danford the 100*l.* you mention, which our cousin Strethey hath received and will presently pay into my hands. For the castle at Northampton Mr. Pulley telleth us there is no obligation in the grant of reversion to any reparation of the walls or otherwise. But we resolve to see the grant itself, before we proceed therein.

I have received a letter from the Bishop of Carlisle, who is informed that the presentation to the vicarage belongeth to his see; yet offereth most friendly to present Mr. Loe, or any whom I shall name. And I think, for Mr. Loe's security, it will be also fit to have a presentation from the Bishop, which I will procure with speed. I hear Mr. Loe studieth to (too) much in the night it is also your fault, and I pray you both to reform it. Remember the text, Sufficient the day for the business thereof. Do well, to do it long.

Till the days be longer, and the weather fairer, we shall continue here and happily till the Annuntiation. Meanwhile let me know what provisions you want. We shall bring you household stuff of all sorts, and linen, and store of wine and spice. I have again sent into Barbary for hawks. I am glad to hear by Mr. Fulwood that you have recovered your haggard, which was lost in your return from Northampton.

My old friend Ed. R. [Reed] being sunk in his estate is now fallen to shifts. An old friend must not be disgraced. Favour his reputation, but take heed of him, and give them at Buckminster warning in a silent way. Mr. Fulwood telleth me that Derbymen are resolved to give no way to the election of Mr. Hobs; and he thinketh your brother may be introduced. But I shall not persuade him to put himself in contestation against my lord. Only if you find that Hobs cannot prevail, do what you can for your brother, and write speedily how they stand affected, that we may co-operate also from hence.

If Mr. Loe or you require any special books, send me your memorials. His gown is at the dyers, and shall be made up in convenient time. If my daughter want seeds, or aught else, write whilst we are here. Brew store of beer in March. Make your study ready; for I shall bring down books of sundry sorts, though not very choice, to fill it. So commending you and my daughter to God's blessing, I rest your loving father.

1639–40, February 3. Whitehall.—Sir Francis Windebank to Sir John Coke.

His Majesty hath commanded me to send to you for the papers concerning the affairs of Ireland which His will is shall not be put into the Paper Office but into my hand. Sir Bal. Gerbier has written to you concerning one Newman, imprisoned at Brussels, and much troubled about the fishing business. I beseech you let me know the true state of it, and whether it concerns His Majesty directly or any private person that so commission may be given to treat.

1639–40, February 4. Whitehall.—Sir Harry Vane, Principal Secretary of State (in succession to Sir J. Coke), to Sir J. Coke, Knight, one of His Majesty's most honourable Privy Council.

I do most willingly accept of your servant Poole. . . . . I shall also employ your servant Wakerlein (Weckherlin). I shall desire you to command my service in anything that shall be in my power either for yourself or yours.

1639–40, February 27.—Elizabeth, Lady Coke (wife of Sir J. Coke the younger), to Sir John Coke, Knight, Councillor of State to His Majesty.

Right Honourable,—Though all good men are much grieved at your resignation of your place, for the interest which the public had in your faithful service to the State, and that therein I am sensible of a part of their sorrow, yet, I cannot but account it a blessing of quiet and rest to yourself, and of great happiness and contentment to us, you having resolved to entertain your time hereafter with us here in the country; and God, in sending hither by your means so godly a minister of His word before you hath declared your retreat to be a work of his. Sir, to profess the duty and faithful respects I shall ever zealously perform towards you were to boast myself to you, for it is a virtue to observe you, but this I dare to presume to promise that you shall find that hearty and sincere obedience which is due to you and from us. And I trust God will so bless you with comfort and peace and prosperity in this your repose at home, that, though the Court want your wisdom, yet you shall never envy them their troubles. My prayers are for your long life, perfect health and strength, and for a successful journey hither, which I beseech you hasten, and bless your Honour's most obedient daughter.

COKE MSS.

1639–40, March 19. Lix[a] (?)—John Chandler. [No address.] Endorsed "the Consul of Lix[a]."

Your Lordship's letter with the papers directed to Captain Strangway were come to his hands, and he presently full of joy and content departed from the Island of St. Michaels to the Terceras to dispatch his business with hope of good success. . . . . Touching the complaint of some of our merchants in the island of Tercera imprisoned for some disorder committed, they remitted the prosecution thereof unto their several correspondents here, who by the assistance of P. Wichalls obtained an order from her Altera for their liberty upon franca and to be answerable to justice. . . . About the ship arrested at St. Omé I will take some pains to be informed.

1640, March 30. Leicester.—Sir John Coke the younger to Sir John Coke at Melbourne.

My brother is chosen one of the burgesses for Leicester. Mr. Every the Receiver is the other. I have promised my brother's acceptance, and that he shall be here by Friday next to take his oath and perform all things necessary. . . . . Your two first loads of stuff are come safe. My haste at present forces me to break off.

1640, April 17.—Extract certified by D. Carleton and W. Devon of an Order of the Lords of the Council requiring all Lord Lieutenants of Counties to take an effectual course for expediting the levies of men now lately commanded by supplying the absence of such deputy lieutenants as are members of the Lower House; and if they shall find their power to be in anything defective, to move His Majesty to supply the same by sending down the said deputy lieutenants.

1640, April 21. London.—William Cavendish, Earl of Devonshire, to Sir Henry Willoughby, Baronet, Sir Edward Vernon, Sir John Fitzherbert of Norbury, and Sir John Coke, Knights, Mr. John Frecheville and Mr. William Coke, Esquires, and to the rest of his Deputy Lieutenants of the County of Derby.

Last Sunday I received an order made by the Lords and others of His Majesty's most honourable Privy Council, whereof I thought fit to send you the inclosed copy. Not that I think the number of you that are still resident in the County too small to perform His Majesty's commands for the present levies to be made there; but to let you see how carefully the execution of it is still pressed, and to stir you up to a more cheerful and entire resolution to proceed with all alacrity to the effecting of the same, and therefore I do once more earnestly recommend unto you the despatch of this service.

1640, April 28. Whitehall.—Sir John Tonstall to Sir John Coke, Knight, one of His Majesty's most honourable Privy Council.

My son Frederick Tonstall being lately come from Carlisle was in good hope to have found your Honour here to have presented him to my Lord Bishop your brother, but now I must entreat your letter to my Lord that he will be pleased to take him into his consideration for some spiritual preferment within his diocese. . . . Also in your next I desire to know where I shall receive the Bishop of Carlisle's rent due at our Lady Day last past. I cannot but let you know that there are many good men here that are heartily sorry that you are not in place to do His Majesty that service which now cannot so well be done; but I doubt not but your retiring is as comfortable to yourself as any employment could have been.

1640, May 2. London.—W. Raylton. [No address.]

I made known unto my Lord Lieutenant what you were pleased to trust me withal; and his Lordship much marvels there should be such a proceeding, yet as there shall be occasion will make the right use of it as your Honour desires. For your business of Fartree (Vartry) I perceive his Lordship hath now at his being in Ireland given order for a distribution for O'Toole, telling me withal that so long as his Lordship lives you shall be sure to find him your friend both in that and in anything else that may concern your Honour.

[Within draft Letter from Sir J. Coke to Lord Wentworth, Lord Deputy of Ireland.]

To hear of your Lordship's good recovery of health since your return was a great comfort to me, as it was also to understand by Mr. Railton that you were still mindful of me your now unprofitable servant. He writeth that you have given order for a distribution to be allotted to O'Toole, but whether you have disposed the Fartree (Vartry) into a sufficient tenant's hands, whereby I may receive the rents this next half year, he maketh no mention. In this and all things I rely wholly upon your Lordship's favour, into whose hands I confidently put myself and my estates. For all things else I thank God I endure with patience to be neglected and forgotten at the Court as if I had never performed any acceptable service there. My prayers are daily for His Majesty and for peace and for your Lordship as being now the only stay of your Lordship's humble and faithful servant.

1640, May 5.—A paper so dated, and endorsed "Secretary" by Sir John Coke. "No cypher ascribed to theise first councels" (in margin).

LL. Ir. No danger in undertaking this war.

(crossed out.) Whether the Scotch are to be reduced or no.

To reduce them by force as the state of the kingdom stands.

If His Majesty had not declared himself so soon, he would have declared himself for no war with Scotland. They would have given him plentifully.

The City to be called immediately, and quickened to lend 100,000*l.*

That the shipping money may be put vigorously upon collection.

These two ways will furnish His Majesty plentifully to go on with arms and war for Scotland.

The manner of the war.

The stopping of the trade of Scotland no prejudice, so they have the trade free with England for their cattle.

A defensive war—totally against it.

Offensive war into the kingdom—his opinion few months would make an end of the war, do you invade them.

LL. Ir. Go vigorously on or let them alone—no defensive war—loss of honour and reputation.

The quiet of England will hold out long. You will languish as betwixt Saul and David. Go on with offensive war as you first designed, loosed and absolved from all rules of government, being reduced to extreme necessities—every thing is to be done that power will admit, and that you are to do.

They refused—you are acquitted towards God and man.

You have an army in Ireland you may employ here to reduce this kingdom.

Confident as anything under heaven Scotland will not hold out 5 months—one summer well employed will do it.

Venture all I had. I would carry it or lose all.

L. Arch. Whether defensive war as impossible as offensive—or whether to let them alone. Tried all ways, refused all ways—by the laws of God and man you should have subsistence, and ought to have it, and lawful to take it.

L. Ad. If no more money than what proposed, and you to make a defensive war, a difficulty.

Whether to do nothing, or let them alone, or go on with a vigorous war.

L. Cott. League they may make abroad, and will, for the defence of this kingdom.

The lower house are weary of Church and King—all ways shall be just to raise monies in this unavoidable necessity—therefore to be used being lawful.

LL. Ir. Commission of array to be put in execution—they are to bring them to the borders.

In reason of state you have power when they are there to use them at the King's pay.

If any of the Lords can shew you a better way, let them do it.

ob[jection.] Town full of nobility who will talk of it: he will make them smart for it.

[Cf. Report on House of Lords MSS. in Appendix to Third Report of the Commission, p. 206.]

1640, May 12. Grays Inn.—Thomas Coke to Sir John Coke at Melbourne.

Mr. Withrings would humbly desire you to take his part of the rents at Duston in part payment of that money which is due to you from him. . . . The two Secretaries do now since the Parliament prosecute him again for the right of his place, but they cannot yet fasten anything upon him: neither can Mr. Attorney find any imperfection in his patent: so that he hath now great hopes again that the question will be a means to save him a thousand pounds a year in his purse. I delivered your letter to the Lady Devonshire and likewise my brother's to her chaplain. My Lady with her service presented doth promise all her best care for the supply of an able and painful curate at Buckminster. I often troubled you for an importunate client of mine, Mr. Bourke, an Irish gentleman. Sir George Ratcliffe was pleased to promise you at York the last year, as likewise to myself and the gentleman himself, that his desire should be effected to his own content. But now the plantation lands come to be distributed Sir George disavoweth any promise to that effect, and refuseth to shew him any favour at all: by means whereof I am forced to repay unto the gentleman again the sum of one hundred and three score pounds which upon that confidence as likewise for my pains in following the business I had received. I must confess it falls very heavy upon me. The Donington men have moved this term for a prohibition out of the King's Bench to stay our suit in the Court of Requests against them for their fines: but they have not yet prevailed in their motion: nor will at all as I confidently believe. . . . I have with Mr. Kirk's good help procured 1,000*l.* of Mr. Fawnt's fine to be abated. The City of London have since the dissolution of Parliament refused to supply the King with any money, according to his command; whereupon four of their Aldermen were on Sunday last committed from the Council Board. Two knights of Yorkshire are likewise committed to the Fleet: and Mr. Crue (Crewe) knight for Northamptonshire is committed close prisoner to the Tower. Yesternight being Monday night there were a great multitude of people to the number of 800 or thereabouts, which assaulted my Lord of Canterbury's house at Lambeth, demanding his person: by God's help he escaped in a pair of oars over to Whitehall, and there lodged all night. The like tumults to these are every day expected.

1640, May 21. St. Martin's.—Sir George Wentworth to Sir John Coke. [No address.]

How distempered these times grow common report will tell you; yet ill as they seem to be I hope to see a good conclusion from so unsettled a beginning trusting that God will protect our King, country and religion. Sir, it will be a presumption on your patience to write particularly of any affairs here, since I know you have them from better hands.

1640, May.—Sir John Coke the Elder to the Earl of Holland. (Copy.)

I live at home in silence and in peace, I thank God, and meddle with no business but what concerns my private. Yet when I see anything that may disturb or dishonour our master's service, the sense I have of my duty requires me to make it known; as I now do to your Lordship, upon whose wisdom and care I much rely. Letters came lately from the Lord-General for the raising of 400 foot in Leicestershire, and of as many in Derbyshire. The Deputy Lieutenants meet this day at Derby, expecting assistance from the Justices of Peace according to their directions, and from them I suppose the Lord Lieutenant will have account. Leicestershire, from which I am divided only by a pale, will I doubt give more occasion of complaints: such a hand being there carried by one Captain Smith and his officers as that the service is much dishonoured and disturbed, and the people disquieted and oppressed, as by particular certificates will appear. My neighbours have generally complained that in the parish of Breedon, from which I am divided only by a pale, there was the last Sunday much disorder even at the people's coming from divine service, which proceeded to violence and outrage against men and women, that if speedy order be not taken both the service will suffer and the people be oppressed, when thus men are made the instruments of private revenge, whereby faction will increase. How the Earl of Stamford hath been abused by them his Lordship will make known, and all you that bear the character of honour will seriously take to heart and redress as it is fit. For if liberty be given to vilify this character in any, the prejudice may reflect upon the whole degree, wherein your Lordship hath your party. And therefore I leave the redress to his Lordship, whom I honour much, and if he so think convenient, to the notice of the State.

COKE MSS.

1640, June 4. Grays Inn.—Thomas Coke to Sir John Coke at Melbourne.

Both Mr. Withrings and myself got safe to London, thanks be to God, though not until Wednesday morning. We spent all Tuesday morning at Northampton, where we left all things in good order. John Coke hath gotten the possession of the Mill from the old tenant, and endeavoureth every day to get a better. We have treated with Mr. Parker so far that he hath promised not to stop any Northampton carts any more passing out of Duston meadows, or that way, upon that pretence of toll which he claims to be due to him for passage that way: and for his matter concerning the tree fallen by him, we have according to your direction referred it to Mr. Attorney Lane. The tree felled from off your soil by Sir Richard Samuels means we viewed, and gave order for the taking it away and disposing it to your use. My Lord Lieutenant continues still in a doubtful estate, his recovery is presumed by some, much suspected by others: he keepeth his bed still. The King hath lately been thrice to visit him. Mr. Attorney General hath been very much perplexed with an agueish fever, but he is past all danger, thanks be to God. I was several times spoken to the last term by Mr. Burrowes of the Exchequer Office, concerning those papers which are in your custody, touching the Office formerly intended to be erected by you for the speedy search and granting leases upon
He desireth much the sight and persual of those papers, if you intend no further prosecution in it. My Lord Bishop of Gloucester is suspended by the Convocation House from his Bishopric and committed since to the Gatehouse, for refusing to subscribe the new Canons, and raising some scruples about the taking of the oath of supremacy.

1640, June 29. St. Peter's Street in Westminster over the Brewhouse.—William Astell. [No address.]

My humble suit to your Honour was for my money, in regard I was credibly informed and have since received certain assurance that you had sold the woods for above 700*l.* to one Mr. Hotchin of Harperley: 300*l* of which you have already received. Be pleased for God's sake to consider the miserable poverty of me, my wife, and six small children, and to let me have that money which is due unto me. I humbly entreat your Honour to vouchsafe me an answer by the next return of the carrier and I shall call for it at your house on Garlick Hill: otherwise I must make a journey to your home, which truly I know not how to do having neither horse nor money. Yet God willing I will come though on foot.

(1640), St. Peter's day (June 29). Melbourne.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Thomas Coke.

In your last you wrote that you were glad that the soldiers were not mischievous in our parts, but by this you will perceive that they have been unruly enough. Upon Saturday, 20th June, Sir John Beaumont lay at Ashby, having 1,200 men quartered in that town, and the villages adjoining, whereof 800 were Somersetshire men, 200 of Wiltshire, and 200 from Bristol. These men being, as we conceive, hired and provoked and encouraged by others, upon Monday following in their way to

Derby pulled up all the rails about Derby Hills with the stoups, and for the most part have destroyed them with fire, set fire to the mill and digged down part of the mill dam, in a very hostile manner. As soon as I heard what they were doing, I presently took my horse and went up to them; but when I saw I could not by any means prevail with them, and that there were no officers except two of an inferior rank, which came whilst I was there and addressed not themselves in earnest to repress them, I made proclamation to them all in the King's name that they should immediately at their perils depart; and thereupon returned home to take further counsel. And knowing not where mischief might end we fell to the arming of our house for our defence; and not without cause, for as soon as I was departed they threatened the burning of our house, and had placed their drum upon the hill above Charnels, as if they were drawing this way. But I thank God they enterprized nothing against the town, whether having notice of our preparations I know not. Since, viz., upon 26th of June, Colonel Lunsford's regiment lay at Ashby, who were mightily provoked, especially by the inhabitants of Tickenhall and Calke, to set upon us, and I was threatened with the loss of my life the next day. But having the assistance of the Lieutenant-Colonel Lunsford, Captain Martin and other the officers, brave gentlemen and discreet, we escaped the malice of our enemies, and myself with my brother Hartopp, meeting them upon the way beyond Calke, marched in the head of their troop into Derby; though they were not appeased without difficulty, the neighbours of Calke and Tickenhall debauching them upon every occasion. We think it very strange that 1,200 men should march into a county without notice of their coming or officers to keep them in order. And you will perceive that we believe that this was not done without encouragement from others, and that we vehemently suspect Sir John Beaumont, who, as you'll see in divers examinations, came not to them until all the mischief was done, and rebuked them so slightly as nothing could be less. And the rest of the officers did no more, who came not until all was done, and neither then took away more than part of the soldiers that remained. Besides, the soldier who is examined before Mr. Horton, and by him bound to appear next sessions, did confess to Mr. Mayo and to Rowland that the soldiers, being upon top of the hill from which place the officers departed from them, did ask the officers whether they should pull down the rails, and the officers bade them do it; but when he perceived his own danger he would not confess so much to Mr. Horton. Also a neighbour told Gawin Heywood and the Miller of Calke that he being in Ashby, Sir John Beaumont, having retired thither from the hill, was about noon or after again betaking himself to his horse, but that one of Ashby came openly to him and desired to drink another cup of wine with him, for that the soldiers had not done their exploit yet; whereupon he returned again into the house. What we have found of Sir John Harpur's good-will you will perceive in the examinations, and whether we had any evil aspect from Ashby we know not, for Golding and Danno are my Lord of Huntingdon's servants. When I came to the soldiers at first they had no officers at all. The soldiers came upon us three ways, on both sides Sir John Harpur's park and over the park, all without any officers, whilst the whole mischief was doing for aught I can learn, except those two of inferior rank that came to them that wrought towards Tickenhall whilst I was upon the field ut supra. I sent to Sir Thomas Burdett, who refused to meet me upon the place. My father desires you that you would inform Mr. Attorney General in his name of all these particulars contained in this letter and in the examinations, and to take his advice. We are not without hope to get more informations, especially against Beaumont and Harpur, who are the persons we principally desire to have right against, if they be guilty, as we conceive there is strong proof that they are. These soldiers, being animated by the commission of this insolency, have done many more mischiefs, and do rob all men they meet as they go straggling through the country without any order or command, to the great disturbance of His Majesty's peace and the danger of the country, threatening to burn towns in their return; having already vowed Beaumont's death who, as we hear, hath since for fear deserted them. You see in what estate the country stands, but God be praised we are all in health and safety, and we fortify ourselves in the best manner we can to resist any like attempts; which we hope we shall be well able to do, many of our fellow Justices concurring heartily both to examine the fact, and to take order for future restraint. And we hope that by the law the towns of Tickenhall and Calke may be fined to His Majesty for having counselled and animated the soldiers in these dangerous and high insolencies, which may trench no man knows how far in these times. We shall have an enquiry made of this outrageous riot by the Justices upon the statute at the Sessions, where we should be glad if you could conveniently be; but pray you let us have your advice upon the whole by the next conveniency, and be not discouraged for you shall find us well provided for our defence, and the better if you send us down speedily ten muskets, all of the gauged bore, and twelve halberds, which you may have by Mr. Poole's means speaking to the officers of the Tower, namely, Mr. Sherburne and Mr. Lieutenant Sir John Haydon, who promised my father long since to supply him with such proportion as he desired. Desire Mr. Poole to take care they may be good. God be thanked this accident hath no whit abated either our courage or repute in the country, and Lieutenant Colonel Lunsford acknowledges that we assisted him well in the leading of his troops through these parts, and that in Derby he found good accommodation and contentment by our means. And the country I presume will confess that we have been forwarder in the cause of their public safety and the preservation of His Majesty's government than others have yet been. We find no opposition from any but from Calke and Tickenhall, our other neighbours declaring good affection and good hearts towards us: and they, because they found no other way to maintain the suit we have against them, as you know, but by the soldier's arms. God preserve you. My father sends you his blessing. I am heartily your assured brother to his uttermost, John Coke.

Coke MSS.

Sir, I acknowledge myself your loving brother and servant. Ed. Hartopp.

Endorsed. Lieutenant Colonel Lunsford is Lieutenant to Colonel Lunsford's regiment, which has also been raised in Somersetshire. Lieutenant Colonel Lunsford and Captain Martin shewed us much respect and carried themselves very discreetly. Sir John Beaumont is Serjeant Major under Lieutenant Colonel Sir John Paulet to that regiment that committed the outrage, and in the Lieutenant Colonel's absence he had the chief command. Who is Colonel to the regiment I know not, for he also was absent and we have notice of him.

1640, June 30.—Warrant to Constable of Ticknall and Calke, in the County of Derby, to apprehend certain labourers defamed for rioters and perturbers of His Majesty's peace and such as threaten and affrighten divers of their neighbours with the burning of their houses and other dangers to their persons. (Signed) John Curzon, Edward Vernon, John Coke, Will. Coke.

1640, July 1. Derby.—Thomas Shirley to Sir John Curzon.

I would to God for the good of the country and our own ease that you would have hearkened to me yesterday to have continued the soldiers here still at eight pence per diem: for this night (as I told you) I have received monies and express order for my paying of the 400 men and to keep them in exercise until our march, which will be ordered very speedily. I pray you therefore let us lose no more time for the speedy bringing them together again, that neither you nor I may be chidden. Nottinghamshire men are not dismissed, but have been paid by the country until our monies came last night hither.

1640, July 13. Chatsworth.—William Cavendish, Earl of Devonshire, to Sir Henry Willoughby and Sir John Curzon, Baronets, Sir Edward Vernon, Sir John Fitzherbert of Norbury and Sir John Coke, Knights, Mr. John Manners, Mr. John Frecheville and Mr. William Coke, Esquires, Deputy Lieutenants of the County of Derby.

The letter from the Lords of the Council, whereof I now send you the copy I received on Friday last. I conceive by it that it will be fit for us to deliver the soldiers to Captain Shirley though upon no other warrant than he had before. They command that we take order for some of the ablest both High and petty Constables to be sent to the places where the soldiers are to be quartered to take notice of their misdemeanours. . . The Justices are to punish offenders. . . Concerning the dividing of the soldiers into many towns near together, it is their Lordships' advice for the better ruling of them: and no doubt in most counties, and where be many officers to take care of them, it is the best course: but where one man is to take the whole 400 into his charge, I think they will be best ruled in one place. If they be dispersed in villages, it will be easy for them to commit outrages on the inhabitants, and to take from them what they please. I cannot conveniently be present with you, and therefore I leave the whole business to your judgments, upon the place, where also you have the Captain's reasons who is to take charge of them.

1640, August 8.—Sir J. Coke to the Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield. Endorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Copy to the Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield."

Mr. Lowe, our worthy Vicar of Melbourne, being dead, I hear that one Goodwin, a man unworthy to succeed him, boasteth that he hath gotten a presentation from the Lord Bishop of Carlisle. I have therefore written both to his Lordship and to the Lord Bishop of Durham, my old friend, upon whose recommendation I nominated Mr. Lowe, and expect every day to receive answer from them both. My request to your Lordship is that, if Goodwin bring any such presentation to your Lordship, you will be pleased to make stay of his institution and induction till I hear from the Lord Bishops; who I know when they are truly informed will not put upon us such a man as is here known to be incapable of the charge of so many souls, and besides without my help and assistance cannot find this poor vicarage for his turn.

1640, September 3. Buckminster.—Sir Edward Hartopp to Sir John Coke at Melbourne.

I presume you have already heard how far the Scots are marched into England, but the number of their army is variously reported. Whereas it was said they have ransacked and burned Newcastle it is absolutely contradicted. But news is so uncertain that, when I had sealed up letters for your Honour upon information from Sir Thomas Dallison (whom I met at Grantham on Wednesday last) that came there post from York, I was upon better intelligence made to alter them. For my Lord Willoughby sent a man to Durham to be truly informed, and partly if there was need to remove his son which is with the Bishop. He came home this afternoon and relateth that the begining of the skirmish was there. The Scots having marched as far as Newcastle without any resistance and might have taken the town (the better part consenting) they refused to do it, and fell off again 3 or 4 miles aside near upon the river. But perceiving some of our troops of horse and some companies of foot in the field on the other side, put them close in battle array and planted 9 field pieces undiscovered upon a little hill near by. When they had done, as he reporteth, a Scot, galloping from his company, brandished his sword about his head, which an impatient Welshman spying gave spurs to his horse, and in the encounter slew him. Upon which occasion companies on either side was sent forth, but the field pieces of the Scots galled our horse and slew many of them; upon which disadvantage the remnant of the horse was commanded to interpose, whilst the foot fled clearly away. The loss is in our horse, but what number is not yet known; but it is generally whispered that the English was too resolute in the cause and foolhardy. The skirmish lasted two or three hours, in which fight we lost Ceronall Aneale (Colonel O'Neile) an Irishman and Willamote (Wilmot) men much esteemed in the army. There fell also Endimion Porter's second son, a youth as much pitied as famed for his brave carriage and valiantness. My Lord of Carnarvon fought madly like himself, for being forsaken by his countrymen, he made good the place whilst he had any powder and shot, and after threw his pistols at them, then drawing his sword fought manfully till he was relieved and brought off. On the other part it is reported my Lord Montrose and the Sheriff of Tivedale (Teviotdale) are slain with some other officers of account. The Scots remove not from that place, reserving Newcastle for a retreat if need be. The King maketh no great haste to draw his forces together, and it is hoped there will be a treaty of peace. I had almost forgot to let your Honour know that the Cornet of our horse is slain and that they have taken the colours. On Wednesday last while we were at Grantham the Denmark Ambassador went past into the North. There was likewise news came there to my Lord Willoughby that the French fleet discovered itself upon our seas, and pretended they would assist our King if there was need: for the present it did amuse my Lord and other gentlemen of the country. There was news also that my Lord Cottington is gone through with the East India Company for the whole price of their voyage. But these things your Honour knoweth more perfectly: it is only my duty to do your commands. As soon as I hear things more certain I shall wait upon you to inform you, I forgot to let you know the Scots do no hurt in their march, but pay very well for whatsoever they have in the country.

Coke MSS.

1640, September 14. Kedleston.—J. C. [Sir John Curzon, Bart.] to Captain Shirley at York.

I received your letter from York this day, whereby you express your care to keep promise and your respect to the country in this that we have assurance from you for the present to receive some part of the moneys that they are out of purse. Concerning the pressed soldiers, I could not acquaint Sir John Coke and Mr. William Coke, so as to return a joint answer by this bearer. If it be so that you have the moneys in your custody and will give us notice by this bearer thereof, we will send a messenger a purpose to you who upon the receipt of the money from you will express the country's and our thankfulness to you and an acknowledgment of your payment to the 29th of August: but you remember that there was some of the 400 men wanting at the muster, which must be left to your own consideration.

1640, September 19. London.—John Jemmat to Sir J. Coke the Elder at Melbourne.

I beseech you to hold me excused that I come not as yet to Melbourne. I conceive there is just reason. First I am told by many that the road is very dangerous, especially for ministers. Secondly I understand the Living is of a very low value not above 30*l.* per annum, the double whereof would never yet keep my house. And although I doubt not but that your Honour your son and daughters would be helpful, yet I conceive it will be no wisdom for me to remove from the sight of my kindred and ancient acquaintance to settle amongst them that are strangers unto me, where the means of maintenance are in themselves incompetent, and the accessions only arbitrary so that when my charge is certain my means shall be uncertain. Not hearing anything from your Honour in many weeks after my first answer, I accepted of employment under another at Epping in Essex where I am much desired to continue both by the Vicar and parishioners who promise me 60*l.* a year certain besides other things that will accrue. . . Neither can I deny that they have very much gotten into my affections, so that it will be a great grief on both parts to sunder. Sir, I humbly offer these things to your grave consideration, and have entreated my ancient and faithful friend Thomas Davison, the bearer hereof, late one of the burgesses of Berwick, to come on purpose to your Honour to let you know how my case stands, to whom I would entreat you to make known your mind. . . I must confess I am somewhat afraid to come so far north with my wife and children at such a time of common danger in winterly weather, and where we have our acquaintances yet for to make. I have made bold thus to empty my thoughts into your bosom as a father who will tenderly consider of what I have written.

1640, September 29. Leicester.—John Angel to Sir J. Coke, at Melbourne.

In all humble wise my duty premised with my testification of confirmed thankfulness for my noble entertainment not long since at Melbourne. Of the certainty of a determined Parliament to commence the 3rd of November we make no doubt. I had by occasion the first intelligence of it in the town. As for your worthy son Mr. Thomas Coke there hath been a speech of him here already about the Burgesship and I presume he is more likely to carry it than any I can hear of. His own wise generous carriage in this place hath won him a great deal of respect from divers that knew him not before, his personal presence in the solicitation of the business will sooner expedite the same. For my own particular I shall show all faithfulness.

1640, October 4. Culmington.—Peter Mease to Sir John Coke.

I writ to John Barker, whom I had commended to your Honour's employment, as soon as I came home from you. He tells me that he hath been both trusted and employed by some of account for the time of this vacation; that till they come up to term, he is not able to furnish himself as he desires in a fashion befitting your Honour's service. . . . I proffered 5*l.* per annum and more if he deserved it. I know not any whom I dare adventure to commend more to your Honour both for civility and ability unto such employment. His abode is at Mr. Cotes his chamber over the Butlery in the Middle Temple. The Lord of Heaven still bless your Honour with long and happy days.

Coke MSS.

1640, November 3. London.—Thomas Withrings to Sir John Coke.

I found that all passage of letters was stopped, especially mine. . . . On Thursday was 7 night the High Commission was kept in Paules when there was to be some proceeding against a churchwarden for refusing to take the late oath: but the common people crowding in did force Dr. Duck out at a hole in a window when (as I am informed) he lost some part of his garment and got to his house with some difficulty. The Lords Commissioners being not there the rest got out some one way and some another and so no hurt done. But on Sunday last in time of morning prayers they broke into the round house, where the records of the High Commission are kept and tore them all to pieces. The merchants of London have signed two petitions in my favour, the one to the King the other to the Parliament. Burlamachi stands upon his justification which is that these offices were forced upon him. My humble suit unto your Honour is that you will be pleased to deliver to Sir John Coke your son upon his coming up such letters as your Honour received from him years past whereby he was a practiser from time to time to take from me my office contrary to his own declaration. Your Honour may be pleased to certify something therein to your son who may declare it to the House of Parliament. I am sorry his election as knight of the shire is deferred so long. I most humbly intreat your Honour to be a suitor to him to lie at my house in London during this Parliament. He may be pleased either to come up post, or to bring his horses with him. For his coach mine will be ready every day to carry him to the Parliament house and back again. I doubt not but to receive satisfaction by the restitution of my office. My proofs are very many by merchants of good quality who will be ready in the House of Parliament to make it good. I have not at all affronted the sequestration of my office under the Secretaries hands to themselves, yet have they imprisoned me, and ordered such persons as owed me money to pay me none. I humbly entreat your Honour out of the notes here inclosed to draw a draft of a petition for me to the House of Parliament.

1640, November 6.—A paper endorsed by Sir John Coke "Articles against the Earl of Strafford."

The paper is in the writing of Sir John Coke the Younger. It sets forth seven "Articles of the Commons assembled in Parliament against Thomas Earl of Strafford, in maintenance of their accusation whereby he stands charged of High Treason": and annexed to each article "Instances of proof": with a "conclusion." He proceeds, This is the effect, as near as I could make it, of the report made yesterday by Mr. Pimme from the Committee in this great business concerning the Lord Lieutenant and this day these seven Articles, the Instances being wholly left out, were at a conference of both Houses delivered by Mr. Pimme to the Lords in the Painted Chamber, with a notable speech heniously aggravating his offences as treasons of the highest nature against God, the King and Commonwealth. The Lords retiring resolved to send the Lieutenant to the Tower. He went by coach to the Tower, not without the scorn of the insulting multitude. The jurisdiction of the Marshal's Court is referred to a Committee to be examined. Also that the Starchamber upon Mr. George Fawnt's petition against the Earl of Huntingdon, which he hath preferred to the House of Commons, and all exeats (?), and process are stayed upon the reading of his petition. Mr. Withrings petitioned the House this day, and he is appointed to make his petition good upon next week. To-morrow the Canons are to be disputed. Friday is appointed to discuss the case of ship money. A knave standing on the top of a house in King's Street, cried to the Judges as they rode by, Beware your heads. They looking up and fearing the fall of some tiles, the knave said he meant to admonish them to beware of the Parliament. Sir John Strangewaies observed that had their patents quamdiu bene se gesserint gave their votes for the subject in the cases of ship money, except Judge Jones; and all that had their patents durante beneplacito concluded for the King. He moved also that in cases that concerned the whole kingdom, the Judges were not competent Judges: only the House of Parliament was a competent judge in such cases. Sir Edward Dering's three parallels were these — betwixt the High Commission and the Inquisition; the Index Expurgatorius and the late licences for the press; the Pope and the ulterius orbis Papa: concluding he had rather serve a Pope living at Tiber than one that lived at the Thames. The King hath named the late Lords Commissioners to treat with the Scots. The Commissioners meet daily at Sir Abraham Williams in the Palace Yard; the Scots lodge in London.

1640, November 12. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke.

This morning the gaolers gave accompt to the House of the discharge of divers priests and Jesuits from their custody by warrants from Secretary Windebank. The King sent a message by Sir Thomas Jermyn that whereas he heard that Secretary Windebank was questioned for discharging priests, true it was that he had been directed by His Majesty to discharge divers priests for several causes. This was only in general, and how far it is like that verbal warrants of this nature may justify him you can judge. But the Secretary was commanded to withdraw the House, yet time would not permit to proceed far in this business, we being in the afternoon to attend the Lords in the Painted Chamber, where the Earl of Bristol acquainted us by His Majesty's commands with what had passed in the assembly of Peers at York, and in the Treaty at Ripon, which was the ordinary news you have heard. To-morrow I think it will be considered what course shall be taken to raise monies for the support of His Majesty's army, and for the allowance of the later 25,000*l.* for the second month, it being signified to our Lords Commissioners that the Northern Counties cannot supply it, and the Earl of Bristol affirming that the Scots may plunder to the value of a million. Some of the Scots Commissioners are come, the rest upon the way. I see that we shall be persuaded to tread in the same steps the Lords did at York. The City will not lend a penny more than the first 50,000*l.*

1640, November 15. London.—Sir J. Coke the Younger to Sir J. Coke at Melbourne.

I wrote to you last week by the post and this week two letters by Mr. Withrings' man. This day I spake with my brother Robert Gore who tells me that Captain Langham will take speedy care for wine for my mother. I hope no question will be made concerning my election. A sergeant-at-arms was sent for Mr. Holford the great grazier of Leicestershire before my arrival here, to answer the abuse he offered Sir Arthur Haslerigge at his election. My Lord of Huntingdon, Lord Hastings, and Mr. Hastings are come to town yesterday, as I am informed. The Lord Saye came to town about two days since. Mr. Fawnt intends to petition the Upper House. I shall speak with the Bishop of Carlisle in convenient time: and to-morrow my brother means to move for publication of the deposition taken in your case concerning Derby Hills, and to speak to Mr. Windham to forbear further interruption to the business of the fines due to you at Donington. I pray God to continue your good health and to bless us all in these dangerous times, and to settle truth and peace amongst us to the glory of his name and to the comfort and happiness of this kingdom. The Archbishop of York is certainly dead.

Coke MSS.

1640, November 16. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger (not signed) to Sir John Coke at Melbourne.

Upon Friday last Mr. Pimme moved the House that whereas those letters (specified in this inclosed note) were promised by my Lord Lieutenant from His Majesty and concerned the Lord Montmorris are now in agitation in Parliament, His Majesty might be moved by the Councillors now of the House to cause the copies of those letters to be produced. This was consented to and undertaken; and accordingly upon Saturday Sir H. Vane (not without malice as I believe) returned the answer from the King, that those letters were procured by Secretary Coke, who then had charge of those affairs, and as His Majesty was informed was now at his house in Derbyshire: but His Majesty would take a course that the House might be satisfied. And thus the business ceased without a word more spoken. The House being risen my brother immediately repaired to my Lord Montmorris, who was then in Westminster Hall, and being also sent for to dine this day with my Lord Clare, he met the Lord Montmorris at dinner with him. The Lord Montmorris expresses as much respect to you as is possible, and protests he hath no aim at all to lay any aspersion upon you herein, as he knoweth he cannot do: but that the sight of the copies of these letters is so essential to his cause, that he must needs press to see them. My brother told him that you had delivered all papers of such nature into the Paper Office: but he replied that he had searched at the Signet, and could find only the first, for the making of Sir Philip Mainwaring Secretary, which was attested by Secretary Windebank, but the other three he could not find: and whereas he had thought those papers had been taken at your hands by Mr. Railton, when you left your place, Mr. Railton being examined by the Committee had denied the knowledge of them. Wherefore he desires, since it can be no prejudice to you, you having been employed as a minister only in all Irish affairs, the addresses by His Majesty's appointment coming to your hands, that you would please to give him knowledge where the copies of those letters are, or directions concerning them. As for your procuring them he saith he knoweth the letters were sent out of Ireland ready drawn and that you only presented them to the King and got them signed. He saith that already he hath a copy of them and that they are attested with your name, but he mainly desireth farther satisfaction concerning them, and that he would willingly have waited upon you himself to have spoken with you of this business. Hereof we thought good to advertise you, that you may consider what to do herein, lest upon my Lord Montmorris pressing you should be sent for by the House to give accompt. We hope the King hath not sent to you as yet, which we have inquired at Whitehall as well as we can, but can hear nothing to that purpose. What evil intentions may be towards you, I cannot tell, but I must reveal all unto you. Newton's, the messenger's, name being mentioned in the House, my brother having advertised some of the House concerning that man, was called upon to declare his knowledge, and to inform the House, which upon the sudden he did in that manner that the Secretary Windebank was commanded to withdraw, and my brother got to himself much applause and commendation, and is voiced to be the man that hath overthrown the Secretary. What practises this may breed to asperse your name I cannot tell. But it is thought the Lieutenant and the Secretary are both lost men. Sir George Radcliffe was also sent for on Friday last by a sergeant-at-arms, as accused of high treason; and the King was moved as from the House to give his order also for his speedy repair hither notwithstanding that he is now a member of the Parliament now sedent in Ireland. This His Majesty hath promised to do. Sir Robert King is also sent for to give testimony against Sir George Radcliffe, concerning those words I mentioned in my last. Sir George's further accusation is that he is notoriously known to be a Counceillor to the Lieutenant. Yesterday Sir Henry Spiller was sent for by a sergeant-at-arms: he is accused for protecting of priests, and divers exorbitancies in the execution of commands concerning military affairs as deputy lieutenant in Middlesex. His name is very odious to the House. On Friday the supply towards the support of His Majesty's army in the relief of the Northern Counties came into debate: and it was thus far resolved that the sum of 100,000*l.* should by act of Parliament be forthwith raised, to be equally assessed upon every shire. And the citizens for London, viz. Alderman Pennington and his fellows, were desired to intimate to the City that the Parliament would desire that a part of this sum might be furnished from them for the present, to be repaid out of this contribution as soon as it should be raised. Their answer is reported to-morrow, when I think this business will be perfected and treasurers of our own appointed. The Scottish competency of 25,000*l.* for the second month being not to be raised out of those oppressed counties is secretly comprehended, under the title of the relief of the Northern Counties, who are like to suffer by plundering, if the article of composition be not performed. The Scottish Commissioners are arrived as I am informed: 3 Lords, Earl Rothes, Lowdon [Loudoun] and Dumferling [Dunfermline] 3 knights, 3 divines, and 3 citizens. Henderson is amongst them and the Sheriff of Tivydale [Teviotdale]. Secretary Windebank's business is referred to a committee, as the Lord Lieutenant's is. Yesterday it was ordered in the Upper House that no member of that House should go to the Lord Lieutenant, or from the Lord Lieutenant to the King. Also a select committee was appointed to inquire and examine the causes counsels and the management of this present war. To-morrow the Committee for religion sit, having not met as yet since the commencement of the Parliament. The voice at Court is this afternoon that for prevention the Lord Keeper is to be removed, and the Attorney to succeed in his place. I much desire to have advice from you concerning the Lord Montmorris, for my brother hath promised to let you know of his desire. The Northern Counties having suffered so much already are to be exempted from contributing to this new levy of 100,000*l.*

1640, November 16, being Monday. London.—Sir J. Coke the Younger to Sir J. Coke at Melbourne.

Mr. Pimme moved the House that three letters concerning my Lord Montmorris procured by the Lieutenant should be produced . . . Of this whole business I have given you accompt by Mr. Clagett: but hearing that Secretary Windebank hath sent a messenger to you this morning, I have sent this bearer post to bring these letters to you which Clagett hath with more haste, that you may not be surprised. The motion made by my brother against Secretary Windebank I fear hath exasperated them at Court: therefore you must consider well of this business. I fear they will be willing to lay as much of this load upon you as is possible. If this bearer cannot find Mr. Clagett, questionless he will be with you on Thursday at the furthest. God bless us in these dangerous times.

COKE MSS.

1640, December 7. Duchy House.—Earl of Newburgh to Sir John Coke at Melbourne.

Presuming that you and I are long since passed beyond the bounds of ceremony I was loth to answer your letter with idle lines, till I could send you a warrant for a doe, which this paper shall present unto you: and I shall always be studious upon all occasions to preserve the correspondence of that good friendship that hath been long betwixt us. I believe you leave much of the troubles of these times, which will prove unto the happiness of your safe retreat to a plentiful fortune and a life of freedom and quietness. Your brother Mr. Secretary Windebank hath lately made a retreat also, but upon ill terms, for being sharply prosecuted in the Lower House he is fled beyond the seas; I hope not distrusting his own innocency for great crimes, but his good nature and willingness to please having made him either neglect that warranty which should secure him, or adventure upon the transgressing of those laws which he did not know or think could be so dangerous to him in his place. And the King at this time being under the advice of the worst counselor, necessity, which takes from him all power to defend any servant of his, whom his own innocency, or the opinion of it in the Parliament, shall not protect. . . . I presume you have long since heard of the condition my Lord of Strafford is in, who is like to be the the greatest example of these times.

1640, December 15 (about). Sir J. Coke the Younger to the Right Honble. Sir John Coke. [No date.]

Upon Saturday a son of Sir Edward Coke, a member of our House, moved that account might be required of those manuscripts which were taken from his father in a barbarous manner some few days before his death by Secretary Windebank; and thereupon he mentioned that some such books had also been taken from his father by yourself formerly, as being employed in that service by His Majesty. The House is very desirous to recover these manuscripts, as supposing they contain many monuments of the subjects' liberties, and have joined my brother and myself in a committee with the Lord Falkland, Mr. Coke and Mr. Hyde for the discovery of these books. We presently repaired to Mr. Attorney General, who told us that the MS. books taken from Sir Edward Coke by Secretary Windebank were once by His Majesty's command in his hands, but were after received back by Secretary Windebank, as appeareth by a note testifying the same under Mr. Secretary's hand. But that he ever received any books of Sir Edward Coke's which had been taken from him by you he denied. But when we put him in mind of Attorney Noy's books, which upon his death came to his hands, and that those books having been by you delivered to Noy, came by this means to his hands also, he answered that therein he could not give us any precise satisfaction for the present, but would make search having all or the most of Noy's books still by him. This light my brother gave to the business, and I have undertaken to advertise you, and to desire you to give such light herein and such directions as you can, for the finding out of those books which were taken at first by yourself; for the others which were taken by Secretary Windebank, His Majesty hath promised to give the house further account, taking no notice of such as were taken by you. My humble desire is that you would in a letter, apart from any other business, give me such answer concerning this business of Sir Edward Coke's books as you shall think fit for me to represent to the House; Mr. Hyde having reported that I have undertaken to acquaint you herewith. This I pray that it may be by the return of the post, being more desirous to give the House a speedy account, because we are entrusted herein without any reflection upon your name from this act. Secretary Windebank, taking notice from Mr. Pym upon Wednesday last that he was first to be examined in the Lord Lieutenant's cause, and the examination being diverted for that day, thought it not fit for him to abide my Lord Lieutenant's business and his own together, the report having been made very foul against him and he being called to his answer. Yet it seems he dreaded more the examination in the Lieutenant's case than his own proper accusation, for upon summons he was come into the House upon Wednesday to answer for himself with confidence enough. But Mr. Pym desired his answer might be at present forbore in regard he was first to be examined in the Lieutenant's cause, I think that his testimony might be the more competent. But the Lords being risen that examination was diverted for that day, and about two of the clock upon Wednesday night Mr. Secretary took oars at Lion Quay or at Queenhithe or Billingsgate, being brought thither in his coach. By six of the clock he was at Gravesend, and being stopped at Margate he passed there unsearched under the name of a Frenchman, by virtue of a Warrant under the King's hand, whether counterfeit I know not. The wind was then in the East full in his teeth, what is become of him I hear not. It is reported that he hath passed over 40,000*l.* by Bills of Exchange, but I know no certain ground hereof. His son delivered up the seals to the King upon Friday morning. Upon Thursday we sent for him to be examined, and answer was returned that having been up all night upon His Majesty's affairs, he had newly betaken himself to his rest, being very ill; but notwithstanding he would come if we required. This was accepted for his excuse, when in truth he was fled the night before. Sir George Redcliffe rendered himself in Westminster Hall upon Thursday, being the day that Windebank ran away. He had certainly concealed himself in town many days and had conferred with the Lieutenant, who is very jocund, makes his servants new liveries, and hath chosen that seat in the Chapel within the Tower where Mr. Prynne always sat when he was prisoner there, and bows reverently at the altar. He shews no fear of the new axe which the Lord Cottington caused to be made lately whilst he was Constable, and adorned it with silver. This day the news is certain that the Deputy of Ireland, Sir Christopher Wainsford [Wandesford], is dead: upon the first word he received of the Lieutenant's accusation and imprisonment he swooned, and died within a very few days after. Mr. Withrings business is to come on to-morrow at the committee of grievances, but I believe it will be again put off, for Mr. Robert Barkham's petition concerning his estate in the Fens precedes it in order, and I believe will hold the whole afternoon. Dr. Bastwick came yesternight into London, accompanied with seven or eight hundred horse. Petitions are preferred by those that have been fined and undone for visiting Mr. Prynne after his sentence, when there was no order to the contrary. His Grace's name is questioned about the receipt of two hogsheads of sack: his servant being bribed also to procure mitigation of a fine in one of those cases. The dispute of the Canons cannot pass many days if it be not to-morrow, which will I believe bring the Bishops upon the stage, as the ship money hath done the Judges. The Lord Falkland said that an excellent prince had been extremely abused, his judges telling him that in law, his divines that in conscience, and his ministers that in policy, he might do what he liked. Sir Tobit Mathews is also run away for fear of further question. Mr. Holford is out of the Tower again, but hath not yet made his submission. Divers Lords have been examined, Archbishop, Cottington, Northumberland, Mr. Treasurer, Mr. Comptroller, Salisbury, Privy Seal, and Lord Marquis Hamilton. It is said that the King hath interceded with the Scots for the Marquis, to whom he bears witness that he ever advised to peace; and also for the Earl of Traquair; the others he hath left to themselves. A cessation of arms is concluded for a month longer upon the former conditions.

1640, December.—Sir J. Coke to Sir J. Coke the Younger, endorsed "Sir Edward Coke's books, account to the Parliament."

I understand by your letter that those honourable persons with whom you and your brother are joined in the committee concerning Sir Edward Coke's manuscript desire to have from me some light and direction how to find them out. It is true that His Majesty, having received information as I suppose from his then Attorney that Sir Edward had a book ready for the press which much concerned his royal prerogative, commanded me to repair to him at his house in Stoke, and to require him to send by me the said book. Accordingly I went, and Sir Edward carried me into his study and suffered me to take that book, which I thought was for which I was sent; and that I brought immediately to His Majesty's hands the same day. Whereupon His Majesty sent for his said Attorney Mr. Noy, and put the book and such loose papers as were brought therewith (sic). Mr. Noy at the receipt took notice of the book, but said it was not the same which had been required, for that was a new book. More than this for matter of fact I cannot relate, having never perused any leaf of the book nor been otherwise employed about it. What my then brother secretary, who was much more active, did afterwards indeed I cannot tell nor ever did inquire. Neither do I know what advice to give therein. This only I believe from Mr. Noy's report, that there was another book which came not to my hands, and whether the Secretary got it afterwards I know not, and suppose Sir Edward's executors and servants can give more notice of it; having reason to suppose from Mr. Noy's speeches that he got notice of that book from his own scribe whom I did not know. Neither can I say anything more of this business, but pray for the success of all your affairs, and that in the end we then secretaries may be found honest men.

1640, December 16. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger (not signed) to Sir John Coke at Melbourne.

Sets forth the two resolutions of the House, nemine contradicente, (1) against the new Canons and (2) that the benevolences granted by the Convocation ought not to bind the clergy.

A Committee was appointed to prepare the business of the Canons to be transferred to the Lords, and to examine the promoters and principal actors in the framing of the new Canons, and the execution of them and by whom; and particularly to examine the proceedings of the Archbishop of Canterbury in the great design of the subversion of our laws and religion, and to draw up a charge against the said Archbishop and other offenders in the premises. I believe there is no question but the Archbishop will be accused of high treason; and those Bishops that shall excuse themselves upon his violent and compulsory carriage in the Convocation are like to fare the best, as I conceive. It will be objected against him that he gave consent to the counsel of the Lieutenant when he proposed the reducing of this kingdom by force.

Also this day the Lords Commissioners represented to the Upper House an accusation from the Scotch Commissioners against the Earl of Strafford and the Archbishop of Canterbury as the principal and common incendiaries of both kingdoms. The particulars are expected to follow. This day Mr. Withrings' petition began to be heard, and Mr. Treasurer hath this day fortnight given him to make his defence. I think there is no doubt but the sequestration is wholly illegal; but I fear even his patent for the foreign letters will be adjudged a monopoly, and a new establishment by Act of Parliament will be vehemently urged, wherein what consideration will be had of poor Withrings I cannot tell. The Treasurer is too hard for him. Upon Sir Arthur Haslerigge's motion Mr. Henry Hastings, Sir Thomas Hartopp, Sir Henry Hastings of Branson, Sir John Bale, and Mr. Richard Holford of Wiston [Halford of Wistow] are sent for to the committee appointed to examine the miscarriages of deputy lieutenants; Sir Arthur having undertaken to prove that they have of spleen charged divers poor men with arms, and after discharged them of the same for monies. This was done yesterday in the evening. Upon the receipt of this inclosed letter Mr. Hatfield, the keeper of Alton Park (a man known to Mr. Mayo) will deliver to your use a fat doe of this season: or else Mr. Withrings is much mistaken, who gave it to me for that purpose. Mr. Chaloner of Duffield brings two other letters of mine to you dated this week, and if he be not gone out of town I intend to send this by him also.

1640, December 22. Westminster.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke at Melbourne.

Mr. Lenthall and Mr. Marston, merchants have petitioned the House against Sir William Russell and others of the Barbary Company concerning the stay of a ship called the Hopewell. Sir W. Russell, &c. pretend that the Barbary Company had no hand in the stay of this ship, but endeavour to discharge themselves and the complaint wholly upon you, by whose means they say the ship was stayed, and not by them. Mr. Lenthall and Mr. Marston think the evidence which you can give very material to their cause; but to spare you the trouble of so long a journey the Committee have commanded me to acquaint you herewith, and they are contented to admit of your certificate under your hand. It seems by the merchants that the ship was first stayed by a warrant under your hand alone; but after nine days they obtained a hearing before the Lords, where Sir William Russell and others appeared to justify the cause of the stay of the ship. But their reasons were disallowed, and they got an order from the Board for the discharge of the ship. Notwithstanding within two hours after the order came aboard another order under the King's own hand overtook it, commanding the stay of the ship, notwithstanding the order of discharge from the Lords; and this order under the King's hand came post signed with your name for the hast of the dispatch. Hereupon the ship being again stayed they lost their adventure to their damage of 6,000*l.* which they petition may be repaid to them by Sir W. Russell. They say farther that a year after this second stay they obtained hearing again before the Lords, where you discharged yourself upon the Barbary Company who gave the information, and thereupon they were remitted to the law, where they have obtained no redress. Their desire is that you would certify in your letter to me what you know of this business, and whether these stays of the ship were not made upon the informations and instance of the Barbary Company, who would discharge themselves and the reparations upon you, as the sole promoter of the business, and the procurer of His Majesty's order without their instance. This cause is to be heard before the Committee of Trade upon this day fortnight, being 5 January, before which time they entreat that I may hear from you, that so the Committee my be informed from my hand. You will please to give such an accompt herein as you shall think fit for your own discharge. This being in agitation Sir Robert Pye stood up and said that it would be necessary in other businesses of a higher nature concerning the King's revenue that you should be sent for by the House hereafter; but for the present occasion all went very well, contented to accept of your account in writing; divers expressing themselves with much respect towards you, and especially Sir Robert Pye, adding that no man in England understood the Navy and Office of the Ordnance so well as yourself, in the regulation whereof it would be of absolute necessity to have your assistance. Being desirous to take advantage of the present post, I write in great haste unto you here in the Clerks' lobby.

On Monday morning the Lord Keeper coursed us with a many fair words and much eloquence, but offering nothing material for their excuse or justification, only discharging himself in some things upon His Majesty's commands, he prevailed so little as that he was soon after his departure voted, and my Lord Falkland commanded forthwith to attend the Lords with an accusation of high treason against him. But his speech and the debates had taken up the time, and the Lords were then risen, so the accusation was necessarily deferred to this day, which gave the Keeper opportunity to run away last night. But we accused him this day notwithstanding, and fearing the like escapes we moved their Lordships that the Judges Bramston, Davenport, Berkeley, Trevoire [Trevor], Crawley and Weston might forthwith give in security to abide the judgment of Parliament. The Lords have taken them bound in 10,000*l.* a piece for their appearance de die in diem for a week, then they are severally to put in security by others for the like sums, or else they must render their bodies. Chief Justice Littleton had this morning a commission sealed to be Speaker in the Upper House in the Keeper's room. Secretary Windebank is at Paris, but not in the Bastille. I received your letter concerning Sir Edward Coke's books, but I have not yet reported it to the House. I cannot this week send down your horses, but the next week I shall. One of them got a prick in the foot, and hath recovered it, but not fit to travel in the usual ways as yet. In extreme haste lest the post prevent me.

1640, December 23. Gray's Inn.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke at Melbourne.

I wrote yesternight to you by the post of Lichfield and on Monday by a servant of the Earl of Stamford. Bishop of Bathonwells [Bath and Wells] is run away. You will please to give such accompt in the merchants' business concerning the stay of their ship as may discharge yourself. They pretend the ship was bound for Spain and not for Barbary. Sir John Curzon adventures down but he will be fined, for the House adjourns only upon Christmas even and meets again on Tuesday. I write in bed.

(1640.)—Copy of a petition without address, stated to be subscribed by the Earl of Barrymore and the Colonels

Lieutenant Colonels } of the army now
Sergeant Majors } in the North.
Captains

May it please your Excellency. We are extremely sorry to trouble your Excellency with more complaints, but this grievance so much concerns us all in honour that we must humbly beseech your Excellency to receive it, and in the behalf of your poor servants to represent it to the right honourable the House of Parliament, for their opinion of our force and number and the distrust of our integrity in our musters. We presume that their own course that they now take will suddenly show them how reports have abused and injured us. But first we complain as that by the long neglect of sending our pay we have been enforced (contrary to our dispositions and quality of our former lives) to oppress a poor country, to live upon the courtesy and at the discretion of strangers which they and we are both weary of. Next as we are soldiers the season puts us in mind of drawing into the field. And we know part of the Scotch army hath already removed, though under pretence of enlarging their quarters, yet jealousy is no species in our professions of fear but wisdom. And though we want neither courage nor will to oppose them if they advance, but rather desire to seek and find them out, yet the long want of pay hath so oppressed both officer and soldier that for that reason only we are very unable to march, and worse to subsist long in the field. But that which chiefly discourageth us is that our humble address by petition formerly hath found neither credit nor brought remedy to our sufferings. We are very sensible that the honour of our nation hath been unfortunately foiled in the first part of this business, but we have to manage what is left that if the perverse endeavours of some do not cross us our future proceedings shall neither deserve the world's shame nor reproach. And we are confident that if the resolution of that honourable assembly please, with our endeavours, to restore to English arms their ancient height of glory, and because we well know that the due and proper administration of justice hath been the mother of exactest discipline and most prosperous success in all armies, we shall with willingness and humility embrace the pleasure of the Parliament neither to add nor take from the articles we have received and are sworn to observe. But yet in our serious and mature deliberations we find and must conclude that a Commission of Judges with us unexperienced and unpractised in our way and profession must produce great inconveniences to the service, and may breed derision which is the ruin and bane of all government. In these and many other we humbly beseech the Parliament to prevent those endeavours that would impose such innovation upon us as must necessarily deprive us of the chief privileges and rights of our commands. Thus we humbly take leave and rest your Excellency's most obedient servants.

1640–1, January 12. Westminster.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke at Melbourne. Leave this at Jervas Greene's house in Derby to be delivered according to the superscription.

This afternoon the cause against the Barbary Company was taken into consideration before the Committee for Trade: but the Defendants making it appear that the cause was at this present depending and the parties at issue in the Court of the Admiralty, and commission out for the examination of witnesses, the Committee thought it not fit to admit the cause per saltum into the Parliament house, but committed the cause to the Admiralty, where if justice were not done according to the merits of the cause they might complain in proper time. Thus I was discharged of giving any accompt from you in this business, there being no cause or any mention made of your name, or any accompt required from me.

COKE MSS.

1640–1, February 2. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir J. Coke at Melbourne. (This letter is not signed, and is in a disguised writing.)

His Majesty hath taken two or three days longer to consider of the reprieve of the priest, whereby you will judge what caitiff action the Parliament is like to receive in this particular. The Lords have taken till to-morrow to consider of the time they will allot to my Lord Lieutenant for the giving of his answer. I perceive that his party in the Lords house doth rather increase than diminish: and yet now it is generally believed that Bedford shall be Lord Treasurer speedily. Yesterday I had it from no ill hand that he hath already conferred a messenger's place upon Mr. Stockdale. It is believed that Mr. Pimme shall be Chancellor of the Exchequer and that Lord Saye shall be Master of the Wards. I understand from the Popish party that these afore-mentioned men Bedford Pimme and Saye do attend the Queen in private. It is thought that Bristol aims at the Deputyship of Ireland, and his son at some preferment in Court. If these men come in by the Queen's side there is art enough somewhere. And how their preferment sorts with the reprieve of this priest and with the King's firmness to the Deputy you will judge. The heat in the Lower House increases. This day was spent in examining Doctor Burges and Doctor Downing, who having subscribed the petition from the 750 ministers were said by my Lord Digby to disavow part of the remonstrance. They confessed, the one viz., Doctor Burges, that he had desired the Lord Digby that the whole remonstrance might not be read at one time, lest the length thereof might divert the present debate of Church government: the other, viz. Doctor Downing, said that he was not well satisfied of the manner of expression in some part of the remonstrance, and that he conceived some points contained were of too low a nature to be presented to so high a court. But they both absolutely avowed the substance of the whole remonstrance to be according to their judgments. There was some art in this, thereby to cast some blemish upon this petition and the subscribers: it was seconded by Sir John Strangeways, but neither he nor the Lord Digby came clear of this business in the opinion of the hearers, though they were contented to let them take it upon them that they had justified themselves. Though indeed the explanations of the Doctors took off that sense from their speeches which my Lord Digby had represented. Selden struck in with Digby and Strangeways: they were principally opposed by Hamilton, Holles, and Pimme, who desired to uphold the credit of the petition. More passion appeared now than heretofore. Some fear the dissolution of the Parliament, others not. I cannot perceive that the Scots do at all relinquish their first principles, without whom all this art will be to no purpose. The Bishops' party seems to increase in the Lower House. I doubt most are for their reformation only, whereas it appears to me by what is represented against them that their order is a burthen and a dangerous inconvenience in this commonwealth. I refer you to my packet sent this way by the Ashby carrier.

1640–1, February 22. London.—John Cartwright to Sir John Coke, at his house in Melbourne.

Emanuel. After my long and great oppressions in Russia, by Divine Providence the Emperor is now become a suitor to His Majesty, and hath sent his letters by one of my own servants out of Russia, entreating His Majeaty to give me leave to come over to serve him in the mines, in which I so long since by your Honour's means presented my service in writing to His Majesty, and for my service therein hath promised the tenth part of the profit for five years, and hath paid 500*l.* into the Agent's hand to be made over into England to defray my charges in coming over; for effecting whereof the Agent hath written unto the Governor and Company to pay me the money, if upon these terms I will come over to serve the Emperor. But they refuse to pay me any all through the malice of some particular men of the Company, by whose oppressions I have suffered many years to the ruining of myself, poor wife, and children. They have enforced me to petition against them in Parliament for redress of these and all former oppressions, wherein your Honour's testimony will do me exceeding much good; concerning which, in regard of your Honour's age and remoteness, I have prevailed with the Master of the Chair for the Grand Committee to accept of your testimony in writing. To which end I have made bold to put your Honour in mind of these particular passages following, viz., [states his dealings with the Governor (Sir John Merrick) and Corporation of the Russia Company since 1630; his employment to carry the King's letters to the Duke of Holstein, and other German Princes, to Mr. Avory in Hamburgh, his endeavours to open trade with Archangel, &c.]. I doubt not but through God's blessing the Parliament will so take my business to heart that justice will be given upon those that have wronged me; and I put in such a way whereby to do my King and country and the general Company of Russia merchants a great service: I being as certain of this rich mine in Russia as I am living, and am in great probability of a second. I am much beholden to your noble son in Parliament for seconding my just cause in the House of Commons, whose favour I hope I shall live to requite.

1640–1, March 13 and 14. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir J. Coke at Melbourne. (Not signed, and in a disguised writing.)

We have been this week exercised in conferences with the Lords concerning the Earl of Strafford's trial. Now the Lords resolve that the place shall be Westminster Hall; that the House of Commons shall be present as a Committee of the whole House; that the evidence shall be managed by members of the Lower House; and that the Earl's counsel shall not stand at the bar, but in some convenient place where they may hear, without permission to speak until the whole evidence be concluded; then they may speak to matter of law, but not to matter of mere fact; and the Lords reserve to themselves the judgment what shall be accounted matter of law and what matter of fact. But this does not as yet give us satisfaction, because the admission of us as a Committee is exclusive of our being there in the capacity of a House; and secondly, we like not the distinction the Lords make of law and mere fact. We have added a saving of our rights; and so have the Lords also, with profession that this shall not be drawn into precedent hereafter. These answers of the Lords are still under commitment with us.

In the Committee of the Lords it was carried by 26 voices against 14 that the Lieutenant should be admitted no counsel at his trial, but when that vote was reported to their House, it was overruled in the whole House by 20 voices that he should be admitted his counsel ut supra.

The Lord Brooke was called to the bar yesterday by the Earl of Bath, but excused by the Earl of Essex. The exception that Bath took was that in a speech he mentioned these heads, viz., God, the Parliament and the King, putting the King after the Parliament.

COKE MSS.

There is no good blood amongst them. The Earl of Bath is a very good friend to the Bishops. The Bishops are caused to withdraw when the Earl of Strafford's cause comes into any agitation amongst the Lords.

A cessation of arms is concluded for a month longer, to end 16th of April. The Scots have delivered in divers demands, as heads of the 8th Article, concerning the establishment of a sure peace: so many and of such nature, that I doubt the treaty will not end before Midsummer, and they must be maintained as long as they stay. But we begin to talk of lessening both armies, to lessen thereby the charge. Sir John Strangeways opposes the disbanding of the Irish army until we see what will become of the treaty; but that is overruled by the other side, who labour to get all the strength of the Kingdom into the hands of that party. But without question we cannot reap any benefit from that popish army: God cannot be with them for our good, however affairs are shapen.

Generally through the town it is now voted that the Lieutenant shall suffer, and his trial suddenly expected, a week it will be ere the scaffold can be made ready in Westminster Hall. Some of the Lieutenant's enemies say that he is led in a string by the Lords, and fed with hopes of life, thereby to prevent his appeachment of others: but I do not think he will die a fool. And those Lords that hope to settle themselves in place by making of shows on his behalf with design that the rigour against him shall be the work of the House of Commons may perchance miss of some of their ends. The Treasurer V. [Vane] is quite out of power both with the Queen and the King, who have chidden him bitterly the last week, as one that have betrayed him, and joins with a faction against him. Since that time he hath been but once for an hour at the House of Commons: his friends pretend that the treaty with the Dutch Ambassadors takes up all his time.

The Committee for the ministers' remonstrance hath presented these three heads to the House to be considered. (1.) That secular employment, by which is intended their legislative and judicial power in Parliament, their judicial power in the Starchamber, and their commissions for the peace and their employments as Privy Councillors at the Council table, and in temporal offices. (2.) Sole power in ecclesiastical things, by which is intended ordination and censures. (3.) The greatness of the revenues of Deans and Chapters, the little use of them, and the greatness of the inconveniences that come by them. Dr. Bromriche and others offered themselves to the House by Mr. Bridgeman, the Bishop's son, to defend the right and cause of Bishops: but the House was not willing to hear them, especially concerning the first head, for which it is conceived that nothing could be argued. Whether they will admit them to defend power of Bishops in the second head concerning ordination and censures I cannot tell. Upon the two first branches of the first head these two votes are already passed. (1.) The legislative and judicial power of Bishops in the House of Peers in Parliament is a hindrance to the discharge of their spiritual function, prejudicial to the commonwealth, and fit to be taken away by bill, and that a bill be drawn to that purpose. (2.) That the Bishops or any clergymen whatever to be in commission for the peace, or to have any judicial power in the Starchamber, or any other civil courts is a hindrance to their spiritual function, prejudicial to the commonwealth, and fit to be taken away by bill, and a bill to be drawn to that purpose. In debate of the first vote, Mr. Selden puzzled all the House with a dispute of the right by which Bishops sit in Parliament, and convinced most that they do not sit there ratione Baroniæ, in respect of their temporal Baronies, which was the received opinion ; but this diverted nothing of the vote : the second vote followed with little ado.

I hear this night that there is a fellow sent to Newgate for publishing prophecies that 1 April there shall be snow a yard deep, and the 1 of May next shall be more blood shed than ever was in England. The Lord Cottington is said to have most privacy with the King; other counsel proceeding from the Queen's side. God bless us all and send us peace without factious, violent, and unjust proceedings. Quis talia fando temperet a lacrymis? Where should men hope for equal and impartial justice but in Parliament. It is a good rule to trust in God, and not in man ; he is the shield to those that trust in him.

1640–1, March 15 (Monday). London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke at Melbourne.

This day the Lords let us know that the Earl of Strafford shall be called to his trial upon Monday next which will 22 March at 9 of the clock in the morning. The scaffolds are now building in Westminster Hall, and it is generally conceived that he shall suffer. That which induces me to believe it is like to go hard with him is the protestation which the Lords have this day made against that part of his answer wherein he laboureth to discharge the levying of monies by force in Yorkshire upon the concurrence of the great Council. This seems half a condemnation of him. The Treasurer came this day to the House. The debate was whether we should gratify the Queen in permitting her the service and attendance of Sir John Winter her Secretary, whose sequestration from Court we formerly desired. The close Committee is divided upon this point, and the debate is put off until to-morrow. The merit of the Queen was so much extolled in the employment of her interests and power with the King both for the calling of this present Parliament, as also for the passing of the Triennial Bill, that a gentleman had good cause to take notice that His Majesty was too much pretermitted. Withrings had another very good day of this present Monday : but he hath now without the advice of his friends put himself under the protection of the Earl of Warwick by passing some interest in his places to him. This the violent prosecution of his adversaries hath driven him unto, out of his fear to be oppressed. I wish by this means he do not lose all in the end. The proclamation of banishing of priests and Jesuits you shall herewith receive : I wish it be better observed than the last was for the banishing of papists from this city. In the Parliament in Ireland they have accused the Lieutenant, Sir George Radcliffe, the Chief Justice Lowther, the Chancellor Sir R. Bolton, the Bishop of Derry and Mr. Little the Lieutenant's secretary. The last four are under the Black Rod in Ireland.

1640–1, March 16. London.—Edward Reed to Sir John Coke at Melbourne.

The States of Holland do (give aid unto the Portingale (Portugal) against the King of Spain, which kingdom is so well fortified in this short time that the King of Spain hath little hope to recover it. There are two Ambassadors from Portingale. One landed at Plymouth, and is now here going for Holland : his stay here is to know whether the King will receive the ambassador, whose employment is hither (and now is at Dartford) as an ambassador, or not. I hear the King is inclined to receive him, and will not dispute the title and difference : but as yet he cometh not forward. The Catalonians have put themselves into the protection of the French King, and Barcelona is delivered by them into his hands. Aragon and Castile are upon revolting. The Maderes (Madeira) I hear are delivered unto the Hollanders. The Emperor, seeing the declining of this king, doth offer peace unto all his princes; and doth offer to deliver up the Palatines (Palatinate) unto the Prince Elector, but as yet standeth for the Duke of Bavaria to be Elector during his life. The Lords and States of Flanders and Brabant are preparing for a revolt, and how the Prince of Egmont doth incite them unto it this inclosed will advertise you. The Duke of Lorraine hath made his peace with the French King: he is to possess his dukedom during his life, and after to fall unto the Crown of France, which it is thought his brother will quarrel for, if the Cardinal Renselaer were dead, who keepeth that kingdom without fractions. Mexico, as the report is, is revolted, and hath seized the treasure that is there as their own, which is reported to be 14 millions. So that all the countries and islands under his government make haste to that King's speedy ruin. My Lord of Bedford is to be Lord Treasurer.

Coke MSS.

1640–1, March 22. Buckminster.—Sir Edward Hartopp to Sir John Coke at Melbourne

I do not forget how much my duty doth oblige me to wait upon you and how often, which maketh me exceedingly afraid my long absence doth appear a wilful neglect to your Honour. But truly Sir, I have had such an unlucky disease amongst my horses that it hath made them blind and utterly unuseful for the present, constraining me to keep home until I can furnish myself otherwise for such a journey. My wife humbly commendeth her duty to your Honour: she hath been very lately ill and hath miscarried, but praised be God, she recovereth very fast and groweth strong again. The physicians doth advise her (in respect it did proceed from an internal defect and not from any accident, as also in regard of her little daughter who is far spent with the ricketts) to seek remedy at London this spring, to which I willingly assent, but shall account it a great happiness both to my wife and myself, in respect I cannot go along with her, if my Lady would please to give her leave to wait upon her: not to put her Ladyship to any charge or further trouble after their arrival at London. I humbly desire your Honour to pardon my boldness, for I thought it my duty to let you know this much, being unwilling to do anything, especially in what concerneth your daughter, without your advice and approbation. My father and mother commend their humble service to your Honour and my Lady.

1641, March 27. Trusley.—Richard Coke to Sir J. Coke, at Melbourne.

Yesternight about 7 o'clock it pleased God to take my father out of misery into glory, as I may well presume by his comfortable end. His desire was to be carried to Kirkby to be buried by my mother, which God willing I purpose to perform with as much expedition as may be. My request is that you would be pleased by this messenger to direct me what course to take for his burial. Thus, with my humble service to your lady and the rest, hastily concludeth your servant to be commanded.

1641. April 12. Hamburg.—Joseph Averie to Sir J. Coke.

I was affected with much grief and amazement when I first understood that another was substituted in that place which your Honour had managed so long and so worthily. I have now seen by trial what it is to want the favour and furtherance every way of such a patron as I ever found your honour, and more particularly in the point of my arrears. My chiefest hopes in this kind are in Sir Thomas Roe, who hath very honourably promised me his best aid: but I see the indigence of the time, and dare not put it unto trial until I see them more favourable, and his Majesty's coffers better supplied. I acknowledge my obligations to your Honour from my heart, as I have desired my good friend Mr. Ashwell to express it something further in my behalf.

1641, April 15. Little Sanctuary, London.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford, to Sir John Coke.

According to your direction in your last letter, I made relation of your respects to the Lord Goring and Lord Cottington. The first took it with show of great gladness to hear of your health and quiet in which you lived, saying that he thought God did remove you from the dangers and troubles of these times of His goodness towards you; adding also at large many words both of your worth and goodness, and his ever loving respects to you. The other, the Lord Cottington, made the like relation of his gladness to know of your health: but when I added that himself and the Lord Treasurer knew of something due to you by your place and the King's favour at your leaving the Court which you have not received, Oh, saith he, you mean concerning moneys: Yes, my Lord, said I: to whom he answering shortly, The devil of money is here, went his way; of whom since that I have not had a word: this is the relation of that matter. I met yesterday with my Lord Bishop of Lichfield, who falling into a declaration of the worth of our cousin Francis Coke in his diocese, and of the great respect he bears to you with all our family, told me that he was sorry to hear my Lord of Clare complain of our cousin Francis as one troublesome and unthankful, and desired me to be a means to let Francis know of this; and afterwards meeting me again in the afternoon told me in plain terms that my Lord means to out him of his parsonage; and he tells me also by what means, that is by proving his living not to be in his gift when he bestowed it upon him, but in the King's, by reason of his not suing out his livery; and therefore thinks it meet that cousin Francis should get a presentation from the Court of Wards or the Chancery ad corroborandum titulum, which will prevent all dangers, especially that may have been before his institution into it: as for what may have fallen since by his own default he must look to it. This I thought good to certify you of, that you may, as you see cause, give him notice of it, with what directions you think fit both to admonish him of his carriage to my Lord of Clare, and not too strictly to stand upon terms with him though in case of right; but to forbear for a time, and especially to advise him what to do to save himself from this danger in case it be found true. I am the more willing to believe this in cousin Francis, because I myself, since I conferred (out of a great respect to him above all next my son) that office of Chantership in our Church, he hath showed himself very unthankful and unfriendly to myself in an unjust and idle suspicion he hath not spared to divulge against me about that business; yet for all this I cannot forget that natural respect I have of him to give him warning of his ensuing danger.

1641, April 17, Saturday.—Sir John Coke, the Younger, "For your Honour." (No signature.) Endorsed "Son John, London."

Though the evidence concerning matter of fact be finished on both sides, yet the argument of law concerning the offences charged upon the Earl of Strafford is but this day begun on the Earl's behalf by

Mr. Lane, the Prince's Attorney. The bill of attainder is still under commitment in the House of Commons, and they have voted that the Earl of Strafford hath endeavoured to subvert the fundamental laws of the kingdoms of England and Ireland, and to introduce a tyrannical government. The case stands thus: None of the offences proved against the said Earl can be brought within the statute of 25 Edward 3rd, which declareth what offences shall be treason, and is confirmed by the statute of 1 Henry 4, and the statute 1° Mariae. Therefore if the House of Commons proceed to demand judgment of the Lords, without question they will acquit him, there being no law extant whereupon to condemn him of treason. Wherefore the Commons are determined to desert the Lords' judicature, and to proceed against him by bill of attainder, whereby he shall be adjudged to death upon a treason now to be declared; to which intent they have voted ut supra, which conclusion is induced upon these premises: That the particular misdemeanours proved against him were by him committed with intent thereby to overthrow the fundamental laws and to introduce a tyrannical government, which intent of his, expressed in an endeavour by these acts, shall by a subsequent law be declared high treason. Now how far a man may take upon his conscience to determine what the intentions of another man were in the doing of such particular actions is a point worth some consideration with those that are to judge in a case of blood: and how agreeable it is that the punishment should precede the promulgation of the law. It is an old rule "ubi non est lex non est transgressio." Besides it is agreed on all sides that the laws are not subverted. And it was never heard that intentions were reckoned for treason in any other case than where the conspirator intended or endeavoured the death of the King. But if a man labour to bring cold and impartial thoughts along with him, and be persuaded that Judges are bound in their consciences to judge secundum allegata et probata, and that by God's law matter of fact is to be established in the mouths of two witnesses at the least, perchance he will be compelled to reduce the charge of this Earl into a narrow room, and things may appear to him not to be of that exorbitant nature they are publicly declaimed; and an indifferent man may perchance satisfy himself upon the whole matter that certainly this Earl never had any such intentions as to subvert the law. There are two other rules of charity, "Unusquisque puniendus est secundum quantitatem delicti," et, "in dubio semper praesumitur pro reo." I shall in time give you relation of this famous trial; for I intend to attend it to the end, which no man can as yet define either in regard of the time or event. The Lords (excepting some few) are supposed to be his sure friends. In the House of Commons he hath not any party very considerable, some think about a hundred. To balance the Lords there is a petition preparing in the City with 20,000 or 30,000 hands subscribed; the effect to complain of the decay of trade, and to demand justice against the Earl of Strafford. The loan of the 120,000*l.* promised for the payment of the armies is stopped to boot. The Scots lie near to Berwick with 5,000 men and have that town in their power; and their design is thought not to work any longer in the North, but that being provided of vessels at Newcastle they are ready to transport their forces to London, where they have a very strong party amongst the discontented citizens; so that unless this Earl be sacrificed to the public discontentment I see not what hopes we have of peace. The King is every day present at the trial, but looks pale and dejected. The Earl of Strafford's chief hope is in the Lords, for if the bill pass that House there will be danger to him of His Majesty's assent. The Earl of Strafford looks well and cheerfully. Mr. Lane this day declared that he never had advised with his counsel concerning any matter of fact, and that the law he had offered was also wholly of his own. Doubtless he hath made a very able defence of himself and his personal worth is very hardly to be equalled. He walks daily in the Tower singing of psalms; and he concluded his defence in this manner, "And (my Lords) be your righteous judgment for life or death, Te Deum laudamus, Te Dominum confitemur." The Earl of Northumberland and Lord Conway have resigned their commands. The Earl of Holland is made general of the Army, and Colonel Goring his Lieutenant General, in the place of the Earl of Strafford. As yet we hear of no Lieutenant General of the Horse. The Prince of Orange's son is expected here with the next wind. Sir Thomas Rowe is preparing for his journey into Germany to the Diet. It is not yet declared that sailors may be pressed to serve in His Majesty's ships, and consequently the ships are not yet set to sea. It may be supposed that those ships might give interruption to the transportation of forces out of the North into the river of Thames. And the authority of the Deputy Lieutenants hangs in suspense, and shaken. I will not say that it may not be in the power of any man to raise the forces of the kingdom to resist &c. Sir John Strangeways hath withdrawn himself into the country. COKE MSS

[Endorsed by Sir John Coke the Younger "Sir Maurice Abbot's son is broke for 130,000*l.*]

1641, April 24. London.—Sir John Coke, the Younger. [No address, no signature.] Endorsed "Son John, London."

Upon Thursday last in the afternoon the bill for the attainder of the Earl of Strafford having passed the committee of the whole House, passed also the vote of the House itself, and was transmitted to the Lords by the hand of Mr. Pym. Since then it hath lain still in their House, together with those fragments of the counsels given to His Majesty 5th May 1640: Mr. Treasurer's pretended notes not finding credit enough with the Lords to remove the Lord Cottington, either from that House or the Council table; though it again hath been reported that his Lordship had surrendered his places for the use of the Lord Saye and Mr. Pym. In the Lower House the bill of attainder passed not without more opposition than was expected, it seeming to divers men of good sense and understanding a very hard case that the life of a man should be taken away by an Act of Parliament made for that purpose, if he were not liable to that judgmenet by any former law. Upon the division of the House 204 voted for the bill, the rest (being 76) consented not: hereby you will perceive that near 200 were absent, a symptom of no great satisfaction. The Lord Digby declared himself as much on the behalf of the Lieutenant as he had done formerly against him, and gave his reasons, that he had at first accused him upon the article of reducing this kingdom by the power of the Irish army, wherein being of the committee, though he saw no other testimony discovered but that of Mr. Treasurer Vane, yet he was borne in hand by Mr. Pym that Mr. Treasurer's testimony should be confirmed by other men's notes: but finding in conclusion these to be Mr. Treasurer's own notes also, it caused him to remember that Mr. Treasurer was twice examined before he could charge his memory with this counsel concerning the Irish army, which gave him occasion to believe that he, that upon three weeks' recollection could not remember a matter of this nature, might misremember it a week after when he was the third time examined. This speech of the Lord Digby's nettled many of those that were forward for the passing of the bill, and a pretence from Mr. Pym that he had lost some papers which concerned this great affair drew some suspicion upon the Lord Digby with divers. Whereupon he was vehemently questioned in the House especially upon his speech. But he behaved himself so well in his defence that no blame could be fastened upon him, and Mr. Treasurer's testimony was little edified thereby. Thus you see in what state we stand, and how like we are to let this great opportunity slip out of our hands without much advantage to the public. A private intelligence there goes that His Majesty is upon transacting all with the Scots: that he intends a journey speedily into the North, and thence unto the parliament at Edinburgh, where he will confirm to the Scots their demands finally. This Colville the Scotch agent hath reported. And if the Scots find us not capable to be complied withal, as certainly we are not so wise men as they are, what may be the success of our affairs after so long delays I dare not conjecture. The new General, the Earl of Holland, hath commanded all his officers forthwith to repair to the army in the North. The tumult of this incensed city is the only balance I see left, which how soon it may abate when the citizens find their goods in jeopardy is I fear not enough understood by those that grasp at all with more eagerness than discretion. I wish our counsels be not as shortsighted as vehement. My prayers are for truth and for peace, and that these doubts may prove fond ones. That nothing concerning religion, after so great a clamour, should be so much as objected to the Earl of Strafford sticks somewhat with me: and if his impeachment hath been trained into this length by private practice for private men to work out their own ends and preferments thereupon, their ambition may perchance in the end cost them as dear as it hath done the kingdom. I see there is no confidence to be placed in man. My hope is that God will take this great work into His own hand. The Prince of Orange's son who came to this town upon Tuesday last is entertained at Whitehall upon Tuesday next. He is lodged at Arundel House. He is much commended for a very sweet youth. The King alloweth him 100*l.* per diem. He is attended by all the chief gentlemen of the United Provinces, both soldiers and others. There is a very rich cloth of state newly set up in Westminster Hall upon the stage where the Lords sit at the trial of the Earl of Strafford, to what intent I know not.

COKE MSS.

1641, April 28. London.—Sir John Coke, the Younger, "For your Honour." [No address, no signature.]

The London petition which was preferred the last week to the House of Commons with an annexed scroll of names, about 8,000, wherein they particularly complain of the decay of trade, and desire justice against the Earl of Strafford, was upon Saturday last in a conference delivered by that House to the Lords. Since which time the Lords have read the bill of attainder twice, and have committed it. And to-morrow Mr. Solicitor is to argue the point of law on the behalf of the Commons in presence of a committee of both Houses in Westminster Hall. This afternoon both Houses attended the King at Whitehall, where he gave them a general answer concerning the banishing of recusants from Court, the disarming of papists and the disbanding of the Irish army; withal conjuring them heartily to concur with him for the disbanding of both armies in the North. Yesterday the Earl of Warwick was sworn a Privy Councillor. Upon the making of our new General, the Scots have suddenly recruited their army, have fortified Darlington, and are ready on the bank of the Tees when the cessation shall expire. The rumour of the King's going down into the North still continueth, and that the Queen is to repair unto Portsmouth where Colonel Goring hath been fortifying these two months. Lord Cottington lies privately at Hamworth. The Customers are said to have furnished the King with 20,000*l*. The House of Commons is now in daily agitation how to supply present moneys for the disbanding of the armies, but no expedient can yet be found. In Essex some tumults have been in the throwing open of commons. Many good bills are preparing in the House of Commons. Much depends upon the bill of attainder, which will hardly pass with the Lords, who are much divided thereupon. I wish that were accommodated by any punishment below his life. The Bishops of Norwich and Sarum are lately dead. The King sits daily in Council. He spake this day in presence of both Houses very treatably without hesitation. God keep the Parliament together. Things are near to a crisis I fear. The King's counsels are divided, from the ends of those that draw another way in the Parliament Houses; and that no(?) exploits are intended you can judge best. Our army in the North is violently disposed to fight with the Scots. The Prince of Orange's son hath not yet been entertained at Whitehall. We expect the solemnization of the marriage very shortly. The Earls of Arundel and Pembroke are against Stratford.

1641, May 3. Gray's Inn.—Sir John Coke, the Younger, to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

My cousin Stretehay is contented to take my cousin Timothy Coke to be his apprentice, but he standeth upon 80*l*. He saith that my cousin cannot be made free until 24 years of age, so that I think he will be contented to bound his apprenticeship within that time. Now he standeth upon nine years. In the City and elsewhere it is confidently spoken that Melander is arrived in England, but at Court they acknowledge no such thing, only some say that they hear Colonel King is upon his journey hither. Sir Francis Wortley remembers his love and service to you.

1641, May 10. Crosby House.—Spencer Compton, Earl of Northampton to Sir John Coke.

Understanding that you are one of the Governors of the Hospital founded by Mr. Sutton, and being moved in compassion of Henry Waddlesworth, a fatherless child whose mother (a poor widow) hath a charge of children and no means at all either for her own or their maintenance, and the child being held so towardly and hopeful as that he may seem a fit object both of your charity and the pious intention of the founder, I have made bold to recommend him unto your nomination to be admitted a scholar at this next election in the school of the said Hospital.

1641, May 11, Tuesday. London.—Sir John Coke, the Younger, to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

[In a feigned handwriting. No signature. Endorsed by Sir John Coke, "Son J. from London."]

You will perceive by these copies of the protestation what was done 3rd May. From the House of Commons this protestation was transmitted to the Lords and read by them. The same day the tumultuous assemblies of citizens began at Westminster, which continued for the most part every day, until the Lords had changed their intentions that were conceived of them and had passed the bill. The citizens presented themselves at Whitehall on Saturday, when both Houses went to His Majesty to desire that he would come and give his assent to the bill. On Sunday the King signed the bill with bitter tears, as is said; and on Monday the Earls of Arundel, Lindsey, and Manchester, signified his consent to the Houses. On Wednesday, at ten of the clock in the morning, the Earl of Strafford loses his head upon Tower Hill. We have been exercised with the fears of the French, and a close committee is appointed to examine the practices that have been used to bring over the French and to increase the army. Mr. Henry Jermyn and Mr. Henry Percy, with Sir John Suckling, are run away. I think they had some plot to have rescued the Lieutenant out of the Tower. The Earl of Bedford died upon Sunday last of the small pox.

COKE MSS.

1641, May 18. London.—Sir John Coke, the Younger, to Sir John Coke. No signature.

Endorsed, "Son John from London."

Yours I received by our neighbour Mr. Hardy, and am heartily glad to hear of your good health. That justice which the noble Earl did us at the Sessions shows how well we Derbyshire Justices understand our office and the jurisdiction of our Court. It were most easy to reverse this order, if the consequence were of any importance unto us. But the constablery and parish are several things, and part of Derby Hills may be within the constablery of Calke though not within the parish; when I come into the country I shall take some course in it. But truly these times are such that I hold it not convenient to go to trial as yet in the Duchy of Derby Hills. This is no time to prosecute the enclosures of commons whilst the common people are at so much liberty. In Huntingdonshire they throw open enclosures by force, contrary to the express orders of the House of Peers, and the Sheriff of that county hath order from the Lords to oppose them by the train bands. Enclose you cannot until the next spring; therefore if you prevail in the Duchy any time before the end of Michaelmas term it will be sufficient. And I think it best to hold it in suspense until you have compounded with the Donington men for their copyholds, which will add much strength to your cause; and I doubt not but this ensuing long vacation to conclude with them, now that they are driven out of all their subterfuges and that they have deserted the counsel of John Ward. I do not at all fear the justness of your title upon the proofs in the Duchy, but lest, the question being whether Calke hath common in Derby Hills or no, the Judges of that Court should remit us thence to the common law, the issue being properly triable by jury, which is at their discretion to do or to determine it as they please. Now you know the danger of putting a title of common to a jury, but if you make peace with Donington the proof will come in so strong from that town that you need not doubt any jury. If your opinion be otherwise I desire to be directed by you. The Parliament is now in the debate of raising 400,000*l.* towards the present occasions for disbanding of the armies. Also they hope to finish the treaty within this fortnight. The Archbishop's and the Judges' charges are also preparing, but nothing is yet perfected since the Earl of Strafford's death. Those fragments which it seems you have seen of the latter end of the last speech which that Lord made at his trial are an imperfect part of what he said for himself; posito sed non concesso, that he had intended to subvert the laws, which endeavour or intention he absolutely denied through his whole trial, after his trial, and at his death. Everything sells that comes in print under his name; therefore he is every day apparelled with one idle pamphlet or other bearing the affection of the true author, either in favour of him or against him. Now we are secured of him I pray God send us those happy times that this city expects. Those rumours of the discontent of the army, of the French preparations, and of Melander's arrival, came to me from those that bear no good will to the Lord Strafford, and served well to keep this city in alarm against him. Henry Jermyn, Henry Percy, and the Earl of Carnarvon, with Sir John Suckling, are fled. Davenant, the poet, is taken, and Henry Percy is thought to be still in England. We exercise ourselves also with fears of some designs that the papists have against us. But what solid ground will appear of these things from the close committee I know not, and some are of opinion that a petty plot to help the Lieutenant to escape was all. It is spoken that the King is resolved upon a journey into Scotland about the midst of July. The worst here is that the sickness increases. Heath is now no Master of the Wards, but my Lord Saye generally voted to that place. Cottington lies sick at Hanworth in earnest, as is said.

1641, May 25. London. — Sir John Coke, the Younger, to Sir John Coke.

[No address. No Signature. Endorsed, "Son John from London."]

I am now acquainted with Sir Robert Lovet's son, who seems to be very desirous of a proposition for a marriage with my sister Faunt; and Mr. Withrings assures you that the father is as forward as he. Their estate is at present betwixt 1,100*l.* and 1,200*l.* per annum, and within three years will increase 300*l.* per annum by the expiration of a long lease. The father is a great husband, hath his land stocked, and his house is in Buckinghamshire near Brickhill. The son seems to be a very civil good natured gentleman of a handsome person and fashion, about 21 years of age, a good husband, and one that comports so well with the affections of his father that they have all in common, as it were. They have been told by Mr. Withrings that my sister hath 400*l.* per annum jointure and 1,000*l.* in her purse; but I cannot say that she hath above 500*l.*, which is in the Earl of Stamford's hands, though perchance, with the receipt of her Michaelmas rents, she may have treasured up near 500*l.* more, which is best known to herself. The father will settle all his land upon his son, and allow them my sister's jointure, with the addition of what further jointure shall be made unto her upon the marriage with his son, for their present maintenance. I have demanded 300*l.* per annum for her jointure, which I think is a reasonable proportion. When I shall receive your directions I shall prosecute this business accordingly. Truly though the estate be not great, yet I like so well the quality of the young gentleman that I hope my sister may lead a very happy life with him. I hope I have given Mr. Mayo satisfaction concerning the neglect he conceived of my not writing to him. I assure you I have very seldom missed a week since my coming to this town; but I have written him as ample thanks as I could for his pains for me, and indeed I do acknowledge that he hath deserved exceedingly much from me, neither was it ever in my thought to conceive otherwise. And for the process of the Earl of Strafford I most humbly desire you to suspend your judgment of me until I wait upon you; for I hope I shall never appear to have deserted my religion or my country, which are dearer to me than my life. My absence from the vote I hope hath not deserved so severe a censure as it seems is laid upon me by some, especially when I may truly say that I absented not myself but was casually away that evening, not expecting that vote in the afternoon so near night. But I never spake for him in my life. Whatever my scruples have been is more known to you than to any man living. For I have carefully observed the rule to keep myself from making a party of any side; I confess not considering that there was so much danger of disrepute in otioso silentio. But the experience I have had this winter shall teach me whilst I live to beware of the public stage and to keep my thoughts at home, for I think I shall never go with any tide whilst I live. The Lord Saye is now Master of the Wards. The Lord Treasurer hath surrendered, and that place is executed by Commissioners, Lord Keeper, Lord Privy Seal, Lord Bankes, Lord Newburgh, Lord Saye, and Mr. Treasurer Vane. Yesterday in the Lords House it was carried by the major number of voices that the Bishops shall have voices as peers in parliament, contrary to the vote of the House of Commons in that point. But their voices are taken out of the Court of Star Chamber by unanimous consent even of the Bishops themselves; and it is expected that the office of Justice of Peace and Privy Councillors shall this day be likewise interdicted them. What satisfaction the contrary vote of the Lords concerning their votes in parliament will give to the Lower House and to the city is yet unknown. We are exercised daily in the Scotch treaty and in procuring money to disband the armies: but we proceed so very slowly and with such difficulty, in matter of money especially, that I wish we contract not so vast a debt as the kingdom will not be able to pay: we are now in necessity of 400,000*l.* ready money. The process against the Archbishop and the remonstrance are asleep: also the new treason is still in the hands of the close committee. So that I know not where we shall find any end, though the weather grow so sulphurous that it will be impossible to sit in that house long with health. The Huntingdonshire men have with violence in a public riot thrown open the enclosures of the Lord Mandeville, and contemned the Lords' warrants for the possession of that Lord until the trial: and his Lordship, though a man gracious enough, finds so little concurrence in the House of Commons that I am confirmed this is no time to try titles of common. Therefore I shall desire your directions according to my last. My mother is in very good health at Tottenham. Mr. Ashwell has a keg of sturgeon for you from Mr. Avery.

COKE MSS.

(Indorsed.) I shall deliver your presentment of my cousin Powell to a scholar's place in Sutton's Hospital according to directions.

1641, June 1.—A copy of Mr. Henry Percy's statement as to his part in the Officers' plot. Endorsed by Sir J. Coke the elder "H. Percy's letter."

[The latter part is in the writing of Sir J. Coke the younger.]

What is in my own innocency and the violence I hear is against me, I find myself so much distracted I will not ask your counsel, because it may bring prejudice upon you, but I will with all faithfulness and truth tell you what my part hath been, that at least I may be cleared by you whatever becomes of me. When there was 50,000*l.* designed by the Parliament for the English army, the House of Commons did think it fit for them to deduct 10,000*l.*, upon which the soldiers in our House were much scandalized, of whom I was one. . . . The 10,000*l.* given to the Scots was the cause of many discourses of dislike amongst us, and came to this purpose that they were disobliged by the Parliament and not by the King. This being said often to one another, we did resolve, that is Wilmot, Ashburnham, Pollard, O'Neal, and myself, to make some expressions of serving the King in all things he would command us that were honourable for him and us, being likewise agreeable to the fundamental laws of the kingdom. . . . They were most confident they could engage the whole army thus far, but farther they would undertake nothing, because they would neither infringe the liberties of the subjects or destroy the laws, to which I and every one consented; I drew the heads up in a paper to which they approved when I read it, and then we did by an oath promise to one another to be constant and secret in all this. . . . This being all imparted to His Majesty by me from them I perceived he had been treated with by others concerning some things of our army which did not agree with what we proposed, but inclined a way more high and sharp, not having limits either of honour or law. I told the King he might be pleased to consider with himself which way it was fit for him to hearken unto; for us, we were resolved not to part from our grounds. . . . In the end I believe the dangers of the one and the justice of the other made the King tell me he would leave all thoughts of other propositions but ours as things not practicable; but desired notwithstanding that Goring and Germaine, who were acquainted with the other proceedings, should be admitted amongst us. . . . At the last it was consented unto and Goring and Germaine came to my chamber. . . . We parted disagreeing totally, yet remitted it to be spoken of to the King by me and Germaine, which we both did, and the King, constant to his former resolution, told them their ways were all vain and foolish and he would think of them no more. I omitted one thing of Mr. Goring; he desired to know how the chief commanders were to be disposed of, for if he had not a condition worthy of him he would not go along with us. . . . We all desired my Lord of Essex or my Lord of Holland, and they, if there were a general, Newcastle. . . . My Lord of Holland was made general, so all things were laid aside. . . . I never spake one word to Suckling, Carnarvon, Davenant or other creature; methinks if my friends and kindred knew the truth and justice of the matter, it were no hard matter to serve me in some measure.

2. Colonel Goring's statement. Having been told there was an intention to unite the forces of the army and to put [it?] into a posture of being able, if not a purpose of being willing, to interpose in the proceedings of Parliament, I hearkened to the proposition of soliciting a redress for the miseries of the soldiers. . . . Mr. Germaine and I being admitted into a consultation, where we were tied to secrecy by an oath in the company of those gentlemen I named in my depositions, where their purpose was declared to us in some propositions which were to this effect.

1st. Putting the army into a posture to serve the King.

2. Sending a declaration to the Parliament, containing that no Acts of Parliament should be made contrary to any former Acts, which was expressed that episcopacy should be kept up as it now is.

3. That the King's revenue should be established.

This I thought unlawful. . . . I objected therefore against their propositions. . . . I rely upon the testimony of some noble Lords of his Majesty's Council, and I appeal to them and to some members of this House what my carriage was to those gentlemen that were embarked in those undertakings, intending rather to prevent mischiefs by abandoning their counsels than to ruin them by disclosing them. And certainly if they stayed where I left them there was no conclusion at all.

1641, June 2, London.—Sir J. Coke, the Younger, to Sir John Coke at Melbourne.

[No signature. Endorsed Son John from London.]

The Earl of Leicester is declared Lord Deputy of Ireland, which I am very glad of. If you think good to recommend your Irish affairs to his Lordship by any letter, Sir John Temple promiseth to do you all the service he can. The Earl of Hertford is declared Marquis Hertford; whether his patent is yet sealed I cannot tell, but it is most certain that His Majesty hath conferred this addition of honour upon him. Tomorrow the abolition of Episcopacy shall be debated in the CKE MSS.

House of Commons, and it is doubtful on whether side the scale will turn. We groan under the burden of a debt so vast that as yet no means can be found out for supply of so much present money as is necessary to disband both armies. The debt at present is no less than 800,000*l.* including the brotherly assistance given to the Scots, whereof they also expect 80,000*l.* at least in hand. The proposition at present is to pass an Act requiring all men to bring in their white plate to be coined forthwith, and they are to expect satisfaction with interest out of the ensuing grant of 400,000*l.* But whether this course will afford a remedy answerable to the necessity of the present conjuncture is very uncertain because more than 20,000*l.* a month cannot be coined, which exceeds the constant charge of both armies but 5,000*l.* a month. Most of other affairs are as yet at a stand and in fieri. God send us good success. I have attended my mother often both at Tottenham and Garlick Hithe. She is in health. There is no other great Lord in question. The conjecture is that the Lord Cottington hath relinquished also his place of Chancellor of the Exchequer, which Mr. Pym expects. But the Lord Cottington comes again to the Lords House, to attend the suit betwixt him and the Lord Castlehaven for Funthil, a manor which his Lordship got from this Lord Castlehaven upon the attainder of his father.

1641, June 28. Blackfriars.—Sir John Temple to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

I shall not now begin with any large apology for my long silence. I am so confident of your goodness as I cannot but presume of your pardon of a greater fault than I have committed herein. But to deal freely with you your Honour must give me leave to say thus much in my own defence, that the chief occasion of my silence hath been my disability to serve you here: had I ever received the meanest of your commands you should quickly have seen my readiness to give you a good account of them. I cannot but be very sensible of the obligations you have been pleased to lay upon me, while you were here in Court; and if it shall now fall within my power to make your Honour any return, you shall find that you have cast your favours upon one who will really and faithfully serve you. I doubt not but you have heard how it hath pleased His Majesty to dispose of me, and to settle me in a condition in Ireland far beyond either my merit or my expectation. It may be by reason of my place there, and the interest I have in my Lord of Leicester who is now Lord Lieutenant of that kingdom, I may be able to do you some service in your affairs there; which I believe suffer there even to ruin, together with the rest of that great work begun by him that is gone. Thus much I can tell you, that if there be any means to put new life into your pretensions there, I am very confident you shall have the best contributions my Lord Lieutenant can afford you; for I have heard him speak with much respect and value of you; and for myself, I shall humbly beseech you to believe without ceremony that I will do you all the service that I can in that or any other particular that concerns you there. I am presently going away to settle myself at Dublin and to embark myself into the troublesome affairs of that kingdom. Your Honour is happy to have arrived with so much safety in the port; we that are now putting to sea are like to meet with storms, and if my divination fail not it will not yet clear up here. I much fear a great calamity to fall upon this land: the preparations are laid, the way is open, and unless it please God to bless the King and his people to superinduce a good understanding betwixt them, we must look for a greater concussion than this nation hath for this many years endured.

1641, July 10. Saturday.—Charles Viscount Wilmot to Sir John Coke.

My Lord of Strafford, who alive nor dead doth not let me rest, hath left his warrant in Ireland with the Vice Treasurer to stop my entertainments in that Kingdom upon pretence of the old business which you may very well remember (that did concern Athlone). As you writ to me, the King upon his letter to you granted his desire, which was either to submit myself to the law, or that he might have leave from His Majesty to stop my personal entertainments; upon which he takes away the benefit of the law from me and falls upon my entertainments, and recalled it not in his lifetime. So that I am now humbly to address myself to His Majesty to release that command of his and to submit myself to the law, which I am willing to do. My Lord Lieutenant desires to see that letter of his that came to you to move His Majesty in that behalf; for we both do mean to go to His Majesty about it, which will the better be brought to the King his remembrance; and to that end I shall very earnestly entreat you amongst your papers to look out that letter from my Lord Deputy, and by this messenger to send me either the original or the copy of it to show the King, which came unto you to Woodstock in August when the King was last in his progress at Woodstock , for it was from thence I received your letter. For this favour I shall be much bound to you.

1641, July 12. London.—Ed. Sidenham to Sir John Coke, at his house five miles from Derby.

I am confident you will receive a more exact relation than I can give you, yet it may be you may have something you would not want in this. General Phoule, who commands the Swedish army, Banecre being dead, has given a very great defeat to the Imperial army; for they routed the whole army, took 35 ensigns of foot, 26 cornets of horse, 7 pieces of cannon, all their baggage. The commander of Wolfenbuttel where this battle was fought was found dead on the place. The certain number of the slain is not known, but 3,000 suits of apparel is reported to be taken from the dead. The remnant of the army saved themselves under the cannon of Wolfenbuttel, which town they left after they had set it on fire, which is burnt to the ground, and they that were in it fled, whom the Swedes do pursue. The names of those that were slain and taken prisoners, Piccolomini and Wall, Generals of the foot and horse, both dead; the Governor of Wolfenbuttel dead, the Sitterick dead, Oberstatt Gruiling of the cavalry prisoner, Oberstatt Fruckellewiller prisoner, Oberstatt Sprocke prisoner. Of the Swedes, Oberstatt Geskie dead and some few prisoners. From Bohemia they write the 22nd of June 1641 that the 19th there was a battle fought betwixt the Swedes and the Imperialists, wherein the Imperialists lost four or five thousand and the Swedes 500 men. This was fought at Walstadt in Bohemia. There has been a battle fought betwixt Chatillion, the French King's general, and the Count of Soissons and the Duke of Bouillon. Chatillion was wholly defeated and lost all his army to 800 and all his cannon and baggage taken and hundred thousand pounds in money. The Marquis Spralin, who was General of the Horse, killed on the place; Chatillion's son, who relieved his father twice being taken prisoner, was also killed. Four or five hundred commanders and men of good account was killed. The Count of Soissons was killed on the place, which was the greater loss, for, althongh they won the battle, when they brought his body into Sedan, where this battle was fought, upon sight of it they killed all their prisoners in cold blood to a great number. If he had outlived that day he had been at Paris before this time; and how fair he had been for the COKE MSS. rest you may guess, for 'tis probable most part of France would have revolted to him. The Duke of Lorraine has since declared himself against the King, and is chosen general by the Princes. Lamboy, a general of the Emperor's, who came with 7.000 men, was on the Prince's side and at this battle; and 'tis probable he must return presently into Germany, the Emperor having received so great a blow. The Prince of Orange lies still before Genappe, which questionless cannot hold long. The French Ambassador reports the Duke of Bouillon is dead also at the battle; but there is no such news from Brussels from the Infanta, unto whom all the colours were sent and a list of the names of those that were killed and taken prisoners. For the Parliament news I leave that for your son's relation, who can best give it from the original. The Queen is resolved to go into the Low Countries and so to the Spa for to drink the waters, for indeed she is very ill. She goes within ten days and takes the Princess Mary with her. The King goes for Scotland the 10th of August with consent of both Houses. Mr. Wilmot, Mr. Ashburnham, and Mr. Pollard are out upon bail. My Lord of Denbigh, my Lady Kelomeke (Kynalmeaky) his daughter, my Lady Cornwallis, and Mrs. Kirke coming through the bridge in a barge, a piece of timber floating stuck in an arch of the bridge which they shot, and turned the barge over. Sweet Mrs. Kirke was drowned, all the rest were saved.

1641, July 14, London.—Sir J. Coke, the Younger, to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne. [No signature. Endorsed "Son John from London."]

The King having passed the bills for the abolition of the Courts of High Commission and Star Chamber, upon Monday, 5th July, he acquainted both Houses with his intention to publish a manifesto in his own name concerning the Palatine cause, wherein he desired the advice and concurrence of the Houses of Parliament and, therefore, referred it to their consideration. The House of Commons first declared their consent, and if the present treaty succeeded not that they would give assistance in such manner as should be agreeable to the King's honour and the interests and affections of this nation. Hereunto the Lords accorded also. And upon Thursday last this answer was signified to His Majesty, with a request that he would communicate the same to the Parliament of Scotland. The news goes here that the Swedes have utterly defeated Piccolomini, and that the Princes have given an overthrow to the French King's force at Sedan; only Soissons is killed, which hath allayed the victory. The French Ligier's name is Monsieur de Ferte Timbo (La Ferté Imbault). The Earl of Leicester hath the title of Lieutenant General of Ireland. Yours that I received yesterday to Sir John Temple shall be delivered this day, also that to the Earl of Cork. The bill at present in the House of Commons is to translate all episcopal authority and jurisdiction from the persons of the now bishops into the hands of nine commissioners for every shire; who are to execute it in such manner as the bishops should have done until the 1st of March next. In the meantime it is intended that a synod shall be called to consult of the settling of a new government. The King goes into Scotland in August. The Queen prepares for a sudden journey to the Aspa for her health. The King hath returned his answer to both Houses concerning the removal of evil councillors, that he knoweth of no such about him, and that he will not have those that are employed in his affairs in such sort deterred from using liberty of speech, which is always demanded and given to Parliaments. Judge Crooke being much decayed hath leave from His Majesty to withdraw with honour, his fees being allowed to him during his life. Serjeant Mallet succeedeth him. I wish myself heartily at Melbourne, and shall take leave to come down as soon as the new book of rates hath passed the House. For we have prevailed at the Committee to have the 48*s.* impost upon a fother of lead reduced to 20*s.*, which is a matter of great moment to the miners of the Peak, and I have not been wanting to them herein But Mr. Treasurer, being overruled herein at the Committee, threateneth as I hear to bring it again in question in the House, wherein I must do my country the best service that I can to oppose it. I hear nothing from the Earl of Huntingdon concerning the sale of any of his lands. I suppose he is stayed here, as the Earl of Devonshire was, to attend the Parliament. Sir George Hastings, his brother, is dead of the plague. My mother, as I believe, intends to take her journey towards Derbyshire upon Tuesday next.

1641, July 20. Tottenham.—Sir John Coke, the Younger, to Sir John Coke, at his house at Melbourne.

The new French Ligier's name is Monsieur de Ferté Imbaut; he is one of their Marquises and a soldier, hath served as Maître or Maréchal du Camp. He cometh recommended to this embassage by the Cardinal which setteth the chiefest mark upon him. The French forces defeated by the Princes near Sedan were 7,000 led by Maréchal Chatillion, old Chatillion's eldest son; 1,500 were slain, 2,000 taken, the rest utterly routed. They lost both bag and baggage, their ammunition and money to pay their musters. The Count Soissons died on the other side, being the head of the party. The news here is that the Grand Seignior maketh descent into Hungary. The House of Commons, taking notice of Her Majesty's intention to taste of the Aspa waters for the recovery of her health, sent for Sir Theodore Mayerne, from whom they understood that her indisposition proceeded from the discontentment of her mind; which it seems hath prevailed so far upon her that Sir Theodore offereth to take his oath that in this estate wherein she now standeth it is not possible for her to live. Yet he hath no great opinion of the Spa waters for her cure. Hereupon the Commons, together with the Lords, offered these six reasons to His Majesty to persuade Her Majesty not to undertake this journey—1. It is not unlikely that the papists may have some design upon her journey. 2. That the fugitives would seek to resort unto her from whom no good counsels could be expected. 3. The great value of jewels, plate, &c., that was packed up to go with her. 4. The great charge of the journey if she went accompanied according to her quality. 5. They declare that they will do anything which is within power of Parliament to give Her Majesty contentment, the public trust reposed in them being saved. 6. It would be dishonourable to the nation if Her Majesty should especially at this time withdraw out of the kingdom upon any discontentment conceived here. The King gave both Houses thanks for their care of Her Majesty's health, assuring them that nothing moved her to think of this journey but her health; and gave leave to a committee of 6 Lords and 12 Commoners to attend Her Majesty this afternoon, who did accordingly and represented unto her the contents of the fifth and sixth reasons to dissuade her from her journey. She gave them a courtly and general answer. I believe her journey is stopped.—London, 16th July 1641.

Upon Saturday in the evening in a committee in the Lords House the Lord Mowbray (viz., the Earl of Arundel's eldest son) gave the Earl of Lindsey, High Chamberlain, the lie, whereupon the Earl of Lindsey struck him over the head with his white staff, and the other threw an ink horn into his face. That evening I came to Tottenham so as I know not what hath since been done.

COKE MSS.

1641, July 26. London.—Sir John Coke, the Younger, to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

The Earl of Cork avoweth that Sir Pierce Crosby did promise him to surcease any further prosecution against you for his imprisonments, but Sir Pierce saith his Lordship mistook him. As occasion shall require I will entreat the Earl of Cork to acquaint the Lords with the contents of the answer which you have given in the letter to his Lordship. But I think all will come in the end to nothing. Upon Saturday last, in the afternoon, the Earl of Pembroke and Lord Mowbray, upon their petitions, were admitted upon their knees to the Lords' bar, where they made their submissions and were remanded thence to their houses during the pleasure of the House. This day Pembroke, upon his petition, was restored to the House. Essex, his successor, brought him in, and Mowbray is to be received in like manner to-morrow—so their punishments from the House have been equal. But His Majesty hath added to Pembroke's by taking away his staff. Ayre and Gennep are both taken. The King's journey holds still, and about that time we expect some ruse. I pray God continue your good health, send us peace and a happy conclusion. I present our humble duties to yourself and to my mother. Begging your blessing, whilst I remain your obedient son.

The last return that you received no letters from me by the carrier, I sent my letters by the baker's son, who came down with my Lady Harpur and I hope hath delivered them ere now. The Earl of Newcastle's daughter is newly married to the Earl of Bridgewater's eldest son.

1641, September 5.—Edward Reed to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

The King is expected to be at Woodstock the 13th of this month, where the Queen (God willing) intendeth to meet him. He, as I hear, hath granted unto the Scots all their demands, but I do not hear that his desires are so well satisfied. My Lord Montrose and the other Lords imprisoned at Edinburgh were to come to their [torn] which giveth the King little contentment. The House of Commons have adjourned themselves from Tuesday last until to-morrow, which is Monday, when they meet they adjourn themselves until Wednesday, and then until the 20th of October; the like the Lords have done. Upon Tuesday last the House of Commons ordered the service to be in the Church, as it was in the Queen's time, and the baptizing with the sign of the cross, and this not to be disobeyed but to be continued until the meeting of a full House to consider of a reformation if there shall be cause. The House was divided upon it, and of 70 in the whole House 40 of them were for this vote. When Wednesday shall be past the Houses then will disperse. My Lord of Leicester is not as yet returned out of France [torn] expected, and my Lord Digby prepareth to supply his place. The Queen Mother is still at Dover, not well and not willing to leave this kingdom. I hear my Lady of Arundel and her son, my Lord Stafford, is gone over before to Dunkirk, and my Lord of Arundel remaineth with the Queen at Dover. . . . . The ships the Spaniard hired to convey his men are stayed in the Downs. The last Gazettes that came this week I send you enclosed. There have been several of the Lords examined concerning my Lord Trequar's declaration after the last pacification, unto which not any, as I hear, have answered clearly. Your Honour was named to be examined, but he that now is agent here for the Scots, which is Mr.

James Calvin, will not press it, believing that Mr. Secretary Windebank did take most notice of it, and who was the cause of Mr. Calvin's imprisonment in the Tower. [The King of Denmark besieges Hamburg, but barreth not the trade of our merchants. Wolfenbuttel besieged. The Swedes have given the Emperor an overthrow.] All is quiet with the Bishops and delinquents, imprisoned and out of prison, until the next meeting of the Parliament. The sickness increased the last week, and of the plague died within a few of 200 and almost as many of the small-pox. I pray God it may daily decline, being here dangerous, in that it is not feared, and Bartholomew Fair, I think, hath much increased [it].

1641, September 11. — Edward Reed to Sir John Coke, at his house at Melbourne in Derbyshire.

Since my last letter of the last week here is not anything more than the adjournment of the Parliament, after much debate to have it prolonged but a few days, but it would not be; so there is a Committee appointed for the answering of letters that are expected out of Scotland from the Commissioners, and no more that I hear of. What is published by both Houses I have enclosed, and the Gazettes. The certain time of the King's returning I hear not, but Michaelmas is the soonest, and this night I hear that Sir John Hay hath lost his head, but what is or shall be done unto my Lord Montrose and the rest in prison I hear not. The Lords are all but a very few of them from hence, and the like are those of the House of Commons.

1641, September 20.—Edward Reed. [No address.]

The best account I can add to the desire I have to do your Honour service, is to present you with these Gazettes inclosed, which are newly come from France. As for the affairs here, they are in a distempered way by those that would have themselves thought to be most holy, and judge themselves fitter to regulate the church affairs, rather than the law and the judges. In the Old Jewry, a good number of them in the time of divine service came into the church, and did tear the book of Common Prayer, and [committed] some misdemeanours against the minister; and upon Sunday last I hear an assembly of them would have come into the Church in Paul's to have overthrown the organs and defaced divers other ornaments in the church. What difference is concerning the votes set out by both Houses is here inclosed. Out of Scotland is only that the King is well pleased with the service, and ready attendance of the Scots, and hath granted unto them all what is desired. Of any particulars there done I hear not. The common report is that the King will be at Theobalds upon Saturday next. Sir, I hear some say that, between attendance of the Committee and serious expectation what may become of business the next sitting of Parliament, they have but little pleasure; I do believe much less than your Honour hath with your good hawks and bad spaniels, having an addition of so good company at your Honour's return at night, which will much refresh Sir John Coke in his absence from hence.

1641, September 26. Before Bergen (Bergues?).—Gilbert Coke to Sir John Coke, the Younger, at Melbourne, or elsewhere.

Our occurrences in these parts since I writ my Cousin Streathey's letter, which I hope you have seen, are hardly worth the hearing. We have been a journey in Flanders only to draw the enemy from the King of France who causes us many a weary step. His proceedings at Arian (Aire?) I believe you hear, how when he had won the town the enemy got between him and his provision, and brought him to such a straight that he was forced to leave all his ordnance and baggage in the town and march without sound of drum away by night, leaving his trenches and approaches unslighted, which presently the enemy made use of with their batteries also, and besieged it again. Here is no news expected amongst us, but the Frenchman's loss of it; in this interim of besieging, the Frenchman marches into the enemy's country to the furthest parts of Artois, where he hath taken three towns; the chiefest of them is called Beapom (Bapaume), which is a town of extraordinary consequence, and rare in respect of the strength of it; for as other towns are made strong by water, this is almost impregnable by reason of extreme want of water. Within they have none but rain water taken in cisterns, and neither is there any without but what is fetched nine miles upon asses' backs; so that it is hardly possible for an army to stay six days before it; nor could the Frenchman have been master of it so soon had not the enemy been in a great strait, which made him draw all his forces from thence, part to pass upon our army, and the rest for regaining Arian. We are returned from Flanders and lie on shipboard, hourly expecting orders for garrison. How welcome that tidings will be to us I leave it to you to think, for we have lived on shipboard and in huts since Good Friday last, and are glad winter is at hand, because it is likely to send us home. My poor fortune betters not as yet, notwithstanding my good uncle's endeavours. My charge increaseth, and is likely shortly to be greater. I wish to God some of my friends would do some furtherance for my advancement, though not for my own sake, yet for my wife and children. I once made a motion to your honourable father to help me to a muster master's place, not that I have a desire to leave these parts, except it were a very good one indeed, but only for the increase of my maintenance. I showed also an example of a lieutenant that lived in these parts, and yet enjoyed the benefit of a muster master's place in England. I humbly beseech your Honour afford me your assistance. If I could end my days in England it were a blessing to me, but I should not expect it if I could mend my fortune here so as to advantage my poor wife and children. It is I that will be ever thankful for what is done, either to them or me, ever remaining your faithful servant and kinsman.

Sir Henry Vane's two sons have here, the one a troop of horse, the other a foot company.

1641, October 3.—Edward Reed to Sir John Coke. [No address.]

The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland is not as yet returned, but is daily expected. My Lord Conway stayeth here to accompany him into Ireland when he goeth; who believeth that he will not stay long after his return out of France, and towards the spring to return to bring his lady over into Ireland. The King's return is uncertain: some letters come that it will not be this five weeks, but being yesterday at my Lady of Exeter's house in Saint John's, I did understand that my lady hath provision sent down to entertain the King at Newark upon Thursday next: which is the newest I know not. The Queen Mother is at Cologne before this. Of my Lord Saye's sickness I hear not anything of it, and of the plague there hath died 42 less than was the week before. The parliament of Scotland hath voted that the kingdom is to choose the officers of State and not the King, and have chosen my Lord Lowden (Loudoun) to be Treasurer, and have refused my Lord Morton for Chancellor, which the King commanded unto them. The Gazettes of this week I send your Honour here inclosed. Sir Henry Marten died upon Sunday last, and Doctor Zouch hath his place of the Admiralty, and Doctor Merrick of the Prerogative, and Alderman Gurney is chosen Lord Mayor of London by the strength of the better sort of the City, who will not have their ancient order of the City to be altered by wilful people.

1641, October 17.—Edward Reed. [No address.]

The several advertisements come that the King of Spain's greatness doth decline daily, and it is conceived that he cannot be master of his West India mines long, there are so great preparations against him in England, France, Portugal and Holland, and his defence will be weak both in shipping and every way else. There is good hope that Sir Thomas Roe will do some good for the Prince Palatine with the Emperor, who now keepeth the Diet at Vienna only to settle the Palatinate, at which the princes of Germany do assemble and Sir Thomas Roe is directed to attend with fair promises. My Lord Marshal is returned from the Queen Mother, and is gone to the Queen to Oatlands. His lady is gone forward for Italy, and his grandchildren are left at school at Leyden (?). One Mr. Murray (not of the bedchamber) is come from the King and giveth out that he will be in England upon Thursday next; but few do believe that he will be here before December, although his will be otherwise. Some Lords and gentlemen are come up to the Parliament this week, but not many. The sickness doth much fear them ; there is so much disorder with them, some go out when they will, and others daily converse at the windows, which is the cause it doth so much disperse into several places both in the city and suburbs, and some houses I hear are infected in the Palace Yard at Westminster. Thanks be to God Mr. Thomas Coke hath his health very well. The Gazettes of these two last weeks I send your Honour inclosed. The soldiers that are returned from the North are much offended with their officers, pretending that they have not had their pay, which the officers affirm the contrary and that from the most part they have taken acquittances; but this will not satisfy these mutinous dispositions, but threaten their officers to kill them if they have not their demands which is unjustly demanded ; and this much some of the officers told me and find much fault that the Parliament doth not cause them to be punished. I do believe if some good order be not in a little time taken with the soldiers and over-busy men in the affairs of the Church, some distemper may grow that will not easily be appeased.

1641, October 24. London.—Edward Reed to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

Thanks be to God Mr. Thomas Coke is in health, and can spare but little time from the Parliament, which hath been very busy in the public affairs, moved by the distemper in Scotland, which this book inclosed will advertise you. The general wishes are that the king were in England again, whose return I hear not any that can limit the time. I hear 2,000 men do attend his person for safety of it. Here the Parliament have given order to the Mayor that two companies shall guard the House by day, and two to guard the House and suburbs by night, which is observed. I hear not as yet how the danger, nor from whence it should come amongst us. Thanks be to God, the city hath the same quiet that it ever had. Mr. Pimm is a very careful man both for the keeping quiet of the House and people, and to farther the reformation of that which is amiss in government. There was a constable that did not obey the order made by the House of Commons for the deposing of images, and to remove the innovations in the churches, who was informed against for not observing the order. Mr. Pimm moved that his punishment might be made an example, but Mr. Thomas Coke made a question whether by law the House could inflict a punishment. The question Mr. Pimm conceived did detract from the power of the House, and was an impediment to the intended reformation which was in a fair way, and he did conceive that the gentleman that moved deserved to be imprisoned, other conceived farther. But Sir John Strangwidge (Strangeways), Mr. Bridgeman, and others did conceive otherwise, and that not any man committed an offence who informed the House what legally they might do. And after much debate Mr. Thomas Coke was so approved of that the question was let alone, and what was become of the constable I hear not. The Queen is still at Oatlands, and as I hear doth intend to winter there. This week no Gazettes are come; by the next, God willing, I should send you two for two weeks together. The sickness is decreased this last week, 50 of the plague; in the Parliament men come up daily. This inclosed will inform your honour in what state the particular businesses rest. In the public business the bill is past in the House of Commons to take away the votes of Bishops in the Lords' House. I think your Honour will have very uncertain dealing from Mr. Withrings, for in all his affairs he appears so.

KE MSS.

1641, November 8. London.—Edward Reed to Sir John Coke. [No address.]

The great business of this time is for the preparation to appease the great rebellion in Ireland, which practice this enclosed will advertise your Honour of. Preparation from hence for the present is to send 2,000 foot and 1,000 horse and 20,000*l.* for their present support, which the City of London hath a good inclination to furnish and the Parliament to give security for it, which as yet is not done. I hope this next post from Ireland which is expected tomorrow will bring advertisement that the proclamation of pardon to those that will come in, and the like from the Houses of Parliament here hath dispersed them and pacified their rebellious intentions. My Lord Lieutenant and my Lord Conway are presently to go for Ireland, and Sir Simon Harcourt and Sir Fulke I hear are named for the command of the army sent from hence. The King is expected at Hampton Court where the Queen doth intend to meet him (God willing) upon Saturday next. I hear that the Scots' affairs are well settled, but the prisoners there not at liberty. It is doubted that their success will not be good when the King is come away, and amongst them is Mr. William Murray who hath his liberty upon the King's word as yet. The Scots have offered to furnish the King against the Irish with 1,000 men, which is accepted by the Parliament here. Your Honour's business hath had no more speech of it and I believe it will not be revived. Father Phillips is committed to the Tower by the Lords where he remaineth. I have not heard what his charge is. The Gazettes that came this week from France I send your Honour enclosed. The Queen is as yet at Oatlands and as I hear sad, and the prince at Richmond.

1641, November 15.—Edward Reed to Sir John Coke. [No address.]

I did understand by several of the House that sudden motion was against you, and as I conceived it was begotten in a day's time so in a short time it would die again; and so I do believe. When it cometh unto the House your Honour will be advertised, as yet your answer is not made known. What the passages in the Houses are I know you have better relator than myself. What Gazettes came this last week I have delivered [to] Sir John Coke for your Honour. The business of Ireland is now the main business which, as the Justices of Ireland write, if it have not supplies of men, money, and ammunition and shipping in time that kingdom will be lost. Here is made what haste they can to send over all such defects.

1641, November 22.—For the Right Honorable S^r John Cooke. A letter not dated or signed; probably written by Sir John Coke, the Younger, M.P. for Leicester, in a feigned hand.

Right honorable I make no question but you heare of the declaration of the House of Commons which contains a bitter story of the worst actions which have passed since his Majesty's reign until this present houre, with a comparative of the happye governement under this Parliament. Their end to wash of the calomnies which are said to be cast on the Parliament and to secure themselves in the good opinion of all men. Herein they desire not the concurrence of the Lords, neither is it addressed to the Kings as all remonstrances of greivances have ever beene, but to the people. Other remonstrances have beene complaints of the people to the King. Some say this is a complaint of the King to the people. If you sett Pimme Hollis and Hambdin aside, the best of the House voted against it, as S^r John Culpeper, L^d Faulkland M^r Crewe S^r Robert Pye S^r John Strangewaies, all the best lawiers, Alderman Somes Sir Edward Deering M^r Waller S^r Ralfe Hopton &c. Pimme and Hollis drewe this declaration. The contrary side protested against the printing of it which hath caused much distemper in the House. Captain Venne that serves for the City dissuaded the citisens at their common councel from entertaining the King, as a thing displeasing to the Parliament. All art is used to keepe petitions for Episcopacy from being presented to the House, such being preparing in many places.

1641, November 24. London.—Sir John Coke the younger. [No signature or address]. Endorsed "Son John, London."

I have given order to Denham to dispose of the Fairs at Ashbourne from Rowland to some other tenant, and I shall not employ him any way. I cannot yet give you account of your absolute discharge, but hope you shall never hear more of it, and that I shall reasonably compound with the Serjeant for his fees. This night the King is come to Theobalds, and tomorrow he is feasted by this City at Guildhall with great magnificence. The Queen and Prince accompany him there. The affairs of Ireland grow into a worse state. The rebels increase. Feared they will besiege Dublin ere long. In the County of Wicklow they are lately risen and like enough O'Toole is amongst them, which may facilitate your recovery of the Fartree (Vartry). Other commissioners from the Parliament of Scotland to the Parliament of England are upon their way hither, and an agent from us remains there so to continue the good correspondence betwixt both. The Irish profess they will root out the English, and commit divers barbarous cruelties upon them. The House of Commons resumed the debate of their declaration, and upon Monday the dispute held from twelve of the clock at noon until two in the night. Upon the division of the House 161 voted that it should pass and the others being 150 voted the rejection of it. Next it was moved that it might be forthwith printed. This disagreed so much with the sense of those that would have rejected it that most of them desired that their protestations might be entered against it. This drew it into debate whether the minor part by the orders of the House might protest against the major part by the orders of the House. And this whole day was spent in question of Mr. Palmer the lawyer concerning words he spake on Monday night, and I believe another day will hardly end the debate. How the major part will proceed against the rest of the protestors I cannot tell, or what will be the end of this great difference amongst us. The treasons here which filled men's mouths so much appear not yet to have better grounds than the reports at Derby.

OKE MSS.

1641, December 7, Tuesday. London.—Sir John Coke, the Younger, to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne. [Written in a feigned hand. No signature. Endorsed "Son John, London."]

Upon Sunday last the Duke of Richmond was made Lord Steward, and his brother, the Lord Aubigny, Master of the Horse to the Prince. The news out of Ireland is worse and worse, all like to be lost. This day Sir Arthur Haselrigg presented a bill to the House of Commons for putting all the militia in the Kingdom horse and foot forth, with all land command into the hands of two generals, the one for this side and the other beyond Trent, as also all command by sea into the hands of an Admiral. In this Act there is such unlimited and independent power given to these three persons that whatsoever hath been usurped by any prince is here to be settled by Act of Parliament upon these men. Suppose Essex, Holland, and Northumberland. Martial law, power of life and death, power to pardon and whatsoever may erect an absolute tyranny. The debate grew hot whether the bill should be rejected, but in conclusion it was carried by 33 voices that the bill should receive the second reading; 125 were for rejection, 158 for the second reading, alleging the bill might be so amended that thereby the militia might be settled for the safety of the kingdom. If you recall to your memory the late declaration or remonstrance, I pray you also consider of this bill in order to the same.

1641.—Rough draft in writing of Sir John Coke the Elder (endorsed with a letter to his son declining to go to London).

The wisdom of this State under our late blessed Queen balanced our neighbour potent kings in France by our religious interest in the protestants of that Church, and in Spain by other diversions and by keeping correspondence with Turkey and Barbary; whereby, not only our peace and trade grew great in those parts, but we had also ready means to keep that king in alarm upon his own coasts and to supply our fleets for all attempts against Spain, the Islands, or the West Indies. How these counsels have changed in France by the late aversion of our prelates from that and other protestant churches, and in Spain by the long abusive treaty whereof this kingdom hath been very sensible, though some still apt to oppose all counsels that seem to tend to the prejudice of that crown; as by the confident complaint against the Barbary Company may be made appear, who have been made the instruments for the overthrow thereof. And because my information is required therein I must not forbear to show the truth, though it may be taken offensively by those who, passing over or not understanding how His Majesty's honour was engaged, have wrested out of his hands that most important trade. All men can remember what we suffered by the pirates of Algiers, Sallee, and Morocco, and the many letters and instructions written by other secretaries and by myself and sent by divers agents sufficiently testify how we laboured to redeem our captives, and to renew the ancient correspondence in those parts, which by the troubles in that kingdom could come to no good issue till this king of Morocco, hoping by His Majesty's favour to settle his distressed affairs, sent a solemn ambassage to treat on such articles as might conduce to the common good. The ambassador and his presents were graciously accepted by His Majesty who appointed his committee for foreign affairs to treat with him. And their Lordships' pleasure was that, according to the duty of my place, I should prepare articles for them to consider of, which I did: and the ambassador, consenting to all our demands, required for his master but this one article, that His Majesty trading freely with all his people should not permit his subjects to trade with that King's rebels. This was thought very reasonable by all the Lords of the Committee: and so the treaty was concluded and signed by the Ambassador [and] all the Committee under their hands and seals. And for due performance his royal letters were written to the King of Morocco and sent by an agent. Then it being taken into consideration how a trade might be settled in Barbary as heretofore, an offer was made by some merchants to undertake it if a patent might be obtained, which I made known to His Majesty and the Lords, and so order gave warrant to Mr. Attorney to draw the patent, which passed accordingly. And because I was desirous to put so great a business into able and wise men's hands, I moved Sir William Russell to enter into the company and to draw in what able friends he could, which he did at my persuasion without other end than the king's service and the common good; as I forthwith acquainted His Majesty, who graciously gave him thanks. And then both he and I did believe we had done an extraordinary service to the State, and such a one as no man would oppose. Yet presently, when we least expected, the interest of Spain began to work against us; and those merchants which had formerly traded with the King of Morocco's rebels opposed the company at the council board, where many would take no notice of the King's treaty; so as in the end the company was thereby confined to trade in (joint ?) stock only for two or three years, and then to set the trade open, which was presently consented to, and withal those refractory merchants were invited presently to enter into the company, which they seemed to accept. But this served not Spain's turn, the trade must be overthrown. And to that end these merchants were again encouraged to freight their ships for trade with the rebels, directly contrary to His Majesty's stipulation; wherein, though others were not, yet His Majesty was very sensible of his own honour in the treaty, and commanded me to stay the ships, which (as I remember) did not then proceed. But afterwards, upon further like encouragement, these merchants which now complain freighted their ships again with commodities proper for the rebels and obtained another order from the Board to proceed; which His Majesty hearing was pleased by a warrant under his own hand to command their stay which I sent away by posts; yet because they pretended they would go for Spain they were required then only to put in securities not to trade with the rebels and then should depart. The taking of their security was referred to Sir H. Marten, but how it was performed and how the voyage failed I can not further tell. Only this I found that it was in vain to strive in any thing wherein Spain was so much concerned. And if that company be thus both overthrown and punished for their good service, I fear the pirates will return to their haunt, and perhaps these and other merchants bemoan themselves when it will be too late. The articles of that treaty are both in the secretaries' hands, and the merchants also as I suppose had copies from Blage, who was the King's agent therein. And I would not willingly live to see a Parliament give countenance to the breach of any treaty to the disparagement of public faith which is too much complained of. This I have written only to give satisfaction as far as my knowledge extendeth to those that require it of you. Hoping nevertheless that they will not bring my name upon the stage who would gladly end my days in peace now my age and retreat comport not with affairs.

1641–1643.—A true and breife accompt of the services done by the seaven British regiments and troopes raised in the kingdome of Ireland by vertue of his Ma^ty's Commissions (in the beginning of this horrid rebellion) inabled by the ammunition sent by his Ma^tie with arms, offensive and defensive, before they were intertained in the Parliament's pay.

COKE MSS.

October 23, 1641.—The rebellion of Ireland began att which time the rebells possest themselves of all the teneble holds and armes of the Counties of Cavin, Monaghane, Ardmagh, Tyrrone, and Farmanagh (Innishkilling excepted). Entring immediately to destroy all the British in all these counties with fire and sword, so that the rest of the counties of Ulster bordering upon the sea lived in a most fearfull condicon, never having armes, ammunition, nor anything els to inable them for offence or defence.

November 19 or thereabouts his Ma^tie^, out of his gratious care of the preservation of his British subiects in that province (then the only seate of the warr) without our solicitacon did send Commissions, bearing date at his palace of Holirood house the 19th of November, 1641 (vizt.) to the Lord Viscount Mountgomry for a regiment of foote with a troope of horse; to the Lord Viscount Clandeboy for a regiment of foote with a troope of horse; to S^r^ James Mountgomry for a regiment of foote with a troope of horse; to Captaine George Mountgomry for a troope of horse, which was raised in the County of Doune; to S^r^ William Stewart for a regiment of foote and a troope of horse; to S^r^ Robert Stewart for a regiment of foote and a troope of horse; to Sir Ralph Gore one regiment of foote, which was raised in the Countie of Donnegall; and to Sir William Cole a regiment of foote with a troope of horse, in the Countie of Farmanagh, for prosecuting of theise rebells with fire and sword, wherein, for their further incouragement, was specified the pay of the old standing army. By vertue of which Commission theise seaven Regiments with the seaven troopes were imediately raised, and have done great and remarkable services, to the ruinating of the rebells in theise parts and the preserving of many thousands of the British that retired for safetie to them, who is preserved with the inhabitants to this daie. His Ma^tie^ was also graciouslie pleased some few daies after the said Commissions to send over a proporcon of muskatts, pikes, powder, match, backs, breasts, and potts to Sir Robert Stewart, which were delivered to him att Colinore, within three miles of London Derry, by a servant of my Lord Duke of Richmond, with a letter from his Lo^pp^, directed to the said Sir Robert Stewart, desiring him that if they stood in need of Ordinance to send to Sir William Coachran, his lo^pp's^ steward in Scotland, who would deliver us what Ordinance we desired out of his Ma^tie's^ Castle of Dumbartone, his Ma^tie^ having given special directions for the same.

Immediately upon the receipt of our Commission, and being provided by his Ma^tie's^ care, wee putt ourselves in a posture of warr, and, marching out upon the rebells and recovering many of the cowes and horses formerly taken from the British, togeather with many of theire owne, this being the greatest part of our action from our levies till the begining of March; att which time the regiment of Sir Ralph Gore, his Castle, the Castle of Dunagall and Castle Raighane (some 24 miles distant from us) were all blocked up by the enimies after many good services done by that regiment in that place of the countrie: whereof Sir William and Sir Robert Stewart being acquainted by Sir Ralph Gore's pressing letters, assuring them that he was no longer able to hold out, his ammunition all spent to five pound of powder att the most, and no match att all.

Marche 13.—The said Sir William and Sir Robert Stewart, with the regiments and troopes under theire commaund, marched to Donnegall Peere to Sir Ralph Gore's Castell, whereof the rebells having intelligence fled to the mountains, and where wee staied some two or three daies till his regiment and family (his lady being within ten daies before brought to bed) with the unusefull people of both the other two Castells were made readie to march; during which time we burnt all the corne in that Countrey, knowing the same would maintaine the rebells to distresse theise Castles when wee were gone, and leaving as much ammunition as wee were able to spare to Castle Raighan, from which wee brought of about two thousand men, women and children, and returning to Sir Ralph Gore brought of his regiment himseife and familie and thousands of robbed British that had fled after the rebellion to his and Dunegall Castles, the last whereof, wee having severall times after releived, holds out against the enemie untill this daye.

March 16.—Wee left Dunegall and having upon our waye the passe of Barnsmore, the most observable in that province, where wee expected the enimies incounter, and for that cause did putt out our men in a defensive posture, the passe being three miles long and not above a muskatt shott of breadth on each side in an accessible mountaine, with thicketts of wood neere the end, wherof wee discovered the enimie, who charged us in vann rere and both flankes att once, being obscured in the bushes till wee were so far ingaged. It pleased God att our first incounter wee beat of the partie opposing our vann and intertained on very hott fight for three hours time till all our unserviceable people and theire baggage were past. In conclusion wee routed them, only a small partie of muskateers kept a continual skirmish in our rere (the ground being unserviceable for horse for five miles further) so that night parted us, which was indeed God's extraordinary preservacon, their number consisting of three thousand and wee necessitated to march (in respect of the straightness of the passe) att least four miles long where wee [were] forced to divide our muskaters for guarding the unserviceable people. Att our returne wee quartered Colonell Gore's regiment with our owne, and divided the robbed people, and helped them with shares of what prize wee gott of the enimie.

Aprill.—Sir Philomy Oneal came with a great bodie of foote and six troopes of horse tooke and left a ward in the Castle of Straban. The next daie marcht three miles upp the river of Fyne, thinking to fall in our quarters, where wee in prevencon having drawne togeather theise three regiments of Sir William Stewart, Sir Robert Stewart, and the regiment formerly belonging to Sir Ralph Gore (then deceased) and the same now commanded by Colonell Audley Mervin, togeather with two foote companies of London Derry and our two troopes of horse, the regiments and troopes of the Countie of Doune lying an hundred miles from us, and Sir William Coles' regiment and troope thirtie, the enimie very strong betwixt us and both, which bard all intelligences, those three regiments and two companies with the two troopes (having no more armes nor ammunition but what was formerly sent by his Ma^tie^) did ioyne and incounter Sir Philomey a mile or two from our quarters, beate them in the field and chased them some five or six miles, though his foote consisted of four thousand men, besides the horse formerly menconed. On the morrowe after wee marcht to Strabane, tooke the Castle, and putt the ward (consisting of three companies) to the sword.

A little time after there was a gentleman sent to Sir William Stewart, Sir Robert Stewart, and the Cittie of Derry, from the Cittie of Colrane to showe theire sad condicon, who had received the weeke before a great overthrowe in the losse of seaven hundred men and armes, which had incouraged the rebells; that they sawe no releife (wanting bread), but to submit themselves and Cittie to the merciles enemie, and therefore begged reliefe from us (if wee were able) they not knowing our condicon, the passage having for six months before bin stopped. Sir William Stewart, Sir Robert Stewart, the Maior of Derry, and gentlemen of the Countie had a meeting for answering the gentleman's propositions, where it was resolved that notwithstanding our owne wants wee would indeavour by God's assistance to releive Colrane. All this time wee were not taken notice of by the parliament of England, nor did they knowe that wee were in being or had received his Maties commissions ammunition and armes, which it pleased God to blesse as the meanes whereby many thousand british hath bin preserved alive untill this daye.

COKE MSS.

May 10.—Immediately after wee marcht forth with the foresaid three regiments severall companies of London Derry and the two troopes of horse, and in our waye twelve miles from Derry wee releived two strong Castles who were then att verie lowe ebb being allmost sterved and in number above three thousand poor and old people.

The next daye wee marcht toward Colrane, comanding out a partie through the mountaines of MacGillingen, who incountered a partie of the rebells whereof they kild three hundred and brought from a greate prey of cowes and sheepe.

Upon the report of our approach the enimie retired from the Cittie which wee supplied with about eight hundred cowes and staied with them till they furnisht themselves with fire and what other necessaries the country could afford. After wee parted from thence we burnt and destroyed all houses and corne that was not within theire reach.

The rebells all this time were preparing to intercept us att our returne and were drawne to a great head neere the Castle of Dongavin with so much confidence that some of them confest to us after that they feared nothing so much as wee (to escape their hands) should run into the sea, but God had otherwise provided for wee marched from the sea to them where wee found them in good order, and with whom wee had an hott fight, in the end it pleased God we kild about six hundred, marched and so tooke the Castle of Dongavin wherein was the cheife of the Occaanes with severall of the gentlemen of thatt name one being a Colonell, whom wee carried prisoners to Derry.

Theire overthrowe did so incense the rebells that they drewe togeather all the forces of that province of Ulster consisting of about nine or ten thousand men; who under the command of Sir Phiiomey Oneale fell into our quarters, hoping that by cutting us of to be able imediately upon ther returne to beleigure Dublin, wee being formerly the greatest cause of theire division. He marched four miles in our Country burning all the waye till night, and then drawne upp in a bodie in our sight putt forth his guards: himselfe being a rawe souldier he confided in the judgment and valour of Alexander Macdanill commonly called Colkittagh.

Our forces consisting of Sir William and Sir Robert's regiments, Colonell Audley Marvin's regiment and severall of the companies of London Derry (levied for the safety of the Cittie, and two yeares agoe regimented by the parliament under the command of the Lord Folliott) with our owne two troopes of horse and the troope under the command of Captain Dudley Phillipps, wee lay that night within muskatt shott of the enimie att our armes.

June 13. —Next morning early wee joined battell and came to push a pike before they brake which by God's providence they did, and were only fortunate in the badnes of the ground where the horse was not able to do service, for having followed them eight or ten miles, there was above eight hundred of them kild in the field and many after died imediately after theire returne home being bursted with runing. Before Sir Philomy his returne my lord Viscount Mountgomery with theise regiments of the Countie of Doune marched into the Countie of Tyrrone, took, and burnt Sir Philomy Oneale his castle and much of his quarters and kild all he mett with there.

All this time and allmost a twelvemonth after wee had no releife from the parliament, nor did they att this time knowe that wee were in being as they themselves profest to Colonell Audley Mervin then att London soliciting the honourable houses for that regiment whereof he had bin formerly Lieutenant Colonell.

Theise before written with many other services done by theise regiments and troopes inabled by his Mat^ies^ commission armes and ammunition ; which if wee had not by his Mat^ies^ care timely received wee could have expected nothing but the inevitable losse of that Country (wherein it is conceived there is thirtie thousand soules of the british nation att this daie) which being lost might have hazard his Mat^ies^ interest of the whole kingdome, no considirable supplyes att that time being come to any Garrison there.

As for the services done by the three regiments of the Countie of Doune and troopes there I do not particularize not being an eye witnes with them; therefore I mencon not theire service, though I know it being related shall appear verie considerable. Nor the great service done by Sir William Cole and his regiment which is more then could be expected from such a number being thirtie miles from any releife: neither other considerable services done by the said three regiments and companies of London Derry with the two above named troopes from the begining of the rebellion to the middle of May 1643, which was one full year and halfe, and which time was the first provision that wee received from the parliament, being one moneths paie in clothes to all officers above a lieutenant, and two moneths to all comon souldiers and officers under a Captaine, nor have we received two full moneths more and that on base cloath and other unusefull comodities sold by the officers thirtie in the hundred cheaper then they were sent them, though wee have bin fiv yeares compleate inlisted under theire paie: so that the Colonells have bin necessitated att severall times to buy theire powder from merchants out of Scotland att ten pound the hundred weight, wyth other necessary provisions for maintenance of the warr, for which some of them who have estates in Scotland are now extended for the same debt.

And as we cannot be sufficiently thankfull to Almighty God for preserving us in so eminent danger, so in the next place wee have great obligation to pour out praises to him for our kings Mat^ie^, whom it pleased the Lord to make the instrument of our safetie by putting authoritie armes and ammunition in our hands when wee almost hopeles of all releife, and to invocate the heavens for a happie accomodation betwixt him and his people and that his Mat^ie^ and his posteritie maye reign over theise three kingdomes in righteousnes and peace so long as the Sun and Moon shall indure.

If shall be demanded what service theise regiments and troopes have done since they were inlisted in the parliaments paie I shalbe readie to give a particular accompt when I am desired.

RO. STEWART.

1641–2, January 3. Gray's Inn.—Thomas Coke to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

COKE MSS.

I am very sorry that the indisposition of my body and want of health, together with the want of other conveniences for such a winter journey, hath hindered me from coming down to present my duty to you this Christmas. Since my brother's departure I have not been able to stir abroad until yesterday, when I went to wait upon the Countess of Devon, and after to visit my uncle a prisoner in the Tower. Ten of the Bishops are imprisoned in the Tower and two committed to the Black Rod, upon an impeachment by the House of Commons of High Treason for subscribing a petition and protestation to the King and Lords, the copy whereof I have sent you down in this letter. Here hath been the saddest and most tumultuous Christmas that in all my life I ever yet knew. This sickness that God hath been pleased to lay upon me, I think hath been a great blessing to me to keep from out of their company. The mechanic citizens, and apprentices, have daily flocked by thousands during these holidays to Westminster to the Parliament, offering very uncivil affronts not only to the Bishops' persons, but even to the King himself, as they passed by his house. This incensed many gentlemen, and especially the commanders and soldiers about the town, who two days together endeavoured to repel them by force; whereby much hurt hath ensued, very many wounded and hurt on both sides, some hands cut off, others arms, others sides of their faces cut off, very many wounded and hurt. I do not hear of any that were slain, unless Sir Richard Wiseman be since dead, who was hurt amongst them. The King thereupon hath built a court of guard at Whitehall, and a company of the trained band of Middlesex attend for the safeguard of his person there night and day. Our House of Commons sat on Saturday last, and do this day at the Guildhall in London, and unless the King will afford them a guard of their own choice, under the command and direction of the Earl of Essex, their intention is to adjourn themselves thither totally. On Thursday last the four Inns of Court went to Whitehall in testimony of their affections to His Majesty, and the young gentlemen tendered him their service for the suppression of these tumultuous assemblies. On Saturday Sir John Culpeper, the Knight of the Shire for Kent, was made Chancellor of the Exchequer, Lord Falkland a privy Councillor, and it is conceived only in preparation to make him Secretary of State. The Earl of Southampton was made of the Bedchamber to His Majesty, with an intention as I hear to make him Groom of the Stole in the Earl of Holland's place. Eight of the Lords in Ireland of the English pale have declared themselves for the rebels lately; and there is above 200,000 of them that have sworn and subscribed a covenant or oath there, and are very strong in arms and munition, as Mr. Brent informs me who is now very lately come hither out of Ireland. The rebels lay in great strength round about Dublin when he came away, and he thinks the town is taken by this time, unless Sir Simon Harcourt hath saved it, who is now landed there with 1,400 men, as we hear. 2,000 Scots are to go into the North of Ireland: but the Scotch Commissioners have repaired to our House with additional propositions, viz., to have three cautionary towns in Ireland which are now defended by the English to be delivered to their hands, &c., Londonderry, Knockfergus, and Coleraine; to which proposition likewise the House of Commons have assented. I pray God send peace and quietness amongst us, that religion and peace may kiss each other.

1641-2, January 8. Trusley.—William Coke (nephew) to Sir John Coke, Knight, Councillor of State to the King's Majesty, at Melbourne.

I should be joyful to understand of the welfare of our London Parliament kindred. I am a suitor for your support for Peter Chalingwood, who is threatened by the Earl of Chesterfield and Mr. Fulwood to be put out of his office of Chief Constable. All the Justices of the Peace within his Hundred are desirous to keep him in still.

1641–2, January 10. Gray's Inn.—Thomas Coke to Sir John Coke, at his house at Melbourne, Derbyshire.

The particulars of all the sad accidents and events that have lately happened here, I must leave to the relation of Mr. Reed's letter, who informs me that he hath given you a particular account. I fear God hath some heavy judgment to execute upon this nation. Every hour here threatens public insurrection and confusion. The House of Commons being adjourned from Wednesday last until tomorrow, being Tuesday, at two of the clock, the committee that hath all this time sat at Grocers Hall, in London, have agreed with the citizens for the safe convoy of the five impeached persons to the parliament at Westminster at that time, and 3,000 of the trained men of the City are designed to march down with them by land for their defence, to Westminster, besides other strength by water. There is both will and power for their opposition, but I hope God will be pleased to send peace and quietness amongst us, and to divert all rash and preposterous counsels. The King, I hear, intends this day to depart from about this town. The Committee hath likewise voted the proclamation for the proclaiming of those five persons that had withdrawn themselves to be traitors, to be a false libellous and scandalous paper. The Lord Keeper hath refused to set the Great Seal to it, whereby the publication of it is hindered. With my humble duty presented to yourself and my mother, with my prayers to God for your peace and prosperity, I crave your blessing, and shall ever remain your obedient son.

1641–2, January 19. "Northampton with badde penn and inke."—Sir John Coke, the Younger, to Sir John Coke.

I cannot advertise you of any certain truths. Only I find that Colonel Lunsford (Lumsford) having endeavoured to assemble some forces near Hampton Court is apprehended, brought to London with his hands bound behind him, and in prison. His company voted rebels by the House of Commons forthwith dispersed. The King as is said returneth this day to London, and accommodation is expected. Reported that Essex and Holland refused to wait upon him to Hampton Court. You see in what condition things stand, if all this be true. We have with God's blessing had a prosperous journey hither.

1641–2, January 25.—Sir John Coke, the Younger, to Sir John Coke, Melbourne. [No signature.]

Lately the King appointed the Earl of Newcastle Governor of Hull, and accordingly he repaired to his charge. The House of Commons have appointed Sir John Hotham to that charge; he hath deputed his son who is likewise gone down. The Mayor of the town refuses to admit either of them, saying he is bound by his oath to keep the town for the King and their charter is to be free from garrisons. The battle betwixt the Scots (whereof many were lately come volunteers out of Scotland) and the Irish was very cruel and lasted all day, and though the Irish retreated by night yet Waterford is since revolted, and things are worse. Sir Philomel O'Neale leads the Irish. The French Ambassador reports a strange fight in the air to have been seen in Poitiers by night, and in the morning the earth was covered to the ancles with blood. The House of Commons intend to remove all the King's council wholly, and to place such as they may confide in, resuming such again as now are in place and in their favour. Sir Henry Vane is said shall be restored. Not only this Book of Common Prayer, but whether any form of public prayer, at least imperative to be used, is drawn to be a great question, and the debate was eager upon Saturday night last. The Spanish side are said to inform of some treaties on foot with the French Protestants, and that the Scots should have been invited into England again. The King of Denmark lies with forces at Luckstadt [Gluckstadt] and some would fear him here.

COKE MSS.

It is this day voted by the Commons that the Queen shall have no priests about her, and that she shall take an oath not to meddle in any matter of state, which is good news.

1641–2, January 27, Thursday night. London.—Sir John Coke, the Younger. [No address.] [No signature.] Endorsed "Son John, London."

The Commons desired the Lords to join in petition to the King that all Councillors may be displaced, and such resumed as the Parliament may confide in, and that the Militia may be put into like hands. Forty Lords being the major part (whereof one Bishop) refuse to join, thirty-two Lords protest against them. The Commons prefer the petition alone, and the King hath taken two days for answer. The Hertfordshire petition came up the day after the refusal of the Lords, and was presented to the Lords with the clause which you will observe in the end. Like petitions (excepting that clause) are come from other shires and from the City, where the Common Council hath made a Committee of 12 to prepare and digest their businesses. What comes from the Committee to the Common Council comes with much recommendation, and being carried with plurality of voices passes as the act of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, who are also members of the Common Council. Yesterday in the House of Peers a question was pressed by Lords of one opinion; those of the other opinion desiring to decline the question cried to adjourn the house until another day. The Duke of Richmond rashly in passion saith, Put the question to adjourn for six months, being himself of opinion for the putting of the question, which the other Lords would decline He is questioned for his words, caused to withdraw, and after reprehended in his place. Northumberland, Essex, and twelve other Lords enter their protestations against that reprehension as an unequal punishment for his offence. Sir John Clotworthy brings this day a copy of their protestation to the House of Commons, whereupon they have resolved to accuse the Duke as one of the malignant party and an evil councillor to the King. The King refuseth to put Carrickfergus into the hands of the Scots, and to give them power to command the English in Ulster. The Lords sent this day to the Commons to join with them in the discovery of those that advised the King herein, it having been agreed by both Houses. The battle betwixt the Scotch and Irish was at Listen Garway (Lisnegarvey, Lisburn) the Lord Conway's town, which the Irish assaulted. The Prince hath been at Windsor and never was at St. James' since the King's departure. The Bishops were put off until next Tuesday. There is a great schism amongst the apprentices concerning the Cross in Cheap, whether it should be pulled down; it is often in danger and some hurt is done upon it. Bristol comes not to court. Hertford, Seymour, Southampton, Falkland, and Culpeper are the chief Councillors. Lord Digby is arrived at Flushing.

1641–2, January 31. Westminster.—William Astell to Sir J. Coke, at Melbourne.

About a year past I wrote two letters unto your Honour, but have not been so happy to receive your answer. I am certainly informed the woods are sold. . . . I conceive no cause why you should withhold my due part any longer. . . . Sir, you must needs be sensible of these lamentable times. I have had of you at three several times £19 10*s.*, and I humbly pray you for the tender mercies of Christ Jesus to send me up what more you do intend me; so shall you preserve me my wife and six poor chiidren from starving, and cause us to pray to God for you.

1641–2, January 31. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke. "For yourself." [No signature. Endorsed "Son John from London."]

His Majesty upon the instance of the Scotch Commissioners hath agreed that Carrickfergus shall be put into their hands, and that they shall have command over the English forces in Ulster. But the rumour came to this town yesterday that the Irish have prevented the Scotch and have taken the town. The Duke of Richmond is accused by the Commons, 1. For writing letters of recommendation to the Cinque Ports concerning the election of burgesses, and taking the names of those that refused to give their voices as he required, which a servant of his writing in his name desired one of his dependants to certify unto him. 2. For sending his servant Scroope to Mr. Peard, who was in the chair, concerning the charge against Henry Percy, to desire him not to hasten the charge against the said Henry Percy, which being refused by Mr. Peard his Lordship afterwards frowned upon him, and told him that he found him not his friend, and he must expect to find his Lordship not to be his friend. 3. The motion made in the Lords' House to adjourn for 6 months. These things being to the destruction of parliaments the Commons pray the Lords that he may be removed from the Parliament, put from all his offices and from the King's Council. The debate held with the Lords all Saturday in the afternoon, and then was adjourned unto this day.

Concerning the petition of the Commons to his Majesty to put the command of the militia and forts into the hands of such as the Parliament may confide in, he hath answered that he will put such in as they may confide in and remove such as they can except against. But Sir John Byron he will not remove from the Tower because they present no cause. This answer is very craftily penned, but like not to give them satisfaction. A committee is made to consider of it.

To this petition the removal of all Councillors was not annexed, but a committee of both Houses sitteth upon that point. They have voted the Earl of Roxburgh and William Murray to be removed from the King; against them the practice in Scotland against the Marquis of Argyl is objected. Mr. Porter, Mr. Crofts, and Sir John Winter with others are included in the like vote. The committee stands not so much upon any legal proof or exception against them; but posito that ill counsels are given, they think good to remove all that they suspect; and better remove two without cause than one bad councillor should continue. Mr. Porter is also removed from being Captain of the Company in Westminster, and Mr. Cecil, the Earl of Salisbury's second son, put into his place by vote of the House of Commons. Of Mr. Ingleby I cannot give you more information as yet; shortly I shall. Bristol hath leave to go into the country. A printed book tells us that the papists are risen in Derbyshire, and that they have set a church on fire; this I thought good to advertise you of, paries cum proximus ardet. Your clock you must not expect until next week. 200*l.* for Pedgbank woods I have received, and 60*l.* of the Baggrave rents for Mr. Holbech, all which I should be glad to return down.

Everybody had need be careful what they write for fear of interception.

1641–2, February 1, Tuesday. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne, delivered at the Cock at the end of Long Lane.

The Duke of Richmond was quitted by the Lords yesterday. This day the Bishops are to come to their trial. A petition of an extraordinary nature was yesterday presented to the House of Commons by the apprentices and labourers: they threaten the Bishops hard. The King's answer is voted by the House of Commons to be a denial, and it is referred to a Committee what is further to be done. From the Sheriff you will hear that the protestation is to be taken over all countries, and that the declaration concerning the breach of privileges is published in all parts. Sir John Hotham's son hath possessed himself of Hull. Your clock is in my hands again, but goes not well, although it hath been thus long on the mending hand.

Yesterday I wrote by Ashby carrier. These Mr. Bourne, the minister of Ashover, hath undertaken to deliver. Sir Thomas Widrington informs me that upon enquiry he finds that Mr. Ingleby's estate is about 1,500*l.* per annum, that he is beforehand and hath only two sons. When he gets perfecter information I shall know.

1641–2, February 14.—Edward Reed to Sir John Coke. [No address.]

This place hath but little as yet. It is hoped that now the Bishops, the popish Lords, the malignant spirits, are out of the House, and many of both Houses gone and dispersed into their countries, that the affairs will go more smoothly on and bring much contentment into the commonwealth. How the militia is disposed of and into what honourable men's hands I do believe you have better information than I can give your Honour; and what ships are gone already and what more are to [follow?] after for the service of Ireland, which kingdom as yet is oppressed with the stout looks of the rebels, but those that come from thence tell me that it is not to be doubted but when the Scots and English armies come thither they will soon be suppressed, and many which are now out for fear of being ruined by the rebels, when they find the King's party able to make a field war against them, will turn to the King's side. My Lord Lieutenant and my Lord Conway are resolved to go for Ireland about the 22nd of this month. The King, the Queen, and the Lady Mary did lie at Canterbury upon Saturday night, and this day they set forward to Dover. The Prince and the young Duke are at Richmond. The King doth intend, as I hear, to see the Queen and the Lady Mary aboard and then return, I do not hear to London; and this is all I know to make the service to your Honour of your Honour's most humble and faithful servant.

1641–2, February 17. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger, to the Rt. Honble. Sir John Coke, at Melbourne, Derbyshire.

Sir William Brereton is to transport 4,000 arms from Hull to West Chester. To Nottingham he bringeth them by water. From thence also to the King's Mills in the Manor of Donington they may be conveyed by water, where being received by carts they may through Swarkeston go directly to Uttoxeter and thence to West Chester. To assist him in providing boats for their carriage from Nottingham to the King's Mil[l]s, I have promised to do him what courtesy I can. As I am informed your tenant that rents the ferry and house at Wildon ferry hath three or four boats at least of 10 or 12 tons apiece, wherein he usually transports lead and other commodities betwixt Wildon and Nottingham, so many boats as will carry 40 tons will carry all the arms at once. I desire you would please to command Denham to go to the ferryman at Wildon, and to acquaint him that by order of the Parliament such arms are to be transported to West Chester, and to take order with him that his boats may be in a readiness to attend at Nottingham when the occasion shall be, whereof he shall not fail to have four or five days' warning; and he shall be well paid for the carriage of the said arms from Nottingham to the King's Mills. As I am informed the boats will be two days in coming up the water from Nottingham to the King's Mills, whereof I have acquainted Sir William. When the arms are come to King's Mills I have also promised Sir William Brereton to assist him in providing carts and horses, for his money, as they shall pass through the County of Derby; wherein I beseech you to command Denham to be careful, for I presume the country will very readily contribute their assistance towards the transporting of arms into Ireland, especially when they shall be paid for their pains. Those that have the charge of these bring also with them warrants from the Parliament for their accommodation both with boats and horses. But it will conduce much to their expedition if the boats and carts and horses be so provided that they stay not for them, and that the whole proportion may go together. I make bold rather to write thus much to you than to Denham, lest he should mistake any part of the directions. And thus with my prayers to Almighty God for your good health I humbly present my duty to yourself and to my mother and begging your blessing remaining your most obedient son.

By this bearer you shall receive the "Apostacy of the Latter Times," which I got but this afternoon. By the next carrier you shall receive Grotius' Notes upon the Evangelists. Heinsius hath also published his Exercitationes Sacras on all the New Testament by way of commentary, in folio; but the value of the man's learning I do not know. My brother sends for his nag (which is come by my cousin Danvers) with intention to ride the circuit, and to wait upon you at Melbourne.

1641–2, February 20. London.—Sir John Coke, the Younger, to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

Herewith you shall receive Grotius' In novum testamentum; of what sort his notes are you will find, I confess I have not read them. Prince Robert is arrived, and the Queen is not yet gone.

. . . . Of Mr. Ingleby I hear nothing yet. Mr. Fulwood will be with you this week.

1641–2, February 24, Thursday. London.—Sir John Coke, the Younger, to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne. [No signature. In a feigned writing. Endorsed "Son John, London."]

This day, notwithstanding the discouragement formerly received, about 58 or 60 of the chief sort of the City, came and delivered a copy of that petition to the House of Commons which Mr. Long had gotten from Mr. Harvey into his hands. The petition itself was signed by three or four hundred. Amongst those that delivered the petition this day were these, Mr. Binion, Mr. Daniel Harvey, Mr. Eliab Harvey, Mr. Woodward, Mr. Cockayne, Mr. Ashwell, Mr. Kiteley, Mr. Crone (?), etc. The effect of their petition was that the command of the Militia of the City might be put into the hands of the Lord Mayor as formerly, and not into the hands of these new commissioners. But this petition found very ill acceptance in the House, and most of the petitioners were fain to retract what they had done. The like petition preferred by the same parties to the Lords found the like success there; and both Houses agree that the contrivers of these petitions shall be severely punished, in which number it is supposed that Mr. Binion and the Recorder of London are like to suffer. As I am told, the petition to the Lords did reflect directly upon the persons of some of the new commissioners, as men of such mean estates as the city could not confide in them. Shortly both petitions I conceive will be in print, whereby the truth will appear. The King had sent to Hampton Court that the Prince should meet him in his return tomorrow at Greenwich, but by order of both Houses, the Marquis Hertford is commanded that the Prince remove not from Hampton Court, and the sickness of the Marquis is the cause given to the King of this resolution of the Houses. Some are doubtful lest the prince might be transported from Greenwich into the parts beyond the seas. The Queen is said to have embarked yesterday. The Lords Justices in Ireland have, amongst other arch-rebels, proclaimed a reward of 500*l.* to him that shall bring in Sir Luke O'Toole's head. The mystery concerning the Marquis of Argyll and Lord Lowden (Loudoun) is said to be this:—The King's party increaseth in Scotland, and of the Lords of the Council the major part favour his interests: that His Majesty hath sent for these two great Lords, being both of the commission to treat with the parliament here: that it being thought of dangerous consequence to draw them out of Scotland, it was contrived to stop their journey by the Parliament here. It is whispered also that the King intends another journey into Scotland, and that the Earls of Montrose and Traquaire are very strong. How much of this is true I know not, but it is believed that all is not safe there.

1641–2, March 7. London.—Sir John Coke the younger, to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

Mr. Fulwood hath my last week's letters in his hands, and is not yet gone out of this town. Tomorrow he saith he is resolved to take his journey along with my brother, who cometh down to Leicester Assizes, and will be with you at Melbourne upon Saturday next. But lest an occasion should happen, whereby my letters should be forestalled another return, I send this by the ordinary carrier. His Majesty is for certain gone from Royston on the sudden towards York. The Prince was with him at Royston, and, as I conceive, is gone along with him. The Marquis Hertford is discharged of his government, and there is no governor at all, the King taking upon himself that charge. Whether His Majesty took his journey towards York upon Saturday or yesterday, or this morning, I know not. I heard not of it before this morning from Mr. Sydenham, who is instantly posting after him. Marquis Hamilton went from this town to the Court to Royston upon Friday, but whether he be gone with the King I do not yet know; I rather think not. The Queen arrived in Holland the next day after her departure hence. All other affairs I leave to Mr. Fulwood and my brother to inform you. I hope you have received Grotius his Commentary upon the Evangelists. If you like it not, I can change it for another book of the same price. I sent you also the Apostacy of the Latter Times, written by Mr. Mead. I am very glad that your clock goes so well; I wish it may continue to do so.

I much fear that Mr. Reed is in prison, for he went about four days since into London, and I cannot hear of him since. But I do not write thus much to Mr. Mayo, lest it should discourage him, and because I would not write that whereof I am not certain. I am glad Mr. Mayo hath missed his ague fit.

1641–2, March 18, Saturday. London.—Sir John Coke the younger, to Sir John Coke, in Melbourne. [No signature.] Endorsed "Son John, London."

You will receive letters of this week, both by the ordinary carrier and by a foot post from Swithland; Sir John Curzon hath undertaken to convey this unto you. This petition enclosed came to the House yesterday from the Common Council. Also Mr. Edwards, Deputy to the Merchant Adventurers, brought information to the House of a letter sent out of Holland from one Henley a skipper, who saith he was entreated by an unknown person, servant to the Lord Digby, to accept of employment in the King of Denmark's fleet, which was now preparing at Elsinore to transport an army of 40,000 into England to land at Hull. This is conceived a ground of jealousy, and to add to our reasons for the [putting of the ?] militia into such hands as the Parliament may confide in. An answer is now preparing to the King's last message from Newmarket, wherein the relation of this news of Denmark shall be also inserted. The Governor of Hull to be required to look well to that harbour, and a pinnace to be sent for discovery towards Elsinore. Sir Edward Hartopp and Sir Thomas Hartopp are both appointed Deputy Lieutenants for Leicestershire. Sir Gervaise Clifton, Sir Thomas Hutchinson, and Mr. Sutton, procured their names not to be offered by the Earl of Clare. The names for Derbyshire are not yet come in, nor for divers other counties. Earl of Cumberland hath refused. The difference betwixt the Lords and Commons concerning the word Parliament in their late vote concerning the power of both Houses to declare law, will, I hope easily be reconciled, it being only in regard of the usual claim made by the Lords to the sole judicature. I shall be very well contented that the Earl of Rutland present not my name for a Deputy Lieutenant. I think he will not.

1641–2, March 19. Nottingham.—Thomas Coke to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

Not having opportunity at Derby, by reason of other employments, to finish and perfect the interrogatories to be exhibited at the execution of the commission between my brother and Cheribough of Castle Donington this vacation, made me desire this messenger to repair to me to Nottingham for those instructions which I have accordingly now perfected and sent herewith to Nicholas Denham. Mr. Sydenham came with me to Nottingham, but at the town's end meeting with the Sheriff of the county expecting the Judges coming, who gave us certain information of the King's departure to York with the Prince, he immediately went that way with what speed he could. He had several indictments found at Derby against the rioters that so forcibly entered his possession. All that were presented were likewise bound to the peace until the next Assizes. There came this morning a letter hither from London to the Clerk of the Assizes, wherein was written of great tumults and distractions about London, that the King had commanded the Mint and his printing press to be removed to him to York, and likewise the Lord Keeper to attend him there with the Great Seal, which the Parliament will not suffer to depart from them; that the Lord Mayor of London coming from the Guildhall was sore hurt in a tumult whereof he languished very much. It is since here reported that he is dead. Going to visit the old Countess of Clare here at Nottingham she told me that she received yesternight a letter from the Earl, her son, intimating that upon Wednesday last Mr. Attorney General upon his judgment was acquitted in the Lords House by vote. The King upon his journey towards York was entertained with petitions of every county for his return to the Parliament from Rutlandshire and Lincolnshire. This day there was a petition to the same effect here presented to the Judge upon the open Bench for his approbation and consent thereunto.

I am yet uncertain how I shall dispose of myself after the circuit ended. Mine own affairs and friends call me back into Derbyshire, the affairs of the Commonwealth call me to London or some other place. I fear that matters grow so fast to a high period that before the end of the circuit London will scarce be a safe place of abode.

1642, March 27. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne. [Endorsed "Son John, London." No signature.]

This enclosed Diurnal containeth after a sort what hath passed the week ended last [ ]. Only a motion of greatest moment is pretermitted. Mr. Pym moved that a messenger might be sent express into Ireland with command from both Houses to the Lords Justices to send over such examinations as have been there lately taken concerning abettors of the rebellion, and what encouragement they have received from England, for that something of consequence was discovered upon examination here. This messenger, I think, is already gone. And until he return perchance the consideration of the King's answer to the declaration delivered at Newmarket shall be deferred. For yet nothing is done thereupon. To make way to the examinations expected to come out of Ireland (as I conceive), the Irish protestants residing here (as I am credibly informed) have at this time sent a petition to the King to desire his return to the Parliament, for that otherwise those reports spread in Ireland with so much confidence that the rebels have received encouragement from him will take deep root in the belief of the world, because His Majesty retards the relief of that kingdom by absence from the Parliament. Though the news of the Danes was last week confirmed in print, with the addition of a defeat given unto them within ten leagues of Hull by Van Tromp, yet now nothing of that sort is again believed. Only, as you may perceive by this Diurnal, the preparations in France are still acquainted unto us. The Earl of Southampton is with leave asked of the Lords' House gone down to the King to York, and Marquis Hertford is said to prepare for that journey. The news is that Marquis Hertford, the Earls of Southampton and Newcastle, and the Lord Strange are to be there installed Knights of the Garter. Derby carrier bringeth news to this town that Derbyshire joineth with Nottinghamshire, Yorkshire, and Lincolnshire in a great petition to the King for his return to the Parliament. God be thanked here hath been no tumult at all in this town, and the Mayor's sickness proceeded from the strangury as some say, not from any hurt received any way. I have enclosed several printed papers to entertain you withal. Sir Thomas Burdett, Sir John Curzon, Sir John Gell, Sir Edward Vernon, and Sir Samuel Sligh with Mr. Greaves and Mr. Lionel Fanshawe are returned for Deputy Lieutenants for Derbyshire. To satisfy you of the reasons why I desired not the employment I shall desire to take time until I wait upon you. Obscuro positus loco, leni perfruar otio. And it was passed before I received your advice, to which I shall ever readily conform myself. Monsieur Oeiles saith certainly that the Prince of Orange is not in any jealousy with the States. The Queen was at their charge ten days well entertained. Now she is at her own, only she hath her house rent free. So many false reports are spread abroad that a man knows not what to believe. Mr. Poole promised to send you the Gazettes weekly, but I have not seen him this month, but he is in health.

1642, April 4. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke.

[Endorsed "Son John, London. No signature. No address. The writing appears to be for the most part a feigned one.]

As of late the news of the Danes hath been blown into all countries, whereof ere now you understand the grounds and the untruth, so perchance the report of the petition in Kent may have multiplied into several shapes. Thus it was. At the Assizes at Maidstone which were holden upon Thursday and Friday the 24th and 25th of March, Sir Edward Dering and others of the Justices and gentlemen offered themselves from the Bench to serve upon the Grand Jury, and were by the Judge accepted to that employment. Whilst that service lasted they agitated the heads of a petition to be presented to the Parliament, whereunto because nine of nineteen dissented the petition could not be presented in the open court in the name of the Grand Jury. Wherefore those that were of opinion for the petition published it upon the Bench, when the Judge was withdrawn from the Court of Pleas to the Court of Nisi Prius. And in this manner the several articles of the petition, which are seventeen, were voted by all that were present except some few. This was done upon Friday, and that night the Judge Mallet desired of Sir George Stroud to see a copy of the petition, which he promised to send to his Lordship the next morning, and told him also if he pleased he might shew it to the Earl of Bristol, upon whom both the Judge and Sir George Stroud have dependence. I should have told you that upon the Bench it was agreed that the petition should be dispersed through the county to get hands, and that upon the 29th of April they should meet upon Blackheath to accompany their petition to the Parliament. Upon Saturday morning the Judge, having received a copy of the petition from Sir George Stroud in a cover of paper, took his journey to London; and upon Sunday acquainted the Earl of Bristol therewith, and delivered unto him the said copy. On Monday the Commons had notice of what had passed at Maidstone, and interpreting this act to be a practise to make party they acquainted it to the Lords. Bristol and the Judge are forthwith committed to the Tower. Sir Edward Dering, Sir Robert Twisden, Sir George Stroud, Mr. Spencer, three Divines, with some others, are sent for as Delinquents having been principal actors in this petition; and a committee of Lords and Commons made to examine the business. The Delinquents come all to town; but Sir Edward took an opportunity to withdraw himself since his arrival and before his examination, but I hear that upon Saturday last he hath rendered himself again. Bristol makes account to lie in the Tower. He saith it is strange he should be committed for concealing that which was publicly acted at the Assizes and after proclaimed in several market towns in Kent, and yet he concealed it not 24 hours, whereas treason may without danger of misprision be so long undiscovered. Especially the thing being a petition to the Parliament, whereas Justice Long was committed for endeavouring to hinder the Londoners from petitioning, and the Lord Mayor and Recorder of London are under a great cloud for obstructing them in the way of their petitioning. News cometh also that in the County of Northumberland party is making for the King. Also Sir John Stoel (Stowell) and Mr. Coventry, Parliament men, now absent are sent for to attend the house upon jealousy that they are doing no good service in Somersetshire. Also Sir William Saville, Sir Thomas Danby, Sir William Pennyman, Sir William Widrington, and Mr. Mallory are in like sort sent for out of the north, to give their attendance upon the House. Lord Seymour had leave to go into the country, but being discovered to be upon his journey to York he was by an order of the Lords sent for back from Northampton. He saith he was sent for expressly by the King, and that by his oath as a Councillor he conceives himself bound to attend His Majesty's person when he is commanded. But I believe that oath will not be so construed in the Parliament. Upon Saturday last the Commons moved the Lords to join with them in an order to fetch all the King's stores of ammunition from Hull to be brought to this town. But in regard they are the King's proper goods the Lords desire His Majesty may be acquainted therewith. Hereby you may perceive that the stores are not thought safe though Sir John Hotham be in possession of Hull. Indeed the town keeps the arms in their custody and it is said that the Parliament hath no great confidence in the townsmen. At Monmouth the Mayor and Aldermen refused to deliver the magazine of that county into the hands of the Justices appointed by the order of the Commons to receive them, and they are sent for to give account to the House. By the enclosed you will perceive what sharpness the King useth in messages, yet upon receipt thereof it was resolved by both Houses to go on with the militia, though many desire accommodation. Upon Saturday an answer came from the King, wherein he persisteth to deny his consent that the Earl of Warwick shall be employed at sea in Captain Penington's room. The Scots are not yet, that we hear, transported into Ireland, though they be ready at the seaside; and the reason is not known but suspected for both sides. The Irish beaten from the siege of Tredagh retired into the North, where the news comes to Mr. Pym they have slain 700 of the Scots inhabitants in those parts. The discoveries from Reade are murmured about, but what they will prove I know not. It is said he and others have been upon the rack, and have confessed something which concerns the King; but I believe it will prove nothing. The news of the Danes having thus vanished, together with the jealousies upon the Prince of Orange, Newton hath been upon the pillory for his letter. The lies spread abroad are without number. Of the fight in the air I hear no more. After this return, I shall weekly send you the Gazettes; I have found certain means for hereafter. I beseech you pardon this rude writing. Some propositions are now in hand for settling the present government of the Church until it be altered by law, to prevent the intolerable abuses daily committed. The chief article in the Kentish petition is that they desire to be governed by Acts of Parliament, and not by ordinances. The rest is concerning Church government, a Synod, laws against Papists, &c.

1642, April 4. London.—Edward Reed to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

The good success in Ireland increaseth daily and many Lords of the Pale are come in: which, with the want of ammunition, (God willing) is like in a short time to make an end of that war; foreign help they have not any, and the jealousies they have the one of the others' resolutions, to be constant traitors, I hear doth much discourage them. There were 3,000 Scots landed near Coleraine, and for their welcome followed a guide that would bring them presently where they might surprise the rebels; which being believed they themselves were brought into an ambush, where they lost 300 men before they could acquit themselves of the fight. Capt[n] Read a Scotchman and two others Irish have been upon the rack; and it cometh in general by those that come from Dublin that they have confessed that much of the counsel for that rebellion began in England, but not anything is delivered here in particular; these and some other of the rebels are sent for over to be proceeded against here. The King and the Parliament here as yet are not in one mind: when please God they shall, which good men wish may be speedily. If not, the danger that poverty and want can bring will come on too fast. I hear not of any suspicion that the States have of the Prince of Orange, neither of any preparations he maketh for the field this spring; and of the Queen's stay or return I hear little spoken. For those printed letters your Honour mentioneth several printers are to receive punishment. I hope, as the King did punish the prentices of York for abusing the Lincolnshire men who came with a petition, so the Parliament will punish any disorder in books pamphlets and needless assemblies, which will give much contentment unto the Kingdom. My Gazette man hath failed me much of late that I cannot present any to your Honour: what I could at any time get I have delivered unto Sir John Coke, who hath a promise of Mr. Poole that he will send them weekly unto your Honour. The foreign news is that the French, the Spaniard, and the Pope are all of them full fraught in their hearts for war, and their preparations are great.

1642, April 9. The Tower.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford, to Sir John Coke, Knight, one of His Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, at Melbourne.

What account to give you of my state here I know not better than to leave it to the relation of this bearer, my honoured nephew your worthy son, who hath still vouchsafed me the favour to be a partaker with me in all my troubles and businesses; from which by him his counsel and often presence with me I have had so much both help and comfort that, not knowing myself how ever to be able to give him thanks, I do most humbly beseech you so to take notice of it from me that you will be pleased to supply my defect and disability; and I humbly pray God Almighty requite him. We live here still, but with little hope of removal till God's good time shall come, when He sees us in this school of His so instructed and corrected as to humble us and conform us to Him; and for my part I live nigh the Mint, where is the very fiery trial I trust to make me go out good gold. We preach daily in the Tower, whither flows such concourse of people that the Chapel is not able to contain them. Thus humbly commending my service to you with my honoured sister and all your whole family, and commending you all in my daily prayers to Almighty God, most humbly also desiring yours for me, I rest as ever bound in all duty and service your loving brother in Tower.

1642, April 24. Edward Reed to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

I am glad to hear that Sir John Coke is safely arrived with you, and I do believe before this time your Sheriff (as all other Sheriffs have order to do) hath given him and others of the Parliament notice speedily to attend the House, which now (as is conceived) are in the way for peace and reconciliation between the King and them. The Bill for Militia is passed both Houses, and to the government of such as before were named by the Houses; the Mayor of London for the time being excepted, but not his successors; so is my Lord Marquis Hertford, my Lord Strange, my Lord of Cumberland, and such as refused to accept it by ordinance from the Houses. It is for two years to end at our Lady day come twelve months; and the punishment for not obeying is six months imprisonment or 5*l.* fine. The tonnage and poundage is now in passing to the King for three years. What the King will do when the Bill for the Militia cometh unto him is by some made a question. The King's answer to this petition inclosed is this;—That there is something in the petition which he liketh not, and will answer Coke MSS. it in time; but for his resolution of going into Ireland, he will lay it aside and advise further of it. My Lord of Stamford and his associates were not returned from York yesternight, but this answer above they sent by a post. Mr. Withrings I hear hath his bill in my Lord of Warwick's name, his son's name, and Sir Thomas Burrington's son's name (his own name being left out) read twice in the House of Commons. I wish his often varying from his friends do him no harm at long running. I have not seen him myself since Sir John Coke went from hence. I hear that Mr. Hollis since he married a bitch wife is not so violent in the House as he was; and Mr. Hampden is very much away. Of the King's return from York I hear not, but his health he hath very well. My Lord of Southampton is here, and came from York to marry with my Lord of Dunsmore's daughter, and returneth to York again as I hear the next week. The places of my Lord of Essex and my Lord of Holland are not as yet disposed of, neither any more displaced. The Gazettes of the last week from Paris I send your Honour inclosed.

. . . This answer of the King to this petition came out this morning April 25.

1642, May 14. Saturday.—Sir John Coke the Younger, to Sir John Coke. [No signature. No address.]

Before my return to this town the Bishops were all bailed by the Lords, and as I suppose not without the consent of the Commons, who at least connive at their enlargement. This bail is in 5,000*l.* bond, and to appear at the Parliament within three days after summons. Some of them are already gone out of this town, and the Bishop of Hereford stays only to get his days lengthened, because he cannot in three days possibly journey from Whitbourne hither. When that is obtained his abode in this city will not be long. On Tuesday the train-bands of this city were exercised in the fields, by virtue of the ordinance of Parliament by the new Lieutenants, and the members of both Houses were present thereby to encourage this beginning. The French Ambassador was present at these musters in company of our Lords, and as I am credibly informed went thither from Westminster in company of the Earls of Northumberland, Essex, and Holland. On Wednesday the French Ambassador acquainted the Houses from his master with a paper to this effect:—That the French king had intelligence that Sir Thomas Rowe negotiated the restitution of the Palatinate upon such propositions as the French King interpreteth to be no less than a league offensive and defensive with the House of Austria; wherein he makes no doubt, but the King and his Parliament will disavow Sir Thomas Rowe, it being to the overthrow of the alliances betwixt France and England, as also with the Low Countries. Tuesday next is appointed to consider hereof as a matter of very great importance. The same is acquainted by the French Ambassador to the King also. You will observe many things herein which will appear to others hereafter. The Lord Mountnorris was this week indicted by your friend Dr. Cooke of Ireland for striking him in Westminster Hall, sitting the Courts. The indictment was found, and if his Lordship find not the King's mercy, his head and estate are in danger. The King hath been labouring with the gentlemen of Yorkshire to engage them in the business of Hull, but to little purpose. Here a long Declaration was voted this day of extraordinary nature. By the next you will have it in print. Another is preparing to follow it, which will not go less. Those forces we have in Ireland prevail everywhere against the rebels. Our greatest want here is of moneys, for the new levy of 400,000*l.* is already anticipated before it be collected. It is hard pressed that all men of ability should in some sort come in upon the adventure. For my own part I confess I like not the adventure. Yet in regard of the land you have already in Ireland, and that upon the settlement of affairs there it will be necessary to use the favour of those that shall have the most to do therein, and in regard of the time, I refer it to your consideration whether you will not think it fit to adventure three or four hundred pounds therein, to comply with the Parliament, rather than out of any invitation which the adventure itself presenteth to me, though in show the propositions be the fairest that may be. From Withrings you are not like to receive satisfaction either way, notwithstanding both his letter and his promise: he is composed of so much unthankfulness and ill-nature: I say no more. A new bill is preparing to give time until 20th June to new adventurers to subscribe, and if they pay their whole sum down upon the nail, they shall have Irish acres instead of English acres. I beseech you consider of it, and let me know your opinion herein. The assembly of Consulters is to meet at Westminster in Henry 7th Chapel on the 13th of June next, as the bill importeth which is now preparing. This day the Lords sent down a Bill to the Commons which is already passed their House to this effect,—That no Peer to be hereafter created shall have any vote in Parliament. Sir John Curzon, in the report he spreadeth concerning me, would have it believed that I was sent for by the Parliament as one they durst not trust in the country How false this is you know. But I will say no more of it, nor of thousands of lies that are reported every day. I pray God continue your good health and preserve us all from the dangers of these times. On Tuesday next Judge Berkeley is to have his trial before the Lords. Many of the gown members of the House of Commons have desired to be excused of their parts in the managing of the charge against him, declaring themselves altogether unsatisfied of any treason in his case; though to my apprehension I think the judgment of ship money transcended all that Strafford ever did.

1642, May 22. Little Sanctuary, Westminster.—George Coke, Bishop of Hereford, to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

By God's blessing and the Lords' honourable favour we are now after 17 weeks delivered out of the Tower, but still held under recognizance of 5,000*l.* bail to the King to appear at any time upon three days' warning whensoever we shall be called; which to some of these Bishops that are near London is no great danger or inconvenience, but to us that are afar off and beyond the possibility of returning in so short a time is little or no benefit; specially to me, at this time, my wife being sick of an every day's ague, which at this time of the year at the end of May and at the age of 63 years is not free from fears of danger: which if it please God to fall on her among these many troubles and in no small distractions of my poor family, by some of our children's disorder and discontents out of their own errors, which she cannot so well wield alone as by my help, and which I fear is a great occasion of her sickness, certainly will fall a heavy addition to my other sorrows and troubles; she remaining the only stay and support of that whole poor family, which without her I can by no other well wield. But see, I beseech you, how God sends help in time of need. This day, by my nephew Sir John Coke's means moving my Lord Brooke in my behalf, hath gotten an order for me from the Lords House to go down into the country, either altogether without limitation of time for my return, or at least upon three weeks' warning for return; which order I mean to take out for my security, and intend by it upon Monday or Tuesday next to go to Whitbourne to see and settle things there, which by my long absence have been in no little distraction. Those I had for my bail were two men of good estates, Captain Marmaduke Roden and one Captain Slater, a Herefordshire man, to return upon their request. Myself, with my nephew Sir John your son, in case you mislike it not, are willing to give a note under our hands for their indemnity, which by God's blessing I hope shall never fall upon any of us, and for my nephew I have given him security accordingly to the value of my whole estate whatever I have. Sir, by this relation you may see how much I am beholden to your son Sir John, as also in his absence I was to my nephew Thomas, who both in these my troubles have been such stays and comforts to me as have given me much ease in them, I pray God requite them both, and I beseech you give them thanks in my behalf.

COKE MSS.

1642, May 24, Tuesday. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke. [No signature. No address.]

In my last I might have acquainted you with the unhappy news of Sir Charles Coote, who, after the good success they had in the taking of Trim, was slain in pursuit of such rebels as attempted the retaking of that town. The contents of the Lord Bankes' letters are still talked of, but nothing of certainty appeareth. They are requited with the report of a letter from the Earl of Cumberland to some confidant of his, that unless His Majesty change his counsels, he shall be forced to withdraw himself from the attendance of the Court. The Lord Cherbury was by the Lords committed to the Black Rod for some speeches he used in that House when these enclosed votes were passed. Next day upon his petition he was restored to the House, and upon his request had leave granted unto him to travel beyond the seas. Marquis Hamilton, after his long sickness in Whitehall, took his journey for Scotland upon Thursday last. It is conceived he will visit York in his way. It is said that in Scotland there is at present an Assembly to be convened, whether their annual Church Assembly, or for some other purposes, I cannot yet understand, or the nature thereof. The King's great horses withdrew from the Mews at three of the clock in the morning upon Sunday last; perchance that they might get a day's journey before information could be given to the Parliament, which was not to meet before Monday. The number of these horses were about 80. Some say other horses of the King's and Prince's were gone from the Mews into the North before. Upon Friday last 200 horse of the gentry of Yorkshire with the foot regiment of Sir Robert Strickland came in upon the King's summons to York. His Majesty reserved only 50 of the horse, and all the foot for a guard to attend his person; the rest of the horse he sent home again. And hath appointed Friday next for the convention of the freeholders of that county, with what counsel I know not. Mr. Elliot the King's page came post from York to the Lord Keeper upon Saturday last, with command as is verily supposed, either to repair to York or to deliver the seal. Elliot stayed but three hours in this town, spake only with the Lord Keeper and Falkland, and forthwith took post for York again. The Keeper instantly went out of town to his country house, and on Sunday morning very early took his journey on horseback for York. Upon Sunday in the afternoon he was met at Woburn. His departure was not known until Monday in the afternoon, that his secretary delivered his letter to the Lords House dated from St. Albans, purporting the King's command to him and his desire of leave for his journey to York. The Lords have voted the Keeper a Delinquent, and have sent three messengers after him by post, who will overtake him, if they can. It is thought that Elliot carried the seal post to York upon Saturday. The Lord Dunsmore went by post for York upon Saturday in the evening also. The Privy Seal, as I am informed, goeth tomorrow to his country house to Kimbolton. This afternoon it was one head of a conference betwixt the Houses moved from the House of Commons, that it appearing the King intended to levy war against the Parliament, some course might be taken to raise a stock of moneys to maintain such forces as should be necessary for the repelling of the force intended against the Commonwealth. The King being possessed of the Great Seal, it is to be feared that he will adjourn the next term by his proclamation to York, which will breed a great confusion. I am informed that Sir Henry Hungate brings the news at present from York, that the Lord Bankes hath accepted the Lord Treasurer's place; but I shall expect the confirmation of this by the same post. The Lords have made a committee to consider of accommodation; what will be the issue God knows. I hope, notwithstanding all that hath passed, we shall not go together by the ears. Don Francisco di Melo hath overthrown the French in Artois. It is said that near 10,000 Frenchmen are slain, and that di Melo pursueth the other part of the army under the Maréchal de Harcourt. The Spaniards magnify their success in this action very much. The Bishop of Hereford took his journey yesterday for Whitbourne, having obtained 20 days after notice, to return. Judge Berkeley was heard this day to the first article. His further trial is put off until after Whitsuntide. He defends not himself like Strafford.

1642, May 30.—Edward Reed to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

I have had the honour in seeing your honourable Lady, which is now at Tottenham, where God willing I shall wait upon her and where news, thanks be to God, I hear she hath her health. The Militia of the City hath received much thanks from both the Houses of Parliament, and whose dexterousness in their profession was much commended by both Houses and the French Ambassador, who were spectators, but all people cannot be pleased with the commendable endeavours of others, for the ballettmongers sing to the contrary. Francesco de Melo, Governor of Flanders, hath given a great overthrow to Maréchal de Guise, General of the French army in Hainault; came suddenly upon them being intrenched, and beat them out of them, routed them, killed and hurt and did take prisoners 12,000 of them, and did take all their ordnance and provisions which was very rich; and is gone after Maréchal de Harcourt, general of another army. From Italy cometh this, that the Prince of Parma being aided by the Duke of Florence and some other of the Princes maketh war against the Pope; and if he do not make his peace in time it may ruin him, for as it cometh the Princes have not any liking of him. I have every week sent several times to Mr. Poole for Gazettes as he promised, but none are come to his hands; and my agent which heretofore did furnish me hath given over sending for them. My Lord Keeper sent his Great Seal before him and made post haste to overtake it at York, and riding upon the Sunday and resting himself in his inn at Woburn, had like to have been taken by the constable, but that his man made good friends to have his door unlocked, which was locked upon him, and a little longer stay would have made the hue and cry to have overtaken him, which the Houses of Parliament sent after him by Mr. Pickering, who found him attending the King at York, but returned answer to the Houses that he was very ill and not able as yet to return. There are some ambassadors coming from Holland to move an accommodation between the King and the Parliament, with instructions not to handle any point of the religion or anything that concerneth the liberty of the subject.

Coke MSS.

1642, June 6. Monday Morning. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke. [No signature. No address; in a feigned hand.]

This morning the post brings from York that the general assembly of the ministers, freeholders, and copyholders, held upon Heyworth Moor near York upon Friday last. The number was above 40,000. The King came to them with the Prince, the Lords, his horse guards and foot regiment; gave them good words and dispersed a printed declaration amongst them, purporting his resolutions to maintain religion, law, liberty, and peace; and that farther he would not ever desire their assistance for the defence of his person and rights than he to his power should protect them in enjoying the former; and then dismissed them. Some well affected to the Parliament endeavoured to publish a petition of a tenor most contrary to the King's mind, and to draw a consent thereunto from the assembly. And to this purpose the petition was begun to be read to the standers by, when presently my Lord Lindsey with a great troop of followers interposed himself, and divided them, reproaching them as perturbers of the peace and seditious. Sir John Bowser having a copy of the petition in his hand was commanded by the Lord Savile to deliver it to him, which when he refused, the Lord Savile caught him by the belt and with threatening speeches caused him to deliver it. Yet Sir Thomas Fairfax did offer that petition to the King, who refused to receive it. This is the effect of what passed that day. And the Parliament is now in debate of these businesses, and I believe will declare Lindsey and Savile enemies to the State. God send us peace.

1642, July 5. London.—Edward Reed to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne

What hath passed here of late I assure myself will come unto you. All do wish and pray for peace yet the going of the affairs do not promise it; in that from the militia, which is for our good, is like to beget our harm, if an accommodation be not, which I hope the King and parliament will make in time. My Lord Admiral is displaced, and as I hear the Admiralty is to be governed by commission; and the Great Seal is gone to discharge my Lord of Warwick of his employment. Two of the ships are fallen off from the fleet to the King's service, Captain Stradling and the Lion; the name of the Captain I hear not. My Lord Saye hath an express command to attend the King at York, who hath moved the House for leave, but cannot obtain it. What his next message will be from York is to be expected. I hear that the Sheriff of Leicestershire is displaced, and Mr. Henry Hastings sheriff. My Lord Brooke I hear is not like to do much in the militia in Warwickshire; but I know he hath a good zeal, he will do as much as he can. Our men in Ireland complain of much wants. These distempers here will do that kingdom much harm.

1642, July 5. Tottenham.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

This grant, which my Mother will deliver unto you, containeth your sale of the woods in Pedgebank to Mr. Hodgson. If you please to seal it in the presence of some witnesses, and that you please to send it back, it shall be sent to Mr. Hodgson who expects it. My Lord Newburgh, the Chancellor of the Duchy, hath sent you a warrant for a buck which my Mother will also deliver unto you. My brother hath gotten the victory of Mr. Wilmot in the Duchy Court, in that suit which he moved his brother Wilmot to commence against the miners, for digging within a manor of theirs within the Wapentake of Wirksworth. My Lord Newburgh dealt very fairly with him therein; and if you please to give my Lord thanks by your letter, both for his kind remembrance of you and for his favour to my brother, I shall deliver the same unto him. We hear now that Mr. Hastings is Sheriff of Leicestershire, and that he requireth the magazine to be delivered unto him by those that keep it in the Earl of Stamford's house, and that the gentlemen of that shire adhere unto him; also that he hath 100 horse attending him. I wish it come not to blood. The gentry of Nottinghamshire have sent a letter to their Knights to represent the sense of that county to be, that we have reason to be well satisfied with those good laws which the King hath granted this Parliament, and that businesses be drawn to a conclusion that they may reap the fruit of them in peace. My prayers are for peace, and that it come not any where to blows. I pray likewise for the continuance of your good health. I shall wait upon you as soon as I can with convenience, desiring to be absent if any clashing be either in Derby or Leicestershire betwixt the Ordinance and Commission of Array. We hear the Earl of Rutland is gone to York.

1642, (Received July 9).—Devereux, Earl of Essex, to "my Honourable friend Sir John Kooke, at Melbourne, theise deliver."

I am informed that you have the nomination of a man at this last election to be put into the Charterhouse. Captain William Yong an old seaman recommended by His Majesty, hath been an earnest suitor to me, and should have obtained his desire, had I not nominated one before. I shall therefore entreat you that you would write your letter to Mr. George Garrott (Garrard) in this poor Captain's behalf to be admitted.

1642, July 25. London.—Sir John Coke the younger to Sir John Coke. [No signature. No address.]

I yet hold my resolution of waiting upon you at Melbourne next week, supposing the assizes being over an intermission is like to follow at least for some short time. Here we have done little last week, having been in expectation of the King's answer to the petition of both Houses, which came not until Saturday last in the evening and is not yet in print. The chief points are that His Majesty insists upon the delivery of Hull, the laying down the Militia, and the restoring of the Fleet: and also for the adjournment of the Parliament from this town. These heads gave so little satisfaction to the Houses that, though they appointed this present Monday to consider of the King's answer, yet that evening both Houses agreed that the Lords Generals should proceed vigorously to the levies of horse and foot. The Committee that carried the petition and brought back the King's answer viz: the Earl of Holland, Sir John Holland and Sir Philip Stapleton, bring us word that the King's forces, especially his foot, are not considerable. The foot are not above 3,000 of the trained bands of Yorkshire before Hull. His horse are more considerable yet only 2,000 already levied, viz. 400 cavaliers, 500 under command of Sir John Byron, 500 under Lord Grandison, Prince's troop 200, Earl of Lindsey 200, Duke of Richmond's brother's 200. The speech is here by some that the King hath 7,000 horse listed, some say 10,000 horse. Here above 500 horse have been often trained in Tothill fields. The Earl of Leicester, having declined to give out any deputations into Kent, went from hence upon Saturday last towards Ireland with intention to wait upon the King in his way. The nine Lords who forebore to give attendance upon the House upon summons were censured this last week viz.: discharged the House during this Parliament, and imprisonment in the Tower when they can be catched. The Earl of Devonshire is one. Another declaration is prepared, in answer to the last declaration sent about three weeks since from His Majesty by way of reply to former declarations of the Houses.

COKE MSS.

1642, August 14. London.—Edward Reed to Sir John Coke. [No address.]

I hope Sir John Coke is safely arrived at Melbourne before this, and believe it the rather in that, he having a desire to be with your Honour, he had no pleasure in being here, where the affairs for the war are most in sight and every street full of soldiers. My Lord of Bedford gone with six troops of horse into Somersetshire, where as the report is that my Lord of Hertford hath been, and drawn from thence to Sherborne, my Lord of Bristol's castle, and so much prosecuted by the country that neither he nor few of his assistants can escape from being brought up unto the Parliament. He, my Lord of Northampton, and Mr. Henry Hastings were by the Parliament declared traitors. My Lord of Northampton is at Warwick with the ordnance he brought from Banbury, and did plant some of them upon the steeple there to batter my Lord Brooke's castle; where at the first shot one of the pieces brake and did strike some of the cheek away of my Lord Compton's. The Castle is defended with 120 men commanded by Sir Edward Petoe and Mr. Purseaye. The town is kept by my Lord of Northampton, and as yet the country stirreth not. What they will do on either side when Mr. Hampden and Mr. Goodwin cometh thither with 800 horse, 10,000 men from hence and out of Buckinghamshire, as he goeth towards Warwick, is not as yet known. It is reported that Sir Edward Petoe's house is plundered by some of my Lord of Northampton's soldiers. My Lord of Pembroke is gone into Wiltshire with some troops of horse. Portsmouth is like to be taken by the county, as the report cometh, being not victualled but for a few days. The Isle of Wight, upon which he relied for victuals, is against him and have seized upon the provisions and those that did undertake to furnish him. He hath been beaten from the works he made at the coming in into Portsmouth Island, and some 30 of his horse taken before they could recover the town. I hear my Lord of Stamford is to come tomorrow towards Leicestershire, with some troops of horse, to settle that county, I hear there is landed at Scarborough for the King from Holland arms for 12,000 foot and 2,000 horse. I hear not much of the King's strength, neither in Yorkshire nor any other county, that is ready to march. Here ere arms raised daily, and a great strength is raising for the defence of this city. Sir Kenelm Digby hath been before the Lords, where he had good respect and a discharge from them to go where he pleased. Some houses have been plundered by the soldiers about Brentford as they went, and near Uxbridge; what satisfaction hath been given I hear not. Advertisements come from several parts that the Swedes have given a great overthrow to the Emperor and his general Piccolomini killed, and most of his Princes fallen from him, only Bavaria and some few more stand (as yet) for him. The French are raised from before Perpignan, and have burned a part in Arragon; and General Melo hath done as much for the French in Picardy, which hath been in burning all this last week and some of the week before, and those that come from Calais say that if speedily supplies be not sent to the Governor, the Spaniard will take it, being unfurnished in every circumstance. The Lord Mayor of London is censured to be put from his place, to be incapable of ever bearing any offices or place in the commonwealth, and to be imprisoned during the pleasure of the Parliament. And Sir, I send you no books either French or English, for Sir John Coke told me he hath taken order with Mr. Poole to send them.

1642, August 22. London.—Edward Reed to Sir John Coke. [No address.]

Having a desire rather to send variety unto your Honour, to divert some of your thoughts and to preserve me in your memory with what is ordinary here, I present you with the discourse of this place. That Prince Rupert is landed with his brother Maurice at Newcastle with two ships, in which are 30,000 arms, 600,000*l.* in money, and 24 pieces of ordnance with ammunition, and some commanders, and that the King gave order, when he came from York, for six troops of horse to guard the two princes and that great charge unto him to Nottingham where he now is, and to which I believe your Honour is no stranger. The speech from some is that there is a proposition of a match between our Prince and the Prince of Orange his daughter. The King sent in a letter to the House, against my Lord of Essex, and all that did assist him, to be traitors. The Houses answered against the malignants the like that were against the King and Parliament. The King I hear hath answered that last and printed it at York, some of which are come hither and in some hands; but as yet I have it not nor printed here it is not, neither his proclamation for the setting up his standard at Nottingham, neither is his answer and confirmation of the commission for array; but some of York print are in some hands. Some lawyers that have seen the array say that it is unanswerable, but when it is undertaken it will be answered sufficiently, and so will all the malignant party's proceedings. When I can get any of these books your Honour (God willing) shall have them. Here is great care taken that the malignant party shall not be underhand assisted, neither with plate nor money, for both plate and moneys are stopped in the hands of carriers and passing upon porters through the streets, and trunks opened and searched, so that not any art will serve the malignant party. Here the Parliament hath a great array both of horse and foot, 5,000 horse and 16,000 foot; some say the King hath not less, which time will show. My Lord of Dorset from his house at Knowle hath 500 arms brought to London by order of Parliament, and as some say much harm done him in his rich furniture, cut by some idle fellows who have not thanks, and his housekeeper and kinsman Sir John Sackfield (Sackvile) now in the Fleet. He was taken, to prevent his secret conveyance of the armours, out of the Church in the time of service. Portsmouth holdeth out still, how long farther I hear not. The forts of the Island I hear hold for Mr. Goring, but the Island for the Parliament. My Lord of Hertford is at Sherborne, my Lord of Bristol's, with 600 horse and 1,000 foot and without trouble, as I hear, Worcestershire, Shropshire, and Herefordshire are for the King: and others for the Parliament. I hear that Captain Stradling, and one ship more is parted from the fleet and gone to harbour, for the King; and that the fleet will not take in any victuals for a longer time than they are, before they are paid for the time past. Strong forces are for the King in Warwick, and so is my Lord Brooke well prepared; this week will say something of that business but as yet they look the one upon the other. I hear of no adjournment of the Parliament as yet. Yesterday, being Saturday, some troops were sent again into Kent to search Mr. Roper's house at Eltham, where they were resisted by some in Mr. Roper's house, out of which some shots were made and two of the troopers were killed, and in the time of the troopers' doubts Mr. Roper and those in the house escaped. Those and more troops are gone to my Lord Duke's to Cobham. It is believed more mischief will be done there. That county of Kent have angry hearts. The voice cometh now that the King is at Warwick, where it is believed that some blows will be given; but, Sir, in the whole lump it is that all is out of frame.

1642, September 14. Derby.—[Robert Bertie, Earl of] Lindsey, to Sir John Coke, one of His Majesty's most honourable Privy Council. [Endorsed by Sir J. Coke "Lord General Lindsey from Derby, for my arms."]

His Majesty hath commanded me to signify to you his desire that you furnish him for his present service with such arms as you have now in your custody, and deliver them to the bearer hereof, with this assurance that all possible care shall be used for the preservation of them to your use. I shall not need to enforce this request, knowing your affection to His Majesty's service, and of what consequence the assistance of His Majesty's good subjects is in these distracted times; but shall always continue your most affectionate friend to serve you.

1642, September 20. Melbourne.—Sir John Coke to "Your Excellency." (Draft.)

My elder son and I live together, with our wives and families, and we humbly desire your protection to free us from being molested by such troops and companies as shall pass this way. I assure your Excellency my heart is faithful and my prayers assiduous for the prosperity of the Parliament wherein consisteth the welfare of this church and state.

Draft of his letter to a Nobleman.—"Right Honourable, Understanding that your forces draw towards these parts I have written to His Excellency for his protection from being molested by them and I desire your Lordship's furtherance."

Draft of a letter to his son Sir J. Coke the younger. "The fruit of your late unseasonable inquisition was our separation the next day into our several shires, and of so continuing; as, though the cause be removed, your confidant goeth to and fro, who hath too strong a bias to run to the right mark."

1642, October 10. London.—Edward Reed to Sir John Coke, Knight.

The variety of reports of the fight at Worcester is so confidently affirmed on both sides, of the great and small loss of the Parliament side, that being not an eye-witness I cannot boldly report of either. Some of the troops that did run or come away from the fight report 3 or 400 were killed and many wounded and made unserviceable. The like were of their horses. But the report of this town is still but 28 slain, and of note only Captain Douglas slain. Mr. Sands is recovering and past danger. I hear not of any men of note of the King's side slain. Sir John Strangeway's son was taken prisoner, who is exchanged for Captain Wingate. Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice were both hurt and so were Mr. Wilmot and Sir Lewis Dives. The Parliament are in raising 1,000 dragoons to be sent unto my Lord General. The advertisement cometh to the Parliament that the King intendeth to advance towards this town this week, but hath fortified Shrewsbury and Bridgenorth and intendeth to leave garrisons in them. His army horse and foot is (as information cometh) 22,000, some say well armed and other report not all to be so, and for his farther strength he expecteth my Lord Marquis Hertford and my Lord Strange with their troops both of horse and foot. My Lord General is reported to have 16 regiments of horse and foot and all well armed and well paid. 20,000*l.* went down upon Saturday last unto him convoyed by Captain Rigby's troop of horse. Your neighbour by Loughborough, my Lord of Stamford, hath taken Hereford and is in it now, unto whom the town and county have given a contribution of moneys and so hath the town of Worcester 3,000*l.* as I hear. Bewdley is not as yet taken by either party. My Lord of Falkland is sent by the King into Ireland; many opinions are of it, but the certainty I have not heard. The association amongst the gentlemen in Yorkshire, and the Parliament's declaration upon it, I send your Honour inclosed that you may have them if Mr. Poole do not send them. It is sent into Yorkshire and the answer of the Lords and gentlemen is expected this day. If it come in time your Honour (God willing) shall have it. My Lord General Fairfax is one of the first in it, and surely they have been too bold with the privilege of Parliament, which hath been and are very tender of their peace and safety. I will acquaint Mr. Poole with your Honour's thanks, and his mistakes in the place of Antichrist's birth. What the Parliament hath sent unto the Lords the States in Holland I send your Honour inclosed. Yesternight, I do now (as I am writing), hear, came a letter to my Lord Wilmot from his son, and he that did read it did tell me to this purpose: the King hath 14,000 foot well armed, 4,000 horse and 2,000 dragoons: we met at Worcester with the Parliament forces of equal strength, 10 troops of horse and 500 dragoons apiece: in a short time we overthrew 400 of the flower of their horse, and did take between 60 and 80 prisoners, which we set again at liberty with their promise not to take arms against the King: I was hurt in the back, Sir Lewis Dives in the shoulder, and Prince Maurice had two cuts in the head, but none dangerous to any of us: the King hath a purpose (God willing) to advance from Shrewsbury speedily, and expecteth the forces of my Lord Marquis Hertford and my Lord of Derby. And this was his letter to his father. I received your Honour's letter of the 22nd of September the 7th of this instant, and have not heard of Mr. Thomas Coke's coming to town.

[1642], October 11. London.—Mrs. Anne Sacheverell [to Sir John Coke the Elder, her father]. [No address.]

Right Honourable, Having the convenience of this messenger we would not neglect to present our humble duty to you, and certify you of our good health, which we through God's mercy enjoy. The news here is the King is coming hither, and here is and there is order from the Parliament to all counties to make all preparations for their defence. Here is great watch in the city night and day [by] the train bands; and beyond us as far as the Charterhouse there is a court of guard of the train bands watches every night. My cousin Gilbert was to see us last Friday, and told us that it is in agitation in the Parliament that my Lord of Warwick should be sent for from sea, and be made general of another army, to follow my Lord of Essex. The forces in Ireland have for certainty had a very great victory over the rebels lately.

1642, October 15. London.—R. Poole to Sir John Coke. [No address.]

This servant of yours being now (as he tells me) upon his return, I presume to salute you with this line or two. Little news is here stirring, our expectations being from the armies which they say are advanced one towards the other, His Majesty to Bridgenorth, and the other to Bewdley, both resolving to put the differences to a speedy issue. Yesterday the Earl of Bath was brought in, being taken at Sir Ralph Hopton's house. The Lord Pawlet is also taken, but Sir Ralph is fled. Nothing in print but the enclosed to present you with at present. . . . On Thursday Mr. Fountaine, the lawyer, was committed to the Gatehouse for refusing to give an answer yea or nay to the propositions for lending, which is interpreted for a contempt of the authority of Parliament.

COKE MSS.

1642, October 24. London.—Edward Reed to Sir John Coke. [No address.]

The best advertisements I can send you from hence is that Sir John Coke and Mr. Thomas Coke are safely arrived here. As for what concerns the great affairs of this kingdom and in this place they are very much confused. The King being now either at Woodstock or Oxford this night advanced towards this town, which begetteth various thoughts and actions between preparing force against him and preventing any party, if any be, that should have an inclination to assist him at his coming hither. The way of his coming is uncertain, therefore some are sent to Windsor to keep that castle, some to St. Albans, and some to Reading, and a strong army raising to guard this City; and my Lord of Essex is coming after him as fast as he can, but a day, if not more, behind him. As advertisements come here it is that the King is 14,000 foot, 8,000 horse and 4,000 dragoons. He taketh all the horse he can get to horse his foot, and more than he can use to weaken my Lord General's coming after him with his ordnance and carriages, and breaketh the bridges behind him. What strength in his passage he gaineth I hear not. Here all horses in the inns, in the town, and about the town, are made stay of to serve this occasion and service if cause shall be, of which Sir John Coke's and Mr. Thomas Coke's horses are part. The proposition for the lending or giving of moneys or plate is seriously followed, and those that refuse are to be imprisoned or secured as no friends, but enemies to the State, this being demanded to preserve it. Some are in prison, but it may be in some time will be at liberty, for the Parliament doth not carry any hard hand upon any. What will be the issue of this confusion God doth best know, being now in man's judgment put upon the hazard. I pray God to send us peace, and your Honour and all the kingdom much more quiet and contentment, than as yet is made show of.

(1642), October 26. London.—Mrs. Anne Sacheverell [to Sir John Coke the Elder]. [No address.]

Right Honourable. With the presentation of our humble duty, I make bold to acquaint you with what God hath done in this meeting of the armies. On the last Sabbath the armies met, and about two o'clock they began to fight; and of that fight there came a letter to my Lord Mayor which was read in many Churches this Fast day. That day my Lord of Lindsey the General and his son were taken and Colonel Lunsford and divers others, and they routed the King's army, and my Lord General Essex kept the field. They fell to it the next day again; my Lord of Essex routed them again and took away the standard, so that the King and his army are fled. My Lord Wharton and Mr. Stroud are this night come to Westminster, and brought this news: and that there is of the King's army 3,000 slain and of the Parliament's but 500. Prince Robert it is not known whether he is dead or alive. My Lord of Essex's army, the common soldiers had been all night in cold and wet from Wednesday before, and fasted 24 hours, some 48 hours, and yet it pleased God to make them very courageous and valiant. They are here about to fortify and secure the city as far as can be: they are digging trenches about it. The Scots having promised their help to the Parliament, they have already sent for them. Thus I have made bold to let you know, being the present news here, which we desire to bless God for: and I hope you will not be offended with me for my boldness in acquainting you with it.

1642, November 7. London.—Edward Reed to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

God in His good time and pleasure will give an end to these great distractions of the kingdom. Motions for a peace are made to the King, and that the Parliament might petition unto him to that effect, to which the King giveth approbation; and as the Houses did address themselves unto Mr. Secretary Nicholas to move the King, and by him had the King's allowance, with an addition of his own unto the Parliament by way of intimation that, if one of the four sent by the Commons were changed, the petition would have the better acceptance in his judgment, which was Sir John Evelyn; my Lord Wenman, Sir John Epsley (Hippisley), and Mr. Pierpoint, being the other three; and my Lord of Northumberland and my Lord of Pembroke for the Lords. Sir Peter Killigrew who was the first messenger from the Parliament was returned again, to know if the King would except against any of those that the House of Commons had determined to send of those four, and not to take any answer from Mr. Secretary, but as from the King himself, with which he is not returned as yet. I wish so much to peace, that I much fear the answer will produce no good effect, but that the war will go on. My Lord of Essex is come to this town this morning, and it is believed will be, between his own army come in with him and those he shall find here, of great strength. And so is the King's army very powerful, both of horse and foot, 12,000 horse with his dragooners, as the Parliament is informed, and also strong in foot, but not in foot so strong as the Parliament, but in horse much more. He was at Reading yesternight, but where today I hear not, but it is reported will be this day at Windsor, which is every way strongly fortified against him, commanded by Captain Venn of the City of London.

1642, November 14. London.—Edward Reed to Sir John Coke. [No address.]

I wish, if it were God's will, I could advertise you of some hopes of peace which as yet is far off. There was a petition sent from the Parliament to the King to move a treaty of accommodation, sent by my Lords of Northumberland and Pembroke and from the Commons, Mr. Pierpoint, my Lord Wenman and Sir John Epsley (Hippesley) who were well received, and unto which the King did assent, and the place of treaty, if the Parliament thought fit, to be at Windsor or where else the Parliament thought fit. But no cessation of arms mentioned but conceived to be implied in the petition. But for the more security the Parliament drew up an answer unto the King that they desired a cessation of arms and mentioned the place. This was delivered to be sent unto the King by Sir Peter Killigrew upon Saturday in the afternoon, but before he could set forth, the Prince came as far as Brentford, where, finding some of the Parliament's forces, set upon them, and of both sides many were killed and more had been but that night parted them. The Prince kept both Brentfords, Saturday and Sunday, and went away this morning to the King at my Lord Keeper's house near Colnbrook. Some do conceive that this accident of the fight, and upon the Sunday the sinking of the boys with ordnances and other ammunition by the Prince upon Brentford water, going for the supply of the army which was drawn up toward Brentford, will not break off the treaty, which all good men do pray may hold, for war will in a short time undo the kingdom. Mr. John White was sent by the King with a trumpet to His Excellency for the cessation of arms yesternight, who was detained as prisoner and sent to London. The army of the King is great; but upon the alarm upon Saturday and yesterday I think 20,000 men, horse and foot, for the Parliament made haste to the service.

COKE MSS.

1642, November 14. Gray's Inn.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke. [No address.]

Of the receipt of yours I gave you account by my last I have: since received yours of the 7th of November. What those particular instructions are which Sir John Gell hath received from His Excellency I do not know. But there is orders given to divers commissioners in most counties to receive the subscriptions of money, plate, and horses, which shall be made in the several counties. And for the County of Derby instructions are at present in the hands of Sir John Curzon, who resolveth to come speedily down into the country for that purpose. The Commissioners amongst others are Sir John Curzon, Sir John Gell, Sir George Gresley, Mr. Burdett, myself and others. A copy of these instructions I cannot possibly get at present, neither can I find Sir John Curzon. But I will send you a copy of these instructions by the next possible conveyance. I am sorry I cannot at present give you more full satisfaction herein, but I dare not charge my memory farther. I thank God I have as good respect in the House as ever. To my sister Sacheverell I have paid 200*l.* according to your appointment, as by her acquittance doth appear. What other directions you give shall be performed. We cannot hear anything here from my uncle at Hereford. The weather hath been wonderful fair in these parts.

1642, November 15.—Sir John Coke the younger. [No signature. No address. A feigned hand.]

Upon the receipt of the King's answer, wherein he refused to give safe conduct to Sir John Evelyn because he had declared him traitor, both Houses resolved that answer to be a refusal of treaty, and that a declaration should be drawn up to that purpose, and the city was acquainted therewith as you may perceive by the enclosed. Also the Lords voted the declaration wherein the Scots are invited to the assistance of the Parliament. Yet upon Wednesday it was resolved by both Houses that the petition should notwithstanding be sent by the Earls of Northumberland and Pembroke, Lord Wenman, Mr. Pierpoint and Sir John Epsley (Hippesley), with liberty to Sir John Evelyn to use his pleasure. Hereupon the petition is delivered by the five to the King at Colnbrook upon Thursday; and having been graciously received, they return with the enclosed answer from the King, which being received by the Houses on Saturday morning, they despatch Sir Peter Killigrew to court with a proposition for cessation of arms. Thus the treaty proceeded. But that nothing of the preparations might be intermitted during the treaty, the Earl of Essex, having brought his army into this town upon Monday before, gave order to them to the march upon Friday, and the same day his artillery and waggons were drawn from this town towards Brentford, and Colonel Hollis's regiment was quartered on Friday night in Brentford. On Saturday morning there fell a great mist. Prince Robert takes the opportunity, gives a camisado to the regiment in Brentford, possesses himself of the town, and this occasion draws the King himself that night to Brentford. Mr. Hollis was absent, his Lieutenant Colonel Quarles slain, some pieces taken, many killed. Upon this alarm the Earl of Essex draws all his forces together to Turnham Green, two miles on this side Brentford. A fight is expected upon Sunday. Multitudes go down from this town to the Earl's army. On Sunday morning the King, as I suppose, having received by Sir Peter Killigrew the proposition for cessation of arms, sends the Earl of Dorset's servant Mr. White with a trumpet to His Excellency for cease of arms. At the same instant two shallops, laden with ordnance powder and other ammunition, passed up the Thames by Brentford for Windsor. The King's musketeers prohibit their passage, they retire and fall within shot of the ordnance. The one blows itself up, the other is forsaken having 10 pieces and 24 barrels of powder in her. The Earl, hearing this shooting at the instant that White came for cease of arms, takes Mr. White prisoner and orders him up to the Gatehouse. In the evening upon Sunday, both armies drawn into battalia, some few shots of cannon are made, six of the King's horse killed as is said; the King retreats from Brentford, whither as yet I do not hear. The battle being expected upon Sunday, the forces which had fortified Kingston were drawn thence; on Sunday morning at 9 of the clock the Earl of Crawford possesses himself of that town for the King. We daily expect a battle and suppose the treaty wholly broken off. This is what I hear of reports.

The effects of the King's answer to the petition of both Houses was—That he was sensible of the effusion of blood, that he would receive their propositions at Windsor if the forces should be removed, or in any other convenient place if that were not thought fit, and that the treaty might be hastened. I believe before this comes to you, some greater news will have anticipated it.

1642, November 28. London.—Edward Reed to Sir John Coke. [No address.]

I know Sir John Coke, who is a most modest relater, of the affairs of the parliament unto you, as it stood at his going from hence, will inform you; and since I can advertise your Honour that the Lord of Lindsay, one of the Commissioners for Scotland, is gone to the King by order from the Scots with propositions which the common report saith are honourable for the King to grant; which is hoped will conduce to a treaty for peace and effect it; which is generally hoped and wished for, and good men's prayers are for it. What else is happened in the House and had in debate I send your Honour inclosed. The City doth assist the Parliament with 30,000*l.* for the supply of the army and paid in tomorrow. What further provision is to be made through the whole kingdom this inclosed will advertise you.

1642, December 19. London.—Edward Reed to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

Here in the most parts with us our soldiers are not so modest with ladies in their plundering, neither of the King's side nor the Parliament's, when they are once at work; for they leave all places empty at their departure, so much as that the countries groan under their losses. The armies at this time lie still, the King at Oxford and my Lord of Essex at Windsor. Some troops on both sides met at Winchester in my Lord Grandison's passage to assist Chichester, which is for the King; in which encounter, as letters now come, my Lord Grandison is taken and 30 of his commanders, who without blows yielded themselves to the number of 600 horse as good prize. The commanders of the Parliament's forces that hear the [here they] name were Colonel a Scotchman and Colonel Brown a woodmonger in Fleet Street. My Lord of Newcastle is now in York with 8,000 men. There was a fight (for the passage at Tadcaster near York) between my Lord Fairfax and him, in which fight men were lost on both sides, but my Lord Newcastle gained the passage, but came not on this way as he intended, but is returned to York. My Lord Fairfax writeth to the parliament for 20,000*l.* to maintain this war there, if not he must give it over. What answer he will receive I hear not. Sir Ralph Hopton cometh on still as far as Exeter; what interruption he will find before he cometh to the King I hear not. Mr. Hollis, who was intended should go General against him, I hear doth excuse himself. What other shall be appointed I hear not. Of my Lord of Hertford's and my Lord of Derby's coming on I hear not anything. Here hath been trouble about delivering petitions for peace by some of London and some of Westminster and Middlesex, to which petitions are many hundred thousands hands; which the Lords, to whom they addressed themselves, have appointed this day to receive the London petition, and tomorrow that for Middlesex and Westminster. The Lords were almost agreed upon propositions to send to the King such as they conceived would be accepted, but now it is differed upon, but not given over. I doubt if the Londoners and suburbs be obstinate in pursuance of their petitions for peace, we shall have peace of necessity, for no moneys will be had to pay the Parliament's army for which they are now (as I hear some soldiers say) they are in want. They have by sea and land much to do with money, having garrisons at Coventry, Hereford, Gloucester, Bristol, Hull, Yorkshire, Lincolnshire, Sussex, Portsmouth, and the army itself, and the ships at sea, besides several agents they have abroad in Holland and Scotland. If please God, I wish all were at peace, for I know these great affairs cannot but be much trouble to honest men's hearts and heads. The French King doth pardon those that were banished in the Cardinal's time, and from hence are going the Duke de Peronne; his daughter and some of his family are gone; and the Duke of Vendôme is upon going. Mazarin the Italian is chief of his Council: the same counsel and the same design he had in the Cardinal's life he goeth on with. The Dutch tell me that the King of Spain, Flanders, and Brabant shall join in league with the States, only he to have his title of their king, and to have such customs and rights as is and hath been due unto him, and intendeth to make peace also with France. He is weary of the charge Flanders doth put him unto.

COKE MSS.

1642, December 24. Derby.—Sir George Gresley, Sir John Gell, Thomas Gell, and Nathaniel Hallowes to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

We are importuned by His Excellency the Earl of Essex and the Lord Fairfax to send some of our soldiers to Sheffield, which we have done; and we are likewise earnestly desired by our neighbours of Nottingham and some other gentlemen of that county to assist them with some of our soldiers, which we are willing to do, but for the present we are in great want of arms. Therefore we earnestly desire you to lend us what arms you can conveniently spare. Let them be marked with your mark, and you shall have them or others as good safely returned to you. Thus not doubting of your willingness herein by which you shall very much oblige your assured friends and servants.

1642–3, January 2. London.—Edward Reed to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne.

The return of Sir John Coke is welcome to many in the House of Commons, where he hath gained much love and respect for his wise and temperate carriage; although he hath been little beholden to some of his countrymen in action about you, for some complaints they made to the House against him, in which they will not add much to their reputation. The affairs here stand doubtfully whether war or peace. The propositions go on slowly; that for the delinquents is voted and entered, none to be proceeded against, but my Lord Newcastle and my Lord Digby. The next are the Bishops, which are voted down root and branch, and a bill framed to that purpose. The rest, as yet, are not proceeded in. Since the King's loss at Winchester, Chichester is taken by the Parliament's forces, without any condition but quarter. My Lord of Thanet was in it, but escaped as I hear. The Sheriff Sir William Morley and Mr. Lewkner and the Bishop, with many others, were taken in it. Reading I hear hath been besieged, but from thence I hear the Parliament's forces were beaten off with the loss of some men. My Lord Marquis Hertford and my Lord Herbert are now with the King at Oxford with 4,000 men, and 3,000 they have left at Worcester, and some at Hereford, being left the day before by my Lord of Stamford, before my Lord Marquis his coming thither. I hear my Lord Grandison is called before a Marshal's Court at Oxford for his carriage of his business at Winchester. The taxations are now here in agitation, both amongst the Parliament taxing themselves and also in the City. How it will prosper cannot well be guessed at. I hear my Lord of Northumberland and some other of the Lords refuse to be taxed. I think all men would be pleased to be taxed for the making of a peace. The Gazettes Sir John Coke will send your Honour, which will better inform you of the foreign affairs than, I am certain, I can. The King is at Oxford and my Lord General at Windsor, and I hear my Lord Newcastle at Newark.

1642–3, January 4.—Peter Knyveton, Memorandum that I did take of Sir J. Coke's arms 8 muskets 2 bandoleers and 7 musket rests and also 8 pikes 1 halbert for His Majesty's present use.

1642–3, January 16. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke at Melbourne. [No signature.]

I am exceedingly grieved that you should, through the misery of these times, be enforced to remove from your house and at this season of the year. But my humble and earnest prayer is that God will preserve you in health and from all inconveniences and dangers; as my hope is that He will, whatever misery and confusion be threatened and is like to befal this whole kingdom in all parts thereof, if by God's mercy a settlement be not condescended upon very suddenly. The propositions will depend in the House of Commons. No provision for the recovery of goods plundered on either side is comprehended within the vote for the act of oblivion. Both armies in their quarters. I have received a packet for you from Sir William Boswell which he desires may safely be sent unto you, but doubting whether these shall ever come to your hands and not knowing what the letters may import, I dare not send them now. I am very free and well, I thank God, so we are all.

1642–3, January 30, Monday Morning. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke, at Swithland in Leicestershire. [No signature.]

I thank God for the continuance of your good health, but I am very sorry that the cause of your removal from Melbourne continueth still, the troubles rather increasing than otherwise; and I am very glad that by your absence you were freed from the trouble of those two nights the soldiers quartered in your house. At which time as I hear you were exceedingly beholden to the care and respects of Sir William Brereton for preserving your house from the farther disorders of the soldiers.

Perchance some others might have been well contented to have seen much more hurt done. Sir William is a very worthy gentleman and always your very good friend and deserveth your thanks. Whether my weekly letters have come to your hands I do not know, but because I find by Mr. Mayo's letters that the Leicester carrier travelleth safely, I have enclosed this packet from Sir William Boswell. The propositions are finished. Sir Peter Killigrew returned yesterday from Oxford as I suppose with grant of free conduct for the Lords Northumberland, Holland, Pembroke, Salisbury, Mr. Pierpoint, Lord Wenman, Sir John Holland, Mr. Waller and others of the Commons who are appointed by the Houses to carry these propositions to the King. The chief, a bill for extirpation of Episcopacy at a day prefixed; in the meanwhile another government to be settled agreeable to the discipline of other churches; other bills against scandalous ministers, for a synod &c. Demand of the Earl of Newcastle and Lord Digby, Bristol, and Herbert not to come within the verge, or bear any office. Chief Justice Bramston to be restored. Serjeant Wild to be Lord Chief Baron, the Speaker Master of the Rolls &c. Bills to be passed for raising moneys to discharge the public faith. An Act of oblivion. Armies to be disbanded. The greatest want here is of money. The levies of moneys upon the ordinance of the 20th past go on. No forwardness in paying. Many imprisoned, some distrained. Sir George Whitmore sent on Saturday last by sea to Yarmouth Gaol. The armies lie in their quarters, only we hear that Prince Rupert is gone with a strong party into Northamptonshire, some suppose to meet a convoy coming from Newcastle with General King. I pray God send peace and prevent this general destruction. Sir Ralph Hopton is returned into Devonshire, hath taken Saltash and summoneth Plymouth. We heard that Newark was taken, some say besieged by Lincolnshire men.

1642–3, Febrnary 13. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne. [No signature.]

I am very sorry that the forces continue still round about you, and that there is no more hope of peace. I pray God to protect you from all dangers and preserve you from molestation. The debates here this week past have been concerning the King's answer here inclosed.

The Lords sent these votes to the Commons :—

1. That the armies should be speedily disbanded.

2. That a treaty and cessation of arms should precede the disbanding.

The House of Commons upon long debates hath voted as followeth.

1. That the remoter forces on both sides shall disband 1st March, the nearer forces 10th of March.

2. A treaty concerning the disbanding only.

3. No treaty concerning the propositions, or cessation as to such treaty, before the disbanding.

4. A treaty after disbanding.

What the Lords will do hereupon is not yet known, whether insist or recede from their votes.

It is thought that the King will not disband before these differences be settled by a treaty, especially the forts and ships being continued in the hands they are.

The Earl of Loudoun is said to be upon his journey from Scotland hither. The King of Denmark is said to be lately dead. By Leicester carrier a fortnight since I sent unto you a packet from Sir William Boswell. I wish it be come to your hands.

Sir Benjamin Rudyard and Mr. Railton remember their services to you often and enquire of your good health. It is said that the Lord Conway is come over out of Ireland. No gazettes this week. Colonel King is arrived with the arms and ammunition at York. I hear that Mr. Fulwood was in danger to be taken prisoner at Nottingham, that Sir Thomas Burdett and Mr. Morewood are taken by Colonel Hastings. Mr. Withrings hath sent me word that he will, if you please, now sell his part at Duston. Any intercourse concerning moneys is dangerous in letters, and payments difficult to be made for fear of surprize. If you please to let me know your mind I shall do accordingly.

1642–3, February 26. Leicester. — Sir Edward Hartopp to Sir J. Coke. [No signature, endorsed by Sir J. Coke "S. E. H. Leicester."]

In respect of my Lord Grey's absence having left me in command to give orders, I cannot take the privilege to wait upon you; neither could I formerly with convenience or safety present my duty so frequently by letters, nor dare at this time with so much respect, as is due from me. The occasion of the messenger's long stay was that he might give you a certain account of your daughter's health with her little ones, only the youngest continueth in the same former estate; the rest of your friends are well. Sir, I shall always be diligent to inform you of such passages as may come without prejudice to your hands, but, if you please, send not the same man too often, lest Hastings' scouts take notice of him.

1642–3, March 6. Leicester. — Sir Edward Hartopp to Sir J. Coke. [No signature, endorsed by Sir John Coke "Sir Hartop, Leicester."]

I know not how long I shall stay at Leicester, because I have received this morning letters from my Lord General to come with my troop to the army; his Excellency being capable of some neglect towards me, the reasons I dare not write; perchance my Lord Grey is pleased to think that I am too considerable to join with him, and rather desires creatures of his own making. I honour and respect him from my heart, but I am afraid he is transported with particular counsels, that aim at their own ends. Sir, I hope my letters came safe yesterday morning to Melbourne, which will inform you of such news as is stirring. Desire no more from me than what may be conveniently known.

1642–3, March 18. Leicester. — William Danvers to Sir John Coke. [No address. Signed W. D., endorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Cousin Dan. Leicester."]

I thank God my wife and I and all our good friends here are in good health, and desire to present their humble services to you all. I hear that Sir John Gell is gone to besiege Stafford. Parson Smith was never imprisoned, nor any goods of his seized to the Parliament's use, but I, hearing of his wife's great distemper, have procured him a safeguard for his body and goods, and have assured his friends that spoke to me for him, that he shall come and go safely to his family. I hear nothing of the Queen's arrival as yet at York. There is a speech here which is my Lord Loudoun is stabbed at Oxford, but I hope 'tis otherwise. Prince Rupert's plot for the conspiracy and massacre that should have been in Bristol the 6th of this instant at night was happily discovered; and the conspirators of that town, as I am informed, and the arms are seized. My Lord of Stanford I hear is in a very good condition. I had a letter from my Lord Stanford yesterday, and another from my Lady of Exeter, and they have made me their Steward by a letter of attorney under both their hands, to receive all their accounts rents and reckonings from Geoffrey Bordman. My Lady of Exeter hath sustained twenty hundred pounds loss in the raising up of her house and outhouses at Newark, and pillaging of her rich furniture there. That place was merely lost by the neglect of Colonel Ballard, as it is supposed and related to us. My Lord is now at Northampton, we look for him to-night. He sent for two troops of horse that met him yesterday. He hath some design for those parts to-day. My Cousins Faunt and Sach [Sacheverel], the widows, are very well. My Lord Camden [Campden] is dead last Friday at Oxford; his son we hear, the now Lord Camden, Robert Nowell [Noel], doth fortify Belvoir Castle.

1643, March 26. London. — Sir John Coke the younger to Sir John Coke. [No signature, no address.]

The King hath returned in effect the same articles for cessation which at first he proposed, insisting positively upon free trade with no plunderings or illegal imprisonments during the treaty; things as he alleges wherein the subject shall partake of the benefit of the cessation, and for their sakes he will not forego it. He persists also to demand that such ships as are set forth during the cessation shall be commanded by such persons as he shall approve. Yet he expresses himself to have such earnest desires of peace that, if the Parliament shall not think fit to condescend upon these terms of cessation, he is notwithstanding ready to treat upon the propositions themselves without a cessation; and resolved to do as much for peace as he can, with duty to his crown and to the power wherewith he is bound to protect his people. This answer from the King is not yet in print. But the Houses forthwith resolved to give licence to their Committees at Oxford to treat for four days upon the two first propositions viz., the ships, forts, and magazines on one part and the disbanding on the other. This message was sent away on Friday, so, as I suppose, the treaty has begun. Since, the Houses have drawn up reasons to satisfy the King why they cannot condescend to a cessation upon such articles as His Majesty proposes, and they have given their Committees licence to treat for two days upon these articles of cessation. This treaty proceeds but with a slow pace. The soldier is more active. You know better than we what hath been done at Stafford, where the Earl of Northampton is slain. We hear also that Sir William Waller with the Parliament forces hath taken Malmsbury, and that the Newark forces on Thursday last got Grantham into their hands. From the west we hear nothing which makes it probable that their treaty proceeds. Prince Rupert was this week in Buckinghamshire near Aylesbury to the great loss of the country, whose horses and cattle are all driven to Oxford; now he is said to be gone towards Sir William Waller. The king hath released all the western cloths lately taken by a party from Reading, excepting only some part that belonged to Mr. Ash, a member of the Commons House, excepted in his proclamation for Somersetshire.

1643, March 27. London.—Mrs. Anne Sacheverell to Sir John Coke the Elder at Melburne.

We make bold to present our humble duty to you and to let you know that we through God's mercy enjoy good health. We heard from my sister Hartopp last week by a gentleman that came from thence, and we had written to you last week of it, but the carrier was gone before our letters could come. My sister Hartopp hath buried her little daughter: but we hear God hath brought her heart to that patient submission to His will in it, that they thought by reason of her very great tender affections [to ?] it, that they should have seen her much more impatient to part with it. The City have consented the last week to pay the 40,000*l.* a month towards paying the army, which was laid upon them to pay, and only they will have the public faith of the kingdom for three parts, and the fourth they will give freely. The king's answer to the Commissioners from the Houses of Parliament was, that he would not agree to the cessation of arms unless it might be by sea as well as by land, and the ships might be put into such hands as he might confide in, and there might be a free trade, and the Commissioners might have more liberty in the treaty, &c. The Parliament's answer was they would agree to a treaty for four days, but no cessation nor free trade. Sir William Brereton had a great victory of Sir Thomas Aston in Cheshire last week. I have made bold to send you the true relation of the saving of Bristol, and the escaping of some prisoners from Oxford which are now in London in Friday Street.

1643, April 24. London. — Sir John Coke the younger to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne. [No signature.]

I thank God that you continue without farther molestation. I pray that you may do so and in health with contentment, which is the chief of my prayers and desires. The Ashby carrier came not to town this last return. This I send enclosed to my cousin Danvers by Leicester carrier, and hope it may come that way to your hands. This week hath not produced much of importance. The Earl of Essex sat down before Reading upon Sunday the 10th April. He hath perfected his line of circumvallation and brought his works near the town. The Lord Grey of Warke is come to him with his forces from Cambridge. Sir Arthur Aston defends Reading. He hath fortified it very strongly. His chief work is the Royal Fort upon a hill distant a little from the town end, which commands both the town and all the rest of the works. The King of France continues sick. Lately he called his great council and the parliament of Paris before him into his bedchamber, where, having made a speech to them in his bed, he caused his declaration to be read whereby he hath appointed the Queen Regent, Monsieur Earle (?) Lieutenant of France, with the command of the Militia and forts, but not to remove any officer without the advice and consent of the Giunta, whereof he hath made these persons following, Monsieur himself, Prince de Condé, Cardinal Mazarini, Seguier the Chancellor of France, Boutheller superintendent de Finances, and his son Chevigny the Secretary of State. The King hath restored all such as formerly had been put out of their places of command, and recalled all persons that were fled out of the kingdom, except Madame de Chevereux and Chateauneuf. The treaty general betwixt the House of Austria, German Princes, Kings of Spain and France, the United Provinces, Swedes, &c., is to begin at Munster the 1st of June. This foreign news was told me by Monsieur Augier, who remembers his humble service to you. Gazettes I can get none. Mr. Withrings is fallen out with Mr. Poole, and labours to put him out of his employment in the office under the Earl of Warwick: this without any cause, only upon suspicious and groundless jealousies, whereof he is very apprehensive against his best friends; but Mr. Poole hath so good credit with the Earl that I believe Mr. Withrings will hereby rather hurt himself than Mr. Poole. Thus with our humble duties presented unto you, with my constant prayers for your preservation from the danger of these miserable times and for your health and for your favour to myself, which I humbly beg. Taking leave to remain most obedient to your commands. The weather here hath been of late very cold, the Spring backward, some cold rain hath fallen the week past, but the weather not much warmer since. The Earl of Exeter died last week.

1643 (May). London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke, at Tottenham.

His Majesty's message sent to both Houses by Mr. Alexander Hampden, son to Col. Hampden's uncle.

"Charles R. Since His Majesty's message of the 12th of April, in which he conceived he had made such an overture for the immediate disbanding of all armies and composure of these present miserable distractions by a full and free convention in Parliament, that a perfect and settled peace would have ensued, hath in all this time above a full month procured no answer from both Houses, his Majesty will believe himself absolved before God and man from the least possible charge of not having used his utmost endeavour for peace. . . . If his Majesty shall again be disappointed of his intentions herein the blood rapine and destruction which must follow in England and Ireland will be cast on the account of those who are deaf to the motion of peace and accommodation." (The above message is set out in full in Clarendon's History, Vol. 3, p. 245, Oxford edition, 1720.)

The message was received yesterday, and Mr. Hampden put into safe custody for coming from Oxford without a licence. The debate of the message was deferred until the excise should be settled. This present Tuesday voted in the House of Commons.

1. That the Queen had levied war against the Parliament and Kingdom.
2. That Henrietta Maria, Queen of England, should be impeached of high treason, and that proclamations should go out to summon her to her answer.

In pursuance hereof a message was sent to the Lords, and Mr. Pym impeached her at the Lords' Bar in the name of all the Commons of England of high treason, and desired she might be summoned by proclamation to her answer.

The Commons returned to their House and passed the Excise. The Lords arose.

1643, May 24. The Charterhouse.—G. Garrard [to Sir John Coke. No address].

At an assembly of the Governors at Charterhouse on the 21st of April 1642 there was then made by them an election of old men which they then nominated. You being absent, upon my motion, your place was by the Lords and other the Governors reserved for you to nominate some old man into it, which hitherto you have not done. The bearer hereof an old soldier Captain Thomas Midleton hath entreated me to recommend him unto you. Your signifying by a note under your hand will be sufficient and I shall, God willing, see it done when the place falls, which may be within a year; for nine must die or be otherwise outed before he can come in.

1643, May 30. Westminster.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke, at Tottenham.

I have this morning spoken with Colonel Martin and acquainted him with what concerns the taking of your horses, and with your affections unto and forwardness in the service of the Parliament, whereof he is fully satisfied, and hath promised forthwith to take order for the release of your horses with a noble expression of respect to yourself.

1643, June 26. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke. [No address.]

I understand that your Tottenham neighbours do this evening attend the Committee at Haberdashers Hall on their own behalf, wherefore I have deferred my going thither until tomorrow, supposing it more convenient to do so than to come in society with them. God willing I shall use the best care and means I can to give you a good account of this business, wherein I pray for good success from Him that governs all men's minds. And with my prayers for the continuance of your good health, with my humble duty, I take leave, your most obedient son. The trial of the conspirators is appointed at Guildhall upon Thursday next at 9 in the morning. No fight about Newark. The ill news of Mr. Hampden's death is arrived.

1643, July 3, Monday. London.—Mrs. Anne Sacheverell to Sir John Coke the Elder, at Tottenham.

Right Honourable The news about Sir William Waller is contradicted to-day. The news here is that Sir John Hotham and his son are taken and both bringing up to the Parliament. There hath been letters taken that have discovered that Sir John Hotham would have betrayed Hull. The Queen is gone to Grantham, and my Lord of Holland and some others of the Parliament should have gone to my Lord of Essex, to have discovered something that they durst not commit to writing, and my Lord of Essex sent them word they should not come for the armies were engaged, and it is thought the armies are in fight now. My Lord of Newcastle hath faced Leeds and Wakefield and they are like to fight presently. The Synod sat on Saturday, and many ministers were there, and Doctor Twist preached to them. They are to meet again on Thursday.

1643 (about July 12), Tuesday morning. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke, at Tottenham.

I hope your business is in such a way as that with the payment of 100*l.* you shall be no farther molested. Certainly no warrant will be sent against your person, and when the 100*l.* shall be paid there, will be no cause to fear any seizure. In the meantime, hoping you have taken the course you intended yesterday morning, all things will be secure. Yet I confess I do not suppose there is any danger for the present. Yet duplex cautela non nocet, especially in these catching times. When I wait upon you I shall acquaint you with the course I have taken, and the assurances I have.

Yesterday a letter came to the Commons House from the Earl of Essex dated from Brickhill, where he now is with his army. The contents were—That the enemy was so strong in horse that his Lordship can neither preserve the countries from being plundered, nor force them to fight, but when and where they please. Therefore the cries of poor people being infinite, he wishes a peace with the King, so religion and liberty be settled and secured, and the chief delinquents which caused these troubles be brought to trial. The proposition to be sent to some indifferent place to which both armies may be brought near, no officer of the army to be of the Committee nor any intercourse betwixt them. And if peace thereupon cannot be concluded, the trial to be by consent in a set battle, the King being entreated to withdraw himself. This letter is brought by Sir Philip Stapleton and Colonel Goodwin. This morning is appointed for the consideration of this letter in the House of Commons. It is thought the militia of London will be ill contented with this letter: they met last night as I hear, and perchance we may hear from them.

1643, August 9. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke. [No signature.]

I have here inclosed sent unto you a copy of a pass, and I believe I can get it signed as you desire; if you please to fill up the blanks for the numbers of servants and horses, rather including a greater than a lesser number of both than that you shall use. This day there was at Westminster a great concourse of women, with a petition for peace, which they presented to the House of Commons by the hands of one of the members of that House. They had a fair answer returned unto them by five members sent unto them by the command of the House, importing that the House was desirous of peace and would consider of their petition, and that in the meantime they should repair to their several dwellings. This gave them no satisfaction, but with violence they would have pressed upon the outer doors, and required Mr. Pym (who was not in the House) threatening him very sore. They would not be dismissed, until the guards fell upon them. Divers of the women were shrewdly cut with swords, one killed as is said, two men shot to death. They were thus dispersed, but scarcely quieted of their rage. I pray God send us better times.

1643, August 24. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne. [No signature.]

I wrote this week by the Ashby carrier. This my cousin Danvers undertakes. I was heartily glad to hear that you were safe on your journey beyond Bedford. I hope you are safely arrived. God preserve you in peace and quiet free from the molestation of the times. These enclosed gazettes Mr. Poole delivered unto me. The siege at Gloucester continues still. Some of the trained and auxiliary regiments march out of this town to the assistance of the Earl of Essex upon some design for the relief of Gloucester. The Earl is at Colnbrook.

1643, August 28. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke, Knight. [No signature.]

I thank God for your safe arrival at your journey's end, and pray for your health and preservation where you are. The gazettes of the last week I inclosed in a letter by my cousin Danvers. Gloucester is still besieged. On Saturday last there came from Scotland a covenant which they have taken there, and desire it may be taken here. It is for the defence of religion liberty and in them of the King's rights, and for the extirpation of popery and prelacy. . . . A copy of a proclamation also came from Scotland, wherein they have summoned all betwixt 60 and 16 years of age to be in arms for their defence.

1643, September 4. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke. [No address. No signature.]

I have been troubled here since your departure concerning the assessment that was laid upon you, but I hope I shall prevent any farther proceedings, though they said they would write unto you into the country. Officers came to Tottenham to distrain, by which you may guess from what hand this cometh. I have informed [them?] that you left order with me to satisfy that you had contributed according to your proportion, and I have some more time given. The siege at Gloucester still continues. The Assembly hath approved of the covenant sent from Scotland: I suppose this day will perfect it in the House of Commons. The Earl of Essex is marched towards Gloucester, but we do not hear that he is yet passed Oxfordshire. I pray God to preserve you in safety and in good health. Whether this shall ever come to your hands I know not. Ashby carrier came not last week.

1643, September 20. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne. [No signature.]

The enclosed was written to have been sent by Sir John Curzon's servant. But since I have found means, for the present as I suppose, to stop the sending down of the warrants to Sir John Gell, and I shall do the best I can to prevent your farther trouble in this business, whereof I should be heartily glad. But that nothing may be done without your foreknowledge I have sent the enclosed by my cousin Sacheverel. I send my man on purpose for a certificate from Mr. Crew, upon the return whereof I hope to give satisfaction. Judge Berkeley is fined by the Lords at 20,000*l.* to be paid into Guildhall within six weeks, declared incapable of bearing office in the commonwealth, and to be imprisoned in the Tower during pleasure. The proceedings against him were concerning the ship money only. The Earl of Essex marched a long journey from Tewkesbury to Cirencester, where he surprized some of the King's horse with some waggons of victuals. The King followed and on Sunday night they quartered within four miles one of the other about Faringdon. On Monday they skirmished, also on Tuesday. This day about Newbury the guns were heard to play very hotly: what the success is we know not. Lynn is taken by the Earl of Manchester, the town to pay 10*s.* a man to the soldiers, for the rest all to be free. Count de Gresey, lately returned from France, hath been with the King and is now returned to this town. The Count de Harcourt, a Maréchal of France, brother to the Duke d'Elbeuf, is daily expected. Somerset House is appointed by the Queen for his receipt. The Lord Maitland, Mr. Henderson, and another Divine from Scotland sit in the Assembly of our Divines. This day the confutation of the opinions of the Antinomians was presented from their committee to the Assembly.

1643, October 2. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke at Melbourne.

These inclosed gazettes I have received from M^r^ Poole and send them unto you, with a copy of the covenant with Scotland as it is now altered and to be taken. The Earl of Essex is now in this town, and the trained and auxiliary regiments of this City which attended him in this last service are returned. Sir William Waller is about Staines with those forces which he hath. Where the King is I do not hear certainly, whether returned to Oxford which is probable. Sir John Wollaston is chosen Lord Mayor of London for the year ensuing. The Earls of Carnarvon and Sunderland and Lord Falkland were slain in the late fight near Newbury. At present is little news stirring. I was exceedingly glad to hear of your good health by my servant's return. I shall do the best I can possibly to save you farther trouble in the business concerning which I wrote to you by my cousin Sacheverel. I have received a certificate from Northampton though short of the value I expected, yet I hope to give satisfaction as there is great reason it should. Your tenant Wilford paid me 24*l.* this week, in part of the rent he oweth you at Baggrave; some little I have also received from M^r^ Cole. My cousin William Danvers is in this town, having attended the Earl of Essex with his troop in this last expedition.

1643, October 11. London.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne. [No signature.]

Yours I received on Saturday last, and shall this day speak with my sister concerning the forbearance of her rent. I am very glad that you are promised security without farther trouble in consequence of that of the 16th of September, in case I cannot prevent your hearing anything more of it, which I do and shall endeavour, though I know not with what success. What books of yours there are here whereof you can make use, truly I do not well understand, but please you to send a catalogue. I shall give you account according to your directions therein. Here I have Zanchius' works, divers Greek Historians, Aristotle and some others of that language, Deodati's Italian bible.

Coke MSS.

Divers other books here are. I shall send what you appoint. Mr. Poole delivered me these enclosed gazettes. Cousin Danvers is still here. Some of his troop, amongst other of the Lord Gray's, were this week quartered at Tottenham, eleven horses in my brother Gore's stables. The next action in these parts is like to be about Reading, where the King's forces are taking up a winter quarter. The Count de Harcourt, Ambassador from France, arrived at Somerset House on Friday last. Watt Mountague, coming over amongst the French, was taken disguised at Rochester this last week and sent thence to the Tower. The Ambassador demands his restitution, as a person that hath letters from the Queen Regent to the Queen of England. We hear that the King's forces are taking up a winter quarter at Newport Pagnel. We are here, thanks be to God, in good health and pray for yours and for your safety and preservation from the dangers and troubles of the time. God send better.

1643, October 14. Leicester.—Sir Edward Hartopp. [Endorsement by Sir J. Coke. No signature. No address.]

This present day we receive news that my Lord of Manchester and Cromwell have given Gainsborough and Newark forces a very great overthrow having taken 30 colours. My Lord General and Sir William Waller are now firmly united, and are by this time advancing towards Reading, having the assistance of six fresh regiments of the trained bands. The Scottish army is for certain ready to march. My Lord Gray is very shortly expected at Leicester with his regiment of horse. The relation of the great fight is certain. My Lord Grandison is since dead of his hurts, besides others of account. I have sent you a Diurnal which is confirmed by a gentleman of account that came post the last night to be true.

[1643, October] [probably]. Rough draft in the writing of Sir John Coke the Elder.

Noble friends, I understand by this bearer William Lowth, my tenant at Baggrave, that you have sent a warrant to the constable there to levy 10*l.* for the service of the King and Parliament. I have therefore by him sent unto you a copy of an ordinance of Parliament, whereby it may appear that it was declared in particulars to the Committee of the Lords and Commons that I had fully satisfied both the twentieth part of my personal estate and the fifth part of all my revenue, which was as much as would be or is required for my whole estate in all places where I have land. And though the particulars gave good satisfaction, yet because I was then in Derbyshire they sent me this order, whereby [Sir] John Gell is required to receive my averment, either [by] oath or protestation according to the terms thereof, and thereupon to clear me from all further trouble. Accordingly I sent to Sir John Gell both the order and my protestation, and my deposition also if need should require, wherewith he and the Committee at Derby were fully satisfied; as I hope you also will be, without putting me or my tenants to any further trouble; presuming also that my cousin William Danvers when he returneth will be able to satisfy you that I and mine have contributed to the service much above my proportion, though I receive not half my revenue in one place. And how little I have had out of Leicestershire and how much my tenants have suffered there this bearer can best inform you; though in regard of my affection to the cause I neither do nor will complain.

1643, November 11.—Sir Edward Hartopp to Sir John Coke at Melbourne.

I am exceeding sorry that you cannot find a more quiet repose at Melburne: but you will also find it very difficult in these parts. I am confident you will find neither security nor accommodation at Swithland. And being the general opinion and conclusion that the main armies on both sides are drawing into these parts for the enlargement of their quarters, I question whether Leicester will be convenient for you. Whosoever (howsoever) I shall be always ready to serve you with all duty and respect upon your commands. Sir we are not as yet half strong enough to man our new works: we daily expect my Lord Gray with his regiment of horse: but the Committee and his Lordship and the [town] not agreeing, the garrison is in a kind of distraction. Those greater garrisons of Northampton and Coventry and others that surround us are our strength for the present. Only this afternoon the news is that Manchester is returned for certain again with the recruit of 4,000 men and 500 horse, Cromwell and Fairfax joining with him. They are upon a present design for the clearing of our parts, and the promotion of the enemy's further march for my Lord of Newcastle's relief, who if alive is in a very weak condition. Sir William Waller is marching for the west: there are also on the other part 3,000 foot and horse designed for my Lord Capel for the diversion of Cheshire and Lancashire forces, who are at this present joined with Fairfax, and are after some present service appointed for the north. Newark it is thought declineth with my Lord Newcastle, and therefore greater designs take place for the present. Sir, my stay is uncertain: I am courted on all sides, as there is present occasion for my service, but that past I only suffer their envy. If you please I shall expect your further commands.

1643, November 12. Sweedland (Swithland).—Elizabeth Danvers to Sir John Coke. [No address.]

I am heartily sorry the times are such as constrain you to remove from Melbourne at this unseasonable time of the year, and I am as sorry I cannot accomplish your desire in having you at Sweedland, by reason all my goods but some few for my children's needful use are at Leicester, and because of my uncertain stay, and dangerous fetching of coals, I am very ill provided of fuel and other necessaries to entertain your Honour at Sweedland: and the great house at Leicester so full, having three families besides myself in it, and being very unquiet because it is so near the street. But if your Honour please to come to Leicester, I think the Neuerk (Newarke) the safest and quietest place in Leicester, and Mr Wadland's house the fittest, for the Judges lie there every assizes. I had a letter from my son Henry the last week, which said they were all well, but his father was at London with my Lord of Stanford upon some good employment, he writ not what it was, and they expected every day to march from Carington towards Northampton. There was no news then since the driving away of the Cavaliers from Newport; but they had many parties out, of the which they hope to bring us good news shortly; till which time I am very uncertain what course to take, or where to lay my great belly.

1643, December 17.—Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke. [No signature. No address.]

By reason the carriers come not I cannot tell how to convey my letters unto you, as I cannot hear from you, which troubles me very much by reason of the dangers that are about you. I have written by all means and ways that I could find, both by carriers and other messengers and travellers, and shall neglect no opportunity that occurs, but whether my letters come to your hands I know not. I have a very great desire to wait upon you, but as this miserable conjuncture of the time is, I cannot conceive but that, for the present, my presence would draw more inconvenience upon you and myself, for reasons which I cannot write, but in my seriousest thoughts they weigh so much with me, that I am much troubled what to do; my duty and my desire drawing me one way, and the consideration of the time in relation to you and to myself, as I would prove myself to you, another. And that which is worst, I cannot have the happiness to have your advice thereupon. All I can do is to pray for your health and safety and preservation, which I do constantly, earnestly, and affectionately, and shall do, we desiring no earthly thing more than your safety and welfare. And truly it troubles me not a little, that I seem to myself to be more secure here than you are where you are, for it becomes me to bear the burthen of the time rather than you, and I would willingly do it to procure your safety and quiet. All the solid centre I can find to take footing upon is that ὁι την περισσείαν τῆς χάριτος και τῆς δωρεᾶς τῆς δικαιοσύνης λαμβάνοντες ἐν ζωῇ βασιλευσουσι διὰ τοῦ ἑνὸς Ἰησοῦ χριστοῦ τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν, which is a sufficient encouragement to lay up treasure where it cannot be taken away. I write that which the trouble of the time suggests to me, and pray you to pardon the same. The news current here is that Sir William Waller hath beaten up the King's quarters at Alton in Surrey, and taken a whole regiment of foot there: the Earl of Crawford escaped with some horse. . . . . Gazettes are enclosed.

1643, December 21.— Sir John Coke the younger to Sir John Coke, at Melbourne. [No signature.]

I wrote unto you this week by the Leicester Carrier. Many former letters I have sent by several ways of late, of which whether they all have come to your hands I am very doubtful. I hope some of them have arrived, and in them many reiterated accounts of that trouble from hence which I could not with all my endeavours prevent. I should be very glad to hear that you were at an end of any farther trouble therein, it being difficult to dispute with those that have power. I am very much troubled with the danger of the parts wherein you are, and with fear of your being molested. My constant prayer is and shall be for your safety and preservation, and that God would direct you to the best means for attaining and continuing the same. It is a great trouble to me that I do not wait upon you according to my duty, but I am withholden with the fear of drawing more trouble and inconvenience upon you by my presence, as the present state of the time stands, wherein the advice of my friends here makes me more doubtful, concurring in the same opinion. My chief desire is to observe you, and to be advised by you, and to acquit myself to the uttermost of my power of that bond of duty which I owe unto you.

. . . . Sir William Waller is marched toward Arundel for the recovery thereof. The King's forces draw that way, so as blows are expected in those parts. The new great seal was used this day by the Commissioners, in the sealing of the Earl of Warwick's patent to be Admiral of England and in the sealing of divers other writs.

1643–4, January. Sir John Coke to Sir John Coke the Younger. [Draft. No date.]

You will hear by others how we have been used at Melbourne, which though at first I resented very much for your privilege of parliament and had writ my mind thereon, yet with calmer thoughts suspecting for whose sakes this fell upon me, and that the consequence might turn to their prejudice whose good and reputation I tended above my own: and again by all your orders seeing my age laid so low that I neither hoped for nor much desired any reparation from you, I therefore resolved to bear all with patience, since, first by Gell's and now by Newcastle's forces, I have lost all I had in this country, and have no more here to lose where (as you know) I had above 400*l.* a year. I have received all the letters mentioned in your former and in your last of 21st December, the substance of all being, Si vales bene est: nos valemus. And in this posture of the times, minds, and ways I expected no more from you, nor can now advise your coming down, which can bring no good to us and danger to yourself. All your servants here are Clements combination and we will take no thorns out of our own to put them into your feet. We hitherto have been preserved from considerable loss in this house by God's miraculous hand as in particulars you will hereafter understand. This encourageth us still to confide in His gracious protection in the midst of daily dangers, hoping at length He will work us all into one heart and one way that the light of His countenance may again be turned towards us and I may depart in peace. God bless you.

1643–4, February 4. Sir John Coke the Younger to Sir John Coke. [No signature. No address.]

These my cousin Danvers is pleased to take care of for their conveyance unto you. He still remaineth in this town. Some articles have been exhibited here by some of Leicester against some of my Lord Gray's officers, for several misdemeanours supposed to have been committed by them. The examination thereof is referred to a committee, but I believe nothing will come of it. Upon Tuesday last a trumpeter from the Earl of Forth brought a letter to the Earl of Essex with a roll annexed containing a general invitation to peace, conjuring his Lordship by the love he bore to his country that he would contribute his endeavours thereunto, in the sending of a committee to treat with a committee from Oxford for that end; and that if he pleased he might acquaint those that employed him therewith. This was subscribed by the Prince, the Duke of York, Prince Rupert now Duke of Cumberland, 45 lords and a hundred of those that were lately members of the House of Commons. The Earl of Essex acquainted the Lords with the receipt hereof, without reading it himself. They appointed a Committee wherein the Commons joined, to consider of this roll, who finding the Parliament not mentioned therein thought it not fit to have it communicated to either House. So as it was left to my Lord General to return what answer he thought fit to the Earl of Forth. But withal both Houses required his Lordship to send by a trumpeter to the Earl of Forth copies of the Covenant, the declaration of the Scots, and the declaration of both kingdoms (which herewith you shall receive) which is done accordingly. This it seems was the effect of the first meeting of the great council at Oxford. I presume you have heard at a nearer distance of the great defeat given by Sir William Brereton and Sir Thomas Fairfax to the Lord Byron's forces at the raising of the siege before Nantwich, wherein most of the chief Irish officers are taken with their ordnance and baggage and 1,500 prisoners. The Prince Harcourt is still in this town. The States' Ambassadors are gone to Oxford. Sir Edward Dering is come in upon the declaration of both kingdoms. The King's affairs are conceived to be at a low ebb, after so many considerable losses together with the entry of the Scots. The Earl of Lannerick is delivered into the hands of the Lord Maitland, commissioner from Scotland in the Assembly of our Divines, to be by him conveyed into Scotland. The Scots Commissioners are not yet arrived in this town. The Lord Willoughby of Parham is under the Black [Rod?]

COKE MSS.

for having sent a challenge to the Earl of Manchester, upon some discontentment conceived by reason of a complaint made by Colonel Cromwell against his Lordship's proceedings in Lincolnshire, before the Earl of Manchester had the command of that county. This discontent hath spread further, and produced a quarrel yesterday in Westminster Hall betwixt Sir Christopher Wray and a brother to Colonel Boynton, in reference to a quarrel immediately preceding betwixt that Colonel and Sir Christopher's son. We hear of a great defeat given by the Swedes lately to the King of Denmark. Tomorrow in the Assembly is to be disputed the great question betwixt those that are for the Presbyterial government and those that are called Independents, viz.: Whether many parochial congregations be to be governed by a combined classical presbytery, or, whether every particular congregation be to be governed by a distinct congregational presbytery, which the Independents contend for. I shall be very glad to hear of your good health and safety, which is my constant prayer and hearty desire. I pray God to protect you from all evil, and preserve me in your favour and blessing, which will be a sufficient contentment to me in the worst of times. I humbly present my duty unto you, and with the acknowledgement of the infinite obligation I owe to your goodness, I humbly rest most obedient to all your commands.

(1650?) Informations against Mr. Robert Hardy [Hardinge] of Kings Newton.

1. First the Lord of Loughborrow sent a warrant to command the parish of Melbourne to come to Swarson (Swarkeston) when he first came thither; which the minister, being a godly man, refused to read. The said Robert Hardy did inform and incense the Lord Loughborrow against the said minister, whereupon the soldiers came, and searched for the minister the next day, both in his own house, and other men's, where they had any hope he might be.

2. The said Robert Hardy was upon Tuesday and Wednesday with the Lord Hastings in open arms at that same time at Swarson Bridge, with his sword drawn and head piece on and a gantlet about his neck.

3. He was at Leicester when the late King took it, and, coming to Nottingham to an uncle's house, he told his aunt that Nottingham was like to be the next taken, and that if they was in any danger, send for him, and he would make friends for them. His aunt said, If it was so, she would not send to him; and also said, What if the roundheads prevail and get the better? To which he answered, He did not desire to live to see those days.

4. Having a tenant at Melbourne which was gone to London, in the meantime his wife got some friends to keep a day to seek the Lord for the land: which when the said Mr. Hardy heard of it, he was very angry, and said, He had rather mass had been said in his house, and so discharged the tenant of his house.

5. Still continuing his malignancy, he whipt and sent away as a rogue one of the General's soldiers, who had his Excellency's medal, and also his own hand and seal for his quiet living, without ever having him before any justice of the peace, or giving him time to sell his goods.

1650, September 26.—Received by us Richard Waring and Michael Herring, Treasurers of the monies to be paid into Goldsmiths Hall, of Thomas Coke of Melborne in the County of Derby Esquire the sum of Eleven Hundred Pounds in part of Two thousand two hundred pounds imposed on him by the Parliament of England as a fine for his delinquency to the Commonwealth—we say received in part 1,100*l.* Richard Waring.

1654, June 17. Trusley.—Richard Coke to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

Good Cousin I have sent you by this bearer my little bay mare, and desire that without any more ado you will be pleased to accept her from him who is ever your affectionate cousin and servant.

1654–5, February 9.—Dame Marie Hartopp to Thomas Coke.

Dear Brother—If this sad occasion hath brought you to Buckminster I do not question but you will help what you can with your advice and counsel. I entreat also from you that you and my cousin Bury will consider what is to be done concerning the funeral, that nothing you two judge meet be neglected, as becomes his quality and our duty. Through the Lord's goodness your son is in very good health. If my husband come down, what disturbances may be I know not. Pray consider how anything that belongs to my children may be out of danger, or removed if you and my cousin Bury judge fit.

1654–5, February 21. London.—James Mayo to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

"Leave this with Mr. Mansfeld in Derby to be conveyed to him." "paid." . . . . Your mother keeps her chamber and is crasse on all occasions. There hath been a sore mischance at Islington on Saturday night last by fire. Mr. Barradell, Sir Thomas Fisher's man, was burnt to death, and some horses, and Sir Thomas stable and Mr. Corbett's, and had it not happened betimes and good help, all the house had been burnt, for it is an old timber house. All the train bands of the City are raising for the guard of the Lord Protector and City. I hear old Sir Edward Hartopp is dead. Your sisters are all well, and so is the young gentleman, who is very bashful and strange, but as plump and round as a marvell. I desire to know whether you will part with your malster at Lady day: if you do I shall desire to have the refusal of him. I shall humbly desire you to take my brother's son.

(1655, about.)—Mary Coke to her husband Thomas Coke at Mr. Burdetts at the sign of the Three Crowns in Fleet Street, London.

I hope you will let me hear from you, and that I shall see you, as soon as you can. Pray send down the cloth, and forget not glasses; and if you think it convenient, I would have one dozen of cane chairs, half great chairs and half a dozen of Turkey work chairs to suit with ours; and half dozen cushions to suit with those we have.

1655, May 24. Duston.—John Coles to Thomas Coke.

. . . There is neither High Sheriff nor Undersheriff, nor none of their deputies left in the country that hath the seal to grant a warrant that the writ may be executed, and so it is like to be lost.

. . . My father remembers in the Leger book at Sir Robert Cotton's study there is many passages concerning the royalty of Duston taken out of Domesday book: he believes if that were well searched, it might call in question Sir Richard Samwell's title for Upton in many things. William Granborow is still in the gaol. The Innkeepers have been with him three or four times and have laid down a groat to see what he was arrested for, but the gaoler is likewise at London and none will do it. They are unwilling to release him until they hear from you. . . . . .

1655, June 13. Duston.—John Coles to Thomas Coke. [No address.]

. . . William Granborow and my father's two men that were indicted for driving away the cattle out of the Ox close are all released by the justices, and Mr. Reading played his part so well that the justices allowed Granborow fifteen shillings for being so long in the gaol. Mr. Loving moved for an injunction, but in regard all the Judges commissions are called in, it could not be granted. Mr. Loving intends to procure one so soon as they are restored. I delivered writs to the Undersheriff to arrest Gyfford and the rest and paid for the warrants . . . he said Northampton was a privileged place and he durst not serve them. They durst not come down to the Castle to prosecute the business against Granborow and the other two that they indited at Easter sessions last, for then they had been out of their liberty and had been arrested. . . . I am advised to send for a Non admittas. . . . Many gentlemen of our country are brought into Northampton. . . .

COKE MSS.

1655–6, January 5.—Jo. Loving to Thomas Coke at Melborne.

I here inclosed send you the order of dismission, whereby the plaintiffs are to pay four nobles costs, which should be tendered to the defendants. . . . I doubt not the Lieutenant will be ready to do you all civilities within his power. Had I known your mind I would have presented him with a new year's gift, which might have been very seasonable: but I presume it will not be refused at any time.

1656, December 21.—Paper endorsed "Sir Edward Barkham's acquittance for £20 due to Mr. Allen the herald painter."

Received the day and year above written of Mrs. Mary Coke of Newington in the County of Middlesex for the use of Mr. John Allen of London Spotter the sum of twenty pounds videlicet for two dozen and a half of buckram escutcheons two great arms six bosses for the horses foreheads a velvet pallet and for his pains and his man's and coach hire coming down with the things and setting them out in their order per me Edward Barkham.

Mr. Thomas Coke was buried at Melbourne December 1656.

1683, July 19.—The deposition of Richard Reyner Clerk taken at Derby before us Sir Robert Coke Sir Henry Every Rev. William Fitzherbert and John Coke Esq.

This informant saith that about four years since he being at Little Ireton in the parish of Muginton at the house of Mr. Thomas Saunders he did then and there see three or four blunderbushes some whereof were new ones. (Signed) Richard Rayner.

A Paper indorsed by John Coke "A copy of our letter to Sir Lyonall Jinkings."

We having heard a report that one Mr. Vernon a Parliament man for the Borough of Derby sometime before the Parliament met at Oxford should say that before the Duke of York should come to the Crown he should be seen at the head of 1,000 men, we have inquired after this and find very creditable persons that will make this out if called. Our Lord Lieutenant being not in this Country, we believing it our duty give you this trouble and remain (no signature).

1688, November 24.—John Coke to Francis Thacker at his Chamber in Furnivall's Inn London.

I am afraid you think me long about your money, but there are here in arms come out of Cheshire and Lancashire to the number of 3 or 4,000. They have made their stand at Nottingham and the country runs in very fast, though few or none of the gentry of this county are engaged or meddle, though all the counties round are in a flame: and in all probability the Nottingham army will in a short time be bigger than either of the other. They declare for a free Parliament: what they desire to do I know not, for I am noways concerned with them. But it puts the counties hereabouts into such disorder that there is no possible stirring. But I will take care your money shall be secure with thanks and satisfaction for the delay.

1688, November 27.—Deprepetit's account.

	£	s.	d.
Paid at Derby for 28 horses and for 9 men's supper	2	0	10
A sack to carry our things - - - -	0	2	6
The ostler at Virgin's Inn - - - -	0	1	0
2 stirrup leathers to carry the little portmantua -	0	0	8
A great bit and girths for Rattle and a leading rein	0	7	0
2 straps to carry Master's coat - - -	0	0	6
Given to Master at Mansfield to make up 14*l.* for a horse.	3	2	6
Paid to Master at Mansfield for the Captain's supper	0	12	0
For the carriage - - - - - -	0	6	0
To the landlord at Nottingham - - -	1	11	0
For the Captain's two horses, 7 nights, and mending the saddle.	0	15	0
For the two carthorses - - - -	0	2	0
For 3¾ yards of cloth to make a suit for my Master	2	5	0
For 3 yards of blue serge to make a waistcoat -	0	13	6
For lining of them, buttons and silk - -	1	19	7
To a collar maker - - - - -	0	10	9
To a wheelwright - - - - -	0	3	0
For a yard of ribbon for my Master's sword -	0	1	0
To the tailor at Nottingham - - -	0	12	9

1688, December 19. Lester.—Lord Sherard to John Coke, at Mrs. Worney her house in Savoy Street in Arundel Buildings.

I received yours just now, and shall dismiss our Lestershcir militia to-morrow. I have sent you in a note here inclosed what will satisfy all the inferior officers. Captain Low continueth here to assist the gatherers of the excise and chimney money with 45 officers and soldiers. I daily expect my Lord Devonsheir's further orders but cannot stir without a supply of monies, having yet received none since his coming hither. The inferior officers can better stay for their pay than these soldiers. The collectors of the excise and chimney money have not yet made use of these soldiers to assist them in the collection of either. When you have anything of news I hope you will afford me a line to Stapleford by post Witham bag in Lincolnsheir, which word being put at the bottom of your letter will make it come the sooner.

1688, December 22. London.—R. Davies to John Wright, Clerk to the Earl of Devonshire's Troop, at the Roebuck, in Oxford. My Lord desires that your brother and Mr. Row would disband their men, and has here inclosed sent them warrants for so doing. Mr. Cook should have had them, if I could have found him out, who likewise has further instructions. What money they have had they must account for to you, and if they have occasion for more, I suppose he has given you orders. I have no more, but my humble service to all the gentlemen there.

(Indorsement.) December the 26, 1688. I have received of Mr. Perpettey the sum of 56*l.* 15*s.* of Captain Cook's moneys for the use of the R^t^ Hon^ble^ William Earl of Devonshire to pay off Captain Robert Rowe's foot company by me John Wright.

COKE MSS.

1688, December 24. Formarke.—Walter Burdett to John Coke, Mrs. Warner's house, at Somersett garden Backgate.

Saturday last I received two letters from you, one from Oxon the 17th, the other the 20th (which I suppose is from London). According to your order I have inclosed sent your keys, and (of my own accord) Mr. Thomas's account. Lest you should have occasion, I have sent you the sums in Mr. Smith's letters, but I keep the letters till order from you. One is 700*l.* the other is 46*l.* I was last week at Mr. Wilmott the Shereive with Sir Gilbert Clark ; he had received the writs for election. The County Court day is next Thursday, and they intend to adjourn till that day sennight. I hear you are likely to be one for Darby town.

1688, December 29. Nottingham.—Thomas Trnman to the Earl of Devonshire at St. James, London.

May it please your Honour. Upon Monday was sevennight I was sent for by Mr. John Haukins of this town and by him desired in your Lordship's name to collect the duty of Hearth money for the same, and my brother appointed by him to collect the Hundred of Broxto in the same county, being all that is yet unpaid. I did accordingly enter upon the collection, and have done the greatest part of it. Last night by order of Mr. George Blackbourne I was commanded to desist, who produced an order under the Earl of Danby and Sir Henry Gooderick to receive all monies and books in the counties of Nottingham, Lincoln, York, Lancaster, and Rutland. I have brought from Darby received by Mr. Corns. White and Mr. Cordale 800*l.* and brought in of my own and brother's monies collected since the Prince landed 400*l.* and several hundreds of the excise. I humbly request your Honour will give directions by the next post to Mr. Alderman Haukins I may perfect my collection in this town and my brother Broxto Hundred, which will be great satisfaction to the town and a great encouragement to your honour's dutiful faithful servant, Thomas Truman.

Mr. Truman is very well known and approved of by us to be a fit person for the business your Lordship hath employed him in as witnesseth our hands. Geo. Langford Major, C. Harvey, Ald.

1688, December 30. Oxford.—J. Deprepetit for Captain Coke, at Mrs. Warner's, in Surry Street, over against the Maypole, in the Strand, London.

I send here inclosed the note of the soldiers and of every horse they ride on. They are all willing enough to follow your worship if the regiment stand : but I doubt some of them do not deserve to be maintained, being very careless about their horses and duty, uncivil in their quarters, and saucy to their officers. I received just now a great complaint of Doncaster, who cowardly knocked down one of Sir soldiers, as he was set by the fireside, of which he is in the surgeon's hands. He hath given himself very much to swear and to drink, so that his landlord, who looks like a very honest man, saith that he is not fit to be amongst Christians. The two Suttons, Slater Bradford, and Buxston quarter together : they have not been willing to pay a farthing for their victuals hay and oats, though they cannot complain of their money, being paid at every hour they please. But I am resolved to receive the landlord's bill, and to stop their pay to acquit it. Mr. Smart arrived last night from Leicestershire. He said he could find no horse fit for him : that he had a young horse, which the hard weather has not permitted him to bring : besides he was told that your troop and the whole regiment was dismissed. And with all such discourse he hath brought a little tit, worse by half than that he had afore. He has brought a young countryman, like a ploughman, with a great black mare, very poor, whose ears blind her: and would have me to list him. I told him I could not list him without your worship's advice and orders: that we had soldiers enough, suppose the regiment should stand, which we were not sure of; besides that I thought he was very ill mounted. The three gentlemen soldiers have listed themselves. They met with Captain Hanningham, who ordered them to repair to their colours, and that it was the Prince's orders. They told him they were listed under Captain Coke, and that they did not think that any of their officers would force them to repair to their colours, if they had not a mind to it, at least without your discharge; and they are resolved to follow you wherever you will be pleased to lead them. Our trumpeter, John Cock, was so simple man and so bad trumpeter that Mr. Millward and I thought not fit to keep him for three shillings a day. I have listed another, who has served formerly, a great fencer, and that plays very well. His family liveth in this city; they keep an alehouse, and he kept fencing school: he can let blood, and is a shoemaker of his trade. The Major went yesterday for London: he may acquaint your worship that he ordered Mr. Wright before me to receive money to disband Captain Roe's company. I took Mr. Wright's acquittance on the back of a letter written to him from my Lord [Devonshire] by Mr. Davis, which saith as for disbanding of Captain Wright's troop and Captain Roe's company Captain Coke has further instructions with money: the letter is sealed with my Lord's seal within and without. I went with Mr. Wright to Captain Roe's quarter, where all his soldiers' landlords were appointed to meet, to clear every one's quarter. I set down all their names, received all their acquittances, they were paid, and afterwards went to the Mayor, whom we desired to set his hand to it, which he did. All the soldiers, who were about 110, without the officers, had three shillings to carry them down, and a shilling to drink my Lord's health. The officers were paid a full month. Mr. Sale, Captain Wright's Lieutenant, told me that some of his troop were in great want of money, having not received their pay for a full month as it was ordered: and if you would be pleased to order some money to be paid for their subsistence, it would be returned to you by the owners. In case they should be dismissed, they have no money to clear their quarters. All the regiment wants money; they all come to us for some. I have still the two bags full which I brought from Melborne. Upon all this I shall stay for your orders. We are at the Blue Boar, near Christchurch.

1688-9, January 8. Coventry.—Samuel Cricklowe to the Earl of Devonshire in Gerrard Street, London.

According to your Lordship's commands by Captain Pames when at Coventry I provided 153 coats of good mazarine brod, lined with white flannel, and did deliver them to Captain Pames and Mr. Wright at Oxford the 18th of December according to your Lordship's Warrant, for which number I had a receipt from Mr. Wright for the use of your Lordship. And whilst I was there, I took the opportunity by Mr. Cliffen (who was to wait upon your honour at London) to send your Lordship a note of the charge, viz., 294*l.* 14*s.*, desiring your Lordship's ordering the money to be paid me here by Mr. Cliffen, who hath money here that was received upon account of the excise . . I understand that your Lordship thought the coats dear at the rate I charged them; but I assure your Lordship they are creditable coats, made of good cloth and lined with good flannel, and very well made; but being confined to three days time for providing that number did put me to some further charge than I shall be at if your Lordship gives me a further order for providing more coats, and allow me a week's time for providing them. If your Lordship pleases by this bearer Mr. Bee (who lives at the Red Lyon Inn Cateaton Street) to give an order to Mr. Cliffen to pay me here, Mr. Cliffen will readily do it.

COKE MSS.

1688, December 8 (Saturday) (to 1688–9, January 13). Depretitit to Colonel John Coke.

Account of disbursements.

	£	s.	d.
Mr. Milward for listing of 13 soldiers and a shot bag.	0	17	6
Mr. Cradock, Master of the Angel at Leicester	2	3	0
E. Closby that went of an errand to Nottingham, and the next day to Wenderby.	0	12	0
Two men that went out the first night as scouts	0	12	0
Thomas Muriett's dinner the day he helped to write the Prince's Declaration.	0	0	6
A little boy that came from Melborne with a mare two nights.	0	5	6
A messenger that went afoot for the Captain	0	3	0
John Davids that was two days abroad on horseback	0	10	0
The ostler's son at the Angel that was out two days with a hired horse.	0	10	0
A guide according to Mr. Brightman's order	0	5	0
20 pounds of powder and a firkin	1	1	6
300 flints	0	3	0
4 pounds of bullets for pistols	0	1	4
25 horns at 4*d.* a piece	0	8	4
Half a pound of wire to make worms	0	0	6
A bag to carry our bullets	0	2	0
Sealing wax and a small copper seal	0	0	8
One German Pegg that fitted the colours with staff, spear, and ring.	0	4	0
Shoemaker, for sockets to carry the colours	0	2	0
A trumpet bought at Leicester	0	16	0
A man that went for it on horseback	0	2	0
A girdle for the Captain to carry his shot bag	0	13	0
Two carabines bought at Leicester	1	10	0
For two hired horses, for Justice Candal	0	6	0
Mr. Candal's man for bringing the money	0	2	6
Stephen Smedley for new scabbards	0	17	4
Mrs. Mason's maids at Leicester	0	5	0
Two flasks of wine from the Angel to the Captain at Mr. Mason's.	0	3	0
The Captain's two horses, three nights at Leicester	0	6	0
Carriage between Leicester and Northampton	0	6	0
Washing the Captain's linen at Leicester	0	4	6
Horse to carry our portmantle from Leicester to Harborough.	0	1	0
From Harborough two horses to Northampton	0	3	0
A saddler at Northampton by the Captain's order	0	15	6
A small saddle for Villiers Brooksby	0	3	6
Henry Killby's saddle	0	5	0
Two pairs of boots for the Captain and Mr. Pope	1	8	0
Two other pairs for Henry Lyen and Luke Scot	1	6	0

	£	s.	d.
The post boy that brought Villiers Brooksby from Harborough to Northampton.	0	7	0
A case of pistols for Henry Lyon - - -	0	16	0
Another case to Mr. Redding - - -	1	10	0
To the same for a saddle and bridle - -	1	18	0
New holsters and a saddle for Henry Lyon - -	0	15	6
Luke Scot's sword - - - - -	0	3	6
Henry Lyon's sword - - - -	0	8	0
To the scouts at Northampton - - -	1	0	0
Mr. Milward for a guide he had between Towcester and Banbury.	0	6	0
To a guide myself that day when I went for quarters	0	1	0
Given to the Captain at Atterbury in Sir Nathaniel Cob's house.	1	0	0
The Carter that came from Northampton to Banbury	0	15	0
To that came from Banbury to Atterbury - -	0	1	0
The Carter that came from Atterbury to Woodstock	0	5	0
Richard Bret of Woodstock for keeping of Mr. Pope's horse.	0	2	0
Stephen Smedley for stuff he bought to mend some of the soldiers' arms.	0	3	0
For my Master's washing at Woodstock - -	0	2	6
For the Captain's two horses at Woodstock five days	0	10	0
At Towcester for fire and ale for the Captain's account.	0	2	0
A hired horse from Woodstock to Oxford and keeping	0	7	0
The Carrier from Woodstock to Oxford - -	0	3	0
At the Cross in Oxford for two nights, two horses -	0	5	0
At the Blue Boar for the supper, and four horses, and the ostler.	1	5	8
For Sir Thomas Greasley's mare left by John Kellby and which Mr. Adderley took home, ten nights.	0	10	0
For that same mare at Woodstock, six nights -	0	6	0
For another sorrel mare left by Fairfield, three nights.	0	3	0
For another left by Daniel Meat five days unpaid, and I kept her till Mr. Adderley went away, six days.	0	11	0
At Oxford four nights for a horse that Mr. Swindell had when he attended the Captain going for London.	0	4	0
At Oxford for the Captain's two horses from 19 Dec. to 13 Jan^{y}	2	10	0
For the mare left by Doncaster 21 days hay 11*s.* 6*d.*, and four days.	0	15	6
For the mare left by Henry Kellby, who ran away and paid not one farthing, fourteen nights.	0	14	0
For a horse left by John Halley who went away upon Colburn's mare six nights.	0	6	0
To the Carter from Oxford to Dorchester - -	0	4	0
To the Carter for the carriage from Dorchester to Oxford.	0	4	0
For the Captain's horses at Dorchester three nights	0	6	0
At Oxford for the Colonel at the Blue Boar -	7	7	6
To the Carter from Oxford to Bicester upon the march.	0	5	0

	£	s.	d.
At Bicester for the Colonel's two horses - -	0	2	0
From Bicester to Towcester for the Carter - -	0	7	0
For the Colonel's horses - - - -	0	2	0
From Towcester to Daventry to the Carrier -	0	5	0
For the Colonel's two horses - - -	0	2	0
From Daventry to Leicester to the Carrier - -	0	10	0
For the Colonel's two horses - - -	0	2	0
From Leicester to Melborne - - -	0	7	6
For the Colonel's two horses at Leicester - -	0	2	0

[Indorsed by Mr. Vice-Chamberlain Coke. "Deprepetit's Account of Disbursements in the Expedition at the Revolution."]

1688–9, January 14.—John Somner to Colonel John Coke.

My Lord [of Devonshire] has commanded me to write to you by Mr. Davis that you will pay him for four horses, which are in the troop, that was my Lord's—two black stoned horses, one black gelding and one brown nag. The four horses cost eight and forty pounds.

1688–9, January 19.—John Charlton to Lieut.-Colonel John Coke in Savoy Street in Essex Buildings, London.

I have drawn a bill of exchange on you for 300*l.* payable to the Commisioners of the Excise, dated with this. I desire you to make such payment, as I am sure you will make. On Monday the regiment shall march according to the present order, and I will take all the care I can, that all the quarters may be discharged, so as to have no clamour behind us, and will, when I see you, give you an account how the money is disposed of, and make my acknowledgments for all the favours I have received from you. I design to be with you on Wednesday or Thursday next.

1688–9, January 19.—John Hawkins to Mr. Davis, at the Earl of Devonshire's House, in Garret [Gerrard ?] Street, London.

I have here enclosed an account of the Excise and Hearth money that I received by my Lord's order, which I desire you'll please to advise my Lord of, and then give it to Captain Coke. Another account of the same I have sent by this post to Dr. Davenant, who desired it. . . . I give you hearty thanks for your care of my affair. I am greatly concerned that my Lord should have so much trouble in it, and better usage was expected from them that prove as they do. When there is need for my coming up, and that I have notice, I shall come, and shall depend on you for further advice. There is one John Gaile rides in my Lord's troop that was set out by Mr. Purdey of a militia horse for my Lord of Essex, that this Mr. Purdey desires may be sent back, if my Lord hath not further use for him.

		£	s.	d.
Excise money at Nottingham.	Rec^{d} of Mr. Gilman by the hand of Mr. Wright, Dec. 5 - -	170	0	0
	of Mr. Henry Willett, Dec. 21 -	169	0	0
	of Mr. Henry Willett, Dec. 26 -	215	0	0
Hearth money in Derbyshire.	of Mr. Dale, December 27 -	357	0	0
	of Mr. White, do. -	443	0	0
In Nottinghamshire.	of Mr. Thomas Truman - -	310	0	0
	of Mr. Sam. Truman - -	150	0	0
		1,814	0	0

1688–9, February 2. Derby.—William Franceys to Colonel John Coke at Mrs. Warners in Surry Street in Arundell Buildings in the Strand.

I have received yours and have spoke with Mr. Hodgkinson, who tells me he writ to you a week since; however he will not fail to give you his thanks by this post. As for the 70*l.* a week you speak of to be paid in Darby to the soldiers, I cannot tell where to fix it on one man; but this I am confident, one week with another, I myself can procure you so much money in Darby to be paid to your order, when I once know the time you give for the payment in London, for the shorter time the more monies. I have now 150*l.* which shall be paid when you give me order, the like sum being paid in London, as I shall give a bill. If this way will do, I will endeavour every week to secure the trading monies of Darby, and always endeavour to show myself your Honour's ready servant to command. Pray let me hear from you by the next.

1688–9, February 11. Derby.—William Franceys to the Honourable Colonel John Coke at Mrs. Warners in Surry Street in Arundell Buildings.

I have drawn those bills of you at ten days sight for 250*l.* payable to Mr. Stephen Lilly at the Post Office upon Father Franceys' account; 100*l.* payable to Mr. Thomas Chambers, a salter, at Mr. Naps in Basinghall Street; 50*l.* from one Mr. Charnell, that you shall have advice by the next to who it shall be paid. Your order shall be observed in the payment of your monies . . I shall never charge a bill upon you, but you may be confident I have so much in my hands . . As I told you in my last, you shall never want monies.

1688–9, February 12.—Receeived of Left. Coll. Coke the sum of forty-five pounds in full for a black stoned horse and a black gelding I say received by me Will. Robe. 45*l.*

1688–9, February 20. Derby.—William Franceys to Colonel John Coke at Mrs. Warner's house in Surry Street in Arundell Buildings in the Strand, in London—free, free.

I have received orders from Mr. Davis, the agent for the regiment, to pay the two troops at Darby 280*l.*, which I have done, and taken Captain South and Lieutenant Mylward's receipt for it: so that the two troops are paid to Saturday the 23rd instant, which then is a month since they came to Darby. I have charged a bill for 100*l.* upon you at ten days' sight, payable to Mr. Thomas Chambers. I shall charge no more of you without order, but shall draw upon Mr. Davis, if you think convenient. I have drayne [drawn] in all as much money as comes to 350*l.*, and paid 280*l.*, so that I have 70*l.*, a week's pay, in my hands, which I shall keep till I receive further orders.

1688–9, February 21. Whitehall.—Le Marechal de Schomberg to Lord Cavendish.

My Lord,—His Majesty having occasion to employ his forces in present service, commands me to signify his pleasure that your Lordship cause a punctual account to be returned upon your honour of the effective numbers of the several troops of the Regiment under your Lordship's command, and of the condition and readiness they are in for a speedy march. Whereof his Majesty expects that your Lordship take especial care that a true information be given by the next post upon pain of his Majesty's highest displeasure. I am, my Lord, your Lordship's most humble servant, Le M^{al} de Schomberg.

COKE MSS.

1688-9, March 7.—John Whitton, sword cutler, at the Sword and Helmet, against the May Pole, Strand, London.

Sold to Colonel Coke.

	£	s.	d.
A steel horseman's sword with a rich gilt handle -	2	16	0
Two troop swords for servants - - -	1	0	0
Sixty horsemen's ditto, and brass handles, at 5s. per piece - - - -	15	0	0
A horseman's sword for a servant - - -	0	10	0
	19	6	0

1688-9, March 12.—Sam. Hawker to Deprepetit.

Received of Mr. Prepety 45 cloaks, 45 carrabine belts, 45 shoulder belts, bitts and furnitures, 33 hooses, 48 holster caps, 48 buckets, boots, 29 pairs, gloves, 46 pairs, 53 cases pistols, 53 pairs of holsters, and colours staff, 30 hilts of swords, 53 carrabines.

1688-9, March 20. Sleaford. [No signature, no address.]—There is subjoined to the letter: "This was written to the Mayor of Lincolne by Mr. Edward King, a deputy-lieutenant for the county of the same."

Sir,—Yesterday between five and six of the clock the King's own Regiment of Dragoons met about six hundred of the Marshal Schomberg [late Dumbarton's] Regiment at Spanby Hedge upon Swaton Common. They drew in a body into a half moon, and placed four field pieces they had in the middle, which the King's party seeing they wheeled off to the rear of the Scotchmen, who not being able to turn their cannon quick enough, they laid down their arms, was taken prisoners, and sent to Falkingham Church. A party of about 40 or 50 of Scotch were sent hither to provide quarters for the rest: they took the Church and laid in straw and bespoke victuals for the whole. About four this morning about three score of the King's party came hither, lighted at the town end, came up a foot to their guard, who was surprised: but a serjeant drew at a cornet that led the King's party, upon which the cornet shot him into the neck, another killed, and two more mortally wounded. The rest are gone prisoners to their party in Falkingham Church.

1688-9, March 23. London.—Robert Davies to the Honble. Colonel Coke (in duplicate—addressed to Nottingham and Newark respectively).

Yours of the 18th came to my hands but yesterday, the adjutant being with me at the same time. I had before that been pressing for money for the subalterns, but the orders for marching being so sudden, I was told 'twas impossible to return money so speedily as to be serviceable for the paying off the quarters; and likewise that the colonel or agent did usually advance money upon such sudden occasions; which I am ready to do if required. And the muster being so near, Mr. Toll thinks it not worth the while to give the Lords of the Treasury any trouble for so short a time. I have this day received a week's subsistence, being 210*l.*, which I shall pay in to your order. But Captain Charlton had 100*l.* of me last week, which I must desire him now to repay at quarters, for I had returned his troop's subsistence before to the quarters. Ammunition will be provided before orders come for to march for Ireland. Sir, I shall be sure to be very careful in anything you command me.

1689, March 25.—Robert Wright to Mr. Prepetit at his quarters.

Not long after you was gone out of town Benjamin Sutton came hither, but unhappily missed of you, which hath occasioned him this further journey for to further offer his service to his captain whom he is very loath to leave, having so many acquaintances in the troop. If you could do him the favour to acquaint the Lieut.-Colonel that, if he have a spare horse, he would be pleased to mount him. Benjamin will pay 5*l.* in hand and the rest in as short time as any will under the same circumstances. However I will see it paid myself before the captain shall be a loser. He hath a great mind to go, and I hope the Colonel will have some respect, both as he was the most early comer into the troop, and his father an old tenant of my Lord Devonshire. If he cannot be mounted at present, pray give him his furlough with him, till further order, and provision made to indemnify him from his master, for he was an apprentice.

1689, April 1.—J. Deprepetit.

An Account of the Troop at Newark.

Edward Smart.	Richard Ing.
Thomas Potter	Richard Bret.
Stephen Shepherd.	William Niceby.
Henry Barwell.	Thomas Swean.
Paul Carter.	John Rivington.
Jacob Rowe.	Henry Deakins.
Isaac Sharloe.	Samuel Pegg.
Samuel Barnett.	Villers Brooksby.
John Power.	William Baker.
Stephen Smedley.	John Sanders.
Samuel Buxton.	James Fox.
Joseph Dudley.	John Bagnell.
Thomas Jobert.	Thomas Absolom.
Charles Freeman.	Joseph Sutton.
Henry Doubleday.	Henry Ash.
Robert White.	The two Trumpets.
Benjamin Sutton.	Corporal Lawe.
John Hawk.	Corporal Pettyford.
Israel Straton.	Corporal Marshall.
Robert Hall.	Mr. Thompson, Mr. Prime's friend, are not come up to their colours.
Jervis Beresford.
John Milward.
Slater Bradford.

	£	s.	d.
Paid to the carrier from Derby to Newark -	0	16	0
For a barrel of ale and two lbs. of tobacco given to the people the day of the crownation (April 13) -	2	17	0

Names of other officers in the regiment—

Captain Tho. Chapman.	Captain Charlton.
Captain Richard Atkins.	Captain James Wright.
Captain Phi. Prime.	Cornet Thomas Cholmondeley.
Captain Lord Cholmondeley.	Cornet Pope.
Captain Purey Cust.	Cornet Richard Sale.

1689, April 10. York.—Cornet Richard Pope to Colonel John Coke at Mrs. Warner's in Surrey Street in Arundel Buildings.

I hope you received my letter and the roll by the last post. Being we could not procure any marching money at Newark, I sent to Mr. Allestry for 50*l.*, which I received yesterday by Slater Bradford. He told me he could not procure any money toward his horse, and desired that he might have his discharge, which I have given him, and mounted H. Doubledy upon his horse. I gave you an account in my last, that Doubledy's father had laid down 10*l.*, and that John Millward desired to go home to fetch the 10*l.* he promised you. He brought it last night, and hath the same horse he rid before. I wrote to you in my last of one Taylor: he hath a good horse, and is not willing to serve in any other troop. We have our full complement beside, but he told me, if I would write to you, he would bear his own charges till I received an answer. The horses are all very well, except two which have sore backs.

COKE MSS.

1689, April 13.—Receeived then of Lt.-Colonel Coke the sum of twenty-five pounds nine shillings for the subsistence and clearing the quarters of the party that came with the prisoners from Lincoln. I say received by me Robt. Norton.

1689, April 13.—Cornet Richard Pope to Colonel John Coke.

I wrote to you from Doncaster and York by Captain Palmes. Doubledy's horse is the only one that failed in this march: we were forced to leave him at Boroughbridge, and Swain to look after him. Swain came back this night: he saith the horse is very well recovered, but not fit to travel. The rest are all very well after their march. There is 37 men here, beside Doubledy that hath no horse here, and the two at London, John Sutton and Mr. Shepard, that are not yet come, make up one more than our complement, but he will bear his own charges till I hear from you. I suppose you have had the good news of the King and Queen's being proclaimed in Scotland on the 11th instant.

(1689), April 13. Doncaster. — Captain Roger Pope to Colonel John Coke, a Member of Parliament at Westminster.

I was in hopes to have seen you at London when I was there about ten days since, but you were not then come to town. I heard at Derby your regiment was gone to Newcastle, whither we are marching. I have been persuaded by all my friends to quit, having two captains put upon me, though I engaged the whole troop but three for our present King's service. Was it not at this juncture I could not bear such hardship, but as I cannot with any honour quit, so I had rather serve in any other regiment, especially in yours, if it was possible. If I do not hear of your coming to Newcastle, I will give you the trouble of a letter from thence. I am, Sir, your most obliged kinsman and servant.

(On the back of this letter is written the following by Colonel John Coke.)

"That by an Adress upon this present debate it be humbly represented to his Majesty that if he think fitt to enter into a War with F. the house will give him such assistance in a Parlimentary way as shall enable him to go through with the same."

1689, April 19.—R. Davies to Lieut.-Colonel Coke at Mrs. Warners in Surry Street.

I have been so very busy all this week that I have not had one minute's time to wait upon you with the accounts of the regiment, as I intended. On Monday last I was forced to attend my Lord at Hampton Court. On Tuesday the King dined with my Lord at Roehampton. On Wednesday several of the officers left word at my Lord's that they dined at Pontacks whither I followed them in hopes to have met you there too. Yesterday to Hampton Court again. Each time it was near eleven at night ere we returned. I find it very difficult to leave my Lord in the morning; so that if you will give me notice where I shall wait on you in the evening, I shall be ready to give you a full account of my business. In the meantime I have here enclosed a short particular of what subsistence I have already paid.

[No enclosure with this letter.]

1689, April 21.—Major Charles Fitzwilliam to Colonel Coke at his lodgings at Mrs. Warners in Surrey Street.

I was this morning to receive my Lord Devonshire's commands for the regiment. He made no mention in the least about the Agency, and was very angry with him when I told my Lord we were unprovided of a surgeon, my Lord losing the opportunity of having the best in England for his regiment. You was mentioning that you might have thought some time or other of quitting, and if it were necessary a letter of attorney might in that case be drawn under my hand and seal to bring in the Agent. I told you I would find how my Lord Devonshire was disposed in it, and accordingly when I was with him this day I told [him] if it should so happen your occasions would not at some time or other permit you to march, that if you should then quit, I then might expect to come up. He very readily said, I should succeed if you laid down . . . If you will send the form of it by the next post to me at Stamford, where I shall stay two days, I will send it up signed and sealed, as you are pleased to have it; but this I believe will not be necessary, if you continue in, but I will do as you will have me. Be pleased to let me have your further orders for the regiment. I am very sorry that I have not time enough to take my leave of you, and receive them from your mouth. The bearer hereof is Mr. Robert Clerke, a surgeon, who is desirous to undergo any examination of an able surgeon. He is a stranger to me but seems an ingenious person. If you cannot get one, pray let any able surgeon you have examine, and if he can provide well for himself, and if you believe he may do our business, we may venture at him. But it will be absolutely necessary we have one speedily. Sir, I hope you will pardon me that I have no time to wait on you. Pray, Sir, do not [let] this surgeon hold you in suspense: if he can[not?] provide himself of things, get another if you can. I forgot to mention that Mr. Davies tells me the subsistence for the regiment that was stopped in Mr. Toll's hands will be paid elsewhere: and we shall not get it so readily, if you do not send it to him and secure it to you.

1689, April 25.—Colonel John Coke to Captain Cust at his quarters at Newcastle-upon-Tine.

I received yours of the 16 of this month. There is no news here but the accident of Mr. Temple drowning himself. The Major is upon his road towards you, and I suppose will reach you about the first or second of May. In the meantime I desire you will not offer to stir upon any account without such orders as will justify you in it; which is all from him that is in haste and your humble servant. Davies is out of the Agency.

[1689], May 14.—Lieutenant R. Pope [to Colonel John Coke].

I read your letter to the Major. We received 35*l.* of Captain Palmes at York: 10*l.* of John Milward: 10*l.* of Henry Dubleday: 50*l.* of Mr. Allestry: and 96*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* here. We have cleared the troop to the 5th of this month, as will appear by the roll here inclosed. Those men that have not signed it are quartered out of town. If you please to send me word how the account stands between Smedley, Swain, and the rest that ride your horses, I will endeavour to be of service to you in it. The rest of the money the quartermaster will give you an account of the next post. Cornet Cholmondeley has left us: he owes the quartermaster, Prepetet, 5*l.*, which he promised to pay you at London: he desires you to acquaint the agent to stop it: Captain South and Lieutenant Prime having done the same.

1689 ["86" by mistake], May 14. Newcastle.—Major Charles Fitzwilliam to Colonel John Coke, to be left at the door of the House of Commons—frank.

COKE MSS.

Yours to me found me but just arrived here, by reason I was a little ill upon the road, staying three days at York. We are all concerned that you have left us. I have spoke to your Cornet to give you an account of your troop from the 1st of April to this time as you direct. As to what is in the troop that may be fit for me, I will see and pay you for, if I am to have it. I do not observe that the trumpeters have any coats in the regiment, for I drew them out yesterday. I received a letter from Mr. Davies who desired me to certify to my Lord that the regiment was subsisted to the 5th of May: and upon enquiry I find none but your troop is subsisted so long, and that neither if you have not received 50*l.* that he took up upon your tenants (I think he says) for the use of your troop, and none of the rest any: So I desired to be excused from certifying anything. He does not mention anything in his letter of your resolution. I cannot believe my Lord designs it, if you quit, for anybody else; which makes me wonder Davies takes no notice of it . . . I should have informed you that here happened a scurvy riot amongst the mobier of this town. Last Saturday night they . . . and pulled down the statue of the late King Jeames in the market place erected by a Popish Mayor, with this inscription (or the like). "The statue of the first Catholic King erected by the first Catholic Mayor." Upon the soldiers marching hither it was blotted out. Since the writing of this and sending the rest of my letters away, I am informed the Mayor and Aldermen have sent to the Members of the House to complain of this, as instigated by the soldiers and officers: and that there came a great many blue coats with their carbines, with an intention of furthering the riot. The Adjutant 'tis true met them coming over the bridge with their carbines, a great way from the market place; demanding whither they were going in that manner, they answered they had heard there was a hubbub, and that some of their fellow soldiers were abused. He answered there was no such thing, and bid them go back quietly to their quarters, which they did. Betwixt nine and ten, as I was going to my lodgings, I passed through the market place, and, inquiring the causing of the rout, was informed they had pulled down the statue. I went immediately to see if there were any soldiers amongst them; and upon the honour and faith of a Christian, I found two blue coats only standing by with the spectators, who upon seeing me went home quietly to their quarters. The horse itself they had not then pulled down. The rabble continued up two hours after, who brake several of the disaffected people's windows in this town, as there are a great many in this town to the present Government. I sent my servant twice to see if any soldiers were amongst them, blue coats or others, who still brought me word there was none. This is upon my honour the truth, which if there be occasion, I desire and beg of you you would certify to the House.

1689, June 24. Shingle Hall.— to Colonel John Coke.

At the election at Darby laid out for Mr. John Coke, the Conventioner.

	£	s.	d.
As appears by Mr. Francis's bill - - -	17	11	7
Mr. Bagnold - - - - -	5	7	6
Mace bearer - - - - -	1	1	6
Bearers - - - - - -	0	5	0
Surveying Gorstey Leys - - - -	1	6	6
Allowed to be due -	25	11	9

[Colonel John Coke was elected for Derby Borough in the Convention, January 1688–9.]

1689, August 13. Kendal.—Colonel Charles FitzWilliam to the Hon^ble John Coke to be left at M^rs Warner's house in Surry Street near the Maypole in the Strand, London.

I hope you will pardon me that I have not long since answered yours sooner, which I received at Newcastle. A dangerous indisposition which I have heard you have had of late, and a very ill health I have enjoyed this six weeks has prevented my paying my respects to you. We are now daily expecting our orders from the Duke of Schombergh either for embarking at Whitehaven, or for being commanded to Chester or for Scotland. Therefore 'tis but just I acquaint you with the state of the troop you are pleased to resign. I received it according to my commission, and very full. I found in it a great many horses you had bought, but cannot part with them or allow for them for these reasons. First the Captains (as they informed me) had double subsistence for their troops from the 1st of January last to the 22nd or 23rd of that month, and that they were subsisted as full troops. Then that the King did allow them as such without mustering to the 1st of May; giving by that advantage allowance to complete their troop. And our officers, Captain Palmes for one, owns they have got money by this allowance, and he has an excellent good troop. Then they say there is some of the country money in your hands, which was to have been for the use of the regiment, out of which you may pay yourself for the expenses of your troop. Sir, the consideration of these things made me apply myself to my Lord Devonshire at Newcastle, and all the officers were bye, being willing to do justice to yourself and the regiment. It was concluded the horses were neither yours nor mine, but the King's, and by him paid for: and when once mustered going on immediate service, they could not be parted with. Therefore 'twould be very hard upon me to pay for what I cannot myself be allowed for. Then the officers informed me further that the trumpeters' coats colours and banners are paid for out of the Colonel's pay, and been dead pay, which is not deducted or paid for as yet. As for the trumpets I will write to Mr. Davies or our agent to pay what they cost you to whomsoever you shall order it. I hope, Sir, for these reasons you will not think yourself hardly dealt with, especially now we are gone upon service. And believe me in what I am capable, Sir, your affectionate humble servant.

1689–90, March 18. London.—William Hale to John Coke at his house at Melbourne near Derby. Derby Bagge.

I suppose Mr. Sion has informed you that I designed for a faculty for the seats in Thornby Church, built by Sir Thomas Leventhorp, which is true: and in order thereunto I had an intimation read publicly in the church: upon which Mr. Sion I understood laid immediate claim to them on your behalf, which was a surprise to me, not dreaming, no, not in the least, that you valued them or ever designed (having stood so long unused) to sit there. I had no sooner knowledge of what Mr. Sion had done, but I immediately on my own accord went to Doctors' Commons, and acquainted them what claim you laid to them, so fair and civil was I. I would by no means disoblige any person, much less a gentleman and a neighbour too. Had Mr. Sion been so ingenuous as to have writ to me instead of writing to my Lord of London, I would 'a stopt the proceedings myself without any more adoe. About a week since I wrote to Mr. Sion and desired him to acquaint you with the whole concern. But now since that, 'tis I understand my Lord of London's desire that I would write to you and acquaint you what I've done, that we may not have any disagreement. I desired liberty to sit in the seats, which cannot be any disadvantage to you, neither will you be ever the more debarred from sitting in them yourself, when it shall happen that you come to the church. The request I take to be modest, and I no ways desire to hinder you the use of them, whensoever you have occasion. But farther I have orders to acquaint you that Mr. Kiffin defies us both, and says the seats are his, and will maintain it. We therefore stay to hear your answer to know what you are willing to do, or whether you acknowledge Mr. Kiffin's propriety. I was desired to acquaint this much, and in my Lord of London's name. If you have the convenience of sending by the post, direct to me at the 3 Black Lyons in the Old Balye at Mr Bradfords an Apothecary; or send to Mr Sion and he may take care of it.

COKE MSS.

1690, July 3. Derby.—J. Adderley to the worthyly honored John Cooke Esquire at Melbourne.

By this day's post I received the inclosed which I humbly present unto you by the bearer. I had waited on you myself but that I must attend the mustering of Captain Leveningham's troop this day. I received an account by the letter in which the deputations were inclosed that they had an account at Court at seven of the clock in the afternoon on Tuesday last that the fleets were engaged, since when they have had no further account.

The Deputy Lieutenants that have received their deputations are—Anchitill Gray Esq., Sir Henry Every, Sir Paul Jenkinson, Baronets. Henry Leveningham Robert Willmott Henry Cavendish Esquires.

Commissions sent by this post for Sir Philip Gell, Baronet, Sir Gilbert Clarke Knight, John Coke, William Eyre Esquires.

The days already appointed for the mustering the Militia of this County in distinct troops and companies are.

This day Captain Leveningham's troop at Derby.
Tomorrow Scarsdale troop at Ashbourne—not officered.
Saturday next at Bakewell Captain Wright's company.
Monday next the Scarsdale company at Chesterfield—not officered.
Wednesday next at Derby Captain Gilbert's company.

And by orders of the Lords of the Council and the Lord Lieutenant are to meet again within three weeks for four days, at both which it would be necessary three deputy lieutenants should be present.

1690, September 30. London.—Alexander Sion . . . . endorsed by Thomas Coke "Mr Sion's letter and pretensions."

I was six years Mr Coke's chaplain and he was pleased to allow me thirty pounds a year . . . four and thirty pounds is due to me. I desire his trustees to consider of it, and to pay it if they have power. If not, I would not have Mr. Coke troubled with it, and I desire the thing to be let alone. Please to direct to me, to be left at the George, at Buntingford, Herts.

Bought in London for Mr. Coke by his order and sent down for him in June 1690.

Mariana's History of Spain 2 vols. - - -	2	0	0
Covarrubias his Spanish Dictionary - - -	1	10	0
A Spanish Bible - - - - - - -	2	3
. . . .
The Wonders of the Peak - - - - -		1	0
A box full of colours for his son - - - -	1	0	2
	7	16	2

Alexander Sion.

(1694.) Paper indorsed by Vice Chamberlain Coke "The Princess of Denmark's letter to the King upon the Queen's death." COKE MS

I beg your Majesties favorable acceptance of my sincere and hearty sorrow for the great affliction in the losse of the Queen and doe assure your Majestie I am as sensibly touched with this sad misfortune, as if I had never been soe unhappy as to have fall'n into her displeasure. It is my earnest desire that your Majestie would give me leave to wait upon you, as soon as it can be with noe inconveniency to you, or without danger of increasing your affliction, that I may have an opportunity myselfe—not only of repeating this, but off assuring your Majestie of my reall intention to omitt noe occasion of giving you constant proofs of my sincere respects and concern for your person and interests, as becomes &c.

1695–6, January 21. Chartley.—Honble. Robert Shirley to Thomas Coke. I must agree with you that Wit and Sense seem this winter to have suffered an eclipse, and the dramatic writers more especially have showed how little they consulted either. I do assure you, I have not of late met with more of both than in your ingenious diverting letter to me, so that I am satisfied Wit is not retired out of town, but has only forsaken the stage. We that live in these northern parts are forced to range over fields and woods to find subjects of diversion, for in the frozen season of the year, there is nothing that is more so in the country than conversation. In my last ramble, either my own innate fancy, or the aversion I had to see such plays wrote in English as would hardly bear the reading, made me imagine I met with one of the Muses that had left the town, and by her discourse seemed to be Patroess of Dramatic Poetry. You know, Sir, to meet with a Nymph in the desert was no rarity in some countries heretofore, but yet I vow and swear they are very scarce now. Methought after some small questions had passed between us, I asked her the occasion of her leaving the town, to which she made me this sudden answer:—

> Neglected Wit is silent at a time
> When puns, or bombast, stuff each doggrill rhyme.
> In comic strain when they'd describe a fool,
> The author proves the only ridicule.
> In tragic verse while others fain would boast,
> Landing some thousand Romans on the coast,
> In what they would express themselves are lost,
> Make Romans cowards, and make English great,
> And make Bonduca valiant, to be beat.
> Would Congreve or would Blackmoor now engage,
> They might with manly thoughts reform the stage:
> Recall us Muses, and redeem the name
> Of Poets, prostitute to abject fame.
> Rather than influence to dull authors give,
> With banished virtue I'll for ever live:
> On wings of fame secure I'll upward fly
> And tempt the airy journey of the sky.

With that she vanished, and left me not a little surprised. But having recollected my thoughts, I was concerned to find her discourse carried much truth with it, which I could have wished had been as great an illusion as herself. This romantic poetical stuff, I am sure, stands in need of your pardon, but as it was designed for your entertainment, so if it contributes anything to your diversion it will answer the intentions of, Sir, your most obedient humble servant. Your remarks on Dennis's letter are so exactly true, that 'tis impossible for any one to make better, much less for me. As for Mr. Southern's play, I have not yet seen it, so that I cannot at present give you my thoughts on it. I am of opinion, would the House of Commons lay a tax on all such books as are lately printed and yet scarce fit to be read, they might raise his Majesty a considerable supply of money.

1696, March 28. London.—Robert Jennens to Thos. Coke (at Foremark.) I can't but pity your living, though I reap the benefit of it, for I dare swear your letter had not been so long, if London had been the place of writing. I find the manner of the country is wholly different from ours of the town; for husbands, instead of sticking close and speaking well of their wives, get as distant, and make use of the greatest satyre on those animals. Now, you are well acquainted with both the manners, and, therefore, I would fain know, which may be most agreeable to the constitution of man, or which conformable to reason, for whether they both jump in one. . . . All people are preparing or Newmarket, whither I shan't go. I have bought a pad, cost 28*l.*, his full value, because he has lost his pace, otherwise is very portly. No news but plotting, which public papers give the best accounts of.

1696, April 2. London.—Lieutenant Richard Pope to Thomas Coke at Foremark. . . . When I reflect I cannot wish you in town, for all diversion has left it since you went into the country. Everybody looks here with a face of business, and talks of nothing but news and politics, not so much as the renowned Cloe to be seen either in the park, her gilt coach, or play-house, where there has been two or three intolerable plays acted that had nothing to recommend them but their newness. I believe we shall embark in three or four days. If at your idle moments you will let me know how you pass your time here, you will extremely honour and oblige your most affectionate kinsman and humble servant ——. I have seen Mr. Davis several times; where he lives I know not. I believe he is no menial servant of my Lord Devonshire, but whether he protects him or not, I cannot tell.

1696, April 5. London.—Lieutenant R. Pope to Thomas Coke at Newmarket. Mr. Davis is one of the Commissioners, or something belonging to the office for regulating Hawkers and Pedlars, which is kept at Tower Hill; he lodges in Leicester Fields, but does not appear often in public. I find by the accounts of our regiment, that Mr. Davis has 70*l.* due to him as cornet in it. I told Colonel Coote he owed you above 100*l.*, which was your father's pay when Lieutenant Colonel: he said, if you desired it, he would put a stop to the payment of it. If you write to me direct to Bicester in Oxfordshire, for I shall go down in two or three days.

1696. May 26. London.—Lieutenant Richard Pope to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place. We embark to-morrow at four of the clock, at the Red House near Deptford, on board a ship called the Robert and George, William Arnold master. If you please to send the gentleman you spake of, I will take all the care f him that's possible, and get his horse shipped, if there be any possibility of doing it.

1696, July 6. Oxford.—John Coke to Thomas Coke at his lodgings over against the Golden Head in Greek Street, Soho, London. I don't think of going into Derbyshire till the beginning of September, at which time, as I remember, you said you should be there. . . . Mr. Dalby, by the Bishop of Winchester's interest keeps his fellowship. . . . There has lately been a great drinking bout at Abington. J. Stonehouse, 'tis feared, has thrown himself into a deep consumption by it. I wish you a pleasant journey.

1696, August 8.—Alice Coke to Thomas Coke.

Dear Brother,—We had not the satisfaction of hearing of you till last Tuesday. I have heard a thousand things since you went concerning your journey. Some fancy it was no further than a private lodging in town upon some secret design, because Jack Gardiner was seen in town a good while after you left us. Others again say that your seeing the country is to spend this part of the summer with some of the sisters of your society in Suffolk. All these I conclude to be lies that it pleases people to invent, now they have nothing else to do in this long vacation. Whenever I am asked, I say, as you told me, that you are soberly going to see the north part of England, and intend to be back again in September. Another thing that I almost forgot to tell you is that Jack Gardiner was seen ushering two galloping ladies into a wood near Rochester, humble servants of his own I guess; for I believe if they had belonged to any of your company, they would have been so civil as to have provided them some better accommodation than only one servant, and that in your livery, which is so easily known at a distance too, and by that he was known here. My brother and sisters give their service to you. Sister Betty has received the money you gave order for. She is not very well at present, therefore she is sending for Mr. Bayly to be blooded, to prevent a fever that is hereabouts. I don't know whether I am not going a journey with my cousin Musters for a fortnight, only of pleasure. If I could hear from you once more before I go, I should go with a much better heart; or if in our rambles we should meet on a sudden, it would be best of all. Dear brother, I wish you a great deal of real pleasures, and none deceitful.

1696, August 14. London.—Francis Hopegood to Thomas Coke, chez Messrs. Scharenborg & Francq à Anvers.

We wanting three mails from Holland I have not by me any of yours to answer. . . . Mr. Fisher has sent me up by Ashby Carrier another hundred pounds in gold for your account. Truly I think he does miracles, considering the scarcity of money. . . . Your next drafts on me may be at ten or fifteen days sight . . . there is no reason you should allow so long time when your money lies dead in my hands. I have already signified to M. Meulenaer that if you should desire to pass your bills on me at less than 2 usance to comply therewith. . . . Esquire Bill [Gresley] of Drakelowe went a wooing into a far country, but his mistress was not much smitten with either his phiz or beau mecne: however he made shift to captivate the heart of a widow. I know not who this venturesome woman is, but they say she has 250*l.* p. a. jointure, and 2,000*l.* stock, and seven children, but all provided for. The knight and his lady are much against it. The town very empty and no sign of money anywhere, but at the Bath and Tunbridge where the ladies shake the elbow. . . . We have had very fine weather for the week past, and great hopes of a plentiful harvest, so that the farmer already begins to complain that corn will be too cheap. . . Just now I receive a letter from Sir Nicholas with the following relation of the Squire's courtship, and that uncle R. B. [Robert Burdett] is going with him to see his mistress: vizt. the gentleman with the handwhip begad was motioned to a virgin lady in Shropshire: he went and liked her, but she did not like him: so an elder sister of hers, a widow, told her if she would not have him, she would: to which the Squire agreed. But not to the liking of his parents, which gave him much disturbance, and in his language said "Kill mother begad, zuns shoot her"; which so terrified his mother that she was fain to get away to Burton to her daughters; but the knight errant is resolved and says "Zuns will have her and that quickly too, for hunting is coming in and then cannot awhile." This is something like the boot hawker in the Lancashire Witches.

1696, August 16. Oxford. — John Coke to Thomas Coke at Messrs. Scarenborg and Francq, in Antwerp.

I hope by this time you have almost wearied yourself with rambling, and begin to think of home. If you abscond much longer I will go into the country to take possession. My sister Betty sets out for Rutlandshire next week; she designs to go to Foremark for a little while. I designed to have taken leave of Mother University within week, but that my sister Alice told me that she and my cousin Musters would come and see me, if I would stay a fortnight. I shall go from hence to Derbyshire. I will make bold to send for your horses if you dare venture them such a journey.

1696, August 24. Astead.—Francis Hopegood to Thomas Coke, chez Messrs. Scarenborg & Francq à Anvers.

I was on Wednesday last at Parslows, where I met Sir Thomas Fanshaw who begins his journey on Thursday next for Rutland, accompanied with my Lady and your sister Betty. Your sister Alice was gone a progress with Mr. Musters and his lady, a maid, and one Mr. Isham: the men in a calesh and two horses, and the women in a coach and four. Their first day's journey was to Guilford, and so to the sea coast. . . . . Having formerly advised you of the departure of John Gardiner with yours and Jennens's horses on 1st of this month, hope they may be with you long ere this. I find there are more butterfly armies besides K. J. I wont say 500*l.* may purchase the ready in Lombard Street, but I believe 5,000*l.* would set it hard. I am sure we are all very bare, and don't perceive the least increase of N. M. I know a very eminent merchant, and a senator too, was obliged not long since to sell a Bank bill for 12½ p.c. loss, to procure money before he could send his maid to market to provide provisions for his family. . . . . At a pretty house in this parish has for six months past lodged a gentleman-like sort of man, with a pretty young woman, and without any other servant than one maid. Nobody knows who they were, nor from whence they came, more than from London: nor what their names were, for they went by none, real or sham. What was the fancy, I can't tell; my spark and his dear Phillis, who they say is young and pretty, were without the least interruption, but fortune at last playing the jade, yesterday morning came down one of the King's messengers with a warrant to apprehend her for a plotter in woman's clothes, and accordingly he took her away with him, but told the gentleman he had his liberty to go where he pleased. The happy man could not forbear smiling when he followed his dear. . . . He left word with the landlady to keep the lodgings for him, for that he and she would soon be back again. Some envious devil or other that envied both their happiness contrived this information surely to disturb them.

1696, September 14. —Alice Coke to Thomas Coke.

I think it is foolish impatience in me not to forbear writing to you when I have nothing to say, but tell you how long the time, since I saw you, seems to be, and how mightily I wish to see or hear from you.

I am like the rest of my sex; I can't forbear fancying my writing shows my respect and love, and when I think so I know I can never do that enough . . . Sister Fanshaw's groneing cake is made, and I hope you will be here before it is all eat. I believe your nephew or niece will be come in the world before you can hear from us again. Sister Betty will be in Darbyshire to morrow: your calash went for her on Saturday. My Lady Fanshaw has been very ill since she went into Rutland, but pretty well again now. Because my letter shan't be quite void of news, I will send word of an adventure that the wicked town says is true, that happened in Surry: I think lately, but possibly it might be before you went out of town, for I often hear things of halt year's standing, and take them for new. This is of a certain Countess that lives with her sister, and there is another pretty young lady that lives in the house with them. The lady of the house made a ball one night, where there was the Earl of Warwick and much more company, and as my story says my Lord Warwick made love to the young lady in that manner that it was said she was in great hopes of being Lady Warwick. But early in the morning after the ball this lady happened to go into the Countess's chamber, where she found the Count her lover and the Countess in bed and very fast asleep, both of them. This sight surprised her so much that she shrieked out so loud that the servants thought the house had been afire, and came all running into the room, and I suppose waked the two sound sleepers.

1696, September 18. Parsloes.—Alice Coke to Thomas Coke.

This morning at eight you had a fine lusty nephew brought into the world, and thank God sister Fanshaw is pretty hearty already. You may see in these three lines that by one night's conversation I have learned all the phrases of the good women, but in one night's sleep I hope I shall forget. By a letter from brother Jack out of Darbyshire I hear that you are expected there very suddenly. Remember that we have not had one line from you, since you went. I intend to chide you mightily, but I believe when I see you I shall quite forget to say it.

1696, September 18. Lothbury.—Francis Hopegood to Thomas Coke, chez Mons. Edward Browne à Rotterdam.

I have for this month past been at Astead, and indeed not very well, so came to town last night and hope you will excuse my brevity. At present I shall only advise the receipt of your kind letter from Loo, being glad you have met with so much diversion there. Your company is much enquired after here, as my uncle R. B. writes me, he having been lately a house warming at Packington, where was much company, and he says some that saw you in Flanders, but could give no account of your coming over. God send us a good and sudden peace, or else it will be impossible for us to subsist much longer without money, which is harder every day to come by. Please to give my service to your fellow traveller honest Jennens. . . . Dining last Friday at the Rooms in Queen Street with Messrs. Evans, Cheslin, Goodyeare and Goodfellow, upon the clearing of the steward's accounts, the traveller's healths went so often about, and I stayed out so late that truly I forgot to send this letter to the posthouse . . . On Sunday morning your sister Mrs. Alice sent us word by the post that your sister Mrs. Fanshaw was happily delivered of a son on Friday morning. . . . John Knight is lately returned out of Derbyshire, and tells of mighty feastings at Repton Park by the little Knight, at Swarston Bridge, and elsewhere. Squire Bill of Drakelow is married to the Shropshire widow. Lord have mercy upon her! Sure men are very scarce, for they say she is a comely woman, has wherewith to keep her clean, and her children provided for.

1696, September 23. Luffenham (Rutland). Elizabeth Coke to (Thomas Coke).

Dear Brother, I last week by the conveniency of the Celash (Caléche) saw my friends at Foremarke, and met brother Jack. Mr. Fisher paid me the other 20*l.*, which he said you had ordered him to pay, for which I give you many thanks. I suppose that before this you'll have heard the good news of our little nephew. It is resolved that we set forward towards home on Monday sevennight. I hope I shall hear of your welfare in Darbyshire, where you are much wished for. The gentlemen thereabouts have made mighty entertainments at their own houses, almost quite round. Signor Bill is married to a widow with seven children. Cousin Robert Burdett has been a manager in the business and they say he is married well.

1696, October 2. London.—Francis Hopegood to Thomas Coke at Rotterdam.

. . . At the request of Mrs. Ann Fanshaw and your brother and sister, I have represented you as godfather to your young nephew, who was christened last Sunday at Parslows by the name of Thomas, his other godfather was Sir Thomas. . . . as Sir Thomas had ordered the same, I have put you to the charge of three guineas for the midwife and the two nurses. . . . Most people now know where you are by information of some that see you in Flanders. Some fear you may fall into ill company: I tell those, the more you converse with them, the less you will like them.

1696, October 2. Ghant.—Lieutenant Richard Pope to Thomas Coke.

Dear Cousin, I was very ill of a fever (which has continued till within this day or two) when I had the happiness of receiving yours. I am extremely glad that you have spent so much of your voyage to your satisfaction. I do not doubt but you found Loo and Cleave as agreeable as the rest. I suppose you are now thinking of returning back.

(1696,) October 19. New College.—John Dalby to Thomas Coke at Mr. Hopegoods Merchant in Lothbury, London.

I have taken the best care in my power to preserve your books from injury, and your other effects were put into your brother's hands at Christ Church. . . . I could heartily wish your books were safely conveyed to you, in order to prevent those losses which might happen to you if I should die in the country. I am also desired by the College to inform you that your steward Mr. Fisher did not account for your chamber rent and battles. . . . I believe, Sir, you are so far sensible of our College customs as to know this to be the time when the accounts of the College books are brought before the officers.

1696, October 24. (Parslowes.)—Elizabeth Coke to Thomas Coke at his house at Mellbourn in Darbyshire. Darby bag.

. . . I distributed the ten pounds amongst the servants as you desired. I gave a guinea to Mr. Heath, the bailey, and half a guinea to the gardener: and sufficient left for the household servants. . . . My brother Fanshaw and I, and Sir Thomas's coach, escaped robbing very narrowly on Tuesday. The Barking coach, and Mr. Francho's being robbed, coming immediately after us. They took fourteen pound from the Jew, and his hat, coat and periwig, but left him others in their room. The widow Saunderson is at last come to town: and Mrs. Harbert is going to be married to a good honest drunken country gentleman. I know neither his name nor his country, but Sir Thomas Skipwith says it's a very discreet match. I'm half asleep.

(1696,) October 28. Staunton.—Honble. Robert Shirley to Thomas Coke at his house at Melbourne.

As you have extremely obliged me by the favour of both your last letters, so I should infallibly have returned you my very humble thanks for your first, but that I did not know whether it would come to your hands, by reason of your being upon your return of your journey into Holland. Your ode had so much the air and humour of the original, that I think it was extremely well expressed. Your ramble beyond sea was certainly very diverting, and could a hearty wish have done it, I should certainly have been often in your company: but a wife and family hold me fast at home. However I am just now setting out for a ten or twelve days ramble, after which is performed I fully intend to wait of you at Melburn, and entertain myself in your good company, which is at all times so agreeable to, dear Sir, your most obliged humble servant. I desire my humble service to your brother. I came here but late last night, otherwise you should have heard sooner from me.

1696, November 5. Parslow.—Alice Coke to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

My dear brother has so often forgiven my negligence that I still presume on his goodness, though in reality it should make me more diligent. I forbore a longer time in hopes of sending you some town news, but I can hear of none at all. I suppose the ball yesterday will afford matter of discourse for some time though I have not heard anything of it but that it was designed finer than any since this reign, and the Princess graced it with her own dancing. I sometimes long to be a moment or two invisible at Melbourn to see after what manner you two housekeepers spend your evenings. For the rest of the day I can easily imagine you don't want business to employ your time. As for the Doctor's part I am sure he won't be for going to bed with the sun. If you persuade him by your example to rise before it, you will do a great work. I suppose you have gained an absolute reputation of a sober country gentleman by this time, with rising early and hunting, and leaving the wicked world at this time of year, when every else is coming up to it as fast as they can. All here are your servants, and my brother Jack's, and desire their service to all at Foremark.

1696, November 9. Parslow.—Mrs. Mary Fanshaw to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

You may justly condemn my negligence, dear Brother, for not sooner giving you thanks for the favour of your company, when last with us, and the fine lace and chocolate you bestowed upon me. I have not yet heard enough of the ball to give you a particular account of it, only that it was fine, and the Princess danced the first dance, and his Majesty was extremely out of humour. . . .

1696, November 9. New College.—J. Dalby to Thomas Coke at Foremark in Darbyshire.

According to your order I have inclosed the particulars of your account. . . . I am obliged to my honoured good friend Mr. Cook for his kind wishes and concern for my health, as for all other persons wherein you have always so much obliged, Sir, your most humble servant. . . . The King is just now coming into Oxon, and is to be entertained in the Theater.

Mr. Cook's account for Battles - -	5	10	7	qr.
for Chamber rent - -	6	0	0
for the use of the College goods in your Chamber	3	0	0
	14	10	7	qr.
due to the Manciple -	5	1	7	ob.
Sum tot. -	19	12	2	ob. q^{r}.
your caution being deducted - -	10	0	0
remains due -	9	12	2	ob. q^{r}.

1696, November 12. (Parslowes.)—Elizabeth Coke to Thomas Coke, at Melbourne.

Not being willing to give any answer to so weighty a concern before I had your advice in it, I have sent you the inclosed. I confess the Esquire that is lately married in your country has performed so very ill already, that I'm a little startled; so that except you should persuade me violently, I'm fully persuaded I shall not desire to hear any more of it. We are very much obliged to you for letting us hear so often how your two housekeepers do: but as for idle Jack he has not said a word to us this two months, and so pray tell him.

1696, November 16. Parslow.—Alice Coke to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

Dear Brother. You are happy that you are quietly taking your recreation in the country, and only hear at a distance of tumults and bustles that are every minute in the town. Sometimes there's a report sent abroad that a hundred and twenty blunderbusses are ready charged to kill his Majesty, wherever he goes, but his good angel defended him from them all. Immediately upon this all the gates of the City are shut, and all that can't give an account of themselves are clapped up till they can, and then set at liberty again. A gentleman of this neighbourhood happened to be in town the night that this bustle was, and going to his inn so very drunk that he could not speak and therefore could not give an account of himself, was with his friend (that thought himself in better condition and so must see him safe in his inn) sent to a justice of peace, for suspected persons, but he discharged them only with making them pay sixteen shillings between them for swearing. Sometimes for three or four days there's mighty searching of houses for people that they say are lately come out of France: and some say they have found several of them, and some they can't find, and others that there's none to find. Thus everybody says a different thing, and nobody knows anything, but the want of money; and everybody agrees in that complaint. I was at London yesterday, and am so tired with hearing of nothing but disorders and tumults and hurrying into prison and letting out again that I almost made a resolution to go no more this winter. I believe I shall keep it till you come up, and no longer. I hardly heard the ball named while I was there. Mrs. Granville and Miss Crofts were the finest dancers, and my Lady Anne Popham the finest (but not at her own cost), except the Princess, was all I heard. . . .

1696, November 18. London.—Sir Gilbert Clarke, Knt., M.P. to Thomas Coke, at Melbourne, by Derby Bag, frank.

By the Votes you will see that there is a great majority who choose rather to be Courtiers than neglected country gentlemen. There is a Bill of Attainder brought in against Sir John Fenwick, because the inferior Courts would not try him for want of Goodman's evidence, who is gone away. This is not an usual sort of proceeding, and causes much debate. The House sat last night till after 10, at which time I came home to get my dinner. . . . I have a proposal to make to you when I see you from a person of great quality: and if I come down at Christmas, must ask you to slip to Chilcote, that I may discourse with you. And when I have told you my business, will advise you to think twice . . You are well employed in the country. I wish I might be so too.

1696, November 19. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke, at Melbourne.

If your weather in the country be like ours here, I can't but pity your melancholy retirement. We have two or three days together hard frosts, and then as much storms and violent rain, both great enemies to country diversions; and when you are deprived of them I fear your amusements are very indifferent from your country neighbours, a conversation a little out of their sphere having formerly diverted you. . . . Last Saturday I rode out my grey gelding with the King to Richmond a shooting, and by what I could judge of him by that small trial, hope may do me some service. The King liked him very well, and nobody despised him so much as myself; so I hope against the campaign he may sell. The King asked me where you were gone, and I told him into Derbyshire, presently after your arrival in England. Sir John Fenwick's bill of attainder has been twice read (notwithstanding what his counsel said, which was as much as possible and took two days) and ordered to be read a third time, so you may expect to hear very suddenly of his hanging or further confession. It was yesterday likewise voted that all clipped money between person and person should go for 5*s.* 2*d.* an ounce, and to the King 5*s.* 8*d.*, and old money unclipped should pass current, the one till the first of June, and the other till the first of July, and afterwards none at all to pass in payment but milled money: which makes one hope you won't find those difficulties in getting in your rents as otherwise you would have done, had the old money in general been condemned. We have been mightily alarmed with the news of the French fleet being abroad, upon which all the flag officers were despatched to go on board, but to-day they say 'twas nothing but St. Ubes fleet. There has been for four or five days together at the play house in Lincolns Inn Fields acted a new farce translated out of the French by Mr. Monteux called the Shame (Sham) Doctor or the Anatomist, with a great concert of music, representing the loves of Venus and Mars, well enough done and pleases the town extremely. The other house has no company at all, and unless a new play comes out on Saturday revives their reputation, they must break.

1696, December 1. (London.)—Sir Gilbert Clarke, M.P., to Thomas Coke, at Melbourne.

. . As to Sir J. F. (Fenwick's) business, I will give you my opinion and the reasons for it when I see you. I wish my Lord Huntingdon much joy of his son, and hope you were all merry then. . . . It's talked there will be an excise upon corn, cattle, and cloth, and a land tax, though not so great as formerly. It's what some people please, who have the power in their hands.

Coke MSS.

1696, December 17. Chartley.—Honble. R. Shirley to Thomas Coke at his house at Melbourne.

I am at a loss whenever I strive to make a sufficient return for all your favours, and I have only this left to hope, that you will favourably judge my imperfect endeavours to be such. The hounds you sent me are very acceptable, and your ingenious translation gave me great satisfaction, I shall punctually observe your commands in the not communicating it, though it is so well done that it needs not fear censure. I have here inclosed an old piece of poetry, made sometime since, upon the receipt of the Oxford verses sent me by my brother on that melancholy occasion; having nothing else of this kind at present to oblige you with, and therefore desire your acceptance of these.

1696-7, January 8.—Sir Gilbert Clarke to Thomas Coke in Pell Mell.

. . . I attended Sir Francis Burdet's corpse last Saturday night and Sir Robert Burdet is well . . . You should have directed yours to be left with the postmaster at Loughborough to be sent to Ashby de la Zouch.

1696-7 (January ?) 13. Chartley.—Honble. R. Shirley to Thomas Coke at his house at Melburn.

I received yours with great satisfaction by which I find you are returned into the country. I am very sorry I cannot wait upon you at Burton upon Monday next, because on that day I expect a friend here, and the latter end of the week I must attend my father at Staunton. But if possibly I can I will be with you at Burton on Tuesday night and spend the next day with you, which is I fear the most my occasions will at present give me leave. I heartily regret the whole week cannot be devoted to your good company, but hope to make it out another time. I am glad to find myself in one particular under the same circumstances with you, having some new thing upon the stocks, which when we meet and have time, we will if you please review together, all ceremony apart on both sides. I am, dear Sir, indebted to you in sending me so ingenious an account of Mr. Congreve's tragedy, which I hear on all sides far exceeded what the world expected from him in that part of dramatic poetry.

1696-7, March 16.—John Coke to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

I forgot to put you in mind to speak to my cousin Burdett about my cousin Musters's writings. My aunt desires they may be in your keeping. She never forgets to dun me for her daughter's and her husband's pictures, which are at Shingle Hall. Saturday a new farce was acted at the new house, which did not take. The Mourning Bride was acted till Saturday, and was full to the last. All at Parslowes were well on Saturday. I wish you good sport.

1696-7, March 24. Parsloes.—Alice Coke to Thomas Coke in Derbyshire.

Dear Brother,—You must expect no news from this part of the world [Essex] now but of the mighty plot, which thickens apace still, as they call it; and condemning and hanging every day for it. But for all the noise it makes it won't hinder the malicious town from talking of my Lord R——'s jealousy of his beautiful Lady, which they say thickens as fast as the plot . . . I am glad you got well to your journey's end and that you found my Lady and the rest of the family so well; and I wish the Squire all good success imaginable in his undertakings. I hope he never will have occasion to take the pains of riding those seven miles to try to save paying the tax of old bachelor again, but that he will do it more effectually near hand. I am afraid the clear air of Derbyshire is a little too sharp for my Lady his mother, and that makes her pipes so shrill. Therefore I might advise Sir Thomas that he would do well to bring her up to London, but because she has been so much used to the country, it would be convenient not to choose too close a place in the town. I can think of none so fit for her Ladyship as an apartment in some of the fine buildings in Moor Fields. They are as incredulous in these parts about your being married as they are with you. They say they never believe you could make such a fine chariot, if it was not so: and that neither my Lord Guilford's, Mr. Sherard's, nor Mr. Cooke's is near so fine, that are just now made or making for the same purpose. This is all the reason that I hear for the belief. . . My cousin Noel stays at Jenkins till Thursday come seven night; I send you word of it, in case you should intend to make a visit to her before you come to London again, that you might not lose your labour. We hear they have been in search for the Captain once or twice, but I hope he'll escape their hands.

1697, June 11. St. Barnaby's Day.—Alice Coke to Thomas Coke [in Holland].

Dear Brother,—I liked much better being disappointed of hearing from your own hands, and hearing by others that you was well, than to have had a letter from you dated from the King's Camp, before I had hopes of all actions being over, which is the news here. For I would not believe a thing, as would have given me so great disquiet, as the thoughts of your being in likelihood of danger, as long as I could make any pretence to myself that it was not so. I believe there is no life more pleasant to young men, that should be a little ambitious of honour, than the making campaigns, therefore I don't wonder at your doing it: but being this is one where there is none to be got, I hope we shall the sooner see you here; your company being the only thing that is wanting to make this country extremely pleasant. I give you many thanks for your care in sending to provide me a horse, but I believe I shall not make much use of it till you come. I shall go up to my sister Fanshaw for the time she lies in, and come down again with her. . . . I must beg of you to believe that I am sensible I have the best brother in the world. I can never do so much to serve him as he deserves or as is desired by your affectionate sister.

(1697), June 14. Parsloes.—Mrs. Mary Fanshaw to Thomas Coke [in Holland].

I can assure my dear brother that it was no small concern to us to hear that you were gone to the Camp, but hope you will soon come over again . . Cousin Lucy Leventhorpe is dead, and left brother John fifty pounds. Cousin Noell and all her company are gone to Lord Digby's. If you had been there the night before they went, you would have had some diversion, for a gentleman and a lady fell out at Ombre, and called bitch and jade, and she deserved to have her coats turned up. Pray do not speak of this, for it will be known from whence it came, and then I shall be scoured too. I suppose you may guess who they were. Sir Thomas Fanshaw hath a very ill cold . . . We have no chatting news that will diverting to you.

(1697), August 10. Jenkins.—Mrs. Mary Fanshaw to Thomas Coke at Melbourn, to be left at Willen Ferry near Luthborough.

Mr. Husbands saith the money wanting at Lancaster will be above ten pounds. I think the best way of sending it will be by Mr. Fisher, when he goeth as a witness for me. Pray let him have 15*l.* for me, or if you think that not a proper way, I will find some other way to have it returned. All here are very well and full of Lady Torrington's match. She hath, as I hear, made over most of what she is worth, to dispose of as she thinks fit. Lord Fanshaw goeth to-morrow for Tunbridge.

1697, September 10. Foremark.—Elizabeth Coke to Thomas Coke in Rotterdam.

. . If this paper has the good fortune to come to your hands, it is to tell you that brother Jack (thank God) is perfectly recovered, and able to ride a hunting in Needwood. And I am also to tell you that there is an appointment of your neighbours the foxhunters to meet in Needwood about this time three weeks, where your company amongst the rest is very much desired . . If your coming is not very quickly, sister Fanshawe tells me she must alter her resolution as to her coming into Derbyshire this year, because of its being so late for so long a journey. I will assure my dear brother I have not neglected writing to him, for sister Alice and I have writ very often, and I am sorry to hear by your last that they so often miscarry . . . Mr. Fisher goes to London next week, so by him I intend to send for some things which will be wanting at Mellbourn in the house against you come home, and we are now making provision in your cellar. My brother and I are now at Foremark and shall continue till we are so happy to meet you at Mellbourn.

1697, November 23. Brussels.—Lord Widdrington to Thomas Coke in London.

Last night was the first time your charming mistress made her appearance since your departure. Stanhope and I did both make her a compliment from you, which she received with a graceful smile, asking whether you did not come again. You must bring me over a great many things which I have promised to several ladies here . . . Let me hear where you lie in town, that I may direct my perriwig maker to you, he will give you a perriwig which you must do me the favour to bring over with you; also provision of volatile salt, which the ladies here are very fond of. Mademoiselle de Bergue's aunt, Chanoinesse of Mons, that came last to town, was married yesterday; and Mademoiselle Grimbergue, the other aunt, is to be married to the Comte de Soy. The family of Bergues is fallen out with Mademoiselle Milan: they hate her as much as I love her. Madame Valsassin goes to Paris in spring, and carries Mademoiselle Milan with her. They say Prince Chimay is to be made Grandee of Spain, and the Dues of Averay and of Aremberg are to have the Toison d'or. You should certainly have had some story of the Countess of Horn, if she had not been out of town ever since you went away. Last night Sir Francis Tempest, Stanhope, a Scotch gentleman and I myself, having drunk wine till four a clock in the morning, went and roused the people of the Chocolat house, and drank three bottles of Pericco apiece, except Sir Francis who after the second could no more . . . Stanhope in the middle of a harangue fell dead off his chair as if he had been shot; there he lay till five a clock in the afternoon, before he could possibly be wakened. The Scotch gentleman . . the next morning came and made me a visit being yet drunk.

1697, November 31. Brussels.—Lord Widdrington to Thomas Coke in London.

Since my last I have got a very particular acquaintance with your fair mistress' brother, so that I can visit there when I please. I shall do your affairs as well as I can. Pray make haste over that I may have the honour to introduce you there. To-night we have made a party of trainans, which I believe will be very diverting, for all the ladies of the town that can be there will not fail. If it succeeds you shall have an account of it in my next. Tell me positively whether you hold your resolution of coming over again or no. Stanhope presents his service to you, and sets forward for England to-morrow. The noble Colonel will give you a particular account very shortly. His quick passage to London and yours to Bruxells are the wishes of your friend and servant.

1697, December 7. London.—Mrs. Katherine Fanshaw to Thomas Coke.

I was sorry, Cousin, I could not give you an account of the house before you went. One of the trustees told me he had agreed with another man for it; but this day I found the way by another man underhand for 20*l.* to break that bargain. . . . I could not get time for your further approbation; so we are agreed upon the terms following. The term of the house is 52 years to come; the ground rent is 12*l.* a year, and the present tenant pays 52*l.* a year, so there remains 40*l.* a year besides the ground rent; which at twelve years purchase comes to 480*l.*, and so I have agreed, much ado, and I think very well, for twelve years purchase is very little in that place. There is only the 20*l.* over, which you said you were willing to give. The tenant is warned out against Lady-day. I shall have the writings to-morrow, which I will carry to one Mr. Butler, who is my counsel in all my business. . . . I have sent for a bricklayer that I know who to-morrow shall look it all over, to see that it is sound, and in such repair as is customary in such cases. The man has made me tell forty lies about it, and swear as many oaths, that if it were not for myself I should not have it. 'Tis really a very pretty house, and will be much more so if you will lay out fifty or sixty pounds upon it, in which you shall have the best assistance I can give you, and you will oblige me in a work I love very well; for you men are seldom very good at dealing with work folks. You and sister Betty will soon contrive about the furniture, when I tell you what the house is—two rooms on each floor, which is six in all, wainscoted from top to bottom; but I suppose you will hang the inward room one pair of stairs, whether you put a bed there or not. . . . For pewter I suppose you may find enough in your house at Melburn, that is old, broken, and out of fashion, to send up and change away for as much new as you will have occasion for here. . . . I am confident you will soon find the ease of having a house to yourself, though but a little one. I hope you will think I have made a good bargain for you, and whenever you have a mind to part with it, I will give you what it cost and thanks. . . . I shall think long till I hear from you that I have done well.

1697, December 9. Jenkins.—Mrs. Ann Fanshaw to Thomas Coke, at Melbourne.

I am glad to hear by your sisters that you are gone into Derbyshire, with a design to bring Cousin E. Coke up with you, if she be in a condition to come in a coach; if not I hear you intend to bring her in a litter, and that the doctor should come with her. She writes word her doctor says change of air will do her good, and though she be with very good friends yet I believe she would be very glad to be here. Though Dr. Coke may be a very good physician and friend, as I hear he is, it would be a great satisfaction to her friends here to have another doctor's opinion with his. I hope she may be able to come with you; but if she should not, I thought fit to put you in mind to desire the doctor to write her condition at large, how it began, and what it is at present, and what course he has taken with her; and bring it up with you, and show it to Doctor Ratcliffe, or some other good physician, as you think fit. Mrs. Hopegood is come to town and I am sure she will be ready to assist you in it. . . . I hear from Mrs. Burdetts to my cousins often, but she has my good wishes and prayers for her recovery; as also you have the same for your happiness in this world and the next from your friend and humble servant.

Coke MSS.

[On this letter Mr. Thomas Coke endorsed the following (among other) notes. Michaelmas 1696. Disbursements 1,474*l.* Receipts 1,776*l.* Remains 302*l.* Lady-day 1697. . . . . 1,481*l.* . . . 1,330*l.* Remains due 151*l.*]

1697, December 11. London.—John Coke to Thomas Coke, at Melbourne.

. . Yesterday the Commons in a Committee of the whole House went upon the matter of Supply and resolved, without dividing, that all forces raised since 1680 should be disbanded. To-day this resolution was reported to the House, and upon the previous question whether the resolution should be recommitted, the House divided. It was carried in the negative. Afterwards the House agreed to the resolution. The majority was but by forty; there was about 340 members in the House. I am satisfied now that my sister will not be able to come up this winter, so that I have resolved to come and see her. I think, if I can, to begin my journey on Monday in the Nottingham Coach, if I can have room there, but I must go into Hertfordshire and Essex first. I can't say all your friends in the army are well satisfied with the proceedings in the Parliament, though nobody talks but of allowing all the officers half pay.

1697–8, February 10. Melbourne.—John Coke to Thomas Coke at my Lady Derham's in the Pelmel, London.

My sister has consulted Doctor Coke, and the inclosed is her case, which she desires you to show to Doctor Gibbons. . . . We hunted a bag fox, and killed him within half a mile after we turned him out. My sister used to complain of a pain in her side a good while before she fell ill. The 8th of October was the first day she sent for Dr. Coke.

1697–8, March 2. (Foremark.)—Elizabeth Coke to (Thomas Coke).

I know my dear brother will be so charitable to impute my silence to my unableness at present for writing or anything else: but I still live in hopes it will not be long so, for I thank God I have continued rather mending than not, since my brother Jack left me. Though none can take better satisfaction than I in the conversation of so kind a brother as yourself, yet I beg you will in no way inconvenience your affairs upon my account, as to your coming sooner into the country than otherwise you would. As to my sister Alice who I understand has some thoughts of it, I leave the time to her own discretion and yours: for I shall not take anything as want of kindness that either she or my dear brother will do. I have not seen Dr. Coke since brother Jack did. When I have, you shall hear further concerning the advice of the physicians you was so kind to send me.

1698, April 6. Foremark.—Elizabeth Coke to Thomas Coke at Mrs. Hopegood's in Lothbury in London.

I hope my dear brother, if he does not design coming into Derbyshire, will let me know, that as soon as possible I can venture so far

I may put an end to the trouble I have been so long forced to give my Lady Burdett. The coldness of the season has prevented my recovering so fast as I was in hopes I might: but I do mend, though slowly; and every warm day gives me a great deal of ease, and when the weather is cold I find as much the contrary Mrs. Curzon gave me a great temptation to have ventured as far as Derby yesterday to have met them at Dr. Coke's: but it being cold, and I not so well as some days, I durst not venture upon the journey. My cousin Walter was there you may be sure, and danced with the ladies till late at night. Esquire Bill and his lady are in Derbyshire, and are daily expected here. He swears he has got "best best wife world. I took her down in her wedding shews (shoes ?) and the best in the world." The company that is in the country begins now to come abroad, and have many of 'em been here. My Lord Huntington was much frightened with a fit of the stone; and having eaten too much chocolate he, or a physician that he had in the meantime till Dr. Coke came, apprehended it was an appoplex: so was in all haste going to lay on three blisters, but deferred it till the lawyer had finished the will. In the meantime Dr. Coke came in and persuaded my Lord it was only the stone, gave him something proper, and the next day my Lord was as well as ever he was in his life. My paper is your friend and bids me conclude. Both the parcels of wine are come safe to Mellbourn, and set in the cellar as you ordered.

1698, May 25. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke at my Lady Dereham's near the Cocoa Tree in the Pell Mell, London.

My dearest Neighbour, Englishmen have always accounted that those travellers make the best use of their time abroad who learn by it to admire their own country so much the better as it really deserves: for that after tasting and touching at every foreign place a little, they can better judge the true advantages pleasures and profits of their natural soil. And you having made this good use of your travels, I cannot forbear letting you know how much pleasure I take in the contemplation of your designed journey to those noble regions whither you are bound [Bretby Park for his marriage to Lady Mary Stanhope]: wishing you all things necessary, your journey being something large and attended with hazard, as all great enterprises are. But that it may be fully recompensed, it is my prayer for all things to be therein prosperous and grateful, that the weather may be neither hot nor cold, the food and fruits ripe and delicious, that you may travel leisurely safe and secure, and having viewed in little all the world, you may sit down at last under your own vine, your children like olive branches, and be content. And now Sir, whatever else is good, great, happy, and desirable is wished for you in all sincerity.

1698, June 28. Beauford Buildings.—Edward Goudge to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

On Saturday the carpenters having put up good part of the frame of your building [in St. James's Place] some of the neighbourhood seemed to be much offended at it, and yesterday Mr. Stroud the bricklayer came to me from them to desire me to desist, otherwise they would run up a wall in the next garden to hinder your prospect. I told him you build out of necessity, not curiosity: and that we should have ten foot in our own ground to light us, notwithstanding his blind. However I condescended to the taking the carpenters from their work till I heard from you. In the meantime I will take as good advice as I can about it, but I cannot see what injury you can do your neighbours by your building, nor can I believe any man will be so mad as to lay out so much money as to build a wall before you to so little purpose.

Coke MSS.

1698. June 28. (London).—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke by Loughborough bag.

I have been this last week in close waiting. The inclosed has lain by for a week for which disappointment to you I could not hope for pardon, did not I believe that your new object at present effaces all impressions of the old. I believe I have told more lies for you than ever I did for myself, to give satisfaction as to your sincerity. It is answered, your action disproves me; but by the expressions and ruptures, which are to the degree of madness, convinces me that all is thought true. The inclosed will tell you more. The sin be upon you. In your letter of the 15th you show the prettiest notions and arguments for an Englishman upon the brink of matrimony that ever I heard. . . . Yesterday I sent twenty ounces of snuff and a bottle of Bergamot to Knights', to be forwarded to you; it cost 1*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.* I have not had time yet to inquire further about the Arab. The King has not declared his intention publicly, but we are very well assured he designs for Holland. I cannot learn whether I am designed for one, or not; I desire my stay only upon your account, that I may have the happiness of seeing my dear Coke very soon. If you are married I wish my Lady and you a great deal of joy.

1698, July 5. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke at the Earl of Chesterfields', near Burton.

The occasion of my silence was my being in waiting, for Kinsinton affords no more news than Darbyshire. . . . My Lord Townson two days since was married, and last night kissed his Majesty's hand. The King this day prorogued the Parliament. The East India Bill is passed for a new Company; and the smugglers of French goods are fined 19,000*l.* His Majesty designs for Holland in about a fortnight. I am appointed for one to go along with him, and am undone for a couple of horses. The inclosed I received yesterday from Kinston; the author will never believe a man again. My intrigue is quite off, and I am satisfied she is a jilt: and that vanity more than love made her give me encouragement. I am sorry I can't have the happiness of seeing you before we go. My service to my Lady Mary and all friends. Mr. Goodfellow values the Arab at 140 guineas; I believe he would take pounds. He assures me there are no better eyes in the world, and I dare take his word.

1698, July 9. London.—John Coke to Thomas Coke at the Earl of Chesterfield's at Bretby.

Mr. Nicholas Harding informed me yesterday that your neighbours in St. James's Place complain of those buildings which you are a going to make there. One Mrs. Stroud is the most concerned: she says that the apartment which you are a going to make up will command her house and garden; she threatens that if you go on as you design, she will run up a wall 25 or 30 foot high, which will quite spoil that little prospect, which you have, and very much darken your rooms. . . Mr. Harding told me he had desired Mrs. Stroud not to do anything in this matter till she had made you acquainted how matters stand. Pray my humble service to Lady Mary and the rest of my friends and relations in Derbyshire.

1698, July 9. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke at the Earl of Chesterfield's near Burton.

I have only to tell you that writs will be issued out on Wednesday next for the calling of a new Parliament, so that if you think of standing, you must strengthen your interest as fast as you can. I saw a letter yesterday of Stanhope's from Madrid: he says the King of Spain had had three sounding fits which lasted a quarter of an hour each, and that 'twas impossible he should live longer than autumn. Yesterday we shipped our horses for Holland, and this day sennight his Majesty designs to embark. There goes but a small part of his family with him, three Lords, three Grooms, and proportionable. My Lord Kinston and Mr. Berkeley have had a dispute at the Bath about Mrs Key, who they are both in love with. They drew in public, which prevented mischief, and I think has ended the quarrel. Pray let me know if you are married.

1698, July 19. Beauford Buildings.—Edward Goudge to Thomas Coke, at Bratby Manor, by Burton bagg.

I find the Lord Godolphin, Sir Robert Terrill, and Mr. Charles Godolphin are your neighbours. At first Mr. Stroud told me that they were the only persons disturbed, but since I hear nothing from anybody but Mr. Charles Godolphin. I understand by the people I put into the house that all this disturbance is occasioned by his lady, who it seems cannot be satisfied till she sees your building down. Their builder came to tell me they would pull down our building on Monday. On Sunday I went and laughed at him for his news. He told me seriously that he had seen their lease, and they had so many foot of ground as reached the inside of our wall. . . To prevent a law suit I have contented myself with the loss of about five inches, and taken the timber off the wall and set it wholly on our own ground, for 10*s.* charge or less. . . To do as much mischief as they can another way, here hath been one from your backside neighbour to let us know that the wall was wholly theirs. . . If you have not your lease, let me know where I can see it here in town, and who your lawyer is, that I may advise with him. My opinion is that they cannot hurt us, but that all this bustle is to oblige the peevish proud temper of a woman. Mr. Stroud told me that there was a contract between the builders that they should not make any addition above so many foot high. I shall keep the men at work, and desire a line or two.

1698, July 23. Beauford Buildings.—Edward Goudge to Thomas Coke, at Bratby Manor, by Burton bagg.

. . I have had two meetings lately with an attorney who acts for the ground landlord on the back side of our building, who says that the wall that our building stands upon next Madame Luttrell's ground is theirs, and not our own as Mr. Stroud, our ground landlord, told me it was. I, therefore, desire that somebody belonging to the law may be judges of their writings, which their attorney offers to show at any time. I answered that if they proved the wall to be theirs, Mr. Coke would take the building off the wall and set it further into his own ground, and that whosoever employed him would miss of their aim for our building must go forward. I do not think that the removing the whole frame of our building will cost more than forty shillings. I am now well assured Mr. Charles Godolphin's lady is the cause of all this trouble.

COKE MSS.

1698, July 28. Parslows.—John Fanshaw to Thomas Coke at Bretby.

Dear Brother,—I beg you to believe no man more pleased to hear of your happiness than myself, of which I wish a long continuance. I have enclosed warrants for two brace of bucks, which if you spare so much time may contribute to your diversion in killing them, if you have ere an uncle towards Needwood to visit. Sister Alice writ word you would pot them and send them up; but I hope you will not give yourself that trouble, but dispose of them there as you please. I doubt not you have venison enough where you are; however, I hope you will not refuse my mite, having nothing else to offer. I heard yesterday you were to be one of our Senate.

1698. August 4–14. Loo.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke at the Earl of Chesterfield's near Burton.

Though it's a good while since we landed I have not got the sea sickness out of my body. We were two days on board, stayed four days at the Hague, and came hither yesterday was sennight. His Majesty has hunted twice, which was the death of a brace of stags. The first ran us six hours; there was killed by hard chase three horses, and several others spoiled. The last was two hours. We had so little time for sending over our horses, that we are forced to hunt them half dead, and an Englishman would take us by our riding for Dutch jockeys. The King has ordered a camp about Nymegen a fortnight hence of 25,000 men. His Majesty designs the beginning of next month to go for Zell. I find Loo much the same place 'twas, wants nothing but women, which perhaps you will say in some country seats is no want at all. There has been a plot in Moscovie, for deposing the Zar, which has sent him post from Vienna.

1698. August 6. Beauford Buildings in the Strand.—Edward Goudge to Thomas Coke at Bratby Manor by Burton bagg.

. . . The attorney, who is employed by the ground landlord of the next ground, and I have had several meetings and I hope on Monday shall make a final determination of the matter. But the ground landlord, Mr. Waller, lives in Buckinghamshire, who I understand is a very hot man; but I find the attorney quite the contrary; otherwise you would infallibly have entered into a law suit, or I must have made a hasty submission. . . .

1698. August 8. (Blithfield.)—Edward Bagot to Thomas Coke.

I wish it lay in my power to be serviceable to you in anything: but I am afraid I cannot possibly attend you next week in the Forest (though at any time after) by reason of our unlucky dispute that is likely to happen in choosing members for our county. Yet whatever you are pleased to command in the Forest as far as my power extends, you may have the sole disposal of.

1698. August 11. Parslows.—Alice Coke to Thomas Coke at Bretby.

Dear Brother,—The first post after I came here my brother and sister [Fanshaw] writ it to you and Lady Mary, and I hope gave you an account how well we was guarded from Barnet to Islington by the exact likeness of Don Quixott. But there my brother told him that he had timed his coming to London very ill for his brother Frank was gone down to lock up the doors of Repton, and that he would be quite out of possession; upon which he thought some time, and brought out some proverbs, and so turned back again, to our thinking, for we saw no more of him.

1698. August 14–24. Loo.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke. COKE MSS

I was heartily glad by your letter of the 30th past to find that you had been employing your time so much for the public good. You shew at once, and in your young days too, as great an inclination to serve your country by proper ways as 'tis possible for a man to do, first by matrimony and now in this public character, which the country has thought fit to choose you for. And sincerely I think you as proper a man to serve the nation in the House of Commons as any that will be there; for by your travelling and conversation in the world I believe you know the circumstances of Europe as it now stands as well as anybody, and your honesty being generally known, I don't doubt but a great many of your brethren will be directed by you. I told the King of your election, which he seemed very much pleased with. I believe our going to Zell is very uncertain, for his Majesty has not yet sent any horses, or made any preparation for the journey, and when our return for England will be we are as ignorant of. Our time is spent just as it was when you were here; but our horses in very bad condition, and the stags stronger. I suppose you knew Count d'Auvergne in France. He has been with us this fortnight, and I believe will continue some time longer. He is in a lower form for riding than Vost. Friday was sennight one Swerius a Dutchman, Receiver of the King's rents at Breda, knowing my horses to be in very ill condition, challenged me to run with any horse in my stable from Arnheim to Loo for 100 guineas, he and I to mount equal weight. He urged it so much that at last I took him up, and next day we shewed our horses, to run on the Thursday following. He had got an old running mare, which I knew nothing of, and I believe bought her purposely for a bite. The horse I found in my stable in the best condition was Roan: and upon him I ventured, though had a very great cold. The match made a great noise: the King put off a day's hunting: and a world of people both here and at starting came to see it. Count d'Auvergne went 20, Charles Dormer went 20, and several others lesser sums, so that I had not above 40 on it myself. We went to Arnheim over night. I was forced to carry 8½ pound. His jockey dress was so comical being packed up in flannel and leather, that had I lost the match to such a mountebag I could never have shewed my face again. We started at nine o'clock Thursday morning. He led me till within two mile of the end, sometimes half, sometimes a quarter of a mile before me. His mare run devilishly, and he rid better by much than we expected; and my horse being out of condition, I would have given double the sum to have been off. But at last I got up to him, made a loose or two, and within less than a quarter of a mile off the end his mare and he sunk to nothing. I never was so rejoiced at anything in my life. We run it in an hour and half a minute. My horse came in pretty fresh, and this trial assured me he's as good in nature as 'tis possible for a horse to be. Count d'Auvergne being asked why he'd venture with me, he answered he always joined with the English in horse-races, and with the Dutch in making dikes and building windmills.

1698. August 17. Rochester.—Edward Goudge to Thomas Coke at Bratby.

. . . I left the men once again in good order, with a strict charge to go on with all speed imaginable, and after a little time I shall be able to give a better guess what time we shall finish. . . . Madam Godolphin is still as troublesome as she can, saying she hath not done with you, though Mr. Waller hath: for she hath bought Mr. Waller's ground as I am informed. But I took a note under the attorneys hand to acquit you from any further trouble, after the removing the encroachment, which is done, and your building stands wholly within the walls.

Coke MSS.

1698. August 24. London.—Luke Barrow to Thomas Coke at Bretby.

. . . I am in your house at this time in 3 James Place, being put in by Mr. Goudge. Your building doth go on now, though it hath been three times hindred and caused to be altered, by some unworthy and envious persons, concerning which I suppose there hath been more malice than matter in it, their aim and end that you might have no building at all there. And especially one family near neighbours, particularly the gentlewoman, of the house, with her husband, Mr. Godolphin, who lately, when one of the workmen was nailing some boards on that end of the building next to their garden, stood with a pistol ready cocked, and said he would shoot any man that should dare to put out his head or his hand over the garden to drive a nail there. I never perceived so much envy appear in my life as hath been ever since it began. . . .

1698. August 29. Rochester.—Edward Goudge to Thomas Coke at Bretby Manor.

Since there were no thoughts of making a scaffold on Mr. Godolphin's ground to plaister that end, I ordered it to be weather boarded; which when the carpenters were going about to do by standing within our own building and putting their heads between the quarters to nail the boards, Mr. Godolphin came out with a pistol and swore he would shoot that man through the head that should offer but to swing his hand over his ground to drive a nail, whereupon the carpenters being scared from their work, I ordered it to be bricked up between the quarters, which is done; and that side boarded next Madam Luttrell's garden, so that now I hope all the disturbance is over. This surly troublesome neighbour of yours hath so hindered us as that it will be too hard a task for us to get the house quite finished by the 27th of September. . . .

1698. August 29. O.S. Loo.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke at the Earl of Chesterfield's near Burton.

Though the country affords you no news, and the story of an intrigue is no longer diverting, and all beauties become nauseous to you except one, I'll excuse you writing on all these subjects, provided that you'll now and then tell me that my dearest friend is in good health, and promise to let me see him as soon as I return to England; which I fear will be something the longer now, first, because this morning his Majesty talked as if he was resolved upon his journey to Zell. He could not tell us who should go along with him, or exactly the day; but we suppose it will be the latter end of next week after the review of the army. It's to consist of 32 squadrons and 28 battalions, and is encamp between Arnheim and Rossendolf. His Majesty designs to begin the review this day sennight; 'twill take about three days time, and then they all return to their quarters. I can't resolve buying this horse you tell me of. I am already overstocked, and unless I can dispose of some of these, I must not think of buying more. We have been to-day twelve hours on horseback, and missed our stag. The King is so angry at the disappointment, he is resolved to revenge himself, and hunt to-morrow again. Judge if this manner of life does not require sound bodies and good horses. I am very much tired; however if I had any news, would send it you.

1698, September 3. St. James's Place.—Luke Barrow to Edward Goudge.

Mr. Godolphin is now erecting his monument of malice; and he hath prevailed with our neighbour on the left hand to build along that wall, and the end of his fabric is fastened into his house: the manner of their building is long poles, and they are preparing to board it. The gentlewoman is very jocund, and full of laughter, and they all seem to be much pleased with what they are doing. But I told them all aloud, I believed they would have little cause to rejoice in the end . . .

1698, September 22. London.—Edward Goudge to Thomas Coke, at the Earl of Chesterfield's at Bratby Manor, Burton Bagg.

. . . I have taken care that your household necessaries be as ready for you as your building, viz.: jack, jackwheel, spits, racks, boiler, stoves, cistern, &c. I do not doubt but some other things will come into my mind, supposing you are not provided with any thing for this house but hangings, beds, pictures, chairs, &c. I desire you would be pleased to answer these following queries, viz.:—

1. How must the Japan pictures be disposed of?
2. Shall there be a glass pier in the lower room in the new building, as it is ordered above in the middle storey?
3. Would you have sash doors in the closet of that story for a library?
4. Would you have any prints pasted before you come?
5. Would you have glass in the piers of the dining room, as also over the marble chimney piece there?

It is a very dear ornament, therefore I do not advise it, except it be mighty agreeable to yours, and my Lady's inclinations.

1698, October 1.—George Vernon to Thomas Coke at Bretby.

. . I did come to Bretby on purpose as well to wait on his Lordship, as to acquaint you with what some of the town of Derby had mentioned to me. I told my Lord that if you did not approve of the thing, it was easier to prevent the bill than to obstruct it. I told some of the town that it was their best way to agree with you and all the other proprietors that should be damaged by such navigation, before the bill should be proposed, that it might then easily pass . . . I hope you will believe I should never assist or promote any such bill, without full satisfaction to all persons concerned, and this I hope will give you a real belief of my integrity to your service.

1698, October 17, O.S. Loo.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke, at the Earl of Chesterfield's near Burton.

A little before our departure, I wrote you word we were going to Zell. On the 20th past we left Loo. The second day's journey we came to a seat of the Duke's in his own country, called Brookhousen, whither the Duke sent several of his family to receive the King, and entertained him very handsomely. The next day was 60 miles to another seat, called Ebersdorf, where the Duke met us himself, and shewed all the joy imaginable at the Kings' arrival. From thence the next day got to Goure by dinner, the place designed for our stay, where we found the Duchess and her family and all the Dukes. And in three days after came the Elector of Hanover and one of his brothers, which quite filled the house. Several others, Princes of Germany, sent compliments, and desired to wait upon His Majesty, but were excused upon the want of room. From the day of our coming to our departure we did not miss one day from [some] kind of field sport or another.

Coke MSS.

We began with stag, which hunting the Duke has in the greatest perfection imaginable. He has sixty or eighty couple of hounds: nothing can be stauncher. They are a kind of woodland fox hound, with a great deal of mettle, and drive on a scent very hard. There are vast quantities of woods, but the trees growing at that distance, and no underwood, that it neither hinders the sight, nor running of your hounds or horses. And for that little running we had in the plains, it equals any I ever saw. The only inconvenience is some boar holes; but taking the country altogether, it exceeds Loo, or I believe any place in the world. We killed in the fortnight we were there seven stags. This country for hare-hunting is as good as the other. He has generally out eighty couple of harriers of different tongues, but much the same speed, which make very good music. We came a little too late in the year for shooting; however found some game. This house stands sixty miles from any considerable town, in a country absolutely barren and fit for nothing but sports, so that one would think 'twas impossible for a common family to subsist. But notwithstanding these inconveniences, never was seen such prodigious plenty of all manner of provisions and rareties of the best kind, and drest after the best manner; and all sorts of wines, I believe better cannot be found in Europe. The Court in general the most obliging in the world: all people offering their service, and watching opportunities to help us to what we wanted. The ladies free and well bred, tolerably handsome. In short nothing could be asked for that we had not, to make us the most satisfied people in the world. Friday was sennight we left Goure, and went to Zell, which is about sixty miles distant, all the Court accompanying the King. The House of Zell is an old building, but a great many tolerable good apartments in it. On Saturday came the Electress of Hanover, and brought with her several of the Hanover ladies; one or two very handsome, but the rest generally of the largest size. We stayed here four nights; had three Italian comedies, very well acted (Messiteen was amongst them) and one ball; so that we lived as gay a town life as could be. Saturday, we boar-hunted, and Tuesday came away: and travelling day and night came safe hither on Thursday at one o'clock in the morning. I expected to have seen you sooner than I believe I shall, for last night came twenty horses of the Elector of Bavaria, and he is expected in three or four days; so that I can give no guess at our departure. In the meantime I shall be glad to hear how my dear Coke does, and how he designs to divert himself this winter. We killed a brace of stags on Saturday, and to-morrow hunt again.

1698, November 10. Staunton.—Honble. R. Shirley to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place, London.

I should have been glad could I have had an opportunity of waiting on you before your departure for London, but you were gone your journey before I returned out of Staffordshire. I do not doubt but the pleasure of the good company you had with you made amends for the badness of the roads, and the unseasonableness of the weather. A proclamation I see is now come out for the meeting of the Parliament, and I hear there is likely to be a great dispute about the election of a Speaker. Colonel Granville is one that is thought on, and will be a candidate, and will stand fair for it. I have been entreated by Sir John Levson (Leveson) to acquaint you and the rest of my friends of the House of Commons, which is what in compliance with his desire I thought fit to do. I hope to be with you in town some time afore Christmas, and enjoy the satisfaction of your good company. If any lampoon, or piece of poetry come out, I hope you will oblige your friend with it. Pray my humble service to my Lord Chesterfield.

1698, November 21. Stanton.—William Barnes to Thomas Coke.

I have made a sally into the woods amongst the woodcocks and partridges, with good fortune. I killed a dozen and send them up to you potted. I design to make a general assault. I hope with good success to send you a much bigger pot. . . Your Daneis bitch is taken care of and sent to that gentleman, which is the famous shooter; he will be sure to make much of her, and do all he can to make her fit for a gun.

1698, November 24. (Kings Newton).—Robert Hardinge to (Thomas Coke).

Since you went your mill dam overflowed the grates, stopping the water, and the water got into the mill, and did the miller forty shillings damage, and my Lord Huntingdon about five pounds by making a great hole in the dam. The navigators at Derby and Burton are very busy, going to every town on the river, and petitioning all people. I would, if it be not troublesome to you, desire you to enclose and send me the King's Speech and Votes, and direct for me at Mr. Gregson's in Derby, and when I am Parliament man I'll do as much for you.

1698, November 26. Lichfield.—Lord Stanhope to Thomas Coke, M.P., at the Earl of Chesterfield's house in Southampton Square, London.

. . Knowing how busy a time this is with you Parliament men, I thought it more proper to take notice of your favours in a letter to my sister, than trouble you at a time when you are taken up with the affairs of the nation. I think Walker may be allowed to inquire after scandal a little, since he is now like an old foxhunter, who, when past following the sport, yet loves to hear and talk of it. I am sorry his intelligence fails him, but hope his invention may supply that deficiency, or else his friends will want entertainment and diversion from him. The waters are so mightily out and the ways so excessive bad, that I don't know when I shall get from hence, but can assure you of my being in all places your most affectionate brother.

1698, December 10. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke, a Member of Parliament, at his house in St. James's Place, London.

Burton's daughter who is married to a cowkeeper about London has always pretended a title when her mother died, pretending that her brother Radcliff, who sold to Mr. Coke, was dead before the fine perfected. . . My judgment is that, your estate being so much, you had as good pay 10*l.*, as have it attended with any clamour when Burton's wife dies. . . I shall dine with the Count Huntingdon to-day, being invited: 'tis his birthday, and if I can have a convenient opportunity will talk to him about the mill, and give you an account. Richard Kniveton is melancholy at not hearing from you about his horse, oats being 2*s.* 6*d.* a strike; barley 4*s.* 6*d.*; wheat 8*s.* or better; pease, 4*s.* In all cases, where a book is too big for the post, slit it, and send it in two letters.

1698, December 11. (Kings Newton.) — Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke, a member of the Honble. House of Commons at Westminster, London.

Richard Kniveton and Henry Loate will set out on Tuesday morning with the horse and two couple of hounds, about which there had been a mighty mistake, had not Loate shewed me your letter. Yesterday I spoke to my Lord Huntingdon, who gave me for answer these words—"Truly Mr. Hardinge I do not make leases of my estates, because I cannot tell when they are set to their worth, and this Mill has been at 50*l.* a year," which I took to be a plain denial. I wish Chadock may prove a good groom; Kniveton's son shall go with him two days. The Mill is but 28*l.* per annum.

Coke MSS.

1698, December 14. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament at Westminster, London.

I received the King's Speech and thank you for it. Your horse set out with two couple of hounds yesterday, and hope he will come safe to hand. Chadock would not undertake to lead the horse on foot, and everybody said it was impossible, considering the badness of the way, and that your horse would not carry. So Richard Kniveton has sent his son with the horse and another horse to ride on, along with Chadock, and refers himself to you in it. When you write to Henry Loate you must be sure to write plain, or else he will run into mistakes. He had taken all your hounds to Sir John, and sent you none, if I had not accidently seen yours to him. And he is so foolish, that if you do not give orders yourself, he does not mind Stephen Allen's letters. I forgot to tell you that I believe Burton men will no more agree with my Lord [Huntingdon] than my Lord will set you the mill: and by the same principle, for he says—De minimis non curat lex—and if he cannot be a considerable gainer, he will not expose the privacy of his park and mills, or make any alteration. I design by the next post to send you some instructions about a Bill for the freedom of trade, without seven years service, and to prevent vexatious indictments on penal statutes. You have a tenant like to be undone, if some stop be not put to such practice. You cannot oblige your neighbour country more than by promoting a Bill for the preventing the cutting off horses tails and manes in pastures. I believe 'tis 100*l.* damage every year.

1698, December 14. Bramcoate.—Sir Robert Burdet Bart. to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, Westminster, free.

This is only to thank you for the trouble of sending the speech, and to desire you to send us the Postboy, and you will find us very honest in paying you. We do hear of the fame of Vernon about the choosing a Speaker: but I knew the old member so well, that I cannot be in any manner surprised with what I shall hear of him. I believe I may come time enough to see what becometh of the Navigation, and cannot believe his interest will prevail much in any house. I pray direct yours to me by Coventry bagg.

1698, December 19. Formarke.—Walter Burdett to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament.

'Tis so long since you left us that perhaps our country fare may be a variety to you; therefore I made bold to send you this week from Knowle hills half a dozen little birds. I call my ducks swans, so that you'll guess I'm fain to magnify whatever I have. These fowl will come to you by the name of turkeys, and I wish you, your Lady and sisters a merry Christmas with them. My horse which you write of in yours (a grey stone horse) you may guess according to the character I shall give, that I am not willing to sell him out of our country. Though really I am willing to part with him to do such an honour to my breed as your letter mentions. His age is five, his height is fourteen hands and three quarters of an inch without his shoe. 'Tis pity he should ever be bitted, he has so fine a mouth, and carries himself so well in a snaffle: but at the beginning of hunting he was somewhat wilful, and to recover him of that I clammed him, till I stirred his grease. How quiet he may be when he comes to be used again, I cannot yet answer: he is in good heart, but low in flesh. If any come to see him upon the account you mention, let him bring an assurance he comes from you: otherwise I shall not set a price of him to go out of the country, for I can have as much as a reasonable body could ask here, if I only sold him for money.

1698, December 20. Bramcoate.—Sir Robert Burdet Bart. to Thomas Coke at the House of Commons, Westminster.

I have only to tell you that I receive your kindness as regularly by the post. I am still, like the rest of mankind, full of complaints, and expect the next month to make some of them to the House of Commons. If you had regarded our sport of hunting I might have told you stories of chases in Staffordshire, and of my misfortunes. The two servants that used to hunt with me are both disabled. At the latter end of a fine chase, I broke the small bones of my grey mare's leg. But the runaway horse carrieth me bravely with a mere snaffle. I always see the sport though to the hazard of my neck, having bruised my shoulder by tumbling over a slough, and ventured drowning the same day, but have many proverbs on my side. These things only prove tricks of youth. If you hear of a runaway horse, recommend me to him: I love them mightily.

1698, December 30. Chilcote.—Sir Gilbert Clarke to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, frank.

. . What they do at Derby about their Navigation, I know not, for I live at an outside of the county; but Burton men are very active about making Trent navigable thither. A merry New Year and many is wished to you and my Lady Mary Coke by, Sir, your most humble servant.

1698–9, January 4. Chilcote.—Sir Gilbert Clarke to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, frank.

I have acquainted Sir Robert Burdet with your letter as you desired, and wish you good success with your Bill. Your reputation increaseth yet daily, and I am not used to flatter my friends. . . I think it very proper for those whose interest it is to be against the making Darwent navigable to join in a petition as you direct, and when I see the gentlemen concerned, I will acquaint them with it. But for my own part, having no land upon that water, and having so much disobliged the town of Derby already, I am not willing to sign any paper: but cannot forget to have a kindness for my friends when it falls in my way to serve them. I pray Sir R. Burdet will speak to his friends when he comes to town the latter end of this month.

1698–9, January 15. Chilcote.—Sir Gilbert Clarke to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, free.

A gentleman came hither lately out of Scarsdale, and told me they were getting hands about Chesterfield to a petition against making the river Darwent navigable. A servant of mine is going into that country this week, who will inquire what they do, of which I will give you an account after his return . . . I thank you for sending me the Votes.

1698–9, January 17. Risley.—Anchitell Gray to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament.

Yours of the 14th instant came to my hands this day the 17th and by this shall give you the best account of your commands I am able. The Bill for navigation of the River Derwent from Trent to Derby passed through my hands many years since so far as twice reading to commitment, and summons to the country to be heard, but was extinguished by prorogation. I find the same great objection against it to be still what it was, viz. that the prices of corn in that market will depend wholly upon the Derby traders, who may by it be enabled to raise and fall it as they please to the great detriment of the country. I confess I could not then well balance that objection with any great convenience to the country in other matters of trade, being but national and unexperimented things. But as to what relates to proprietors of lands upon the river, I conceive may be easily adjusted in the Bill according to precedents in cases of the like nature. These are my poor thoughts upon the whole, which I submit to your judgment, whom I assure myself to be so good a patriot, that your country will have no cause to repent their choice. I have had an ill winter with the gout, but thank God I am recovering. So with my best devotions for your happy progress in the great matters before you in Parliament I am your humble servant. What further commands you may have for me be pleased to direct to Risley near Nottingham as the speedier conveyance.

COKE MSS

1698–9, January 22.—John Burdett to Thomas Coke at the House of Commons.

I wrote to you before Christmas to give an account of the disposal of your hounds; and also of the ill estate your gelding was in then, but he is very much mended, and in good hunting condition. On Wednesday last, waiting on Madam Bride from Calke towards her new home, on Melburne Common a boy was running after a fox with a steel trap at her leg, whom we soon assisted to catch. Mrs. Renalds I have still in my custody; but for the engine, I broke it into as many pieces as I could. On Friday I killed a fox in the Melburne quarells. He had been run several times before, and always too hard for us, but has paid for it at last. We have had much better sport this winter than the last, and are in expectation of a great deal more. My dog Ranter is dead. We have good store of game. We expect my niece Jennens and her nursery here this week.

1698–9, February 4. (King's Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke a Member of the House of Commons.

My Lord Huntingdon and I had some discourse the other day about my Lord Hastings, and I perceive, if Lord Hastings will marry, my Lord would settle an honourable fortune on him, and let him live at London, or where he pleaseth. But my Lord is at a loss for somebody to mediate between them, so as Lord Hastings should not think his father seeks to him, neither does my Lord know what Lord Hastings would have of him. If you can take an opportunity to talk to Lord Hastings of this matter, you may please to tell him I will communicate his desires to my Lord Huntingdon, and serve him all I can: and in this I think Lord Huntingdon will be very much obliged to you. I hope they may come to friendship, and Lady Betty by this means gratified in a husband, which will not be so probable without my Lord Hastings compliance. My most humble service to your good Lady and the rest of your fireside Rolleston refused forty-five guineas of a Northampton horse cadger [?] I have not seen any hunter in so fine order, nor so fine a nag. I shall drink your health to-day at Sam Heathcote's with Sir J. Harpur and Sir Nat. [Curzon], &c.

1698-9, February 5. Charlton.—Marquis of Hartington to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament.

I did believe that Mr. Vernon would make a difficulty about putting off the reading of the Bill; but seeing there are so few petitions yet delivered, I believe the House will think fit to put it off. I hope to be in town on Monday sevennight, but if the Bill should be committed, I think it will be very proper to move that all who come should have voices, as we did last Parliament, for otherwise none would attend but those that are concerned, and people are more industrious to promote anything than to oppose it. My brother is willing enough to put it off, if Mr. Vernon will consent. We have as yet had little or no sport, but live in hopes.

1698–9, February 22. Formarke. — Walter Burdett to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, free.

By invitation to meet R. Harding and J. Harpur, my brother John and I dined last Monday at Ormaston. R. H. slipped the collar. J. H. who says he had rather treat with anything (except the devil) than with R. W. [R. Wilmot] dined there with us. The first entertainment was a letter from son to father of great love to a fair lady. The answer was good respect to the lady and family. But I refer you to it, because it was ordered to be communicated to Sir Robert Burdett, &c. The father complains extremely of the undutifulness of that jackanapes of (as he calls him) his son, and says he will not treat with him, but if his son will leave all to him, he will do the better for his son and would be friends with him. He says he would treat with any of her friends, but I told him I thought they would be unwilling to meddle with a family divided against itself. If you believe the father, you will have no good opinion of the son, and if you believe the son, you will have no good opinion of the father. As for my part, I believe neither of them, that I may retain a better opinion of both. I am so free because I wish well to the lady's family. The Burton projectors have not dealt fairly with the gentlemen; they to my knowledge treated with the gentlemen, and promised that they would not proceed without their consents, and yet against their consents they have proceeded, you know best how far, for you are thought to be one who brings in the Bill. John my brother says he killed a fox yesterday, and for six weeks past has not missed killing two days together.

1698–9, February 25. Locko. — Henry Gilbert to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament.

I am much obliged to you for the favour of acquainting with the rejection of Derby Bill, by which our neighborhood is freed from many present inconveniences. I heartily thank you for the inclosed prints, and humbly beg the continuance of such as are any way extraordinary, especially when the House concludes anything about a land tax, or other ways of raising public money, and also about the value of guineas which common report cries down to twenty-one shillings, thereby creating a great damp in our small trade in the country, so that we know not how to pay or receive any money.

1698–9, February.—George Lord Hastings to Thomas Coke.

I esteem myself very much obliged to you for the trouble you have already taken in endeavouring a reconciliation 'twixt my father and I. If it should succeed I shall have obtained what I most heartily wish for. If it should prove unsuccessful, this satisfaction will follow your mediation in this matter, that you will see it is not my fault, and that I am ready to pay that respect a son owes a father, which I own will be a pleasure and a great one to me, because I should be very sorry to suffer in the esteem of one I value and respect so much as I do you. To-morrow when my father comes to see you, you'll represent to him in what concern I am, to find his anger continues so long, that I am ready as I have always been, to beg all the pardons, and make all the submissions he pleases to command me, and I never will be wanting in any part of the duty I owe him, and though I find at present no inclination to marry yet I never will without his consent and approbation. What I desire of my father in order to make me live more easily than I have done hitherto is first the payment of my debts which amount to about 1,600*l.*, that I have contracted in about nine years that I have had no maintenance, and 500*l.* a year made secure to me, and that some gentleman or goldsmith be bound to pay it me quarterly. And since my father desires I should be two or three years out of London, I am very willing to comply with it, because I will ask leave of the King to go abroad, and I am sure he won't deny me. But if my father should insist on my living in the country, it will be utterly impossible for me to yield to, because it would be the most absurd thing in the world for me that am in the King's service, and do duty about his person, to ask leave to live in the country which is absenting from court, and that without any good pretence. Indeed there can be none, except that of one's health. I daresay my father does think as I do in that matter. The King has been kind to me, and I never will quit his service, so I can't agree about living in the country. I can abate nothing but one out of the five hundred a year.

Coke MSS.

1698–2, March 8. A "Bill Head."

Peter Ferré Confectioner living at the Lower End of the Hay Market, next door to the Duke of Ormond's Head, over against the Fountain Tavern, at the Sign of the Dish of Frut and Sugar Loaf Sells the true Barly Sugar or Sugar Male and Sugar D'Orge. All sorts of Sweetmeat Fine Confits and the true juice of Leiquorich of Blois, or Losenges for the Cough.

5 bon Christian Pears -	-	0	2 6
9 lbs. dried sweetmeat -	-	1	16 0

1698–9, March 11. Bramcoate. — Sir Robert Burdet, Bart., to Thomas Coke, at the House of Commons, Westminster.

I met yours at Coventry, being kept at Sarsden with Sir John Walter and his sister and brother Rich. The next day after my coming home I went to Calke, and am promised the hound shall be sent to you by the carrier the next week. I have inquired what was given to Mr. Portman's huntsmen, and find only five shillings were given to the chief huntsman, and two shillings sixpence to him that kept them, which I confess was very little. The hounds were very poor, many of them very old, some very small, others large. I doubt there will not be any fit to breed on. We purpose after one week to go to Loughburrow, and afterwards to Needwood. I mean Sir John Harpur, brother John, Sir John Chester, Jesson and myself. I will go to the Lord Huntington so soon as I have an opportunity, and you shall have an account of my success, all care shall be taken.

1698–9, March 13. (King's Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke Member of Parliament at Westminster, London. Free.

My Lord Huntingdon was yesterday at Newton, and told me you obliged him, but 'twould not suit him; however he seemed very much beholden to you . . . Your Poors law will not answer expectation, for unless all travelling carted cripples and beggars be avoided, we shall be little better. It may be a fellow turned off from the army and brings a (woman) and will have two or three pence from a country constable—why, they in good husbandry pay it, rather than go five miles to a Justice, and spend ten shillings. And it is the same with all pretenders to shipwreck. 'Tis not 100*l.* pays this charge in Derbyshire. And when men are lame, or cripples, or little children, or women just at down lying, it frustrates punishment; and 'tis now common with them to tell you they were born at sea or in Ireland, or some Island. And this trade will come like a torrent upon us more than ever by disbanded soldiers. In the Land tax I hope all persons paying any payment or rent will have leave to deduct 3*s.* per pound certain. Last year our Hundred paid 80*l.* more than when one shilling was taken off of the capitation. Some other Hundreds were eased, but I think the last Capitation Act will be the best rule for us, and for friends, and for these in the Peak, taking one shilling in the pound from it. Your tenant Kniveton will be plagued at Assizes, and though he get off about exercising a trade, yet it will cost him 10*l.*, and no remedy, being prosecuted in the King's name.

1698–9. March 15. Bramcoate.—Sir R. Burdet, Bart., to Thomas Coke at the House of Commons, Westminster.

On Thursday the 16th I intend to see the Lord Huntingdon, and from thence go to Loughburrow to meet the Lord Craven, Sir John Chester, Sir John Harpur, John Burdet, and many others to fright the foxes. And I would wish you loved the sport so well as to desire to be amongst us. We love your company well, but I speak more properly for him who is ambitious to be your faithful servant.

1698–9. March 15. Mickle Over.—Rev. John Ward to Thomas Coke, a Member of Parliament for Derbyshire—free.

By virtue of an Act passed the last Sessions of Parliament Justices of the Peace being armed with power to compel persons, upon the penalty of 10*l.*, to take poor parish-children apprentices, some of them in our County do execute it with that vigour as to force them upon the clergy; and particularly amongst others an apprentice girl is offered to be put upon me by an indenture signed and approved by Mr. Smith and Mr. Cotchett, two Justices of the Peace, wherein I must covenant to teach her the art and mystery of husbandry. This has not been usually practised upon the clergy, as being unsuitable to their holy function, and not agreeable to the nature and tenure of their church livings. Sir, we apprehend this to be a hardship upon us; and finding by the Votes that the House is about making some more effectual law for the better relief of the poor, I, with some others of my brethren, do make it our humble request that you would be pleased to move, or cause it to be moved, in the House of Commons that in the new Act a clause may be inserted to exempt the clergy of England from being compellable to receive such apprentices. But if they shall not think fit wholly to exempt our order, yet so far to favour it as to ascertain a more moderate sum to be imposed upon beneficed men, to be paid by them for the use of the poor, instead of taking any such poor child apprentice. I know none like yourself to whom I could with that hope and expectation address my submissive desires. Pray Sir favour this interest by engaging your friends, and particularly my cousin Freeman, who is a great friend to the Church and Clergy.

1698–9. March 17. Loughborough.—Sir R. Burdet Bart. to Thomas Coke at the House of Commons, Westminster.

I waited on the Earl of Huntington yesterday, and discussed him of the matter in hand. He at first seemed positive that his son must quit, and live in the country: but that seeming unreasonable in my opinion, he was at last content that the Lord Hastings might go travel for some short time: and whilst he did so, he would pay to his son one hundred pounds per quarter. But on condition his son would live in the country and not come within fifty miles of London, he would then allow him all the revenue which ariseth out of the Yorkshire estate. Thus my Lord expressed himself divers times: but I pressed him to allow his son 150*l.* per quarter, but could not gain a promise for that sum. But he seemed most to desire that his son should marry and settle in the country; which would enable him to pay his debt, and would also oblige his father to settle an estate upon him for his present maintenance. Here is now at Loughburrow the Lord Craven, Sir John Harpur, Sir John Chester, John Burdet, John Harpur, William Jesson, with many others. My Lord Craven's twenty couple of hounds and Sir John Chester's ten couple went out this day; and killed one brace of deer in Stanford park, found a fox upon Leake Hills and lost him, killed one hare, one badger. To-morrow, being Saturday, we are to run upon the Forest with seven couple of hounds belonging to Sir John Harpur, five couple belonging to Mr. Jesson, as many belonging to Mr. John Burdet, and ten couple belonging to your servant.

COKE MSS.

1699. March 27. Locko.—Henry Gilbert to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament.

We hear you are now busy about the Act for the Land Tax; and that every County City and Hundred &c. is to be taxed in the same proportion and way as it was in the year 1693. And if that clause pass we in these lower Hundreds must pay 1,441*l.* more than our share at 3*s.* in the pound rate. Therefore, I beseech you, Sir, get assistance of friends to move that that clause may not pass, but that it may be left to the Commissioners as formerly.

1699. June 27. O. S. Loc.—Robert Jennens to [Thomas Coke].

Since we came hither we have had five chaces, killed four: the last we missed. Our weather has been extremely hot, which our thick-winded hounds have felt the inconveniency of, being apt to choke. However, they do tolerably well, considering the little time they have been here. Redcap is an extraordinary hound, runs fast, stout, and hunts very well. Sir J. Harpur's hound something short of him, but very good; as are all Sir R. Burdet's. We have been at Deering, this ten days; and believe we shall spend above half our time this summer there. The King designs to go shortly for Breda: from thence will visit the new fortifications of Burg op Zoome. There's a camp to be at the same place as last year. The Duke of Zell is expected, but no time fixed. I have made two matches, both to be run this week. I think they are foolish ones, therefore won't tell you anything of them till they are over.

1699, July 1.—Dr. Charles Davenant to Thomas Coke.

. . The particulars of Mr. Duncombe being chosen Sheriff perhaps you will not be unwilling to hear. The day sennight before the choice he was tried and quitted concerning the Exchequer Bills. I attended the trial, and indeed it was impossible any jury in the world could find him guilty. A month before the trial it was concerted among his friends, if he came off, to put him up for Sheriff. All your acquaintance in town gave in to the matter, as a just rebuke to those invaders of property who had so unreasonably persecuted him last Parliament. The thing was kept secret till three days before the election and a suitable partner joined with him, George Jeffrays. All succeeded according to our wish, and if it had come to a poll, he would have carried it by a third. The Flatterers give out this was only designed a punishment, and to get a fine out of him, but the real truth is that 'twas only intended to oppose them. The same day there was a poll for a Bridgemaster, and the old Whigs (who are now turned Tories) lost it by 1300; which I hope is a symptom that those revolters from their old principle of liberty begin to lose ground, as 'tis hoped they will do throughout the whole kingdom. And I believe they are so staggered at this business in the City that our sick Ministers will hardly venture to remove themselves to the other side of the bed by calling a new Parliament, however much 'tis talked of. But for my part I doubt they do not mean England so well. If I go on with the collections for Parliament transactions, your quota will come time enough when you are in town. I am very busy and putting myself in order to give the public an account of what our ancestors have done to such as being Ministers have presumed to pass grants to themselves of the Crown revenue. In short I shall endeavour to prepare the town to give the report of our Irish Commissioners a kind reception. That matter proceeds very well, and will have a better effect than was hoped for. Sir, I wish you good sports, good health, good wine and good company, and am your very affectionate servant.

1699, July 6–16. Loo.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

In my last I told you that I had two horse matches then upon my hands. The one was with my Lord Albemarle for 50 guineas, the other my Lord Aron for 20; each to mount himself himself upon what horse of his own he pleased, and run against Ritch the page, with a little galloway that the boy had, of 12 hands, two miles. The grooms and most of the pretending jockeys were against me, and a great many laid 6 to 4. On Thursday I run my Lord Aron's, and beat him from the beginning to the end. The Dutchmen thought the devil was in the horse, for they could not comprehend how so little a tit could beat a great horse. That with my Lord Albemarle is drawn. You see what a plaguey fellow I am in this country. I believe in future I shan't be able to match a broomstick with Mynheers. We hunt now in a great deal of splendour, each of us has two laced coats, a worse to hunt in, another to put on afterwards. Whilst we are running we look like routed officers. They are very handsome and cost about fifty pound. We would fain persuade the King to pay for them. They write from Zell that the Duke has got such a sore leg that they think 'twill prevent his coming hither. My Lord Portland is still at the Hague, and has not yet waited on the King. Redcap grows better and better every day, improves in his wind, and often keeps company with young Tapster. Three or four days ago two French and an Irishman hankering about the Court were taken up and examined. They said they were gentlemen come to see the Court. Their trunks were searched which proved them to be what they said, for they were filled with the modish equipage of false cards and dice. Prithee let us know what you do in the country. The greatest pleasure you can do your friend is to write to him.

1699, July 11–21. Loo.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

I long to hear from you out of Darbyshire, and for a provocation I am resolved to continually write to you. My Lord Hastings has been with us this week: came out of England, as I believe, in a great measure to avoid his duns. The day before I received a letter from my brother who writ me that my Lord Huntingdon offered to allow my Lord Hastings 400*l.* a year, provided he would leave London and travel. I told my Lord of it, who said he would willingly comply with his father in this and in all things that he should command him that was reasonable. When you see my Lord, talk with him, and see if you can fix him to this his proposition. We are grown the unfortunatest huntsmen that ever were, for we miss I think oftener than we kill. We have been out within this week three times, have almost run our stags down, melted with the hot weather, and then lost them. This you may be sure pleases our Master well. The huntsmen have with their understandings so ordered matters that the old hounds, instead of making the new ones, are spoilt by them : and we have not one dog in the pack we can rely upon, so that I think we shall have little sport this year. Dormer has made a match with Lallo for twelve miles, fifty guineas, to be run on Thursday next. The King goes for Breda to-morrow and returns on Wednesday. The Prince of Hess came hither on Tuesday to wait upon the King. My Lord Portland came hither on Wednesday, and went for the Hague next morning. He takes his time when my Lord Albemarle is out of the way.

Coke MSS.

1699, July 23. Stanton (by Bridge).—Captain William Barnes to Thomas Coke at the Earl of Chesterfield's house at Bretby.

Sir, I thought myself obliged to acquaint you that the High Sheriff sent me word to-day that the gentlemen will meet him to-morrow at three of the clock in the afternoon at Swarson Bridge. I design to dine at Bretby to-morrow, and afterwards if you are pleased to go, no one will be more readier to wait on you than he that is truly and sincerely your most humble servant.

1699, July 25. Beauford Buildings.—Edward Goudge to Thomas Coke.

I trusted Mr. Ogbourne your carpenter to continue the laying your two houses together. I did not much approve of it, so that I am drawing my own thoughts of it in two storeys, viz. the kitchen, the hall, the dining room and two pairs of stairs, with back stairs quite through the houses which Mr. Ogbourne had left out. However I will send his draught with my own. . . . I do not intend the joiner shall mend the defects of his work till we make one trouble of all, which shall be done with all speed after you have seen my drawings and sent me your mind . . .

1699, July 26, O. S. Deering.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

Till I received yours of the 17th instant I was afraid you had been dead, but I find 'tis only misfortunes that you are involved in, which are the consequences of a matrimonial state—building, gardens, plantations, and laying up of treasures, we bachelors call trouble, but sure you double men find a darling pleasure in it, for no sooner you alter your condition, but immediately all take the same course. So that I believe those words of the parson is a kind of conjuring that absolutely changes man's nature. It can't be a woman alone, else we had been all of this temper long since. However I'll never allow these passions sufficient to oppose friendship ; therefore let me hear from you a little oftener than you have hitherto done. I wish you good success with your grey horse. If Wat Burdet's horse has an easy motion I am sure Ireton will meet him half way at our return. Do what you can to get some more hounds of Redcap's breed, for we reckon him one of the best in our pack. The king returned on Wednesday from Breda : we met him at Aye, found a stag there, killed him at Darrawart, and afterwards came hither. We have a little war begun within sixty miles of this place. It is concerning the County of Benting (Bentheim). There's two pretenders to it, the one a Roman which the Empire protects; the other a Protestant who is in possession and the States support. The King had advice that the Emperor, in behalf of the Empire, had sent an order to the Elector Palatine and the Bishop of Munster to turn out the P. Count, and put the other in possession, upon which the Baron d'Heyder was despatched with 600 or 700 men to guard his frontiers. Yesterday came advice that the Empires' troops advancing and being refused entrance, some volleys had passed between them and several men killed on both sides, upon which the former retired, and we kept our grounds. They talk of advancing more troops. This thing has been disputed some years, but never come to that height it is now at. As they tell the story, which is too long to state here, the Protestant has all the right on his side. I don't doubt but the ill consequences of continuing this dispute will soon make them find out ways to accommodate it. Pray find out or invent some news in your country: and tell us whether you and your neighbours don't wish for our return. I think it will be two months first, unless by some stratagem you oblige us to do it sooner. Charles Dormer gives his service to you. His match for fifty pistoles with Lallo is on Monday.

1699, August 29, O. S. Loo.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

By yours of the 12th you surprise me with that extravagant piece of folly, which the little god has made the grave Privy Councillor guilty of. There's no resisting a man's destiny: what the fates will have us do, we must do; and they have picked out my Lord Ferrers to sacrifice himself for the good of his young country neighbours, of which I don't doubt but you'll soon be a partaker. Don't send to wish him joy, but go yourself, the first guest is generally most welcome. Where the carcase is, there the eagles will gather. This affair in part I believe brings that Rattle over to you, but I hope Betty will take care of him. Poor Charles Dormer has been very unlucky and lost two matches to Lallo, the first for 50, the other for 100 pistoles . . . I received those proposals of my Lord Huntingdon's from my brother: they are just such extravagant ones as he used to offer, and what I'm sure my Lord Hastings will not comply with. He has been gone from here some time ago. He promised to let me hear from him, that I might let him know what his father designed, but has not yet. We spent four days last week in reviewing above 20,000 men encamped in the same place as last year. For the number they were admirable troops. On Friday the several regiments exercised, which they did to admiration, especially my Lord Albemarle's Carbineers, both afoot and on horseback, better than you can imagine. The Duke of Zell came hither Sunday night; he has brought his hounds, but very little company. He looks as well as when you saw him. We're just going to hunt with the King's hounds; to-morrow with the Duke's; and I believe will continue four times a week till we go away, which I hope will be now very quickly. My Lord Birron (Byron) and Tom Mansell has been here, and stayed two days. They hunted once, which proved a damned chace, so that I believe they won't give a very good character of our sport.

1699, September 26. — Dr. Charles Davenant to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, at Melbourne.

I hope you will excuse me if I make use of my servant's hand, in answering your letter: but I have been sick myself for some days. I wonder where the newsmongers pick up their reports they send into your country, for the naval preparations you mention I have not heard on: 'tis true I very seldom read newspapers, but if there were anything of truth in this matter, it would so have alarmed every body, that it must have come at last to me, though I am pretty much retired. But, as you say, these reports are spread about in order to feel the people's pulse. The only news here worth your knowledge, and which is now most talked of, is that the King brings along with him a project for settling the succession of Spain, in which the Empire, France, Savoy, Holland, Loraine, with some other Princes and States, are to find their account: and by which all is to be concluded without a war upon the King of Spain's death. But it seems neither the King of Spain nor his Ministers approve of our intermeddling in this matter; for their Ambassadors have delivered in very strong and rough memorials about it to all the Princes concerned, and particularly to our court. I cannot hear in the division of the spoil that anything is to fall to our share but the Canaries. As to our Commissioners in Ireland, 'tis agreed of all hands that the Commission will have very good effects, and even better than we promised ourselves at its constitution. They have well nigh put a period to their business, and are suddenly expected here. . . I think it best that in relation to their elections, our friends should act as if a dissolution was really to happen. 'Tis said these light nights will bring the King over, if not he may stay a fortnight longer. If you are here by the middle of November, you will come time enough, though your friends will be glad to see you sooner. As to what your Sessions have done in relation to vagrants, I can give no judgment, unless I understand more particularly the circumstances of your County: but in the main I think your design very good. Sir, I wish you all health, and success in your plantations.

Coke MSS.

1699, October 12. London.—Edward Goudge to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

I know not what you think of me that I have not given you any answer from Mr. Godolphin as yet. Your housekeeper knows well that I have been many times there to wait on him, but I could never yet speak with them. . . I will try again to-morrow and if I cannot see him I will give you an account, and go no more. And as for my undertaking to pull down the blind I am willing to set men to work and pay them, or order them to be paid by another hand, though perhaps I may not appear in it myself, knowing well that he hath no great kindness for me. The joiners have your work in hand at home: but I have considered that if I alter the two doors in your dining room storey by making them larger, as also those in Mr. Bakewell's house, there seems to me a necessity of making the other two doors in the same storey of the same dimensions, which will advance the charge of the estimate more than 7*l*. I have stayed the joiners' proceedings as to this particular till the next post, when I beg your answer, Sir, I humbly remind you of ordering me a little money, because I am very bare at present.

1699, October 21. London.—Robert Jennens to Robert Coke at Melbourne.

I have come to town, and should be very glad to see you here. I think the country now can't be any longer very pleasant, for the world comes up as fast as may be, and I suppose you are not an enemy to it, therefor will make haste. I have sold all my horses except the old white Northampton gelding. If you can help me in recruits pray do. Let me have an account of Wat Burdet's horse and price. Direct to me at White's Cho: (Chocolate House ?).

1699, October 28. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

I am sorry to hear 'twill be so long before I see you in town, for I fear my business will not let me come into the country this winter. . . You give me so good a character of Wat Burdet's horse, that I must desire you to buy him upon as good terms as you can. More trial than often hunting one cannot well desire of a horse, and I believe Wat Burdet rides twelve stone, as well as myself. Therefore if his temper and manner of going be good, pray let me have him. I assure you he's for myself, which makes me hope Wat will give him me upon his word. If he wants to have a mare covered by any of the King's Barbs, I believe I can procure it for him. I have seen them all in the stable, and some of them seem pretty strong horses. My Lord Stamford is to have one for Leicestershire, and he tells me he'll choose the horse I like best: he is very strong, but small. . . The King went on Thursday to Hampton Court: from thence he goes to-morrow for Windsor, and returns to Kensington on Tuesday. Yesterday I was at Hampton Court. The King's apartment is finished, and I fancy 'twill be made the prettiest place in the world. The King will give us all country apartments: we shall be much there, for he likes the place extremely.

1699, November 4. London.—Charles Godolphin to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, at Melbourne.

In answer to yours of the 30th past this will inform you that it is very true (as you have heard) that I have a covenant on Mr. Bakewell not to build in his garden, as you had done in yours: and finding that the covenants which were before among the neighbours did not prevent it, I thought it necessary to insert a penalty, which goes likewise to the not taking down, without my consent, the fence which he had raised . . . implying a desire to be private in my house, if I could. And I imagine you are convinced that though you have taken Mr. Bakewell's house, no agreement between you can extinguish his covenant with me. However I am averse from going to law, to avoid which, if you are willing to lay the whole of this affair before my Lord Chesterfield, viz. the letters, the presentment of the jury, and the covenant with Bakewell, I am ready to make his Lordship (though I have not the honour to know him otherwise than by his great reputation in the world) sole arbiter of it, and shall submit to whatever his Lordship thinks fit, in the sight of the several papers here mentioned, to determine.

1699, November 16. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

I received a letter from my brother last post, who tells me Wat Burdet is resolved to have fifty guineas for his horse, which I'de venture to give. I wish he was a little higher than fourteen and an inch, but if he is proportionately strong, he may do well enough for a summer hunter. . . . The King was at the House this day, made a very long speech, recommended to the two Houses finishing what they left undone last Sessions, assured them of his good intentions to their interests, and so went to dinner. The House resolved to take his speech into consideration to-morrow sennight, and they adjourned to this day sennight, and so they went to dinner too. Till you and the rest of the members come up to town, we are like to have no sport, therefore pray make haste, and put on the best humour you can, that you may be the better company.

COKE MSS.

1699, November 16. Parslows.—John Fanshaw to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

Hearing by my sister's letter the restraints is out in Needwood, I have inclosed warrants for two brace of does, begging my dear brother's acceptance; and also pardon for so small a present. I hope they may be served before you come up to town. I am sorry you are not like to have any diversion in killing them by reason of your fall, which I doubt will keep you within doors; though according to the account we have of it, I hope not long.

1699, November 23. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

I writ you two posts since to buy Wat Burdet's horse, if you still continued to like him. My brother writ me that he thought his legs a little rounder than ordinary, which makes desire if you have time, and think it proper, to give him a gentle purge or two, before he comes up, lest travelling of him a foul horse may settle his grease, so as to make it difficult to remove; but you and Stephen Allen know best what's fit to be done. The King came from Hampton Court last night, though he likes it better than any place in England. I fancy his complaisance to you Members of Parliament, whilst you sit, will let him go but seldom this winter. Our Drawing room at Kensington has been put off a fortnight, but on Monday it certainly begins. I hope you handsome young fellows may reap some benefit by it. I was a fox hunting yesterday with my Lord Lexington in Windsor Forest. We found a fox, ran him about six miles, earthed him, dug him out, set him down in the middle of the Forest: he ran us two hours and a half afterwards, returned to the place where we found him, and scrat (scratched) into too strong an earth. In all we run him near 25 miles. This is the only foxchase I have seen this three years. Methinks I like it so well that I shall be glad to go with you sometimes, when you come to town. I shall be glad to hear how your leg does.

(1699).—Sir Henry Every to Thomas Coke, a Member of the Honourable House of Commons, London, free.

Mr. Thomas Coke, I received yours, and am surprised to find myself thereby accused of industriously encouraging people to affront you. What I (in conjunction with Mr. Cotchett) acted against young Mr. Fosbrooke and his accomplices was as modestly as the matter would allow; and was upon complaint brought to mine own house upon positive oath of a breach of the peace; and no more than I thought myself obliged to by the oath of my office. And if any of your servants or tenants happened to be concerned therein, 'twas more than I knew till your letter intimated so much to me. I confess when complaints of force and violence come before me, I am more apt to inquire what is done than by whom, being always of opinion that the peace ought not to be broken by anybody. I am the more inclined to believe the information brought before me was true, because the grand inquest at the sessions found the bill against them for a riot. The warrant we signed was for Derbyshire, and if it was executed in Leicestershire, let them answer for it that did it. I will not own what I am not guilty of, nor deny what I could not in justice refuse; and wherever the warrant was executed or the person taken, sure I am he was in Derbyshire when I bound him over. I have been so far from encouraging the Sawley navigators (as you term them) that I am a perfect stranger to their designs, and must take the boldness to tell you that I am no party to or encourager of disputes; nor am I in any other ways concerned in this matter more than the oath of a justice of the peace binds me to, and therefore cannot easily guess why I should be charged of it, having acted no otherwise than as a magistrate against one which was sworn to be an offender before me, and as becomes, Sir, your humble servant.

(1699).—Thomas Filmer to Thomas Coke.

'Tis, Sir, the opinion of most of the friends of the Scotch gentlemen, whose cause you have so generously espoused, that their petition should be delivered to-morrow. Amongst other reasons this is given that my Lord Desert presented Lilistson's yesterday with great success. Therefore we beg of you to be at the House early to-morrow, and we will get as many as we can there to back you.

1699–1700. January 17. Kedleston.—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament at Westminster, London, Free.

Yours, and the Act of Parliament came to my hands but this day, being at Kedlaston, where all are your servants, and Sir Nathaniel [Curzon] thinks himself very much obliged to you about his market. I will order Littill to make all haste to you next week. [As to the Vagrants Bill] I have inserted one way of raising money, but every County has a particular way, so that must be left to the Committee. The ascertaining the constables' charges must be left to the Justices, though they run in extremes, some allowing too much, others too little. The parish where a woman happens to lie in, and the child born a bastard, may be burdened, or cripples may die: now in all these cases it would do well to lay the charge on the county, as their conveyance is. There should be a clause to punish all counterfeiters of passes, if detected by confession, or notoriety, or proof, that they should at the Sessions be burnt in the cheek, as felons, or transported. But I know all these things are difficult. I cannot perceive that in these six months our whole county has spent above 40*l.*: and the six months before there was in most towns in the county 4*l.* or 5*l.*, which would make a very great sum. I shall stay here till Saturday.

1700, January 24, N. S. Montpellier.—John Coke to Thomas Coke.

Having writ several letters to you and my sisters, and hearing nothing of you makes me afraid my letters may have miscarried. I have been at Montpellier this five weeks. I have had as pleasant a journey as I could wish, and as much diversion as one that is in a strange country without language can expect. I must confess it makes me a little chagrin to see a great deal of good company, and only see it: and it is a little uncomfortable to be at the pains of learning French without the assistance of a master. My cousin Frank Hopegood gave me notice of my brother Fanshaw's death, and my cousin Andrew Hopegood informed me of my sister's being safe brought to bed of a son. We have four English families here: the women according to custom cannot agree, and their quarrels afford us a great deal of diversion . . . I design in three weeks to go the tour of Provence: we are not resolved how long to stay in this place. Lord Hastings is gone for Italy. My Lady Calverley and Mrs. Sherrard arrived here the last week. Direct to me at the Posthouse of Montpellier.

1699–1700, January 31.—John Burdett to Thomas Coke at the House of Commons.

On Monday I received the bitch Careless by the hands of Thomas Chadock, in the presence of C. Jennens, Godfrey Clarke, Thomas Gresley and William Ing, and shall take the best care I can of her. It has been so fine a season for hunting that it will take up too much time to tell you what fine chaces we have had, and with great success. I shall only give you a hint of the two last. One of which began at Seal Woods, and after visiting all our parks, led up over the greatest part of Charly Forest, and was the longest endways chace that ever I saw. The last of all carried us between Brodgate and Leicester, where we were at seven at night. . . . This day my brother Walter and sister Dorothy are gone a journey of pleasure to Twamlow.

COKE MSS.

1700, February, N.S. Montpellier.—John Coke to Thomas Coke.

I received yours of the 1st of January. I thank you for the news which you send me. I don't at all fear anything that Scotland can do unto us, nor Ireland neither. I dread nothing but the taxes which you gentlemen of the House of Commons will lay upon us. By the accounts we have of the proceedings of your House the Court seems to have gained the majority, and that the country party may once carry a question they save the courtiers the pains of moving for a supply. King James has been ill of the gout: they say it would have killed any body but him. The people of this country do not take much notice of his illness. The Duke of Berwick is made a Cardinal. Your seal was entire, and with the same impressions. Don't subscribe your name, and write treason: it will signify nothing.

1699–1700, February 1. Braxted.—Henry Ayloffe to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament.

Yours arrived here last night. My warning is so short that I am not secure of a passage, but if possible I will get to London to morrow, and be at Sir Benjamin Ayloffe's in Fenchurch Street, to whom I have now written to find out a parish minister, a churchwarden and two witnesses that know me, with whom I may receive the sacrament on Monday next, in order to take the oaths next morning as you desire. I desired my cousin Mr. Fanshawe to beg your pardon in not waiting on you; our jury not having given their verdict in time we were not discharged till last evening. I intend, God willing, to be at King's Bench Court Monday morning ready to receive your further commands.

1699–1700, February 3. Chilcote.—Sir Gilbert Clarke to Thomas Coke.

Mr. William Browne my neighbour at Stretton who is now in possession of that lordship which lies in both Derbyshire and Cheshire, desires you will put him a Commissioner in both those counties for the land tax. I see your House is very brisk, and you have the kind wishes of several of your countrymen. Pray remember if it be in your power to fix the land tax upon every parish and division in proportion to what it was in 1693, and do not leave it to Commissioners to favour one place and oppress another, and make what alterations they please. We wonder what the contents of the Act are for qualifying Justices of the Peace.

1699–1700, February 7. —Sir R. Burdet Bart. to Thomas Coke at the House of Commons.

For the year 1698 there was three fourths laid on every county in England according to the proportion in Mr. Lowndes his book: for the year 1699 the same proportion: but some Commissioners so proportioned the sum in the several divisions of the County that some must have paid nine shillings and others under two shillings in the pound . . Now if it be explained that every constablewick shall pay according to their proportion in that book all disputes will be at an end, which will be of great service to the country . . .

1700, February 16, N.S. Montpellier.—John Coke to Thomas Coke.

I have been ill of a very severe fit of the gravel, which threw me into a fever. I think I am now pretty well, and I hope to be perfectly so in a very few days . . . The English that are here are very glad to hear that you are like to make the Irish lands pay part of the taxes of this year.

1699–1700, February 17. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke Member of Parliament at Westminster, London. Free.

Mr. Pole and Sir Henry Every, with many more of Apletree and Morleston Hundred met yesterday at Derby to send a letter to you and Lord Hartington to abate them, and lay it on other Hundreds, and threaten ours for one. I am sure it will set the whole country in an uproar. As they paid this last year was but as they gave themselves in on oath : and I dare engage Apletree as cheap as any, and Morleston (taking Derby apart) must needs be easy. Besides this they had the ease in 98 to compensate for what they paid in 99 : and a great deal of what they paid in 99 more than in 98 they laid on particular persons and places. And I am sure our Hundred is the hardest charged in the County.

1699–1700, February 21. Formarke.—Walter Burdett to Thomas Coke, a Member of the House of Commons, Westminster. Free.

Concerning the fishermen who trespassed upon my mother's water, when you was in the country, I had some trouble, but I have made them all pay but two, and those shall either pay or go to the House of Correction. But it has so incensed them that they threaten, whatever it costs them, they will take some water to qualify them to keep nets. They went to Sir Gilbert Clarke to have rented water in Dove, but he being sensible of their design was so genteel as to refuse them. Then three of them went to my cousin Gilbert Thacker and desired to take his water to be let to them at the rate of four pounds a year payable one moiety (a forehand rent) at Christmas. I waited upon my cousin Gilbert Thacker and told him the circumstances : he promised me that if they did not pay their forehand rent at the day he would determine the lease and would let Mr. John Harpur have the waters, who offered the same sum. But notwithstanding they did not pay the money at the day he afterwards took it ; and I think behaves himself so as I would desire to have as little dealing with him as I can. Therefore if you would do your neighbours the kindness to leave him out of the Commission for the Taxes you will amongst others of your neighbours oblige your servant.

1700, April 8.—Walter Burdett to Thomas Coke.

You required a pedigree of the horse I last sold you on the horse's side but I put in the mare's side too. You may tell Mr. Jennens that my cousin Brooke's horse is grandson on the horse's side both to Fixen and Buckingham and on the mare's to my Lord Chesterfield's Strawberry Barb. Many are of opinion that my colt, brother to Mr. Jennens's horse, is finer of his age than his brother : he is so gentle that my boy rides him about Knowle hills, and I have been tempted with money for him so far as twenty pounds at two years and a quarter : but that is not my price, which I'll raise.

1700, April 17. King's Newton.—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament at his house in St. James's Place, London.

. . . The certificates you mentioned in yours about the Vagrants Bill will be very various, and I think no competent set form can be. I am sorry to suspect we shall not enjoy the good company of you and yours this summer. I should be glad to hear it was on account of good husbands for my good friends the young ladies [Mr. Coke's sisters] as to which and every other good thing, to your desire, I hope time will produce cito pede; for nobody is more obliged to wish you well than I.

COKE MSS.

1700, April 25, N.S. Montpellier. John Coke to Thomas Coke.

On Wednesday we leave this town. It is a very pretty place for a stranger to spend some time in. There is a great deal of good company, and consequently a good deal of diversions; but I have been so unfortunate as not to be able to enjoy them. I hope I may live to pay it another visit with better luck. I writ to you about a week ago to give you an account of my journey in Provence. . . I hear that the wine which I sent to Leghorn is shipped off from thence for England twenty days since; if the hot weather spoil it, I hope you will take the will for the deed. I don't think to come into England this next winter; we are divided between the Sun and Paris; but perhaps I may be tempted to try the air of Naples. I love rambling. I want to know who are your Commissioners for your Irish Bill, and what taxes we pay this, and may expect to pay next year. Your letters for me must be directed to be left at Mr. Jean Gandiers, Banquier, at Paris. Pray forward the inclosed by penny post.

1700, May 8. Kings Newton.—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke in St. James's Place.

I think you are a bad husband to eat Oreten's close and Mill close with yours and your Lady's pads. It will bear a great deal of hay, and your horses fat enough in Charnell Park and Gorsty Leys, if you write in time. Grass grows very fast and is good, and a crop will be there in time, and also in Slater's Yard. I think all your horses ought to be soon blooded, having been low in winter, and now growing very fat. Mr. Fisher may bring me some anchovies and capers.

1700, May 26. Stanmore near Edgware.—J. Brydges to Thomas Coke at his house, St. James's Place.

I am very much concerned that the business I had to do upon Thursday last was such as would not give me leave to stay till you were come home; but hope when I come next to town, I shall be able to make myself amends for the satisfaction I was then deprived of, by enjoying longer your good company, than I could at that time have done, had it been my good fortune to have found you within. I long to hear what Captain Cartwright doth, and how he takes the post he is in. By what I can hear, the officers like not the Commission very well, and I believe some of the Commissioners their places much less. I suppose the promotion of Serjeant Wright was a surprise to most, he having hardly been thought of, I believe, for that post, above four days before 'twas given him. I hope he'll execute it to the satisfaction of every body, and answer by that means the character I have heard of him. My countryman Mr. Harly I don't hear to be yet preferred to any great station, no more than Mr. Harcourt, which I cannot but much wonder at, considering what reports and what grounds, as we thought for them, there were before I came out of town. If there is anything I can be serviceable to you in in these parts, pray don't stick to command freely, Sir, your very humble servant.

1700, May 26, N.S. Bourdeaux.—John Coke to Thomas Coke.

I left Toulouse on Thursday last, and came along the Garonne, which is the prettiest river and pleasantest country I have seen in France.

What pity it is that it is not in possession of the English as formerly. I found several letters from our friends in England here: among the rest one from sister Betty which tells me that sister Fanshaw designs to sell her office, and that you are for my buying it. I know nothing of the office; but if you think I can serve my sister Fanshaw, or advantage myself by buying it, I shall very readily do it. The wines of this country are very good, but I should have liked them much better if I had not been accustomed to the stronger wines of Languedoc. The English merchants here tell me that the Pountac wines here are abundantly beyond any of the other wines of this country. I don't know how far I may believe them, because it is their interest to commend them, they having bought that vineyard for three years together. They say that the vineyard yields but forty tuns of wine. Toulouse is a very large town, built with brick, full of lawyers and priests. If you did but see the manner of deciding any questions in this Parliament, and hear the Frenchmen talk of their law suits, you would be better reconciled than you are to the gentlemen of the long robe in England. The Great Canal which joins the Mediterranean and the Ocean is the greatest curiosity in France; it goes from Beziers to Toulouse which is 37 leagues, it is 30 foot broad, 6 foot deep; it is carried upon stone arches over all the rivers that run across it; it is supplied with water from the mountains of St. Feriol, which are about four leagues off the Canal; in one place the canal is carried under a mountain for 200 yards together. I shall be at Blois in a week or ten days. The King of France has ordered the Cardinal Bouillon to render himself immediately at one of his Abbays in France; 'tis thought because the Cardinal has forsaken the King of France's interest, in hopes of being made Pope.

1700, June 12. Bretby.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, at St. Jeames's Place.

. . . Since my being in the country I have been but once abroad in my coach, and I doubt that I shall hardly be able to endure it any more . . . . Sir Henry Every and his lady came hither, and I doubt that he cannot last long, for I hardly ever saw a man more decayed or dejected; but his lady seems to have vigour enough for them both, and is certainly the glory of all the women of fourscore in England. Sir John Harpur and Mr. Harpur, with Mr. Harding and Mr. Houghton were all so kind as to come and dine with me, and we did all of us often remember you in claret, and your absence was lamented by us all. I do return you a thousand thanks for the fine peas that your gardener brought me.

1700, June 26.—Henry Barwell to Thomas Coke.

The petition sets forth the former grant, and that one life is in being, and prays a new grant upon a surrender of the grant in being . . . The private instructions to induce his Majesty are the services of Mr. Palmer, the father of the young gentlemen, who will be represented by Mr. Lowndes. He was the principal manager of the capitation tax in the two great divisions in Middlesex, and apprehends his services may except some return. The gentleman is gone to the Duke of Norfolk with the petition . . Your assistance by some Lords of the Council to-morrow will, I presume, put this matter forward.

1700, June 29. Bretby.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, to be left at his house in St. Jeames's Place.

. . . The news of the capitulation of the Scotch at Darien was very surprising, for they have always been esteemed a valiant and prudent nation, but time and chance happens to kingdoms as to private persons.

COKE MSS.

Among the many new alterations and changes in preferments at Court, I should have been glad to have found the name of a friend of mine mentioned for something that is considerable, but there is a general relation in the affairs of the world, and in my opinion he has reason to expect as much as any man, because his merit is not inferior to any . . . .

1700, July 1, N.S. Tours.—John Coke to Thomas Coke.

We thought to have gone to Saumur to have spent the summer: but hearing there were English at that town, we have made a stop here. Tours is a pretty town and well situated, but there is little company in it: no people of quality at all, and the best of the merchants are gone at this time to their country houses. This town has suffered much by the persecution; but there are still several people that give themselves the airs of people of quality, and they serve my turn as well as if they were really what they pretend to: for they speak good French, and I desire nothing of them but their language. The King of France has lately made the Praitans, that is those who farmed the revenues during the wars and got prodigiously rich by it, refund half their gains. He has set you gentlemen of the House of Commons an example of using your arbitrary power for the benefit of the people.

1700, July 6. Lichfield.—Lord Stanhope to Thomas Coke, at his house in St. James's Place.

. . . Among the many changes at Court, I did expect to hear that some friends of mine might be very well pleased and not sick: but I find at London, modesty is full as great as desert, and the most deserving people won't ask for favours, except it be from the fair sex. Sir Edward Seymor lately went by this place in great pomp for Ireland, and those that were with him told me, with what contempt he spoke of our monarch, but that's no wonder after having said so much to his face. I was with Lord Digby lately who drank your health.

1700, July 13. Stanmore.—J. Brydges to Thomas Coke.

. . . I was much concerned to hear the King was so mightily out of order before he went: but there having been letters once or twice since his landing which made no mention of it, I hope he is perfectly recovered again. If he is not they keep it very secret, since so far from knowing whether he is well or not now, there's scarce any one knew he was ill before his departure. I dread the confusion such a misfortune as his death, especially at so critical a juncture of time, would fling us into. Last post, I received letters which gave me to understand my Lord Lonsdale's life was despaired of: if he dies his party will lose one of the greatest supports they have, since he was certainly a man very eminent for many great qualities, which, joined with the opinion the world had of his integrity, could not fail adding very great strength to the side he was of. The private treaty for settling the succession of Spain is at last made public, and whoever, I believe, reads it will not at all wonder at the endeavours that were used to keep it secret: for in my poor opinion had any one studied to have disposed of that monarchy more to the disadvantage of Europe in general, and us in particular, it would have required I fancy a better headpiece than either of the two plenipotentiaries is master of, to have compassed it. Had they given that crown entire to France, the knavery would have been too gross, and we should quickly, I doubt not, have had another confederacy as strong as the last to have opposed it. But thus giving the greatest part, in appearance, of it to the House of Austria, they think I suppose to lull the world asleep: though they cannot but be conscious to themselves at the same time they have given France not only the best and richest part, but that which will enable him to be master of the rest whenever he pleaseth, and puts him into immediate possession, if he hath a mind to it, of all the Mediterranean trade. But I'll trouble you no more at present upon this subject. I question not but I shall hear your opinion of it in another place before winter is done. I will only in excuse for them, as the only one I can find, say that I do in my conscience believe that one did not know what he did when he signed it, and the other was resolved to carry on to the last that loyal principle he hath so often boasted of venturing his head for the sake of his master. My humble service, pray Sir, to my fellow traveller Sir John and to Mr. How, whom I doubt not but you'll see before you leave that country.

1700, July 19–30. Loo.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place, London. Free. Nath. Castleton.

Our voyage to Holland was but 33 hours; my sickness was enough I thought for so many years. We stayed at the Hague eight days: left it Monday, took Crutberg and South Duke on our way and came hither on Wednesday. The King had no patience but began his hunting yesterday, and with very good success. We had a fine chace of three hours and a quarter, and killed our stag within a mile of home. There's a great complaint to-day of aching shoulders and bruises, but I hope next bout will cure them. I have not been able to get the State of War, nor Tariff yet, but before I leave Holland, I'll serve you if possible. Methinks I long to be at home. I am a little of the moth's temper: when the candle is lighted, is never easy until it gets into the fire. I hope I shan't have so much reason to repent, though all people say the undertaking is dangerous.

1700, July 22.—Thomas Coke to the Lord Keeper (Sir Nathan Wright).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, I have inquired about Mr. Mitchell's estate both in Kent and Surrey. He has above a thousand pounds a year in Kent, some of it lying near Sandwich, the place he serves in Parliament for, and some at a place, I think they call Charlton, near Woolwich. He has likewise an estate at Richmond in Surrey, where he lives, and at Cobsden in the same country, and a great part of Old Windsor is his; but I can't hear that he was formerly in Commission of the Peace in any other county than Surrey and Kent. Your Lordship has I suppose heard his character, and that he is a gentleman very well esteemed in both the counties by most of the gentlemen that know him.

1700, July 24. Burleigh.—Captain Henry Tate to Thomas Coke at St. James's Place.

I am informed by some of Derby that there will be more trials at Leicester about the Derby boats. Also that you were pleased to refer the matter in difference to Mr. Stanhope and Mr. Parker. Now, Sir, my request is you would be pleased to forward the meeting of these gentlemen in order to accommodate the thing before the assizes, with a salvo to give writs. It's my thoughts you will be cast at Leicester, for every body seems to oppose a monopoly; but their other reasons I will give you, when I have the good fortune to see you.

1700, July 28. Formarke.—Walter Burdett to Thomas Coke, Representative of Derbyshire.

The extraordinary favour you did me last Wednesday in sending me a dish of trout to entertain my good friends Sir Nathaniel Curzon, his

Coke MSS.

Lady, daughters and sons, my sister Dorothy, niece Jodrell and brother John, at Knowle hills, has given you the trouble of this my humble and hearty thanks. If wishing and drinking your health will occasion it, I am sure you are very well, as also my Lady Mary, and those that are or have been of my charge. . . I dined last Saturday at Bretby with my Lord Chesterfield, and shall dine with him, my Lord Stanhope and Mr. Wootton to-morrow at Calke. I received a letter dated the 19th instant from Tours from my cousin John Coke.

1700, August 3. Bretby.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, at St. Jeames's Place.

I must return my double acknowledgments both for the favour of your letter and for the inclosed paper of the Treaty of Partition. . . in all probability there may happen so many contingencies before the King of Spain dies, that the measures now taken may then seem very preposterous. The melancholy news of the sudden death of the Duke of Gloster must needs be very surprising to every body, and without doubt will have an influence on all the counsels of Christendom. It seems to me as if heaven designed a new scheme of government for these parts of the world, and that the blood of the Hides should no longer be incorporated in the Royal family; which must needs be a grievance to those who built upon that foundation, and the triumvirate will now be obliged to take new measures.

1700, August 15–26. Loo.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke in St. James's Place, London. Free. Nath. Castleton.

I am favoured with my dear Coke's letter of the 6th, but he writes so very wickedly to a man that's resolved to be wondrous good, that he must excuse me if I condemn his ways, and advise him to reformation. Since matrimony has been so far from mending you, that it has made you rather worse, lest it should have that ill effect on me, that am in a kind of state of righteousness, I could almost resolve to change my design, was not inclination and honour very prevalent. But I hope 'twill prove in the end that my example works upon you, not yours upon me. Your ramble having been so long, I suppose 'twas not without success. If the lady was gained by your journey, I swear impudence is a necessary virtue for the promotion of vice. I don't doubt but by this time you have heard of the conclusion of the Peace in the North. You see what interest and esteem our master hath that can give laws to most part of Europe, and the justice of his proceedings makes them willingly trust him. But I think him a sort of prophet that has least power in his own country: though I hope this next year you gentlemen of the House of Commons will be a little more moderate than you were the last, that we may shew the world we know how to value a good monarch, as well as they. Besides that I think it very necessary as little vexation may be given him as may be, since 'tis your opinion, and I believe 'tis the most part of the nation's, that our happiness depends upon his life; and I believe the way to preserve it is to give him as little disturbance as may be. The King of Poland is left out of the Peace, to shift for himself, though they say France has undertaken to mediate for him. I must return you my thanks for the information of this place in the Savoy. Unless I knew all particulars, I don't know whether 'twould be fit to ask, and before they can come, 'tis ten to one it is disposed of. My Lord Jersey came hither last night. The King on Monday sennight designs for Breda, to see the fortifications of Berg op Zoame (Zoom) which they say will be the finest ever were made, and the garrisons by the way. We shall have no camp this year. They talk of the Duke of Zell's coming in a fortnight. . . Your dog Redcap is spoilt. . . . . I hope we shan't find a commonwealth set up before we return: but I fancy the Duke's death has set a great many heads at work that are inclined that way.

1700, August 20. Bretby.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament.

. . . I return you my most humble thanks for the fine dog you were pleased to send me. . . . You are now but twenty miles off, and my coach (if you please) shall bring you hither and afterward carry you to Wing, or where you please. To-morrow, Sir Nathaniel Curson, with Sir Henry Every, and their wives, &c., intend to do me the favour to dine here, and I am sure we shall all be glad of your company. And besides poor Melborn will take it ill, if you turn your back without giving her a visit.

1700, August 21. London.—William Morley to Thomas Coke.

I should readily embrace, dear Sir, your kind invitation into the country, but business of wonderful importance detains me here. I do not mean Park, Playhouse, or Bartlemy Fair, but such as affords me a great deal of trouble, without one moment's pleasure. Were I left to my own inclination, I should find out Mr. Coke wherever he was, for considering the many satisfactory hours I have spent in his company, I cannot help wishing myself with you, or you here with me in town. . . . The Collector now spends most of his time at Epsom, his father being there and dangerously ill. This will hinder the diversions of the approaching fair, for that without him can never flourish. One piece of news I know will please you. The Princess henceforwards is resolved to keep no maids but what are established toasts. Charlot Godfrey has owned her marriage to young Boscawen; and Mille Thouth is suddenly to be joined to Captain Creed. Di. Kirk and Mrs. Kingdom are to shine at Court in their places till they find kind keepers or fond husbands. Every day affords fresh scandal against the Parliament: pamphlets are very numerous, but none that I have read well writ. Yorkshire has sent up an address, the same in substance as Buckingham and Hampshire: but they have all met with ill success, as I believe we shall have no more from any other counties. Some of the Kentish Petitioners were very ill used by some of the gentlemen of the country at the Assizes; and what was printed concerning the thanks that the Grand Jury gave them is false, and only published to serve a turn. . . . I wish you a good journey and a safe return; and speedily convince your friends in town that you prefer St. James's Place to Melbourne, and a bottle of Le Roche to a pot of Derby. My service to all Mr. Curzons. I am much obliged to your brother for giving me many opportunities of remembering you.

1700, August 29, N.S. Paris.—John Coke to Thomas Coke.

I am much better content with what I have seen since I came into these parts. In the magnificence of the King's houses, and those of his Ministers, one sees a very good reason why the country is so poor. Colonel Seymour, Palmer, and R. Dormer have made a short expedition here; they stayed a fortnight, and are gone back again. The Court goes to Fontainebleau the 20th of September; we shall go thither immediately after, and from thence we shall take our route into Italy.

1700. September 9–20. Loo.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke.

I received yours of the 30th past at a time when our Court was so gay, that had I not known your hand I question if I had not put it into my pocket without reading. One could not have called the ladies numerous in any other place than this, for there was only the two Electresses, a hard named German Princess, who had been handsome some seven or eight years ago, and two tolerable maids of honour. These in part ought to belong to me, but you know I was pre-engaged. And I think 'twas so much better for me. In the attempt I should have found more trouble than success, for they were the hunt of the multitudes. I had like to have forgot an old young Irish lady, mistress formerly to Prince Rupert, who would still have been mistress to another Prince had they had as good an opinion of her as she of herself. All these fine ladies came to on Tuesday night and stayed here till Friday. His Majesty entertained them as gallantly as the shortness of the time and barreness of the place would allow. He made his constant court to them night, noon, and morning in their apartment, which was the Queen's side. He eat in the back stairs without an armchair, with only the two Electresses, the Princess, the Irish lady, the Electoral Prince, and Prince of Hess, the rest of the company dined at the other tables below, all handsomely served. At night was basset; and a concert of Monsieur le Croy and three or four fiddles, which went down very well. I believe the ladies went away very well satisfied with their outward entertainment. How they succeeded as to their private business, or whether they had any, I can't tell; but some thought the old Dowager of Hanover had a mind to have her grandson brought into the succession this session, and that the Electress of Bran[denburg] had an inclination to be Queen of the Vandals, as well as her spouse to be King, which he presses extremely at Vienna, and has spent already a great deal of money there about it. I was in waiting on the King in his progress to Breda, and went to Berg op Zoame. I wont pretend to describe to you those new fortifications, because I don't know how. When I come home, if you ask me any questions, I'll answer them as well as I can. I'll only tell you that the manner is wholly new; and that they have made the counterscarp so that it covers all the works in the ditch, and till a lodgement is made on top of the counterscarp, there's no battering the wall. They are mending and adding to their fortifications everywhere, and keep their troops in so very good order that I believe they have very little apprehensions from the French. Upon the recommendations of some of our gentlemen the Elector of Bavaria has agreed to give me 150 guineas for my young horse. I was loath to part with him, but 'tis too much money to be refused. I am glad your grey horse came off with such flying colours; I hope you'll meet with honester people and the same fortune at the next plate. I wish I could tell you that we were leaving this place, but as yet there is not a word said of it. I begin to be impatient, and if the King does not come away by the end of this month, I believe I shall ask his leave to go before, for such a mistress and such a friend will never let a man be easy, when absent. You must allow me to be a little in rapture now the time is pretty near that the transports will be drawn all away, and what will follow only the Lord and married folks know. All I wish is that my mistress prove like my friend, for then I'm sure I shall never covet my neighbour's goods. In short I long to see you that we may talk of everything, and that I may give you fresh assurances that I am still, as I ever was—that is, sincerely yours.

COKE MSS.

(1700.) September 15. Paris.—T. Bennett to Thomas Coke in St. James' Place.

I was in hopes I should not have had any more occasion to have troubled you again with an account of your brother's sickness, but the misfortune of his distemper is such that a man who is subject to it is never sure of not having a fit, let him seem to be never so well in health. It is with all the concern in the world that I tell you he is now very ill of the stone and a fever together. You will see by the inclosed, which I have made the Physicians write for your satisfaction, how he was first taken ill, and how they have managed him all along. All that I can tell you here is that on Thursday before he went for the Doctor, the waer works played at Versailles for my Lord Kingston: we went there, and as we was in the Garden he complained of a pain in the kidneys, and that his head ached a little, which kept us there all night. He was pretty well the next day, and I heard no more of any thing that ailed him till Monday morning. Not resting well that night, he sent for Dr. Shadwell, who is physician to my Lord Manchester, a very ingenious young man, and one who has practised with mighty good success amongst all the English that have been here. What he did to him you will see by the inclosed. When he began to be worse, I sent for Dr. Helvetius, one who has a mighty reputation here, and Dr. Constable, an Englishman, who is physician to King James. They both approved of what Dr. Shadwell had done. My Lord Exeter had them and nobody else all the time he was ill. I've got an English nurse that never stirs from his bedside: I sat up with him myself last night, to see that they gave him things as they should do . . . As there is nobody in the world who has a greater kindness to your brother than myself, you may be assured I shan't let him want for any help this place affords. Dr. Helvetius has not set his hand to this paper, because he does nor understand English: but he has agreed with the rest in every thing they have done. COKE

(Inclosure with the foregoing letter.)

(1700.) September 15. Paris.—John Constable, John Shadwell.

Upon Monday, September 5, Mr. Cooke was feavourish, and complained of a paine in his head. Upon bleeding, vomiting, and giving him some other gentle evacuations, his temper was much better, and by the Fryday morning following his head was intirely free, and he had no other complaint, but that of being weake: when the same day, in the afternoone he was of a sudden seized with a fitt of the stone (which it seems he had been often subject to) and had a suppression of urine for some houres. The extremity of the paine heated him very much, flung him into a looseness, and that night his head began to be out of order. Upon giving him proper glisters and ptisanes, the paine abated; he urined freely, and the next day he voided two stones: but by that time being delirous, he was scarce sensible of paine upon voiding the biggest stone, which was so large it must of necessity have given him very much, if he had not had that stupor upon him. We blooded him in the arm, and since in the foot, to disengage his head and open the urinary passages. We have applied blisters to him to make as considerable a revulsion as we can. Last night he was in a very ill condition with his extreme parts cold and his pulse very weake and low: but on applying him all night with cordials and alexipharmacks we find his temper better this morning: his pulse raised and the stupor lessened. But the alteration is not yet so great as to make us think him out of danger.

1700, September 18. Paris.—Thomas Bennett to Thomas Coke.

I told you by the last post of your brother being very ill, and I sent you his case which his physicians drew up. I am glad I can tell you by this that he is still amongst us. [Describes stages of a malady, probably typhoid fever.] His fever is very violent upon him, and he has a hickup and twitchings in his face, which makes them fear convulsion. He has these generally very bad in the night, and when I don't sit up with him, they never fail to call me three or four times, thinking he is dying. He is better this morning and more sensible, so that the doctors hope that if he does not bleed again, nor has not any pain with his stone he may still do well. He has now and then violent sweats and is in one now. He sleeps a little this morning.

COKE MSS.

1700, September 22, N.S., Wednesday.—Thomas Bennett to Thomas Coke.

Mr. Coke is extremely mended since I writ last post: his senses began to come to him on Monday, and by yesterday morning he had them perfectly. . . . The physicians say he is in all appearance out of danger, but they can scarce ever say so of a man who is troubled with the stone as long as he has anything like a fever hanging upon him . . . The physicians are all three of them mightily against his going into Italy. . . . They design to put him into a course of asses milk about three weeks hence. I believe it is the greatest escape that ever anybody had, considering how many accidents he had: he raved for eight days together, and in all that time did not get an hour's sleep: they say that if they had not stopped his bleeding just as they did, he must have died. . . . My Lady Easter, her son, and most of her servants are sick, but they are all on the mending hand: her steward is dead of a high fever, he was sick but five days. My Lord Scarsdale leaves us to-morrow and goes strait for England. My Lord Kingston does not talk of going home yet: he designs to carry some of the language along with him. Mannering says he'll go in a week, being tired of Paris. Your brother is not so well to-day as he was yesterday by a good deal: I have sent for the doctors to him. Shadwell is not well, and has not been here to-day.

1700, September 24. St. John's College (Cambridge).—Anthony Hammond to Thomas Coke.

I have been upon a ramble, that the inclosed did not come to my hands till very lately. . . . I think to continue in these parts till towards the middle of next month; and I should be extremely glad of the favour of seeing you here, and if Mr. Brydges comes up, I shall have a great hope of it. We don't think the Parliament will be dissolved, nor we have no certain account when the King will be here.

(1700), September 25. Paris. Thomas Bennett to Thomas Coke.

I told you at the latter end of my last letter that your brother raved a little. He had just then a fit of his fever upon him, and as soon as it was over he had his senses perfectly well again. . . . He is now so well that he is quite out of danger. They give him the Jesuit's powder every day to carry away all the remains of the fever, which is very little. I hope by the next post he will be able to write to you himself. He finds himself that he shan't be able for Italy this winter. As soon as he is well enough, I shall leave him and go forwards for Lyons, after I have stayed two or three days at Fountainbleau.

1700, October 4. Bretby.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, to be left at his house in St. Jeames's Place.

. . . We have had this summer such plenty of peaches nectarines and grapes, that I do almost repent the having made my new walls, but I confess that the best fruit we have had has not been so good as it has been in former years. The commendation that Mr. B. is pleased to give my gardens is (I doubt) as little deserved as the encomiums he makes of his cousin's splendid way of living, which I have hardly faith to believe. . . . I believe you have heard of Sir Henry Every's death. I am told he hath left his lady 700*l.* a year jointure and 6,000*l.* in money. Mrs. Ann is to have 80*l.* annuity, and if she marries 3,000*l.* Both the sons have little left them, and by consequence are unsatisfied, and the youngest talks of going to law. . . . Mrs. Ann is also dissatisfied, which shews that it is as hard to please people dying as living, and therefore it is best to please oneself.

1700, October 7. Bramcoate.—Sir R. Burdet, Bart., to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place, London.

I had my house filled with friends when I received yours, and I think that a greater brag than yours about fox hunting. I have had no sport this year; and yet think that I can brag that I have fine hounds but have no time to follow them. My lads and self intend to dine with Jennens this day; he hath very indifferent health. I am glad to hear you begin to furnish your house: I wish your Lady and yourself all the happiness this world will afford. I have got a flock of children without a wife, which furnisheth me with business. This with my attendance upon the House of Commons will take much of my time this winter: and unless I prosper well in these things, I shall want courage to attempt the widow Every in the spring. By this you will find there is great need to keep up the mettle of your servant.

1700, October 14. King's Newton.—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke in St. James's Place.

I do in the first place heartily congratulate you and Lady Mary for her expectation, and wish her all the satisfaction in the world and a fine boy or girl, but not two. I hear you have been at Sir John Walters; had I known your stay there I would have made a tour thither. I hear Sir John has been in our country, but did not go or send to Foremark: and that Sutbury [Vernon of Sudbury?] returned his visit with the ladies, and had the parson along; which made it current that they are married, but I told them Sir John was for no parson to that ceremony with that fair lady. 'Tis beginning to spread that my Lord Rosse designs to stand for our county. I heard say from Bakewell Race that the parson of their house said so. I am yours and my Lady's by a thousand obligations.

1700, October 26. Bramcoat.—Sir R. Burdet Bart. to John Coke in St. James's Place London.

It will be strange to me if I find an illnatured person in your family, and have no thoughts that I can divert myself better than amongst you, if I come to London: which may give you a caution how you converse with such troublesome people. I have added to my family some children in adversity, and yet it might have been much worse with them, had their parents lived. I shall be pleased with the good fortune of my namesake, having a good opinion of all his brothers and sisters. On Monday I am to meet the old gentleman and his Calk companions, to run a bag fox which we earthed on Wednesday last. We have killed none as yet; the weather is extreme stormy with us, and few foxes near me, so it goeth hard with your servant.

1700, November 4. Formarke.—Walter Burdett to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, in St. James's Place, London.

I was last week at Langford and Kedleston, with some other of your friends particularly Mr. Major of Derby, to whom I shewed that part of your letter which concerned the Navigation. He says Parker and

Coke MSS.

Bingham are no way concerned for the Corporation of Derby, and I know no other reason of showing them respect, since they have trifled with you. I wish joy to my chapman Mr. Jennens and you all happiness you can desire.

1700, November 4. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke.

Since my last to you I saw Sir Edward Coke. I desired him to write to you and advise. He said he thought if you could meet with Sir John Leveson, who he says is very much your friend, he thinks he could get matters set right with Lord Rosse so as not to oppose you in Derbyshire. I spoke to him about what I heard Mr. Pole took ill, which is about the land tax: he said Mr. Pole was in the wrong, and you not to blame in it, your House having before overruled it. However I think you had better write to Pole and his uncle Dr. Coke, and endeavour as far as you can to settle the matter with him. I'll take a time this light moon to go to Radborne, and give him a touch of it. If you have no acquaintance with Mr. Port and Captain Beresford, get Sir Gilbert Clarke to write to them. Sir Henry Every I reckon you have sure by my Lord Ch: (Chesterfield). And who you have in Apletree hundred and Wirksworth and the Peak that you think you can engage you will see amongst the Commissioners names in an old Act. I think you may write to Robert Revell, the High Sheriff, and his father Wilmott, without any hazard. The proper times for this I cannot describe, because all things are as they are taken. But if my Lord Rosse should set up, speaking in time may furnish gentlemen with an answer, and may make them set up my Lord Rosse elsewhere. You will I hope have an opportunity of making Lord Ferrers your friend. My Lord Hunt (Huntingdon) yesterday, speaking of Leicestershire, said he heard that my Lord Rutland had sent to all his friends at Leicester town to reserve their votes both for town and country, saying he did not know but he might have friends or relatives to recommend to them. I said nothing to Sir N. C. (Nathaniel Curzon), but you will have an opportunity of seeing Robert Chamberlin who will be in town in a week or two, and you may send him a compliment about his Bill by Robert Chamberlin. Sir N. C. is sensible of your friendship the last Session.

1700, November 6. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke in St. James's Place.

I think I have all this while omitted Mr. Sacheverell. If he will act for you 'twill conduce very much, for the old savour of his father sticks by the mob. Excuse these impertinent troubles, really proceeding from extreme friendship.

1700, November 9. Pishobury.—Arabella Lady Wiseman to Mrs. Clerke.

I received yours, dear Madam, with the inclosed from Mr. Coke, which I have now answered. He seems to think the Lord Stamford may be brought to change the life: so my son shall come up the next week and wait upon him, to make some conclusion of it. I am sorry to hear of the death of the good Bishop of Ely.

1700, November 11. Longford.—Sir Edward Coke to Thomas Coke.

I return you my hearty thanks for your favour in getting my name struck out of the roll by using your interest with my Lord Keeper. I beg the continuance of it in case none of the three should be pricked by the King and that I should be in danger. . . . I desire that you would be pleased to frank some covers for Fox bookseller in Westminster Hall, in which he sends me the Postman and the Parliament Votes. [Reflections on the probable consequences of the death of the King of Spain and on the necessity of maintaining the balance of power.] Pray let me know the character of our new Secretary, and if the complexion of the Court be any way changed. Will not the death of the Duke of Gloucester make the Parliament to look into the succession, and if the King and the Princess both die without issue, where will they look for a successor? I wish we might have the education of him, whoever it be, before he be seasoned with principles destructive of the true English interest.

1700, November 20. Stanton.—William Barnes to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place.

I received a hamper of sack, which Mr. Wootton writ me word that you was so kind to send me: which I return you many thanks for: it was the best sack that in my life time I ever did drink. On Saturday last I went out with a detachment of my colliers a shooting, and we killed nigh twenty woodcocks, which I have made bold to send them to you potted this week by the carrier. If they prove good in eating it will be a great satisfaction to him that is your most humble servant.

1700, November 28. Thorpe Constantine. — William Inge to Thomas Coke.

The pleasure of the field, his friends, the bottle or the book never pleased old Horace more than the favour of sometimes letting me know I am not altogether a stranger to your thoughts. You need not recommend me to that valued acquaintance for sauce to the entertainment. What his notion of business was I know not in his country seat, but if I might guess at his commerce with his catalogue of mistresses, his Pyrrha, Lydia, Tyndaris, Glycera, Chloe, Lalage, Barine, Lyce, Cynara, Phillis, Phryne, Inachia, and whom you are pleased to remember, his Neœra, by one I have unfortunately fallen into, I could easily fancy his hands were full. For really, Mr. Cook, I must own myself "Sub juga ahenea sævo mitti cum joco, Unde expedire non amicorum queant Libera consilia nec contumeliæ graves, Nec alius ardor." But his were lusts and ought not to profane the sacred name of Love: and methinks his own description of them in the third Satyre of the second book suits them very well "Hæc si quis, tempestatis prope ritu Mobilia et cœcâ fluitantia sorte, laboret Reddere certa sibi, nihilo plus explicet, ac si Insanire paret certâ ratione modoque." But anyone who knows what that noble passion is can never think he loved Neœra, when he tells her "Nec semel offensæ cedet constantia formœ Si certus intrarit dolor." . . . But Sir, I hearily beg your pardon for this unreasonable digression: but Love and Horace make me oft a transgressor in my most serious applications. Therefore I hope this will be excusable, and you will be warned to mention them no more to me; since you see you fought a fool with edged tools in doing so. I am mightily pleased to hear my Lady Mary is likely to produce our country a successive Patriot, which we all expect from the happy conjunction of a Stanhope and a Cooke, and long for. May he as well deserve to be our darling as you do, and we I am sure must be the gainers.

1700, December 3.—Charles Davenant to Thomas Coke, Knight to the Shire for the County of Darby, Darbyshire.

. . . The new Baron, of which I suppose the news has reached you, does indeed a listle surprise people; but I neither think it a mark of favour to him nor of kindness to his party, and I rather look upon it as a scab broken out upon the lips, which is a sign the fever is going off. Mr. Hammond expects your directions about Sir Gilbert Clark; his opinion is, 'twill be best for you to join with him. I have made use of the little interest I have to recommend your concerns. I continue still in the same mind that there will be a new Parliament. As to my own election 'tis near and fixed. Frank Stonehouse my partner has declared for me and joined with me, and a very great majority have signed a letter inviting me to stand . . James Craggs kisses your hand, so does your most affectionate servant and real friend.

Coke MSS.

1700, December 4. Golden Square.—J. Brydges to Thomas Coke in Darbyshire.

According to your commands I was to see Mr. Pierrepoint . . I left your letter for him; I hope he will not fail to espouse your interest though I question not by this time you have secured yourself so well as to have no occasion of it. The dissolution grows more and more certain every day . . . whether the writs will be issued before or after Christmas is not yet determined. Mr. Lowns is not yet out, nor any other remove made, which they say keep my Lord Godolphin from taking his place as first Commissioner at that Board. Mr. Montague being made Lord Halifax hath much dejected his friends; and though the place he chose to hide himself in might be proper enough for that purpose (were there not so many guilty ones there already), yet the title is too well known in the House of Commons to let him lie long concealed. The King of France hath given a very surly answer to the D[utch] Ambassador, bidding him tell his masters that they had best immediately acknowledge the Duke of Anjou to be King of S[pain] if they had a mind to his friendship and protection.

(1700), December 9.—Mrs. Mary Fanshawe to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

Dear Brother, I hear Mr. Hancock designs to write to you this post for further orders to sell my offices. He hath played the rogue sadly with me, and I hear forged several letters in my name; so this is to desire you not to give him any encouragement in that matter. I am sorry I am forced to give you this trouble at a time when you are so full of business [election for the County]. I wish all matters may go to your satisfaction, and that we may soon meet in town. Brother Jack is at Shingle Hall.

1700, December 10.—Charles Davenant to Thomas Coke.

. . Last Sunday my Lord Rochester and Lord Godolphin was made of the Cabinet, and my Lord Godolphin takes his place in the Treasury to-morrow . . . The Whigs at present are all for "To your tents, O Israel" and are very full of a war. I am with Mr. Moor and Mr. Craggs, who kiss your hands.

1700, December 12. Ashborne.—John Beresford to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

. . When I parted from you at Kedlaston (not having time to put you in mind of Mr. Okeover and Mr. Mennill) I called of the latter at Bradley as from you, excusing your not writing upon want of time. He was shy and took consideration, by which I guess he is wrapped up in the Kedlaston interest. . . I was thinking Mr. Bate of Foston should be applied to. I hope my little interest in these parts does not decline and will be managed to advantage. Last night came Mr.

Manners' gentleman to this town, had a letter to Sir William, but no credentials to ———. He sent for two or three of the town people to drink a bottle upon such an account: they sent answer back, they were engaged, and came none. To tell the particulars of his story, Frequent solicitation to it by the gentlemen of the country, Protestant Religion, freedom from taxes, peace and many fine things, were tedious. I am told to say he returned from these parts re infuctâ. I seconded yours to my brother Shallcots, but the interest there lies very remote: it requires the greater and closer application about Derby. Will not Sir Nathaniel be brought in? I am glad to find you have hope from the Mayor, and hope others will fall in. Mr. Gilbert surely may do service and Mr. Mundy in that town. But Mr. Savile's tenants in these parts I hear are solicited by the gentleman where you lodged from Haddon.

1700, December 14. London.—Charles Davenant to Thomas Coke.

. . My Lord Chief Justice Treby died yesterday morning of an asthma. The voice of the people has designed Mr. Attorney General to that place. Pray God it may be so well filled. The underling Whigs report that my Lord Keeper is to be Chief Justice and my Lord Somers is to be restored to the seals: but if you will have my opinion things do not go that way. Monsieur Tallard is arrived. 'Tis certain he had but a cold reception. Every body here concludes the dissolution will be declared in Council next Thursday, after which 'tis said 'twill be ten days before the writs issue out, that men may not be surprised in making expenses contrary to the last Act. I heartily commiserate your sad condition to be in the country these bad weeks; but I fancy you will find Darbyshire more pleasant even in winter than the House of Commons will be in a summer season. For though it be now sixteen years ago I still bear in memory the evil smells descending from the small apartments adjoining to the Speaker's Chamber, which come down into the House with irresistible force when the weather is hot. Pray give my particular respects to every hogshead of Darbyshire Ale in your cellar, for 'tis a liquor that even excels what we drink at the Goat.

1700, December 15. Hinchinbrook. — Anthony Hammond to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, at his house near Darby.

I left Cambridge on Thursday last, and my interest there secure beyond the hazard of a disappointment. I writ to Mr. How to tell him it might be necessary to engage Sir Gilbert Clark to stand. When I receive your commands, in that or any other concern of yours I shall with pleasure obey 'em. My Lord Rochester will not go in some months into his station in Ireland. Things at Court seem run into the channel we expected they would when you left the town. The King gave the French ambassador a reception favourable enough, though some reported it otherwise.

1700, December 16. London.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke.

I am much satisfied to find that my little interest may be serviceable to you, and that you are pleased with the endeavours of Mr. Peeters . . . You have two such powerful competitors, that nothing ought to be neglected: and though you can receive no prejudice by the failing of your pretensions, yet there will be glory in prevailing against two such candidates. I doubt that this matter, if you carry it, will occasion great heartburnings and envy . . and that you may always be rather envied than pitied is the wish of, Sir, your most humble servant and most affectionate father.

Coke MSS

The Lord Rochester was with me this morning and owns his going Governor of Ireland. . . . . It is a secret (but I believe true) that the Prince of Wales his guards were doubled upon the Lord of Shrewsbury's coming to Paris, there being a suspicion, that his Lordship was sent over a purpose to steal him away and bring him to the Parliament. . . .

1700, December 17. Yoxhall Lodge.—Thomas Wright to Thomas Coke.

I am sorry to find by yours that some person either has mis-informed you or has mis-interpreted my words, for all that ever I said of that kind was some time ago and was upon the account I heard you were for laying the last year's tax by way of train soldier, which would have fallen very heavy upon the gentlemen in the Peak. How I shall give my vote in case of a new Parliament I shall not declare till I know who stands. I suppose you can remember whether at that time you were for laying the tax that method. If so then the words need no justification. If otherwise I do assure you I was not the author nor contriver of them, and as I have ever acted in the country with all equalness I should not go about the country as you seem to say to do a gentleman a prejudice whom I have a respect for.

1700, December 17. London.—Captain Henry Tate to Thomas Coke.

Inclosed is what you desired, pray send it by a good hand, that can make the most out. Our good friend in Lincolns Inn Fields heartily wishes you success. The council of Sunday last was for a new Parliament. I hope you will take care of that not to be tricked. If it can in any wise consist with your honour, pray agree with the Derby men; I am certain you will not have their interest without it. I am heartily sorry you did not do it when I desired you. Pardon my scribbling for I have taken a bottle too much with some good friends of yours that wish you well as doth your humble servant.

1700, December 19. (London.) — Sir John Leveson Gower to Thomas Coke.

Your letter was too obliging, too great a mark of your friendship not to be received by me with all the pleasure imaginable. I am concerned I have had so little power to serve you; however, I persuade myself you will believe I used all the endeavours I could to prevent the trouble you have given you in your election. We were alarmed here for two or three days with the news of your being joined with Mr. Curzon. My Lord Devon I find wonders at your proceeding and denies positively all the part you have heard he has had in this business. You have all very unfortunately mis-understood one another throughout. My Lord Ross I find went out of town, possessed that you had told him the day before that, if he stood, you would not. I am confident there is a more extraordinary mistake, since you have both been in the country, for I saw my Lord Ross's letter to his wife, wherein after telling her the great opposition he found, he complains of being hardly dealt withal by you, or your friends, in first giving out that he did not stand, and since that what he doth is without his father's consent. I am sorry this matter has proceeded so far as to leave your friends no room to hope for an accommodation I should have thought myself very happy if I could have been the means of preserving a good understanding between families I have so great a respect for. The King of Sweden with 15,000 men has relieved Narva, routed the whole Muscovite army, taken all the cannon bag and baggage; the Duke of Croy and vast numbers are prisoners.

1700, December 19.—J. Brydges to Thomas Coke, in Darbyshire.

I stayed thus long that I might be able to send you a certain account whether and when we shall be dissolved. I assure you that the proclamation for our dissolution comes out to-night. . . I was extreme sorry to hear my Lord Ross joined Lord Hartington and more concerned to understand you could not prevail upon either Sir Gilbert Clark or Mr. Curzon to stand with you. But still I hope you are in no danger, and doubt not but you have some other place secure to you, in case you should have the ill fortune not to succeed in the county. Mr. Hammond hath fixed his interest at Cambridge, and some say Mr. Prior desists. I go down on Wednesday to Hereford, where I believe I am very secure.

1700, December 19. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

I am in waiting, and am just come with my master to town, who is holding now a Council at Kensington, where I can assure you will be resolved the dissolution of this Parliament; and I suppose you will have the proclamation out in a day or two, which I hope will confirm you in a longer Sessions than if this sat. Though it's mightily talked of in town as if my Lords Ross and Hartington had positively resolved to throw you out: but I say you'll prevent them. Here is news come to-day by the Holland post that the Swede has absolutely routed the Muscovite army, and made a prodigious slaughter. My wife and I must give you a world of thanks for your kind present. I wish I could tell how to serve you here.

1700, December 24. Derby.—William Franceys, Mayor of Derby, to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

You never shall have any damage in your election, for the money that is spent in drinking Mr. Coke's health: which I take care shall be paid before the company leave the house. . . . They can never have it in their power to harm you, for who I employ have monies to drink with a friend as they see occasion. Indeed so little is expected and so little spent that 'tis not material to mention. The Lord Marquess came to town at 7 last night and went for Hopton to dinner this day. There is great endeavour to stagger the interest that is made for you, and I think as great to protect it. I think to see you in a day or two.

1700, (December) 25.—Captain W. Francis to Thomas Coke.

I hope I shall be so happy to be remembered by you when you see the Duke of Ormond. If his Grace has never a vacancy where there is a horse, I hope I shall be entered as one of those that do duty on foot with half pay, for faith, Sir, I am very much necessited: and the pay that was given us by Parliament is already fallen short, so we must be contented with six months for a year. There was a gentleman the last week admitted in the troop that is shorter than I by an inch, but he had the good fortune to have as much as bought him a horse. I hope I shall not suffer for that fault.

1700, December 26. London.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke at his house at Melbourn by Darby Bagg.

My having waited this day at dinner on his Majesty at Kingsington makes me willing to impart to you the little news I heard there, which is that the writs are ordered to be sent down this night by the post,

Coke MSS.

His Majesty mentioned at dinner the great victory that the King of Swedeland has certainly had over the Muscovites, and said that it was a glorious beginning for a young king, who will be 19 years old on the 20th day of June next. The Swedish Envoy at the same time told his Majesty that the King of Swedeland had won three battles of the Muscovites, the first on Monday, the second on another army on the Tuesday, that he praised God and gave thanks on the Wednesday, and that on the Thursday he fell on the Muscovites in their trenches, and utterly defeated all their forces, and taking all their cannon. The young King for certain charged twice in person very bravely that day at the head of his regiment of guards: but the Zare went away two days before the battle. . . .

1700, December 30. Sprotbrough.—Sir Godfrey Copley to Thomas Coke.

The very minute I had the honour of yours I was just sending a letter to one Mr. Banks of Sheffield, who hath a great acquaintance in your country to try if he could do you any service. As to news in our parts, we shall have Sir John Kay in the room of my Lord Down. We shall have at York one Thomson, who will be for the first place they will give him in the room of Toby Jenkyns. My brother Cook gives over, and I think Sir A. Danby at Aldborough, where I have some interest, which I make as far as it will go for one Mr. Arthington, and I have a young nephew, a younger brother too, one Godfrey Wentworth, who my sister sets up there, and opposes Arthington as she did before. At Northallerton there is some dispute between Milbank and one Lassells, that I doubt will not be right. I shall rejoice to hear of your good fortune.

(1700, December.) Kings Newton.—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke.

[Endorsed by Mr. Coke "Concerning Nottinghamshire Election."]

I forgot today to get you and Lord Stanhope to enjoin the two Ashby Carriers to go to Nottingham to vote for Gervase Eyre. I'll write to Mr. Wilkins, and speak to Sir John [Harpur]. If you think convenient, move it to my Lord Chesterfield. They are very factious sparks, but if resolutely attacked I hope they will give way. Mr. Eyre has assured me he is as much yours as I am. Mr. Gregson is just come, and has the writ with him. Friday or Saturday will be the Mayor's day: ours the 23rd.

1700.—Captain H. Cartwright to (Thomas Coke).

I humbly offer this memorandum to your consideration. As it is demonstrable in small bodies, it may be practised in great. Our English paymasters have, by their own acknowledgments, received by millions more than the full pay of the army, and established contingencies: but still the army unpaid, and the nation brought in debt every year. You are now sending 10,000 men, whose pay and contingencies amounts to 200,000*l.* or near it. If the Parliament make a strict appropriation and appoint a Paymaster, and oblige him to return an account to the Commissioners every two months, with regimental vouchers, signed by all the Captains that they have received in full, for pay and contingencies, for themselves and companies, and the Commanding Officers vouchers for any contingent money, as bounty &c. The regimental paymasters shall be obliged to give such vouchers to the Paymaster; and by such methods it will be impossible for the Paymaster to defraud the Army, or the officers the men, or to bring the nation in debt: which will have a contrary effect if left to the former managers, both to Army and Country.

1700–1, January 11. London.—Anthony Hammond to Thomas Coke.

I received yours at Cambridge. My election was over on Friday was sennight, without any opposition. On Monday I was at Huntingdon, when Mr. Charles Boyle was chosen, Mr. Pedley desisted before the poll was over, and as I am told, Mr. Wortley Montague paid his charges. Dr. Davenant is chosen, which we all rejoice at. I am afraid Sir Walter Clarges will lose it at Westminster, Mr. Vernon and Cross will carry it.

1700–1, January 14. London.—Lady Mary Coke to Thomas Coke at his house at Mell Bourn, by Darby Bagg.

Though I ought to be a little sorry, my dear may have been a little dissappointed in the affairs of the election, yet give me leave now to rejoice that I may hope to have you soon with me, which is the real pleasure of my life; and also that I may reasonably expect to have more of your company than if you had been Parliament man. . . . I was vexed to hear by Mr. Fisher's letter that the Duke of Newcastle's agents was wholly against you, for it proves him to be as false as covetous. But I hope, my dear, that Fisher's letter may be in a mistake, especially if you do not think of coming back this ten days. . . . How tedious any absence from you appears cannot be expressed at this distance, but expect when you come to be deafed with it. I believe if my little cribber could speak 'twould do the same. . . . I carried Norboon and eldest Tye last night to her Highness, who was extremely civil, and offered me a stool to sit down and play at basset; but I refused and told her I durst not venture for fear of loving it too well. I own though I had a mind once for I had my Grannum's two guineas in my pocket. But this morning, I have, for fear of temptation, laid out a great deal of it in quilt and pillows, I think the finest in town without vanity. There was a great beauty at Court last night, Lord Peterborough's daughter, but so ill bred, she could not make a curtsey. Captain Every makes love to la B. . . most violently, and really she is charming. The Duke of Bedford has presented Mrs. Ophell with a set of gold plate. Duke of Devonshire, though too young for Council, yet would not be thought too cold for Trull makes love with blind eyes behind the scenes every night, and has made a song to her in the name of Ophelia. The bell rings for my letter, and makes me lose the happiness of fancying I am talking with my dear, to whom I am sincerely ever your most affectionate wife.

1700–1, January 18. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

Though you have lost your election, I am glad 'tis over, for I am in hopes of seeing you soon in town. My brother writes me word you might be convinced of having a number of good friends in the County, and though you had not success I fancy you would not change your party with either of the other gentlemen. The King has so many young hounds at Loo, that he is resolved to send no more over, but what are thorough hunters. I believe he'd be glad of them next year, but unless you had a pack 'twon't be worth while to keep whelps. We have had violent storms, and hear of a great many ships cast away on the French coast. The French ambassador talks of going away.

COKE MSS

(1700–1), January 19. London.—Lady Mary Coke to Thomas Coke at his house at Mellbourn, by Darby Bagg.

I began to grow very uneasy that two posts had passed without the happiness of hearing from you: at last I began to hope that you might be setting forward hither, but the Duchess of Devonshire informed me that Lord James Cavendish had told her that the day you dined with them all, you spoke as if you did not think of coming till next week, and that you called in Gloucestershire. I hope 'tis a mistake, and that my dear will make all the haste back to me that is possible. . . . I hope the next post I may be assured of the day you design me the happiness of seeing you. I am sorry to hear by the account Lord Scarsdale has given my father that the Lords have dealt so meanly in the election with you as not only to shut out Mr. Perpoints (Pierrepont's) votes, but to bring in people that were not freeholders. But since my dear came off with so much honour, I am very well satisfied, though my father was mightily for your being chose for any borough, that the A . . . family might not have their ends, which has been so long in cogitation. Lord Chinay [Cheyne] is chose for two places, and to be sure would be glad to dispose of it well. Sister Fanshawe has been in town this week, and lodges next door to the Jocalet [Chocolate] house: how long she continues there I know not, but I believe she is very busy about the life. I have her company every day at dinner, and am sorry there is not room for her to lie here: but the nursery is not yet fitted, and I must keep that room empty that it may be neat. I am much obliged to old Mother Pye for she takes violent care of me, and desires I will not be too much overjoyed when you come. . . . I have not set the chimney piece till you come, because there is some wood or wainscot which I do not know whether I may meddle with or no. Lady Baltimore is dead. Lord Anglesey very ill of a complication of diseases: his girl likely now to live, and do well. Poor Mrs. Creed, that was so ill, says 'tis for love of that filthy fellow Colonel Rols: they endeavour to make her believe he is dead. Staring Creed is come back, and has brought with him for rarities a Marmoset and a parrot. . . .

1701, January 19, N.S. Paris.—John Coke to Thomas Coke.

I believe you are busy in making interest in the country. . . . I shall only wish you success in your election. Everybody here is in great expectation from the new Parliament; they think it will decide the matter whether there will be a general war in Europe, or no. I hear from Italy that the Emperor's troops have come as far as Trent: there is a great many French troops marching to Antibes in order to embark for Milan. At the same time the French and the Spaniards are taking all the measures necessary to secure Luxemburg and the other towns in Flanders where there are any Dutch in garrison. My Lord Manchester is received very coldly at Versailles to what he used to be. The Regency of Spain have desired the King of France to take the management of the affairs of Spain upon himself. The Duc d'Arcourt Ambassador at Madrid has the third place in the Regency after the Queen and the Cardinal Portocarrero. These things please the St. Germains people mightily; like drowning men they catch at any twig to save themselves from sinking. . . .

1700–1, January 21. London.—Lady Mary Coke to Thomas Coke, at the Lord Stanhope's house, at the Palace at Lichfield.

You will forgive me my impatience to see you, for your absence is so tedious to me that I hope it will plead my excuse. I am sensible of the great obligations you have to all the gentlemen in the country, and wish your thanks were over. . . . . I hope this may appear a just reason to my brother Stanhope for shortening your stay there, though I would not for the world have you venture to come till the waters will safely permit. Admiral Rook is married to Mrs. Lutterell; I intend to send to wish her joy. My cousin Clarke and cousin Turner have been here all this afternoon at picket, and my sister Fanshaw (who has removed her lodging farther from the Jocalet [Chocolate] house, for we could not offer to visit her there). We all agreed very well, but the aunt and niece have had tough disputes. . . . . Now not to be scandalous I think they are rivals for Lord D.; for I am deafed with the discourse of his beauty. Mrs. Stephens is married without her father's consent to one Mr. Phillips. My father was here this afternoon: he presents his service to you, and is very glad brother Stanhope was so kind in your affairs. Give me leave to say, my dear, I am sure he would have took it well if you had writ to thank him since the election. My sister Fanshaw stays here for supper, therefore forces me to leave off from the only real pleasure I can take in your absence. But, my dear, if the waters should be high give me the satisfaction of hearing from you. . . .

1700–1, January 27. Furnival's Inn.—F. Wright to Thomas Coke.

It has been my misfortune in not meeting you at the House. . . . I humbly request you in behalf of a Bill now in the House of Commons for exempting apothecaries from serving parish officers &c. And if you should think it convenient and reasonable that this Bill pass and be made perpetual, as I hope there will be convincing arguments offered to induce so to do, then to favour me with a line that you, Sir, are for the interest of this Bill.

1700–1, February 3. Chilcote.—Sir Gilbert Clarke to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place, Westminster.

I am glad you got well to London, and wish you much joy of your daughter, and that the next may be a son. I am sorry there are apprehensions of a war, for that will not be the way to take off the land tax. Pray be pleased to order me a view of the poll book. I am told my Lady Halifax' letter was stopped by the way a fortnight, till most of her interest was made against you. And notwithstanding my Lord Ferrers' orders, you had but a small part of his interest about Shirley, Brelsford, and that angle belonging to him in those parts. Mr. Wild, the Duke of Newcastle's agent, came to Derby with a body of freeholders for both Lords. But when I see the pollbook I can see how things went, and make a better judgment.

1700–1, February 3. Bramcoate.—Sir R. Burdet Bart. to Thomas Coke, London.

. . On Sunday last I went to return a visit to Shakerley, who was at Bramcoate on Saturday, and lost his labour by my not returning from killing my fox until six that night. I doubt Sir Gilbert Clarke was uneasy at my discourse about the election at Derby and Lichfield. Dyot will be in London this week, and Baker intends to wait on Walmsley this term at London. Our weather is still changeable in having frost snow hail and wind in a few hours. We are now in fear of strife upon the earth, which will be worse than that in the air.

1700–1, February 3. Longford.—Sir Edward Coke to Thomas Coke at St. James's Place, London.

I solicit you upon the account of my Lady Mary Coke's safe delivery, and wish you joy of a daughter, who is oftener a more certain and a more constant blessing and happiness to the father. . . . If the complexion of the House should favour you, I would forward a scrutiny here, and contribute to drive the matter as far as it would honestly bear. I shall gratefully receive your pollbook, which may be of future use to the county. I believe that the war is already determined. France acting in it with as absolute a power in the Spanish dominions as in her own is the necessary consequence of the Duke of Anjou being King of Spain. The advantages that France may propose to herself from this favourable juncture of affairs will probably make her dispute this war at a greater expense of blood and treasure than any she was ever engaged in, for I fear that it will lay the foundation of the Western Monarchy. I doubt the first step will be the parting with Flanders to France, and giving her the pre-eminence above all other nations. How far the consequence will affect England and Holland is so obvious I need not explain it: and if once these two Powers truckle to France farewell the liberty of Europe and the Protestant Religion. Our province in this war in my humble opinion will be the sea, and at the utmost expense of treasure to hinder if possible Flanders from falling into his hands, and to make good and safe terms for our Mediterranean Indian and Levant trade: and the only way to pinch and stress him will be by the united naval strength of England and Holland to make a desultory war on the Spanish coast, and to seize the Spanish mines in the West Indies, and to turn that immense treasure against the King of France. Please get one of your Parliament friends to frank covers for Fox, the bookseller, and to desire him to send me down weekly the Votes, Gazettes, and "The Succession of Spain considered."

Coke MSS.

1700–1, February 3. Ashborne.—Captain John Beresford to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place.

I am glad you arrived so happily to support your Lady's spirits, and do heartily congratulate you upon my Lady's safety and the birth of your daughter. I wish the verification of the proverb upon you, that a girl is the hopeful beginning of a fair bearn team. I am sorry to read your opinion of the new elections. Unless the West have misproved much, I was in hope the Rose might have made as many good changes as otherwise. So soon as I have the pollbook I will endeavour to detect the practices and give you account.

(1700–1), February 3. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke in St. James's Place.

[Endorsed by Mr. Coke "Concerning Leicestershire Election."]

It has been reported that you would stand. If it be so, Mr. Verney must be applied to; and Wilkins, though I would not have you do it to him yourself. My Lord Rosse, Lord Hartington and Lord James [Cavendish] must be all spoke to. Our side will be with you. My Lord Stamford must either be active for you, or not against you. And Leicester town is considerable, so that you must have Villiers and Carter for. I think there is more fear of Ashby than Lord Sherard: when they polled with Verney they came up to him within 40 votes, though he had all but the dissenting interest, and had all Lord Rutland's, and our side. So that it is a great undertaking without almost a general consent; and all the gentlemen inter (?) Harborough and Leicester must be more than ordinary diligent, and the dissenters laid asleep, or you will be baffled. There is many freeholders towards Hinckley, and Mr. Bird and Charnell must be engaged.

1700–1, February 5. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke in St. James's Place.

Charles Adderley was with me today, and told me of your standing in Leicestershire. I find it has been talked at Derby this week or more: they talk much there of your petitioning. The persons likely to stand in Leicestershire are Lord Sherard, Ashby, Bird, and Sir Robert Haslerigge. The three last are the dissenters' favourites, but I hear none of them talked of. There is nobody else that can pretend to any interest.

1700–1, February 5, Formarke.—Walter Burdett to Thomas Coke, London.

'Tis well it is not "Old Mr. Coke," for so it must have been, if my Lady had brought you a son. . . My mother prays for you and yours: she says, Happy is the bearing, whene'er 'tis begun, that begins with a daughter, and ends with a son. Your own birthday was kept here with drinking your health yesterday. . . I observe your daughter was born the same day of the year with Mrs. Quondam: but I hope the same planet did not reign that day, for I do not yet understand the notion why a woman should resolve never to have a man, because he is in love with her. Had it been otherwise, your relation might have been a mother too, or I'd a' died upon the spot.

1700–1, February 8. (King's Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke in St. James' Place.

Mr. Woodhouse, your friend, is cited to the Court Christian at Leicester for teaching school without license, upon the Statute of Uniformity. He has once appeared, and next Thursday fortnight he is to appear again. It will be a singular favour to him, if you can make friends to Dr. Gardiner Bishop of Lincoln, now in Town, to write down before the Court in his favour. He desires only to be dismissed for the time past, and he will take care not to offend them any more, and will pay the Court fees. It may be Sir Thomas Willoughby is known to the Bishop, and will go with you: or the Champion: or perhaps you may get my Lord Bishop of London to speak about it, and save him much trouble and worry. For 'tis hard he should not be excused and permitted if possible; papists being allowed, I doubt, in many parts of the kingdom. Please to direct to Mr. Woodhouse at Dyseworth Grange near Kegworth, Loughborough bagg.

Sir, Please to offer to the Bishop that mine is but a private school, and teach not above seven or eight beside my own sons, and see whether I may be connived at, and make not the promise of not offending again in the like manner, and you shall for ever oblige your worship's most humble servant, J. Woodhouse.

1700–1, February 8. Lichfield.—Lord Stanhope to Thomas Coke at St. James's Place.

I thank you for your letter and the poetry upon little Hallifax, but think Mr. Davenant, in his Resumption of Grants, sets that little elf in the truest light. I can send you nothing from hence, but that Sir M. B. [Michael Biddulph] does protest that if he gets into the House, he will always vote as Dyott does. . . How it will go with them [Baker and Walmsley] at London I can't tell: but the Old Prophet writ a letter to Baker to bid him meddle no further in the matter against Walmsley, for it would give occasion to the enemies of the Church to triumph over their weakness. I writ to your wife to-night to wish her much joy of my niece.

1700–1, February 10. Longford.—Sir Edward Coke to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place.

Coke MSS.

I just now received the favour of your letter. I am of opinion that France will make great advances to prevent a present war upon divers considerations, as that she is but just got out of a long and expensive war: that poverty and the scattered dominions of the Spanish monarchy demands immense sums of money and vast bodies of armies to cover and protect her: that Italy with all the weight of religion policy and influence she has over crowned heads bears heavy upon France in the particular for a peace: and lastly that the united interest of Europe will avow themselves against her, rather than give a breathing while and leisure to an aspiring monarch to ascend to the Western Empire, which the Duke of Anjou's being King of Spain invites and leads him up to. . . . You will much oblige me by getting the covers franked for Fox, the bookseller in Westminster Hall on the left hand the way, as you do extremely by your letters.

1700–1, February 12. Bramcoate.—Sir R. Burdet, Bart. to Thomas Coke near St. James's, London.

In spite of the weather, which continueth ill in these parts, we killed three foxes in the three last days that I went a hunting: one in Loppers Hay, one in Kank (Cannock) Heath, and the other we found in Bratby park, when a couple of my hounds being scandalised with running deer, it happened that Sir John Harpur's groom saw the fox leap out just before them. I intend my petition shall give way to those that claim title to the House, because mine is only in defence of our rights in the country. I hear that all the Commissioners named in the Act are fined for not raising the King's money; and although I stand single in opposition to all the rest, I have a hole to creep out at, I being at that time actually in the House of Commons.

1700–1, February 22.—Sir William Boothby to Thomas Coke.

. . As I heartily engaged in your interest, so I shall upon all occasions appear for it: for in this case we serve ourselves and advance our best interest. I should be glad to hear you are come into the house by a new election at Lichfield, which I am told is like to be. . . I thank God my wife is much better. I hope my Lady Mary Coke's next may be a boy; in the meantime I wish you much joy in your little daughter.

1700–1, February 24. Bramcoate.—Sir R. Burdet Bart. to Thomas Coke near St. James's, London.

. . If we spend our men and money this year, we are sure to want at last, as I do foxes. I am informed you are like to be a member by the interest of Sir Edward Seymour. I observe the Lords were both disappointed in the Speaker. I have seen the Votes, and still hope the devil is not so black as painted. . . I have many more grievances at this time; we have store of snow and wind, which with store of workmen pulling down my house is very troublesome: and that which will be more hard is to come to London and leave them. I have this to say, that I believe they will take care of my money, which to this time hath wanted the consideration of your servant.

1700–1, February 24. Lichfield.—Lord Stanhope to Thomas Coke in London.

I hope you won't be offended at my proposing a thing to you which, it may be, may not agree with your inclinations. Mr. Brotherton, who was chosen as a member to serve for Newton in Lancashire, is now dead, and Mr. Lee of Lime has it in his power to put in who he will in his room. If you care to condescend so far as to accept of it, I know I can get it done for you, without your coming down, or giving yourself the least trouble in the matter. . .

1700–1, February 25. Lyme.—P. Legh to John Beresford at his house in Ashbourn.

This post I am informed honest Mr. Brotherton is a dying of a violent fever, (God be his comfort) and this bearer is going to Chilcote to desire Sir G. C. (Godfrey Clark) to present my interest and service in Newton to your friend and that worthy gentleman Mr. Cook [Coke], who was so basely used by his own County, and shall think ourselves happy (I mean our borough) if he'll accept of this motion. If you please you may send to Mr. Cook by this bearer. I desire to have this kept secret, till we hear how it pleases God to dispose of Mr. Brotherton. If this comes to an election, I hope Mr. Cook will come to it, and he shall be very welcome at Lyme. From thence I'll wait upon him to Haydock ; and I desire you'll bear him company. I am glad honest Ned Bentley is returned. Mrs. Legh's humble service attends you and your lady.

1700–1, February 25. Ashborne.—Captain John Beresford to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place.

This morning the inclosed letter came to me from Mr. Legh (of Lime). You will please to take your own measures upon it. We have some rumour in these parts of the probability of your success at Wells, where Mr. Henry Seymour is chose. I can only add what I think of Mr. Legh's temper, that he will take nothing amiss, but intends what may be most useful to the public. 'Tis probable both Mr. Seymour's interest and his own are sufficient to influence an election according to their own minds, and herein you can best judge where may be most serviceable. I hope the noise of the Plot abates, since the House have found leisure to dismiss Sir H. Furness and Mr. Heathcote to their particular trusts.

1700–1, February 25. Lyme.—P. Legh to the Honoured Sir Gilbert Clarke.

. . . The last post I received a letter from London that honest Mr. Brotherton lay a dying of a violent fever (God be his comfort). If so there will be a vacancy of a Member of Parliament for Newton. Therefore this comes to desire you to present my most humble service to Mr. Cook of Melbourn, and let him know that if he'll accept of my service in that borough, I shall look upon it as a great favour, and think myself happy to have so worthy a gentleman as he is to be our representative, and question not but the borough will be of the same opinion. If you please, Sir, you may send my servant with your letter to Mr. Cook, that I may have his answer by this bearer. If this affair comes to an election, I desire that we may have Mr. Cook's company at that time. To prevent some sort of censures that formerly has been made—that Newton Members seldom was known to the voters, you may easily imagine what sort of people these were ; so that I would not give them the least reason, at this time, to frame a story, or make the least division amongst us. I desire that this affair may be kept private, till we hear certainly how 'twill be with poor Brotherton. I would have writ to Mr. Cook myself, if I had had the happiness of being acquainted with him.

1700–1, February 26. Lichfield.—Lord Stanhope to Thomas Coke in London.

This is only to acquaint you that I have just now heard that Mr. Brotherton is not dead (as was reported) though extremely ill. Mr.

W(almisley ?) yesterday sent down a warrant from Lord Chief Justice Holt for Russell to appear at the Kings Bench. He has also writ word hither (as I am told) that he will send for me and the Dean up very quickly; but I don't believe his impudence will carry him so far as that comes to.

1700–1, February 27. London.—Thomas Coke to Lord Stanhope at Lichfield (Draft.)

I return you many thanks for the favour of your kind intentions in relation to my standing at Newton. I have indeed no great inclinations of standing: but yet I do not know how I can refuse it and do justice to those gentlemen who took so much pains to bring me in, in Derbyshire. Besides my inclinations to meet everything your Lordship is so kind to offer makes me ready to have accepted of the offer you make, if Mr. Brotherton had died. Sir E. Seymour did mention his intention to speak to an acquaintance of his to bring me in somewhere, but for what town I can't tell. Mr. Newport's election came on to-day at the bar of the House, and I hear the House has voided the election and ordered that no new writ [for Winchilsea] shall be issued out this session. . .

1700–1, February 28. Chilcote.—Sir Gilbert Clarke to Thomas Coke in London.

The inclosed came to me on Wednesday night, and I thought the best account I could give you of Mr. Legh's kindness was to send you the letter itself. Mr. Brotherton hath a house in Chancery Lane: Tom Legh, the Parliament man, can tell you where it is. Be pleased to inquire whether he be alive or dead, and let me know your resolution as soon as you think fit; or else write to Mr. Legh near Stockport, at Lyme in Cheshire. I hope you will make this house your home as you go by. Your election will be without much trouble I hope, if Mr. Brotherton should die: and therefore hope you may think fit to accept of Mr. Legh's offer.

1700–1, March 17. Chilcote.—Sir Gilbert Clarke Knt. to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place, London.

I perceive there is an Act brought into the House of Commons for recalling all grants made since 1684, and applying them to the use of the public. I would gladly know whether they intend leases of small value, by which the old rents are reserved to the Crown: for if they intend to sell these, then I presume my Dove lease may be amongst them. And if so, I must beg the favour that you will either take care to buy the reversion of my lease for me, or else give me notice that I may employ somebody else. Though the thing is worth little to me, yet I have an opportunity of gratifying my friends, which I still desire. If you please to give my service to Mr. Shakerley, Parliament man for Chester, and desire his assistance, I am sure he will give it. If you go any time to Westminster and give Mr. Jodrell a fee (which shall be repaid you) he will tell you whether a lease for the fishing of Dove to Michael Cope be in the list, in whose name it was taken. . . Be pleased to speak to any Parliament man to put in John Beresford of Bentley Esquire a Commissioner in the Land Tax: also to order your agent at Melbourn to send for two black pigs which are ready for you.

1701, March 16, N.S. Paris.—John Coke to Thomas Coke.

I wish peace as well as you . . My Lord Manchester gives us great hopes. I think the Parliament takes the right way for peace, which is in making such vigorous preparations for war. The Dutch are not at all behind hand with us . . . My Lord Melfort (whose letter made so much noise in England and was I suppose the ground of all the fears of an invasion) received a lettre de cachet from the King of France to command him to retire on Monday last in twenty four hours to Angers with all his family. His Lordship owns that he writ a letter of the same date to my Lord Perth as that which was shown to Parliament; but that there are a great many things added in that letter. All the people of St. Germans, Papists as well as Protestants, do believe the whole letter to be genuine. I do believe the French are not in a condition at present to invade us, but I would never have it in their power. King James is mighty angry at my Lord Melfort: he has been very ill of an apoplexy.

1700–1, March 26. Chilcote.—Sir Gilbert Clarke Knt. to Thomas Coke.

I am obliged to you for your readiness to assist me: the lease having cost me as much as it was worth, I was willing to buy the reversion, though it cost me a little money more . . . My last lease of the fishing of Dove was let to my servant, Michael Cope, under the seal of the Duchy of Lancaster, and dated 20 September 1696 for 31 years. I have only writ to Mr. Shakerley about it. I am glad to hear Mr. Bromley is gone into the House of Commons again. If the election at Lichfield should be made void, and you could be brought in as a medium of reconciliation, I hope you will not neglect it: but will never advise you to come in to gratify one of the parties singly . . I know nobody in Wirksworth Hundred worth putting in besides Mr. Beresford. You forget to order your servant to fetch the black pigs. Sir John Harpur's birthday has been kept with great solemnity.

1701, April 7. (Chilcote).—Godfry Clarke to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place, Westminster.

I had not so long deferred giving you thanks for the noble present you was pleased to send me, but that I misunderstood the man in your coming into the country, when I might have the happiness of kissing your hand. All the gentlemen met at Burton last Monday to hunt in Needwood, where they continued the whole week: and wanted nothing to complete their mirth but the happiness of your good company. My father continues partly at a stay, but the surgeons give us good hopes of a speedy recovery.

1701, April 9, N.S. Paris.—John Coke to Thomas Coke.

About three or four days ago, when the propositions of the English and Dutch came out first there was so much talk of a war that I thought we must have gone home immediately; but the fire of the French is now spent: they talk now of peace again. At least they say they won't be the first to begin the war. I am willing to take this opportunity to slip out of their way. I design to go for Holland within this week . . The day before yesterday the king gave the garde du corps money to buy baggage horses, which some people pretend to say is a certain sign that there will be a campaign; because the King never puts himself to that expense till he is resolved to take the field . . . There are several people just come from Italy who say that the people and the air of Milan do not agree with the French by any means; they are like to succeed very ill there. King James is gone to Bourbon waters which he hopes will perfect his cure. . . . If you think a letter to Mr. Stanhope at the Hague would be of any use to me, I would beg the favour of you to send me one.

1701, April 14. Lichfield.—Lord Stanhope to Thomas Coke in London.

COKE MSS.

. . . . Sir Harry Gough writ to me a month ago to propose your standing for this place, in case the election was void; but bid me take no notice of it, for it must be kept as a secret. Upon this I burnt his letter, and never said a word of it to anybody . . . . . At the same time I sent you a long letter about this business. Who Sir Harry has intrusted with it, or how my letters come to miscarry is what I can't tell. But I find 'tis in every body's mouth that you are to stand for this place . . . Pray let me know by the next post, if you receive this, because I have put it into the post house at Coleshill.

1791, April 18. Chilcote.—Sir Gilbert Clarke, Knt., to Thomas Coke.

I have indeed been very ill, and suffered very much pain, but hope I recover, and shall, by God's blessing, be well at the last. Your news is indeed of great moment, and what I did not expect after the persons concerned had been able to make so great an opposition all this time. We hear also there is an address designed to desire his Majesty to remove them from his presence and council. I cannot but observe that the country interest increaseth in general, though great opposition hath been made against it in particular places. We long to know what we must pay in the pound. I suppose you hear Mrs. Mary Burdet is dead; and I am afraid my good Lady Burdet also. It has been a sickly time in these parts. If you have an opportunity get William Brown of Stretton named a Commissioner for the Land Tax . . . My Lady Burdet and Mrs. Mary are to be buried on Monday next.

1701, April 19. (King's Newton).—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke in St. James's Place.

Mr. Woodhouse was with me the other day, and says that the Chancellor, as they tell him, has not yet writ about him: but they are very civil to him and have appointed him to come the 9th of May. What he desires is that you will press that he may be discharged without an inhibition, and as soon as may be. The Derby gentlemen have said nothing lately about the Wilne Ferry matter. I presume they would have Mr. Stanhope gone, or else Mr. Parker at Derby.

1701, April 21. Lichfield.—Lord Stanhope to Thomas Coke in London.

. . . The woman's brother who swore against Mr. Baker now lies upon his death bed. He sent for the Dean to come and pray by him. and told Mr. Dean that he felt a great remorse of conscience upon himself, and that his sister Mrs. Priest (who swore against Baker) had led a lewd life this long time; and 'twas her common practice to threaten people to lay children to their charge, that she might get money out of them; and that Mr. Walmisley sent for his sister, and hired her to do the same thing against Baker. He said that this troubled him so much that he could not die easily, unless he took his oath upon it before witnesses, which he did accordingly . . .

1701, April 20, N.S. Paris.—John Coke to Thomas Coke.

. . . The troops of the household have all positive orders to march the 26th of this month; everybody is disposing themselves to take the field; nobody doubts but there will be a campaign; some people say there will be no action, or at least no declaration of war . . . I shall leave this town on Saturday to go to Holland through Flanders.

1701, April 25.—J. Brydges to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place.

I have not been unmindful of the business you were pleased to command me about. I acquainted Sir Godfey Coply with what you desired in relation to my Lord Carlingford; but he told me he had made a positive resolution not to be concerned with any petitions at all. Not having authority from you I spoke not to Mr. Hammond any otherwise about it, than as from myself; and found him willing enough to undertake it: so that if you are so inclined you may depend, I believe, upon him. When I saw you last I acquainted you I already was engaged to present a couple. If you think its coming from one, who either by success with those two, may have the House think it a piece of confidence in him to offer a third, and thereby do a prejudice to the case; or else by miscarrying with those former render it still more difficult to have any good luck in presenting a third, I will venture to try my fortune with it. Though I must confess I had rather (fearing I might not meet with that favour from the House your case desires) it was put into any other hands. I would beg the favour of you to send me Mr. Railton's grant. I have great occasion of it in drawing up the articles against, &c.

1701, May 3. Lichfield.—John Lamb to John Wilkins, Member of Parliament, at Westminster.

. . I find there has been some proposals made for Mr. Coke, provided Mr. Walmisley should be thrown out of the Parliament House: but instead of making interest for Mr. Coke Madam Dyott had a feast last night, and there they all declared what interest they could for Sir Michael Biddulph. So our magistrates use all the interest they can to bring in Sir Michael. If they throw Mr. Chancellor out I am sure they will have a worse instead of him.

1701, May 3, N.S. Brussels.—John Coke to Thomas Coke.

I am come to Brussels: I am mightily pleased with the place; it seems to be a good town, full of good company. I was Sunday last at a ball which the Marquis de Bedmar gave upon the account of the King's birthday, when I saw most of the company. There are some very pretty women, but in general they have not that air, nor that beauty, that the English and French ladies of quality have. We have the ill luck to come in an ill time, for upon the account of the jubilee, there is no opera or comedie; and all the ladies are busy in telling their beads, and counting their sins, in order to come to a new reckoning. For which reason I believe I shall make haste away. . . The French are all in motion, and they are working upon a line which is to be carried from Antwerp cross Flanders, by which line all communication between Holland and Maestricht will be cut off.

1701, May 5. Ashborne.—Captain John Beresford to Thomas Coke.

. . I was telling Sir G. Clarke I had some inclination to act as a Commissioner, and to get my name inserted again (which he formerly left out in favour to me) that I might endeavour as far as I was able to protect my friends from any hardships that might arise from resentments, which I find are not forgot. And he writ me word you would be so kind to get my name inserted again. Speaking yesterday my thoughts to Sir William Boothby, he agrees to act too, and desires you would be pleased to procure his name and his son Brooke Broohby's to be put in. The great Lord of Haddon, notwithstanding the late services is packing up for Belvoir. . . .

1701, May 10. Caulke.—Reverend Charles Pole to Thomas Coke, in St. James's Place.

This comes to beg a great favour of you, and your known goodness and readiness to oblige does encourage my request. Upon the death of Mr. Bould, late Rector of Bredsall, has happened a dispute betwixt

COKE MSS.

Sir John Harpur and the Lady Bellamont about the right of presenting to the parsonage. The learned in the law are generally of opinion that the right is in Sir John; that tithes and advowsons must be particularly expressed, otherwise terms the most general and comprehensive convey not a right to them. Though I find Sir John is ready to comply with her Ladyship and let her present, if she will present such a person as he approves of, otherwise I suppose he will assert his own title. But now, Sir, there is room for you to do a good office, to accommodate the difference betwixt your neighbours, the aunt and nephew, and I humbly beg you will please to interpose, and try your interest to persuade her Ladyship to present another person. If she will please to present me this will put an end to all dispute. I lived many years in the family (about 12) and never had anything from it. Both Sir John and his lady did promise what I now request, and therefore I may presume to entreat such a favour from her Ladyship. She will greatly oblige her nephew, Sir John, thereby (who intended it to me from the first, and has promised it to me, though it may not be fit to let her know that), and I hope she will oblige herself too. I shall be very thankful to her Ladyship, for it will give me a return into my native country and old neighbourhood, which I much desire. Besides it is perhaps the first opportunity Sir John has had since he came to age of obliging and expressing his favour; and it must grate upon him to be crossed in it. Whereas the gratifying him now will sweeten him, preserve peace, and lay the groundwork of a good understanding beween them for the future; and no doubt but he will be as ready to gratify her Ladyship hereafter in other matters. As to the person her Ladyship intends to present, he is already obnoxious to the parish, and Sir John is utterly averse to him, so that if he came in, he must expect to struggle with difficulties, and have an uncomfortable time on't. Sir, I know I need not use arguments to entreat your favour and assistance in this affair. I understand the Bishop of Lichfield has a great power with my Lady. If you think it needful, and please to give yourself and him the trouble, I believe he will wait upon you to her Ladyship, upon Sir John's account, for I am a stranger to him.

1701, May 17, N.S. Amsterdam.—John Coke to Thomas Coke.

The people of this country keep their houses very neat, but they make us strangers pay for it. I never saw such a country for spending money and having nothing for it. If I do not find very good divertisement at the Hague I will leave it as soon as ever I can.

1701, May 27, N.S. Hague.—John Coke to Thomas Coke.

I arrived last night, when I found your letter. I did not believe you had been so much inclined to war in England. Mr. Stanhope is of opinion that it is certain. I wish it were our interest to be quiet. I have seen a great many sights in Holland which I never saw before, and which I never desire to see again: it is a country which is good for nothing but to pass through. But if there be no war I shall be glad to spend a little time here to see the company of this place, which I have heard mightily commended. My sister Betty sends me word that Lady Mary is indisposed. If I don't hear that she is better it will take off a great deal of the pleasure which I propose to myself in this place. If I might be her physician, I would prescribe to her to take no physic, but all the diversion she can.

1701, May 29. London. — Captain H. Cartwright to (Thomas Coke).

. . . . I assure you no man has seen the inclosed sheets since I received them but yourself. As for what I have done, when you please to command, I'll send. Mr. How left this town this morning. The Bill of accounts is put off till Tuesday next. The charge of the 10,000 men is fixed, but the levy money is too little by half; and the pay of the twelve battalions by about 6,000*l.*, according to establishment. But Lord R . . . . h did not spare asking for contingencies. How he will make his escape I cannot yet tell, but I don't find the present management shows him in much danger. I don't pretend to politics, but affairs have but a sullen countenance. I make bold with the sailors' phrase, blow high, blow low, on all occasions I will give you proof to the last drop of my blood that I am your most humble, most obedient and faithful servant.

	£	s.	d.
General Officers - - -	6,969	12	6
Levy money - - - -	5,000	0	0
Contingencies - - - -	6,000	0	0
12 Battalions - - - -	172,827	10	0
	190,297	2	6
Deduct poundage -	9,269	0	0

1701, May 31. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

I should be glad to hear you are got safe down with your family. The warrant is not yet passed, but my Lord Chamberlain assures me it will very quickly. I shan't fail to put him constantly in mind of it. Yesterday the Lords sent to acquaint the Commons that on Monday sennight they would try my Lord Orford, and to-day the Commons sent to tell the Lords that their message is without a precedent as to the form of it: and have ordered all their members to be called out of the country. I suppose there will be a conference upon it. The Commons pretend to try Lord Somers first. Last night Lord Huntingdon died of apoplexy, which without doubt must be a great grievance to Lord Hastings and your neighbourhood. We had a mail from Holland which brings no news, but that the Dutch are drowning to the value of 30,000*l.* per annum about Nymeguen.

1701, June 3. London.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke.

I received great satisfaction by the account given me of your being all safely arrived at Melbourne, when I hope that your gardens and fruit with all other country pleasures, will answer your expectation. . . The small pox is very much in town, which now doth begin to be hot, and the cries of peas, cherries and strawberries do tell me that it is time for me to be at Bretby. . . I was yesterday at an auction of very fine pictures, when I doubt I have disobliged the Lord Bradford in outbidding him for a picture, which I afterwards offered him, though he raised it so much that it cost me 20*l.* more than it is worth. . . .

1701, June 3. London.—Captain H. Cartwright to (Thomas Coke).

On Sunday last the Lord Marlborough was declared General of the 10,000 men. Mr. Bridges, Mr. Hammond, Sir Godfrey and Lord Cutts have favoured me to his Lordship, to make me Paymaster, according to your advice. His Lordship received the recommendation very well and seemed to comply as to his part, but told them it did not only lie in him, as Lord Ranelagh was Paymaster General, but believed Lord Ranelagh would not employ any body without his consent. They named my absent friends to his Lordship, which made Mr. Hammond order me to give you this trouble, to beg your letter to my Lord. Mr. How was named, but I dare not presume there. The great obstacle I find in this affair is the Lord Ranelagh's being concerned; and to receive any favour from him is far from my inclination, and may prove of the last ill consequence to my reputation, which I have always kept unsullied. And though the Bill may be sent this Sessions, I don't despair of double force the next. Thus I stand between Scilla and Charybdis, imploring your advice, which I humbly hope you'll grant.

COKE MSS.

1701, June 7. London.—(No signature) to Thomas Coke. (Endorsed by Mr. Coke "Mr. Hammond.")

We hope to be set at liberty the week after next. My Lord Sommers cannot be tried this Session. The steps they took in appointing my Lord Orford's trial and fixing the day without our consent has put 'em so much in the wrong that they cannot retrieve it. Twenty-seven Lords that are our friends protested against the last message they sent us, wherein they waive the proceeding upon my Lord Orford first. Yesterday Robin's nose was brought to the grindstone, for in spite of all delays and arts, the Bill of Accounts came on, the clauses constituting the general commission was postponed: Musgrave Gwyn and Seymour sitting still, and we who think ourselves something concerned did not judge it proper to meddle with it. The rest of the Bill which continues the present Commissioners took up some time. Musgrave and the rest slunk off one after another: the Committee was very thin at last: then it was gravely proposed by Lowndes to throw aside the postponed clauses, and was seconded by others of the Court. This management being gross, we had no way left but to blow up Bolles, who went off like a bomb, to the amazement of Robin and Ranelagh. He told them of millions unaccounted for, and of bargains made to cover 'em. Scobell, Rowney, Tredenham, and I fell upon the same thing, but gently; and moved to adjourn till Monday the further consideration of these clauses. Harcourt is in the secret with Robin: I believe they will be too hard for us: but if we cannot bring 'em to reason, we shall at least expose 'em to shame. Stanhope is admitted, but all things are in suspense till the King comes to Holland.

1701, June 9.—Alexander Forrester to Thomas Coke.

I am to let you know that this morning her Ladyship received from my Lord Huntingdon (who arrived at London on Friday) the handsomest letter I ever saw; wherein he assures her that he shall be always ready to testify the honour and respect he has for her, and that she may always freely command him in every thing that is in his power. He adds that if Donington Park can be of service to her Ladyship, he entreats her not to think of removing &c. . . .

1701, June 12. London.—John Arnold to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

. . . I have seen Sir Christopher Hailes several times since you left London, but he tells me he has no money for me. Really, Sir, my necessities are so urgent at present, that I am obliged to insist on your Honour's promise made to me at your departure, which I hope (after your honour has considered my case) you will perform, by remitting the money by the first opportunity.

	£	s.	d.
For 16 months shaving head and face - -	11	0	0
For 12 times cleaning your Honour's teeth -	6	0	0
For curing the Page's legs, and others of your servants what your Honour pleases
For Naples Soap - - - - -	2	10	0
For Orange Flower Water - - -	0	16	0
The Frenchman's bill - - - -	18	0	0
	£38	6	0

1701, June 14, N.S. Hague.—John Coke to Thomas Coke.

. . . I believe I shall stay here till the King comes, but I don't believe the King can be here so soon as you speak of. All the force of France comes into Flanders under the command of the Duke of Burgundy and they are already in motion. . . The Comte d'Avaux will not treat with Mr. Stanhope here. The Duke of Wirtemberg died at his government of Sluys: his wound in his head, which he received in Hungary, opened and brought a fit of an apoplexy upon him, which killed him. My Lord Hastings has been come to this place about a week: this morning he received the news of his father's death. You know he has no reason to be sorry for this news; and I believe most people think he is glad of it: but I assure you he is really concerned at it. He goes away tonight or tomorrow morning for England: he hopes to settle his affairs in England time enough to come over with the King again.

(1701), June 17.—J. Wilkins to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

Upon the trial of the Lords this day we have passed a vote that if any of the members appear at the pretended trial of the Lords he incurs the displeasure of the House. Sir, this is not all my business. Lord Huntingdon will be with you Monday or Tuesday, and he is fallen into ill hands, namely Carter of Leicester. He hath tricked him and got a paper under his hand to keep his courts, and what not. 'Tis an ill step: pray let him be dissuaded, for he's a rascal, and will ruin his reputation in the country. He is hinted at for taking 80 guineas in our House: you know a friend of yours that will hunt it out. . . . Upon my Lord's first steps depends the character that he must wear the longest day of his life. I have no design but service to him.

(1701), June 18. London.—Earl of Huntingdon to [Thomas Coke at Melbourne].

I arrived here, dear Sir, eight days ago, and flattered myself of finding you here: but since I have been disappointed of that happiness, I don't regret the journey I am to make into Leicestershire (though my duty calls me to Flanders) since I shall meet you there. And as I have no place there to go to at present, I promise myself that you'll give me a bed in your house for those three or four days I shall be in the country. I am informed Lord Kilmorey is ill of a fever, and that some think it may prove the small pox. For the love of God send for my sister to your house. She never has had them, and they have proved fatal to our family. I have no news to tell you. The chit-chat of the town you shall know when I come to Melbourn, which will be the end of this week, or the beginning of the next. I recommend myself to your friendship, and remain with great sincerity your most affectionate friend and humble servant.

1701, June 19. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

I am glad you got down safe, and hope your alterations will give you no more trouble than only to pass away a few idle hours in that diversion. At last his Majesty has given Mr. Secretary Hedges orders to draw the warrant: he told me he thought it would be done this night at Council. Tomorrow I'll go and inquire about it. His Majesty's proceedings in this is the same as in all business, and I dare swear that the Secretary and Lord Chamberlain have left nothing undone on their sides for the finishing of it before. You'll find by the news that the Lord Somers is acquitted by the Lords, the Commons not thinking it convenient to try him that day. There was a world of ladies to see the proceeding.

COKE MSS.

Monday is appointed for the Lord Orford's and Hallifax' trial. I suppose they'll be dismissed as the former. Tomorrow 'tis believed will send them up some angry message. The Germans have certainly passed the river Aidee (Adige ?) which gives a great deal of satisfaction here; and by all proceedings Prince Eugene shows himself a greater general than Catinat. It's pity we can't agree here. I fancy that would bring the French to any terms. Yesterday a Chapter was called, and the Elector of Hanover and Duke of Shrewsbury were chosen Knights of the Garter. My wife's and my service to my Lady Mary and sisters. All your friends here, which are not a few, are your very humble servants.

(1701), June 20. London.—Earl of Huntingdon to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

. . . The favour I have to beg of you is (since my business will not permit my going down till after term) that you could go into my father's evidence rooms, and order to be taken out the deeds mentioned in the inclosed, and no other. I desire you would take with you the Executor, Serjeant Bigland, or Mr. Tomson, or Mr. Harding: but by no means Mr. Carter, or any of the family, but that keep to yourself. You'll give them my sister, who will bring them up. I long to embrace my dear friend, who I hope will always continue me some part of his good will. Pardon the liberty I take.

1701, June 21.—J. Howe to the Honble Mr. Cooke [Coke] at Melbourne in Darbyshire, London to Wilden Ferry—free.

. . . I am not a little pleased to find myself here out of the bustle between the two Houses; though preferment will find out those who are happily destined for it in their most private recess. Accordingly I am, it seems, a Commissioner of Accounts. I doubt I must attend to it in the beginning, and then take leave the next Sessions. I shall be glad to hear you design for Bath this year, and hope you'll be so good to rest yourself here in your journey. I being necessitated to go myself shall gladly take that time. I am sure I shall lose no opportunity of improving the part you are pleased to allow me in your friendship, as becomes, dear Sir, your most affectionate and humble servant.

1701, June 25. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

The King came to-day to the House, and after having passed the Bills prorogued them to the 6th of August. The Bill of Commissioners of Accounts was not passed, the Lords making exceptions to the Commissioners. The King stayed near two hours before he could be admitted into the House of Lords: at last almost forced his way in. At entering they had just put the question whether they should adjourn till to-morrow, but passed by ten in the negative. Yesterday the Lords released all impeachments lodged in their House, and several huffing votes were made, which I suppose you have. The warrant was signed on Monday. Your sister Fanshaw was here this day, but I was gone to Kensington, and don't know where to wait on her. I go tomorrow to Hampton Court, where I shall stay till the King goes, which is fixed for Monday morning, and then will take care to have it sent out, if some body does not do it before. What solicitor you have recommended it to I know not; or if you would have me do anything more in it, you know where to lay your orders. I saw my Lord Huntingdon today, who is much your servant. He wants to hear from you of what you did after receipt of his letter. He's just the same he was. My Lord Albemarle has been three times asked in church to Madlle. Scarvenmora (S. Gravenmoer) and is to be married on Sunday next at the Hague.

(1701), July 1. London.—Earl of Huntingdon to Thomas Coke.

Though it is generally thought, Dear Coke, that the reality of things never answers our expectations, yet I find to my profit that rule is sometimes fallible; for though I promised myself a great deal from your friendship, by the event I am satisfied I judged right. The papers you sent me are those I expected. I could have only wished they had been found more readily. As to those relating to Lady Huntingdon's jointure, I'll deliver them in your hands, I hope in less than a month. The town I am sure is very dusty and solitary to what it is in winter. The Court industriously spreads about the noise of a war, which to some people is the least of their thoughts. But a little time will I hope clear our doubts, and put both affairs and men in a good light—I mean a true one. I long to embrace you, dear Coke, and thank you for your kind expression of friendship, both in your words and actions. You ask me for the continuance of my friendship: as to that, though you should deny me yours, you should always enjoy mine: your own virtues have made so strong an impression on me.

1701, July 3. Derby.—Charles Adderley to Robert Hardinge at his house at Kings Newton.

I am obliged to trouble you with this on behalf of my brother John, who I have been forced to send to sea, since he made but indifferent proof on land. I have the good fortune to get him well recommended to Admiral Benbow, who is his friend, and who will get him received on board as volunteer, provided he can get Lord Chesterfield's letter to Captain Bertie of his Majesty's Ship, the Betty. My request is that you will please to get me Mr. Coke's letter to my Lord Chesterfield, in order to get my Lord Chesterfield's letter to Capt. Bertie on his behalf, otherwise he cannot be received. I should needs have it to send by Saturday's post, otherwise the fleet may be sailed before it comes to him. . . I hope to wait of you and cousin Gideon before the Sessions, to whom be pleased to present my humble service, with the same to yourself and lady from your most obliged kinsman.

1701, July 5. Glames.—Earl of Strathmore to "the much-honoured at Mellbourne. To be left at Wilden Ferry in Leicestershire by Lochbrough Bagg."

Your Lady's letter of the fourteen of June came not here till last post, and my wife being brought to bed of a daughter a fortnight ago, who is named Elizabeth after my Lady Stanhope, she cannot yet return her acknowledgments herself; so I presume to give you this trouble, and to assure you that there is none wish more sincerely all happiness to your Lady and you than, dear Sir, your most affectionate humble servant and brother. . . . I give you many thanks for the hounds I had from you: the bitch is the best breeder ever was in this country. My two sons give their most humble service to my Lady Mary and you.

1701, July 6. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke to be left at Wilden Ferry, Leicestershire. Loughborough Bagg.

Your sister Fanshaw took the warrant out of the Secretary's office. . . . We had news this morning of the King's landing at the Orange Polder on Thursday. The Lords Justices met upon it and opened their commission. We have no news from Portinguall of this league concluded between that Crown and France and Spain but all letters from France say 'tis positively so. It will make the war, if we begin one, very difficult. The Kentish Petitioners have been treated highly in the City by particular subscribers. Lord Hartington, Du: Bolton and some few others of quality were there Since they are returned home, and as tis' said have had some thousands met them and applauded their proceedings. The town grows very empty, and I wish I could come down to see you. Next Thursday the Duke of Queensberry is installed at Windsor: I am afraid his being of the Bedchamber will oblige me to go. The Princess leaves London on Friday for the summer.

COKE MSS.

1701, July 15. St. James's.—Colonel G. Granville to (Thomas Coke).

I venture you many thanks for your venison, which came safe to La Roche's on Saturday night, and was eaten on Sunday by Sir J. Leveson, Pinnell, Will. Morley, myself, &c.: who you may be certain did not fail so much in doing their duty as to omit drinking your health plentifully amongst the most celebrated toasts. I wish anything lay in my power to return your kindness from hence. . . . The king going away without making any alteration leaves all things in suspense. At present our ears are filled with the advantages the Imperialists have gained over the French in Italy. . . . If anything happens within the circle of my intelligence you may depend upon hearing it; or in anything else you may absolutely command your most faithful humble servant. Mr. Morley presents his humble service to you, with whom I am just going to drink your health in the coldest bottle of wine can be purchased, for the weather is insufferably hot.

1701, July 15. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke (at Melbourne). Wilden Ferry.

If you design to make a trip to my Lord Scarbrough's this summer, I desire you would let me know a week beforehand, if you would have me meet you there. I don't design to go further out of town this summer than Epsom, unless it be thither. The King is gone to Breda to view the army and has left my Lord Marlborough to carry on the treaty: they are to begin their conferences this week. Few people expect an accommodation; and by all the French proceedings, one would think they did not desire one. This dispute that has been between the French and Germans in Italy seems to please a good many people, but I believe the advantage is no other to the Germans than barely gaining the Pass. Monsr. Pustine says the French retired in very good order, though were overpowered: but that his master will soon revenge it in a general battle, and that Monsr. Catinat has positive orders to fight them. I was last Thursday at the Duke of Queensberry's installation. There was a world of company, both of men and women; and a very splendid entertainment to come out of a Scotch pocket. The bell rings for the letters. My wife's and my service to Lady Mary and your sisters.

1701, July 19. Ashley.—Anthony Hammond to Thomas Coke to be left at Wilden Ferry, Loughborough Bag. Frank.

I was very glad to hear in your last that the gentleman was set free from the persecution in the Ecclesiastical Court. I spake to Mr. Oldys as often as I could meet with him. I have been upon motion ever since the House was up, and am now leaving this place and Sir Walter Clarges, and am going to Gloucester. I shall not fail drinking your health with Mr. How. We were very well pleased that we had an opportunity of throwing such a weight upon the majority of the House of Lords, as putting it upon them to lose the Bill of Accounts, which has set the Army against them, and all the creditors of the soldiers. The success of the Germans in Italy we hope will give a good turn to affairs. . . If we must have a war, we shall keep it out of the hands of the late managers: but still perhaps France will make concessions which which will be satisfactory. Captain Cartwright has gone Aide-de-Camp to my Lord Cutts, with assurances from my Lord Marlborough of a company. I do not find that my Lord M. is General of the Dutch, as was said; but is Plenipotentiary, General of the English: and for his table and equipage his appointment is after the rate of 12,000. a year. . . My Lord Rochester goes for Ireland the first week in August: his stay will be short. When you please to write to me, direct to Piccadilly. I am now among Sir Walter's books and papers, which were Sir Thomas's. I find that one article against King Charles I. was allowing the Great Seal to be set to blanks. Rushworth's Collections.

1701, July 22. London.—J. Brydges to Thomas Coke.

. . . In my last I acquainted you that I had received those books you sent me, and had laid them up safe for you. I likewise told you that I was then promised by Mr. Lownds (and have since received it) the last year's accounts of the issues and incomes of the revenue. As soon as my man hath finished it for me, I will take care yours shall have it to copy for you. I gave you also a large narrative of the fate of the Bill of Accounts; and am glad I can now inform you that Captain Cartwright (who is extremely obliged to you for your kind thoughts and wishes for him) goes over aide-de-camp to Lord Cutts, with a promise from Lord Marlborough of the first company that falls. Mr. Hammond and I pressed my Lord Rochester very much to give him a Captain's commission in Ireland, but my Lord assured us his orders were positive to grant to none but those who were upon the Irish establishment of half pay. His Lordship goes for Ireland the beginning of next week: my Lord Cutts for Holland on Saturday. Count d'Avaux hath given in a memorial to the States, in which he acquaints them the King of France will grant nothing, but resolves to abide by the peace of Reswick, and hath taken his leave of them. But Secretary yesterday told me he had said so once before, so that they did not give any great credit to it now. But all agree that matters are come to that pass that a war is unavoidable: and I wish that, though designed for our preservation, it proves not one way or other our ruin. It is certain, if we would do any good, it must be a very vigorous one—the only way to make it a short one. Mr. Hammond is gone to Gloucester. The town continues mighty empty. I long for its being increased by so agreeable an addition as that of your good company.

1701, August 2. London.—William Morley to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

I ought to have returned you my thanks for your kind present sooner, but the Colonel, much the better scribe of the two, undertook to do it from the company. We were very merry at the eating it; drank a health to the founder, and placed as many toasts upon him, as we could think on. Le Roche's has held up its head beyond expectation, for Skim stayed in town till last week, and Sir John Leveson left us but yesterday. The former by the by has had a fit of the gout, a just reward for a lewd life. The Colonel this day sat forwards for Epsom, to trifle away two or three days amongst the citizens' wives. He expects to meet a great deal of company, for on Monday in the Grove at Durdens there are to be illuminations after the Roman fashion, and a concert of vocal and instrumental music, in which Abell bears a part. This place is so empty, that there is not one word of scandal stirring. Nobody of note except my Lord Warwick has died. Not so much as a marriage talked of, but that of Germaine to my Lady Mary Mordaunt: we expect the consummation of it very suddenly: it has been half done you know a great while. The coaches in Hide Park are like houses in Northumberland, here and there one: and I believe there is no poppet shew in a country town but takes more money than both the play houses. Yet you wonder that immorality and profaneness should reign so much as it does: for one of my W . . n's maids was taken out of the Folly by the constables; and Sir Harry Ashurst's coachman was fined for swearing at the Chocolate House door. O tempora, O mores, that you and I should live to see such doings amongst the godly! Now, Sir, I must give you this faithful account of myself—that, as other people go into the country for retirement, I stay here for the same reason; and by a virtuous and sober way of living, am laying up a good stock of health in order to keep my friends company next winter, and whether night or morning or both to shew dear Mr. Coke how much I am his most faithful humble servant. I dined with your brother this day.

COKE MSS.

1701, August 9. Glocester.—Anthony Hammond to Thomas Coke.

I received yours at this place, where Mr. How and I often drank your health. We lived together while he was at the assizes. Here is conversation that is agreeable of both sexes, and it is a place of liberty and pleasure. The best way I could contrive to give you any news was to send the inclosed, which you may please to send me to London.

1701, August 14. London.—J. Brydges to Thomas Coke to be left at Wilden Ferry, Loughborough Bagg. Frank.

. . . The Comte d'Avaux's departure from the Hague hath brought matters to that pass that a war is, as most believe, unavoidable; for 'tis not to be imagined (though he told the States at his taking leave, that if they had a mind to renew the conferences his master had ordered him to say his Court should still be open) the French will ever come to make those concessions which are necessary for our safety. So that the only point now is the proper timing it: and I believe it cannot but be plain to whoever considers it, that our delaying it so long hitherto has been the greatest advantage imaginable to us. But whether the continuing to do so any longer, now the Dutch are in a posture of defence, is so or not is another question. This night there is a great meeting betwixt the old and new Company about their uniting; and the chief point they stand upon now is, what valuation shall be put upon the dead stock of the new. They value it at 200,000*l.*; but the old can't imagine how they can make it amount to so much, except they value Sir William Norris at one half. The success the Germans meet with in Italy is such that, in all probability, if it continues, 'twill humble the King of France, and bring him to some terms that are reasonable in relation to the Emperor. My Lord Marlborough, I hear, lives very great at the Hague, and the States have lent him Prince Maurice's house. My Lord Rochester's voyage is not yet fixed: I believe he is not very well satisfied that some things, which were solemnly promised him, were not performed. And betwixt friends, to speak to you my own thoughts, I am apt to think he'll hardly go at all, till he sees them done—I mean in relation to the Ecclesiastical Commission and the Lieutenancy of London. I had a letter from Captain Cartwright: he desires me to present his humble service to you. He says the King hath been lame ever since he went over, but was then pretty well again; and the day he writ me, viz. the 2nd instant, his Majesty was gone a shooting. Mr. Hammond came to town last night. He was so kind as to dine with me to-day, and this afternoon he went to Sir Walter Clargiss. He left Mr. How very well last week.

1701, August 20. Royal Garden.—George London to (Thomas Coke).

Yours of the 17th was shewn me this day by Mr. Wise, which mentioned your going a journey to the north. These are to acquaint your Honour that on the 5th of September I shall set out from this place towards Yorkshire, and shall be out one month, and did design to have waited on you in my journey as I went, and so to have returned by Burleigh, at which place I am obliged to be at the latter end of September. Since your Honour's affairs do not permit you to be at home at the beginning of September, I must take some other time after my return. I believe that near the 5th of September I shall be in York; if so, I shall be at Lumley Castle, Lord Scarborough's, near the 12th, and shall continue thereabouts till the 17th, and then return to Sir William Robinson's by the 20th of September, and shall continue thereabouts till the 25th, and then come towards Burleigh and so home. If your journey into the north is near any of the before mentioned places and near those times I may have an opportunity to wait on your Honour in those parts: so that if you take your draughts with you, we may come to some conclusion there. You may send your commands to me at the posthouses in York, Durham, Newcastle or Boroughbridge, or at Sir W. Robinson's or Sir Edward Blackett's at Newby. If I do not meet your Honour in the north, then if you please to send me your commands to Brompton Park, to Mr. Wise, who will give you an answer as if from your humble servant.

1701, September 18. London.—Anthony Hammond to Thomas Coke, to be left at Wilden Ferry, Loughborough Bag.

Mr. Jennings told me you were gone your journey, and I have been till now at Sir Walter Clarges's, which afforded no news but what was in the Prints. Yesterday I found yours out of Cumberland. I hope you will conclude your business with the Bishop. After that I shall wait your commands. You may certainly depend upon it the Parliament will not be dissolved, if the reason of the thing, and such intelligence that I believe to be good, may guide. . . . Sir George Rooke writ to Colonel Crawford that he was coming back to Spithead, having done the business he went about without any ill accident: which I presume was the sending forty sail under Benbow to the West Indies. They were manned to their full complement, and victualled for eight months out at sea. This method they say has great conveniences at this juncture. The event must show, but Sir George is coming home for all winter to my Lady. For my part I wish him abroad for the good of the public, or younger at home for her sake. . . A treaty is concluded between the Emperor, England and Holland; the substance of it in general to give the Emperor satisfaction, and room left for other Powers to be comprised in it. The conjectures are various concerning Prince Eugene, whether he will be able to keep winter quarters in Italy; I believe he will.

1701, September 20.—John Molins to Thomas Coke at Mellbourne.

You having told me you would not be Sir Henry Bond's hindrance, if he could let by lease the stable you hold of him by year, I showed them to Sir Charles Hedges, who has taken the house Madm. Mazarin lived in, for one year, with intention to live longer in it if he likes it, and seems inclinable to take the stable, &c., you have, and another for five horses and a coach house in the same yard, but will not think of it except you have a mind to leave it. I desire you to let me know by the first opportunity, and at the same time that you will be pleased to order the payment of the rent due from Lady day 1700 to me at my house in Dover Street in Albemarle Buildings.

COKE MSS.

1701, September 25. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke (at Melbourne), Wilden Ferry.

I hope by this time that you are returned from a successful journey. We talk of nothing but war. The Lords Justices sent for the Spanish merchants this day, and advised them to withdraw and secure their effects in the Spanish territories as soon as possible, there bring a prospect of a sudden war. The like has been ordered in Holland by way of Placart. The King does not go into mourning till his return; then puts his servants and coaches in mourning as for a relation, and all people that come to court expected to be in black as usual. Sir Charles Hedges desires to know if you part with your stables. He has taken M. Masreene's house, and if you leave them, he'd take them. I told him I believed not, but that till you came to town, I was sure if they'd be of any service to him, he might make use of them: and accordingly I had given orders to let his horses in, if he sends them. And I promised in nine days to let him know if you part with them or not. I suppose you have heard of a jolly lad that's come to town. My spouse is very well, and hope both of us to wait on you and Lady Mary in November.

1701, October 4. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke (at Melbourne), Wilden Ferry.

Mr. Secretary Hedges has taken possession of your stables, gives you a great many thanks for them, and will allow what room is convenient for your things. . . . I wish you good success, when you shall come to the trial of your friends, but I believe 'twill hardly be this year, since by what I can learn all people will be coming into the measures this Sessions. . . . Our politicians say the King of France doats in owning the Prince of Wales, and indeed I think it has so opened the eyes of everybody, that no one dares hardly speak against a war. Your friends Hammond and Davenant are mightily declaimed against for supping with Pussein (Poussin) and the Spanish Agent after the former was ordered away. They are ashamed of it themselves, make lame excuses about being trepanned into it by Tredenham, which is of little service to them. I wish you could settle your business, so that we might have you sooner in town. Let me know when your Bill comes on, and I'll solicit as well as I can for it. The King comes to the Hague on Monday, and will be here the beginning of the week following, if the wind serves. My Lord Carlisle, How and Stanley are come. They say the King is perfectly well. My Lord Devonshire is come to town this night. What people are in town are preparing for Newmarket, whither I design to go on Wednesday. My spouse joins me in services to Lady Mary.

1701, October 6. London.—Dr. Charles Davenant to Thomas Coke.

There are some papers come out lately, which have taken very much in town. The authors are unknown, but their performance has met with a general approbation. Your friends here have thought you will not take it amiss to be put to a guinea charge. I have therefore undertaken to send you forty of one sort of the papers, and eighteen of the other to give away among your acquaintances. They will be as antidotes against the poison that is spread about by the other side, who spare no cost to scatter their libels upon the Parliament round the kingdom. I have been at Grays Inn for some time and am preparing something for the press, which I hope will be of great service to the public, and a full vindication of myself from all the aspersions of the libellers.

1701, October 11. Milton.—Anthony Hammond to Thomas Coke.

When you sent your last to me about Sir Benjamin Bathurst, I engaged Mr. Bromely, who at present lives in his house, to speak effectually to him; and upon Mr. Bridges's coming out of Herefordshire I have writ to him to join in the same request. I am at this place in Buckinghamshire with a relation, and from hence I intend to go to Cambridge. My Lord Wharton has lodged an address at Newport Pagnel, but can get no hand to it. . . . I can scarcely believe that the king has once thought of such an experiment [as a dissolution] and in case of it I am much mistaken if the elections would rise to the advantage of that party; and if not, it knocks 'em down for ever. If we take our share in the war as it becomes us, we need not doubt a good event. France will have its hands full and Italy and the West Indies are weak places, if we judge so right as to attack 'em there.

1701, October 24. Darkin in Sorry [Dorking in Surrey?].—Lieutenant R . . . . Pope to (Thomas Coke).

I proposed to myself all this summer the happiness of waiting upon you at Melborne, but have been disappointed by being left alone with the troop, that I could not stir from it without leaving it under the care of a corporal. My Major has been employed in burying his wife and settling his family, my Cornet is endeavouring to get one, and the Quartermaster is taking possession of an estate that is fallen to him. So that these three people's business has hindered me from what I shall always think the chiefest of mine, paying my respects to you, and assuring you I shall ever be your most obliged humble servant. Pray my most humble respects to Lady Mary, Mrs. Betty and Mrs. Alice Coke.

1701, November 3. London.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke.

Your inquiry how we passed our journey engages me to tell you that my new bedcoach made my coming up so easy, that for the future I shall not apprehend the going anywhere in such a coach. Since my coming to town I have seen nobody of quality but the Lord Portland and the Lord Huntingdon, to whom I spoke of the annoyance that was given you by his great pond, and his Lordship assured me that he had consented to all that you desired in that matter, and that he had sent down the writings to confirm the agreement. I never saw the town at this time of the year so dull and so empty, but the return of his Majesty, who landed yesterday morning at 9 o'clock at Margate and who will be here this night, will soon fill it with Parliament men, who 'tis concluded will unanimously engage in a war. The greatest part of our fleet is now come back, and has only served to frighten Portugal. Pray give my respects to all your fireside.

1701, November 8. London.—J. Brydges to Thomas Coke at Melbourne. Frank.

Upon my coming to town, I found a letter from Mr. Hammond in which he acquainted me with your desire of having Sir Benjamin Bathurst engaged in your interest in Derbyshire. I went immediately to Mr. Bromly, who promised he'd use his interest with him; and accordingly hath since told me he hath done so and engaged him on your side: in order to which he hath writ down to the bailiffs you desired, and I hope by this time you are sensible of the good effects of it. Last Thursday night great Council was held at Hampton Court. The King looks exceedingly well, and says he never found himself better in his life than he is at this time. He believes himself perfectly cured of the distemper in his legs, walks very strongly and hath a great appetite. My Lord Marlborough will go near to be here the latter end of next week. I wish we could hear the same of my Lord Rochester. . . . My Lord Godolphin came from Newmarket last night, and this morning went to Hampton Court. So that the first two or three days the other party had his Majesty wholly to themselves, and they are very sanguine upon it, and give out the King is entirely theirs. Notwithstanding they cannot prevail with him for a dissolution. . . How soon this Parliament will meet is not yet known . . that which hinders it is believed to be some negotiation carrying on beyond sea with the Venetians, which when brought to perfection will be very grateful to this nation. If they can be prevailed upon to grant over winter quarters to the Imperialists, 'twill be of great advantage to us: since by that means we shall be able to fix in Italy the seat of a war, which now seems unavoidable; and which by that means will be vastly burdensome and expensive to the French. And indeed I take the state of the question—peace or war—to be very much altered since last Sessions. We have now very potent alliances formed abroad, we had then none, the Treaty of Partition having broke those we had. We had then very great effects at sea and in Spain; our merchants since have been so prudent as to bring home, or transmit to other parts, those they had there; and this to so inestimable a value, that it now appears what an incredible loss we should have had, had we declared (when the town would almost have forced us to it) last winter. The Dutch are now in so good a posture of defence, that the French can't hurt them with all their force; but their condition was very different then, and they have since owned it in their memorial to the King of France that it was in his power to have overrun their whole country. And what a consequence that would have been to the affairs of England let any one judge, when 'tis so notoriously known that the subsistence of Holland out of the French power is absolutely necessary to the preservation of this kingdom. And that which is as great an argument as can be is that the war will now be upon a quite different foot, to what it would have been then: for then we must have been principals, had we declared first without alliances: now we shall bear but our share. And the seat of it being so remote as the West Indies and Italy, that will be but in ships and money. so that the danger of a standing army we shall be secure from. I hear the King is very angry with Secretary Vernon, he having before he left England ordered him to get a warrant ready for his signing to remove my Lord Haversham, and place Mr. Paget in his stead at the Board of Admiralty. This Mr. Secretary, out of friendship to my Lord, neglected to do till the King was gone, well knowing his Majesty never signs any such thing out of the Kingdom; and accordingly his sending it over afterwards proved to no purpose, and by that means Lord Haversham came to be continued all the summer in the commission, to the great disgusting of Sir G. Rook and the other Admirals.

Coke MSS.

1701, November 8. London.—Anthony Hammond to Thomas Coke to be left at Wilden Ferry, Loughborough bag. Frank.

. . . The Parliament will sit to do business, upon the 27th instant. There seems to be great probability of moderation in the next Sessions.

Affairs abroad press so much, that they require it, and this is the sense of your friends. Mr. How is in town in full vigour and health: he presents his address to the King on Monday. I think I have writ two letters to you, which I do not know whether they came to your hands. In one was inclosed an account of the French King owning the Prince of Wales; and the other was from Milton. . . I believe the King will go on with what he has begun at Court, but it will be slowly. Mr. Vernon is under censure, for not sending the warrant for the King to sign for removing my Lord Haversham.

1701, November 11. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke to be left at Wilden Ferry, Darbyshire—Loughborough bagg.

I am just come from Hampton Court, and have only time to tell you that the Parliament was this day dissolved, and another is ordered to meet the 30th of next month. The proclamation will be out tomorrow. It was unexpected to most people, and my Lord Godolphin has laid down upon it. I am removed to Red Lyon Square, the corner of Lee Street.

1701, November 13. London.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke.

. . . . I doubt that my son Wotton is in a dangerous condition, and therefore I have sent for him up to town, and do wonder that neither Mr. Thacker nor himself have ever given me the least notice of it, but they are both extraordinary persons in their kinds. Here is no manner of news since the dissolution, the consequence of which both as to affairs at home and abroad seems of the highest importance. Most men of thought are or seem to be highly dissatisfied, and conclude it must be for the interest of France. Others say it is to set up the old ministers, and to debase the House of Commons, which may inflame this kingdom. I will not offer my poor opinion in this great critical matter, but only say that since his Majesty believes predestination, who can blame him for what he thinks he could not help. Let things go as they will, I hope this will occasion your coming to town; and if you can think of anything here wherein I may be serviceable to you, either as to your election or otherwise, you will oblige me by letting me know in what way I may most appear to be, Sir, your most humble servant and most affectionate father.

1701, November 18. Overton.—William Hodgkinson to Thomas Coke.

The title you claim is good and just, and I hope a little time will show how much the miners are obliged to you; for had the parsons got their ends, it would have been the ruin of our parish, as well as several others.

1701, November 18. London.—Earl of Chesterfield to Lady Mary Coke "to be left at Willen ferry in Leicestershire to be sent to Melborne by Loughborow bagg."

I believe, dear daughter, that your good wishes, mentioned in your last, have freed me from the gout, for I never in my life had so easy and so short a fit, for it lasted but eight days. I do take extreme kindly the concern and care you have had of your brother, as also the accounts you have given me of him, without which I should have been absolutely ignorant of his condition. For though I lately settled a good estate upon him, and have got him a great fortune with a wife, without taking a farthing of it myself, and have writ him a long letter to express my kindness to him by my trouble for his illness, yet he has neither had so much sense or gratitude as to answer my letters: but one cannot change the nature of things, and I am satisfied with what God has given me. But if in his place I had a son like your husband, I should have gone out of the world with the satisfaction of believing that I left one behind me who would make one of the greatest men of England. . . . I went yesterday to the Lady Halifax for her favour, and the Lady Grace Pirpont's (Pierrepont) to Mr. Coke in his election, whereupon her ladyship made me a great compliment, and told me that all the Pirponts in England, upon my account, would be for my son-in-law, and besides on his own account do him all the service they could. She said that the Lady Grace had very little or no interest, but that she had sent to her brother and to all the rest of her relations, and they did assure her that they had already made all the interest for him they could. Your telling me that one of the Lords is willing to desist if one of the gentlemen will, makes one conclude that they are both afraid of losing it, and I do not doubt of your coming shortly to town. I have sent the inclosed warrant for a doe to Mr. Coke.

COKE MSS.

1701, November 20. London.—John Coke to Thomas Coke at Melborne to be left at Willen Ferry in Leicestershire, Loughborough Bagg.

I am very glad to hear that you have so good a prospect of carrying your election. My Lord Chesterfield has already spoke to my Lady Grace, who says that she has already engaged all her tenants and relations to be for you, and she believes there is never a Pierpoint in England but what is of your side. The election for Abingdon is to-day: there is a very strong opposition against Mr. Harcourt, and it was carried so very cunningly that till lately Mr. Harcourt did not perceive it. . . . I am desired to ask your interest for my Lord Sherard and Mr. Wilkins for Leicestershire. I perceive the party will be as well satisfied to have Mr. Verney chose as my Lord Roos: for they say his eyes are opened, and he is come over to them. My Lord Sherard is a young man, and may be prevailed upon possibly to vote right. However, when I see you I can give you very good reasons why I should wish my Lord Sherard were in the House.

1701, November 22. London.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke.

I am much dissatisfied with myself for not being more able to serve you, but I have the satisfaction of having done all that is in my power, both in town and country. I confess I do think this Parliament like to be of as high a concern to England as it may be any Parliament ever was, for our fate both at home and abroad seems to depend upon it. But I dare not comment on this text, nor say anything that may not be printed in the gazette: however I do heartily wish that you may succeed in your pretentions, both upon your own account and for the public good. It is whispered here that the advice for the dissolution was given in Holland, but that is a sham to excuse some here. There is great expectation of the Lord of Rochester's letters out of Ireland, and of the Lord Marlborough's out of Holland, to know what measures they will take. The D. L. and L. S. are thought to have changed parties. I doubt that your greatest opposition will come from the Presbyterian party, who are able to do more hurt, than the Church of England party can do good, because they are always lazy and wavering.

1701, November 28. London.—John Coke to Thomas Coke, to be left at Wilden Ferry.

I have obeyed your orders in relation to Sir John Moor. My cousin Frank Hopegood has got a letter signed by him to the freeholders of Appleby, and to Mr. George Moor in particular, to engage them to be for Mr. Curzon and you: he will send it by this post to cousin John or Walter Burdett, because he thinks the letters sent to them will be less liable to be stopped than such as are directed to you. Your enemies I find are in great hope that his honour Pierpoint will only give you a single vote, but make all the interest he can underhand for the Lords. I daresay their hopes are groundless: but for fear of the worst I went to wait upon my Lord Chesterfield (who has already spoke to my Lady Grace, and she has engaged for Mr. Pierpoint) to get his Lordship to put Mr. Pierpoint in mind. . . . Perhaps if Mr. Pierpoint should hear what the Lords report of him, it might make him the more active for you. . . . Mr. Holden gives his service to you, and is very sorry that he can't come down to give you his vote at the election, but he will do you all the service he can. He has been twice cut of a fistula and is not in a condition to take a journey into Derbyshire. Mr. Curzons go for Derbyshire on Monday. If I thought I could do you any service I would very gladly go down too.

1701, November 29. Inner Temple.—Robert Holden to Thomas Coke, at Melbourne, Loughborough Bagg.

I am sorry I can't be so serviceable to you and Mr. Curzon as you think I might in my coming down, for I have been confined to my chamber which I have little hopes of being freed from so soon as the 11th of next month. But I have wrote this night to my neighbours to desire the continuance of their best affections towards you and Mr. Curzon: and particularly to four that Mr. Harding writes me word are deserters. I am in hopes of converting two of them, but the other two are Mr. Wilmot's tenants—them I despair of. . . .

(1701, November ?). Friday. Sutton.—Lord Scarsdale to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

Yesterday Mr. Akerode with two or three more of your friends dined here: and upon second thoughts I resolved to declare to them your and Mr. Curzon's intentions, and my resolution of serving you both; which they will immediately communicate to all that are concerned in these parts. This morning I sent to my neighbour Pierpoint, who promised me his interest for you, and to take care that all his votes shall attend, though Mr. Jackson pretends an influence which I have warned him of. I do not like his answer as to my Lord Hartington, but hope by degrees to do something by the help of Mr. Shaw. Tomorrow being market day at Chesterfield my servant shall speak to several that I imagine shall be found there [part missing]. I will not fail to send to Sir John Roodes (Rhodes) whose tenants I find by the poll did generally go against you: but I will write to his sister Mrs. Thornton, with whom I believe I have some interest. Tomorrow I will write to my Lord Nottingham, and do not doubt but he will serve both you and Mr. Curzon with his power in relation to my Lady Halifax. On Tuesday I expect to see you here, and I will take care to get Mr. Akerode to dine here on Wednesday.

1701, December 4. London.—John Coke to Thomas Coke, to be left at Wilden Ferry.

I writ to you on Tuesday last by Mr. Hotham, and today by Mr. Fisher, concerning an affair which I did not think to trust by the post; your letters being very subject to be opened at this juncture. Sir Bartholomew Shower is dead of violent fever; a debauch of ill wine, which he made the day after the term with his brother lawyers, was the occasion of his sickness. . . As for your own election, all your enemies say it will certainly be my Lord Hartington and you, but I suspect a snake in the grass when they tell me so. Cousin Frank Hopegood is of the same opinion. I suppose you will so order matters as to prevent their putting a trick upon you, and yet not give Mr. Curzon occasion to think you don't do him justice. Your enemies have taken a great deal of pains to persuade the world that it was agreed on all hands to let you and my Lord Hartington come in. I guess their design in this report was to divide you, or to make your friends here in town think you so secure, as that there would be no need of their coming down. . . . I hear my Lord Devonshire's agents say that Mr. Clark does you great service in Scarsdale.

COKE MSS.

1701, December 7.—William Hodgkinson to Thomas Coke, Melbourne.

Yours date the 28th November is late this evening come to my hand. I shall (God willing) wait on you on Thursday next with most of my neighbours. I have used my utmost endeavours to get all the votes I can all in your favour; but as for my other vote I am obliged to give it the Marquess. Several are for Mr. Curzon in our neighbourhood. I shall tomorrow and on Tuesday next acquaint our friends at Bonsall and Matlock of this your letter. I hope care will be taken to despatch our friends with all convenient speed.

1701, December 8. Sutton.—James Brailsford to Thomas Coke.

This may let you know that I shall bring 30 or 32 of my Lord's interest, only there is 4 or 5 that are obliged to give a vote for my Lord Marquess. But I have got several others that were for the Lords last time, who assure me they will come. We design to set out on Thursday in the morning very early, and we shall be joined in Belper Ward by Mr. Halton of Wingfield Manor with his company. His Honour promised me to send Mr. Nevile to Beighton this day to order those there to come in. I am going also this day to appoint the time of our coming with several that lie remote.

1701, December 8. Knowlehills.—Walter Burdett to Thomas Coke.

Ever honoured Patron—I hear there is a mercer in Burton, his name I did not hear, but it is one you spoke to yourself to vote for Mr. Curzon and you: he is doubtful of coming in, but 'tis said if Mr. Coke of Walton, who is his customer, should desire him you could be certain of him. Punch gives you his service: he fears you must not expect fair treatment from the county, he says the talk is at London to keep you out, and that pressing letters are sent to the ministers to make what interest they can against Coke. He gives you his service and wishes you success—so does your Chaplain.

1701, December 11.—A paper indorsed by Mr. Thomas Coke "The Preliminaries."

Preliminaries to be laid down and observed at the election of two Knights for the County of Derby 11 December 1701.

Imprimis that the Court be called at the Shire Hall and adjourned to the Market Cross for the reading of the Writ, and then be adjourned back to the two Courts in the Shire Hall and the Town Hall for the taking of the Poll; and so to continue at those three places tomorrow and, if desired, then to poll at a fourth place on Friday. But not to poll by candle light after day light unless the candidates agree thereto.

Item that all and every person and persons who shall be admitted to give a voice in the ensuing election shall take his oath that he is a freeholder and according to the statute.

Item that the candidates or any of them or any of their inspectors shall have power to examine any voter or voters, whom they or any of them shall suspect, where their estate or estates lie, and whether the same be freehold copyhold antient demesne or for a term of years before he or they be admitted to declare his vote: and that no copyholder in antient demesne shall now be admitted to vote, but not to be drawn into example to prejudice their right to vote in future elections.

Item that Mr. Richard Levis Junior be appointed to administer the oath to the voters at one of the three places as deputy to the Sheriff.

1701, December 18.—John Hayne to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

I have yours, which chargeth me that I should say in the Shire Hall at the election that you had given 40 guineas to 40 several persons which charge I positively deny: for I never spoke any such thing to any person, nor anything else, either then or at any other time, that might reflect upon you. Only I did say to John Wright in the Hall that I heard you had given one guinea to a person to drink your health with his neighbours that would vote for you: and more than that I never said. I am sure I have carried myself with a great deal of modesty and respect to you, when I asked any persons for their votes: and if they said they had promised for you, I never urged them further. And I defy all persons that can charge me with anything more.

1701, December 18. London.—Lord Scarsdale to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

I wish you joy, Sir, of your late victory. . . Pray do not fail to be in town at the choice of a Speaker, and bring Mr. Harpur with you, for all the business of consequence will certainly be over within very few days after your meeting.

1701, December 18. London.—Capt. H. Cartwright to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

No grateful accident of my life has been received with more pleasure and satisfaction than the welcome news of your late success. With all my soul I wish you joy, and shall always honour those gentlemen who have shown so great a zeal and care for the good of their country, by their extraordinary choice to support it, which has proceeded from a solid judgment, no man being more capable to answer the great trust. All friends impatiently expect your arrival.

1701, December 19. London.—Anthony Hammond to Thomas Coke to be left at Wilden Ferry, Loughborough Bag. Frank.

This comes to congratulate your success, which gives a satisfaction to every honest man. The Court sets up Sir Thomas Littleton for Speaker against Mr. Harley. If he carries it there is a fair prospect for the rest of the session: but if Sir T. L. carry it, I look upon that to be decisive against the country. Upon calculations that have been made, there seems to be a majority for Mr. Harley, if gentlemen come up time enough. Mr. How is in town, and the gentlemen of Cornwall and Devonshire are upon the road. We are all under regret that Mr. How was not secured in some other place: but I look upon that to proceed from the relics of former grudges, of which you were a witness with your most faithful servant. Sir George Rooke would not sit at the Admiralty

Coke MSS.

Board with my Lord Haversham: so his Lordship has quitted, and makes room for Mr. Paget, who has gone into my Lord Summers (Somers) party and measures. The Duke of Devonshire says that since his son has lost in his county, he ought not to stoop so low as a borough.

1701, December 22.—Henry Tate to Thomas Coke at Melbourn.

I heartily congratulate your success: and earnestly desire you to be at London the 29th for very much depends on the Speaker. I hope you will send to all the Members of your acquaintance to be there. I have writ to Mr. Winstanly to that purpose.

1701, December 23. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

I was forced to tell Dean Willis 'twas your desire and some other gentlemen of Darbyshire that he would not dispose of Bentley living very suddenly,—which he promised he would not, till he heard from you or me. He was a stranger to the person you speak of, but had heard a good character of him . . We have no news only that Prince Eugene continues successful . . . We expect the two Companies joining to-night. 'Tis generally thought Sir Thomas Littleton will be Speaker by a great majority. The King is come to Kensington for the winter.

1701, December 27. London.—Lord Scarsdale to Thomas Coke at Melbourne by Derby Bagg.

I am glad to hear the town of Derby has behaved themselves as was expected, Mr. Harpur chose, and Mr. Stanhope will be, as I imagine when it comes to be determined by the House, for I am informed that there has been great partiality in favour of the Lord that is returned. Here is a report about town (which I hope there is no ground for) that it will be proposed to you that Lord Ross and Mr. Curzon should both desist and so end the dispute by way of bargain. Sure neither you nor Mr. Curzon will ever agree to anything of this kind, for that will entirely alter the interest which is now made for you both, and will make people, I believe, very indifferent hereafter. But I can only answer certainly for one, who is your servant Scarsdale. I think you are both secure.

1701, December 31. (Chesterfield).—John Akred to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament.

I have acquainted Mr. Watkinson with your kind offer concerning the Votes: for which we return you our hearty thanks, and desire they may be directed to Mr. Paul Webster in Chesterfield, who will communicate them to us, and as many other of your friends as he can. I wish I might have a poll-book as soon as may be, for I am told that the dissenters of Chesterfield are extremely busy in inquiring after those that voted for you and Mr. Curzon, and give out great words that they hope to find many false votes: but we do not much fear them. Our last week's public news intimated that there was some thoughts of an Act of Oblivion to be passed this Session of Parliament: but whether it be so or not, I and many others would heartily wish that some care might be taken for the release of poor debtors, who lie in gaols, and not able to pay. And especially such as are in private gaols, such as Chesterfield, where there are six prisoners of debt, who have no allowance but the charity of particular passers.

1701. December.—A paper endorsed by Mr. Thomas Coke "Some moneys paid at Derby on the Election Account."

	£	s.	d.
Fourteen Warders at 10*s.* apiece	7	0	0
Mr. Turner, for service done and for transcribing poll books	10	0	0
Mr. Turner's bill	3	7	0
Mr. James Sherratt	5	7	6
To his servants each a guinea and their bill	3	3	0
Mr. Gregson	5	7	6
Mr. Heathcote, besides his bill	5	0	0
Mr. Thomas Smith	4	0	0
Mr. John Wright	5	0	0
Mr. Trott	5	0	0
Mr. Parker	3	4	6
Mr. Sacheverell	4	0	0
Mr. Charles Potts, and more on his bill	8	0	0
Mr. John Dakin	4	6	0
Mr. Thomas Alsopp, Derby	3	4	6
Mr. Alsopp, Burton	3	4	6
Mr. Henry Gregson	4	6	0
Mr. Bentley	3	4	6
Mr. Stayley	2	3	0
Mr. Hodgkinson, Derby Attorney	2	3	0
Mr. Carrington of Spoondon	3	4	6
Mr. Mountrey	2	3	0
Richard Sheppard, Junior	1	1	6
Mr. Charles Adderley	1	1	6
Mr. Statham, for the Sheriff's Clerks	9	13	6
Captain Beresford, pro Bradbury & al.	2	3	0
Six Constables a guinea apiece	6	9	0
Ringers a guinea a parish and two for All Saints	6	9	0
Mr. Oldham, to pay some bills about Marston	2	3	0
Six Bearers half a guinea apiece	3	4	6
Mr. John Winfield	3	4	6
Jo. Blaggrave, Clerk of All Saints		10	0
Robert Beardly's bill	2	8	0
Mr. Francis Mennell's bill	4	3	0
Mr. Edmund Walker's bill	2	18	0
Thomas Eaton's bill	2	11	0
Mr. Heathcoat's bill	12	6	0
More. Mrs. Heathcoat's bill for wine	2	0	6
Thomas Smedley's bill	1	1	6
Mr. Thorpe's bill	1	18	0
Thomas Walker, for three days' assistance		10	9
Mr. Gretorix	1	12	0
Mr. Thomas Wright's bill	4	12	0
Town Serjeants		10	0
Houghen the Crier		10	9
	133	0	2

1701, December.—A paper endorsed by Mr. Thomas Coke. "Proposals for the Method of Polling" (for the County of Derby).

That there be six places appointed for the poll, viz. one for each hundred. Two in the Shire Hall upon the even ground, there being a long table the length of the Hall, so near the further side as only to leave room behind for the candidates inspectors &c.

COKE MSS.

One in the corner of the Hall Court, if it will admit it, covered with fir boards. Three pent houses or sheds, open before, in convenient places leading to the Hall. The name of each Hundred in large capital letters over each Court.

Notes to be affixed in the most conspicuous places in the town to let people know to what place to repair to this effect.

"The freeholders of the County are desired to repair to the places undernamed to be polled, when they shall have a quick despatch.

Scarsdale and High Peak at the Shire Hall.

Wirksworth at a Booth in the Hall Yard.

Appletree, Morlestone and Litchurch, Repton and Gresley } at 3 Booths in the Street leading to the Hall."

That several proclamations be made through the town by a trumpeter or crier, where the poll for every Hundred will be taken.

That several copies of the oath to be taken by freeholders and the penalty for swearing falsely be dispersed and fixed in several places in the town.

There are some of these sent to Bolsover and Clowne.

By the statute of 7 and 8 William 3rd Chap. 25 it is enacted that every freeholder, before he be admitted to poll, shall be required to take this oath.

"You shall swear that you are a freeholder for the County of . . . and have freehold lands or tenements of the yearly value of forty shillings lying at within the said County of and that you have not before polled at this election."

1701, December.—Votes polled at the election of Knights of the Shire for the County of Derby.

Hartington - - - -	1562.
Roos - - - - -	1291.
Curzon - - - - -	1581.
Coke - - - - -	1659.

1701.———————John Coke to Thomas Coke.

I put you in mind of asking my Lord Stanhope for a note to the keepers for permission to shoot in Thorney Woods for Mr. Bennet of Welby near Melton Mowbray. The good folk at the Intelligence Office say that Mr. Creed has deserted Mrs. South on coming to his estate. . . . Lord Macclesfield has left Mrs. Herbert whom he courted a single stone worth 2,000 guineas for a memorandum. The same noble peer, says the same good author, has left Duke Hamilton's mother jewels to the value of 6,000*l.* upon condition that she does not molest my Lord Mohun. My Lord Mohun's share of the spoil is now got to be worth 51,000*l.* There has been no Council held at Hampton Court since his Majesty's return. His Majesty walked more in his gardens on Thursday than he had done for some years. He was so tired that he could not take the report of the Lords Justices, or at least he made that his excuse.

1701–2, January 3. Ashby-de-la-Zouch.—John Lord to Thomas Coke an Honourable Member of Parliament, Westminster.

Yours came to my hands in the midst of your friends, who heartily wished your prosperity, and thankfully drank to your health. We rejoice to see you so far prevail as to elect a Speaker, and pray that such brave men may always go on with success. Our trust under Providence is in ye, and we hope ye will be the instruments of our happiness. We subjoin the acknowledgment of your favour in promising to send us the Votes, which we intreat may be directed to Mr. Thomas Bate Mercer in Ashby de la Zouch ; thereby they will be exempted from paying bye-postage.

1701–2, January 5.—[Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke].

Sir, In a letter from Mr. Welby to C. A. (Charles Adderley ?) is that our address has been so late and tardy, as his Grace thinks it better omitted. You know it has been their own fault, not the gentlemen who signed it so long since. If indeavoured to be stifled, so as to represent Derbyshire obnoxious, representatives will have opportunity to signify at Kensington, and elsewhere, that we of Derbyshire have not been wanting in what is declared loyal and seasonable.

1701–2, January 5. (Gopsall).—Charles Jennens to Thomas Coke at the House of Commons, Westminster.

I give you many thanks for the favour of yours with the King's Speech and a franked cover from Tim. Goodwyn. There is an interest now making at Tamworth in expectation of a new election. Mr. Richard How is recommended to the town by Lord Weymouth : Mr. Swinfen has offered his service : and 'tis said that Sir H. Gough will try his friends. I sent my servant yesterday morning to Bramcote, who found Sir Robert Burdet in bed, miserably fatigued by a fox chace the day before. They unkenneled at Hoppers, and ran him to Stafford, all dispersed and lost. Harry Burdet and a boy with one dog came home at night about nine : Sir Robert and his son Robert about ten ; no news of Mr. Howard, Clark and the dogs the next morning at eight, when my boy came away. Pray my humble service to Mr. Curzon, Mr. Harpur and all friends.

(1701–2), January 6. Melbourne.—Lady Mary Coke to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place, London.

Nothing could have rejoiced me more than my dear's last kind letter, in which you mentioned your wearied absence : 'tis so to me I am sure, and heartily glad I must confess I am 'tis so to you amidst so many diversions. I fear the simple Petition will occasion your stay in town longer than I thought on : pray let me know when you think it will come into your House. I long to have it over. By what we hear the petitioner will expose himself more than anybody else. . . . Pray my dear forgive my last letter to you, if there was anything in it you might perhaps dislike : but 'twas sincerely meant pure kindness and tenderness to you. . . . I have no news, only I think Wat Burdett is almost become your rival, if compliments will make you jealous. And I have in my chamber a constant companion of a large Cyprus gentleman, that intends to make his exit when I am to be so happy to see you again. I must take the freedom to ask if the people that opened your portmantle did not see a petticoat and letter for Madame Tiluss. If they did I hope John carried it ; if not, pray order him, for winter will be gone first. If you like my father's cake I sent, pray let me know if I shall make you one : for I am never so pleased as when I am either thinking of you, or making something for you, or expressing with what true affection I am, my dearest life, ever yours. Your Crib is well, and all are yours. Pray how do the Lords digest the Bill of Abjuration ?

1701–2, January 7. Wirksworth.—William Turner to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, at the House of Commons in Westminster.

COKE MSS.

I received your letter with the King's Speech and the Votes, for which I give you many thanks. . . While I stay here, having two pollbooks I shall draw out the votes in every town in this hundred . . . and will use my utmost endeavour to serve you with effect. I find this petition of Lord Hartington will do him much mischief upon a new election. Several persons that voted for him last are disgusted and will next time be against him. I am glad Mr. Stanhope has petitioned; and I hope petition will be as insignificant against Mr. Harpur as Lord Hartington's will be against you and Mr. Curzon.

1701–2, January 7. Dublin.—Burdett Jodrell to Thomas Coke Member of Parliament.

If my sister does me right she would tell you my enquiries after your health are as frequent as my letters to her. I owe my coming hither in great measure to you, and it has tended to my advantage and better preferment, and surely it would be highly ungrateful to forget you at this distance, or bury any of your former favours to me in oblivion. I'm sure I shall forget myself when I do. I was not a little pleased to hear how your election went in Derbyshire, and that Mr. C. (Curzon) and you were chose, without any opposition by the best sort of people: my letters tell me your opposers had only the mob appearing for them. I have through the importunity of an honest gentleman of my acquaintance and his fair lady (whom it's hard hearted to deny) troubled you with an epistle in their behalfs. And yet I must have no quiet or forgiveness from one Mr. O'Brien, if I make not the like in his behalf, being also a petitioner before your House. He's one of our family, and indeed I have a particular friendship for him, partly for being Sir Cyril Wich's favourite, but chiefly for his own merit. They write me word out of Cheshire that my uncle John (Burdett) and sister are housekeepers at Formark, and that uncle W. (Walter Burdett) is settled at Knowle Hills. The bearer, Mr. George Booth, who is one of our numerous family, and countryman of mine, has promised the safe delivery of some usquebagh (which this country is famous for) to some of my friends. I beg your acceptance of a taste with them, and if you like the liquor, you shall have a fresh supply against that is out. I am most extremely obliged to Mr. Annesley, who is my patron amongst the Trustees. I am sure he'll take all opportunities of waiting upon you.

(1701–2), January 10. (King's Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament at Westminster, London.

Please to send me and for friends 6 Letters: to a new Member they are two pence apiece. Perhaps John Sargeant, if Mr. Fisher sent him, might find you twenty sheep in the Peak, half fat, that will come in early if bought from hard land. I fancy this open winter there may be some, and that will come on fast with you. . . . I hope you have the preliminaries, and that some gentleman in town heard Lord Hartington's speech to the Sheriff, which answers seemingly all his petition, except that of practice. For the numbers he was satisfied, wherefore he would not give his friends the trouble of a scrutiny, and owned the poll duly taken, with thanks to the Sheriff. I hear you and Mr. Curzon delivered the Address, which I am glad of. John Shaw is to-day gone to Long Eaton, Sawley and that side to enquire about promises and threats.

1701–2. January 13. Mellbourn.—Lady Mary Coke to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place, London.

Since my dear encourages me to the only pleasure I have, or ever can think of, in your absence, which is by expressing my kindness by all opportunities, you need not fear but I'll trouble you every post, though at the same time I am sorry I have nothing to repeat but still constant assurances of my being ever yours; and that sound is so extreme pleasing to me from you, that I will not doubt but it has the same effect from me to you. My sisters and I being now alone, we sit working all day long in their room, and sup there sometimes, musing in the fire, till our eyes are burnt out of our heads, and then that moves my spleen to laugh to think if any of our town acquaintances could see us. I believe if I were dying I could not help a jocose now and then: but 'tis now a fortnight since my dear went, and I flatter myself that in one month more perhaps my happiness may appear here in you. Let me know pray how your affairs of the Petition stand; that is, when it comes on Sir Nat. Curzon has got, I hear, many witnesses, and Mr. Troughton says Mr. G of Darby can witness, if occasion be, of the Lords' bribery for votes. This with many other circumstances will expose them and justify you. . . I pity Lady Anglesey by the account you gave me: but 'tis certainly her duty. I have a copy of verses very pretty upon the death of Lord Anglesey, though they are severe upon our sex, and especially upon the name of wife. I would send them you but that perhaps it exposes our faults too much; and I am sure I would have you perceive mine but as little as is possible; though indeed I do but jest as to my own particular. But I think it best to keep them till you come, that it may make you relish our conversation after all your entertainments, besides fine voices and sublime speeches. Adieu, my dear; make me happy as soon as you can, for with you I can have no doubts nor fears: and without you there never was, nor never can be, any real satisfaction to her who is most faithfully, my dearest, ever yours.

1701-2, January 14. (Derby).—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke Member of Parliament at Westminster.

The Grand Jury delivered this with their presentments at the close of the Sessions this day. Pray give Mr. Curzon a copy. Mr. Gray is ill of a swelling in his mouth, suspected kin to a cancer: William Franceys Junior his surgeon. The Address was made the latter end of October.

In this letter is a copy in Mr. R. Hardinge's writing of the next following.

1701-2, January 13. The Grand Jury to the Deputy Lieutenants of Derbyshire.

To the Honourable the Deputy Lieutenants for this County of Derby,—We the Grand Jury for the body of this County at the General Quarter Sessions held at Derby this 13th day of January 1701, understanding that our Address against the pretended Prince of Wales is not yet delivered do make it our humble request to you that you will forthwith send it to his Grace the Duke of Devonshire and to our representatives in Parliament, that it may be speedily presented to his most excellent Majesty, as is done in most other Counties in England, and desire the Clerk of the Peace to make the Deputy Lieutenants speedily acquainted with our desire therein.

JOHN PRIOR (of Aston), Foreman.

The whole Jury was 13 who all subscribed it.

1701-2, January 14. (Derby.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke.

. . . . They talk of bad votes about Stapenhill; and those they will prove by counterparts of leases from Lord Paget, which Mr. Paget may prevent. Your adversaries are busy and making interest for a new election. Mr. Cantrell of Newton a bad vote; I have the counterpart of the lease and I will send it if desired. I sent you John Shaw's notes. I cannot apprehend how they can disprove men that have sworn themselves freeholders. If there is a saying on honour, where the witness has none, against a man's oath, for which he is liable to perjury, 'tis very hard usage. Pray enquire into this method as to papists: nobody is so till convicted as such, or for not taking the oaths: and that part of the Petition is frivolous after they have polled.

Coke MSS.

1701–2, January 16. Walton-upon-Trent.—Francis Dickins to the honoured Thomas Coke Esq. Member of the House of Commons at his house in St. James's Place London.

Mr. Fisher was at my house yesterday and gives me to understand that the Lords do question some of our votes at Walton, but I believe they are all very good. Those that they question are cottages, and they were given to them or their predecessors at the inclosure by Esquire Ferrers, which is fifty years since: and it was continued by Sir Humphrey Ferrers's Lady and next by Mr. Shirley and now by the Lord Ferrers. There was six of them gave their votes and they are better than forty shillings a year clear more than the chief rent they pay to my Lord. And that here is several substantial men in our town can justify.

1701–2, January 17. Melbourne.—The Rev. John Troughton to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, at his house in St. James's Place.

According to your desire I went to Derby. . . . I have inclosed Mr. Franceys' letter by which you will see how the faction runs. I do think that if you would please to deal more with the Derby tradesmen it might turn to good account. Lady Mary and all the family are well. I wish you good success against the Marquess.

1701–2, January 17. — John Fisher to Thomas Coke. Member of Parliament.

The Lords' agents have been very busy in our Hundred. I have been at Stapenhill since I wrote you last, where I was informed that one Mr. Walters, steward to the Lord Paget, had written to Seaney Parke, who is my Lord's bailiff at Burton and thereabouts, and given him orders to come to Stapenhill to enquire what ill votes was there against the Lords. . . I was at Walton and there is five cottagers, who I fear are only tenants at will: for I am informed that they were cottagers at the time of the inclosing that lordship, which is forty years since. John Ferrers Esquire did then lay land to each cottage worth about 50*s.* or 3*l.* per annum, and promised them they should hold it for their lives without paying any additional rent. My Lord Ferrers can satisfy you about these men. I am told he ordered them to come to vote. I spoke to some: Francis Dickens, my Lord's bailiff will speak to the rest, to keep matters as secret as they can. I have likewise been at Hartshorn, Linton, Lullington, Caldwell, Rosleston, Coton and Greisley. I hear they design to except against Abraham Radford of Linton: but upon his marriage of Isabell Gilbert's daughter, she settled land of 5*l.* per annum upon him. . . I am told in Seale that Toon of Hornington pretends you gave 40*s.* for a vote; and that Cantrell makes a noise of some money Sir John Harpur sent to Smisby. I will ride about every day to learn how the Lords' agents move, that you may be the better prepared to answer them: and I have, and may prevent them making some discoveries. I am told that one George Thraunton of Caldwell offered a man to bear his charges to Derby, lend him a horse and pay him for every day whilst he was out, to have voted for the Lords; but he voted for you and Mr. Curzon. Mr. Thomas Gresley will write to you about it.

1701–2, January 24. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to (Thomas Coke).

Wednesday last Mr. Pole held a Court of Information at Phillip Bisse his house in Derby. John Cantrell was to have been one, but timely prevented. The faults were Edward Wilne's and William Bacon's: both would have been justified, if he had gone. They are very industrious, going to every town, and informing themselves by any that gave them a vote. Mr. Turner tells me the difference of the poll is but 13, not 19, as the Sheriffs' scrutiny was. You had best be armed with a true pollbook, signed by the Sheriff, or Deputy; and you must expect there will be in it by mistake of clerkship several bungles or mistakes of names. As for Jefferyes, I find no such thing in the book I have inclosed, a subscription for a Common Hall at Derby. The gentlemen at this meeting was only Pole. Mr. Wilmot was sent for, but whether or not there, I cannot tell. There was Webster of Caldwell, Cantrell of Hartshorne, Sa: Stone of Stenson, Robert White of Breaston, Piggin of Ockbrook, two Gisborne's, two Cromptons, Sir Charles Pye's man, William Cope of Windley, Pegge, Mr. Shaw's brother, and three or four shabby fellows, that I suppose were their knights of the post. So that you must expect a thousand lies. They had another meeting at Brassington: Mr. Bagshaw was there, who else I know not. If the subscription be not dangerous, the sooner the better. They have set out the Pool, but cannot get them to a rent: some of Melbourne hang off. I have drawn out articles which they seem to like.

1701–2, January 24. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke Member of Parliament at Westminster. Free.

Brother Gregson is apprehensive that Sir John Harpur stands Sheriff. I desire you would offer Mr. Gregson for service to him as his Under Sheriff. How he has deserved from John Harpur he can best tell. I believe very well. Please to manage it as far as reasonable.

1701–2, January 26. Doncaster.—C. Stanhope to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, Westminster. Frank.

Give me leave by this to make an inquiry of your health under your daily fatigue in this busy juncture, wherein the public is very happy by having a person so duly qualified with faithfulness and ability to appear in its behalf; and 'tis to be hoped there are many more of that worthy denomination will join their necessary assistance in so great and glorious an enterprise: and then who can doubt of an agreeable issue? I am sorry to hear you are put to a fresh trouble about your election. However I hope it will only prove a new opportunity the more to signalize and add to your former victory; for which my zealous wishes do most cordially attend you, and 'tis to my satisfaction that there is little reason to despair of a consonant success.

1701–2, January 27. Lichfield.—Lord Stanhope to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament.

. . . I hear Sir Michael Biddulph does not vote along with you in the House: and if it be so, he must expect to lose my interest for the future. . . . . Pray bid your servant put in the Post Boy with the Votes.

1701–2, January.—Copy of the Petition of Lord Hartington against the return of Mr. Coke and Mr. Curzon as knights of the Shire at the election of December 1701.

Coke MSS.

(1701–2, January.)—A paper endorsed by Mr. Thomas Coke "The Votes that polled at Derby that were resident there," giving the names of those that voted for the four candidates respectively in the election of December 1701.

1701–2, January.—A paper endorsed by Mr. Thomas Coke "Mr. Shawe's papers." Notes of evidence of witnesses in alleged cases of corruption or intimidation to obtain votes for the Lords Hartington and Ros at the election of December 1701.

(1701–2, January ?) (King's Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke M.P. at Westminster.

I am not sensible of any faults committed but by double gratification, but they being men of account we could not break word with them, and we were led into it by some that complain. The objections are that gentlemen would have been better, and then the town would have been pleased; we say that several expected in Derby, and if some then better forty than less. Another is, why not to the poorest burgesses? They are only on their own footing, it would only have obliged 40, and the number disobliged would have been 200. As to all ale keepers, we thought them obliged by expense, and will always be for the spender; and indeed so will the common burgesses. Besides the common burgesses are dissolute, discredible, and could not get horses to answer your equipage. These considerations put us upon the better sort as not so easily swayed by others: that it was for Sir John's credit, and they think themselves very much obliged, and we thought that they could influence others on occasion, and must in all future elections be the men of management. If any of these complain it must be because they did not come in time, or refused. . . . But a great deal of this clamour comes from the attorneys—men quarrelsome and eager of gain by their profession, and not to be pleased but by their own actions, somewhat like the late ministry, and all because their bailiffs and particular friends are not obliged: though every one named by them and rejected is of the lowest rank. And two the most recommended is Leach and Clay, who are not burgesses. Now, Sir, 'tis most certain that whoever is on the public stage is subject to censure and displeasure, as well as capable of obliging: and 'tis impossible to know the event of actions as to popularity till they are over. And 'tis too late now to tear this list in pieces, and begin again. . . I own I am not enough of a turbulent temper to match the gentlemen of professions, and not easy to come up in obliging to their expectancies. I must end with owning our fault as to the drapers and mercers, but I hope we may have done pretty well in the rest. I am sure I endeavoured Sir John's honour and the general interest. I wish Sir John a bon voyage into the Netherlands. . . . As to Houghton Sir John must pay, or make him a supernumerary.

(1701–2, January.) Melbourne.—Lady Mary Coke to Thomas Coke.

Words cannot at this distance express the joy I received at the news of the thoughts that the Petition would be withdrawn, which, my dear, makes me have reason to expect sooner than I durst hope for before. Sure now you may have leave to come down soon and not return back this Sessions. I hope I shall not be disappointed in either: 'tis really pity I should, for 'tis the first pleasing thought I have had since you left me. I will take care of the fishing you mention but the waters are yet so high it cannot be done. . . In a little time I'll make Mr. Fisher tell me when he will bring money to pay off Harry Loate, but he is what I fear he ever will be, the Chevalier du Triste Figure, but I have already mentioned to my dear enough of that, and I hope in God 'twill not be vain. I rejoiced once that your Bill was in the House to be passed, but Mr. Hardinge dining here to-day mentioned how very chargeable 'twas to you, and that one way 'twas five hundred pounds advantage to the Bishop [of Carlisle]: and also that you give 15*l.* a year more to Mr. Trotton [Troughton], besides the charge of getting the Bill in. I own it struck me a little, for I am sensible, and you will be so, or are so, that 'tis at a very inconvenient time now. But you are so wise that I can safely rely that what you do, as to your own particular, is for the best. But if any friend, or pressing tenant, comes in the way, I fear you forget you have one girl, and (please God we live) may have more. . . . I could not forbear smiling at your rebuke for the paper of "Dear Cousin": but I did not send it, only my letter to you was writ before I saw it, and being sleepy I let it go as it was. The letter was designed to my Cousin Francis at Darby, who I desired to inquire me out a nursery maid, because your crib is weaning. Had I designed it for any other cousin my dear should have known by a fuller direction than an old fashioned compliment. . . . .

1701–2, February 2. Bently.—Edward Beresford to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, Westminster.

I perceive by the Votes that the two Houses have each of 'em prepared a Bill for the better securing his Majesty's person, and government, and the Succession: and I'm told to make 'em more effectual they contain an oath of abjuration. I only beg that you would signify, in a line to me by the next post, the extent and penalty, and how they may relate to persons of my circumstance and quality.

1701–2, February 2. Strensham.—Sir Henry Every, Bart., to Thomas Coke, a Member of the House of Commons, London.

My winter quarters being in Worcestershire, I have had the opportunity to converse with most in the neighbourhood, whose general opinion is that Mr. Wealch had a great deal of very foul dealing in his election, and lost it by fifteen, which number will, I believe, be proved to have no votes. I desire you will be so kind as to attend the Committee, and that you will communicate my request to Mr. Curzon, and Mr. Harpur, that they may do the same. I shall be in a short time for Derbyshire.

1701–2, Feb. 7. Ashbourne.—Captain John Beresford to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, at Westminster.

I was told last night that one Isaac Potter, of Marston on Dove, a blacksmith (whom 'tis said you employed to get votes for you), did say to one William Marshall of Hilton, that he had shod a many horses for you in a wood, and that he saw arms of yours there hid, viz., swords, pistols, and buffcoats, for 250 horsemen. And notwithstanding how ridiculous the story seems, my friend says Mr. Pole hath taken Marshall's information upon it, a copy of which he saw, but desires to be nameless. I thought myself obliged to tell you this, though nothing can be framed more incredible to all but such as trade with lies. As to the petition I find that they got start of us so much in their inquiries, and stopping the mouths of their own party, who are both zealous for the interest and fearful of guilt (for I am verily persuaded they are made believe it was criminal to receive bribes) that I doubt we shall get few confessors: which makes it necessary to use second hand evidence to whom they confessed. For to summon an unwilling witness will I fear be charge to no purpose, they will be so fixed in denial. . , . One of your instructions sent by your solicitor says where people receiving bribes will not come to own the truth, he hath known the evidence of their confession admitted by a Committee. If so that seems the most feasible part of our evidence in concurrence with some few that confess the fact. . . .

Coke MSS.

1701–2, February 11.—John Burdett to Thomas Coke at the House of Commons.

As well as I love foxhunting, I have always a portion of time at your service. I am glad the petition is at an end, but could have wished my friend Hartington had paid some costs. Our hounds are in good perfection. Mr. Booth and I killed three foxes in two days fairly. I have at last concluded of a house for Donisthorp of thirty five foot square, the kitchen and offices at the end, as formerly designed. About ten days ago I wrote to my Lord Huntington to beg leave to make some brick on the Ouldes (Wolds) near Don(isthorpe): it will be no harm to him, but will save me some charge in carrying. I know not whether my letter went safe; if you could conveniently learn, it would be a favour to me. My neighbours at Melbourne are well: I was to wait on them a few days since. My niece presents her humble duty to you.

1701–2, February 12. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place, or at the House of Commons, Westminster.

I am desired by Mr. Heyricke to entreat your favour that, if my Lord Huntington have a regiment, and wants a surgeon, you would speak to my Lord for him. He is a very good surgeon, and has been at sea in that post. He has served some years in a troop: in truth, he was one that would not march with Lord Cornbury and Sir Francis Compton. He is sharp enough, and I believe very stout, and promises me all due observance. He is a gentleman of good family, and my Lord's neighbour and countryman. . . . I believe his brother, Mr. Heyricke of Beaumanor, will oblige himself for his fidelity.

1701–2, February 14. Locko.—Henry Gilbert to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament.

. . . Seeing you have on the anvil a Bill for qualifying Justices of the Peace, a fair opportunity seems to present for inserting a clause to exempt superannuated persons from being justices and sheriffs—I mean that it may be at the choice of any gentleman aged 60 years and upwards whether he will act in such troublesome offices or not, without being constrained thereto by fine, or other way of coercion. . . . Several of us in this County infirm and aged above sixty were lately fined by the Judge 10*l.* for not appearing at Derby Assizes, but with much ado we got off our fines afterwards. This will doubtless be an acceptable kindness to all the antient gentlemen in this kingdom and particularly to your most faithful servant.

1701–2, February 17. Tyddeswall.—James Sherratt to Thomas Coke.

All your friends in the country are glad to hear that you and Mr. Curzon are quieted, and that the Petition is withdrawn. Let me put you in mind, if you think it proper to nominate these persons for Land Tax Commissioners in these parts viz. Thomas Stafford, Anthony Stafford, Robert Ashton the Younger, Edmund Jodrell. They may take it kindly, although they may not act.

1701–2, February 17. (London.)—Richard Pope to Thomas Coke.

I promise myself you will do me the favour to go along with me to Kensington tomorrow morning, my fate being to be then decided. You can do me a very great kindness, the Duke of Schomberg having been very zealous in the matter. The greatest obstacle, or at least pretence, is the Address of the House of Commons, which no doubt was designed rather to keep out those that had never served than to hinder the preferment of those that [had served] very long, and (as I hope) without exception. The Major will wait upon you about half an hour after seven.

1701–2, February 24. Dublin. Burdett Jodrell to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament.

. . . This third letter comes to tell you I have the honour of an acquaintance with the bearer, Mr. Vesey, a son of the Lord Archbishop of Tuam, whom give me leave to make known to you. . . . He was a claimant before the Trustees for a good estate in right of his wife deceased. There is no judgment pronounced, but he's reason to fear the majority are against him in their opinions. I did not ask him, but imagine his business now into England is to make some application to your House. If it be, I wish him to be successful, for he's a very worthy well humoured gent., and universally loved and caressed here. It's from the civilities received from himself and some few others, that causes my good liking to this country. I could have dissented in opinion with those against him, upon the proofs in the cause; but people think differently. I know you'll make no bad use of what I speak freely: I would not be thought to censure my present masters. If there be room for his relief, I beg you'll have his case more immediately in your thoughts. I trouble you with a small token to drink at the Crown, either by Mr. Vesey, or your brother's old friend, Mr. W. Nutley.

1701–2, February 25. (Kings Newton.) — Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke.

We have disposed of about 31 of Sir John's [Harpur] liveries to the best burgesses in Derby that would accept them. And there is the Gaoler, Bailiff, and two Trumpeters, in all 35, if all accept that are set down. All inferior people was rejected. Pray ask for the list, which is sent to Mr. Harpur. We confined ourselves to burgesses: have promised that no gentlemen's livery servants shall be admitted: and those that find Sir John liveries must pay the proportion to Sir John's order. So that if Sir John accept the offer of Sir Ph: G: (Philip Gell) &c. there is only five left, and those must be gentlemen's servants. Yours is gone in the crowd, and provided already. I think you are in the right to be quick with the inns. Mr. Garrat, I presume will be ready when you give Mr. Fisher orders to go along. The liveries will be about 12*l.* each. Your three great oxen sold at Easter fair will buy you a full flock of Welsh bullocks. I would be off from the Grand Jury.

1701–2, February 25. Derby.—Thomas Harriman to Thomas Coke.

Yours I have, with my hearty thanks for the great favour done to my brother. Sir, I cannot deny myself of giving you a small account of the mismanagement of Sir John Harpur's affair. I mean them persons that are nominated to wear his cloth. They have set down several of the better rank, and with them others of a mean rank, which gives a high disturbance to all the poorer burgesses in town: and there is two set down that has no right of burgess. I knew they was both well wishers to Mr. Harpur, yet it causes several to reflect. I could have wished Sir John's own tenants had the honour: then would have given no distaste to this town. I am satisfied it will disoblige the meaner sort, except matters are settled. I never was amongst the cabal.

1701–2, February 26. Darby.—Edmund Walker to Thomas Coke, a Member of Parliament.

. . . We think Mr. Stanhope's interest is not at all lessened by withdrawing his petition. I am very doubtful that Mr. Harpur's interest will be prejudiced by choosing sheriff's men amongst the burgesses in Darby. I was once designed for one of the men, and would willingly have accepted of it. I was told last night, I not being a burgess, they thought of somebody else in my stead. I would, had I opportunity, tell Mr. Harpur my desires.

1701–2. February 28. Bedford.—Richard Pope to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place.

I think it my duty to acknowledge the perpetual obligations I have always received from you, and particularly this last in interesting yourself so far in my small affairs, and must likewise desire you to give my humble and hearty thanks to my Lord Marlborough, who spake very earnestly to the Duke of Schomberg in my behalf in my hearing, and I believe might speak something to the King about the matter. Which, although it did not procure what I desired, yet forced a kind of a compliment from Majesty, which perhaps would be by other people set at a higher value than by me, who can only judge by realities. However I will be satisfied because I must, and comfort myself that I have some few friends, the first of which you will be all esteemed by your affectionate kinsman, and obliged humble servant. My Lord Duke of Schomberg did all that could be desired of him.

1701–2, February 28. Melbourne.—William Cooke Junior to Thomas Coke in St. James's Place, Member of Parliament.

Honoured Neighbour . . . I did see in one of the Votes that there was orders given by the House to bring in a Bill for 4*s.* per pound on parson's revennes and on factors and other traders. But as to settling a tax upon any factor to pay 4*s.* per pound, excepting such who are in settled yearly pay, that do not lay out their own money at any time, so as do the parsons, running no hazard, it may be proper for such to pay, and no other; for all others as it may be said play at lottery, and do not know whether they have got or lost, till the year be ended, so it will be cruel to make such pay, except their business could be secured to them, as the parson's yearly revenue is. Pray be pleased to lay these reasons before the House when the Bill is read, that such whose profit or gain is uncertain may be exempted. Pray tell my neighbour Mr. Harpur that if things do go on as is proposed relating to Sir John Harpur's sheriffs men, they who act for him have made choice of such men in Darby who are not free to it, but rather do account themselves better than to wear another man's cloth, and the poor burgesses are highly displeased. If tenants were made choice of, it might please better.

1701–2, March 4. Harwich.—Richard Pope to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place, London.

Since I gave you an account of our affairs at Deptford we have been perpetually persecuted by ill fortune, or ill fate. We shipped our horses on Saturday and fell down the river that night and on Sunday met with a storm about eleven at night, in which we lost forty of our troop horses, and I the best of mine. And after having been drove southward as far as the Goodwin Sands, the wind came about south west on Tuesday night and we got in here. We expect with impatience the packet boat, to know how the rest of the fleet escaped.

1701–2, March 7. (King's Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke Member of Parliament at Westminster, London. Free.

'Tis true, Mr. Meynell refused: but Mr. Harryman complained, without cause, for I was privately solicited to make him a Sheriff's man, but it was too late. I named but one in the forty. As to the very poor burgesses, Sir John [Harpur] may volunteer cloth to forty of them for 50*l.* in Yorkshire cloth, which is great charity: or Mr. Harpur may do the like. I would you could by a side wind put him on doing it, and leave it to the discretion of his friends in each parish. It is money spent the best way, but surely the greatest good is the burgesses that have votes for all four. The middle people are governed by their customers: so I cannot repent of anything, but Sir John's dislike. We met Sir Ambrose who is steady for the Dutch Guards; ready to set the great seal to a blank if the king bid him do it. John Sergeant told me he is engaged this week to go into Wales, to meet Mr. Atterbury to help him to buy beasts: but would come Monday sevennight certain. Your trees in the Stockings are not yet cut out of Lord Huntingdon's way. I have bargained for your wall with Taylor and Wilne at 3*s.* 4*d.* a rod, 6 foot high, from Doxey's Close corner to Woodcock's and so down the other side.

1701–2, March 7.—Michael Burton to Thomas Coke, a Member of the House of Commons.

I received yours for which I return you my hearty thanks . . I shall ever be ready to serve you with my life interests and fortunes, if ever your occasions require it. I have writ to my brother in all things to conform himself to your advice and disposition of him, being confident they will be to his very great advantage. I have given Mr. F. Wright orders to assist my brother with money to defray the fees and expenses of his commission, if he have the good success through your favour to obtain one. I have a letter from Mr. Curzon about a clause Sir Ph. Gell would have added to the Perjury Bill, which, if done as I have drawn it up and sent to him, will be of excellent service in our country, and will be such an obligation upon the miners as will extraordinarily increase your interest. I would only desire this further clause that whoever may suborn or bribe any person to forswear himself may be punished equally with the person perjuring himself: otherwise this law will only catch the flies, and let the wasps and hornets escape. And likewise that the making the Barrmoote Court a Court of Record shall not render the proceedings therein liable to the Acts of stamped paper and parchment.

LONDON: Printed by EYRE and SPOTTISWOODE
Printers to the Queen's most Excellent Majesty.
For Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS COMMISSION.

TWELFTH REPORT, APPENDIX, PART III.

THE MANUSCRIPTS

OF THE

EARL COWPER, K.G.,

PRESERVED AT

MELBOURNE HALL, DERBYSHIRE.

VOL. III.

Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command of Her Majesty.

LONDON:
PRINTED FOR HER MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE,
BY EYRE AND SPOTTISWOODE,
PRINTERS TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

And to be purchased, either directly or through any Bookseller, from EYRE AND SPOTTISWOODE, East Harding Street, Fleet Street, E.C.; and 32, Abingdon Street, Westminster, S.W.; or ADAM AND CHARLES BLACK, 6. North Bridge, Edinburgh; or HODGES, FIGGIS, & Co., 104, Grafton Street, Dublin.

1889.

[C.—5889.-1.] Price 1*s.* 4*d.*

INTRODUCTION.

Secretary Sir John Coke (whose papers are contained in Volume I. and the first part of Volume II.) left surviving him at his death in 1644 two sons. Of these the elder, born in 1608 and admitted of Trinity College, Cambridge in 1623, became Sir John Coke, knight, in July 1633, and a Justice of the Peace and Deputy Lieutenant for Derbyshire in 1636. He was returned a member for the County of Derby in November 1640 (the Long Parliament). The Commons Journals record that on 6th June 1643 he was one of seven members "who desired further time to consider of the Covenant before they enter into it," and that on the 8th "Sir John Coke took the new Oath and Protestation, and entered into the new Covenant." In September 1643 he subscribed the Solemn League and Covenant. In January 1646–7 Sir John Coke was appointed one of the nine Commissioners to receive the King at the Scottish head-quarters at Newcastle-on-Tyne, and to have charge of him at Holdenby. In 1648 Sir John Coke left England for France and died in 1650. He left no issue.

Thomas Coke, the younger son of the Secretary, was born in 1614, and was admitted of Trinity College, Cambridge, and became a barrister of Gray's Inn. He was returned for the Borough of Leicester to the Parliament of April—May 1640, and again to that of November 1640 (the Long Parliament). In the early days of the latter Parliament he was appointed a member of the Committees of Inquiry after Popish Recusants, respecting the jurisdiction of the High Commission, the papers seized from Sir Edward Coke, the petition of Dr. Bastwick, the Customs and Impositions since 1624, and other Committees. It appears in the Commons Journals that on 1st December 1642 Thomas Coke was sent for as a delinquent; on 15th February 1642–3 the business concerning him was referred to the Committee for absent members; on 28th September 1643 he was ordered to attend the Committee for sequestering absent members' estates; and on 26th January 1643–4 he was voted "incapable of sitting." On 9th August 1648 an ordinance was passed "for pardoning the delinquency of Thomas Coke of Graeis Inn Esquire, a member of this House," and it was resolved that the House accept of the fine of 500*l.* for his delinquency.

It appears in the proceedings of the Council of State that in May 1650 Thomas Coke was a prisoner in Newgate; on 14th June he was ordered to leave town and be of good behaviour; on 12th August he had liberty to come to town for one month to bury his brother, and prosecute his composition. In September 1650, upon his petition and discovery of the property he had acquired by his brother's death, his fine was fixed at 2,200*l.* (Royalist Composition Papers, Second Series, Vol. 46, p. 777.)

On 18th March 1650–1 the Council of State ordered Thomas Coke to be committed close prisoner to the Tower upon suspicion of treason; and the same day they made a Report to Parliament that he had made his escape, that they had taken order for the present pursuit of him, and that they conceived him to be a very dangerous person and one principally trusted and employed by the enemies of the Commonwealth. Thereupon on 20th March 1650–1 an Act was passed declaring Thomas Coke a traitor, unless he come in and render himself in custody in order to his trial within four days, with 500*l.* recompense to the person who shall bring him in. Officers at the ports were to search all ships for Thomas Coke; and the Sheriffs were ordered to proclaim the Act forthwith. On 22nd March the Council of State ordered him to be apprehended in Staple Inn, and delivered to the Lieutenant of the Tower to be kept close prisoner. On 24th December 1651 they reported to the House that Thomas Coke, committed prisoner to the Tower last March, and all his estate sequestered, has had his subsistence there from his sisters, and from the credit of his keeper; and requested that, as his sisters cannot bear that charge, or discharge his debt to his keeper, he may have allowance out of his estate for his past charges and his future subsistence.

When and how Thomas Coke acquired his liberty does not appear; it was perhaps a consequence of the subversion of the Long Parliament, and the Council of State in April 1653. He was buried at Melbourne on 23rd August 1656.

His only surviving son, John Coke, born in 1653, was brought up by his guardian Sir Francis Burdett at Foremark, under private tuition, and was for a time at the University of Oxford. In 1684 he was appointed a Gentleman Usher of the Privy Chamber to the Queen. He was returned for the Borough of Derby to the Parliaments of May 1685 and of January 1688–9. While a member of the former Parliament, when, in the month of November 1685, the House of Commons had under consideration the reply of King James II. to their Address against the employment of officers disqualified by the Act respecting Popish Recusants, John Coke, for his bold comment on that reply, was by a vote of the House committed prisoner to the Tower.

Under direction by the Earl of Devonshire, John Coke, with the rank of Captain, in December 1688 conducted a troop of horse, raised in the neighbourhood of Derby and Nottingham, through Leicester and Northampton to Oxford, to support the revolutionary movement. It returned without having engaged in any action, and was paid by means of hearth and excise monies, levied under the authority of the Earl of Devonshire. This troop was afterwards incorporated in a regiment, of which Lord Cavendish had the command, and John Coke was Lieutenant-Colonel, a post which he shortly resigned; and having gone abroad, probably to recruit his health, he died at Geneva in 1690, leaving two sons and three daughters surviving him.

The elder son, Thomas Coke, was born in 1674. In 1688–9 he resided for some months in the family of a French Protestant minister at Rotterdam. He was afterwards at New College, Oxford, and on leaving the University in 1696, he visited the Low Countries, and stayed at the Loo in Guelderland with a friend in the household of King William III.

In the Parliaments of August 1698, December 1701, August 1702, June 1705, and July 1708, Thomas Coke was returned for the County of Derby, and in those of November 1710 and November 1713 for the Borough of Grampound. In the Parliament of August 1702 he was chosen one of the Committee for examining the Public Accounts; and in 1704 he became one of the Tellers of the Exchequer. At the end of 1706 Thomas Coke became a Privy Councillor, and was appointed Vice-Chamberlain of the Household, an office which he held until his death on 17th May 1727.

In 1704, having under an Act of Parliament converted into fee simple his interest in the Rectory house and estate of Melbourne in Derbyshire, previously held by his ancestors from 1628 as lessees of the Bishops of Carlisle, he commenced the formation of the well-known gardens of Melbourne Hall, which still remain a monument of his taste and judgment.

Vice-Chamberlain Coke married first in June 1698 the Lady Mary Stanhope (elder daughter of Philip 2nd Earl of Chesterfield) who died in January 1703–4, leaving two daughters; and, secondly, in October 1709, Mary, daughter of William Hale esquire of Kings Walden, Herts, a Maid of Honour to Queen Anne, who died in January 1723–4, leaving one son, George Lewis Coke, and one daughter, Charlotte Coke. The latter, on the death of her brother unmarried in 1750, succeeded to his Melbourne and other estates. Charlotte Coke had married in 1740 Matthew Lamb, who was created a Baronet in 1755. Their son, Sir Peniston Lamb, became Baron and Viscount Melbourne in the Peerage of Ireland, and afterwards in 1815 Viscount Melbourne in the Peerage of the United Kingdom. He was succeeded by his sons William 2nd Viscount Melbourne (the Prime Minister), and Frederick 3rd and last Viscount Melbourne. At the death of the latter the Melbourne estate passed to his only sister, Emily, married first to the 5th Earl Cowper, and secondly to the last Viscount Palmerston (the Prime Minister), and at her Ladyship's death, in 1869, it passed to her grandson, the 7th Earl Cowper, with whose permission the present publication of Papers preserved at Melbourne Hall has been made.

The repository of these Papers is an ancient hexagonal stone building, formerly the "Dove house" of the Rectors of Melbourne (the Bishops of Carlisle) which was skilfully converted into a "Muniment Room" in 1708 by Vice-Chamberlain Coke.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THE COKE FAMILY, OF MELBOURNE, CO. DERBY, BELONGING TO THE EARL COWPER, K.G., PRESERVED AT MELBOURNE HALL.

Vol. III.

(1701–2), March 11. (King's Newton).—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, at Westminster, London.

I told John Harpur I was forced to promise as many liveries more for the next Assize. This may be thought as extravagant as the last disposal: and indeed the taking that with a grumble by Sir John [Harpur] was sufficient to damp any more meddling for a friend. But those common burgesses told me they had rather have a livery than 20*l.*, which made me propose this again: besides 'tis gratifying them with what is most talked of: and 'tis what may be done safe in Sir John's name, without reflection by a Committee. Therefore please to excuse me to him; though it need not be so chargeable as the present. I could heartily wish it could be done without it. If in Sir John's name forty paupers had each a 20*s.* grey coat, and quickly, it would do very well. I should be glad if the subscription for the [Common] Hall went on: I sent you mine long since. If not the grey coats, the High Sheriff must give money to each parish for the poor, which is what every Sheriff does at Derby. Your cousin Sir John Hartopp gave 50*l.* at an Assize at Leicester. I wish England prosperity, and your Flying Squadron the continued confusion the present sad occasion has brought them to. Walter Burdett, Colonel Guillam, Mr. William Sale, Old Bower, are just drinking "Curzon and Coke," "Stanhope and Harpur" at Ticknall. We drank the Queen's health. The Duke of Devonshire I hear sent an express to Mr. Gray, who set out Saturday last at 12 at night. It may be the other tradesmen will vote in expectation, viz., mercers and tailors, if an item be given them by John Harpur's agents at Derby. Perhaps you may enact to sit after the three years, as the Queen pleases.

(1701–2), March 18. London.—Earl of Chesterfield to Lady Mary Coke.

Since I writ to you last, dear daughter, (my gout being gone) the first time I went abroad I went with the impudence of an old courtier to pay my duty to Her Majesty; and, without anybody to introduce me, sent in my name, and was soon admitted into Her Majesty's closet, where there was nobody but Prince George. And after the having been received very graciously, and stayed a quarter of an hour, I took my leave, telling Her Majesty that I did not come upon the account of any business, but only to pay my duty, and therefore I would not detain Her Majesty any longer. My opinion is that, if Her Majesty would have no favourites, but choose a wise Council, and rely upon a Parliament, she might have so happy a reign as to eclipse that of Queen Elizabeth: but the event of all things depends on fate, or rather Providence. . .

Coke MSS.

I do not yet hear when the funeral of the late King will be, nor whether it will be public or private: nor when the coronation will be, which most people think will be put off till the next Session of Parliament: but others say that all these things will be fixed to-morrow at Council. . . . I hear that you are to be this summer at Wing, and I do not doubt but that by the next winter you will be fixed in town. . . . I could wish that my daughter Wotton were here at the coronation, for then she would see the glory of England, and now all the town is in mourning, and there are no plays, as being all forbid. I do return you many thanks for all your kindness and good advice to Wotton, but one cannot make a velvet purse of a sow's ear (as the proverb says): and all your good advice to him, as well as mine, is but labour in vain. I have sent by the last post a very angry letter to Mr. Wilkins, because he assured me before I set him a work that the whole charge would be but 400*l.*, or at most 450*l.*, and he has received that sum already, and the work is not nigh done. Mr. Coke came just now to me, and told me that he has sent for you to town, because the House of Commons have made him one of the six commissioners for stating the accounts of the nation. This employment will be extremely laborious, continues but for one year, and the salary is but 500*l.* a year, which is no great matter for so continual an attendance: but I hope this will be an introduction to something that will be much better.

1701–2, March 21.—John Fisher to Thomas Coke, M.P., at his house in St. James's Place, London.

I hoped you would have been in Derbyshire before the assize, or have sent me some orders about defraying the charge of the last election. Mr. Garratt showed me his order from Mr. Curzon, which was to meet me and discharge everything immediately. Not having any letter from you nor money to pay with, and Mr. Hardinge pressing me so about meeting Mr. Garratt and paying off the Clerks and other bills, and finding if I discovered that I had not money, I should highly disoblige, I did not know what to do. From your tenants I could raise but 8*l.*, so I borrowed some of a friend (which I must pay again next week) and met Mr. Garratt and settled matters and paid as far as we then could. . . There is a great deal more to pay, which we cannot yet settle, some being very extravagant in their demands, and others we could not have account of. My Lord Hartington's friends have been very busy making interest for him and Mr. Eyre of Holm [?]. My Lord Hartington's name having been in the votes hath done him service. And here is a report that you moved that the abjuration oath might be compulsive, and was a promoter of that Bill: though most of your friends are satisfied it was a false report, yet it doth you prejudice. . . . Your friends fear they will get ground in Scarsdale, if you and Mr. Curzon take not a speedy care. . . . I am not ignorant that I lie under your and my Lady's displeasure; and though I may not be so happy as to know the true reason thereof, nor have an opportunity to clear myself, yet am sensible my Lady is so often charging me with such things that if I be guilty of, I am not a proper servant for you. . . . Since I have great reason to believe that my leaving your service will be much to your and my Lady's satisfaction, I shall be ready to comply with your pleasure.

[Upon the back of this letter, Thomas Coke wrote—

"Persons writ to: Mr. Ald. Brookhouse, Mr. Low and Mr. Smith of Denbigh, Leo. Fosbrook, Mr. James Morris, Mr. F. Meynell, Mr. W. Burdett, Mr. Balghy, Mr. Akred, Mr. Coke of Trusley, Mr. Rob. Ashton, Sir Henry Every."]

1701–2, March 21. Derby.—Abraham Butler to Thomas Coke, M.P.

At the last election for the county I and four brothers-in-law of mine all voted firm for yourself and Mr. Curzon, and I am sure that amongst us we made up the number of 30 besides ourselves amongst our acquaintance and friends; and it cost me something above twenty shillings in expenses for travelling charges several days; and besides this at the election Mr. Turner chose me to join with him as an inspector for three days. And now lately Mr. Fisher and some others have sent for all the attorneys in the town and rewarded them for their pains and left me the only forlorn. I believe the fault is Mr. Fisher's, by reason I once told him that his flustering tended more to your prejudice than interest when you lost it before.

1701–2, March 21. Leicester.—John Verney to Thomas Coke, a Member of Parliament.

We are like to have a great contest at our next election for this county for my Lord Roos and my Lord Sherard join against Mr. Wilkins and me. I hope you will this time be enough at leisure in Derbyshire to give us your assistance. Your estate at Melton is seated in the enemy's quarters; and therefore it will be a particular obligation to us, if you will dispose your interest in favour of Mr. Wilkins and your humble servant.

1701–2, March 23. Knowlehills.—Walter Burdett to Thomas Coke, M.P.

By the Votes of your House last Wednesday I find you are one of the Seven Wise Men in the opinion of the House: I wish you joy of your office, and long continuance in it. I hear in Leicestershire Mr. Verney and Mr. Wilkins intend to be candidates for that county, and that the county are as unanimous against my Lord Ross (Roos) as they were for him . . . The Lady Halifax (if you see occasion) should be spoken to about Mr. Horton, her steward of Winfield Manor, who though directed last election (I hear) did you and cousin Curzon not that service he should have done [unfinished].

(1701–2, March 23.)—John Wilkins to Thomas Coke at the House of Commons.

Pray speak to Lord Huntingdon with speed. He will not go with us, unless you can stem the tide. You can make him passive, and get him I hope. I shall stick fast to you in Darbyshire, notwithstanding your great opposers.

(1702, March 25.)—John Wilkins to Thomas Coke at London.

The country gentlemen have sewed Mr. Varney and myself together. Pray send to Melton to all your friends, for all the presbyterians are very busy. I wish you could send to Mr. Serjeant Bigland for he is not right to us.

1702, March 25. Hampton Town.—Edward Goudge to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place.

I shall wait on you in a few days, in order to a settlement of all accounts: there will be no more to do but to deduct what you and Mr. Wright have paid from the last balance (which, I think, was about 44*l.*) and the remainder is the debt. But one thing more I humbly trouble you withal, viz., that whereas I have heard you are lately made one of the Commissioners of Accounts, you would be pleased to put me into some sort of business in that Office, that may be a livelihood, for that which I am in at present is prejudicial to my health. I suppose, Sir,

Coke MSS.

I need not tell you that for some years past, for want of money occasioned by the war, and by the use of ceiling painting, the employment which hath been my chiefest pretence hath been always dwindling away, till now it's just come to nothing.

1702, March 28.—Radbourne (signature gone) to Thomas Coke. [Indorsed by Mr. Coke, "Mr. Pole's man from Radbourne."]

Last week a servant of Mr. Wilmot's, of Osmaston, was here with Mr. Pole; I suppose to concert matters against the next election, because Mr. Pole then told him he could turn at least fifty who voted for you and Mr. Curzon last election. His past carriage doth sufficiently demonstrate his will to do it at this time, who is now as restless and busy as ever he was, before or since the last election. . . . . 'Twill certainly be necessary that no time be lost, considering the diligence of your opposers, to keep up that interest you have deservedly gained, that you meet with no disappointment next time. I have acquainted Sir N. Curzon herewith; and if at any time I perceive anything by Mr. Pole's movements that I think will do you any service, I will not fail to inform you thereof. But must beg it may be kept private, for there will be no peace if it comes to Mr. Pole's knowledge.

1702, March 30. Doncaster.—Charles Stanhope to Thomas Coke, M.P.

The signal instance that the public have given of its being sensible of your great worth might in reason be thought a prevailing argument to divert your former adversaries from making any further opposition on a subsequent election. But since it often happens that some inconsiderate men are influenced more by an unaccountable prejudice than the merit of a cause, it may not be amiss for your friends to be upon their guard: and in the number you may be confident to find me exerting, to the utmost of my possibles, the small interest I can make for your service.

1702, April 1. Derby.—William Brookhouse to Thomas Coke, a Member of Parliament.

The poor prisoners for debt within my custody have sent up a petition to the House of Commons for an Act for their releasement. I therefore at their request do make bold to acquaint you that I believe all their conditions to be so deplorable as requires your Honourable House to consider how to relieve them. . . . I do assure you it is as poor a gaol as any in the kingdom, and there are many who have remained here some years for debts of four or five pounds value which in all this time they never could raise money to pay. And most of those whose debts are greater have been willing to divest themselves of all they had in order to purchase reconciliation with their creditors, whose severity hath been such as to continue them here. If at liberty they might not only be a support to their respective families, but also take off a great burthen and charge from the county. So that I humbly desire you may be an instrument of this work of so charitable a nature, and promote such an Act as may release all those who are desirous to pay their last penny to their creditors: in doing which you'll not only do the greatest act of charity for them and their distressed families, but also a great piece of service to the country, which is at the charge of maintaining them.

1702, April 4. Derby.—G. Gregson to Thomas Coke, M.P.

I will with all my heart serve Mr. Curzon and you the best I can, and return my humble thanks for all your favours. Some of your friends seemed very much dissatisfied at the expression relating to dissenters in the Address: but having not seen it, but only prejudiced by a false report, I sent them copies, which gave very good satisfaction when they saw how it was restrained. I have got Pickard arrested, who, rather than go to prison, hath acknowledged the fine wherein his wife also joined. I hear of no opposition or interest making against you: so I hope there will be no contest.

1702, April 4. (Glossop?)—William Hodgkinson to Thomas Coke at the Parliament House in Westminster.

It hath been observed a great number of votes have come out of Glossopdale against you. There's one Waterhouse, and Wagstaff my Lord George Howard's bailiff, that are the great men amongst them. I question not but his Lordship is in your interest. I have heard my kinsman, Mr. Henry Bradshaw in the Custom House, highly commend him, who I am satisfied will most heartily espouse your side, both in this or any other matter. There are some in these parts will be for Lord Marquis Hartington, we fear; but you may depend on as many votes as you had in the last election. If you could, with conveniency, send us the least charge that would be expended in procuring a patent for a free school in our parish, 'twould very much oblige our neighbours as well as your most obedient servant.

1702, April 4. Thorp Constantine.—William Inge to Thomas Coke, London.

I might reasonable think your silence proceeded from the business of your new employment (which we are all much pleased withal) as now from those sweets you find in your Lady's conversation, but I attribute it only to the trouble my last gave you . . . for though there are few qualifications more glorious than those of the true poet, yet the nimis poeta is a character that nobody who has read Martial can be fond of . . . I am informed your neighbour the Lord Huntingdon makes all the interest he can for the two Lords, Com. Leic.

1702, April 7. Dublin.—G. (?) Vernon to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament in England.

A printed address to Members of the House of Commons, in which Vernon states that a Bill is preparing for relief of Mrs. Mary Vernon in reversing her attainder, and that a petition has been prepared by Mr. Thomas Carter in relation to the said Bill, and as he conceives it to be the design of some to misrepresent things, he attempts by a few lines either to prevent or remove the evils he is apprehensive of. Whereas Mrs. Mary Vernon was waived for high treason in Ireland in June 1696, Mr. Vernon absolutely denies that he was any wise soliciting or instrumental therein, or knew of it till February 1698–9 when he went for Ireland in order to revive his suit for the lands of Clontarf and Holybrooks, and was informed of the attainder, and was recommended to Mr. Thomas Carter, tenant of Holybrooks, as a fit person to direct him in prosecuting his right. Mr. Vernon explains the proceedings which have been had before the Trustees of the Irish forfeitures, and for the merit of his case refers to his petitions, &c. which have been laid before the House, and hopes that the Bill for the relief of Mrs. Mary Vernon will not be made to extend in prejudice of his right, nor the case be clogged by any pretentions of Mr. Carter till Mr. Vernon's petition and case and present allegations shall be considered by the House.

1702, April 11. The Rising Sun at Hockley in the Hole, London.—Patritius Horne to the Honble. Mr. Cooke at his house in St. James's Place.

Coke MSS.

I humbly thank you for the kindness you offer me in that you will recommend my ale to my Lady Marlborough. I have been preparing a small quantity of ale for the purpose which I will do myself the honour to present you with within this eight or ten days. I will only add that it was brewed within this ten days, which creates a fear in me that the newness of it may make it the less palatable.

(1702), April 20.—John Wilkins to Thomas Cooke at the House of Commons.

There is a place that is the Steward of the Honour of Leicester, that hath always been in some nobleman's hand till Mr. Carter had it. Now, Sir, Mr. Carter will go down stairs. If you please to take it yourself, or let not Sir John Leveson dispose of it till he hath found out a good man. If you will not accept of it yourself, send me word. I will commend a deputy to you: the place is but barely ten pounds a year. Pray acquaint Sir John Leveson with this, if he be Chancellor of the Duchy.

1702, April 20. Castleton.—Rev. Thomas Roe to Thomas Coke at the Parliament House Westminster.

I shall not be remiss in any service I can do in the next election. Mr. Balguy and I went above a month ago to a hamlet in this parish called Edal, where there are a great many votes. They some of them promised fair, but have so often deceived us, that I shall not very much depend upon 'em. They had money to bear their charges both the last elections, and will again I fear upon the same account prefer their private interest to the public good. But I am in hopes we shall not need 'em, for (as I am informed) Mr. Eyre says that the Marquis has made no interest, and he thinks will never stand candidate more. On this side no one has asked a vote for him yet. As to my own concern, I would not have been so troublesome, had I a competency here, or could I be easy with what I have. I have a catalogue of some livings in the Queen's and Lord Chancellor's gifts, which I have underneath sent you. If it be feasible to get a promise of the first of 'em that becomes void (as I am informed is frequently done on the like occasion) some one of 'em cannot but fall in a little time, most of the incumbents being aged persons. (A list of nineteen livings in five counties.) If you can put me into a likelier method, I shall take it as a great favour to hear from you.

1702, April 22. London.—John Coke to Thomas Coke at Mr. Burdett's, Knowlehills, near Derby.

(Sends reports of the town as to changes in offices of State and at Court.) We have lately had no mail from Lisbon. There are letters come by merchant ships which say that the men are sickly, very ill provided with provisions, hospitals, horses and field equipage. There are others that say there are several Grandees arrived in Portugal who give great assurance of carrying the point in Spain without bloodshed.

1702, April 25. On board Her Majesty's Ship the (Monk Monck?) now riding at an anchor at the Buoy in the Nore.—John Littill to Thomas Coke in St. James's Place, London.

. . . Blessed be God I am very well, hoping to Almighty God you are the same. We set sail from Smyrna the 2nd of January and arrived at the Nore the 12th of April. We had a very long voyage and very short of provisions, for we was at a quart of water a day and three pound of bread a week, for three months' time, which went very hard. Our ship's company was all imprest on board the ship. Sir, this is to satisfy your Honour that we do expect for to sail for the Straits with all speed. This is the second letter I have sent since I have been on board, for to satisfy your Honour that Captain Smith hath been a great rogue to me all the voyage, and never taught me navigation nor nothing else, but what I took on my own head; which was but so much money and time lost. But now I am entered in pay as an able seaman 23*s.* per month; I do not question but in a little time to recover my lost time. I hope your Honour will be pleased for to order an answer to be writ for me.

1702, April 27.—A printed paper in the form of a play bill, having at the top the royal arms between the letters A. R. (Anna Regina).

At the Bear Garden in Hockley in the Hole, near Clerkenwell Green.

These are to give notice to all gentlemen, gamesters, and others that on this present Monday, being the 27th of April 1702, a great match is to be fought by a bald faced Dog of Middlesex against a fallow Dog of Cow Cross, for a Guinea each Dog, five let-goes out of hand, which goes fairest and furthest in wins all: being a General Day of Sport by all the Old Gamesters, and a great Mad Bull to be turned loose in the Game-place, with Fire-works all over him, and two or three Cats ty'd to his Tail, and Dogs after them. Also other variety of Bull-baiting and Bear-baiting. Beginning at two of the Clock.

[On a sheet, in which the above paper is enclosed, the following was written by the Honourable George Lamb, then M.P. for Dungarvan]:—

"This paper was read by me in the House of Commons in the Debate on the Second Reading of Mr. Martin's Bill 'Against Bear-baiting and other cruel Practices,' on the 11th of March 1825. The Bill was then thrown out by a Division of 50 to 32. I found the paper among Vice-Chamberlain Coke's letters at Melbourne Hall.—G. Lamb."

1702, April 29. Bretby.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke, a Member of Parliament, at St. James's Place.

. . . Since my coming hither we have had many hard frosts and north winds, which have blasted most of my young peach trees, and taken away the hopes of our having almost any plums: but I hope that your trees at Melbourne, standing warmer, may have scaped much better, and that they will pay you such an annual tribute as may induce you to come and receive it, and at the same time oblige with your company, Sir, your most humble servant and most affectionate father.

1702, May 2. Shardlow.—Leonard Fosbrooke, Junior, to Thomas Coke, Member of the Honourable House of Commons, Westminster.

. . . I will do you and Mr. Curzon what service I can, but hope there will be no opposition. I believe 'tis only Mr. Serracold that stirs the coal and puts Derby men upon getting up an account for himself and some Londoners. Last week I forwarded three runlets of ale for you. They are shipped in Richard Harris, freight paid to London. I presume he may be at London by this time, if the report we have of privateers being upon our coasts have not hindered him.

1702, May 2. Ilam.—Captain J. Port to Thomas Cooke [Coke] to the House of Commons.

It being the opinion of most people here that there should be no Act of Parliament for a Pardon, yet the Queen will issue one of her own authority in a short time: which, knowing your acquaintance with the

COKE MSS.

Lord Keeper, makes me entreat the favour of excepting notorious crimes in the clergy, as many of whom are become so profligate, that they are not only a scandal to the Church, but even to Religion. I am sure he with whom I am concerned is such. . . . Pray oblige me with a line or two the next post, whether you think there will be a pardon this summer.

1702, May 4. Knowlehills.—Walter Burdett to Thomas Coke, a Member of the Honourable House of Commons, Westminster. Free.

. . . By your command I have finished a bower upon your ground for cousin Nellie Curzon. It comes in all to 6*s.* 4*d.*, which is almost half as much as my rent, but I do not pretend to deduct, because stoppage is no payment. My Lord Chesterfield and Lady Catherine are come well down. You have a team of young ducklings wild upon your canal in Gorstey Leys: I think there is sixteen: and you have also six horses there, which, if you do not fence from the bower, will hinder the growth of the thicket about it. Sir, as in duty bound I am your observing gamekeeper, devout chaplain, and most humble servant.

1702, May 9. Ashborne.—Captain John Beresford to Thomas Coke, M.P.

I am desired by divers good friends in Cheshire to beg the favour of your good word to my Lord Keeper in behalf of a young gentleman, Mr. Swetenham. His ambition, who is just now at the bar, is to come into the Queen's Attorney's place for Cheshire and Flint; presuming Mr. Minshull, introduced by Sir John Mainwaring, and a violent creature of his, will scarce be thought worthy to continue in the place. If his small standing be thought an impediment, the present Mr. Minshull and his predecessor, Mr. Eaton, came both in when just at the bar: and Minshull by report continues as raw as he entered. The salary is but twenty marcs a year, with some perquisites, sometimes to be got by attendance at the Assizes and Quarter Sessions. The great advantage is the reputation it would give to a young man. . . . I perceive my Lord Abingdon and Sir Roger Mostyn are made friends in this matter.

(1702), May 18. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament at Westminster, London. Free.

Your bay stoned horse has not yet been bridled and saddled since he came up: he is not, I think, 14 hands high, but is now pretty thick, and no other ways improved. If you would sell him for what a market would afford, I would buy him to make me a trotting pad. I do think that if he is trained to hunt, he never will pay to 30*l.*, or if he will be a pacer, no more: with which are hazards. But being a fine trotter, I would keep him for myself. Now the fancies of people may run higher, so pray do not disoblige yourself on my account: but if you had rather part than not, I'll take him at 20*l.* Mr. Troughton is my encourager. Your paddock sown with turnips will certainly be more useful to you than to set it this year. Mrs. Littill showed me a letter from her son John, on board the "Monck," wherein he says he is resolved either to have a gold chain, or a wooden leg, or die. He says he was pressed. I heard you had put him under Captain Giffard. I bid her be of good cheer. My Lady's dog Chance has lost his cough, and not nice of diet. Derby Coffee houses say J. How is put out of C. and retired into the country. Reports from your town are that the young M[arquis of Hartington] and Lord Roos also do stand, but our parts are seemingly yet quiet.

1702, May 20. (Chesterfield.) — Godfrey Watkinson and Paul Webster to John Curzon, Esquire, a Member of the Honourable House of Commons, Westminster.

. . . We are obliged to you for your ready assistance to obtain a convoy betwixt Hull and London; but we are afraid that those convoys that the Lord High Admiral speaks of, that have orders to touch at all ports, will do us little service at Hull. For in the beginning of the late war we had such general convoys, but we found but little benefit by them, for Hull is situate so far up Humber, being 20 miles at least from the mouth of the river, that when they had notice that a convoy waited for them there, and made all the haste they could down, yet it very often happened that the convoys were gone before they could get down, being sometimes hindered by contrary winds; and then the ships that came from other places proved to be gone, there being no convenient haven to put into thereabouts: so that when they came there and found the convoys gone, they were loath to get back, and durst not stay there, for fear of privateers, and so was tempted to run the hazard of going without convoy. Upon these considerations, and also considering that Hull is one of the chiefest towns of trade in England, the Lords of the Admiralty was willing to grant 'em a stated convoy, only to attend them, and other considerable places of trade as York, Gainsborough, Stockwith, Nottingham, &c. situate upon the Rivers Trent and Ouse. We are in hopes that when his Lordship is informed of the great necessity there is of their having a convoy only to attend them, his Lordship will be willing to grant one as formerly they have had. So we would desire that you and Mr. Coke would be pleased to try his Lordship once more about it.

1702, May 20. Nottingham.—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke, M.P.

I am just now with Madam Firth at Nottingham who assures me Mr. Firth is in your and Mr. Curzon's interest: and that she will use her endeavours with Mr. Lander, late of Offreton (Alfreton), and on him depends one Mr. Huthwayte of Nottingham. Please to write to Mrs. Firth, and it may do more good.

1702, May 21. Bretby.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke, M.P.

. . . I doubt that the want of rain will dry up all our fruit and the continued north-east winds have blasted many of my young bearing peach trees, which I believe is almost as great a disappointment to me, who do only pretend to be a gardener, as the missing of a place at Court is to the Lord F—— who I hear will not stick at any price to get one. I have enquired how things go at Melborn, and I am told that you have abundance of fruit, and that Mr. Wilkins is about casting a hundred yards of lead pipes to bring water into your garden, but I hear also that all the labourers and workmen there are discharged, which makes me doubt that we may expect but little of your company in the country.

(1702, May ?).—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke, M.P.

Though I am always very unwilling to trouble my friends, yet I doubt, now you are engaged in business, I shall be desired by so many persons of quality to recommend their concerns to you that it will be an uneasiness to us both, and therefore I wish that you could furnish me with a general answer. I know how to turn off little people, but for persons of great quality they must be treated with more respect, and this is the occasion of my sending you the enclosed paper, and desiring to know what answer shall be made.

COKE MSS.

[Inclosure.]—Duchess of Devonshire to Earl of Chesterfield.

The receipt I told you of my woman forgot to keep a copy of, else I had sent it you. . . . If your Lordship thinks it proper to speak in the behalf of a gentleman that I have from several people a good character of to Mr. Coke, I should be glad of it, having married a kinswoman of mine (I inclose the request), and if not inconvenient to comply will obleege your Lordship's faithful servant and sister.

1702, June 8. Chesterfield.—Godfrey Watkinson and Paul Webster to Thomas Coke, a Member of the Honourable House of Commons in Westminster.

We are mightily obliged both to yourself and Mr. Curzon for the trouble you have had in our concern about convoy, which so far as we can understand will not be of much service to the Hull ships. If the convoys that are coming up and going could put into Grimsby Road and stay there 24 hours for the Hull fleet, it will be of service sufficient for them: but that we believe cannot be expected, they having such a fleet of colliers to convoy, and the uncertainty of weather and winds will prevent them from coming by Humber at any certainty. Hull is the third port in the kingdom, and all the ships belonging to Trent (which are fifty at least) goes by benefit of the Hull convoy, besides what comes from York; so that certainly it is not unreasonable to expect one to attend that fleet. But if you think otherwise, rather than give you too much trouble, we will be content to take our lot with other people. I am informed that it will be moved my name be put with the Commission of Peace. I do assure you that I'm altogether unfit for it, and therefore beg you will be pleased to put a stop to it. G. Watkinson.

1702, June 10. Osmaston.—R. Wilmot to [Thomas Coke].

I presume there will speedily be a new Commission of the Peace for Derbyshire, and several gentlemen put in, and others displaced, amongst whom I hear Mr. Cotchet is one. I was desired by some to speak in his behalf, that he might be continued; and if it shall be thought proper so to do, I believe it would be taken very kindly. . . . Mr. Cotchet seems to be a good natured, moderate, gentlemanlike man, and I believe will [not] give disturbance in elections, &c., so I submit the matter.

(1702) June 14.—John Wilkins to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

Mr. Verney and I do join our interest. Your best way to make your votes is to make what you can for us both. If you give me the preeminence, I shall ever acknowledge it as a favour. If you can't make two votes in one man, make one either for Verney or Wilkins. Make it for Verney, if it be against me, for I will serve Mr. Verney heartily. Lord Stamford is not against us. I thought you had something else to do than make Parliament men. I find you choose well: any body would be glad to be unmarried, that you might choose for them. Good luck and a boy.

1702, June 19.—R. Hardinge to Thomas Coke in St. James's Place.

As to Mr. Allen, I have heard that both the horses were blind, or near it, before Lady Mary went away; and I know nothing of their legs or feet. I think he has kept home very strictly, except when Mr. Wilkins has used him, and been very sober in the lieutenancy. You must be sure that Sir P. G., W. E., R. W., and S. P. are always in the country, and always appear in businesses, and often Sir C. P. To these there should be a majority always to appear, of as good quality and estates, and then there will be no jarring. As to Mr. C[otchett], I have not seen Mr. Wilmot, but will speak to him. There has been a report that Sir J. Harpur joined with Lord Hartington, spread about Winster, &c. Pray let it be dissipated by Sir John's letter to Henry Harpur and his friends thereabouts . . . I think the Derby freeholders should all be speedily spoke to by Mr. Curzon, and writ to by you in a number of letters . . . Your friends in Peake, Scarsdale, and Appletree must be diligent: our Hundred and this nether side will not I think stir from you. John Beresford and Port, &c. will be at Bakewell. Pray send the Justices a buck and dish of fish, and get what gentlemen you can there. I think the Sessions will be at Bakewell the 14th of July. Probably by that time you will be there; Mr. Curzon I suppose will . . . I am very much obliged to Lady Mary for her kind remembrance of me by Mr. Curzon. Her dog Chance has lost his cough, and is very nimble, and can scarce leave a full meal when I give it him . . . I have always observed you give my Lady H[arpur] an epithet, viz., fine, young, or the like, but it has I suppose no other effect upon you than to show your great civility. I should now be extremely pleased to do Sir John the service of assisting him to my power in anything that he has occasion for. The little horse is now at Foremark pacing with John Burdett's. The poll at Derby, and the assessing stock may engage freeholders. Sir Henry Every and my Lady are in Worcestershire. Sir Robert has put away the Scott Chaplain for not praying for Queen Nanny.

(On the same Sheet.)

1702, June 19. Foremark.—We are drinking your health (Signed), John Burdett: J. Curzon: D. Burdett: R. Hardinge: Eliz. Jodrell: Walt. Burdett: Robert Burdett: F. Hopegood. You may judge J. B. mad: of six cubs, secured for the country's good, three are dead and three run away. John Burdett had rather have drunk to you in Denisthorpe water. I fear he must go almost to hell for it. And then you must expect from him a treatise of visions: the well being now about twenty yards and no water.

1702, June 22. Brampton Moor.—Godfrey Watkinson to Thomas Coke, a Member of the House of Commons . . . Westminster.

I received your letter and am extremely obliged to you. I am every way unfit for it, else would not have refused to serve the Government. As for a convoy, we are very well satisfied that you have omitted nothing, and therefore we must wait till they be fitted with ships and men that they have occasion for. We are informed that the Lord Hartington's friends are making interest against a new election, but they do it privately. I fancy, if he has any hopes of succeeding, he will stand again, and the dissenters are apt enough to give him encouragement. I believe they are sensible that it's in vain to offer anything against you, and so their design must be to throw out Mr. Curzon. If they do proceed, I think your presence amongst us would be very serviceable to Mr. Curzon. I once hinted to you that perhaps the Duke of Leeds might make some interest in the far side of our Hundred, viz., about Beighton, Killamarsh, Balborough, Whitwell, or thereabouts: but, however, he could influence Colonel Gell who brought in ten or twelve votes to the last election from Sheffield side. . . I think Sir Benjamin Bathurst should be more positive in his letter to Mr. Allison than he was in his last.

1702, June 27. Kedleston.—John Curzon, M.P., to Thomas Coke, M.P., in St. James's Place, London.

I was at Ashburne fair on Wednesday last, where I saw several of our friends. I cannot learn that Lord Hartington finds any encouragement, or intends to stand. Mr. Berisford told me that he was with some men of Carrfield that voted for the Lords the last election. And they had promised him to vote for us, and make what interest they can for us. My father writes that I should secure Lord Shrewsbury's tenants by Mr. Arden. I have no commission from Lord Shrewsbury, so that all I can do with Mr. Arden is to entreat him by letter from myself that he will be so kind to prevail with my Lord's tenants to vote for me. As soon as the Parliament is dissolved, 'twill be necessary for us to acquaint our friends with it by circular letters. Be pleased to consider whether we should write singly, or send letters signed by both. You have a list of mine of the foreign votes: pray send it me down. Your kinsman Mr. Pole is in London; he went out of the country much displeased: taxes don't go according to his mind. I am still of an opinion that the greatest service and favour that could have been done for our country would have been to have turned that worthy gentleman and some others out of the commission of deputy lieutenants.

1702, July 5. Alderwasley.—C. Hurt to Thomas Coke in St. James' Street.

I understand you are desirous to have me act in the Commission of the Peace in our county. I hope you will find older heads than mine for that troublesome office. At present I think mine too young, and desire you to excuse me. I shall be ready to serve you and my country in the condition I am in to the utmost of my power. My Lord Hartington's agents are very still about us, which makes me think you will have no trouble with them the next election.

1702, July 6. Ashborne.—Captain John Beresford to Thomas Coke, M.P., at his house in Spring Garden, near Charing Cross.

. . . His Grace at Chatsworth mentions the putting by his son last time to several that go, and that his son is ready to serve his country, if they think fit to choose him: but does not say he shall stand, and I presume he has not yet met with sufficient assurance, that he shall be chose, so I hope this election may be a quiet one. As to what you write about the mines, 'tis plain truth upon Sir Philip Gell. He thinks to avoid the censure by not acting: but he does but hide his head, the body is seen. It hath placed me in a great deal of difficulty, which however I hope may so end as neither to impair your interest nor my own credit with them. For the great mine of Rockwood, instead of adding a three pence to the last year, we have abated half, so that instead of 213*l.* they are taxed but 80*l.*, and I am confident are not displeased. The rest I daresay we can please, all unless where Sir Ph. Gell is concerned, and these I least regard. But I hope now that Parliament is dissolved you will shortly be down, and then I shall give you a full account. In hopes of seeing Sir John Harpur sooner I have omitted to beg his interest in Cheshire for Sir Roger Mostyn and Sir George Warburton. If he be not come out of town I beg you will procure his letter to go down by next post to his agents in Cheshire, that his interest may attend and be disposed of by Mr. Brooke, the son of Sir Richard Brooke (because there are more of the name), who lives near Chester and Sir John's estate. We hear a discourse in the country that Mr. Cotchett is likely to retire with Mr. Spateman out of business which I am sorry for; he is much resorted to and well spoken on by our neighbours about Ashborne. I suppose him one of the best of the gang and could wish he might be spared.

1702, July 8.—John Verney to Thomas Coke.

Mr. Wilkins and I are extremely obliged to you already for the interest you have made for us in this county: and it would be of the greatest consequence imaginable to us, if your affairs would permit you to honour us with your company at the election. We have a great many persons towards Melton side that will vote for us; but the power of the two Lords has carried off from us all the gentry of that part of the country. So that if you would please to permit the freeholders from that part of the country to attend you into Leicester, your presence would give great reputation to us, and encouragement to our friends: and I am sure we have number sufficient in those parts to make a very considerable figure if they could have the honour to be conducted by a person of your quality.

1702, July 16. (London.)—J. Bromley to Thomas Coke, at the Earl of Chesterfield's, Bradby (Bretby).

I am glad you are like to have no opposition; and heartily wish the noble Lord may meet, where he is gone, with some gentleman of as much courage and conduct as yourself to disappoint him there too. I presume his brother will make nothing of it in your neighbourhood, nor more at Westminster. We have no news; only Sir J. Munden has been tried and is acquitted; and 'tis reported Lady Rook, who has had a fever in her lying-in, is dead. For want of other subject, I must entertain you, how I am employed. Captain Cartwright will vouch for me I am not idle. He and I examine Lord R[anelagh's] accounts, and hope to be able to make you a report at our meeting. I keep the accounts, and part not with them out of my sight, that I may be able to answer none of the vouchers are embezzled or diminished.

1702, July 18.—John Akrod to Thomas Coke, at Melbourne.

I received a letter from Mr. Curzon and yourself concerning your resolutions of standing for members. You may assure yourselves of my utmost endeavours. Sir Nathaniel Curzon's servant, who brought your letter, was making inquiry what money I had laid out. I find I have disbursed 7*l*. I made bold last winter to hint to you to show some kindness to the freeholders in Ashover, because what was done in other places was very kindly taken. Mr. Watkinson treated the freeholders in Brampton at his own house, and I did the like at Somershall by Mr. Clarke's order. . . . If you and Mr. Curzon think fit to do anything hereafter and please to let me know it, I shall readily obey your commands. I could wish Mr. Curzon's occasions would have given him leave to have been at Chesterfield at this time, when he might have been acquainted with some Scarsdale friends to whom he is yet a stranger.

1702, July 20. (London.)—J. Bromley to Thomas Coke, at the Earl of Chesterfield's at Bretby, in Derbyshire.

We have wanted you more than I expected. Mr. St. John came to town on Saturday night, but Mr. Brydges is not yet arrived. . . . We hear nothing further from the Earl of Oxford, or Ranelagh. The latter has given way to Sir Thomas Littleton at Castle Rising, and I believe will not be elected anywhere, which must be a mortification. Mr. How has prevailed for the City of Gloucester, and his friends are not out of hopes for his success in the county. However we are sure to have him, which grieves some people more than all the other elections in our favour. You'll judge by the printed lists how well they go, and I hope others whom it most concerns will consider what little help has been given us, and from thence make a right judgment of the true strength and interest of this kingdom. Lord Hartington, we heard could not have carried his election, if Lord F. had not desisted.

1702, July 21. (London.)—J. Bromley to Thomas Coke, at the Earl of Chesterfield's.

I am very glad your town election is so well over, and hope yours will be with as little trouble. Lord J. is not like to prevail here, nor Sir A. C. But what will be most welcome, I can assure you Mr. Howe is elected at Bodmin, in the room of Mr. Russell Roberts: I saw it last night under the Bishop of Exon's hand and that he had recommended him at the request of Dr. Jane. As to your staying in the country to attend the Leicestershire election, you are a public person, and I think may very well consider which may be most for the public interest. I believe Mr. Brydges and Mr. St. John will be this week in town, and then we can make a Board. Sir W. Glyn is chose at Woodstock by 28. Sir J. Packington is chose with Ja. Herbert for Aylesbury.

1702, July 25.—Lord Keeper Sir Nathan Wright to [Thomas Coke].

I have lately received a letter from the Duke of Devonshire, wherein he complains of the new Commission of the Peace for Derby: and more particularly for leaving out Mr. Spateman and Mr. Cotchett, both, as he says, men of estate and very active and useful justices in the country, and for putting in Mr. Brook Boothby and Mr. John Beresford, the last a known Jacobite, and neither of them of any estate, or other good qualities to recommend them to the Commission. I am unacquainted with them all, and a stranger to them, and therefore cannot give any answer to his Grace, until I am enabled by you and your brother members of that country, by whose advice I made the alterations. Therefore I desire of you the favour to enquire into the circumstances of these four gentlemen, and give me a perfect account of them in a post or two. I hope by this time I may wish you joy of your re-election to serve in Parliament. I hear Mr. Harpur is chosen at Derby town. The elections hitherto give hopes of a true Church of England Parliament.

1702, July 30. From the Camp at Peear (?).—Thomas Burton to Thomas Coke.

I have received my commission from my Lord Mallberow (Marlborough): as soon as I presented your letter, it was granted, which I restore you many thanks for. My Lord Mallberow presents his service to you, as per his orders in my letter. I am in Sir Bevil Grinfield's (Granville's) regiment, and a few lines of recommendation from you will do me a great kindness to the Lieutenant Corronall. . . . I cannot have the money from my brother out of the country so soon as I want it, for to buy me a tent, a bed, a baggage horse and a gold sash, which the Corronall says that I must buy these things. I desire in the mean time 20*l.* till I hear from my brother, which I desire per first post.

1702, August 5. Leicester.—William Inge, J. Wilkins to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place, London.

Our friends are returned, the numbers as follow:

Ross 2,010, Sherard 2,054, Verney 2,437, Wilkins 2,475.

The subscribers drink your health.

1702, August 8. Derby.—Walter Horton to [Thomas Coke].

Those that by their own merits, and by the discerning power of the wisest princes are raised to the highest honours have one way left of rising higher, if they graciously look down with a generous, nay (I may have leave to call it) a divine compassion upon those beneath them. I would therefore make a humble request to you and beseech your interest with my Lord Keeper to recommend me to the next vacancy of a Canon Residentiary place in the Cathedral Church of Gloucester. If it were not for Tully's reason that an epistle cannot blush, I should be ashamed of this address to you, which nothing but your condescending humanity could have justified. All good men seriously triumph in my Lord Keeper's deserved advancement, and earnestly wish him a long and a vigorous health, an increase of honour, and a late, a very late, most blessed immortality. And permit me to pray that you may long continue what you really are, a support to the Church, and an ornament and defence to the State, and a patriot to all honest men.

1702, August 22. Sutton.—Lord Scarsdale to Thomas Coke at St. James's Place.

I do not doubt but you have already had information of the displeasure of our Lord Lieutenant in relation to the alterations made in our Commission of the Peace. I am told by several people that he is almost as uneasy under Captain Berrisford being put in, as Mr. Spateman's being left out. I thought fit to give you notice, that you might prepare my Lord Keeper against any attack made upon him; which must be quietly done, for his Grace is upon the road, and, though he did design to stay some days in Neadwood Forest, I do imagine that the Queen's going to the Bath may hasten him to wait upon her, before her journey thither. As for the Captain, you cannot say too much in his behalf, for he is a man every way deserving, and I am sure sufficiently qualified as to estate. As to Spateman, you cannot say too much in the reverse. I can affirm it to you from the information of the next neighbours that he is a constant frequenter of conventicles, and caused a meeting-house to be built for that purpose at Alfreton: which of itself is exception enough to be made to a Queen, who has so fully declared herself for the Church of England. Pray acquaint my Lord Nottingham with this, and get him to speak to the Queen about it, for if by any inadvertency Spateman should get in again, it would be a blow to the honest gentlemen here, and to the interest now made never to be recovered.

1702, August 31. Locko.—Henry Gilbert to Thomas Coke, one of the Commissioners for Public Accounts at the Office in Spring Garden, London.

Your civility and kindness to your friends doth but embolden them to give you fresh trouble, to confirm which this comes to solicit your interest in behalf of a kinsman of my father's and mine to be Master of the Stamp Office at Exeter: his name is William Holbech. He has got my Lord Willoughby of Brook's letter to Mr. Bromley. . . I beg you also to consider of that matter Mr. Gregson and I spoke to you about relating to the coinage of halfpence for Ireland, and to give us your assistance in it.

1702, September 12. From the Camp.—Thomas Burton to Thomas Coke, Piccadilly, London.

That money I had of Mr. Francis Wright was 20*l.*; he knows I did pay 10*l.* of it away in London, and 10*l.* I had left for to bring me to Holland, when I went from Williamstart (Willemstadt) to the Hague to wait on my Lord Mallberow. I was forced to stay there a fortnight before I could come to the Camp, and when I came to the Camp, I was six weeks before I received my commission. I was forced to borrow money to pay my charges. Pray judge whether 20*l.* will buy me a scarlett suit, and a horse, tent and bedding, and pay for my commission. I beg the favour of you that you will speak to my brother, or else I shall not have it.

COKE MSS.

1702, September 25. N.S. Camp at Sutendal.—Richard Pope to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, at St. James's Place, London.

I would have answered your favour last Thursday, but having a prospect of sending you an account of the surrender of Venloo by this: having the same day a letter from Fred. Cornwallis, with a relation of their taking the Fort St. Michel, on this side the river, by storm, when the besieged thought they could scarcely make a lodgment on the counterscarp. And that with very little loss on our side, our men behaving themselves so that no one that was there could with modesty express, nor no one that was not, believe. This so frighted the besieged that they have surrendered the town without standing an assault, falsely imagining the besiegers designed a general one, when they only were preparing for a feu de joie for the taking of Landau. I do not yet hear the articles, but my Lord Marlborough is just gone to meet some of the States, and I believe they will be public tomorrow. It was reported that they have quitted Ruremond but my Lord does not believe it. By these things you may judge what probability there was of success when we might have engaged with a superiority of number on our side: no stone walls, nor any impediment but a morass in Mr. Dopt's noddle. But my Captain will give you this winter a better account of these matters than I can pretend to do, being chosen by my Lord for his aide-de-camp, the day of that designed engagement, and has been employed by him ever since in the most important affairs of that sort, and has since given him a brevet of lieutenant colonel: he gives you his humble respects.

1702, September 26..—John Howe to Thomas Coke at St. James's Place.

I received your favour the day before I left Bath. I know not what the waters will do for my health, but I have found very little pleasure there; that perhaps may come from my own, and not the dullness of the place, where a world of materials for it were present. We had no intrigue talked on, whether the world be more virtuous or more discreet, I know not: in so much that we have them from London. Amongst which a certain gentleman with Mrs. K. is mentioned, to whom I wish every success he desires. Your relation of the two ladies' treatment of Lord D. I found very pleasant. I hope you are provided with good entertainment for us next Sessions from your Board. I do not think to be in town before the 20th taking for granted there will be no struggle about a Speaker. There was a design amongst the enemy to set up Col. Granville to divide us, but that is too foolish a project to be attempted.

(1702?), October 10. Dorney Court, Windsor.—Gilbert Clarke to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, in St. James's Place, London.

. . . I may suppose you are not ignorant that the Governor of Maryland has left that place. Among the rest who make all their interest for such an important thing is Sir Thomas Lawrence, whose character is reported extraordinary; and whose name is not unknown to the Queen for his second son was captain and playfellow to the Duke of Gloucester, much beloved by him and then the Princess. He was afterwards lost with the Carlisle ship. The thing that I desire is that you would make what interest you can with my Lady Fletcheville about this concern. I believe my Lord Rochester and the Bishop of London have promised their endeavours. . . . It is but duty to do what one can for our friends.

1702, October 12. Bretby.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke, M.P.

Your favour of the 6th instant brought me the first news of our ill success at Cales, which I confess was beyond expectation, there being no army to oppose us. I do not doubt of the trouble it has given to all the kingdom, but it must in particular have been the greatest affliction imaginable to the poor Duke of Ormond, to have so great a design miscarry under his conduct. I confess I wish myself at London to be informed of all the particulars of it. . . . Some of my bailiffs have not yet brought my rents, but do hope very soon to embrace you at London.

(1702), October 12. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, at the Office for Public Accounts in Spring Garden, London.

Winter comes on: therefore please to let your man, John Gardiner, buy me one of Colonel Wilson's coach lantherns, and I'll pay him for it. I think the stick is about 6 foot long, and screwed on at the head. The Mayor of Derby invited Sir John [Harpur] and Sir Nat. Curzon, Mr. Curzon, Walter Burdett, Mr. Harpur, me and some more. I suppose it was about the Navigation. I had business in town, so saw but little of them after dinner. But Mr. Alex. Stanhope drank prosperity to the Corporation, so I suppose he is satisfied. Mr. Curzon set outs for town to-day: but goes by Penn. Mr. Harpur will not be in town till Monday night, going by Mr. Warren's. I was at Chesterfield Sessions: I do not hear that J. Fitzherbert, or they of that side, will act. I hear Henry Gilbert will. Sir Charles [Pye?] acts at Derby: so that Mr. Cotchett's place is supplied. Mr. Cantrell of Hartshorne was there indicted for sheepstealing, together with his man. His man was then committed till the assizes. Mr. Cantrell was frighted so as to abscond; but I did him the favour to get an order to bail him till the assizes, which is done. He lays the fault on J. Wilkins, and says 'tis a party cause: but in truth he is an accessory post factum, and a rascal, which you need [not?] be told.

1702, October 24. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament at Westminster, London.

Several of your Derby friends are very uneasy about the Commissioners for the Land Tax, especially at Mr. Burrows, who they say is partial and very oppressive to them, and is the chief promoter of it. I hope Mr. Curzon and the Burgesses will find a way to leave him out; and that there may be a number in Derby qualified to act, as will balance your enemies there. The list will inform you, and I hope it will not be forgot. The gentlemen that serve for the town may readily imagine that the tradesmen must comply in humouring this set of Commissioners, when they have so considerable a power over them, as the assessing personal estates, and making what assessors they will. I hope you will receive good Lady Mary in good plight next Thursday, and that John Gardiner will remember the lanthern.

COKE MSS.

(1702), October 29. St. Lawrence, near Liége.—Lieutenant Richard Pope to Thomas Coke.

I suppose you have had an account of our marching here, and of the French having abandoned the town upon our approach: as likewise the taking of the citadel on Monday last by storm. We began to fire yesterday on the Charterhouse Fort, which is this day surrendered on honourable terms, the garrison to be conducted to Antwerp, with two small pieces of cannon. I believe we shall march towards quarters in four or five days: our is the Buss (Herzogen Bosch). I think I cannot come for England this winter; Colonel Sibourg designing to go over, and the Cornet there already. But I do not fear wanting friends as long as you and he are there. If there be any new raised forces, I should be glad to be amongst them, if I could have a post worth while. If there be to be any, I reckon you will know as soon as anybody, therefore pray think, dear Sir, of your most obedient servant.

1702, November 8. Geartenden Bord (Gertruidenborg).—Thomas Burton to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's.

I have not heard from my brother since you writ to Lieutenant Pope that my brother would provide money for me. What money I owe for my commission and tent and carrying baggage is stopped out of my pay, now that I am come to garrison, all at once, so that I shall have nothing to live on all this winter. I am as poor as Job, and I must buy me bedclothes, and gold sash and silk scarf, and a great many things. Here is a gentleman in the regiment that laid down the money upon honour; if I don't pay him, it will stain my reputation. . . . It will cost 50*l.* to acquit me. This bearer is a Captain in my regiment and if you think fit to pay him what money I shall have, it will be paid here per his order.

1702, November 8. Thorp Constantine.—William Inge to Thomas Coke, a Member of Parliament, one of the Commissioners of the Accounts of England.

. . . . At this juncture I could not but congratulate with and thank you for the vote concerning the impeached, and your order for a Bill to prevent Occasional Conformity. They have something in them too reviving not to be thought of, and if thought of something too great not to be thanked for. I question not but our Patriots will now be as successful as our Generals, and St. Stephens yield as many laurels and blessings as Vigo has done. In short we are all transported in the glorious scene of our affairs, and bless and thank the procurers of them. Go on, great Patriots, with the noble undertaking of retrieving our Church as well as State, be great as you are good, and may all your enemies be ours and truckle to your worth and our wishes. Did I not know our concerns cannot dispense with the loss of you for a minute, I could scarce stop the pleasing current of my thanks and praises.

1702, November 11. Somershall.—John FitzHerbert to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament at Westminster. Free.

I most thankfully acknowledge your kind remembrance in sending the Votes, and for so long as you are pleased to continue the favour, I could wish they were directed by Uttoxeter bag, Staffordshire. Our late success at sea, together with the seeming unanimity of the House of Commons in their just proceedings, will make the country more cheerfully undergo the burden of taxes, which at this juncture lie very heavy by reason of the lowness of our markets for all commodities that relate to the farmers.

1702, November 27. Newgate.—Thomas [Watson Bishop of] St. David to the Honourable Mr. Coke, a Member of Parliament.

Being this day advised of your great and generous charity in considering the case of an oppressed persecuted Bishop, I thought it my duty to make my acknowledgments, and assure you whatever characters malice and calumny have given me, I always did and shall endeavour to approve myself an honest Englishman and Bishop of the Church of England. I should be too troublesome to relate how long and much I have suffered from the Archbishop's assumed power, warranted neither by law nor precedent, as well as injustice in condemning me for crimes I always abhorred and detested. I bless God for the supports I have had from him, and a good conscience which is as clear and free from the crimes he hath fastened upon me as I was when I went first to Cambridge; and nothing but his Grace's will and pleasure make me guilty. I have been, Sir, near twenty-three weeks a prisoner, upon the Archbishop's significavit for not paying my lawful costs, which he, upon the belief of the adversary's books, taxed at 603*l.* 15*s.* 8*d.*, which according to the table of fees, as I am informed, would not exceed 100*l.* But his Grace may as well tax damages under the name of costs, as what he hath done: who hath doomed me to deprivation, and hath thereby punished me in my credit and reputation, and in my estate and liberty. I humbly own the undeserved favour to a man who is a precedent, and the first instance of suffering in many respects.

1702, December 5. Overton.—William Hodgkinson to Thomas Coke, at the Parliament House, Westminster.

I humbly thank you for your continued favours in sending me the Votes, which I communicate to as many of my neighbours as desire to see them. We are very much hindered in the working of our lead mines by the parson who hath some lands and properties in grounds adjoining to our said works, and will not suffer us to work them as others of our neighbours most willingly suffer us: although we have offered him as good terms as any other of our neighbours whatsoever. By which obstinacy in him many of our workmen having nothing to do, and by which our parish in particular is a great sufferer: so would intreat you if practicable to get the inclosed put into the Poor Bill, and the charge that attends it shall be most gratefully paid you.

(Draft clause. To make an agreement in writing signed by two thirds at least in number and value of proprietors of grounds in or through which mines of minerals or soughs are carried binding on all other proprietors of such grounds.)

1702, December 7.—John Akrode to Thomas Coke at the House of Commons.

At the desire of Mr. John Newham of Whittington I give you this trouble. He is much concerned at the design of making Derwent navigable, because of his estate lying a considerable length by the side of it. When this matter was formerly in agitation, he received a letter from the Corporation to preserve him from damage. He requests that if the Bill do pass there may be such a clause in it.

1702, December 23. Locko.—Henry Gilbert to Thomas Coke, House of Commons.

I did expect the Bishop of Lichfield would have presented you before now with a Bill concerning Tithes. . . . When you receive it, I intreat you to move the House for leave to bring it in. . . . The Bill is very harmless: it will take nothing from any man: only makes it more easy for good men, who incline to restore any tithes to the Church, by making them descend as inheritances at the common law, and by curbing the statutes of mortmain in that case only. I recommend the management to you and the success to Providence.

Coke MSS.

1702, December 28.—Michael Burton to Thomas Coke, House of Commons.

The occasion of this trouble is upon the account of my old cousin Hurt of Alderwaslee. There is a Nonconformist gentleman, who is, I think, by place, a messenger to the Lords of the Treasury, that for fear of the Act to prevent Occasional Conformity, is resolved to sell his place, and has offered the refusal of it to my cousin Hurt's second son, who married a relation of the said gentleman. I think he asks 400*l.* or 500*l.* for it, and pretends it to be in salary and perquisites nearly 300*l.* a year. . . . My cousin Hurt, being not willing to lay out so large a branch of his child's fortune without information and encouragement of some judicious friend, pitched upon you as a person whom he thought both capable and ready to do him such a kindness: and being not able himself by reason of the gout, ordered me to acquaint you with the matter and request the favour of you to make an enquiry into the nature of the place, &c. . . . I beg you will favour me with your opinion of the aforesaid Bill, whether you think it will have strength to travel through the House of Lords, and make any vacancies considerable. There is a friend of yours would venture 1,500*l.* upon such a post as you would advise him to. An untoward indisposition had near deprived Wirkesworth Hundred of a justice of peace and you of a staunch vote, but I compounded with Death for an old woman, and so he let me alone for this time. This Bill has so envenomed all the Presbyterians that they are making all imaginable interest underhand against you and Mr. Curzon against the next election.

1702–3, January 3. Dublin.—Isaac Manby to [Thomas Coke].

The inclosed is the report from the committee appointed to inspect Sir William Robinson's accounts, and upon which the censure of the House upon him was grounded; it was sent me this morning by the clerk . . . . We have little news here, my Lord Duke, being at Kilkenny, will return on Wednesday next. We yesterday lost another Commissioner of the Revenue, Mr. Carleton: Mr. Van Homrigh died the Thursday before: by which there are two vacancies in that Commission, and at least forty pretenders to fill them. Those that are gone were noted men for diligence and good management. I wish them well succeeded for the public service.

1702–3, January 11. Locko.—Henry Gilbert to Thomas Coke at the House of Commons.

You have very much obliged me with your opinion about the Tithe Bill. How it is now worded, I know not; but it was never my intent to have the Statute of Mortmain totally repealed, but only restrained as to this Bill. However I am content that it follow the pattern of that you mention in the late reign, "For encouraging Charitable Gifts to Colleges and Schools." . . . We are yet in the dark as to a new Sheriff, which some fancy will be fixed either upon Sir Charles Pye or me: but I beseech you do what kindness you can to divert it.

1702–3, January 27.—Robert Child to Thomas Coke.

In your letter you are pleased to call that a civility, which a grateful sense of the many obligations which my father and I owe to his Lordship [the Earl of Chesterfield] commanded from me. The picture cost me 111 guineas, and I shall not ask my Lord any more for it, but think myself very happy that I have this opportunity of pleasuring his Lordship by it. I beg you to acquaint his Honour with this.

[On this letter Mr. Coke endorsed "The Lanfranc picture."]

1702–3, February 1. Lichfield.—Lord Stanhope to Thomas Coke, M.P.

This is to acquaint you that Sir Clement Fisher (who is my intimate friend) is now pricked down Sheriff for Warwickshire; and I shall take it as a favour if you will go to the Lord Nottingham from me, and tell him that if he pleases to get my friend Sir Clement off, I shall take it as a very singular favour at his hands. I would not give you this trouble, but that I have formerly had the honour to be very well known to his Lordship, and sent him several beagles; so that perhaps, with the help of your countenance, I may succeed. . . . I thank you for the poetry, which I am informed the noble Colonel had a hand in.

1702–3, February 23. Shackerstone.—T. Hall to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Street, near St. James's House.

When I was to wait on you about my miller's mare taken up in your manor of Castle Donington I had other business with a servant of yours, Mr. Alleyne. Since his so many breaches of promise I am now forced to inform you of the whole matter. Mr. Alleyne, some little time before you was pleased to take him into your service, was entertained and taken into the house of one Richard Holland of Twycros, an old cook and one that sells a pot of ale, the said Mr. Alleyne being at that time almost naked and not looked upon but rejected of all his relations, but pitied by the said Richard Holland who bought for him clothes, shirts, boots, shoes, and all other necessaries, as also finding him meat, drink, washing, and lodging during almost a year and a half. And in consideration of such entertainment he gave to the said Richard Holland several notes for payment which are all discharged but two of 14*l.* Since you was pleased to stand for a member in Parliament for the County of Derby, when I was to my power instrumental in sending you votes out of Leicestershire, Mr. Alleyne sets the law at defiance, pretending your protection as being your servant, which I cannot believe you will grant to any person when you are informed of villainy in the case. But before I caused him to be arrested I thought it proper to acquaint you with the whole matter. Holland is a very poor man and almost ready to fall upon the town for relief, which makes me trouble you with my humble petition, hoping you will not grant him your protection.

(1702–3), February 27. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament at the House of Commons, or at the Office for Public Accounts, in Spring Garden, London.

When I was the other day at the adjournment of the Sessions, to qualify Mr. Eyre, Sir Phillip Gell, Sir C. Pye, Mr. Willmott, and Mr. Spateman for Deputies, Mr. Eyre was telling me that your tenant, Thomas Eyre, had hanged three or four brace of bucks. I judge it will put my Lord [of Rutland] upon the fret to do you what mischief he can; and if you have not heard of it before, you may speak to Thomas Bagshaw. I wrote to you some time since about an exchange of one acre three roods of land. You do not return answer. My hope is that you are wholly taken up, but now you will have some recess. I fear you will lose 30*l.* by the miller.

COKE MSS.

1702–3, March 6.—Michael Burton to Thomas Coke, Member of the House of Commons at his house in St. James's Place, London.

Since my last to you I received a letter from my brother dated from Gertrudenberg inclosed in another from one Captain John Menger who it seems, upon Captain Dove's recommendation, lent my brother 25*l.* to buy him a tent, a gold scarf and a silk one, a horse and other things. . . . I design to return a 50*l.* bill to you in order to discharge my promise to the Captain, whom I will write to wait upon you. The 25*l.* the Captain is to have will make my brother's former receipts from me just 100*l.*, part of the 200*l.* assigned by my father's will for his portion: and the remainder of the 50*l.* bill I desire may be disposed of for him as you in your discretion shall appoint. . . . As to the matter of Mr. Statham I only gave you a hint to beware of him in case of any election matter for the future. I am very well satisfied that he has been very much pressed into my Lord H[artington]'s interest, and has had very great matters promised him upon that account: and I knew his ambition and avarice to be such that he could forsake his best friend to promote them. As to my own particular . . . I will only tell you he has particularly vilified me behind my back in relation to my office of justice of the peace, and telling several persons of the great and earnest applications I made to be put into the Commission, thereby insinuating the particular advantages I would make by the place. Should he get no more by his profession he might put his profits in his eye. He very frequently applies the verses in Hudibras, in relation to the justice of the peace there, to me, and much more to the same effect. . . . I cannot but despise his reflections; but I could not but make this upon the matter, that the person who will endeavour so much to lessen me for my services to you will not fail to disserve you too when it lies in his way. . . . Honest Jeremy Pratt and I are just now drinking to your health and prosperity.

1702–3, March 13. Lichfield.—Lord Stanhope to Thomas Coke, M.P.

. . . I wish I had a capacity answerable to the inclinations I have of serving the present Government. But my ill state of health and the unfortunate deafness that attends it (which you are but too well acquainted with) must destroy all thoughts I can have of meddling with public business. However I do think myself much obliged to you and your friends, for taking notice, at this time, of your most insignificant as well as most affectionate brother.

1702–3, March 13.—John Harpur (M.P for Derby) to [Thomas Coke].

I am glad to hear that there's hopes of Halcyonian days; but when an opportunity of enjoyment is, and both parties have a liking, you would blame the conduct of those that did not improve that moment to their advantage: others have a prospect, if we neglect to make use of those blessings that are in our power. If we carelessly let slip those days that offer us happiness, and by an accident lose our moment, how will those, who are now as industriously as ever struggling for power and interest, despise our neglect and triumph over us. Nay, the very omissions that we have been guilty of will be a warning to them not to fall into the same errors. 'Tis insinuated by the Dissenting party that the Parliament will be dissolved. I hear Lord H[artington], Lord R[oos] and Sir Ch[arles Pye] are making interest: 'tis said their tools have been long at work privately. Being now discovered, I presume they gloss over the matter with the report of a dissolution, and though they believe nothing of it themselves, yet they support their followers with that opinion. I have lost the favour of Mr. Alleyne, Mr. Thomas Brookhouse, and several others in St. Whalburg's parish by delaying the removal of Hatton, the exciseman: but most people say my interest is better than ever, though I cannot be of that opinion unless I can regain those gentlemen that seem disgusted. If that can be done, then I am sure that my interest must be good. Many are out of humour with Mr. Stanhope: how his presence may influence them I cannot tell; but I think he ought to make a trial how they will relish his company.

1702–3, March 17. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, at the Office for Public Accounts in Spring Garden, London.

We were to the number of 20 of your friends to wait on the Chief Justice, and the next day Sir Nathaniel [Curzon] and about ten of them dined with him, of which number was Mr. Curzon. John Harpur sets out hence with Robert Wilmot on Easter Monday. I shall be glad to hear Lady Mary to be well. Mr. Pole lost his cause yesterday with Mr. Meynell of Langley to his great grief; and I suppose does not like Trevor. Mr. Meynell told me he was pallidus ira, when the judge summed up the evidence. My Lord of Rutland has given Thomas Eyre of Kouter such an affront, as he did Sir Phillip Gell, and Thomas says he only wants youth to fight him. Mr. Chaworth is extremely obliged to you. Dr. Coke told me he saw your cousin Kate Stanhope in Yorkshire, who says the quakers are all either fools, or knaves, or mad. I shall not send to Northampton fair, being advised to depend rather on Derby and Ashborne.

1702–3, March 17.—P. Chaworth to Mr. Caldecott, Woollen Draper at the Corner Shop, Salisbury Court in Fleet Street, London.

Pray tomorrow let me have a letter and the Postman, directed to me as your letters are, by Dyer, or any body you think as good. Let the Postboy too be sent at the same time, and so continued, both within the letter. Pray do you go along with the man that sends me the news to one Mr. Coke, Parliament man for Derbyshire, and he'll direct you the surest way for my letters coming safe—that is, he'll direct them. You must know he is one of the Commissioners for taxing the Public Accounts, which if they at the Post Office presume to strike out his frank, he'll know the reason with a witness to 'em. He lives at a House in St. James's Place. I writ him word this post that I would send you and my newswriter to wait of him tomorrow with a letter to frank; and pray don't fail, for he expects you. And I leave it altogether to you to please me in an Intelligencer, for I know their terms without any more ado. Whatever prints he and you think best, pray send, and begin on Saturday next. In the interim I am yours.

1703, April 5. Lichfield.—Lord Stanhope to Thomas Coke, M.P.

I wish you much joy of your daughter, and take it very kindly that you and my sister are pleased to think of me for a godfather to my little niece. Since I am not in town I desire you would make choice of whom you please to represent me. . . . Tomorrow morning I begin my journey to Wing, where I hope to be upon Thursday. Pray distribute five guineas for me among the caudle makers.

(1703, April.) Lichfield.—Lord Stanhope to Thomas Coke, M.P., at St. James's Place, London.

This is to wish you much joy of your daughter. . . . I believe I might have had a nephew, had it not been prevented by the pernicious influence of too many cucumbers. Walmisley is the same man you left him: and has got such witnesses as came against Baker, to swear several misdemeanors as riots and those things against the gentlemen that came to the election. He goes to London tomorrow, and how he will proceed against me is left to his own discretion. However since he will not learn better manners, if you can get him flung out of the House, it will be no small satisfaction to your most affectionate brother and humble servant.

Coke MSS.

1703, May 18. Willow Walk, near Chelsey.—Francis Burdett to Thomas Coke.

. . . My occasions are so very urgent that I expect every day to be utterly ruined if I have not some very speedy relief from you. Our cause is a family cause, and though Sir Robert hath got both the honour and the estate, yet I hope I inherit the justice and honesty of my father, whose name I bear. I earnestly entreat you to consider that if Sir Robert ever intends to be just to me, these delays will all return upon him to make good the damages I sustain and the suffering I undergo. My case is very sad in all particulars. I am not capable of stirring abroad to wait on you, or attend to my other affairs which now entirely run to ruin, but upon Sunday which I ought to employ for the benefit of my soul. Be pleased to expedite this affair, which you have so generously espoused, and appoint me some time tomorrow, where I may wait upon you in a place of security.

1703, June 5. Camp of Handow (?).—Thomas Burton to Thomas Coke.

I am now in low station from fitting myself out for the campaign and depending on the money which you sent me word my brother would pay you for to send me by our officers when they came over: but they have none for me. I suppose he thinks I am here to be killed, so will let me have nothing. But, Sir, for the care and love I have for you, whilst I can bear a sword in my hand I will venture for you. If it was not for the encouragement you give me I should have been in a very low condition. If they will but let me have what my father left me, and lend me some small matter: for 350*l.* I can buy a company, I would pay it in two years time. We have hard duty—two nights in bed in the week. We have no news here in the Camp, but lie the two armies in two leagues of one another. Now and then small parties meet; it is discoursed for to take Huy and Namur.

1703, June 13. Bath.—Lady Mary Coke to Thomas Coke, M.P.

I just now received my dear's kind letter, and the assurance of your being safely arrived at your journey's end was a great pleasure to me for I was in great concern for fear of the waters. . . . . These two days past I have had two violent fits of the cholic, indeed as severe as any at London. In the last I took laudanum, which shortened it very much. . . . I own a fit casts me down very much, for fear of a continuance, which besides an uneasy life to myself, must make me troublesome to every body else. I was so well when I writ to you last, that I went to a play with Lady Bellamont, which was very dull: but in a day after I kept house, and have not been out since. Though we do not want for invitations to balls. My Lord and Lady Dalkeith made the last: my sisters went to it. On Monday Lord Chomley makes one, and after that Lord Manchester one. Doctor Ratcliffe is so well to go to the pump every day. I think to beg his advice privately; for they say he gives out he will not advise anybody, being he comes for his own health. . . .

1703, June 23. Bath.—Lady Mary Coke to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, at his house in St. James's Place, London.

. . . Having missed the cholic since Friday I do not think of troubling Dr. Ratcliff, for I am afraid for such desperate pain there is no remedy but laudanum and the waters, which agree extremely with me in other respects. Lady Athelstone came here on Saturday . . . she is in my eye much the handsomest face I have seen here. I have raffled once with my Lady Hare, but won nothing. Mr. Fisher says he will take care to furnish Ellen with money for the house; and I hope my dear will not be wanting in ordering the months bills may be paid constantly. My father gave me an account of Sir William's death; and that he left him Shelford, which was his own. For sister Katherine, I believe if she lives she will have her thousand pounds, but three hundred now would have been more acceptable. This morning as I was dressing I began to have the cholic: and though I had taken a quart of waters at 7 in the morning, and this began at 11, I sent for two quarts more, and drank them off as fast as I could, and I thank God it put off the fit. I hope it will do me no hurt.

(1703), June 26. Bath.—Lady Mary Coke to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, at his house in St. James's Place, London.

I can assure you my dear that I have not any one post since I saw you refused myself the pleasure of writing to you, and therefore I am surprised you do not receive them. I have constantly received yours, only sometimes later than the other letters in the town. As for my health, thank God, I think it better than it was. I writ you word how I had tried last Wednesday, in a fit, two quarts of these waters besides the first I had taken in the morning. It put off the fit, but at night it began to return, though very gently: though for fear of the worst I took ten drops of my laudanum, and I thank God since I have continued pretty well. . . . Since this was begun a fit of the cholic has taken me, at first pretty severely, but taking one quart of the water, thank God, it went off in an hour and a half. Doctor Ratcliff is just gone from me, and says I have a distemper that is the hardest to cure, but that here is my only remedy, and he believes them admirable: to-night he will have me take laudanum pills, and soon other prescriptions. I dread my stay here if I follow his order.

1703, June 30. Bretby.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke, M.P.

. . . I have found great benefit by Dr. Coke's assistance, and by entering into a course of steel, for it has almost taken away all my yellowness. As to your news I could not read it without smiling, for it seems almost incredible that a General should run away at the same time that his army was victorious. But I will not detain you with my commenting on so extraordinary a text.

1703, August 9. O. S. The Camp before Huy.—Hans Hamilton to Thomas Coke, in St. James's Place.

I had the honour of a letter from you by your two Northern friends (who may depend on all the service I am capable of showing them) . . . . the hopes of finding news worth the knowing, as the taking of Antwerp or Ostend (which must have been welcome to St. Stephen's Chapel) was the real cause of my silence. And now failing on that side by reason of the impossibility of attacking the lines drawn before them, backed with an army equal in numbers, we are forced to turn our designs on this place. 'Twill keep us about ten days after our batteries begin to play, which will be on Tuesday morning next. From hence we intend for Limbourg, like Chymists that miss of the Philosopher's Stone, but make discoveries equivalent to the great arcanum they aimed at. Though we did not succeed in our first attempts and designs, yet these petty towns are not of less advantage, for the security of Liege, shortening our communications with the Rhine, and facilitating the siege of Namur, whenever we shall think fit to undertake it. Your two friends, if I mistake not, have had a surfeit of our trade already: and I believe, as soon as we are masters of this place, resolve to make the best of their way to Derbyshire, where I begin to wish myself too: for I never saw so fatiguing a campaign. And therefore I hope 'twill the sooner end, and then I shall the sooner be able to tell you myself that nobody is more, Sir, your most obedient and most humble servant.

Coxe MSS.

1703, August 27. N. S. Camp before Huy.—Captain Richard Pope to Thomas Coke.

I have not before this given you the trouble of a letter, we having done nothing this campaign but march and countermarch, to very little purpose as I conceive; it ending in the siege of this place, which we have been nine days before, trenches opened, but the batteries were not ready till Wednesday last. It was surrendered yesterday morning, the garrison to remain prisoners of war. We have had yesterday and to-day great councils of war, in which I am told there is nothing yet determined. Some are for Limburg, others for attacking the lines near Bonef, and some for going to Namur: but I fear the last is too great an undertaking for the remaining part of the summer. We expect to go for Portugal, the Duke of Schomburg as we hear having desired it of her Majesty: but I find my Lord Duke of Marlborough is not willing to part with an English horse out of this country. If the regiment stays here I propose to myself the happiness this winter of kissing your hands in England, and assuring you how much I am your most obedient humble servant.

1703, September 24. Bretby.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke, M.P., at his house in Park Place nigh St. James's.

I am to ask your pardon for being so long indebted to you for your last favour, with the inclosed reasons for attacking the French lines. I am inclined to think that the Duke of Marlborough procured the signing and the publishing of those reasons, not only to justify himself to the world for not fighting, but also by laying the blame upon the States to make a querelle d'Allemand with them, which will be an honourable excuse for his Lordship's quitting of the service the next year. . . .

1703, October 4. Bretby.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke, M.P.

Your last favour brought me the reasons of the Dutch Generals against fighting, but, as you say, the best reason is not mentioned by them, which was the private commands of the States for the contrary. And it has a long time been a maxim amongst them not to exasperate their enemies by bloody battles in hopes of conquest, but rather to secure what they have, and expect an advantageous peace.

1703, October 19. Ilam.—J. Port to the Hble. Thomas Cooke, Esq.

Having formerly given you some trouble in the affair betwixt the Vicar of Ilam and myself, I hope you will not refuse me your assistance in it, now there is some prospect of bringing it to an issue this term, he having preferred a bill against me before the Lord Keeper. The question is whether a clergyman is in equity obliged to keep a solemn promise or no, for I look upon a bond of resignation to be such. Indeed some of our Bishops think their brethren the clergy lie under no obligations of promises or gratitude, as may be seen in Sir John Packington's case, as well as mine: for our Bishop (as Mr. Sterndale sets forth in his bill) refuses to receive his resignation, and so invalidates the judgment I have obtained against him at common law; which in my opinion looks so much like knavery and combination, that I cannot but hope a Court of Equity will relieve me. However as I am informed, it will appear simony in him, and so the presentation go to my Lord Keeper, which makes me desire you will use your interest with the Lord Keeper to gain the presentation for a son of Mr. Ensor's, in case it lapses to him, and to determine the affair this term. They have already put me to a great deal of charge in the Exchequer, where they have had me three or four years, and when it was come to an issue there, they removed it into the Chancery, as a more dilatory Court. For his attorney declares, if he will but furnish him with money, he will make me weary of the suit: and the parson brags that his brethren will not let him want that, in order to carry on the common cause, as they call it. I know not what they mean by it, but I think it very plain by their proceedings that they are more inclined to betray the religion and interest of their country than the nobility and gentry ever were.

[Indorsed by Mr. Coke "to speak to the Lord Keeper."]

1703, November 13. Leicester. At the One Crane Inn.—Francis Petty to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, at the Commission of Accounts Office, Spring Garden, London.

I am still at Leicester and am obliged to stay till the 25th because there is no place to be had in the London coach before. Lord Scarsdale supped and lay at the Crane one night. I owned I had the honour to know you a little. I think I shall effectually perform my commission with Mr. Willson, whom I find a gentleman of nice honour, yet is pleased to hear reason from me, the only messenger he liked. I have not found one fool in this country. They answer all concisely—Yes—No—Can't tell—Indifferent—: sharp witted, very gallant—sell their wives for what one that likes her will give. Their whole endeavour is outwitting each other in bargaining: diffident of themselves, they mistrust strangers extremely. I am forced to tell my business in the market, at least enough to let them know I do not come to steal their hearts or effects. I have diverted myself as I could hitherto, but want a bill of 5*l.* more, to be returned by Mr. John Campbell at the Three Crowns in the Strand. If you, Sir, would give a note to your tenant John Higgon who is well known to Mr. Robert Bass, Innkeeper, at the One Crane at Leicester to pay him 5*l.*, I would return it to you, as soon as in London; that I might make the best of my way home before the rains fall to raise the waters. For God's sake, one word of news: say something to make me endure this place a week or ten days more, for Mr. Willson has appointed me another meeting here. Lord Scarsdale's nephew said the Marquis of Hartington is drowning Derbyshire with usquebaugh. You will smile to hear the many perils I had courage to go through.

1703, November 22.—Francis Petty to Thomas Cooke, in St. James's Place.

You desired of me the journal of my Leicestershire journey. The most remarkable thing I have met with was in the chimney nook at the One Crane, wherein I chanced to meet with honest John Edwin, a sufficient tenant of yours at Baggrave Hall, who tells me you are an excellent landlord, and do him the honour in passing to stop at his house: and that you shot a hare once an hour before dinner, which being on the spit was restored new on Lady Mary's coming in. The men of this country are very concise in all they say—yes—no—and indifferent &c. I have done all that can be done in my business. Mr. Willson and I are agreed I stand by an English gentleman that has honour. I want Scotch bills from Edinbrough, and am, I think, prisoner at large in Leicester: but wherever I am, I am always Sir your obliged and humble servant.

Coke MSS.

1703, November 29. Coten Hill, Salop.—Mrs. Alice Pope to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, at his house in St. James's Place, London.

I suppose you have heard of my son being taken ill at the siege of Huy, and with the ill fortune he had in his return from the Bath in Germany, though he had a passport from the Marshal Villeroy. He seems doubtful of recovering his loss, and also of his coming into England this winter, which he designed and which would be a very great satisfaction to me to see him once more. And I do beg the favour of your assistance. He says all the Captains endeavour to come home, and there must but two.

(1704, the beginning of.) London.—John Coke to Thomas Coke.

I carried George along with me to see my Lord Nottingham's chaise, Lord Lovelace's and Colonel Grimes's. They are all hung on shafts. The first is the lightest, but I fear the carriage is too slight to travel in bad roads. The bodies of the two first are alike, after the Italian manner to fall back: they differ only in the curtains. My Lord Nottingham's is hung upon two very short iron standards, which play a little. My Lord Lovelace's is upon a piece of wood which plays a good deal, and must be easier; but then it must be more apt to break. Colonel Grimes's is much heavier than the other two, and stronger: it was designed for travelling, and has held very well, for it has been twice in Westmorland, once in Scotland; yet it is so light that a pair of horses in summer time drew in five days from London to Weemes. The body of this chaise is in the nature of a calesh: it is hung as my Lord Lovelace's. The crane-necked carriage at the coachmakers is as short as any of these. On it you must fix the portmanteau behind; on the others you may place it very conveniently before. If you think fit I will make the coachmaker view the two first chaises mentioned, and he may make you a new one with all the conveniences and none of the faults of both, if there be any. I desire you will send your directions by the coach tomorrow: if I hear nothing to the contrary from you, I will not put a stop to the fitting of the crane-necked carriage: I desire you would write whether you would have the chaise made so strong as to bear travelling at all times of the year, or only to take the air and travel short journeys in summer. My sisters and Misses give their duty and service to you.

1703–4, January 5. Amington.—Ed. Repington to Thomas Coke.

. . . On Friday last I came from my Lord Stanhope's, when your health was often drunk in wine that I am sure tasted as well upon it, as if the most celebrated toast had been mentioned. The players were there [Lichfield], I should have said strollers, to whom the C. of H. made a visit every night, and the rest of the Cathedral beauties of the place. Will. Inge is worse than married, for he comes near none of his friends, spends his whole time with his dulcinea, and can find nothing entertaining but her conversation. By then he has been coupled to her a month, I don't doubt but the pretence of business will make him a better neighbour. Poetry and our pockets are at a low ebb in these parts. We have neither wine to raise our fancies, nor navigable rivers, nor passable roads to convey our commodities when they may take a price. And I'm afraid, unless some care be taken of the better disposition of them, that these midland counties will in a short time lie under greater hardships. Young Robert Burdet has been with me today, who says his father is perfectly recovered, and on Friday next goes ten miles before he throws off his hounds. The young gentleman is coming to town, for I do suppose he can find no occasional mistress for his purpose in the country.

1703–4, January 13.—For the use of two rooms and staircase in deep mourning and hall with a border for six months, 20*l.*

1703–4, January 17.—A paper headed "The following particulars were performed by James King, Herald Painter, for the funeral of the Lady Mary Coke."

	£	s.	d.
For two Pennons wrought on crimson silk -	5	0	0
For 12 Shields at 3*s.* per piece - -	1	16	0
For 12 Escotcheons in buckram at 2*s.* per piece	1	4	0
	£8	0	0

1703–4, January 22.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke.

Since I find that I have not strength enough of mind (on this occasion) to come to you as I ought, permit me to make use of this means to express the high sense I have of all the kindness that you showed to my poor daughter; and to assure you that though she is gone, I shall always embrace your interest as my own, and value the two poor infants that she has left as a tie of our inviolable friendship. I ought also to wait upon the ladies your sisters, and to say more to them than I am able to express for their transcendant favours to her who is gone during all her illness. But these thoughts do so tear my soul that I must crave some time to be allowed me before I can speak calmly after such a storm, that has disordered my remaining life, and made me lose all the comfort and joy that remained to an old man, who is your most affectionate father and very unfortunate servant.

1703–4, January 22. Mansfield.—C. Stanhope to Thomas Coke.

Were I as capable to express my real sorrow for your late misfortune as I am deeply sensible of it, I am sure I should stand in the first rank of the most sincere condolers. For which I could advance many reasons did not this mournful conjuncture forbid me to aggravate your grief by mentioning the merits of its subject. Be pleased Sir to accept my hearty wishes for your consolatory support under so weighty and exquisite a pressure, with which all your relations must needs be affected with a pungent share; and so in particular is, Sir, your affectionate kinsman and very humble servant. . . .

(1703–4, January.) Holmesfield.—Michael Burton to Thomas Coke.

I must not be silent and not acquaint with some stories that have been industriously spread in this county relating to you. One is that you voted against the Bill to prevent Occasional Conformity. . . . Mr. Spateman in all companies boasted of the thing, and drunk your health, saying he would never vote against you for the future. This sort of discourse gave a mighty shock to your friends, who speak of it to me with great concern. I think two words from yourself that I might show them would effectually justify you. The other matter is a contrived story to create a misunderstanding between Mr. Curzon and you, to break your interest if possible. 'Tis a report that Mr. Curzon will stand no longer for the county, and that you design to join my Lord Hartington's interest next election. This story came to me from my cousin Ellis Farnworth who told me he had it from Mr. Walker, Minister at St. Warburg's in Derby, who said it had been told at Kedleston and had caused some uneasiness there. I suppose this a shaft out of your friend Gisbourne's quiver. 'Twould be presumption in me to prescribe anything to you for clearing this point. What Sir Philip Gell has said and done in this matter you'll receive an account of from my dear friend Capt. Beresford. My brother is with me. He goes on pretty successfully with his levies. He believes his Captain, Trevanion, will part with his commission, and that he could have it for 300 guineas. Now if his Colonel, my Lord North, could be prevailed with to give my brother leave to sell his Ensign's commission, I believe, it being a standing regiment, I can help him to 100*l.* for it; and then I have about 70*l.* of his in my hands, and will make it up 100*l.*: and will give security with him for the remaining 100*l.* I am very sensible your friendship will be of the greatest importance to him in this affair. Dear Jemmy Trott is now with me drinking your health. I have by the Chesterfield carrier sent you a small present of two brace of Holmesfield fowl, and I hope they will come safe to you. 'Twas but late last night I heard of your great loss of my Lady Mary, which I am extremely concerned at. Sir, I heartily wish you health and happiness. Pray direct for me by Chesterfield bagg; for the last letter I had from you coming by Sheffield bagg was almost two months before I received it.

Coke MSS.

1703–4, February 2. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke.

I have got your dog from Mr. Cocks. He tells Mr. Rolleston that he sets partridge well, and lies for the net; and if you shoot before him, he will lie. If he spring, you must beat him, and keep him humble and tied up. I found him in several stories about him last year, which made me send to you that Mr. Rolleston might try him: however he being very poor I would not give him occasion to clamour for want of the two guineas. I have no judgment in decoys; but if any that had saw your pool in Gorsty Leys, I fancy it would make a very good one, being ready planted, rightly situated for privacy, and very convenient for Sinfin Moor, and has been full of fowl all winter, and is a noble length of water. The messenger that went for him (the dog) tells me he saw Mr. Cocks take nine partridge with him this 1st of February. The dog sprung others, and is too eager: so that if he points, you must check him a little at first, to take heed. Mr. Cocks told him, it was only that he had not been abroad of a fortnight.

1703–4, February 16. London.—W. Stratford to Thomas Coke.

. . . The Bill for disposing of the First Fruits is brought in. It will answer all your friend can desire. There is a clause in it to enable the Corporation to receive any charities, impropriations or others, and to settle and dispose them according to the directions of the donor. . . . . Colonel Cadogan was left by my Lord Marlborough to finish some business, but he is expected here within a week and the wine will come with him. I expect too by every post the bill of lading of the other wine, which Mr. Fern promised to take care of. I desire you would be pleased to send me a letter to Mr. Fern, open and without date, that I may put the bill of lading into it . . . lest the wine should be seized before he is instructed how to take care of it. I have ordered the hampers to be directed to John Thompson. Would you please to have any champagne wine? I can help you to some of the last vintage but one, which I am assured is very good, at a very low rate. I am very sorry for your letter to the Speaker. But if you resolve to give over business, I am sure company is more necessary for you. And I hope you will be pleased to grant that to your friends' importunity which you deny to your own health, to visit them at the least sometimes here. As soon as ever my attendance on the House will give me leave, I will take the first opportunity of paying to you that respect and duty which is on many accounts due to you from your most obliged obedient servant. The champagne was designed for my Lord Marlborough: when I see you, you shall know the history of it.

(1703–4.) March 6. Chelmsford.—Captain Richard Pope to Thomas Coke, at his house in St. James's Place, London.

I am infinitely obliged to you for the favour you did me in speaking to my Lord Duke, and beg you will remember to give it in writing, as you mention his Grace desires. I shall go tomorrow to Colchester, and stay there with the recruits of our regiment, till our embarkation, which I hear is put off for some time, till more men of war can be got ready, the Dunkirk squadron being at sea: but I suppose you know more of this than I do.

1703–4, March 23. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

I hope you'll excuse my not waiting on you at Hampton Court. Your wine is come safe and sent home. I would not get a bill of store for it, but had it entered at as moderate a rate as possible: the whole charge freight included comes to 3*l.* 8*s.* I should be glad to hear of your being got home safe: I fear the rains may stop you on your way. Harry St. Johns tells me he has wrote you this post; I suppose he has sent you the Lords' opinions of the Scotch Plot. Other news we have none.

1703, April 1. Gertrudenborg. — Thomas Burton to [Michael Burton].

I have heard that my father is dead. I sent several letters which I hope that you gave him. I am very much concerned that I did not see him, but I may thank my mother for it. God forgive her. I hope you will let me hear how things are settled, and the will. I hope my father has been kind to me. If he had lived to have seen me in England, he had been vindicated of me by my behaviour, and the officers of the army, that know my character. She will be a little humble: she will not give herself the airs she has done: but God preserve her. I hope you will not forget your promise, when I gave you a note for 40*l.*, you said that if you heard well of me, you would forgive me. . . . I think I shall have occasion to buy a Captain's commission for little, in this regiment. . . We are very busy exercising, and expect to march. Love to your wife, sister Prew, and sister Betty.

1703, April 1. Gertrudenborg.—Thomas Burton to Thomas Coke.

I send this to acquaint you I received yours of the 20th. I desire the favour to pay Capt. Dawes the 30*l.*: I consulted with him what I must have, and after this my pay will serve. Sir, I desire to know if I can buy a Captain's commission in this regiment, which I think I can for 300*l.*, if it falls out. I am sure your interest will do in it. I know not what my fortune is, so pray write to my brother. We have had a great vacancies in the regiment of Lieutenant. The eldest was to get first, but my Lord North says the best interest and you are made. I am eldest ensign but three. I hope when I have occasion you will be my friend. As for bearing a Captain's commission I am capable, for I have commanded a company this five months.

COKE MSS.

(1703–4). London.—Elizabeth Coke to Thomas Coke, at Mr. Snape's house at Hampton Court.

Yesterday Monsieur de Prepetit's wife brought hither two manuscripts: she left word that if you would employ him further, he had copies that he could go on. I can't forbear telling you of a disaster that happened yesterday in the House of Lords to my Lord Ferrers, which my Lady Carnarvon sent us word of, though my Lady said my Lord Carnarvon was not by, himself, but she had it from good hands. There was a Committee of Lords upon the examining into the Scotch Plot, and there was a letter brought into the House directed to my Lord Ferrers, which my Lord told the House might be something relating to the Plot, and asked whether it should be read by the House, which after a debate upon it was ordered to be done. It proved a very scurrilous lampoon upon the A. and several Lords by name: his own name was not one, but my Lord in a great passion flung it immediately into the fire. My Lady Catherine Stanhope was with us yesterday: she is now pretty well. She said a great deal to us upon a present you had sent her. She sent me two diamond crosses for earrings. I believe you remember there was some little agreement once between the crosses and my Lord Ascote's picture: my Lady was very earnest about them, so they remain with me, till I see you, or have your orders about them.

1704, April 3.—The Duke of Marlborough to Thomas Coke, M.P.

Sir, I could not leave England with any ease to my own mind till I had turn'd my thoughts to every thing that is possible for placing you in the Queen's service to your satisfaction and though I have noe immediate prospect of the vacancy of soe good an employment as you may reasonable expect, I have mentioned three to her Majesty for her favour to you, if any one of them should drop. My Lord Treasurer will give you a more particular account of this matter, and serve you with the same zeal and readiness which you shall always find from, Sir, your most obedient humble servant.

1704, April 6. London.—James Brydges to Thomas Coke.

Just as I received your letter I was sitting down to write to you how gracious the Lords had been at last in giving the Queen leave to prorogue us. I won't trouble you with an account of their addresses and the Queen's answers, because they appear in print: but that which doth not is that she received them with a great deal of coldness and scorn. My cousin St. John kissed the Queen's hand for Secretary of War two days ago: but though 'tis denied and kept secret from me, yet I question not but 'tis no news to you. I hope the business that brings you up to town again is something of the same nature. . . . Mr. Gilbert is provided for with the Queen's letter in the "Tilbury."

1704, April 7. Harwich.—A. Cardonnel to Thomas Coke, at Melbourne in Derbyshire, by Loughborough bag.

I believe I need not acquaint you that Mr. Trot is to have a company in the Earl of Orrory, or the Lord Henry Scot's regiment. He will do well to attend the Duke of Ormond for his commission. I have already told Mr. Baresford that he will have a lieutenancy in an old corps abroad, where I should be heartily glad to receive your commands. His Grace designs to embark this morning for Holland.

1704, April 8. London.—William Stratford to Thomas Coke, at Mr. Burdetts, at Knowle Hills in Darbyshire.

The Calcavella was mingled according to your order with the Champagne. I received all the other wine and have in my cellar for you about 15 dozen of that which I believe will please you. Your orders with relation to Portugal are obeyed: and I have now received the Aldus Tully and Vasari. At last we are up, and we have a little time to breathe in. The Lords Papers swarm very thick. You in the country can judge best what effect they have. Resentments were pretty warm at parting, but I hope they may cool a little upon fresh country air. My Lord Romney died this morning of the small pox. My Lord Stawel is to succeed my Lord Longvile in the Bed Chamber to the Prince. Mr. Blaithwait is out of the Office of War, and is to be succeeded by Mr. St. John. That is not yet owned, but will be, I suppose, when my Lord Treasurer returns from Newmarket. No mail yet from Lisbon: all conclude the packet boat is taken. Four mails came in today from Holland. Nothing material, but that the Emperor's forces have obtained a considerable victory over the Hungarians. In Holland, as well as here, this is looked upon as ill news; and they are afraid this success may dispose the Emperor to refuse what is demanded.

1704, April 8. Comptroll Office.—Henry Cartwright to [Thomas Coke].

Last post I inclosed a letter to you from his Grace the Duke of Marlborough. I directed to Derby, to be sent to you by the postmaster. I hope you have got it, for I believe it to be a letter of consequence. His Grace gave such a particular charge of it, and desired to have an account by the first opportunity of your receipt of it. I hope that letter will give me the happiness of seeing you soon in town. I beg your commands, and nobody shall obey with more pleasure and fidelity than your most humble and most obedient servant.

(1704), April 9. Bois le Duc.—Captain Richard Pope to Thomas Coke, at his house in St. James's Place, London.

After having met with a violent storm (for of late years I can never go to sea with horses, without finding some such thing) in which we had our sails blown away, and sprung a leak, which kept us to the exercise of continual pumping, and one of our guns broke loose, and had like to have overset the ship, for they were in a condition to do nobody any harm but ourselves, and with the loss of eighteen horses of the regiment, we arrived the 22nd O. S. at Williamstat, having run more dangers than a man need do in the horse service in several campaigns, if we are not more bloody-minded than we have been. I got here last night when I met your letter, which was the greatest satisfaction I found since I left London. I hear Mr. St. Johns is to succeed W. B. . . . t, which I am doubly rejoiced at—that we shall have a man of so good sense and manners to apply ourselves to, when affairs require it, and, secondly, that we shall get rid of a drag that always did us harm whenever it was in his power.

1704, April 10. Knowlhills.—Thomas Coke, M.P., to the Duke of Marlborough. [Draft.]

My Lord, I received your Grace's of the 3rd instant and with it new instances of your favour to mee in continuing me in your thoughts with many obligations I shall never forgett, and whenever her Majesty pleases to think me worthy of the honour of serving her, I shall allways acknowledge how much I ow that favour to your Grace's recommendation of me to her. I did not hear the time your Grace intended to goe for Holland, till I heard you were embarqued, and therefore I hope a prosperous voyage has prevented my wishes and landed you safe in Holland, and be the good omen of that happy success that every well wisher hopes will attend you this campaigne and att all times in everything you undertake, and which is wished by no one more sincerely than by your Grace's most oblidged and obedient humble servant to command.

COKE MSS.

1704, April 13. Comptroll Office, Whitehall.—Henry Cartwright to [Thomas Coke].

I am to acquaint you that a gentleman you recommended to the Duke of Marlborough has had the misfortune to be very ill represented to his Grace, who told Mr. Whitfield that he depended upon your recommendation, and nothing should balance it, for he would provide for the gentleman as you desired. . . . Rather than be the occasion of any debate amongst friends, I would relinquish all pretentions, and shall be satisfied until I have the honour of seeing you. Last night Mr. Duncombe the Comptroller died of the small pox. I heartily lament the loss. As soon as I heard it, I waited upon Mr. St. John, who told me as a friend he hoped your affair was concluded. . . . I may presume to say it would be to the satisfaction of the Duke and Lord Treasurer, and I don't doubt but you may have it upon your own terms as to salary and powers.

1704, April 15. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke, at Melbourne.

I am just returned from Newmarket, where I was sorry I could not have your company, as you once designed. We had a great many matches, but few good ones. My Lord Lindsey won the plate, and my Lord Kingston most of the money. Your antagonist, my Lord Granby, a great sufferer, and I believe a greater will be, for he obstinately persists in his measures there, which are as wrong as those in some other of his affairs. We have had a great deal of fine weather which makes that place exceed all others. There's another meeting begins the 2nd May. Our old Groom of the Stole, Lord Romney's dead. He has left almost all his estate which is computed at about 40,000*l.* to Jack Sydney, a pretty competency to support the rake. I was glad to find from yours that no ill accident happened to you on your journey: the badness of the weather gave me apprehensions. I hope by this you think of a return, for good company begins to grow scarce.

1704, April 18. London.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke, M.P.

I hope that this fine weather has diverted you in the country: and if solitude has any charms you cannot want them at Knowll Hills. This night my old acquaintance the Lord Rumny is to be buried, in whom I do think that I have lost a true friend, which is a thing seldom recovered at my age. The town is extremely hot and dusty, and many persons are sick of the small pox, and therefore except you have great business in town, I could wish you would defer your coming to it. The Lord Weymouth was with me yesterday, and told me you were made one of the Commissioners for the Plantations, which his lordship says that he is very glad of, because he shall have your company and assistance in these affairs. I told him that I had not heard you mention it, and knew nothing of it.

1704, April 18. Comptroll Office, Whitehall.—Henry Cartwright to Thomas Coke.

I have writ to Mr. Whitfield for the name of the gentleman you recommended, and will send it by next. I may presume to say his Grace believed what was said to the prejudice of the gentleman to be the effect of malice or ignorance. I am extremely concerned that you decline the Comptroll: but if the being easy with the Surveyor bears any weight in the objection, you may depend upon it that your pleasure will always be a law with Sir Jos—h, I assure you nobody desires this more than Sir Jos—h. My Lord Treasurer will do nothing in this till he hears from the Duke.

1704, April 20. London.—James Craggs to Thomas Coke.

. . . I waited upon my Lord Duke to Harwich, when he commanded me to assure you of his hearty service. . . . And now give me leave to tell you I write this by the command of my Lord Treasurer, of which I must beg you to please to take no other notice than by letting me know your sentiments and commands upon the ensuing matter, if you shall so think fit. His Lordship says that both himself and Duke Marlborough have for a great while thought themselves obliged to omit no occasion of distinguishing the regard they have for you: and though they have had several views to that purpose, yet no opportunity has hitherto happened to express it so effectually as they could wish; and therefore would let no occasion happen that might not at least express their desires to serve you. And though what has now happened may not be worthy your consideration, yet my Lord Treasurer does not think fit to propose any person to her Majesty, till you were first acquainted with it. You must have heard that Mr. Duncombe of Battlesdown, who was one of the Controllers of the Army, is dead: and indeed I think Sir Joseph Tredenham cannot be many weeks after him, . . . whose death would make it very worthy any one man's acceptance. And therefore my Lord Treasurer proposes that if you can think of accepting Mr. Duncombe's vacancy, the whole will devolve upon you, when it falls; which will otherways be kept in commission, as it is now. I believe it does not require much trouble, and I believe may be made both useful and easy with the army; and being established must continue in peace as well as war, as well as the Paymaster and Secretary of War does. All your friends are well, and drank your health the other day.

(1704, April 20), Thursday night. London.—James Craggs to the Honble. Thomas Coke, at his house in St. James's Place.

This only comes to desire you will be pleased to take no notice to anybody of what happened about the Controllership of the Army: and I will give you good reasons for my request when I see you.

1704, April 22. London.—James Brydges to Thomas Coke.

. . . On Thursday night my Lord Nottingham brought the seals to the Queen, but she would not accept them: he pressed her Majesty thrice to receive them, and at last said (as I am told) he would not surprise her Majesty, but would keep them a day or two longer, till she had had time to think of some other to bestow them on, but in the meantime would make no use of them. 'Tis generally said Sir W. Trumball will succeed him. My Lord Kingston to be Lord Chamberlain, and Tom Mansell to succeed Sir Edward Seymour. My cousin St. John hath begun to execute his office.

COKE MSS.

1704, April 23. Knowlhills. — Thomas Coke, M.P., to [James Craggs?]

With the first opportunity I return you my thanks for yours of the 20th instant, for which I am very much oblidged to you, for it brought me fresh instances of my Lord Duke's kindness, of which I have received so many allready that I should be very ungratefull to doubt of it, and begg the favour of you the first opportunity you have to present my most humble service to his Grace and to lett him know how extreamly I am indebted to him for his many favours. And the same service I desire you will do me to my Lord Treasurer, with my particular thanks for the favour therein mentioned: in relation to which I can onely say I should be proud of any employment in which my Lord Treasurer shall think me fitt to serve the Queen, but I am sensible I can be of no service to her Majesty by acting in conjunction with anybody in the commission you mention. But if Sir Joseph Tredenham's condition should take him from that employment, and my Lord Treasurer think it for the Queen's service it should be executed by a single person, I should think myself very happy that my Lord Treasurer should recomend me to the Queen, and be very much oblidged, if accepted. In the meantime I hope my Lord Treasurer will not take ill my declining to be joined with anybody in the commission mentioned in yours . . . . .

1704, April 25.—Thomas Burton to Thomas Coke at Melbourn.

Since I saw you I have bought me a captain's commission of the Lieut.-Coronall in our regiment, and made it my interest to have mine Ensign commission for my cousin Burton. I hope to be in Holland, if the wind serves, on Friday come seven nights, to present my cousin to the regiment. My Lord is very kind to me on your account. I have received the 25*l*., but not that of Captain Mounger. I have discharged all your and mine remainder of my fortune to my brother.

1704, April 27. London.—James Craggs to Thomas Coke.

I had the honour of yours last night of the 23rd, which I communicated to my Lord Treasurer, who will leave it to you to do as you shall think fit. The changes that has lately been made makes strange rumbling in the minds of some of our friends. . . . We dine with Mr. Brydges tomorrow, when we shall drink your health. If I knew when I would meet you in your last day's journey.

1704, May 2. London.—James Craggs to the Honble. Thomas Coke at the Red Lyon at St. Alban's.

I had the honour of your letter without date, and had certainly met you tomorrow, but am prevented by an accident, which you will agree to be a good reason when I see you. As to a new Parliament I believe there's no sort of grounds. It's said Sir William Trumball has excused his accepting the seals upon the score of age and infirmities, but I can hardly believe it.

1704, June 4. N.S. Ladenburg on the Neckar.—R. Pope to Thomas Coke, M.P. [No address.]

We marched from Bois-le-duc here in twenty days, and halt yesterday and today for the foot and cannon to come up. The troops are in a very good condition, considering the length and expeditiousness of the march, we having been very well provided with forage. The Electors of Treves and Mayence have seen us on our march, and at least 200 ladies, some of them much handsomer than we expected to find in this country. My Lord Duke will have an army of near 40,000 under his command. We don't doubt of obliging the Elector of Bavaria to change party, and hope to do something else considerable before the end of the campaign. We hear Prince Lewis has got some advantage over the French and Bavarians, but the Imperialists as well as the French magnify small matters to that degree that there is no depending on any account they give of these affairs. As to our own I hope they will always be in such a condition that they will need no gloss, but be related with as much sincerity as I am your most obliged humble servant.

1704, June 6. Knowlehills.—Walter Burdett to Thomas Coke.

I have the usual Sunday dinner here today, and if you please to come privately to your old quarters of retirement, you know that you and your company may be welcome. But if you have a mind to have the bells ring for you, and be public, wherever you please, I will be ready with my calash and retinue to attend your entrance.

1704, June 11. Bretby.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke, M.P.

. . . We had an indifferent good journey down, as being free from dust and ill accidents, but as soon as we came to Bretby, we had reason to think that we left summer at London, and found winter in Derbyshire, for it has been so windy, rainy, and cold that we have been obliged to have constant fires in our chambers ever since we came to this place; and though we have now many ripe melons, I find (to my grief) that we shall have very little or no wall fruit this summer. I hope this account will not make you to defer your journey, for all your friends here do please themselves with the expectation of your company.

1704, June 13. Heppach.—Captain Richard Pope to Thomas Coke in St. James's Place.

Since my last to you from Ladenburg, we marched to Effingham (Höffenheim) the next day to Mondelsheim, where Prince Eugene joined us. My Lord Duke was with him alone near three hours that day. The next we marched here, and yesterday he saw the horse and dragoons. Prince Lewis of Baden is expected here every moment, Colonel Cadogan being gone this morning to meet him. So the designs of this campaign will in all probability be settled this night or tomorrow. We shall march from hence in two days to Geislinen (Geislingen) where the general rendezvous of our army is to be. It is nine leagues from hence, and seven from Ulm. I hear Prince Eugene is unwilling to command in the Lines of Stolhoven. The French threaten Mayence. Colonel Sibourg desires to be your humble servant.

1704, June 20. St. James's Place, London.—Thomas Coke, M.P., to the Duke of Marlborough. [Draft.]

My Lord, I am honoured with your Grace's letter from Gardach [Gartach near Heilbroun] of the 28th of the last month, and I believe before this comes to your hands there will be an occasion for it to have congratulated with you upon some good success, as well as to return you my humble thanks for the many obligations I stand indebted to your kindness to mee upon so many occasions. Wee have great reason to hope her Majesty's arms under your Grace will this summer have all the good success that every wellwisher to England desires: and as the Germans must own their safety to her Majesty's goodness in asisting them with her armyes and mony, by which they have escaped the ruinous blow that seemed so imediately to threaten them, whenever the French should be able to pass the Black Forest, so they can't but be sensible how much they must owe the good advice of this glorious undertaking to your Grace, as well at the executing of it such expedition and secrecy, which could have been done by nobody else. And the country gentlemen, who have so long groaned under the weight of four shillings in the pound, without hearing of a town taken, or any enterprise endeavoured, seem every day more chearfull in this warr, when no summer has passed, but some towns have submitted to the English arms, and expeditions carried on so secretly that they are in a manner successfully over before the French, so famous formerly for good intelligence, can give a guess where the stroke is likely to fall . . . .

COKE MSS.

1704, June 25. (Derby.) — Dr. John Coke to Thomas Coke, a Member of Parliament, at his house in St. James's Place, in London.

I hear from London that the Prince is very ill, and that here is an extraordinary consultation of physicians about him; and that it is in your power to do me a kindness in naming me, if any country physician should be called in, as hath sometimes been done—I having been regularly bred in our own University. . . . If there be nothing of this (because I am not assured of it) I desire you will say nothing of it, but burn mine as soon as you have read it.

1704, July 6. Bretby.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke, M.P.

Your favour of the 1st instant brought me the good news of our success in Portugal, and we have an account since of the great victory that we have had against the Elector of Bavaria, which gives us reason to hope that the fortune of France is changed, and must at last submit to the good of Christendom. I am concerned that we shall not have your company so soon as we expected.

1704, July 8. Hereford.—James Brydges to Thomas Coke.

You asked me whether I would come in for a share in some Burgundy, which I thought I would have no occasion of, but if it is not too late and your number is not full, I will be very willing to make one. [Observations respecting a victory over the French.] By a letter from Mr. Clark I hear that the Revenge is stopped to carry my Lord Galloway to Portugal, where that he may be the better enabled to change the face of affairs the Queen hath given orders for the regiments of Donegal and Cawfield to be sent. I am sorry Sir G. Rook could not come up with the C. de Tholone, which, if he had, would have made one of the most glorious campaigns that England ever saw: but it is not the first time that the English canvas hath given just cause of complaint. I should be glad to know how the General Mortgage stood last midsummer, and what part of it hath been paid off this last year.

1704, July 27.—Richard Husband to Thomas Coke, a Member of Parliament, at Mr. St. John's house at Buckleberry, Berkshire.

I went with the deeds on Saturday to Sir Richard Hoares'; he sent his man with me to Mr. Webb's chamber. . . . Christopher Musgrave is dead.

1704, August 9. Derby.—Draft by Thomas Coke of his "Letter to Keightly."

At my coming into Darbyshire I was surprised with an account of some things you said here in town to a sempstress whose sister lives at Kedlaston, which is so silly a lie that till I hear how you can clear yourself, I have too good an opinion of you to believe. What I am told you said was that Sir Nathaniel Curzon's daughters were gone to the Bath to try to get them husbands, but you believed to no purpose; and that Sir Nathaniel Curzon had offered either of them to me with 20,000*l.*, and that I had refused them. This last it lies more immediately upon me to expect you to clear yourself [from]: and the rest I hope you can for your own sake; for I have that kindness for you that I should be sorry to have any occasion to write myself other than your affectionate friend.

1704, August 10.—W. Stratford to Thomas Coke, M.P., at Melbourne.

The book you write for is a good argument that you are not much harrassed in your journey. I hope I am so well acquainted with good Mr. Coke that I should not have bought the other book, though he had forgot to give me a caution against it; and I hope Mr. Coke knows me so well that he will not expect that I lose this opportunity of letting the ladies at Bucklebury know what books he choses for his meditations in his solitude. The books I believe are not to be met with here, nor, if they were, could I well without a blue coat and long wig, enquire for them. But I shall venture to write to Holland for them, and to desire, if they are there, to have them by the first opportunity. Four mails yesterday, but nothing in them of much moment. Tallard and Prince Eugene have joined their respective friends. The time of action before Tallard's junction has been lost, because the Germans had no heavy cannon. Prince Lewis says he is now ready for the siege of Ingoldstadt. It is thought he will sit down before it, whilst my Lord M. and Prince Eugene observe Tallard and Bavaria. . . .

As we were sitting down to dinner at my masters came a copy of my Lord Marlborough's letter to the Dutchesse, sent by his Ayd-de-camp Colonel Parker. He says only that he had entirely defeated French and Bavarians, and that Tallard and two other generals were then prisoners in his coach. He refers himself for particulars to Parker; but he cannot give many, as to place of action and number of those engaged. He came away just as the victory was declared, and my Lord M. was giving orders for the pursuit. The letter was writ on horseback with a black leaden pencil. The victory was gained on the 2nd of August, our style. Parker has rode it in eight days.

1704, August 10. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

For going out of town and not letting me know, I have a good mind not to let you know of the glorious victory of our friend, his Grace of Marlborough. Parker arrived this day from him. His letter dated yesterday was sennight from on horseback he writes with a lead pencil. Prince Lewis had besieged Ingoldstadt, and his Grace, being joined with Prince Eugene, was to cover the siege. That day they came to a general battle with the Elector and Marshal Tallard, and had gained an entire victory: the only body of the army remaining was twenty battalions, who were surrounded by General Churchill, and must be cut in pieces or surrender prisoners of war. That Tallard and two other general officers were then prisoners in his coach, and that the victory might justly be given to the bravery of his own troops. What other particulars could be given he leaves to Colonel Parker, who is gone on to Windsor. Pray remember a brace of greyhounds for Sir John.

1704, August 15. Melbourne.—Thomas Coke, M.P., to the Duke of Marlborough. [Draft.]

The same post by which I received the honour of your Grace's letter of the 3rd instant, N.S. from Fridberg [Friedberg near Augsburg] brought us the welcome news of your glorious victory near Hochsteten. 'Twere needless to say how much we partake in the joy of this news, so happy for England and all the allies: and I should injure the Publick should I detain your Grace longer than to wish you oportunities of meeting the enemy, which are so many certain victories, and that your safe return to England may crown the successes we are to hope from this campaign, when amongst the crowd of your well wishers I may have the honour to assure you there is no one more sincerely so than your Graces most humble and most obedient servant to command.

COKE MSS.

1704, August 16. Dillingen.—Captain Richard Pope to Thomas Coke.

I did not give you an account of the affair of Schellenberg, because it appeared to me with a different face to what it did over all Europe, it being in my opinion a considerable advantage purchased at a dear rate, rather than a victory. But this last that my Lord Tunbridge brings you an account of is the greatest and most glorious action that has happened in several ages, to the immortal glory of the Queen's arms, to the perpetual fame of my Lord Duke, who exposed himself as much as any officer or soldier in the army, and much more than most of the generals. As to the number the enemy has lost, 'tis probable they will never be so ingenuous to publish —'tis so great, and they lie so dispersed that we cannot compute it. We have taken prisoners Marshal Tallard, the general of their horse, the general of the dragoons, 4 lieutenant-generals, 3 major-generals, 7 brigadiers, 27 battalions of foot, 12 squadrons of dragoons with all their horses, 34 pieces of cannon, standards and colours near 200. This great victory gained at a very reasonable rate, and wholly owing to the left wing. The right, though commanded by the great Prince Eugene, contributed very little towards it. Major Creed being killed in the action, Mr. Cardenel and Colonel Sibourg tell me I may depend upon having a troop: but they have not yet settled the majority, being unwilling to give it Prime for some good reasons: yet being eldest captain and wounded in the action seems to counterbalance. I have escaped very well in both these actions, but had my horses shot under me in both—in this last in the middle of the enemy, and had been infallibly killed, if English troopers had not been much braver than French gens d'armes. Colonel Sibourg had the same fortune, but was ridden over by two or three squadrons and very much bruised. To give you my opinion how this great matter was brought about—next to overruling Providence—it is owing to two things; first, a very good disposition of our troops, which, as is reported here, was concerted betwixt my Lord Duke and Prince Eugene only; and secondly, a very great fault committed by Marshal Tallard, who putting 26 battalions into the village of Blinheim to cover the right of his army so weakened the centre that with our horse we pierced a passage to the town of Houghstat (Höchstädt), and cut off all communication betwixt the right and left wings of their army. I hear Captain Burton is killed.

1704, August 17.—Camp at Steinheim.

Our army, which lay on their arms in the enemy's camp on Wednesday night, after the battle, made a small movement on Thursday and came with the right to Wittesling[en] and the left to this place. The Elector of Bavaria and the Marechal de Marsin with the remainder of their army passed the Danube the same day over the bridge of Lavingen (Lauingen), which they burned as soon as they were over, and marched to Burleffingen near Ulm. And yesterday they retired further up the river towards the Iller. We have since repaired that bridge, as also another at Hochstet (Höchstädt). We have an account that yesterday morning early the troops that were in garrison at Augsburg quitted the town and are marched to join the Elector: and this morning two deputies came from thence to wait on my Lord Duke and pray his Grace's protection. Thereupon a detachment is ordered to march and take possession of the town. The number of prisoners increase every day by the coming of those who in the rout escaped into the country: they amount now to about 11,000, besides more than 1,200 officers, and are very uneasy to us: but we hope soon to dispose of them. The M[ll] de Tallard, with 16 general officers and 13 colonels which he has requested may be with him, will be going on Tuesday towards Francfort and Hanau. His Grace sends a guard of a captain and 50 English horse to attend them. Our army is to advance at the same time towards Ulm, in order to oblige the enemy to decamp from that place, which is the last where they have any magazines in this country. This day was observed as a day of thanksgiving through the whole army for our success, and concluded with a triple discharge of all our artillery and small shot. His Grace has declared Brigadier Ross a Major-General and the Lord John Hay, Colonel Meredyth, Colonel Palms and Colonel Cadogan Brigadiers.

	Killed.	Wounded.
Captains, &c. - -	13	33
Lieutenants - -	13	45
Ensigns - - -	9	26
Soldiers - - -	483	1,079

(In another hand):—

Captain Littleton has sent an express this evening that he has taken two French privateers of 28 and 24 guns.

1704, August 19. Albemarle Street.— ———— to Thomas Coke.

Could I have followed my own inclinations I had before this time waited on you at Melbourne; but I was hurried from Hinchinbrook by letter from the Navy Office. We are not cool yet since the good news. I question whether there has been so decisive a battle since that at Pharsalia. That at Pavia was not so extensive, Christendom being not so much concerned in the consequence of it. On Sunday I was [at] Windsor, where I found my Lord Treasurer sensibly overjoyed, for this has given the balance of Europe into the Queen's hands. By the favour of your letter I presume you intend a kindness to one, who, I believe, has gratitude and ability enough to return it in a very agreeable manner. I am promised something that may be worth a character in my next. Last night I was at Si's, who would fain have brought that young Centinel (that by the description ought to have been one of that company which I raised once in Leicester Fields) to justify himself from all stains and aspersions, but I did not see him. The other you and St. John saw at that time was the dependent on my Lord Pawlett's family, whom I had once met there. I cannot tell what to say to him, unless according to the S.S. (Scriptures?) it happened that one shall be taken and another left. I am now going with Mr. Brydges to the play; but intend to call at the place aforesaid, to desire that a dish which I tasted last night may be set by for me; for though I had then my belly full, there is more left, and I shall be again hungry. Since the news I have not seen any creature so like a Jacobite as a Whig: their looks, their blood and their goodwill to the Government are the same. Dear Mr. Coke adieu. [No signature.]

COKE MSS.

1704, August 19. London.—James Brydges to Thomas Coke.

I am to return you my humble thanks for the favour of your last which I received in the country, and in it for the account you sent me of the General Mortgage, and am glad to find we daily lessen it, notwithstanding the disadvantages of the war and decrease of trade. At my coming to town I met the joyful news of my Lord Marlborough's great and happy victory. . . . Our prisoners increase daily, for the French soldiers finding no protection from the boors of the country, and being ignorant of the ways and consequently of the best means of hiding themselves, think it more for their interest to surrender themselves prisoners than to run the hazard of being knocked on the head by the peasants, who now reckon them the causes of their country being ruined. Marshal Tallard and the other Generals will go near, I fancy, to be sent into England: the common soldiers exchanged for those we have lost in Savoy and Portugal, which in effect will be as good as sending them so many recruits. We have no news from our fleet since that of the taking of Gibraltar. 'Tis a very strong place, and though our seamen behaved themselves to the wonder of every body, yet had there been a garrison of 1,000 men in it, it had been impossible for any fleet to have taken it. It will not protect a fleet against a superior one, but 'twill be of use and safety for single ships, or four or five men of war, and in that respect of great advantage to our trade: so that I heartily wish the Kings of Portugal and Spain may be inclined to send a garrison to keep it, without which we must be obliged to abandon it.

1704, August 21.—Camp at Sefelingen (Söfflingen, adjoining and west of Ulm).

On Monday the Maréchal de Tallard with most of the other prisoners of note, marched from Hochstet towards Hanau and Francfort under a guard of 40 English Dragoons. At the same time the repartition was made of all the rest of the prisoners, who were ordered to several places adjoining for the better conveniency of keeping them till they can be removed further into the country. We find now the whole number, including near 3,000 that have taken on in our troops, to exceed 13,000 officers and soldiers. On Tuesday the army marched from Steinheim and encamped with the right at Printz (Brenz?) and the left at Gondelfingen, from whence we advanced yesterday to Langenau and Ober Elchingen, and today we came to this place, within little more than an English mile of Ulm. Upon our march we heard of great numbers of officers of the enemy that had been buried in the several villages we came by: and we are told by the people here that when the enemy marched from Ulm, they carried off with them upwards of 7,000 wounded, whereof near a thousand were officers: that they burned a great number of their waggons that they might make use of the horses to make brancers (brancards) to carry off the officers with greater ease. All our hussars with several parties of horse are in pursuit of them, and with the country people cut off all that cannot keep up with their army; so that we hear they have made great slaughter of them. The enemy have left in garrison here four French battalions and five of Bavaria. We are blocking up the place in the meanwhile till it be settled what troops shall carry on the siege: and then the rest of the army will advance through the country of Wirtemburg towards the Rhine. This morning a deputy came hither from the city of Memingen to crave the Duke of Marlborough's protection, and brings advice that the Electrice of Bavaria was passed through that place with five of her children under an escort of fourteen squadrons of horse in order to follow the Elector.

(1704), August 22.—W. Stratford to Thomas Coke.

The two inclosed papers have the perfectest list I can yet meet with of the slain on our side. The Elector has drawn off his garrisons and totally abandoned the country. If Villeroy come up to him, he seems to design another push for it, otherwise to retire into France. We are in good hopes the news we had by the last letters from the Hague may prove true. They said many letters from France spoke of an engagement at sea in which the French were worsted. This is certain that letters from France of good credit said there are two expresses come in from Madrid, which made the Court uneasy, and were kept very secret. . . . There has been much noise of a plot. The City on Thursday was ready to take arms. The Exchange was full of it that the Queen was to have been blown up at Windsor: and the blow being missed there, she was assaulted as she came to Hampton Court, and wounded in the hand. We at this end of the world hear nothing, but that some returns had been discovered from France, but neither the sums, nor the persons to whom they were sent of any moment. I saw a letter from the Apothecary-General that said my Lord North and Gray's right hand had been cut off; it was so shattered it could not be cured: that it was likely Oglethorp would die of the wound he received at Schellenberg: that Lord Forbes and Lord Mordaunt were badly wounded. Mr. St. Johns and his family are gone to Wiltshire. I shall set forward next Tuesday for Chester. The desire I have to wait on you will make my stay there very short. I hope to wait on you at Melbourn about the 26th of September if that time be convenient for you.

1704, August 24.—Camp at Sefelingen.

On Friday the Governor of Ulm sent out of the town 430 prisoners of our troops taken at Hochstet, Dillingen and on other occasions, with a compliment to my Lord Duke of Marlborough, praying his Grace will take a fitting opportunity to return an equal number of theirs: but being all of the German troops, his Grace sent them to Prince Eugene. The Elector of Bavaria's communication with his country being entirely cut off, a trumpet came hither last night with a letter from the Elector's Highness dated at Dutlingen the 21st instant, desiring my Lord Duke to give conveyance to one inclosed to the Electress, which his Grace sent forward by a trumpet of his own to Munich, the Electress with her children being gone back thither. Prince Lewis of Baden came hither today to confer with my Lord Duke and Prince Eugene, having left his army encamped at Lawingen, which will be here tomorrow or Tuesday; and the heavy artillery, which was before Ingoldstadt, will follow in a day or two, to carry on siege of Ulm. My Lord Duke with the English troops, and the greatest part of those in the pay of her Majesty and the States will march on Tuesday towards the Rhine.

1704, August 24. Barfleur, near the South Cape.—Copy of the Report by Sir Cloudesley Shovell of the Action between the English Fleet of 53 ships and a French Fleet of about 49 ships.

1704, August 28.—Camp at Sefelingen.

On Tuesday the troops began their march towards the Rhine by different routes for the ease of the country. His Grace the Duke of Marlborough will follow tomorrow in order to join them. Prince Louis intends to march at the same time with the Imperial horse, and Prince Eugene is going to Rotweil to assemble the troops in those parts and the levies, to join us on the Rhine. We shall leave General Thungen here with the forces that were to have besieged Ingoldstadt, to attack Ulm in case the place be not surrendered by composition, of which we have some hopes. The Emperor has ordered the troops that have been acting against the Elector of Bavaria on the borders of Tyrol under the command of Lieutenant-General Guttenstein and Lieutenant-General Tierheimb [Thierheim ?] to march immediately to join the Comte de Linange [Leiningen], in order to make a diversion in favour of the Duke of Savoy: and Comte Maffey will set out tomorrow on his way to Turin to acquaint his Royal Highness with the measures that are taking for the rest of the campaign, which 'tis hoped may oblige the enemy to draw a considerable body of their troops out of Italy. By letters we have intercepted of the 19th instant, going from Dutlingen to the French Court, the enemy own the loss of upwards of 40,000 men, killed taken prisoners and by the general desertion in their retreat, which was in very great disorder the whole way.

COKE MSS.

(1704), August 31. (Petersham.)—Elizabeth Coke to Thomas Coke, at Melborn.

I suppose you are much taken up the time you are at home in your garden, for which this weather is very pleasant. Mr. Hardinge tells me it is ready for the trees. For news I know of none but public, which is sufficiently good to satisfy everybody at present, though it is almost impossible for some to be really pleased, since my Lord Mall[borough] must have so great a share in the honour of it. My Lord Hyde and my Lady went yesterday to the Bath, and my Lord Rochester and his daughter have been some time gone to my Lord Conoways.

1704, September 2.—Camp at Gross Gordach.

The English and Danish troops that marched under the command of General Churchill from Sefelingen the 26th past encamped that night at Launsheim: the next day they continued their march to Gross Seissen: the 26th to Ebersbach, where they halted the 29th. The 30th they came to Gross Heppach, and the 31st to Mundelsheim, when they halted. Yesterday and this day we passed the Neckar at Lauffen, and came to Gross Gordach. His Grace the Duke of Marlborough joined us on Sunday evening at Mundelsheim from the camp before Ulm, which he left the day before at five in the morning. Comte Wratislaw stays there to receive the proposals of the Elector of Bavaria for delivering up the place: and General Thungen, who commands the siege is making preparations for carrying it on with vigour, if it be not surrendered. He has with him twenty-four squadrons, and twenty-three battalions, besides those men which are on their march to join him. He was to open the trenches on Saturday night, and will attack the place with forty pieces of cannon besides mortars. When we are masters of this place, the French will have no more troops on this side the Rhine. My Lord Duke having received an invitation from the Duke Regent of Wirtemberg by his Grand Mareschall to his residence at Stutgard, his Grace went thither yesterday morning accompanied by several general officers; and after a very splendid entertainment returned in the evening to the army. The enemy having repassed the Black Forest, and being since retired over the Rhine, Prince Eugene did not go to Rotweil as he intended, but went directly to Rastadt, to assemble the troops and march them towards Phillipsburg. Prince Louis is gone for three or four days to Aschaffenburg.

1704, September 3. Eppingen.—This day we marched from Gross Gordach to Eppingen, and tomorrow the Duke of Marlborough will advance with the horse to Langebrück, and from thence to Phillipsburg, to join the troops Prince Eugene is assembling there from the Lines, in order to pass the Rhine and take post on the other side, while the foot comes up by easier marches.

1704, September 14. London.—James Brydges to Thomas Coke.

Being desirous you should have the account of Sir George Rook's engagement as early as is possible, though 'tis very late and I but just come from the Admiralty, I could not forbear sending it you by this post. As soon as Sir G. understood by his scouts that the enemy was in sight he gave the necessary directions for the disposition of his fleet, viz., that the van should be commanded by Sir Cloudesley, and led on by Sir John Leake, that the Dutch should have the rear, and himself remain in the centre. His whole number consisted of 53 of the line, and the French of 52 of the line and 24 gallies. After this he bore down upon them, but they, instead of expecting us, crowded all the sail they could away. However on the 13th of August we got up with them off Cape Malaga, and then the battle began. After two hours dispute, our van defeated theirs, and the Dutch did the like by their rear: but five of our biggest ships in the middle having spent every jot of their powder and shot (the greatest part of their store having been expended before at Gibraltar) and forced thereby to be towed out of the battle, the burthen of the day fell very heavy on the main body, especially Sir G. his own ship, the St. George and Shrewsbury, and lasted till night put an end to it. Next day they had the wind of us, but would not engage again, so that day was spent in repairing the damages of the preceding one. The next day the wind coming about easterly we bore down to them again, for they were to the westward of us, and by four came up with them: but it being so late it was judged best to defer renewing the fight till morning, which they stayed not for, but took the advantage of the darkness of the night and stole away for Tholon. Sir George is expected at Portsmouth within these four or five days. He hath not lost any ships: about 2,700 men killed and wounded of the Dutch and us, amongst whom are Sir Andrew Leake and Captain Cow of the Renclagh, the Albermarle, a Dutch ship of 64 guns, and the best of but eleven that they had in the engagement, blew up about three days after it by an accident. Sir George writes word that they must needs be so disabled that there's no danger of any insult on the coast of Portugal, nor any attempt from them upon Gibraltar, where for its security he hath left 2,000 marines in garrison. You'll pardon this scrawl. I am sorry (if you are so) to acquaint you that your friend Mr. Sheson, if in one of those that took the Canada ship, must have been in the Towy, and consequently carried into Brest, that ship having been taken by the French.

1704, September 16. Derby.—John Dakeyne to Thomas Coke.

I came hither today to wait upon you, and also to desire that I may serve you in any post or place in the country or London you have to dispose of. Business relating to the law is much less than formerly: that is my profession and I could easily embrace more of that or other concerns that may be offered. . . I am glad my daughter has the happiness to wait upon yours at Wing. I hope she gives good satisfaction in her place, and if you think fit, I desire her wage may be something augmented being, as I hear, but 3*l.* per annum. I had the favour to be one of your clerks at the election.

1704, September 21. London.—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke.

Not being able to send you acceptable news of your wine being in your cellar prevented me writing. By this time I believe it is, for it was entered on Tuesday, and my deputy promised to send it home by night. But I fear it will cost you more than the last, though I made use of all my interest to serve you. . . Mrs. Norman is just married to Charles Bertie's son. They were at the Park on Sunday, in as fine a chariot as Lord Kingston's and six horses, and the couple as fine as embroidery and tissue could make them. She looked fresh and gay, of a complexion that would not bear a long confinement: put her down again in your table book from the lists of maids to that of matrimony. Now for news and politics. Every post from Holland cheers us with good news. Our friend the Duke not only conquers, but flies to take advantages and every minute does something towards the destruction of his enemies. Ulm surrendered, Landau besieged, and Trierbach I believe the same by this time. The King of the Romans is coming to the army, to spoil if possible the good agreement that is amongst the generals. It's said that the Elector has desired to have all his own troops with him in Flanders, and the absolute power of government invested in him, which is refused him: which at present has stopped his journey thither. For our sea battle, both sides have been well banged, neither has much reason to brag of a victory, though both sides pretend it. But taking the circumstances of their superiority of strength and place, cleanness of ships and galleys, better provided with ammunition and provision, demonstrates that they are not here the people that we are; and their want of real virtue has made them lose such an opportunity of destroying us, which I hope they'll never have again. For the Duke of Marlborough, his very enemies are forced to sing his praises (though with sour faces) as well as his friends. Sir George Rooke has gained a great deal of reputation, both for his courage and conduct in this battle: but, as you know, no man in England is more pushed at by his numerous enemies than he. Several detracting expressions are thrown out against him by particulars, which sway, I believe, very little with the public. By the care you have taken of my friend Seyers you may expect good linen. The yachts will be soon going, by whom I will send them, and for your shirts. I could be longer, but you see I have neither room nor reason for it. Entirely yours.

(1704), September 23. Chester.—W. Stratford to Thomas Coke at Melbourn.

I am detained here two days longer than I designed and it will be Friday evening before I can reach Melbourn. Our news still improves upon us, and we have nothing to wish, but that our winter campaign at home may, in its way, be as successful as the summer one abroad has been. I have heard nothing from Bucklebury since I left the town: I hope I may hear from you an account of the health of those good ladies there.

1704, September 23. (London.)—Robert Jennens to Thomas Coke.

Two posts from Holland, and three from Lisbon bring no news. But just now an account is come that Sir George Rooke is seen off the Start, which makes me write. Lord Delaware is past danger: and the Queen has forgiven Feilding. Lord North, Captain Windham and Oglethorp dead. Duke Marlborough has got an ague. On Saturday I set forward for Newmarket.

1704, September 26–October 13. Camp at Weissembourg.

September 26.—My Lord Duke of Marlborough having waited on the King of the Romans at the Camp before Landau, and visited the approaches our troops have made to the place, returned to his quarters on Wednesday evening, as Prince Eugene did next morning. Yesterday four Prussian regiments of foot marched from hence to reinforce the troops that carry on the siege, and General Thungen is expected this day with sixteen battalions of those that were employed in the siege of Ulm. . . . The continued rains have somewhat interrupted our works before Landau for these three days past. However we hope a battery of thirty great guns may begin to play tomorrow. On Wednesday there was arrived before the place 34 twenty-four pounders, 12 twelve pounders, 11 mortars, 2 howitzers and 100 hand mortars.

September 29.—On Saturday the 27th the garrison of Landau made a great sally, in which we had twenty-six men killed and wounded. They did no damage to the works, being soon repulsed with a much greater loss on their side, our horse pushing them into the counterscarp . . . the cannon are brought down to the trenches to be placed on the batteries, which are nearly completed for thirty pieces. Yesterday my Lord Duke of Marlborough waited again on the King of the Romans at his quarters near Landau: and after dinner attended him to the Camp, where his Majesty reviewed the troops drawn up in two lines. His Grace returned hither this afternoon. Last night the enemy made a great fire from the town upon the relief of the trenches, but with very little effect, for we lost but two men. . . . Monsr. Meermann is gone back towards Bavaria, having received from the Prince of Salms, Grand Maitre to the King of the Romans, an answer to the proposals he had made in behalf of the Electoress.

October 3.—Yesterday morning the King of the Romans, attended by the principal officers of his court and army, came to [from ?] the Camp before Landau to see the troops encamped here, which were for that purpose drawn out in two lines. His Grace received his Majesty at the left of the army, and waited on him along the lines: after which his Majesty was saluted with a triple discharge of the artillery and small arms. He was pleased to express himself extremely well satisfied with the good condition he found the troops in. And after having been splendidly entertained, with all the court and chief officers, by my Lord Duke his Majesty returned in the evening for Landau, whence we have an account that the Imperial battery of thirty pieces began to play on Wednesday the 1st instant and have already ruined the gate and some part of the ravelin. Yesterday they began to work on the Prussian battery: this is designed for 28 pieces. . . 'Tis thought the counterscarp will be attacked in five or six days.

October 13.—On Friday the 10th the disposition being made for a second attack of the redoubt, which the enemy retook the night before, the same was put in execution with good success about nine at night. The dispute was very hot for above an hour, during which time the enemy endeavoured three several times to repossess themselves of it, but were at last obliged to give it over, with very considerable loss: and our men continue in possession of the post, having since completed a lodgement on the foot of the glacis. The enemy upon their retreat set fire to great quantities of powder, with intent to spring their mines: which being perceived by our men was prevented from taking effect by their cutting the fuses. On Saturday we continued searching for mines in the redoubt, and discovered several branches leading to them. The same day the two approaches on the left were advanced, one within sixty, the other within forty paces of the glacis. Yesterday our men in the redoubt cut into one of the enemy's mines, out of which they took eight hundredweight of powder. Our approaches on the left are now within twenty-five paces of the glacis, from whence we shall draw another parallel to secure the batteries which are to be made on the counterscarp as soon as we have found out the rest of their mines. Deserters from Landau report that the Governor is wounded. . . . This morning a battalion of the Royal Regiment of Foot, Brigadier Hamilton's, Lieut.-General Ingoldsby's and Colonel Tatton's Regiments marched from hence towards Gemmersheim, where they are to embark on the Rhine for Holland. These regiments with the five battalions sent down some time since are to supply the places of ten Dutch battalions and six squadrons of horse, that are to be drawn out of the garrisons in Holland to march towards the Moselle. General Churchill and my Lord Orkney are likewise gone with those regiments, intending to make use of the waters for their health, before they embark for England.

COKE MSS.

1704, October 2. London.—James Brydges to Thomas Coke.

. . . The meeting of Parliament is fixed to the 24th of this month, so that I hope to have the happiness of seeing you very shortly in town. I was at Windsor t'other day when I met Sir George Rook, and never saw him look better in my life. He says that side of the Royal Catharine that was next the fire of the enemies is so mauled that all above water must be rebuilt. 'Tis a very great happiness our fleet arrived so well home: the weather, God be thanked, was very favourable: and Sir George's conduct both in and since the engagement is universally applauded. The Queen leaves Windsor I hear on this day fortnight. My Lord Treasurer hath been very ill of the stone and gravel, insomuch that he was forced to defer his journey to Newmarket, a sure sign of his being very bad. I have sent you inclosed a copy of Sir Cloudesley's letter to the N.B. giving an account of the action.

1704, October 3. London. — Elinor Gayman to the Honourable Squire Coke, at his house at Melborn in Darbyshire.

All things are well here and safe as yet. I hope it will continue so, though there is abundance of robbery committed and murder here. A watchman killed in pursuit of a thief; whereby the Queen granted a gallows to be erected in Drury Lane to hang the thief before the door he robbed. A gentleman last Saturday night beheaded in his own house, and his house robbed. But I have got the Smith's man now to lie in the house, and shall do my endeavour for preservation; and wish your worship safe home. I am your faithful humble servant to command.

1704. October 7. London. — Elinor Gayman to Squire Coke at Melborn.

I received the inclosed last night. All things are safe and well here. But at my Lord Wootten's house at Hampstead the gardener, a very old man, was killed in a barbarous manner by five men in his bed: they had first bound his man, and cut the rope of the bell, that he could not ring up the family: the thieves are not found. Pray God send your worship safe home, and your family.

1704, October 8. Weissenburg. — Lieutenant Richard Pope to Thomas Coke.

We have been engaged this three weeks in the most disagreeable thing I ever met with, which is, covering a siege which advances very slowly; and which is worse in a place, when there is not the least forage to be found. Our horses live upon very bad straw, and those that are too nice for that diet die daily. In short the Imperialists undertake sieges without cannon, ammunition or engineers with as much assurance as they did a war without money credit or troops. Our greatest comfort is, the French (if we can believe the intelligence we hear) are in a very bad condition, and not able to attempt raising the siege, should we march toward Trarbach; which we talk of investing, that we may lose no advantage that may be made out of our late victory. My Lord Duke has given out no commissions since the battle. I fear he wants remembering the promise he made you in my behalf. There is not one of those that call themselves pretty fellows in our army but what has asked for the troop: and most of the old Captains in other regiments for the Major's post, and offer to back their pretentions with a thing that sways much in the world. For my own part if I don't deserve a troop now, I never will pretend to do it: and since I had not the good fortune to buy Captain Sulley (which if I had done, I should have been infallibly Major now) I think I will never purchase one. They like our two eldest Captains, Prime and Norton, so little that I am in much doubt how it will go. I wish, instead of an advantage, it may not be a great prejudice to me. But I'll trouble you no more now with this matter, and let railing alone against some people that I have some reason to do, till a more convenient season.

1704, October 10. Whitehall.—Henry St. John to Thomas Coke.

Dear Tom, I send you at last the purse, which is the richest and best filled that I have been able to get, after searching all the shops in town, and being more than once disappointed. We hear that your brother is going to be married to Lady Harper's sister. If so, I hope the lady will be endowed in this purse, and I shall be pleased to have had any share in being serviceable on an occasion where your family is concerned. I send you no news because we have none. The Germans lose a world of time at the siege of Landau, and will not take the advice of those who know more of the matter than they. The French are cowed and dejected by the defeats they have received this year to a degree that is not to be expressed. Sir George Rook has done an action which all the world ought to admire, and which the generality blame. The Jews are publicly buying horses in Germany for the king of France, who without this recruit could not remount his cavalry, and no notice is taken of it. The devil's in it if this is news. Make haste to town and believe me yours ever, Harry. I say nothing to Billy [Stratford], because I suppose the varlet is coming up.

1704, October 16. Whitehall.—Henry St. John to Thomas Coke at Melborne.

Dear Tom, I have just received yours, and am glad the purse proved to your satisfaction. The use I hoped it had been for is so good a one that I cannot but be sorry to be undeceived. I go tomorrow morning to Bucklebury, and shall be back on Saturday, on which day it would be a great pleasure to meet you in town: but for God's sake do not at furthest stay longer than Sunday, because it is most certain our patriots design some gallant thing to open the session with, and that is what, out of kindness to them, every one should oppose. Though I believe in a little time all the endeavours of their friends to keep 'em on their legs will prove ineffectual. As to whores, dear friend, I am very unable to help thee. I have heard of a certain housemaid that is very handsome: if she can be got ready against your arrival, she shall serve for your first meal. Adieu, ever yours most entirely, Harry. The fat Levite is come to town.

(1704), October 17. London.—W. Stratford to Thomas Coke.

I came to town on Saturday: on Sunday morning I waited on Mr. St. Johns, and found the solicitor with him. Both wish you would be here by the 23rd of this month. They cannot say there is an absolute necessity for it, but affairs are in so uncertain a state, they know not but they may have occasion for all their friends. A mail came in yesterday. The siege of Landau goes on intolerably slow. At the date of the last letters, which were just after a month the trenches had been opened, the Germans were not advanced one step further than the French were last year after seven days opening of the trenches. That which is worst is that they are jealous, and will not admit either of advice or assistance from us or the Dutch. The Duke is very uneasy, and it is thought will leave them, and go straight to the Moselle, to undertake somewhat by himself. It will be late before he comes for England. . . . My Lord Dorset owns his marriage with one of his acquaintance, one of the Roches: do you think any one will pity him? There is a strong talk there will be some attempt against the Speaker. I cannot think it will succeed, but I know not but it may be offered, and I hope you will be there.

COKE MSS.

1704, October 26. Kilkenny.—Captain John Trott to Thomas Coke, at his house in St. James's Place, near St. James's Gate, London.

I left Ashburne on Monday October 2 and that day sennight landed at Ringsend, near to Dublin. Next morning by nine, mustered: I was complete, but have had since then six of my men desert from me. None of our regiment is yet clothed, which is very injurious to us. I am satisfied, was they, that not one of our men durst go from us; for the Lords Justices have put forth a declaration that whoever takes a deserter, and brings him to his officer, shall have six pounds reward: and every one that has a company in the regiment pays ten shillings towards the six pounds. You had been troubled with this sooner had not I, with three other companies, been commanded on the 11th of this instant for Kilkenny. We are quartered in the barracks: they are the best and most convenient that I ever yet saw. The barracks, they tell me, through the kingdom are the same. Provisions here are mighty cheap. The carcase of the best sheep that comes into the market is bought for two shillings: beef under halfpenny the pound. The people in this country make the old proverb good, that God sends meat, and the devil cooks. The malt drink is bad, but to make it mends we have good French claret at sixteen pence the quart. Pray my service to William Fitzherbert, John Balguy and all friends.

1704, November 1. Holmesfield.—Michael Burton to Thomas Coke, M.P., London.

I beg leave to remind you of my unfortunate loss of my poor brother, and once more to entreat your favour and assistance to reimburse me. . . . The gross of what I have laid down for him is about 520*l.*, but will increase by interest.

1704, November 8. Foston.—Richard Bate to Thomas Coke, Westminster.

The late misfortunes in my family are the cause of my being here at this time, for conveniency of air and some retirement from business, to which I must again return upon arrival of our fleet from the West Indies, now daily expected. I am much surprised to hear I am again one of the three nominated for Sheriff of this County, since it is so generally known my occasions in the city so much require my attendance. . . . I must at this time beg your assistance by getting me now excused. . .

1704, November 8. Weissenburg.—Lieutenant Richard Pope to Thomas Coke.

The Prince of Baden is now sufficiently revenged for our robbing him of a share of the glory of the victory of Bleidhem. He has spun out this siege till the left wing of horse, to which that action was chiefly owing is entirely ruined. We have not above twenty horses a troop left, and probably there will not ten of those be able to march to Holland. I have lost six of my own equipage. Besides the want of forage we have a pestilential distemper amongst them that carries off forty or fifty a day. I suppose you will expect to hear something of the siege of Landau: but we here have quite left off asking about it. I can only tell you that we are lodged upon the counterscarp, and have finished two batteries, and pretend to have the third ready by tomorrow. But ammunition is very scarce, for yesterday the English and Dutch gunners desiring to know if they were to fire as many rounds as they usually did in a day, at sieges, they were answered the half was enough.

1704, November 8. Bramcoate.—Sir R. Burdet, Bart., to Thomas Coke at the House of Commons, Westminster.

. . . You are the only person that I can apply to, and I am forced to rely on your discretion. The judges have put me in the middle of the three presented to the Queen for sheriff: and (to be plain) I resolve not to serve: rather choosing to be at the mercy of the Queen for a fine, than run any other hazard. I have served my country to the best of my understanding for more than twenty years. I have not spared my purse nor my body. I understand how to serve this office at a small expense, but, having been faithful to the Government in Church and State, until an age that obligeth me to lay aside all public business, I hope I may be excused in this, as well as others. I am not willing to say more being so well known to you.

1704, November 9. Breda.—Robert Mundy to Thomas Coke, M.P., Westminster.

Soon after the late battle I made my application to my Lord Duke, who was pleased to repeat the promise he made to Mr. Harpur. The actions of this campaign have furnished his Grace with opportunities of performing what he so generously promised. Several vacancies are already filled up, which gives me great reason to fear another disappointment. But if I might be so happy to have the favour of your letter to my Lord, all seeming difficulties would vanish: which humble request granted will highly oblige our whole family, as well as lay an eternal obligation on your most humble servant.

1704, November 29. Brampton.—John Akrode to Thomas Coke, M.P.

Upon Saturday last Mr. Ashton desired me and some others to set our hands to a letter to you and Mr. Curzon, on the behalf of many persons in and about Sheffield, to beg of you both that you would please to assist them in preventing the passing of a Bill endeavoured to be procured this present Sessions of Parliament by Macclesfield to suppress making of horn buttons, which, if it be obtained, will be the ruin of many families in and about Sheffield, who at present live well by following that manufacture. The truth is this country and (as I believe) a great part of the nation is sadly abused by those in and about Macclesfield by making such bad buttons, both as to its making, and the bad materials they are made of: so that three sets of buttons will not wear out an ordinary cloth, which has forced people to invent other buttons of more durable lasting. And to me it seems unreasonable that COKE MSS. Macclesfield should engross the whole trade, and force us to buy their bad wares at their own prices, made as I hear of an Indian commodity, which is nought in itself and takes away our ready cash in specie to purchase it: whereas, if I be truly informed, our native commodity of wool (which is now at a very low rate) would make excellent buttons, help to consume the wool and get many hands at work, to make it ready for the button makers. I would therefore most humbly beg you will please to use your best endeavours to prevent the passing of the Bill; or if that cannot be, if there can be a way found out to enforce wrought buttons to be better made, it will be for the good of the whole country.

1704, December 1, Amington.—Edward Repington to [Thomas Coke].

Formerly, Mr. Bromley never failed of a catalogue of grievances every Sessions, but at last I took pity of him, and resolved to attack you in your turn. This it is to have the misfortune to be acquainted with an impertinent fellow, who, because he is uneasy himself, must be troubling those that are not: though if matters proceed as they do, I'm apprehensive too many will be possessed with different sentiments to mine, which tend only to the public good. It has been thought proper by the legislators to charge four shillings in the pound upon land, but at the same time I don't hear that anything is done to enable the owners to pay so great a tax. Never was less money stirring, or commodities (except foreign) cheaper. The best beef is but 2¼*d.* a pound, mutton 2*d.*, wheat 3*s.* the bushel, and all other grain proportionable: nor can, for want of vent, any of these things be sold in a quantity. Cattle and sheep are sent to fairs and return unbought, and it's reckoned good market when two or three strike of corn will go off. At this rate how such vast sums of money can be paid which are demanded, I can't foresee. Were the men of war obliged to victual in England, from whence they are supplied with all necessaries but provisions, the price of cattle would rise. It would be some help to have the East India ships stored from hence where so many of their useless are sold. But instead of that, it's here reported (and not as I fear without grounds) that Ireland, which contributes so little towards the carrying on the war, furnishes all or the greater part of what is for the subsistence of the fleet, and the merchant men too. It's not for mortals to surmount impossibilities, and unless speedy care be taken, the Midland counties must be inevitably ruined, for want of sale for their goods: and by the Receivers sending that little money away in specie, that should circulate here. I should think that if 15,000*l.* or 20,000*l.* was yearly laid out in corn by the Government, and sent to Sawley Ferry, which is the nearest place to us that is navigable, in order to be transported, it would raise the drooping spirits of the people, who must have something done for 'em. Which if refused, some attempts should be made upon the Spanish West Indies, from whence golden mountains would be expected, and the thoughts of men at present buoyed up, with the prospect of having quantities of bullion coined: that money might be more current among them. For other trans-marine projects they serve to ruin, rather than enrich, the nation. England was never poorer than under the reign of Edward 3, notwithstanding his successes against France. You may say it's Roman like and generous to assist our allies. Perhaps it may be so, but the Romans always made an advantage of their allies in the conclusion, and were too wise to ruin themselves out of mistaken notions of honour, being ever well rewarded for the assistance they sent. The Black Prince would not engage to reinvest Peter of Castile in his throne, without assurances of being well requited. But we go upon different principles, exclusive of prudential considerations. A nominal king is sent to a king disused to arms, whose subjects for 30 or 40 years never saw sword drawn in anger, or a musket fired that carried anything but powder. This was a noble adventure and could not but succeed when so many great statesmen were so remarkably concerned in it. When a raw, undisciplined army pretends to invade a nation long trained up in war, and the inhabitants confirmed in their allegiance to the king in possession, matters must undoubtedly go well, especially when the useful succours lie so remote, and must be sent by sea, where contrary winds, storms or dangers so often retard, if not shatter, the transporting fleets. This, in my language, is perfect knight errantry, when empty fame is hawked after, only to be acquired with blood and wounds. I wish we in the country could live as the knights errant did, who, we don't find in all their romances, were ever hungry, wanted money, or other conveniences of life. I'll conclude with some observations upon a Scotch Act, called the Act of Security, wherein I find our good neighbours enabled to invade England, who never wanted the will when they had the power, which they can't be long without, having a permission to arm and discipline the whole country. The French king I suppose, when things are ripe for the design, won't let them want money to go thorough with it. It's not the first time the Scots have invaded this nation with success: there's some alive that don't forget Leslie's coming into England, which gave so much encouragement to the late unhappy Civil War. The least the Senate can do, since what's past cannot be recalled, is to make the militia useful, and petition the Queen, that those gentlemen who proposed the passing, and consequently could apprehend no danger from this extraordinary Act, may have the honour of defending the frontier: that we northern people, when our money's gone, may be secure of those few moveables that will be left us. I shall say little about the Bill of Occasional Conformity which I presume will pass. The fanatics, should it be rejected, cannot be obliged with less than an unlimited power. They are the persons who, to my certain knowledge, have no regard to the merits of the Queen, at least all that I know, and I'm sure I know too many. I suppose it won't be thought proper to distaste the Church Party, who I'm confident are the only fast friends the Queen has, and who, in all fortunes, will never be shaken, unless treated with great disregard and coldness, and no advances made for the preservation of the best of religions. For what relates to the Scotch Settlement of the Crown, it is no concern to me. May the Queen last as long as I do. By this you'll believe that I don't wish her Majesty a short reign, but be it short or long, I don't wish to survive her. May her General continue the same, who though he has had the misfortune to lose his own heir, has however made us fortunate, since he can have no other design but in making Fame his heir, to perpetuate his memory and his successes to the security of our posterity.

1704, December 2. (Ashborne.)—Captain John Beresford to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament at Westminster.

I shall not fail to do my cousin Harpur and Mr. Stanhope all the service in my power, but we have a loss of two in this place, one dead, the other fled. I have met with some emissaries of Mr. Crompton in this town; however I think they would have found people here staunch. I wish we had more of 'em. It was an omission that we had not an extract of the poll book of the flying squadron of out votes, for it's odds they will not be found where they resided three years ago. They must now be hunted out with speed, in order to which I will write to Mr. Heathcote. As to the town, I can contribute little; I presume it is already curried over by both parties. I spoke to the Jerroms, and I find they lie under some disgust as to some charges last election, and also the nomination of sheriff's men. I hope to keep them neuter, at least. Tom Wright of Sudbury likewise pretends some disobligation about a waggoner at Ticknall, wherein he suffered by the unfair dealing of Sir John's agent. This is the time to hear of all faults and complaints; but the misfortune is some may better steal horses than others look at 'em. My cousin William Hopkinson is gone to London and would be glad to give his estate some respite by getting into some sort of place, wherein if yourself and Mr. Curzon would favour him, 'twould be a very great kindness both to him and me. He hath been bred to the business of a pen, and I hope might qualify himself for a collection in the Excise, or such a post as Mr. Hand's.

Coke MSS.

1704, December 8. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament at Westminster.

I hope this frosty weather will clear the London air, and preserve health to you and yours, and all friends, which I mightily desire and to see you all safe in Derbyshire. Pray do me the favour to acquaint Mr. Harpur that I had answered his, but I writ by the last post. I have sent to those few acquaintance I have, but I cannot find them altered. There is great industry used by the other side, and I guess open houses, and the Recorder coming down, which I had sent him word of. I have had much ado to make Cantrell of Newton. I do not perceive Mr. Stanhope solicits. Mr. Garratt has Sir Nathaniel [Curzon's] orders; but whether Mr. Stanhope's, or Mr. Harpur's, or Mr. Curzon's letter to Garratt would not do well, pray advise them. I hear the noble Marquis of Granby stands for Grantham.

1704, December 16. St. James's Place.—Thomas Coke to ———. Endorsed: "My Letter to Mrs. Grey about the Darby Election."

Madam, I scarce know how to presume upon giving you this trouble, but that in desiring the favour of your interest in the town of Darby for Mr. Harpur and Mr. Stanhope, who intend to offer their services again at the next election there, which must be this year, I believe I do a service to my country. And that, Madam, I hope will obtain your pardon for me, who, being witness of their behaviour in the House, can say they have served their country with great faithfulness and assiduity. And the zeal which your father had for such as did so emboldens me to ask your favour to them in their present intentions: who, I am sure, will think themselves very happy to be countenanced by your interest.

(1704, probably), Thursday morning.—Matthew Prior to Thomas Coke.

Dear Mr. Cook,—Dr. Aldrich and Mr. Stratford will chatt an hour too night with me. Stratford will have his master St. Johns for his toast and if you will have the goodness to be mine I will tell you that nobody is gladder you are Teller of the Chequer or more sincerely your friend and servaut then Mat. Prior.

1704–5, January 6. Knowlehills.—Walter Burdett to Thomas Coke, a Member of the Honourable House of Commons, Westminster.

. . . I despair of your coming into this country till your garden invites you. Your woods have been as pleasant as woods could be without leaves, being stored with game, though not of all sorts, yet with plenty of some. Some neighbouring gentlemen have desired to shoot and (against election time) I denied no gentleman that asked. You have had many ducks upon your canal; my boy at one time counted sixty. I don't know that they have been shot at, but they fly about when the woods are disturbed, and come again. One day I found somebody was in the wood who had not asked leave: I sent to see and William Ratcliff of St. Bridgets Heath was found with a gun, and had killed a woodpecker. He said he only intended to shoot such sort of birds as jays and others with fine feathers for Mr. Harding's daughters to work up: but I asked what authority he had to keep a gun: he said he was Sir John Harpur's gamekeeper and had a warrant under his hand and seal. Though this cannot authorize him to keep a gun, I would have shewn so much respect to our good neighbour as to return him his gun, if he would shew me that warrant, but I hear nothing more of that warrant, and I have not seen Mr. Harpur since. I told Mr. Harding that if he or any of his daughters desired the gun, they should have it; but they do not desire it, so that I have it in my custody. Your neighbour John Cook the quaker has been ill. Thursday last he ordered his boy to go for Dr. Bower, and as he was going in Melbourne Common his mare dropped down dead, and before he returned the master was dead too. He had not shaved his beard of some considerable time, but ordered that it should be shaved as soon as he should die. Your cousin Pool (Pole) has been very active in the night at Derby to make interest for new members there, and one while talked as if he had hopes of success for the town: but he says for the county the devil cannot stir Curzon and Coke. Sir I wish you a good new year, your gamekeeper chaplain and most humble servant.

1704–5, January 13. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament at Westminster.

Pray, if you please, give Mr. St. Johns the inclosed note. I suppose you have heard your neighbour William Coke is dead. I hope and think Mr. Fulwood will be a good-humoured man: but I would not have anybody speak to him but yourself, when you come down, for by that time I guess he will live at Melbourne.

Note inclosed.—That the press warrants be out all the year, and that the justices meet every month to execute it. That if no officers be ready to receive them, they be sent to the gaol, and be allowed 4*d.*, 5*d.*, or 6*d.* per day till the officer come for them. Justices to be allowed 4*s.* a day, and clerks 1*s.* That all people not having 40*s.* per annum freehold, that shall be convicted before the three justices of any offence about game be sent to gaol as soldiers. That the justices be judges what men are fit to go and not the officers. That a list be yearly printed and sent to Easter Sessions in each county of such masters of ships as want apprentices according to the Navigation Act, that the inland counties may have benefit by it. That every gaoler do monthly give an account to the Secretary at War of what persons lie in his custody for soldiers, their size and names, that those that are too little for land may go to sea.

1704–5, January 13. Derby.—John Harpur to Thomas Coke in St. James's Place, London. Free.

I am yet at Derby, and find Mr. Parker's being before me here of great disadvantage to my affairs. Many are engaged against Mr. Stanhope and myself, who would have been for us if our friends had been as diligent as theirs, in making application early. Mr. Crompton's interest prevails amongst the poorest burgesses; who lends them small sums of money to be paid him again by the week. But notwithstanding all his tricks, I think my interest is at present the best: and Mr. Stanhope's with management and his appearance amongst the burgesses will, I believe, be full as good, if not better. We are in no danger of Mr. Parker being one. What apprehensions I have are on Lord James's [Cavendish] side. I intend to be in town the latter end of next week; but lest I should be too late to serve my friends, I desire you will be so kind to take care Dr. Coke and Mr. Thomas Goodwin, when the Annuity Act is passed, may have annuities secured according to the particulars underwritten. I will order the money to be paid into the Exchequer as the Act shall direct.

Dr. Coke desires 50*l.* per annum for his life and Mrs. Elizabeth his wife.

Thomas Goodwin desires 30*l.* per annum for the life of Samuel, his brother; and 20*l.* per annum for the life of Mary Goodwin his sister.

1704–5, January 15.—Secretary St. John to Thomas Coke.

Dear Tom,—My granmother is this morning dead; so that I must intreat you to take care of the Bill for naturalizing Mrs. Cadogan. It is committed for tomorrow morning. You will settle the fees with Joddrel, and wait on the lady down to Westminster. I am, very dear friend, thine H. St. J.

1704–5, January 20. Oswestry.—Richard Pope (the Elder) to Thomas Coke, a Member of Parliament in London.

This may acquaint you that Mr. Fisher told me that you had a desire to dispose of that small estate that you have in these parts, by reason of the remoteness of it. In pursuance thereof I acquainted one Mr. Hunt, that married the Lord Chief Baron Ward's daughter, that hath her portion and a considerable sum more to lay out upon land. Mr. Hunt hath acquainted the Lord Chief Baron, and viewed the estate: and he told me he is willing to be the purchaser at the customary rates of the country, both for the land and the houses: but he would rather buy the land without the houses. Lands are sold here at twenty years' purchase, at the most, some at seventeen and eighteen: and houses at twelve if in good repair, and tenanted. But some of your houses want both. I writ to Mr. Fisher that Mr. Hunt would proceed in the purchase, but not hearing from him hath given you the occasion of this trouble.

1704–5, January 21.—Captain John Beresford to Thomas Coke, a Member of Parliament, Westminster.

I received your kind letter of the 8th instant; and as to the contents of it relating to recruits, I hope the officers in these parts will succeed well and in due time, both as to the numbers they want or desire, and the time limited by their orders, viz., the 15th of February. I hope all the complaints of the execution of the late Act are not so considerable as to debar us of the benefit of a new one, with such qualifications and additions as shall be thought meet. For it would contribute greatly, I think, to the reformation of manners both in servants and other loose disorderly people, if the Act were a real terror to 'em, by the punishment of some of those that desert, for example (as the pressed men are the most apt, and consequently the officers have the least mind of them) and some pain upon the towns that openly receive and harbour them upon desertion. Otherwise it discourages constables and others in doing their duties; and I could wish all deserters were strictly looked after and sent to gaol, and thence fetched towards manning the fleet. Then they could not well scamper, and might be as serviceable. I heartily thank you for your kindness to Will. Hopkinson: and could also have wished good speed to Mr. Henry Boothby, for I believe he is hardly used at home. I acquainted him with what you desired, that you feared he spoke too late. Upon discourse I find Sir William will give him no encouragement in the world, which is pity, for he is a very good humoured ingenious gentleman. I was in hope to have seen you at Sessions, whither I crept with much ado with a great shoe for the gout gave me a visit but made no long stay. I spoke to cousin Harpur at Derby upon two or three points concerning the contest in Cheshire next time, which I also beg your interest in, to procure Mr. Lister of Sysonby, near Melton Mowbray, his interest in his lordship of Audlem in Cheshire, where 29 votes were against, and but 3 for, last time. Cousin Harpur says his circumstances are bad, and himself in the Fleet, or absconded, and hard to be found. Sir Charles Skrymshire hath likewise the direction of a lordship of Mr. Sneyd's of Keele, called Willaston, in his minority, where 9 were against. Sir John Harpur's interest cousin Harpur I doubt not will send me a deputation for to my cousin Tom Brooke, who I could desire might be the deputy conductor of them all. I have presumed to write to Mr. Thomas Vernon, son to Sir Thomas: but cannot much brag of my speed: he seems to adhere to Mr. Offley, who is a near neighbour to his lordship of Haslingden, where above thirty went amiss before. Though I am informed that he last time gave his interest to Sir George [Warburton] and Sir Roger [Mostyn]: I wish you could improve that point. I likewise informed cousin Harpur that we were forced to be irregular in several of our doings in the Office of the Peace in these parts, for want of people of the quorum. We cannot hold privy sessions, nor do many acts there without one such, and have none but Tom Eyre, whose company we affect not: but he alone can supply all defects, and does singly in many cases the office of two.

1704–5, February 6. Comptroll Office, Whitehall.—Henry Cartwright to [Thomas Coke].

Yesterday morning his Grace the Duke of Marlborough set out for Harwich, where he embarks for Holland. My Lord Treasurer is gone to Newmarket. Mr. St. John is Secretary at War, but desires his friends may not speak of it yet. The inclosed was delivered me by Mr. Whitfield, who was ordered by the Duke to give him an account by the first opportunity of your receipt of it. I heartily wish it pleasing news. Just before the Commissioners broke up, I was sent for, Mr. Bromley in the Chair, who gave me Mr. Vanderesch his book, printed in Holland. The Commissioners desired I would answer it in a very little time: but if a man is to appear in print, he ought to be very sure of his calculations, which are very many, and different sorts in this work. I am sure I can do it effectually, but will not engage but by your approbation and advice. Mr. King has seen and spoke to me several times to receive 80*l.* of him as salary. I have as often told him I served as a volunteer, and as I at first told the Commissioners so, I could not go back: but the whole affair I humbly submit to your pleasure. I would have sent you Mr. Vanderesch's book, but I cannot get one.

1704–5, February 10.—Michael Burton to Thomas Coke, a Member of the House of Commons, London.

The season of the year drawing nigh for the Duke's going abroad and the Parliament's rise makes me hope this memorandum of my affair not unseasonable, and I still live in hopes of your favour. The last week I received an account from Mark Bacon that you had received the small present I sent you: I shall be very glad to hear it answers my expectation and proves as good as the last. Poor Mr. Wright of Eyam, a true friend of yours, is dead and so is Mr. Brown of Wirkesworth. Our old friend Mr. Balguy has taken the oaths to the Government.

COKE MSS.

1704–5, February 28. Lisbon.—Robert Littill to Thomas Coke in St. James's Place.

When I came down to Portsmouth I found Sir Thomas Dilkes: I gave him your letter and he was mighty glad to hear you was well. We set sail the next day, and was driven back at night. The morning following we weighed our anchor, and when we came over against Plymouth the Hampton Court came out, and the Captain came on board the flag, and I went on board in his boat. While I was on board the Revenge the Captain and the Admiral was mighty kind to me: and the Admiral was so kind, when my Captain came on board, to recommend me to him. We are now safe arrived at Lisbon: we have brought all the fleet in safe, and joined Sir John Leake, and today he hoisted his flag on board our ship. We shall set sail the next fair wind for Gibraltar. We was but eight days coming from St. Helens. I have never been sick since I came to sea. The Captain hath been very civil to me.

(1704–5), March 3. London.—Elizabeth Coke to Thomas Coke (at Knolehills).

Not hearing from you nor out of Derbyshire last post makes me fear your journey had some stop put to it in the way by the waters. . . . Miss's journey holds as I told you in my last: she has sat the first time for her picture with a great deal of good humour, but so very much motion, that put Mr. Dahl upon great difficulty to catch her in the posture he desired. Miss was to pay her duty to my Lord Chesterfield on Monday last, and he increased her riches with a guinea to buy playthings; and has desired she should come and dine with him before she goes.

1704–5, March 20. (London.)—Elizabeth Coke to Thomas Coke, at his house at Melbourn in Derbyshire, to be left at Wilnferry. Loughborow bag.

On Sunday the Doctor thought it time to put a stop to Miss her ague with the Jesuits' powder: she has had no fit this two days. My Lady Carnarvon goes next week. I was yesterday to wait of her but she did not mention anything of Miss's going down with her: so I suppose she concludes of her coming some time hence when she is thoroughly settled with her new maid. Miss Mary Dakyne was taken ill of an intermitting fever: I removed her from the nursery, and was forced to send for the French maid, who Miss is very well contented and pleased with. My Lady Harpur was here this morning, and told us her going to the Bath was resolved for the second week in April. My brother John and I found Sir Thomas Fanshawe grown so weak that I fear he won't continue long. My sister Fanshawe is this day gone with my cousin Margaret Fanshawe to Jenkins for some little stay. I hope you are very near your journey towards us.

1705, March 30. Lichfield.—Lord Stanhope to Thomas Coke, M.P., at St. James's Place, London.

I had a letter this morning from Sir Harry Gough, who tells me he will stand for this place; and my former obligations to him are a tie upon me to assist him before any one else, except yourself who are so near a relation. Therefore I desire you would tell Mr. Chetwind that I am sorry I cannot serve him in this affair. I have no acquaintance with Sir John Trant, only I promised a friend of his to mention this thing to you: but you need not trouble yourself much about it.

1705, April 7. Bolduc (Bois le Duc).—Captain Richard Pope to Thomas Coke.

I am extremely obliged to you for the favour you did me of yours. I designed in a post or two to have given you the trouble of a letter in order to a correspondence during the campaign, in which I can only offer you a true and faithful account of matter of fact, as things happen: not doubting that you will have the original causes and reasons of motions from several of your friends that are capable of diving deeper into them than I am; of which I am sure my Colonel will not be wanting to be one. We are now likely to have a glut of vacancies, so many years expected: and I fear they come too fast to catch them all. Captain Prime seems to decline being Major, and to be weary of the service. If so I must doubly beg your assistance. The first is that you would write a letter to my Lord Duke of Marlborough, who I am sure will have some thoughts of giving it out of the regiment, though I am satisfied I shall not want anything in the power of the Duke of Schomberg or Colonel Sibourg. The second I should have been ashamed to be so unreasonable to have desired of you, if I had not been encouraged by your kind and generous offer to Colonel Sibourg on my behalf.

(1705), April 8. London.—Elizabeth Coke to Thomas Coke, at Mr. Burdett's house at Knolehills.

Your daughter left us yesterday in great joy to go to Wing. I can give you but a very ill account of our proceeding as to her picture, for there was no persuasions nor contrivance that we could think of could prevail with her to be half a moment at a time in a posture. Mr. Dahl tried an hour at a time twice, but the second time he said he found it impossible to do it to his satisfaction, and therefore desired it might be deferred till her coming to town again. My Lord Chesterfield is now so well again that he can scarce find a complaint. People are going out of town apace. My Lord Ferrers begins his journey on Monday next. The town takes care of you in your absence in providing you variety of good places, which perhaps may be as great news to you as it is to us: though since they are good, I should be glad of the certainty of it. Your standish is done at last and will come to you by the carrier.

1705, April 9.—John Beresford to Thomas Coke in St. James's Place.

I am very much obliged to you upon Mr. Boothby's account, to whom I have wrote by this post: he is in Hertfordshire, and will wait upon you. I am very glad of the good news yours brought from Gibraltar, which rendered our public accounts more credible; for we are often baulked with fine stories we dare not believe without vouchers. I am in hope Verona may hold out till Prince Eugene comes, if there be any more trust in the Court of Vienna than that of Paris. I presume the issuing of the writs will bring you back into the country, when I hope we shall be very easy and quiet. But your assistance will be wanting to our friends at Derby. There is one William Street of Ashover, and what care is taken of him I know not: but a line from you to Mr. Hodgkinson I believe would secure him.

(1705), April 18. London.—Elizabeth Coke to Thomas Coke, at Knolehills.

By the help of the warm weather and a new medicine I have taken since I saw you I am, thank God, very much mended in my health. Your daughter at Wing was very well when last I heard. I must ask your approbation for Miss Betty's being weaned. She has not cut any teeth a considerable time, and I remember it was the same with her sister, that though she was a much stronger child she was backward in that respect till she was weaned, after which her teeth came with a great deal of ease. I have bespoke the glass for size as you directed, and with a glass frame: they asked much the same for a gilt frame as for a glass one, and I thought the glass much the handsomest. My brother John dined with Sir John Harpur today: my Lady was so far indisposed as to have Dr. Shadwell with her. I have not been to wait of Mrs. St. Johns since his place. I find there is some little ceremony paid to her upon it, which I hope to do on Thursday. There is match concluded between Sir Richard Newdigate's eldest son, and Sir Thomas Twisden's youngest sister.

1705, April 22.—Thomas Hoy to (no address).

Madam, in dutiful obedience to your commands I present you with the following account in writing. Having the place of Professor of Physic in the University of Oxford, could I obtain the honour to serve her Majesty in quality of one of her Physicians in Ordinary, or in the Commission for the sick and wounded, either of them would consist with the duty of the post I already enjoy, and better support the character of it, at present too narrowly provided for. 'Tis my happiness to have your Ladyship for witness what rank of persons I have had the honour to be entrusted by in my practise, with a tolerable success and reputation for many years. And I dare appeal from the best friend to the worst enemy I have, with how much care I have always cultivated those principles her Majesty has been graciously pleased so often to recommend to us. This is the common duty of us all; but, Madam, that which makes me chiefly hope I may appear an object of her Majesty's bounty is—that since my advancement by the late king, and some years before, I have employed myself in some laborious and expensive studies, which in their happy conclusiou may redound to the advantage of the public: but in the meantime are an unseen burthen upon my other affairs. . . .

1705, April 23.—John Harpur to [Thomas Coke].

If the writ come to the Mayor this week, the election will be at Derby on the 3rd of May. I hope you will come down. I'm sure your company will be very obliging, and it would be very prejudicial to my affair, if you should be absent then. I hope for Mr. Sorocol also, and if he knows any burgesses in London that would give their votes for Mr. Stanhope and me, I should take it kindly if you would take this opportunity of seeing their Derby friends. Mr. Stanhope takes little pains, nor has been at any expense; which usage makes my affairs more difficult than I expected; but I believe all will be well with your most humble servant.

1705, April 25. Oswestry.—Richard Pope (the Elder) to Thomas Coke.

According to your desire I waited on Mr. Hunt to acquaint him of the contents of your letter. His answer was that since he spake to me of the purchasing your estate an unhappy accident happened: the gentleman he had laid out 1750*l.* upon a mortgage was dead. . . . He is not willing to put a value on the houses being candell rents, and are to be valued according to the condition they are in: and there must be some better course taken to keep the houses tenanted and in repair than hath been of late. . . .

(1705), May 8. N.S. Bois le Duc.—Captain Richard Pope to Thomas Coke.

The garrisons of Breda, Huesden, Gorcom are now encamped within half a mile of this town at the village Fught (Vucht): we shall join them on Friday morning and march toward Ruremonde. 'Tis generally said that we shall march towards the Moselle, and join the Hessians and Palatine troops, and a considerable body of Prussians; which army is to be commanded by my Lord Duke, if the folk aforesaid appear, which I must own I much doubt. We talk of nothing less than the siege of Trionville. But how these things will happen, you may expect an impartial account from your most obliged humble servant. I hear there is to be a regiment of dragoons raised in England. If there be any such thing, and the Colonel be anything you like I should serve, I should be very glad to be Major to it; and I believe the matter will not be very difficult, for few of my rank in the horse service will put in for it—at least none in a better post, and none in the same have the same pretensions, and backed by your recommendations to my Lord Duke. I am the more desirous of it because there is like to be no vacancy in our regiment as was expected: for if Prime sells he must starve.

1705, May 17. London John Coke to Thomas Coke at Melborne. . . . I was very much surprised to hear of my cousin Harpur's ill success at Derby. A great many honest gentlemen have met with the same disappointment. At the Hertfordshire election there were 450 polled more than ever was known at any former election. Mr. Freeman polled within eighteen as many as at the last election, and Major Halsey above a hundred more; so that we are very apt to believe there were a great [many] freeholders made by the opposite party by collusion on purpose to vote for this election. Sir Charles Barrinton had the same fate; he polled as many as ever he did, and yet he lost it by a great majority. When I heard of the success at Derby, I was told that they talked of making an opposition for the county. Meeting my Lord Scarsdale at Mayfair I told him what I had heard: he said he would write down to his agents by this post to be upon their guard against a surprise.

1705, May 28. Whitehall.—Secretary St. John to Thomas Coke. Dear Rake, I am glad to hear your election is over, your feavour gone, and your worship is again upon the hunt: for what the devil can carry you to the Bath at this time but a whore? I had writ to you ere now, but that I was more than a fortnight in the country, and since my return uncertain how to direct to you. If you do not call att Bucklebury when you leave the Bath, you and I shall quarrel. I go down thither on Fryday, but return the Monday following, and in about 10 days afterwards hope to be there for some time. I have little news to entertain you with. The town is very dull, or I am so, for I have not one bawdy story to tell of myself or friend. Really, Tom, you are missed: whoring flags without you. Lord Marlborough is got to Treves, and I have a letter from him of the 27th; but he will not be able to act by ten days so soon as he expected, the Prussians, Imperialists and Germans not having marched at the time agreed upon. In the meantime the French have invested Huy and frightened the Dutch out of their wits. As soon as he begins to move, I hope things will take another turn. Dear Tom, divert thyself, continue to love me, and be persuaded no man on earth is more entirely yours than Harry.

1705, ce 26^{me} Juin. De Londres. — Chevalier to Thomas Coke Esquire to be left at Mr. Harrison's the Coffee man's upon the Walk at the Bath.

Monsieur, Suivant vos ordres je vous envoie la perruque de crain, [crin?] que j'espére que vous la trouverez bien. Si vous avez occasion pour des perruques à Londres, j'ai les plus beaux cheveux de tout Londres, et comme cela ne se rencontre pas toujours, je pris la liberté de vous en écrire, à fin que si vous en voulez avoir, j'aurai le soin de mettre tout ce que je puis avoir de plus beau. . . . Le nom du cocher est Wilkinson aux Trois Tonnes à Bath.

1705, July 23.—Robert Harley to Thomas Coke.

Sir, Several of your very good friends desire the favour to meet you tomorrow being Tuesday at seven in the evening at Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer's house to discourse together of an affair of some consequence. I am, sir, your most faithful humble servant Ro. Harley.

(1705), August 26. Camp at Ramay (Geest St. Remy near Tirlemont ?).—Captain Richard Pope to Thomas Coke.

I am very much obliged to you for the favour you did me in remembering me in Colonel Sibourg's, though I had not given you the trouble of a letter this campaign: I waiting an opportunity of giving an account of some coup-d'éclat, which I believe now will hardly happen this year the action as well as the horses of the English cavalry being near an end. The last thing that has been in agitation here was the attempting the passage of the Ysche, which I believe will be pretty much talked of with you in England. I don't remember I ever heard of anything that has so far divided people's opinions. Some called it very feasible, and others wholly impracticable, and each support their opinion with much warmth. You will wonder perhaps how folks sentiments should be so very different, if you do not know our army is composed of two sorts of philosophers. The first hold all things to be smooth easy and plain; the world in their opinion is like a bowling green, and one may run over it without meeting with any rubs. The others are of quite different principles, they make all things hard and rugged, they delight in raising obstacles, making difficulties, will turn a molehill into a mountain, and dry firm ground into a morass: yet such is their love to mankind, that though his eyes were open, and the way good, they will not let him go on for fear of his beating out his brains, or at least breaking his shins. I shall not be impertinent enough to give my opinion, where so great doctors differ, but give you as short an account as I can of the French camp. They had on the flank and rear of their right wing the wood of Soinies, the river Ysche all the way before them, the banks toward their right very steep, a hollow way at a little distance from the river, in which they put considerable detachments of foot; covered their centre with four villages lined with infantry. Above the hollow way to the top of the hill was plain ground where, and on their left, was most of their cavalry. The place of the easiest approach I take to be the village near Ische (Neer Ysche ?). They had two inconveniences in the ground—a ravine ran from the river almost to the wood, and made the communication between the right wing and the centre difficult, and were obliged to extend two leagues consequently, and must be thin in some places. Your most obliged humble servant.

1705, September 11. Bucklebury.—W. Stratford to Thomas Coke.

The friendship you have for this family will make willing, I know, to take part in all that concerns them, even in their misfortunes. They had a very heavy one on Friday last in the death of poor Mrs. Winchcomb. Her small pox were of the most malignant sort, would never fill in any other part but in her head, and were attended from their first breaking out with all the fatal symptoms. Mr. St. John was pleased to summon me here on Thursday morning. I had the honour to perform the last offices to her, as far as she was capable of receiving them: but she had very few and very short intervals of sense after I came there. I need not tell you that the great advantage the master of this place has by her death does not in the least allay his grief for it. She had made no will, by which means her fortune comes equally between the two sisters. Mr. St. John is now at Windsor. The ladies who are here are as easy as can be expected while such a loss is fresh upon them. Mrs. St. John commands me to give her service to you: I hope to be at Oxford again on Saturday.

1705, September 13. London.—William Armstrong to T. Cooke, Esq., at Melbourn.

I have been several times at Leveridge's lodgings, but he is not yet come to town. As soon as he comes I will borrow the Opera Airs and write them for you. I have sent all that are printed (being 8) by the Nottingham coachman, and ordered him to leave them for you at the Bull's Head Inn in Loughborough. He told me there are several market people come from your town thither. . . . I must beg the favour of you to give me an order to whom you please for my small bill, for here is little to be got at this time in my way. Sum 3*l.* 18*s.* 5*d.* I live at Mr. Hillyards, next the Elephant and Castle, near White Hart Corner in High Holborn.

1705, September 16. Bucklebury.—William Stratford to Thomas Coke.

. . . I am indeed as busy as you are, si magnis componere parva licebit: and find that my best room, on which I design to be most expensive, will not look as well as it may do without giving you greater trouble than I durst have presumed to have thought of had not you been pleased to encourage me to it. But upon measuring my room, it is capable of receiving over the chimney a whole length: and if I may hope for such an ornament, I shall pawn the credit of our treasury to make the rest of the furniture as suitable as I can to it. Whenever I receive the books and prints I shall hasten them to you wherever you are: but I am afraid they will not come to my hands before your return from the country. They were stopped at Brussells, and I do not hear that my correspondent has received them. The good family here are all, even the females, at your service: they are as easy as can be expected while such a loss is so fresh.

1705, September 19. Whitehall.—Secretary St. John to Thomas Coke.

Dear Tom,—The hurry I was in during poor Betty's illness and the confusion of my family since her death, will I hope excuse me to you if I have not writ since we parted. I have nothing from hence to entertain you with. I grow every day less and less a man of pleasure, and my last misfortune, which affected my body less than any of the former, has made a deeper impression on my mind. I should be glad to know what temper you find gentlemen in: whether they will think it reasonable to support the Queen, who has nothing to ask but what we are undone if we do not grant: and who, if she does make use of hands they do not like, has been forced to it by the indiscretion of our friends. The real foundation of difference between the two parties is removed, and she seems to throw herself on the gentlemen of England, who had much better have her at the head of 'em than any ringleaders of fashion. Unless gentlemen can show that her administration puts the Church or the State in danger, they must own the contest to be about persons: and if it be so, can any honest man hesitate which side OKE MSS. to take. I shall be settled in town in a fortnight. A month I suppose brings you up. You will be welcome to all your acquaintance, but to none so much as, dearest Tom, your ever faithful H. St. John.

1705, September 22. Scotland Yard.—Samuel Lynn to Honble. Mr. Cook.

Mr. St. John is at present very ill of an ague and fever; but I hope the worst is over. We have very little news from abroad: what there is you'll find inclosed.

1705, September 24. Camp at Arschot. [Copy of a despatch.]

The workmen sent from the army to demolish the line between the Neethe and the Demer, being for expedition's sake augmented to near five thousand, have already levelled all the redoubts, and made so good a progress in the rest of the work that the whole will be finished on Saturday next. We have had almost continual rain for three days past, which begins to incommode the troops that are encamped in the low grounds.

(In another hand.) The taking of Barcelona is not yet contradicted from France, the last letters from Turin left the Duke of Savoy in good heart. If he holds out this winter, 'tis more than was expected some days since.

1705, September 27. Albemarle Street.—[Anthony Hammond] to [Thomas Coke].

I have been in the country. The inclosed came to me last night: I beg of you to return it. Mr. St. Johns has had a fever: I called today: they told me he was better, but he saw no company. I told Mr. Br. that Mr. H———y solicited earnestly for Mr. Sm——h, and attributed the coming in of the Tories to his influence. You see Mr. Br. his opinion upon that matter. I am afraid the choice of the Speaker will be a greater struggle than was apprehended. Lord Windsor declares against Mr. Sm——h: and I hear today Mr. George Clarke will quit his place, some say that he may be free in his vote upon that question, but I have not any certain grounds that this is the motive. We give credit in the City to the news of yesterday's mail from Lisbon, and that Barcelona is taken. I make no doubt but it will be ours, though perhaps this is a little too early account of it. Garth and I have met to condole upon the late matches. He has been employed to speak to Lady Peterborough for my Lord Mordaunt, who is terribly afraid of her upon this small mistake he has made. That the City may not be out of fashion in these follies, Mrs. Freeman, my Lord Delaware's mother-in-law, has married her postman.

1705, September 28. Camp at Herentals.—[Copy of a despatch.]

The troops that were detached for levelling the Lines having finished their work, and joined their respective regiments, the army commanded by his Grace the Duke of Marlborough and that of the States under the command of Monsr. d'Auverquerc decamped this morning from Arschot and came to this Camp; the right being at Grobbendonck and the left at Oevel. The enemy marched at the same time within their lines, and have extended their left towards Lier. A regiment of dragoons and a battalion of foot were this day sent from the army to reinforce the garrison of Diest, and to put it in a posture of defence.

(In another hand.) Our news from Catalonia holds hitherto very good; the last letter from France advising that the whole had declared for King Charles the 3rd, except Barcelona, and there the burghers had taken arms to compel the garrison to surrender.

(1705), September 29.—Mrs. St. John to Thomas Coke.

Mr. St. John not being able to write himself, I am to return you his thanks for your kind concern for him. He has been ill of a fever, but now begins to mend pretty fast: and will I hope be able some time next week to go into the country in order to recover such a stock of health as may carry him through the winter. He supposes you very busy among your country friends, and in your garden, and that you will hardly be in town till his return from Bucklebury, which will be about the 20th of October. I shall conclude by assuring you that I am your humble servant Fr. St. John.

(1705), September 30. Christchurch, Oxford.—W. Stratford to Thomas Coke.

I beg leave to present my most humble thanks for the favour of yours last. You will have your best friend and his lady to bear you company, and I may then challenge any of [my] profession to shew such an apartment. I suppose you have heard that we have been afraid of a greater misfortune in that family than that which lately happened. Mr. St. John himself was taken ill at London. His fever lasted about eight days: I bless God it is over, and he is now returning to Bucklebury for some fresh air. I believe you have now thoughts of returning to town. I am afraid you will find very stormy weather there this winter. This country is in the utmost rage. Next week a new race is to be set up in Port Mead, near Oxon, in opposition to that at Woodstock, and some design to continue it for the future on the very same day. I see no possibility of reconciling the differences here.

1705, October 4. Ashborne.—John Beresford to Thomas Coke.

My good friend Michael Burton gives me the opportunity to join my request to his for your interest and friendship in the case of Knaresborough which will be a very great obligation upon us both. . . . I could wish to know the terms of your Annuity Bill, that is now in the House. It may afford some encouragement in the provision for younger children.

1705, October 6. Albemarle Street.—[Anthony Hammond] to [Thomas Coke].

The favour of yours of the 29th of September found me at Milton in Bucks, at Mr. Wotton's house, a relation and friend of mine. And now I happen to name him, give me leave to desire you to read the last edition of his Reflections upon Ancient and Modern Learning. I believe it will entertain you agreeably enough, and I would have so good a friend as you acquainted with a book that, by Mr. Wotton's consent, I have some interest in. The inclosed I had this morning from Captain Dolman of the Lyme. Scarce will Barcelona compensate for the loss of the Prince of Hesse. Please to direct your letters to me at the Navy Office. As I have been writing, the newspaper I have sent was cried about the street. This day my Lord Keeper surrendered the seals to Sir C. Hedges, who brought a warrant from Her Majesty to receive the same. 'Tis said Mr. Cowper succeeds.

1705, October 9. North End.—G. Granville to [Thomas Coke].

After having endured so much mortification of late upon the account of my friend, it gave me a pleasure beyond expression to hear of your health. Harry St. John has indeed been in a great deal of danger, but I suppose by this time has himself given you an account of his recovery. He is now at Bucklebury, from whence he writes me word he gathers strength every day, and is preparing to encounter us in full strength and vigour about the sitting of Parliament. I have hardly seen London since we parted, and shall have little desire, or temptation to see it till I hear you are there. I could be very well contented to pass the winter out of the hearing of your politics. The pleasure of being with you and two or three more of our friends can only atone for the burthen of so much disagreeable jangling as I foresee. Would to God that you would make haste to town, that I might not be at leisure to indulge myself in a way of thinking that makes me quite good for nothing. All at Northend are entirely at your devotion. I am from the very bottom of my soul, my dear Thomas, yours most faithfully for ever.

1705, November 7.—Sir Edward Coke to Thomas Coke at the Honble. House of Commons in Westminster.

I heartily thank you for the care you are pleased to take about what I made my request to you, and the hopes you give me still of effecting it. The opposition that you may meet with from a certain lord will then require a timely application to persons of the greatest interest at Court. I am much obliged to you for your letters. I wish the consequence of this Sessions of Parliament may be a safe and honourable peace, and then an union will follow at home. Godfry Burton mentioned in the list of three is, I presume, a mistake, for there is no Godfry Burton of an estate in this county that I know of. I believe it was intended for Francis Burton of Weston, who hath a good estate in land, and rich in monies.

1705, November 13. Gurcum [Gorkum].—Thomas Beresford to Thomas Cooke, Member of Parliament, in St. James's Place.

I desire you to excuse my delay in not writing, for I thought we should have had action after passing the lines: but the Dutch have frustrated the designs of the Duke, or otherwise we had been masters of all Flanders. All wish that the Duke may accomplish his designs in Vienna in making peace with the malcontents. I have had but indifferent usage in the regiment, for I was posted lieutenant the 8th of August, and received pay from that time, and did duty in the regiment, but the ensigns that were in the regiment before me, take post of me. Mr. Cardinall [Cardonell] promised to antedate my commission, which if he had done, I now had been one of the oldest lieutenants. I hope I have behaved myself in the regiment as a gentleman ought. My Colonell I believe will do me all the favour he can. If my Lord Duke will give me a brevet as Captain, if there be action as expected, I may get a company in this regiment, or in some of the old ones: which if you please, when you think convenient, you may request of his Grace: I doubt not but he will grant it.

1705, November 20. Suckley in Worcestershire.—Heigham Coke to Thomas Coke in the Exchequer Office in Westminster.

Having never as yet in my time had any relation in any considerable post at Court besides yourself, and being destitute of friends at this time, I now presume upon you to beg a small request at your hands, that you'll use your interest with the Queen, or some of the Privy Council to keep me off from being High Sheriff for the county of Worcester, my name being first in the paper of Sheriffs in the Exchequer. There being a Baronet of 4,000*l.* per annum next in the paper, who is much better qualified for that office; and I having but a small estate, and my wife being dead but some months ago, my house this year being the house of mourning, I hope I may be excused. Pray, cousin, do what you can for me with some of the lords of your acquaintance, or some of the great people at Court, and you'll infinite oblige him who is, sir, your most affectionate kinsman and faithful humble servant to command. If you please to favour me with a line or two, direct for me, to be left at the post house in Worcester.

1705, November 28. Ilam.—G. Prendcourt to Thomas Coke, at his house in Park Place, St. James's Street, London.

Never in my lifetime had I such a task as Mr. Festin's tunes did give me, for they being set for a hautbois, I was obliged to transpose 'em for the most part, and at last I did overcome the difficulty. They'll be finished within three weeks, and perhaps sooner. It is the question now, if you'll have them transcribed into books, or in loose papers; and when they are done, if I shall send them to London or leave 'em at Melbourn. I have a great desire to know from you, sir, whether the Sonatas are liked, and if the Cascada and the rest are pleased. If so, I have added more things to them, and composed two new sets to them; so that they'll make together a number which will fill a book almost. And if you think it worth the while, I'll write 'em out and send 'em to you, for to be writ out fairly. I shall stay at Captain Port's till Wednesday next. My humble respects, if you please, to the ladies and your brother.

1705, December 5. Bramcoat.—Sir R. Burdet, Bart., to Thomas Coke, at the House of Commons, Westminster.

. . . We in these parts have so melancholy a prospect of being drained of all our money by the extraordinary taxes that fall upon us, that I am persuaded it will be difficult for my neighbours to pay them for this year. We have meat and drink sufficient, but we can receive but little money, and consequently we cannot pay much. This is the melancholy condition we are in and amongst others your servant.

1705, December 18. Derby.—John Lowe to Thomas Coke, a Member of Parliament, in or near Westminster, London.

Had I not been importuned by some of my acquaintance, your particular friends when the elections were for this county, I should not have given you this trouble: and truly I think the request very reasonable. 'Tis only that you'll use your best interest with some of your chief friends that an Act of Grace, or Free Pardon may be passed this Session; because I have not heard if this Queen ever passed one yet, which has been usually done by other Princes. This would infinitely oblige several persons to my knowledge. Direct your letter to me to be left at the post house in Derby.

1705, December 20. Bosch.—Captain Richard Pope to Thomas Coke.

I was in hopes to have kissed your hands at London before this time, but Colonel de Sibourg having done me the honour to have me here to command the regiment (a thing as little my inclination as my interest) has debarred me of it. We want as many recruits as last year, which we should never have been able to have got through, without the extraordinary charity of your House, which we hear (in general) has been very ample to us: but nobody has been so kind as to let me know the particulars yet. We have now the pleasure to fancy the distemper is over amongst our horses, very few having died within this three weeks, and those brought it with them out of camp. Pray God send we don't go into Germany to fetch it again. I cannot forbear giving you an account that Mr. Sibourg has so far disobliged my Lord Duke of Marlborough, that he will hardly speak to him or look at him. If I could I do not think it proper here to tell you how this has happened. I am very sorry for it for my own sake, and the regiment; and was very unwilling to mention anything of it here, till I considered it was necessary you should know it, to avoid giving into something too readily that spleen may dictate.

1705, December 26. (Derby.)—F. Turner to Thomas Coke, a Member of the Honble. House of Commons, at his house in St. James's Place, Westminster.

I received yours by the last post wherein you are pleased to mention an objection that somebody has made that I have never a convenient dining room above stairs. The truth is my Lady Shore had never a dining room below stairs, and so was forced to make use of a chamber, of necessity, which I shall not be obliged to do: and everybody knows a dining room below stairs is more convenient. And my Lady Shore has viewed my house and owns that mine is more convenient than hers ever were, and is much my friend, and would serve me in anything she can, and resolves not to lodge the Judges: else I would not have interceded for it. I am sure, whoever he is that makes the objection is my enemy and can assign no reason in the world for his objection. My rooms are larger and better in every respect than my Lady Shore's, which my Lady doth and will own. But I believe it's Mr. Dodson makes this objection because he would not have the Judges lodge at the same place where he is: but he is mistaken, for if occasion require, I can have a dining room above stairs. But I am sure they will be well pleased with that below.

1705–6, January 21.—Richard Hoare to Thomas Coke.

The writings of your estate that is in mortgage to me having been examined by several lawyers, on behalf of gentlemen that have promised to lend you a further sum of money, and all of them in conclusion refusing to accept of the security, gives me just reason to believe there is a defect in it. . . . In your letter of 28th December you promised to pay the money on Wednesday following: and being disappointed so often occasions me to think that if it should please God to take away your life I may be put to a great deal of trouble and charges. Therefore I am advised to have recourse to the judgment you gave me so soon as privilege will permit. Sir, I having a great respect for you, makes me give you this timely notice. I know you have friends that can supply you with this money, therefore let me desire you to make use of them.

1705–6, February 2. (Derby.)—W. Turner to Thomas Coke in St. James's Place.

Inclosed is a letter from my Lady Shore to my Lord Chief Justice Trevor on my behalf, which I thought convenient to send unsealed that you might see it before it was delivered. I am infinitely obliged to you for your last letter. Mrs. Wilmott hath taken my Lady Every's house: but the sheriff, to serve a turn this Assizes, would lodge the Judges in two of the little houses, that are small apartments from that house, which have no manner of conveniencies, either for cellar, dining, or lodging, merely to do me a prejudice. The under sheriff is a young man, whose name is Heanes of Ashbourne: but he will not be in London before the end of next week, and he must then wait upon the Lord Chief Justice to give him a Calendar of the prisoners to be tried. After you have read my Lady Shore's letter, be pleased to seal it up and let some of your servants carry it to my Lord.

1705–6, February 11. Bramcoate.—Sir R. Burdet, Bart., to Thomas Coke at the House of Commons, Westminster.

. . . Your sisters remembering me I took very kindly, but am incapable of expressing the respect I have for them. Most of our country are concerned to observe the Parliament are now rising without doing anything that can be pretended either to their ease or advantage. Money may be given: where the advantage will be I cannot foresee. The case of the people of England looketh unfortunately in the opinion of our country and also of your servant.

1705–6, March 15. Lindsey House, Westminster.—("Parson") David Thomas to the Honble. Thomas Coke, at his house in St. James's Place.

I humbly beg leave to trouble your Honour this once (the last time) more. I know very well it is the way of all these fine gentlemen that belong to the Courts of Princes never to deny to anyone anything that is asked of 'em: so that one cannot know whether one's request is agreeable to them or not from their answers, which are all the same in every case. But when any gentleman unmolested, unasked, unsought to, shall of his own accord offer to serve an old acquaintance, then one is apt to believe there may be dependence on such persons, let the manner of the place to which they belong be never so refined, so peculiar and delicate. Accordingly, sir, my Lord Abingdon sent me last year to thank your Honour for offering so graciously of your own accord to speak to Mr. Nicholas in my behalf; and he again sent me back to tell your Honour you had it in your power to show kindness directly and altogether from yourself to Mr. St. Johns, concerning the new raised regiments. Your Honour remembers that you promised me the utmost. You know very well, sir, how it was performed. Notwithstanding this rejection, I did presume to wait upon you again this year, upon the occasion of a vacancy in Colonel Churchill's regiment of Marines. You know, sir, you promised to act in my concerns forthwith, and to send me word how it went. I had more early notice of the vacancy than anyone; and if your Honour had early applied, I could not well have failed of success: or if you had early denied me (which had been the next greatest kindness) then I could have applied elsewhere, and possibly it might not have wanted success. But I never heard one word from you from that time to this hour. I humbly beg leave to signify two things to your Honour, and that will be all. This place being a thing consistent with my fellowship, and in the nature of it almost a sinecure, it was the thing of the world which I did desire, and had set my heart upon: and it was as much to so mean a man as I am, and to one in my poor circumstances, as your Honour's great place in the Exchequer is to you, and consequently the disappointment not a little. And that therefore, secondly, your Honour has been the occasion of (so far) the undoing of sir your most humble servant.

1705–6, March 18. Derby.—Thomas Bott, Mayor, to Thomas Coke, Member of the Honble. House of Commons, at his house at St. James Place, London.

I had the honour as well as the felicity to receive your worship's most kind and obliging letter. This comes to acquaint your Honour that the troops did remove from Derby on Saturday morning last; but it's the common discourse that they are to return to us this next Thursday: which if it lies in your Honour's power (as it's verily believed) I would in the name of my neighbours the Innkeepers (who is all the losers by them, as I believe) humbly crave the favour at your hands that, if they are to return to us, for their speedy removal from Derby. For without any flattery I write it; that the poorer sort of the inn, or the house, keepers are almost ruined by them: and having the good assurance from your Honour's letter, of doing all in your power to serve the town, I do not in the least doubt thereof, but fully rely thereon. Pray, honoured sir, pardon my prolixity.

Coke MSS.

1706, March 27. (Kings Newton).—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, at his house in St. James's Place, London.

Now the Parliament is over, I make bold to acquaint you that I do suspect you go on at much higher rates and prices than formerly: and I suspect they go on heedless. 'Tis you that must be the paymaster, and therefore I very much desire that you would see to all the bargains. The rates at London Bridge &c. will not do in our country. You will certainly think me very impertinent to concern myself in your affairs. I have no other way to be grateful for your repeated obligations, than to shew a zeal for your good and welfare. Yesterday Mr. John Burdett entered the marriage list at Griesely [Gresley] Church. Pray my most humble service to your honourable neighbours of Calke.

1706, April 5. Derby.—John Beresford, Henry Gilbert, Michael Burton to Thomas Coke, in St. James's Place, London.

About six or seven years ago one John Tatum was impressed for a soldier in the Earl of Orrery's regiment, and turned over to Lieut. Hixall. The case is thus. Tatum perhaps had formerly been guilty of sometimes killing a hare, which had given some umbrage to a gentleman in the neighbourhood of Wirksworth: but at the time of his impressing was reformed, and actually a hired servant to one Mr. Hutchinson, one of the eminentest lead dealers in our County. The man was very diligent and absolutely necessary to his master. The matter was so managed that the persons who ordered him to be taken up did not think it convenient to bring him before the Justices of Wirksworth Hundred, but to those of another Hundred, viz. Morleston, Sir Charles Pye, Mr. Lowe and Mr. Cotchett, so that his master and other people had not an opportunity to show that he was not within the meaning of the Act. Now this man is not only a great loss to his Mr. Hutchinson, but also to us who have subscribed this letter to you; being engaged in the drawing of some lead works of great consequence which Tatum formerly worked at, and by whose direction we can almost only depend upon to succeed. Our suit to you is that you will make application to the Duke of Ormond for this man's discharge, he being now in the Earl of Orrery's regiment in garrison in Ireland. Captain Trott will take care of the order of discharge for us.

1706, May 10. Ashborne.—John Beresford and Michael Burton to Thomas Coke.

We received your kind letter relating to John Tateham's discharge, who is a labourer so useful and wanting amongst the miners, especially the sough masters (in which art he excels) that we were obliged on their behalf to solicit earnestly for him again; and are very thankful for your intercession. We remain easy and secure that you will find out the most fitting season and methods to bring our Yorkshire Petition to effect. We have had a rumour of late that my Lord Stamford was likely to be restored in the Duchy: how far that might affect this matter, or other dangers arise in the way, we must wholly submit to your clearer judgment.

1706, May 27. Christ Church, Oxford.—W. Stratford to Thomas Coke. COKE MSS

. . . . You may now have leisure to finish your fine gardens, and when they are done you may sit in security under your own vines and figtrees. I believe you have work cut out for some years. When your gardens are to your mind, you will not long endure the eyesore of your old house. I suppose this fine seat is designed only to please yourself, for as to any design you may have on any lady there can be need of nothing but your own person and address. I long to see your picture up in my lodgings: the copy of an original that is so powerful may have too its influence, and tempt some fair one to a place where I can never hope to see them without so strong a charm. The ladies tell me you are still very hard upon me. I hope in this time of joy, you are in good humour at least, if not in charity (that indeed is a Christian duty) and that I may desire an Act of Oblivion for no transgressions that I know of. I hope I may prevail on the good ladies of Bucklebury to speak to you in my behalf. I would persuade myself that you would not deny their intercession.

1706, June 2. Christ Church, Oxford.—W. Stratford to Thomas Coke.

I hope the books are safe. I did not expect them by any merchant ship: they will come I believe with my friend in the pacquet boat. And if he should be carried into Dunkirk, if it continue in the French hands, I believe he will have interest enough to secure this cargo. If my Lord Marlborough should take Dunkirk, when they are there, I hope you will claim what belongs to you. Don't think, Sir, that I won't see Melburn before I am Bishop of Durham. If I should take your hint, you might be pretty sure of never being troubled with me: but I hope to say grace to you many a time there, before I shall bless you in it. If you will but give me security that I shall continue here, I will sign a release of my further expectations. You have voted us safe. As you are men of honour, I hope you will think yourselves obliged to make good your own vote: it will be your interest too to do it. Should I be dislodged hence, I must come amongst my old masters, and be quartered upon you by turns. Sir, I dare meet you at Bucklebury, and I will most certainly wait upon you when I hear you are there. I hope too you will be tempted to see Blenheim this summer. If you are I am sure you must bait at Christ Church. I will do what I can to keep the College cool in this warm weather, that the honour I desire may not be to your prejudice elsewhere.

(1706), June 2. Camp at Meerlebeck near Ghent.—Captain Richard Pope to Thomas Coke.

I should have given you sooner an account of our famous battle at Ramelie, near Tirlemont, if I had not been detached with a party of a thousand horse and two thousand grenadiers to secure a passage on the Scheldt, commanded by Duke Wurtemberg: but the enemy were so kind to abandon it as well as the town of Ghent. Major-General Rosse is sent with a body of horse and dragoons to summon Bruges yesterday, which I believe will surrender immediately, the French having left no garrison in it. We talk of forming the siege of Oudinarde, and hope to be able to undertake Ostend and Newport before the enemy is reinforced sufficient to make head against us. The confusion is still as great in their army as can be imagined. The common people of the Low Countries seem very much rejoiced at the change: the priests and gentry but very reserved. The French court bullies pretend to reinforce Coke MSS. their army so as to drive us out of the country: where they will find regular troops enough I cannot think. The Walloons and Spaniards would desert them, if they could: and the Bavarians are quite tired with braving French insolence, and would do the same if they knew where to go. They left the town of Ghent without ever giving directions to the magistrates what to do: and the whole management of their affairs seems to be a scene of infatuation. On the other side, every one that is not prejudiced must allow my Lord Duke acted the part of a very great general in making a feint upon the right, which obliged them to reinforce their left with twenty squadrons, and he at the same time drew all his horse, except twenty-seven squadrons, from his right to the left, and attacked their right with near a hundred squadrons. They were superior to us in number of battalions and squadrons, but I believe their's not so strong. We pass the Scheldt tomorrow.

1706, June 14. N.S. Camp at Arseelf (?)—J. Brydges to Thomas Coke.

Yours of the 24th May came safe to my hands, whilst I was at Antwerp to wait on my Lord Duke in his return from the Hague. I am very much obliged to you for your kind congratulation in it, and the satisfaction you are pleased to express at my having received no harm, is such a mark of friendship that I shall endeavour to deserve it as long as I live. My Lord Duke was received at Antwerp in the most solemn manner, and with the highest marks of respect they could possibly shew him, having for this end searched their records: and whatever was done upon the like occasion to any sovereign Prince, they did so to his Grace. There was one piece of ceremony which was odd enough—viz. the magistracy of the town marching before him with lighted flambeaux (though in the middle of the day) which is looked upon as the greatest mark of honour they can shew, and which they seldom, or ever, have bestowed upon their Dukes of Brabant. My Lord hath ordered a detachment of five English regiments, viz. Temple's, Stringer's, Lalo's, Farinton's, and Mackartney's, and Mr. Overkirk marcheth with 25 battalions of the Dutch to invest Ostend tomorrow. They will be joined by those Mr. Ross hath with him about Bruges, and the rest of the army will march in two or three days after them. My Lord Duke received your letter to him very kindly, and intends to thank you himself for it.

1706, June $\frac{13}{24}$. Ronsselaer.—Duke of Marlborough to Thomas Coke, M.P.

I should be ashamed of acknowledging so late your kind congratulations on our happy success here, if I did not asure myself that your friendship, which I have experienced on so many other occasions, will now excuse me, that I have by a constant hurry of business been hindered from thanking you sooner for your kind expressions and good wishes. I dare not defer it any longer for fear of falling under the suspicion of being wanting to the true estime wherewith I am, Sir, your most obedient humble servant.

1706, June 22. Bretby.—Earl of Chesterfield to Thomas Coke, M.P., at St. James's Place.

. . . Since my coming down I have been free from the gout, but yet for the most part indisposed as I use to be: and now my daughter is gone from me I am become a perfect hermit, for nobody can live a more solitary life. And since you are pleased to mention my gardens, I will tell you that I was never less pleased with them, for my orange trees are almost spoiled, as having neither fruit nor blossoms, nor hardly any leaves: and the ponds of water I made for my waterworks have lost all their water. These things might be counted disasters to a person who sets up his rest in the country, as much as greater matters to a person who is in the affairs and bustle of the world. But in my opinion there is so little of that which men call happiness to be found anywhere, that all conditions are almost alike, and I am sure must have the same ending. The last night my son came to me from Scarborough, and is so extremely deaf that I could not but be sorry as well as pleased to see him. I hope that neither the public nor your private affairs will detain you long in town, for there is great want of your directions at Melborne, and your company is always desired by your most affectionate father.

1706, July 15. Valencia.—George Keightley to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Square, London.

Since fate hath ordered our long stay in these parts, I only bless myself with the thought of being so happy as to see one, who I have so many obligations to return to; which I hope, since God has protected me hitherto. There is no great danger, but my wishes will come to effect. My design was to give you a small account of the siege of Barcelona, as soon as the French had raised it: but my Lord Peterborough, not knowing the motion of the enemy, commanded Colonel Southwell's regiment to march forthwith to Lerida a strong garrison upon the frontiers of Catalonia, to stay there till further orders. Now my Lord has sent an order for our regiment to march to this place. But our stay here, I believe, will be very short, for all Catalonia has declared, all Valencia and Alicant, and most of the other parts of Spain. My Lord Galway at this time and his army is encamped half a league of this side of Madrid: and the gentlemen of that place has sent to King Charles to make all the haste he possibly can. When the French marched from Barcelona they was obliged to leave 107 pieces of brass cannon, 5,000 barrels of powder, flour for their whole army to serve a fortnight, 10,000 pair of shoes, besides arms and a great number of clothes. For their men, they lost, killed and wounded, 8,000 of their best men. I have kept a journal of our affairs, since our first arrival in Spain, but you have had it from better hands, and I will trouble you no more. Colonel Southwell gives his service to you, and told me that if I had occasion for anything, you would not let me want it: but I have received so many favours of that kind from you, that honour obliges me to be silent. Colonel Vachell, Lieut. Colonel to Colonel Southwell's regiment, and a very good friend of mine, and who has a great respect for you, has promised to deliver this letter.

(1706), August 26. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to Thomas Coke (in London).

Hearing you was gone to Mr. St. John's, I deferred writing. All your friends are ready to excuse the matter of writing if you would come in person, which is still the burden of the song with them. My Lady Harpur tells them you have stayed in expectation of an address, and it would make you smile to see how much they are put to it whether to take her in jest or earnest. My lady this day sets forward towards the Bath, which I hope she will find the good effects of. We dined on Saturday last at Knolehills to meet Lady Catherine and Mr. Clarke, who are both very well: my Lord Chesterfield threatens the keeping them at Bretby till he goes to town. I heard lately from Wing that Miss is very well. Your little gentlewoman here is very much improved with sucking asses milk, and fresh air. But we are all in danger by the temptation of your fruit, which we have in much greater abundance than we can dispense with ourselves; and therefore I have disposed of some to those of your neighbours that have no walls of their own. Some peaches of the same trees that you despised last year are excellent. Nectarines are also very excellently good this year; and there has been a few figs in great perfection. I hope to preserve half a dozen hanging on the tree for your tasting if you keep your word with us. Your gardener desired I would give you a description of the size and goodness of Sir Charles Owsley's plum, which was stark nought: it was a very wet time when it ripened which is all I can say in its behalf. But there is some peaches, which Mr. More says came from Brompton Park, which deserve commendation. Indeed your gardens are more than pleasant. And there is the plantation of elm arbor, which I am sure will surprise you by its growth. The greens in general are in a very thriving way this year, and with very little pains of watering. I suppose Mr. Cooke has been with you, and therefore I might have spared my account; but you know my infirmity of scribbling. I must add the reminding you of the poverty of your wine cellar. Your ale and cider have both been in such perfection that upon choice we have made the less use of wine ourselves: but some red wine must have been spent, and I have been forced sometimes to make use of your sack for our ladies. We have lived pretty retired at home this last week, many of our neighbours having entertained themselves at the horse race; and some are this week going to the Mansfield race. Sir George Parker won the first plate, and my Lord Granby won the last day's race. My sister is your servant, and your daughter gives her duty, and talks as much of your coming as the best of them.

COKE MSS.

1706, September 17.—E. C. [Sir Edward Coke] to Thomas Coke, in St. James's Place.

I received the favour of your letter with the most welcome news of the entire defeat of the French army in Italy. There remains nothing more than that the news from Spain should come confirmed to make this the most glorious campaign that ever was. These surprising victories may let the grand Louis see that the blood royal of France running in the veins of the Dukes of Orleans and Vendome does not form the hero wiser and braver, nor make him a greater favourite of heaven: and methinks the high compliments made to these gentlemen in their patents for Generals of the two Armies does not now sit upon them, nor their royal master, with so graceful an air. I am afraid we shall not have the honour of your company this year in the country, the winter season approaching: but I do not doubt but that so much as the charms of love, music and books can make one happy, you have not been less so this summer: and pray should I not have some reason for this belief, if I had been with you sometimes in your rural retirement. Sir, I have a request to make to you that you would please to apply yourself to Mr. Baron Price (who came our circuit) that he would give order to have my name left out of the list that is to be given to my Lord Keeper at this Michaelmas. I waited on Mr. Baron at Derby and dined with him, so if you please you may give him my service. I am to thank you for your favour of franking my letters.

1706, October 30. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, at his house in St. James's Place, London.

Mr. Fisher was speaking something to me about selling Gorsty Leys, as if there was upwards of 2,000*l.* in it. If so, 'tis my judgment to divide it into four haggs, and sell one hagg first, and so every year one, till all is sold. And I think that is as much as will be sold well in any one year. It will in four years be sold as much dearer as will answer more than the interest of the money. Your underwood must be cut up by Christmas of so much as you sell the timber off. You know Robert Littill went on board the Hampton Court with Sir John Leake. I perceive Sir John is come home on board the St. George. Pray enquire after him, because this spring, if all be well, entitles him to a midshipman, or higher.

1706, November 6. (Kings Newton.)—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, at his house in St. James's Place, London.

I was to see your ruins at the bridge. I think it must be till the spring, and then made another way and cheaper. If Mr. Fisher paid Jonathan for valuing [Gorsty Leys] as I suppose he did, the marking money will come to a great sum at 12*d.* per pound. So I think he should bargain with Jonathan about that for your advantage, because in the whole sale, it will come to 100*l.*, and better. I only give you a hint. Those that have the marking money must stand to the collecting the wood money, and hazard.

1706, December 2.—John Harpur to [Thomas Coke].

I am so very much solicited by Leonard Bacon's friends to write to you to make interest to save his life, that I could not avoid giving you this trouble. He was committed to Newgate last Tuesday for robbing a gentleman of a gold watch, as I am told. I know nothing more of his case, but hear he is in danger of losing his life. His friends are very numerous and of good degree in Derby: and if you will please to use your interest to save him, you will much oblige them as well as, Sir, your affectionate and humble servant.

1706, December 2.—Richard Husband to [Thomas Coke].

I was at Whitehall today, and got from the Signet Office a copy of the Privy Seal empowering Queen Catherine's Trustees to make a lease in reversion to Prowse for 40 years after the determination of Freeman's lease. But want the Sign Manual of King Charles 2, empowering his Queen's Trustees to make a lease of the premises to Ralph Freeman for 31 years after the expiration of 7 years granted to Col. Vernon. I am told the sign manual remains in the Paper Office at Whitehall, and that Mr. La Faye (it is the person who writes the Gazettes) has the custody of those papers. If the paper is there, you will yourself readily get a copy.

1706, December 23.—Michael Burton to [Thomas Coke].

. . . I am very sensible of the obstructions my Knaresborough affair has met with, notwithstanding your kind and repeated endeavours to serve me in it: and have therefore set my head to help that cripple over the stile; and if possible acquire some further premium for the services I shall propose. . . . I have never thought it criminal, with an unwearied diligence to follow after such measures as might honestly save me of the weight, which like that of original evil still depresses and sinks a man, in spite of all endeavour without the influential aid of a kind and regenerative friend, to set him upon a calm basis, with which 'tis too often true, Probitas laudatur et alget. Sir, ever since I had the honour to be known and favoured by you, I have upon all events met with that candour and kindness from you, which has for ever endeared me to you by the greatest personal affection, as well as respect and esteem in your public capacity. . . . This Sir has been the great motive, why I have been from time to time so very importunate with you in my former affairs, as I hope it will prevail with you to lay on a helping finger, and not see one so faithful to you suffer: but because it would be inexcusable to be wanting to myself by leaving any stone unturned that may accomplish my moderate desires, I have drawn up a scheme (which shall be produced when you command it) whereby I propose and will undeniably demonstrate that I can raise the Queen for ever an annual revenue of 25,707*l.* the raising whereof shall no ways prejudice or inconvenience the subject, but on the contrary will bring in and circulate amongst the public an annual income of 38,561*l.*: so that the whole to the Queen and Country will amount per annum to 64,268*l.* . . . Sir I beg you'll not slight this proposal as a shallow superficial thought, for I have laboured to bring it to perfection with a great deal of diligence. It has had the approbation (so far as it was proper for me to communicate it) of the most prudent and judicious of my country friends: the whole country will unanimously run in with it: and if it be completed will be for your interest on such a basis in your own country, that it will not be in the power of malice or calumny to oppose you. And as to my own particular, I desire no other reward for my service, but what shall be very moderate, and to be paid me out of that revenue I propose to raise, if my former affair must be denied me. . . . If I could obtain the Attorney General's place of the Duchy of Lancaster, I durst undertake in a few years time to double the revenue of that Duchy, for I have made the matter a great part of my study, and I know that revenue as to its management and mismanagement as well as any man whatsoever. I beg you will let me hear from you, because that will convince me that what I offer has some weight with you.

COKE MSS.

1706, Christmas Day.—Walter Burdett to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, at his house in St. James's Place, London. Free.

I think it the greatest civility to say the least to one in your post. Therefore only wish you a merry Christmas, and cry out first by complaining that you have not given me joy of my new honour of being chaplain to the Queen's Vice Chamberlain, and told me how I might entitle you upon a letter.

(1706), December 26.—John Beresford to Thomas Coke.

I am now troublesome to you on behalf of my brother Arderne, to beg your countenance to his Bill that lies before you. It was his father's misfortune to suppose he could do more than he took care to do, and so left my sister and three brothers unprovided for, besides sureties for considerable debts, amongst whom is your friend, the scribe. Now my brother Arderne is generously desirous to provide for all these occasions, and we do entirely confide in what he proposes. He has met with no difficulty of assent from anybody, but his father's friend and his own blood, Sir John Crewe, and all upon distaste about the Cheshire election. Sir John would have the glory in Cheshire of securing by his assent the payment of Sir John Arderne's debts and in a short limited time. Now my brother Arderne (who does as piously and worthily intend it as any man in England) would have the thanks of it, and reasonable time to take his best chapman, and not sell to disadvantage, all which we that are concerned do readily and reasonably allow. I take the freedom to tell you the whole story. I once mentioned to you the putting my cousin Henry Beresford of Doveridge amongst the Commissioners for Land tax. He is a very well principled honest gentleman, and hath a good estate among us: he is called to the bar, but loves a quiet life. Sir John Crewe is consenting at last. I only mentioned the thing to show how the malevolence of a party can affect and sour a man's temper. The Bill comes before the Committee on the 30th instant.

1706, December 31.—J. Pagett to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place.

This comes to intreat you to send me word by the bearer whether there will be a song performed before the Queen tomorrow, and if so, where and at what time of the day? Your information in this matter will oblige your very humble servant.

1706 (probably).—Thomas Coke, M.P., to the Duke of Marlborough.

My Lord I durst not trouble your Grace with a letter till you had some recess from the fatigues you had undergone [in] your long campaigne. But now I presume to hope a letter may not be troublesome, and that I may venture to congratulate your safe arrivall at the Hague, believing this will find your Grace arrived there from the army: in which every year you render them more oblidged to you for a larger frontier. And I wish they were so much their own friends as to lett their arms be guided by your Grace's happy conduct. Their wishes would then be crowned with what their fears have hitherto deprived them of, and wee here in England should have the pleasure of seeing Flanders and Brabant not such secure barriers to the French as they have hitherto been imagined. . . . .

1706-7, January 3. Alfreton.—Row. Morewood to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, London—frank.

Sir I lately received a letter from the Speaker of the House of Commons, directed to me as High Sheriff of the County of Derby, the copy whereof I send you that you may be acquainted with the contents thereof.

(Copy of the Speaker's letter.)

1706, December 24. From the House of Commons.

Sir the House of Commons having taken notice of the absence of several of their members, I am commanded to acquaint you with it, that you may give immediate summons to all the members of this House, Knights, Citizens and Burgesses within your county to attend their service in Parliament on Tuesday the 14th day of January next. The House of Commons intending to proceed further with all severity against all such of their members as shall then neglect their attendance. And you are to give an account of the receipt of this, and of what you have done thereupon unto Sir your humble servant,

J. Smith, Speaker.

(1707), August 2. (Melbourne.) Elizabeth Coke to [Vice-Chamberlain Coke].

. . . I heartily wish you success in what occasions your stay. I received a letter last night from Wing, which I have inclosed, notwithstanding you told me your design of going, which I hope you have not been prevented. I pleased myself with believing that if you went to Wing you would meet Lady Catherine Clarke: I know she would be extremely glad, as well as yourself, with the unexpected meeting. Your daughter Betty is very well, and some degrees improved in unluckiness since you saw her. . . . . I must not omit telling you how highly we have been favoured by the Curzon family, Sir Nathaniel himself, lady, sons and daughters all came about a fortnight since and dined with us: and since we all met again one day to dinner at Newton: and one evening Mr. John Curzon with cousin Burdett of Foremark came and supped with us, and he is extremely full of inquiry after his brother Coke's coming down. Mrs. Burdett has been most at Bramcote, so we have seen little of her; but my Lady Harpur is so obliging that we are very sociable neighbours. I don't know what to say of your gardens, but as I use to do, mighty pleasant and sweet, and as to the keeping, very few faults to be found, not but that when you come, you will find a great many things both in the gardens and out, that would be rectified by a master's eye over them. I was to see your ironwork, which is certainly very fine, and a great curiosity to see the manner of their doing of it. He says he shall now soon have finished it. The Great Pool stands very high of water, but the weeds are increased for it is almost entirely green over. I heard that there was a man came to the town, and offered to give five pounds for the flags and take them away himself. I own I thought five pounds not to be despised, especially to be eased of an inconvenience, and therefore, if you approve, I will inquire further into it. I am rich in beauties both of the great and small kind of hens, and pretty well for the number of Muscove ducks: but there is a great want of some tolerable convenience for both sorts. My Lady Harpur is set up for a hen housewife this year, my Lady Ferrers having given her a stock, and Mrs. Burdett also: but she has had such ill luck, she has begged a recruit from me. Yesterday was a race between my Lord Berkshire and cousin Robert Burdett upon Sinfelmore [Sinfin Moor] which drew most of the company together that are of this side the country. My cousin Burdett's horse won it two to one against him. And after this was over, a new match was made between Lord Berkshire, Lord Cullen, Mr. Warren, and Capt. that is at Derby, which Mr. Warren won. And the last, which I hear occasioned the most diversion, was a match between my Lady Harpur and cousin John Burdett, my Lady's little strawberry horse, and the mare of cousin John Burdett which you gave him: my Lady had the victory, by the fault of cousin Burdett's groom who got so far into the crowd he could not get out again. Dear brother, I fear I have quite tired you with my impertinence.

COKE MSS.

1707, September 11. London.—Sir John Stanley to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

Pursuant to your directions I send enclosed a Warrant for the Knight Harbinger, or his deputy, to provide lodgings at Newmarket, which I desire you will give Mr. La Roche, when you have signed it. And a list of the Gentlemen Waiters that my Lord Chamberlain may appoint their months of waiting. . . The letters to the Green Cloth, and Board of Ordnance for the waggons, shall be ready when my Lord Chamberlain comes to town. I desire you will mark on the paper the alterations my Lord would have in the list of those that sit at the Gentlemen Waiters table, and send it to me, that there may be no mistake, and I will prepare a warrant upon it. I have sent to Mr. Bracy to go into waiting. I hope you will prevail with my Lord to defer his suspension, till his new regulations be out, and then to keep to it strictly.

1707, November 5. Carlton.—G. Palmer to the Honble. Thomas Cook, Esq., at the Lobby of the House of Commons.

The generality of the gentry have recommended me to the freeholders [of Leicestershire] to represent them in Parliament. I desire your approbation and interest.

1707, November 10.—Ralph Docksey to the Rt. Honble. Thomas Coke.

I hear I am one of the three nominated to be sheriff for this County [Derby] which much surprises me, being very unfit to bear such an office . . . my estate being at best worth but about 300*l.* a year, 200*l.* of it settled on my wife; and the other 100*l.* a year, there is a debt of 1,000*l.* owing to Sir Nathaniel Curzon, so that the bearing of that office will, at this time, be the undoing of me, I having a numerous family, my wife being big of the thirteenth. This is to desire the favour of your interest to get me off. . . . I have desired my good friend Captain John Beresford of Ashborne to write to you in my behalf.

(1707 probably), Saturday, 12 o'clock. James Craggs to Thomas Coke.

I am sorry I could not have your company today to Windsor: the Controller cannot delay it till tomorrow. I have sent you four tickets which I fancy you'll be willing to dispose of for the encouragement of so hopeful a beginner.

Inclosed. Three small playing cards, having on the back of each "June 26th The Amorous Widow or the Wanton Wife. The Box. For the Benefitt of Miss Mountfort and Miss Evans," and an impression of a Roman head in red sealing wax.

1708, March 25.—Richard Husband to the Honble. Thomas Coke, Vice Chamberlain to the Queen's Majesty, at his house in St. James's Place.

Being at a Coffee house this morning, I read the written votes, which seem to say that a message came from the Lords to the House of Commons, that all proceedings in law written in the French tongue should be void. How far such votes, or when reduced into a law, will affect Acts of Parliament, written in the French tongue, I must refer it to you to consider, the Act 3 Henry 5, being in French, recited in the Auditor's Report. I beg you would direct your servant to get the letter I sent you directed to my son into the Earl Rivers bag: and if your leisure will permit you, to write two lines to Colonel Hill or Lieut. Colonel Clayton, in favour of him.

1708, May 17.—De Matveof (?) [Muscovite Ambassador] to M. le Vice Chambellan.

Ayant beaucoup de confiance dans votre amitié, dont j'ai vu des marques, et vous suis obligé infiniment, je prends liberté de vous faire incommodité par ma presente au sujet de la maison qui m'est accordée gracieusement par Sa Majesté la Reine. Il vous est connu, Monsieur, qu'on l'a louée il y a deja sept semaines, pour m'en faire jouir la possession, mais j'etois bien surpris de l'avoir vu avant hier dans un état qui ne promet pas l'accomplissement des meubles, et la restauration de l'office a moins de quatre semaines encore, si on s'empressera si doucement qu'on a fait jusqu'à present. Le tapissier Bedfort dit que ce n'etoit pas ses affaires, et qu'il ne se méloit que des meubles, moyennant son contrât. Au contraire le Maitre d'Autel (hotel) de Madame Clergis (Clarges?) assure que le même tapissier etoit obligé de faire la restauration. . . . . L'offre que dit tapissier m'a fait faire de lui resigner l'écurie en recompense de la restauration de l'office est un visible marque de son avidité, voulant que je disposasse si inconveniement de la bonté de la Reine, en lui laissant ce que j'aurai peutêtre besoin moi même à l'avenir pour mon equipage. C'est pourquoi, sachant bien qu'on peut remédier en tout ça par vos ordres, je vous prie amiablement et instamment de vouloir commander au dit tapissier qu'il fasse son devoir, et dépéche de mettre cette maison dans un êtat accomplie par des meubles et la restauration de l'office, en quittant son profit inconvenient, âfin que je puisse jouir de la grace de sa Majesté la Reine, dont je [suis] dépourvu si induement jusqu'à l'heure qu'il est. Et comme la justice de ma presente demande est tres claire, il ne me restera que de me recommander à la continuation de vôtre amitié, et de vous prier de me fournir les occasions pour vos services, que j'executerai avec autant de promptitude, que je suis avec d'estime et de la passion, Monsieur, votre tres humble et tres obéissant serviteur.

COKE MSS.

1708, June 5.—H. Boyle to Mr. Vice Chamberlain Coke.

I received the honour of your letter of the 31st of May, and according to your commands have laid before the Queen, and am to acquaint you that her Majesty has no objection to your visiting or paying any civility to Marechal Tallard.

1708, September 8.—Endorsed by Vice Chamberlain Coke "Colonel Sandys."

Waiting for Her Majesty coming out of Council, finding the Groom of the Privy Chamber not at the door, nor near it, and the Queen coming out, I ran to the Privy Chamber and called for the candle: then I went back again expecting it. Afterwards I saw his man coming into the room with the candle. The Queen being so nigh, I bad him bid his master bring in the candle. The Queen being come out of the Council Room, and the Vice Chamberlain looking about (as I suppose) for the candle, the Groom went on the back of the company, and gave the Vice Chamberlain a little candlestick off one of the stands; so my duty was done by the Groom, and I know not who did it. Which business of giving the candle was decided in the late Lord Chamberlain's time—the Gentleman Usher to give the candle to the Vice Chamberlain, and the Groom to give it to us—which has been done ever since, and was thought a credit to the Groom. Formerly telling the Groom of the neglect, he told me not anybody minded what I said, and that he valued not of a farthing what I said, and that he knew not whether it was his business to give me the candle, or no, and that he was to wait in the Privy Chamber. But that is when no other business is required, and this is all they do very nigh, besides seeing their man light the candles, which if not done in order the Gentleman Usher is answerable for it: if so, 'tis very hard to suffer this. This happened in the Privy Chamber the next day before two Gentlemen of the Family. I forgave one of them on the like occasion, at the desire of several Gentlemen then at dinner. I suppose this was the reason he told me I was always making disputes. I cannot have disputes but on these occasions with them; when the giving the candle was decided on a dispute. I suppose he told Mr. Harrison it was below his post, and that it was never done formerly: but we have obeyed ever since. I have reason to say this, for he told me the same thing.

(1708, probably), September 26. Bretby.—Lady Catherine Clark to Thomas Coke, M.P., at his house in St. James's Place, London.

I do esteem myself very happy, dear brother, in the continued marks of your kindness. . . . My father orders me to return you his humble thanks for your letter . . . We hope soon to see him out of his chamber, and then shall think of returning home, though my father is so much alone that he is pleased to tell us he cannot well be without us. We still live in hopes of seeing you in Derbyshire, but wherever you are, I am sure my best wishes will ever attend you. Sir Edward Littleton with one of his sons and my brother Stanhope are now here, which makes me design taking that opportunity of waiting upon Mrs. Cokes tomorrow, for though I have lately been there I cannot too often have that satisfaction. We have not much news except of a late dispute between Lord Culling and Lady Bellamount, which occasioned the first to take his Lady from Swarson in a huff. But we hear there is like to be an accommodation through Mr. Harpur and Mr. Warren's endeavours. I suppose you hear of the confusion there has been at Derby about interest for elections. They say Sir Thomas Parker did entreat Lord James Cavendish (who was there) to make his exit, for that his presence was like to do more hurt than good, so that his Lordship took his advice and is gone. Mr. Clark is your humble servant, and I must say that I look upon the continuance of his friendship to you as a particular mark of his kindness to me, which I thank God he is in every respect ready to show, and convinces me upon all occasions that I am as happy as any lady can possibly be in the change of my condition . . . .

1708, September 28. Spithead.—Sir George Byng to Mr. Secretary Burchet.

Lieutenant Collier, who was this day tried at a Court Martial relating to the loss of the Thomas and Catherine smack, when he was lieutenant of the Severn and taken into France, has been twice taken and is now only on his parol. This case (if you please to inquire into it) will seem very hard with an officer of fortune, who has only the service to depend on. I would pray leave to recommend him to the favours of his Royal Highness's Council. I am entirely a stranger to him: but justice obliges me to recommend such officers as fall in my way, whose characters are so fair as this gentleman's seems to be.

[Indorsement by Vice Chamberlain Coke. "He has received but 13 "months pay during five years, by reason of his having been twice "taken and his last misfortune."]

1709, June 7.—W. Stratford to Vice Chamberlain Coke.

The inclosed list has the best editions of those books you were pleased to command me to enquire after. The Louvre edition of Tasso for beauty and the pleasure of reading is preferable to any other. The Genoa edition is most valued by the critics. In the other books the editions in Italy I think are most valued. I never met with any edition of the Filli de Sciro but that of Ferrara. The renewal of the war will prevent my having some so soon as I hoped for from France; but I shall write to Leers (?), when he completes my set of the Louvre editions, to send me a Louvre Tasso for you.

1709, July 12. Windsor Castle.—Duke of Somerset to the Rt. Honble. Mr. Coke, Vice Chamberlain.

Her Majesty hath commanded me to let you know that according to the Lord Chamberlain's warrant the Jewel Office hath provided two gold cups to be run for at Richmond and Black Hamilton; and that as the one is already ordered to be delivered to Mr. Darcy, the other is to be delivered to Mr. Marshall by your order to Mr. Charlton.

(1709 October 17, postmark.) (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to the Rt. Honble. the Vice Chamberlain at his lodgings at the Palace at St. James, London.

I have been in daily expectation I might have the good occasion of writing to give you joy: but have the melancholy one of telling you we have lost our kind friend and neighbour, Mr. Hardinge, who died on Thursday evening. I was with him a very little time before he died. He desired very kindly and particularly to be remembered to you, and with great assurance how kind his intentions was always to you. He pleased himself with hopes he would have seen your happiness in your intended change, and shewed the greatest tenderness imaginable to your little ones, and said he thought if they had a mother, she could not but be kind to them. I had a great many instances of his friendship upon all occasions, with the greatest respect and honour that was possible. And at the last he put so great a trust in me as before me to tell his daughters he had left them to none but their brother, only that he required both him and them to be advised by me in all they did. I was with poor Mrs. Hardinges some nights in their extremity ; I came home to-day to look after affairs at home, but design to return this evening to them, and stay till Monday that the funeral is over. He had settled all his affairs in the greatest order and exactness that could be, so that in this last illness he had nothing to do but compose himself for another world, which he did with so much resignation and patience under the greatest extremity, as spoke him the same worthy man he lived. He has left his daughters a thousand pounds a piece; his son a very clear and good estate besides. He had directed his son to give his sisters their table for one year, that they might not be scattered about of a sudden. Some other little legacies of mourning, and kind remembrances to particular friends, of which number he has made me one, is all the will of one, who I think can scarce be equalled in his loss to his friends and country. I acquainted my Lady Catherine Clarke with what you said about the jewels. Mr. Clarke is not willing to meddle with them : nor do I find my Lord Chesterfield will say anything in it: So I believe you will be obliged to continue them where they are.

OKE MSS.

1709, October 22. (Melbourne.) — Elizabeth Coke to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

Dear Brother I would not have omitted the first opportunity of giving you joy, had not my sister Fanshawe done it: and I am satisfied I need not make use of much expression in what you're so well assured as my best wishes to you and yours, particularly in what is so material to your chief happiness in this life ; and I extremely rejoice that we have so just occasion to hope will prove so, as to give you all the satisfaction this world can afford. Your daughters both desire their humble duty may be accepted by yourself and their new mother, who they have great joy in the thoughts of, and are very full of great resolutions how good they will be, and I may answer for them as far as their years will allow. And that, dear brother, I may be no hindrance to the putting your affairs as soon as possible in the method you think most proper, I will again repeat my resolution of being of no further trouble in your family, after I have delivered up my little charge. This to any but between you and myself might appear the saying—no—before the being asked : but I have so long received such kindness from you as to convince me I might still receive more than would be reasonable for me to accept. You may be sure I have not determined myself to any place or method without asking your approbation. All I can say is, it cannot be more private (with credit) than will suit my inclinations as well as my little income. Our neighbours at Newton, in their trouble, rejoice with you, and particularly Mrs. Mary Hardinge desired I would, with her humble service to you and respects to your lady, wish you all the joy imaginable, and says she is sure as far as your good wishes can mitigate their affliction, they are sure of them. Indeed they are very much to be pitied, for few or none had such a father to lose. But he hath not omitted any necessary care for them, and they have a brother who appears to have that worth, as to make it up as far as possible to them, and has in this time of extremity carried it with all the prudence and tenderness to them imaginable. He buried his father last Sunday in the evening in a very decent private manner in Peers Chapel in Melborn Church. There was about sixteen of his most particular friends of the neighbourhood, with the freeholders and his own tenants of this parish; who had all what was usual upon these occasions, but all with the least show or pageantry that could be, according to the desire of him that it was done for, who must always live in the hearts and memories of all that knew him. My cousin Burdett and his lady begin their journey to London on Monday next. Sir Robert Burdett has been much hurt by a fall from his horse, but is upon the recovery. I fear the length of this may prove unseasonable, but you know the infirmity of your most affectionate sister and servant. My cousin Walter Burdett is in great raptures of your mare, and has been very earnest ever since she came down that he might have the keeping her for you: you know you can't oblige him more, than by accepting his courtesy.

(1709), November 1. Windsor Park.—Duchess of Marlborough to Honble. Mrs. Coke.

As I was going into my coach att St. Albans I received the favour of your leter, dear Mrs. Coke, and as soon as I come out of it I give myself the pleasure of writing to you and asuring you I shall bee very glad that you will make use of anything, or everything, that is call'd mine att Kinsington. You have said a great deal of your obligations to me more than they deserve; for I think there is no great matter in recommending a very agreeable young woman of a very good family to bee a maid of honour. But some natures are obliged with anything, and some with nothing, and upon this occasion I can't help regreting that one in the Queen's family (but indeed she is a very great lady) used part of my lodgings att Kinsington without any kind of difficulty or ceremony: and when I took the liberty to take notice of it, she removed her things and pretended she did not know they were my lodgings. And yet after that she was pleased to make use of them again, which was a proceeding perfectly new, and what in noe kind I had ever heard of before, but her edducation has not been the best, and all that she does is suitable to it. I have made this letter longer than is reasonable, or than I intended it, but you must consider me as a country lady and alone; and if Windsor is as I left it, you are not much crowded. I am with all the sincerity imaginable, dear Mrs. Coke, your most faithfull and most humble servant.

1709–10, January 2. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to the Rt. Honble. Thomas Coke at his lodgings at the Palace of St. James, London.

. . . You won't expect any news from this place, but we thank you for that you send us; especially the Tattlers have a late been very entertaining, and between the hopes of hearing of you, and reading the Tattler, your daughters are impatient for the hour of the post.

(1709–10), January 30. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to [Vice-Chamberlain Coke].

I received yours with orders to pay Beck. Quinton. Mr. Fisher made me disappoint your tenants by setting a time to meet them a week since, and is not yet come. If he does not come soon I must be obliged to give you trouble in several little particulars, which will be tedious to relate. I cannot say that Misses are well, both having great colds. Miss and Master Harpur have both been ill, which stays my Lady a week longer that she designed. Your daughter by her sheep and some presents for playthings has intrusted me with her purse till it is come to twenty pounds, which I suppose will compass two tickets in this State Lottery; which if you approve the venture of it, I have desired brother John, all under one trouble, to put in for them with some other I was to desire of him. Poor Miss Betty comes in with her one guinea, being all she is worth; which was given her by my cousin Walter Burdett to make up the sum. I am brewing some ale stronger than the last, concluding you will like it better. I thought you would want it by that time this is ready to send, which will be a fortnight.

1710, June 3. Chilcote.—Elizabeth Coke to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

Yesterday your daughters and I came to this place, where we found my Lady [Catherine Clark] very well, only in some care, till she can hear from Mr. Clarke, who went on Monday last for London by Dr. Coke's advice, to take directions for his health in town. I hope before this you have met, and I would have given you notice of his coming: 'twas so sudden a resolution. I did not know of it sooner. On Wednesday I was obliged to dine at Trusley, when it was designed we should have been twenty-two of our name, but seventeen I thought pretty well. My Cousin Coke desired you would be assured of all the service in his power, and said Mr. Pole of Radbourn had been with him and assured him whatever lay in him to do should be in your service, the next election. And now I am to come with a request to you from my Cousin Coke in behalf of one of his brother Ballindines, who was brought up a sea surgeon, but now come to great misfortunes, and that my cousin understands by your place you had the power of several disposals, and that he should take it for the greatest obligation if you could procure anything towards a livelihood for his brother. My cousin said he would leave it wholly to you, and I believe the necessity is so great that nothing would come amiss. Some years since we was informed by one from his wife of their poverty, which is all I know of them, only that she was a very ordinary body he married. In my way from Trusley I made a visit to Twyford, and the Sheriff [Mr. John Harpur] came in to us: he said he was sure there was an absolute necessity of your coming, and that very soon. He went on with saying how disunited a country we now are: the business of Dr. Sacheverel had not only done ill in this, but would bring all countries to make a trial in relation to the next member they chose to that purpose; and that he could assure me that they had it from your near neighbour that you was not only against him, but that you had taken several opportunities to show yourself, and to speak and that very hotly, and when you need not have done it, against him; and this was my Lord Ferrer's information. I said politics was not belonging to me to judge in, but that I thought if the gentlemen you served was dissatisfied in anything you did for them, they might find a friendly and honourable way of letting you know their dislike, without taking the advantage of your absence (which they knew your service to the Queen obliged you to) by any underhand proceedings. He said I was right: and he would tell me further, that he himself was assured that you had done him a very particular disservice, which was, that you had directly been the means of his being kept on for Sheriff, and that his answer to them was that he would say or do nothing till he had known the truth of it from yourself. I suppose the same person was the author of this as the other. My cousin said further that he believed there was no particular person pitched of to join with Mr. Curzon as yet, but he could tell within one who it would be; at least to two. One was Vernon, and he not named was the person I am staying with [Mr. Clark] I suppose. He said the secret was lodged between my Lord Scarsdale, Mr. Curzon, and perhaps there might be one more. He spoke as if Mr. Curzon had rather declined the coming to having any named to oppose you, but that if the gentlemen met, they should dispose of him as they pleased. My cousin said further he was sorry that all your friends on the other side the country would be against you. I said, the Ashbourn side? He said, yes; but he must except one—Captain Beresford. Nay said he, I have heard every one of Mr. Vice-Chamberlain's friends say either that they will be against him, or cannot be for him, but one, which he repeated several times over; and I since find he meant your nearest neighbour [Mr. John Hardinge]. I have been very sorry they have obliged me to open my mouth upon these occasions, but I have truly told you all I have said. I could not tell but it might be some service you should know how they stand affected. I dined yesterday at Dunisturp where my cousin [John Burdett] told me, the day before being Swarson meeting, Mr. Curzon had desired him to assure me he did not design any separation from you. My cousin said there was not a word of politics amongst them, as was expected, but all hug and kiss; and Sir Nat. [Curzon] was not amongst them. The first great meeting at Kedlestone, which was agreed to be to return Mr. Curzon thanks for the great services done his country this last year, Sir Nathaniel looked very down upon them all dinner, which as soon as done, he walked off and never saw any of the company the day again, and I believe he does not approve the present heats and confusions. But they have a great time to cool in. 'Tis alleged, by way of persuasion that you have been their representative a great while and that others that are equally capable ought to have their turns. Lord Scarsdale has very lately pressed it afresh here, upon which a letter was writ, if you continued to stand they would not oppose: but upon this sudden resolution of going to London was not sent. . . . So 'tis hoped you will meet and a right understanding be continued.

1710, June 5. (Kings) Newton.—John Hardinge to Mrs. Coke.

Madam, Having so fair an opportunity I take the freedom that there may be no misunderstanding among friends, which perhaps my meeting the gentlemen at Swarston might not unreasonably raise, to declare my mind and beg the same, if you think fit, may be communicated to Mr. Coke. I'm sure my small interest shall never countenance any opposition. If I can't serve him, as 'tis difficult to steer betwixt friends, and not split upon one of them, I'll never do him any disservice. I thought, as I was assured, to meet purely to see my friends, and be merry, and to increase my small acquaintance in the country; but I find they will in a little time meet for something else, and they seem only to want a man to exercise their zeal for, which is so furious upon the Doctor's [Sacheverell] account. And there being so large an interval before a new Parliament, probably it may resolve into a better temper. Mr. Coke's presence I believe would startle some of them, though in the main they seem to be at present pretty unanimous, and have entered into a solemn league and covenant to meet at Derby. Though I may be backward in my expressions to my friends, I think I may say there's no one retains a more grateful acknowledgment of your kindness than I do, and for the family at Melbourne, I hope I may say that to the utmost of my power.

OKE MSS.

1710, June 20. Mellborn.—Alice Coke to Mr. Vice-Chamberlain Coke.

Dear Brother, I thought you might like to hear something concerning the proceedings of the gentlemen of the country meeting at Derby last Wednesday, which occasions me to write to you at this time, although I hope you will have it from better hands than mine, because I can't give a very perfect account of it. The meeting was resolved upon at Swarston at the club there the week before: and then it was proposed that that day they should enter into an agreement to have no dealings with any body at Derby that would not agree with them in their opinions of choosing of Parliament men, and that dissented from the Church of England. And when they met Captain Port offered a paper to them to sign to that effect, but very few liked of the motion, and it was refused signing. And afterwards Mr. Burton proposed an address to them which they agreed to sign, if they liked the contents of it, which they all did except Mr. Stanhope of Elverson, who told them there was some expressions in it contrary to his judgment, and therefore he would not set his hand to it; and Captain Port also refused the signing, as was supposed out of anger that his proposal was rejected. Mr. Curzon is desired to carry it up, which I suppose he will do very soon. My cousin J. Burdett and Mr. Harding was neither of them there, to shew their dislike to what they knew would be proposed. I hear there are some that have a mind to bring the gentlemen to an agreement to write to you by a general consent to desist from standing, and join with them in choosing one with Mr. Curzon: and this was thought would have been one proposition at last meeting, but I don't hear that it was, though it is certainly much laboured at, and the way that the angry party hopes to have take effect: and they are to continue their meeting at Swarston. My sister and nieces intend to be at home tomorrow. If I hear anything more of this matter I shall not fail of telling you.

1710, June 26. Melborne.—Elizabeth Coke to the Rt. Honble. Thomas Coke at his lodgings at the Palace of St. James, London.

I ought not longer to defer your satisfaction as to Mr. Har[dinge] who I take to be one who will be more for his friend than he is forward in saying: and as far as I can understand has not made one false step in regard to you, though he has not only been pressed, but near insulted by some, to make one in the unreasonable proceedings a late amongst them. I believe since his not meeting at Derby, nor signing the address at Kedleston the day before Mr. Curzon went with it, they are satisfied no good is to be done with him: but told his sister, who was then there, they thought her brother was one of better principles, but thought he might have some private interest to serve by Mr. Vice Chamberlain. You know that there was a particular friendship between Sir Nat. Curzon and Mr. Hardinge that's gone, and upon that account Sir Nat. expresses abundance to his children, and Mr. Curzon till now I believe has always been particularly obliging and kind to Mr. John Hardinge. So all that Mr. Hardinge meant by not engaging further in your service, was that as his interest was small, and himself so particularly obliged to you both, in a dispute in an election he might have to stand neuter. If you thought fit to break the ice by writing to him, I think it would much engage, and indeed he suffers so much at present in your service as to need your umbrage. Several seem to be sensible they suffered themselves to be much put upon by accepting of an address sent to them in the manner it was, and what they say they can't much like:

but my cousin Walter Burdett says they have shewed by it how easy they are to comply. The Swarson meeting is to be on Monday next. The most moderate amongst us are very much for accepting Lord Granby's offer to be one of the Knights of the Shire for Leicester, and the gentlemen to choose the other, in hopes they may continue united. Many of the Leicestership gentlemen have been at Staunton lately, and his Lordship [Ferrers] seems with great warmth to concern himself in all these parts. The silver saucepan with the little porringer and spoon was put up to be sent this week, but neither of your carriers is going till next week.

1710, July 8. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

I am pleased to find you have (as I was apt to believe) pleased some and disappointed others by signing the address. As far as I am capable of guessing the temper of the county in general is very much mended: indeed in the reason of the thing there wanted only a little time for their own heat and management to break their own measures. And I can't but be silently pleased to myself to observe what furious pains they have taken to convince themselves of their want of power. You can best judge when will be your time to come amongst them but I heartily wish matters were brought to a settlement, both for your ease and the quiet of the neighbourhood: and without your presence to countenance your friends, and awe those whose inclination is otherways, I doubt they will be apt to renew the divisions. And if any new aggravation should arise by your seeming neglect of them (which is a particular they are very jealous in that are your friends, and are willing to aggravate and make use of that are not) I fear it would then be much more difficult to procure a right understanding and settlement of affairs than at this time. I am glad you think Mr. Vernon not to be prevailed with. I believe whatever he may have done well in the matter is very much owing to Mr. Cotton, who has without dispute acted very friendly and gentlemanlike to you in your absence, as I believe Mr. Stanhope of Elvaston has also done. And Mr. Surley, with the allowance of some expressions agreeable to his name, has been constant. My cousin Walter Burdett often hints he should not know you had received his last letter, but that Francis Hopegood sent him word of it. If you can find time to set pen to paper, it strangely obliges. I am sure I find the particular of visits so necessary to maintain a good correspondence amongst us, that without giving you the trouble of asking your leave, at the beginning of the year I set your chaise upon the four wheels again, and laid by your shafts, that you may soon return it to the same again. With it I have with great ease compassed all your neighbours, except the Vernons, who my cousin Fitzherberts (that have been sometime at Newtonl ately) tell me are very full of resentment at my sister Alice and I upon that account.

1710, July 26. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

Not hearing yet the good news of my sister being brought to bed makes me fear it will not be possible for you to see this place by the 'sizes, as I much hoped you would, believing still that your presence will be absolutely necessary there: when 'tis said will be the most general meeting that has been known, and I hear all are silent till that time. But I have seen nobody but our nearest neighbour [Mr. John Hardinge] since last I writ to you. Only my Lady Catherine Clarke was so kind to give us an opportunity by her coach to carry your daughters to wait of my Lady Strathmore [their mother's half sister] who began her journey back for Scotland yesterday, and has passed her time under so great disappointment by not seeing her father [the Earl of Chesterfield], as could not but move our pity, though no surprise to me, that have seen so many instances of the same nature. Lady Catherine said Lord Scarsdale had now writ that he would be advised by the gentlemen, which she did not know what to make of. My Lord Ferrers is gone to Chartley, and was met at Burton and so on upon the road by five hundred horse and other mob; and a great many hogsheads of ale at their arrival set out for their welcome: but I have not heard how his popularity has been carried on since. I am now to come to a subject I am as unskilled at as what I have been upon, but will not decline anything to which friendship engages me. Mrs. Mary Hardinge has had by several of her friends a proposal made of one Mr. Sansby [Sandby] a canon of Worcester, and I believe chaplain to General Churchill, because he has lived with him, and as I understand done the business of a secretary to him: which makes me think it not improbable but you might have heard of him, or could without much difficulty have some light into the character of the person, who is wholly a stranger both to her brother and her. His birth is mean, which is a great exception: his church preferments are four hundred pounds a year, and all that is visible in money is 800*l*. His advantages under the General are said to be considerable. Mrs. Hardinge expressed that as you had given her encouragement to be so free to look upon you as her friend, that there was nobody that she should so soon depend upon, as to the character of the person, if it should happen that you did, or could, know anything of him. And she expressing it to her brother, when he writ to his uncle Gideon and Mr. Nicholas Hardinge by the last post, he desired they would wait of you. 'Tis very probable they may have other sufficient exceptions, and so not give you the trouble. Mrs. Hardinge is one I wish so entirely well, that I could not but encourage and much approve her desire of making you her friend upon any occasion; and she is one that, had she her merits, would much exceed what otherways her fortune can expect. Mr. Fisher has just come in, who has been in the Peak. He has not received much yet: but I have desired him not to make any payments till after the 'sizes, which cannot break any squares in the time, and I could not tell, if you come down, how occasions might be.

[Miss Mary Hardinge died unmarried.]

1710, August 5. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

I believe your letters by the last post could not but surprise you, as well the proceedings did all your friends that were at Derby on Wednesday night last: and I hope you did not want a very just and particular account from some of those that were present, for it was timed to be not till many, that was known would not be unanimous (as they would pretend it is) were gone out of the town [Derby], as Sir Edward Coke, Mr. Cotton and several more that I am not certain of. I am told your letters to my Lord Scarsdale and Mr. Sheriff [Harpur] were both read on Monday, when the gentlemen all dined with the Sheriff, and appeared to give a general satisfaction, and by some said to be the most handsome in the world. And no mention made of their intentions till after dinner on Tuesday, when my Lord Scarsdale entertained the gentlemen. After my Lord had begun by making a speech, which I have not heard perfect enough to repeat, but the Church's being betrayed and undermined, and great aggravation of that sort, Sir John Harpur was first applied to for his opinion, who was drawn in to say something to their purpose; and when others also had vented themselves, 'twas said the country never was better served than by Sir Gilbert Clarke, and the offer made to Mr. Clarke, who seemed to decline it some time, but soon stood up and said, since it was the unanimous desire of the gentlemen he should serve them, he would not refuse it, or to that effect. With which Mr. Thacker stood up and desired he would not call it unanimous, for it was not his desire to have you excluded, nor he believed of several gentlemen more, there. Cousin John Burdett said since the country was so quiet, why should it not continue so, but when it was put further, said he would only vote for a Curzon. I am sorry I cannot say better for him. Mr. Stanhope of Elvaston expressed his satisfaction in the service you did them, and that he liked Mr. Curzon also, but absolutely declined to agree to the change. Mr. Robert Wilmot did so also, and said that whatever his opinion was he would not declare it there, nor in that manner, and several said they should desire to be better satisfied of your declining to stand, than by anything that had appeared to them yet. Mr. Beresford and Mr. Fitz Herbert were both steady to you; and Mr. Statham spoke a great deal and in a very handsome manner. The number that was present was three and twenty as I hear. Mr. Sheriff was not present with them, and after he came to the knowledge of it, either was, or pretended, the greatest passion of anger imaginable. Dear Brother, I think there can be no ill in my telling you what has happened to come to my hearing, which could be only from our next neighbours [Hardinges] and poor Mr. Thacker, who is much perplexed at it, and free in communicating: for I am so ignorant that I can't so much as guess what you will proceed to do in it, and therefore shall be pleased it is likely to so happen that I shall see nobody till I hear further. I confess it was no great surprise to me, any further than that I did not directly judge Mr. Clarke would have been guilty of what I will not express, lest I should too much aggravate. But when I found you could not come down, I sat down prepared for something of this nature: for there is no certainty when there wants integrity in some, and courage in others, except your presence could have awed the one and encouraged the other. I think nothing can in prospect be a greater misfortune to Mr. Clarke than this present undertaking. My Lady [Catherine Clarke] is truly to be pitied at this time, for 'tis what I am satisfied she has long engaged the assurance should never be, and is under a great concern for. Lord Scarsdale took Mr. Clarke with him strait into the Peak from Derby. But Mr. Sheriff and Mr. Thacker both told Mr. Fisher their success hitherto has been very bad. Mr. Hardinge, who has been upon the circuit was to see us last night: he said he would have writ to you, and was still desirous to do it, but that he thought he could be of no service, through his ignorance of the country, and his business having kept him so much out of the way whilst at Derby. But I said if he could not be so particular as he desired I was sure you would be pleased to hear from him; so he said then he would certainly write. Mr. Vernon, I hear, answered your opinion of him. Cousin Burdetts of Foremark and Knolehills are not yet returned into Derbyshire. We begin to think it long till we hear it is well over with my sister. Your grey gelding is dead. Miss's mare must be knocked of the head, if I can get nobody to take her soon. Your Scotch pad goes lame. My sister may have the sweetmeats sent now when she pleases. I had almost forgot to tell you of our two young guests, which are Miss Cokes of Trusley: my cousin sent them the day before the 'sizes, but how long they stay I can't tell. Mr. Warren was one of the company, and concluding that Mr. Clarke would have my Lord Chesterfield's interests in Nottinghamshire immediately, offered his service for the bringing them in.

COKE MSS.

1710, August 7. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

My Cousin John Burdett is come to us, to ease his mind by giving a very particular relation of their transactions on Tuesday. As to himself I find the matter of fact was the same that I writ to you the last post, that he would vote for Mr. Curzon only, Mr. Clarke and you being both his friends he would vote for neither. I believe he heartily repents having engaged himself not to meddle, and gave me an account of those in his town, and wished me to send to Mr. Allen, and to Parnells, which I have already done. But to my great wonder I must unsay what I said by the last post of Captain Beresford, and, I fear, of Mr. Fitz Herbert. The first had engaged several votes in Ashbourn for the new setters up, at which time I sent a how-do-ye both to him and my cousin Boothby by a servant that went to the fair. They have lost no time, nor spare to say what is most for their purpose, as that you have declined standing, and desired Mr. Clarke to accept it, and engaged your interest for him. And I hear Mr. Fitz Herbert expressed a great respect for you, but declared your proceedings in Parliament were so contrary to his principles, that if you were his own father the case would be the same, that he could not vote for you, though he would not vote against you. And many declare their want of satisfaction in that particular, and I believe the clergy are general against you. There was a great many gentlemen sent for by my Lord Scarsdale, but refused to come: but I know the names of none but Sir Edward Coke, and Mr. Hardinge, and Mr. Holden, Counsellor. Mr. Coke of Trusley and Mr. Cotton was gone out of town. His daughters are gone home. Ballindon was one of the company, and I believe engaged as desired. Mrs. Turner of Derby is come in to dinner, and in a great heat for you: but says they say it with all the assurance imaginable at Derby that you decline standing. Dear Brother, you can best judge, but as your absence has given them the advantage of doing this, I wish it don't prove a great expense for a great uncertainty: for I know no friend hereabouts that can effectually serve you. But if you do continue the resolution of standing, I don't doubt but you'll write to every one of your friends in particular, and not defer your coming much longer. Mr. Vernon refused the standing, yet I am told they believe he is amongst them now. I believe you need not fear Mr. John Hardinge, and I am apt to think Mr. Curzon will do by him as by you,—set you free from all obligation.

1710, August 9. Melbourne.—Elizabeth Coke to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

All I can say in relation to late proceedings is that it is carried on with the greatest vehemence possible, and the false report of your desisting spread with that industry and assurance as would surprise one, but that all their measures, as they begun, must proceed in perfidiousness. The gentlemen are very unanimous in it, though I can hear of none that justifies it, but disclaim it as their doing. 'Tis said there was not above three in the secret, and that Mr. Clarke was not one. I can't but love your goodness and designed behaviour to him, and shall have to endeavour to do the same. All say never any one did anything with so great confusion and disorder; but certainly it suits much with his inclinations, and I doubt he is too far engaged to withdraw . . . Mr. Sheriff's [Harpur] pretended heat of anger at the proceeding at first is now as furiously bent in making all the interest hereabouts against you. . . . I find at the first proposal at Derby the question was put a second time to those that was for you, whether in case you joined with the fanatical part, they would then be for a Coke, and I thought Mr. Cotton's letter (inclosed) seemed to hint the same. How far your immediate presence amongst them might startle the many ungrateful in their dishonourable proceedings, I am not capable to judge. There must be no delay in it, in case you have any thoughts of continuing to stand. Cantrill and Hazard of Hartshorn say their votes shall be always yours. The Freeholders of Findern and Stenson by Samuel Sims all entirely the same, but two, though Mr. Sheriff had been first with them, who they valued no more than the dirt of their shoes, but desired you might know you had no greater enemy than him: and was sure you would find as great a friend of Mr. Pole, and also Mr. Gilbert of Lockoe. I am sensible all this is very insignificant, but as nothing must be neglected, so you will bear with my relation of it. Mr. Hardinge thinks you much in the right at present to declare your standing, but though Mr. Clarke be very unsteady, yet this matter is so much to his inclination, and he is so far engaged in it that he fears he will certainly persist; and the gentlemen are so unanimous and active for Clarke and Curzon that he will as certainly be chose. Mr. Sheriff met with your butler, and thought fit in a very extraordinary manner to converse with him, by telling him it was to no purpose for you to think of standing now, it was too late: 'twas true he had a letter for you at assizes, but you should have been there to have answered for yourself. He said his brother had been making interest for you, but they had sent to put a stop to it. He gave his service to us.

1710, August 12. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to the Rt. Honble. Thomas Coke, at his lodgings at the Palace of St. James, London.

I have but just time to give you joy of your daughter, and we all rejoice to hear my sister is so far safe, and wish the continuance of it. As to election affairs the town of Derby is said to be very much gone over, since Mr. Curzon's and Mr. Clarke's going about with my Lord Chesterfield 's letter, but I believe you have got many there. . . . . Tis past expression the unanimous ingratitude of most in these parts, but in my simple judgment, however you shall think fit to determine, I shall wish your presence amongst them. There is a great meeting this day at Nottingham where Sir John [Harpur] and the High Sheriff are gone. Cousin Burdetts are expected home this night. I hear my Lord Ferrers is not so firm to them as expected, but my authority is but uncertain.

1710, August 16. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to [Vice Chamberlain Coke).

I cannot be silent, nor forbear expressing my uneasiness at the present posture of affairs, since you continue the resolution of standing, as Mr. Cotton gave me to understand. He expressed great desire of serving you, but seemed to fear it was not now in any of your friends power to do it, for this time; and questioned whether it was not of more service to you for them to lie still: but said he came to enquire what agents you had employed hereabouts. I said I did not know of any directions you had given Fisher, nor any other, but named those gentlemen that I knew did make endeavours: by which I found that they don't so much as know of one another's proceedings. I told Mr. Cotton that as several had desired to know the certainty of your standing, I had given the assurance of it.

Coke MSS.

What your particular reasons have been to prevent your coming and now deter you, to be sure you best and only know: but whilst you are absent things, I believe, go backward every day. And yet one may find that votes are to be had wherever I could try, and in places where they say with great assurance all are engaged: but as nothing to the purpose, nor in a regular way, can have been done here, so 'tis not possible to make any judgment of the matter. Mr. Allen came here this morning in his way to Nottingham race. He says he is more obliged to you than any man living, and loves you the best, and has assured Mr. Clarke he will never be against you. He said he feared it was too late now. They have positively said he was brought over; but though not so, I cannot find that he has stirred to make any interest.

1710, August 19. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

We was all extremely concerned to hear of my sister's illness by yours of the last post: we can only wait with patience and pray God for the best. As soon as I received the list of the last poll for Greasley and Repton Hundred I had it examined, and all necessary amendments made, and drawn out into three or four divisions, as it might be despatched with most convenience. There was two towns omitted in your list, which was Meesum (Measham) and Willesley, the first of which has a pretty number of freeholders in it, and most promised to you, upon sending to. For finding that wherever they was sent to an inclination for you appears, and a desire of the assurance of your standing, and votes to be had, I have made use of John Seargant and your butler, to be upon the constant move, the best I could all along: finding success more or less wherever they went, and I hope nothing improper has been by it, though it would not, till with your direction, be to any considerable purpose. Mr. Troughton [Vicar of Melbourne] is very hearty and sincere in your service; and the best assistance I could think of for the regulating the list of the poll was him, John Beresford and John Seargant and Mr. Fisher. As to Mr. Fisher he says he will serve you in all ways he can, in all places but where my Lords [Chesterfield] interest lies, which so much interferes with yours in so many places that 'tis my opinion you will not think it proper to have his going or speaking relied upon. On the other side I believe you will not think it convenient to have him wholly disobliged at this time. So as for his information it shall be accepted; and his going I suppose had best not be refused, but must not be trusted to only. Beresford and Seargant are two of the best I can think of to go out and John Ratcliff also desires the part he used to have. Your butler's headpiece is not great, but he knows places and persons, and I have found his good words and good manners has not been unacceptable. I hear there is a proposal sent you from Derby and from the High Sheriff. I wish Mr. Turnour is not biassed by my Lord Chesterfield, but he says he will do all that's possible. And Sir John [Harpur] I hear has a debt too, from him, which is to be forgiven: but where to find Mr. Sheriff [Harpur] with his politics is past me, and therefore which way he may influence him, I can't tell. Mr. Gilbert of Lockoe has been very stirring in your interest lately. Cousin John Burdett cannot but be more in your interest than he said he would. He sent me word how much things cooled, and he thought still would. Cousin Walter Burdett sent his chaise yesterday for us to see his niece Betty Jodrell. In our way we met Lady Catherine [Clarke] and Mrs. Philips coming to Melbourn, who went with us to Knolehills, and in the afternoon Sir John Harpur and my Lady came in. My governor according to custom drunk the ladies health too fast ; after which he proposed to Sir John the three candidates, and Sir John bid him drink them according to inclination; so he begun with you and ended with Mr. Clarke : after which he said some things so hard about sudden turnabouts, that I was not a little concerned, but the manner was so comical, that it ended only in great mirth, and Sir John was very easy, and better than before. Mr. Clarke was to go from the race to the Peak and after that to his aunt in Northamptonshire. I believe your presence would secure both Cousin Walter and Cousin Robert Burdett to act in a handsome and reasonable manner to you. Mr. Cotton is absent about his own election. I hear my Cousin Fitzherbert seems much moderated ; but Captn. Beresford says, not to be zealous when engaged is to desert a cause. My sister Alice is rather worse today than she has been. Mr. Hardinge is not returned from the race.

1710, August 26. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

Your packet of letters are sent accordingly, and more added by Mr. Fisher the best he could judge, and Mr. Troughton. They thought it would do well to some of the clergy, and in some places to some of the top of the freeholders, to communicate to their neighbours. I an very glad to hear my sister is better, and heartily wish she may continue so, and that we may see you down ; for I fear nothing can be done in your absence to any purpose ; which I am satisfied you so well know, that you will do it when you can, since you continue your resolution of standing : for which I don't doubt but you have sufficient reasons, and I am sure it is not material for me to know them. . . . On Monday last Mr. Statham sent me a list of Apletree Hundred, and said they was not quite so ungrateful about him, as in your own Hundred. On Tuesday my cousin Coke of Trusley came over and gave me to understand that Sir Edward Coke, and he thought Mr. Cotton and most of your friends, as well as himself had writ you their opinion that by the best they could judge it was impossible for you to succeed. And they all wished you would acquiesce for this time, by which you would so much oblige the gentlemen, as to regain many for your friends against the next time. My Cousin Coke said he had spoke to Mr. Pool of Radbourn, who seemed inclined to you, but said he should be swayed by the Duke of Devonshire. I don't find any body knows how the Duke of Rutland's interest goes ; nor the Duke of Newcastle's, though some say Mr. Clarke has it. I found the other day by Dr. Coke, who had been on Ashbourn side, that they began to be in fear for Mr. Curzon, and that it was suspected Mr. Clarke did not do fair ; but there is so little truth to be heard, that I am afraid to repeat. John Seargant went with the Derby letters and those beyond. Basford and Sims and John are gone out today ; and you shall have the best account I can on Monday of their proceedings. There is not many that will directly promise. Some say they will not say till they come to Derby : others, one vote to you, and the other to one of the others : and others that have promised, upon the saying that you did not stand, though some of them say they know no reason why they should keep their promise, when the gentlemen come to them with a falsity in their mouths. I cannot pretend to judge how far your presence and a right management might retrieve and prevail. But those that are your friends don't stir to the purpose, and seem to think it is more to your service not to do it : and yet it is manifest there where they are not sent to, it is a sufficient objection that they are not taken notice of. So I doubt I only run on in confusion by this scribble to no purpose. Your letter went yesterday to Mr. Willmote of

COKE MSS.

Duffield, who I hear is against you: but Mr. Troughton had notice sent him last night that all the rest of that town was not to be gained either by him [Mr. Clarke?] or the Curzons, so John is gone thither with a letter to Mr. Pinder and two of the freeholders. For the further truth you shall hear next post. My cousin Ward was here on Wednesday, hearing you were come. Mr. Stanhope also came as far as Newton upon the same. Dr. Coke and his wife are come: my sister Alice's fever continues, but I hope in God, not dangerous. I don't hear you have writ to Mrs. Grey, who, by her steward I believe, still inclines notwithstanding her promise. Sir John Harpur resents you never write to him. Whether you will think well to do it now, I could not tell.

1710, August 27. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to (Vice Chamberlain Coke).

My sending this to you is without the knowledge of any one except my sisters, and the servant who brings it. It comes from one who cannot make a right judgment in these cases, but must be earnestly in your service, and would fain have you know the truth of things as far as I can procure it for you, and have the greatest trial imaginable upon me to see you used as you are at this present. Your letters were despatched as soon as received, and at the return of the messengers I found a general unexpected civility, and a concern expressed that they was engaged, and though they could not get from the promise of their own vote, they should be desirous to serve you. I think I may venture to assure you there appears a general apprehension of Mr. Curzon being in danger, if you pursue the standing. Many are very industrious in reporting you cannot come, and have malice enough to give the reason that your money occasions are such that you durst not. For I believe there is nothing they dread so much as the alteration that your presence would make, and a right management of affairs, if there was time for it. Mr. Hinton of Derby passed by here yestesday and met Mr. Fisher in the Field, and told him he was going out of the country for quiet's sake for a time: he said he was satisfied, if you would personally appear now amongst them, that the gentlemen were so generally ashamed and sensible of their wrong proceedings, though perhaps their personal votes they could not well recall from promise, yet they would favour you by leaving all the freeholders at liberty; and he thought you might certainly prevail, and Mr. Curzon would lose it. The freeholders do not stick to say they will show their liberty in voting. Dearest Brother, I think I have said nothing but with just grounds, and I may the better venture so far as the pressing the seeing you: because 'tis certain whichever way you determine, you will do it in a manner becoming yourself, which will give great satisfaction to your friends, who have so long wanted it by your absence; and who are disheartened by the confidence of the other party, who do not spare the saying all's their own, in every place. I will only add that I cannot find that any one gentleman but excuses their being brought in either through surprise, or mistake of your desisting, as some call it, others deserting—others the necessity of agreeing with the gentlemen. And like Caulk House, the thing is done but nobody did it. And though there is nothing to be said for such a proceeding as is beyond example, yet I believe you would find more goodwill to you yet remaining and would shew itself when you appear amongst them, than at this distance you might reasonably judge. But it is a hard thing for people to own themselves in the wrong, and it is no wonder they try as far as they can to have you come down to their terms. Mr. Fisher has worked hard a late, but he knows nothing of this sending, for it is impossible to know how far my Lord's [Chesterfield] interest makes confusion in yours: but I believe the managers of it intend, if you succeed, to make a merit of dividing between Clarke and you. 'Twas said that at the race my Lord Granby recalled the orders that the Duke of Rutland had given of his interest for you: but of this to be sure you have a certainty (if so) from better hands: but it gave a great check to your friends. We found Duffield very well inclined, and John Seargant goes out tomorrow towards Mansfield, and along the edge of Nottinghamshire, where we can't find that any body has been yet. Dear Brother, if you judge all this folly, I am sure you will accept the intention.

1710, August 30. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

My sister Alice feverish disorder continues, and I cannot say I am quite without fear by reason she cannot bear the taking the Jesuits' bark; but she has been so well yesterday and today without it, that we are in great hopes it will quite go off. I find the gentlemen say they cannot believe you in earnest the standing, by reason you do not come down, and makes those in a lower degree say they fear they are only gaining enemies to no purpose. There can be nothing done to the purpose, nor as it ought to be, in your absence, and I cannot but continue to wish your presence here, because I am satisfied there is nothing your enemies dread so much. I hear my cousin John Burdett tells them all that if Mr. Curzon be thrown out, 'tis no more than they deserve. He seems to think that your letter has much mollified furious Will. Brown, who says he would ride a thousand miles to serve you in anything, but state affairs. And parson Cary, who had a letter amongst others of the clergy, and has been a warm stirring man, came to Dunisturp, and said, since you had thought fit to take notice of him and more of the clergy, he would not make another vote against you. Those that have been at Nottingham have brought a certainty of some, and the assurance of several more, but Mr. Warren and Sir Thomas Willoughby's interest much thwarts yours. My Lady Bellamont divides her interest now between Mr. Clarke and you. Mrs. Cavendish I hear says, notwithstanding her son's proceedings, when she finds you come down, hers shall be yours. And Mrs. Gray I believe inclines much to you. I fear you have received a very extraordinary letter from cousin Walter [Burdett]: he showed me a sketch of it, which I told him I thought would appear very odd and unkind, except he could be his own interpreter; and what he has writ I can't tell, not having seen him since. I thank you for the good news, and conclude my sister was better because you did not mention to the contrary.

1710, September 2. (Melbourne.) — Elizabeth Coke to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

Your servant returned on Wednesday night which gave me a great satisfaction in your approbation of his being sent, but especially in confirming my hopes of your coming into the country, and that the ill success will be no disappointment in case it happens. I much please myself in the hope that you will put all friendships to the test, which and the fear how far your presence may prevail upon the general shame in having done that they don't desire to answer to your face, and the knowing of the goodwill of the freeholders to you, makes your presence less wished for by most than ever at any time—I may say dreaded—though to be sure they are so much hardened by success as is possible. One of the first things after the noble resolution at Derby was, they said if they could pull you down in the country, they should be sure to do it above, and nothing is more visible than that envy has been the spur to all their ingratitude. But we must not aggravate, or speak to give offence. There is none of your friends will make a step further till they see you, and are free in saying your success is an impossibility, which is one great help towards it, for the freeholders are not willing to disoblige to no purpose, and therefore every day will lose ground. Seargant is going through Apletree Hundred again, and Bamford of Ticknall and Basford together will go through this Hundred again. Bamford, the baily of the Hundred to Sir John Harpur, makes no scruple of venturing to be sincere, I think, in your service. Mr. Fisher I cannot tell what to say in. I cannot say but he might have done much more by thinking of some agents that might be serviceable. I have pressed it extremely on him and he has promised me to go to Derby and see what proper agents can be had to assist. It is visible Mr. Turnour exerts himself in words only, and I believe Mr. Gilbert now lies still amongst the rest for your coming. I would fain have two or three of a better rank to have kept moving, and to back the inferior sort. Mrs. Grey leaves it to her agents, who are sure to give you one vote, but I believe the other is for Mr. Clarke. Your letters to Repton Knolehills and Swarson were all received extreme well. Cousin Walter [Burdett] dined with us and is in great passions of kindness to you, but there is much of Curzon also in him. Cousin Robin is inclined to you in a cautious way, but with that honour and inclination that I believe, when you meet, you will have some satisfaction in him. Mr. Trott John Seargant met with in his first travels, who said he was sorry he came too late, and the old gentlewoman wept upon it. I believe he is resolvedly engaged, for Seargant upon the road happened to be in an inn, where he came in, but he would not speak, nor take no further notice than a bow. My cousin Boothby sent me a very civil letter of concern that things happened as they are; that Mr. Boothby thought himself engaged in honour, being one of the number at Derby. I don't find that Mr. Lay of Mafield has done anything in your service. The gentlemen as I heard that first began the opposition in the garden, for good luck sake as they called it, were Warren, Thomas Greasley and Will. Brown. They were so loud in the little house with the door shut that poor Sir John heard them, and concluded it a quarrel, and would have sent Will. Francis to part them, who was more willing they should fight it out. I have long wished to know who was the first that mentioned it at table, to have sent you word, but cannot hear. In the disposal of the letters I could have no better advice than Mr. Troughton and Fisher: there has been no distinction of party, so I suppose offence of both sides will be given. Mr. Dakeyne came since I began this: offers his service to be stirring where he may be most serviceable both out of town and in. He believed he could also satisfy of some that would be stirring till you came: but said people would not have it scarce yet that you will stand. He said he found they was in fears for Mr. Curzon, and now endeavoured to get single votes for him where they could. I have had no opportunity to mention anything in Sir Ph. Leving's interest: and I find your having favoured him has put a stop to a very considerable party in Derby, which pause upon it, and desire to know whether you writ down for him, or no, of John Seargant, when he delivered the letters. Mr. Troughton [Vicar of Melbourne] desires me to remind you of writing to Dr. Willis, the Dean of Lincoln, who has many presentations depending on him as parson of Wirksworth. He thought Captain Tate, Colonel Wilson, and Mr. Phillips, though of Leicestershire, used to be concerned in your interest, and was omitted writing to. Mrs. Leech is to be writ to by yourself, as also Captain Prime.

COKE MSS.

1710, September 3. (Somerset House.)—Mrs. Sanderson to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

I omitted telling you yesterday that Mrs. Rose and the others are Papishes, and drive trades. And since Mr. Hutton has taken his name-sake the Doctor into his lodgings with him, I am misley (miserably?) straitened by his taking a room from me, for his better convenience; purposing that when Mrs. Rose was removed, the garret she was in would lie more convenient for me. I humbly beg your favour with the Duke of Shrewsbury that I may have it: it is upon the back of my kitchen. At present I have never a place to lay my servants in, nor to put anything out of the way.

1710, September 4. (Melbourne.) — Elizabeth Coke to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

Mr. Turnour dined here yesterday and there wanted no assurances in words: he told me he had done what he could in the town, but I could not find that he knew the certainty how any stood affected to you. He was to meet Mr. Bradshaw, Receiver, to consider of somebody more, to be stirring about Chesterfield side, and those parts of Scarsdale, where has been a great want. Mr. Fisher was yesterday with Mr. Cotton, who told him he and more of your friends continued the opinion of your desisting. Fisher told him of Doctor Atterbury's letter to Mr. Walker, Minister of Derby, who is since dead, and the letter has lain in his brother the High Constable's hands till the other day Mr. Bondclift procured it for Mr. Fisher, who was immediately for getting copies attested, and to be shown abroad: which upon consideration I durst not do without your direction, lest it should break anyways your measures when you come. Mr. Cotton thought, had it been known to the gentlemen before the assizes, it might have done much; or could you get a fresh one now, and if Dr. Smallridge would do the like, and was not known to any of the clergy, he might write for the same purpose to Mr. Cotton himself. I own I am so proud as to think you need no vindication but what time and yourself will give you. Mr. Cotton told Fisher that Mr. Curzon said he found the dispute would lie between him and you, and that he washes his hands of any standing design, or that it was anyways his procuring the parting; and equally clears my Lord Scarsdale [Leke] and Clarke. I think you must be hardened to all provocation by this time. When Turnour sent to ask Mr. Crumpton's vote for you, his answer was that he did not know but Clarke might be as good a member as yourself, for the gentlemen were angry at you, because you were against the game bill, and all the old women for not bringing your wife to lie in in the country. Forgive my prolonging with his jests. My sister Alice mends but very slowly.

1710, September 11. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

On Saturday night I received your letter, and it appeared very suspicious of having been opened. I am this day going to take leave of my Lady Harpur, with Mrs. Burdett: my Lady beginning her journey for London tomorrow. My Lady seemed to take what I mentioned from you very well, and said she did not pretend to meddle in public matters, yet she had before endeavoured to persuade Sir John, and thought she had prevailed, that civility and good neighbourhood might be continued. Sir John they say cannot bear the name of election, and I believe is glad he is leaving the country: yet in this as in other things the positiveness of his temper prevails. And I find my Lady did interpose in one particular; for when Sir John sent to recall what votes Captain Harpur had made for you in the Peak, his tenants would not yield to go from their first engagement, which my Lady thought was too far imposing, and I believe did show some warmth in prevailing upon Sir John. I believe Mr. Boothby's letter satisfied you as to his particular. Mr. Fitzherbert, with great professions of respect and kindness to you and all your family, makes it his daily labour to make all the votes he can against you; but says he went on purpose to the Assizes to meet you, where had you been, nothing of this had been. Captain Beresford does not allow himself rest a nights for his earnestness in the cause, and says he thinks it will be his death: he can now act with a good courage and without control of this side, since your friend Hardinge's gone. Mr. Vernon is looked upon as your friend. I hear, he says that he would not have Mr. Clarke make the request of the gentlemen his excuse to you, for none could have had a greater share of that than himself; but if his inclinations would have led him to accept it, he could not have given himself leave to have done so by you. My Lord Ferrers goes this day to Chartley to hunt a stag, and (he says) about the election: but Mr. Clarke and Mr. Curzon are also to be there most part of the week. Mr. Fisher says he is well informed that your interest declines daily by your not coming. Mr. Curzon is very much out of humour with the gentlemen and very uneasy. Mr. Thacker sent to tell me he had more correspondence with your friends than at first, and that he thought he might assure you you daily gained ground. So you will find what I say in one line, I contradict in another, and leave you to judge. I must do Dakeyne of Derby justice, who finds no excuse, but does to his best. Mr. Troughton is hearty. A man from Dovebridge informed that many of the freeholders there was under an agreement not to vote for Mr. Clarke; upon which John and Samuel Sims went and found in part true. Mr. Cavendish had made some votes for Mr. Curzon, but not for Mr. Clarke. John is also to call of my Lord Duke of Shrewsbury's steward. Mr. Wilkins and his son went to Warwick the beginning of last week to meet Mr. Nicholas Hardinge, and old Swindall of Tonge was there also, by whom I hear Mr. Wilkins expressed great uneasiness that he was engaged against you. As far as I can find Mr. Hardinge called them great fools for their pains, and told them 'twas his opinion you are not solicitous about the success, but thought fit to try your friends; and that he believed they would soon see you have better preferment than their representative.

Coke MSS.

1710, September 16. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

Mr. Clarke was to wait of Dr. Gery, who told him he was engaged to you: but the Dr. has not had any letter from my Lord Huntingdon, as he expected he should upon your waiting of my Lord: my Lord's letter should be procured before Mr. Clarke's next visit. This looks suspicious, but hitherto it has not been profession only, for they have engaged them they could, with great earnestness. Mr. Clarke has been round this Hundred himself, and Will. Brown, who personated Mr. Curzon among the ignorant. Your not coming makes it impossible to make it certainly believed that you will stand, and sets the others more earnestly on. John returned from Dovebridge: he could not find there that Mr. Cavendish stirred much. He went to Mr. Lay's who went with him to Ashbourn; but it happened to be a day of great concourse to that town, new organs being given to the church, and that day opened to the neighbourhood thereabouts: so that they could not do much. I think they met with about three promises. John said the man of the inn told him that Bagshaw's son, of Bakewell, said there had come a letter from the Duke of Rutland to his father, in which there was directions for the Duke's interest to go for both Clarke and Curzon. John was also with Mr. Bill, the Duke of Shrewsbury's steward, who said he knew of no votes thereabouts, but his own. I am satisfied you're sensible that many of the gentlemen are afraid of being brought to the test; but I hope you will not be prevailed with to keep at a distance, but give some the pain, and others the pleasure, of seeing you, whichever way you determine it. My Cousin Walter B[urdett] continues zealously kind, and in a more reasonable way a late, than usual. Mr. Surly told me that the first man that named a division was Tom Griesly [Gresly]: but his words was only Clarke and Curzon: then after it came to be single voted. I cannot say as to the letters being opened; but the postwoman is zealous in your interest, and assured me she delivered it safe, and that it was fallen down by accident; but she would be more careful for the future.

1711, August 30. The Jersey at Jamaica.—Lieut. Robert Littill to the Rt. Hble. Thomas Coke, Vice Chamberlain, at his lodgings in St. James's Palace.

The Nonsuch being ordered home I made a change with the Lieutenant of the Jersey. We sailed to Hispaniola and thence to Carthagena. We stood so near to Du Cass's ship, we could see his men on the deck, but he went into Bochochecho. Next morning saw four sail which we all (Defiance, Salisbury, Nonsuch and Jersey) chased, and we took a small ship of war of 26 guns, which I came in Captain of, and the Vice Admiral of Spain, who was wounded and since dead. We have shared our prize money in parts. I have received 40*l*. I have made bold to send you by the bearer a double doubloon for a pocket piece, which I beg you will accept; as also 20 pistoles to my mother, which I beg you will let your steward send down to her. My Captain's name is Vernon, which uses me with abundance of good manners: you know his friends.

1711–2, February 6. "Orders to be observed at the Gate and in the Court by Her Majesty's Porters and Provost Marshals on Wednesday the 6th of February $17\frac{11}{12}$ being Her Majesty's Birthday."

That no Hackney Coaches be permitted to wait or hinder the Coaches of Persons of Quality coming to St. James's Gate and attending there conveniently.

That the Porters do not allow any persons to come into St. James's Palace that day but Her Majesty's Servants, Persons of Quality and Distinction, and their Retinue.

That no Hackney Coaches whatsoever be permitted that day to pass beyond the entrance of the Great Gate of St. James's Palace.

That all Flamboys be extinguished at the entrance into the Gate there and none suffered to be lighted in the said Palace.

That no Footman or other person be permitted to stay in any part of the passage of the Piazza leading to the Great Staircase, but the Footmen and Chairmen only are to wait without in the Court, and no other person, except the soldiers employed, to stand in the Court.

That there be a range of Foot Soldiers from the Great Gate to the foot of the Great Stairs, and a sufficient guard at the Fore Gate, Back Gate and all the passages and back doors.

That the doors towards the Pall-Mall and the Park be locked up early that morning.

Coxe MSS.

That a post or bar be set up in the gateway of the Back Court to hinder all coaches from coming in there, as also to prevent all persons except Her Majesty's Servants from coming into the Court that way.

That the Chairs of all persons of Quality be ranged in the Little Court between the Great Staircase and Her Majesty's Back Stairs, and one of the Porters is to wait at the foot of the Great Stairs to call for the Chairmen and Footmen of Persons of Quality as occasion may require.

That no person or their servants be permitted to wait in the passage near Her Majesty's Back Stairs except the servants immediately in waiting on the Queen, all the Ladies of the Bedchamber, all the Women of the Bedchamber, the Lord Treasurer and the Lord Chamberlain.

That the Bonefire be not lighted, nor the strong drink given to the Soldiers till ten a clock at night.

1712, July 3. Grampound.—Roger Teage to the Honble. Thomas Coke, Vice Chamberlain.

Presuming you have not received an account of the proceedings that happened here lately, I think it my duty (being for your interest) to send you a particular account what was done by the Mayor and Recorder the last law court: where being met, and a jury returned and swearen, they voted Thomas Dennis and Nathaniel Harvey out of the magistracy, which two persons are entirely in your interest. The proceedings herein being wrong, unjustifiable and without any former precedent, they have made their application to me, desiring you would be pleased to take a legal course to restore them, and to that end they beg the favour you would employ Mr. Joseph Sherwood of New Inn. And it's my humble request that for the future you'll order the News to be directed to me, and not to the Mayor of Grampont.

1712, July 12. Dublin.—Sir Richard Levinge to the Rt. Hble. Mr. Coke, Vice Chamberlain of Her Majesty's Household at St. James's.

I did myself the honour some months ago to write you a very long letter on the subject of the time. How things are altered since I do not know; and find every day the unhappiness of men in station in Ireland. We are strangers to affairs, and know not how to apply ourselves to our old friends, because we know not how they stand affected themselves, or how they are in respect of others. It was the experience of your goodness to me that made me give you so great a trouble: which also gave me the confidence to impart to you some circumstances relating to myself, which I would not have communicated to any other. . . . I will impute your silence to some very good reason, which I cannot know where I am, nor is in your prudence proper to be told me. I have a very great desire to wait upon you myself, but I cannot stir without a licence under the great seal.

1712, July 23. Gand (Ghent). Colonel J. Cope to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

My Lord Duke of Ormonde will dine in town this day, but returns to his quarters at night, which are taken three leagues from hence, where the army is to encamp this night. 'Tis thought we shall continue in this situation for some time, at least till the cessation last declared be expired, which is for two months. When the troops separated, they say 'twas the melancholiest sight that ever was. The foreign Generals took leave of my Lord Duke with tears in their eyes, and most of the private men of both their troops and ours showed a more than ordinary concern for parting with people they had so long served with. We don't doubt but Prince Eugene will be master of Landrecies in a small time, though believe that our train is a considerable loss to them. We have had several quarrels between the officers and private men of the Dutch and Germans, in so much that we are forced to keep our men as separate from them as possible. I must beg leave to recommend myself to you for the continuance of your protection and favour, of which I have had so great a share already. I beg my most humble compliments to your lady.

1712, July 26. Grampound.—Ro. Teage to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

I am well satisfied by the advice of the Attorney General and Serjeant Hooper that at present we have no legal Mayor: though I know that he will when the time comes, which is the Sunday before Michaelmas Day, proceed to the election of a new Mayor. If it comes to that, it will be one of their own party, and perhaps as great a rogue as the pretended Mayor is now. The time is so short that he cannot be put out before the time comes. But with humble submission I have thought of a way, which will frustrate all their designs and secure the interest; which is by getting a new charter for us, which I know you can do, if you please. I am verily persuaded it will be done cheaper than it will stand to try it at law. I hope the young Mr. Vincent has waited on you with our Address.

1712, August 2. Jersey at the Buoy of the Nore.—Robert Littill to the Rt. Hble. Mr. Coke, Vice Chamberlain, at his lodgings in St James's House.

I ask pardon for not writing before, having touched at Newcastle and Yarmouth: but it hath been my misfortune, as well as the best part of the ship's company, to be taken very ill since we came into the Northern Seas. But at this time we are all pretty well recovered. We have been tomorrow eleven weeks from Jamaica: the length of the voyage was caused by our coming north about. I have never heard of any of my friends since I have been out of the land.

1712, August 2. Bath.—William Skrine to Thomas Coke, Vice Chamberlain, at Windsor.

I had this morning the honour of your commands for taking the same lodgings you had last. I went to Mrs. Gibbs, but could not get her to take less than you gave her last. I am very much obliged to you for making use of my tenant's stables: I've ordered him to get them ready. I wish you a good journey. My most humble service to your lady.

1712, August 5. N.S. Terroa in Portugal.—Charles Keightley to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

I return you my hearty thanks for the honour you have always done me and my brother, and in recommending me to my Colonel, which is now Brigadier Vessey. He has given me a Lieutenant's commission, and is very kind to me upon all occasions. Our army here are all in quarters and in expectation of a peace. I humbly beg of your honour that if there are any regiments ordered to go abroad, that you'll give me your interest to go with any of them. I understand that my brother is yet a prisoner: I have not heard from him since I had the honour of seing you last.

1712, August 9. Chilcott.—Colonel Henry Hunt to the Rt. Hble. Thomas Coke, Vice Chamberlain to her Majesty at St James's Palace.

Your horse proved as I expected, and I hope will to the last, and though all odds were laid against you, we won it with ease; and the rider (which was the Lord Chesterfield's groom called "Fine George" that lived formerly with the Duke of Rutland) assures me he'll be the best horse in England another year. If you'll let him he believes he can help you to a chapman: but unless you have a great rate for him, every body advises the keeping of him. And if you please to favour me with it, he shall be very welcome. He is this minute going back to Blockley where I should be glad to receive your commands. The unexpected success made Mr. Hardinge and myself too generous, as you'll see by the charges on the other side.

Coke MSS.

	£	s.	d.
Mr. Clarke paid his forfeiture 5 guineas -	5	7	6
Mr. Burdett 10 guineas - - -	10	15	0
Mr. Fisher for you 5 guineas - -	5	7	6
Col. Hunt 5 guineas - - -	5	7	6
	26	17	6
gave the rider 2 guineas - - -	2	3	0 for a riding suit - - - -	1	1	6 to the groom - - - -	1	1	6
for drawing the articles the winning horse to pay -		10	9 extraordinary charges on the road and at Swarson	2	12	6
	7	9	3
The half of 26*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* is - -	13	8	9
„ „ 7*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* is - - -	3	14	7
There is in hands for Madm. Coke -	9	14	2

I hope the next will be a gold cup.

(1712, August.) Grampound.—Roger Teage to the Rt. Honble. the Vice Chamberlain Coke at St James's, London.

I have the favour of yours, and since all the acts of the pretended Mayor are void, there is no occasion for us to trouble ourselves any further, or to have any further thoughts of a new charter. And seeing I have already entered a protest in form against his proceedings, I should think it not advisable for us to attend the election of a new Mayor; about which I desire you will be pleased to discourse the old Mr. Vincent when he comes to wait on you. And what you and he think fit to be done here shall be performed to the utmost of my power.

1712, September 6. Ghent.—General C. Sibourg to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

Last Saturday I received yours of the 3rd. August: where it has been all this time I cannot imagine. With a great pleasure I'll perform those little commissions you honour me with. Next week I'll go to Antwerp to get the velvet; that is, as I am told, the best place. I am in doubt about the cambrick: the pieces are of different sizes, some are for nine handkerchiefs, others for double the number. The finest I can find here for nine will come about four pistoles. I shall expect your direction as to that. I fear we shall have time enough to exchange letters before I can think of getting for Great Britain. It is but too common that we that are at our duty neglect our business; and this time may be called the critical minute. We have reports here of the breaking of many more regiments than our first list of 36. If so it must be very bad with me. You are the best friend I can have recourse to both for advice and assistance. It is a damned thing to outlive one's trade,—principalement quand on a toujours compté sans son hoste, and the balance is always on the wrong side. This is pretty melancholy, but—Vogue la galére; avec un tel pilote que vous, je me fais fort de passer tous les écueils. Think of poor John in pudding time. I'll take of coffee colour handkerchiefs and plain snuff. If my zeal is as great in these trifles, I hope you'll believe I only want power for matters of greater moment.

(1712), September 9. N. S. Ghent.—General C. Sibourg to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

We have the news of my Lord Rivers being dead. It may happen that some of our great men, either of horse or dragoons, may get that old regiment, and by that some of my low station might be thought of for the regiment they leave. I don't doubt but you remember that the time the Queen ordered my Lord Lansdowne to tell me Her Majesty's pleasure for the regiment I have at present, his Lordship had also orders to assure me that Her Majesty designed to provide for me when occasion offered in the horse. What I wish I could obtain is the Queen's being put in mind of that gracious assurance: and you, dear Sir, are the person I fly to for this assistance. I spoke about this to the Duke of Ormond this day: he seems to be very zealous in granting me his protection: he said it would be well to have the Queen spoke to. The rest I leave to my good friend: I hate repetitions, except it be in assuring you of the sincerest gratitude a soul is capable of. I have often thought to have reason for flattering myself with my Lord Bolingbroke's protection.

(1712), September 24. Ghent.—General C. Sibourg to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

Last night I returned to this town from Antwerp, where I went to find some good velvet, but there is none broader than three quarters of a Dutch ell, and of that breadth 26 Dutch ells will not be sufficient for a lady's mantua and petticoat. The ladies here 36. I would buy none, fearing the narrow velvet would not please. Pray send me your orders. I have bought snuff and handkerchiefs; I wish I was to carry them to you this moment. This is now but a tedious place, since we have no business. They tell me old Palmer is very ill. Dear Sir, pray remember poor John in the time of need. I hear they have given away the rank of my regiment. How it is done, or by whom, I don't know; but this is the matter. By virtue of an order signed by King William and confirmed by her Majesty, those regiments raised in England took post of those raised in any other place, they only having their seniority by coming on the English establishment; by which I was before a good many. But how this has been altered I am not informed. You see, Sir, that I have reason to fear that after five or six and twenty years service, seven of them as a general officer, I am like to see myself with half pay as Colonel, and that for one year. You are near the Sun; I beg a little light and advice. You are the only friend I have any recourse to. 'Tis hard to starve when I see a crowd of young fellows assured of living at ease.

1712, September 27. Bucklebury.—Edward Hungerford to Vice Chamberlain Coke at Bath.

I am desired by my niece to acquaint you she received your historical letter of the place where you are, and is much concerned she is not able to answer herself. . . . In your return with your lady from the Bath, she hopes you will be as good as your word, and take Bucklebury in your way. Pray be pleased to salute the Cardinal in her Ladyship's name, and trouble him with the kind remembrance of her amanuensis and his brother bachelor. And if you should all happen to join in a visit to the melancholy lady of this mansion, it will be a mighty aggravation of the favour both to her Ladyship and her unworthy scribe, but your most humble servant.

COKE MSS.

1712–13, January 12. Probus.—Dr. William Smyth to (no address).

I return you my hearty thanks for your care about my own concern, as well as what relates to our borough (Grampound). Mr. Hughes sent me word that long looked for was come: he was going to Mr. Philip Hawkins to have a warrant filled up on the special writ, and was in hopes to serve the law on the late pretended Mayor. Mr. Nicholas Herle came to my house last night on his way to Truro, and there at sessions to enter in his office. . . . I hope you'll pardon the importunity of the triumvirate, and construe our earnestness to proceed from our zeal to support my Lord (Lansdown's) interest, and to frustrate Mr. Bus . . . n's (Boscawen's) designs in our corporation. What progress we make shall constantly be made known to you: and we shall request you to continue your hearty concern for our borough: your diligence and application having this very day given us new spirits and put our hearts at ease. My Lord's interest is what we chiefly aim at: but that Mr. B. may be baffled we shall spare no pains. Pray our duties to my Lord. My thanks and service to Mr. Coke when you wait on him again.

1712–3, February 20. Deal.—Robert Littill to the Rt. Hble. Mr. Coke, Vice Chamberlane, at his lodgings in St. James's House, London.

I have not yet been on board by reason of the bad weather: but I have seen the Captain on shore, who promises me all the conveniency the ship will allow. Captain Paddon is to command the ships bound on this expedition: he is in the Ruby riding here in the Downs. I beg you will be pleased to get an order out from the Admiralty Board directed for Captain Paddon to provide for me as Lieutenant the first vacancy as falls in the voyage. Pray direct for me on Board the Feversham in the Downs.

1712–3, February 23. Blockley.—Colonel Henry Hunt to the Rt. Hble. Thomas Coke, Vice Chamberlain to Her Majesty, at his lodgings in St. James's, London.

There is a plate of between 20*l.* and 30*l.* to be run for at Salisbury the 18th of next month, only one heat, ten stone, and a guinea the entrance. I don't look upon the match in Derbyshire to be any trial for your horse: therefore, if you think fit, I'll go with him to Salisbury, where we shall see what we may expect from him. I think you can never have a trial cheaper, but I shall observe your commands. I find I am not so happy as to have the Queen's leave yet, and the Captain that is to succeed me will not lay out a penny till he has his commission, so the service will suffer if the troop's not in order. Therefore I beg the favour that you'll do me the favour to forward it, for I would now willingly know the Queen's resolution about it.

1712–3, February 16. Probus near Grampound.—Dr. William Smyth to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

I had the honour to be intimately acquainted with Mr. James Buller deceased and was at his house when Mr. Alexander Pendarves desired him to recommend your honour to Grampond, which he did by commanding me to signify the same to the Borough. Soon after he died. Then I acquainted his heir, Mr. John Buller of Morval, that his nephew had recommended Mr. Coke to Grampound, and desired he would do the same. He did so, and I attended the election; and after the election gave every one of your friends a pair of mourning gloves. I wrote Mr. Buller that your honour was unanimously chosen, and desired his letter of thanks to the town, which was accordingly sent. I only mention this to your honour, that it may be advisable to compliment the old gentleman, and to thank him for his last favour, and to request him to join with my Lord Lansdowne in his recommendation of your honour again. Not that we need his help; but a letter may be of service, and may restrain three of the magistrates from acting against my Lord's interest. The cause of Grampound must be tried before a judge that is no friend to . . . . or perhaps Fletcher will make no plea to the declaration: if so we are at a loss, and so must try other ways and means: and Mr. Buller can certainly influence the present Mayor and his brethren in iniquity. I sometime since intimated this to my Lord. And now, Sir, I return you my hearty thanks for your most obliging letter, and for the trouble you've taken in qualifying me to be more serviceable to my neighbours here below, and my noble friends above. I must own I have retained a secret veneration for your person, ever since I heard Mr. Pendarves say to Mr Buller, that you was the only man that could be entrusted to deliver those secret messages to the Queen, by which prudent management, under God, we are now happy in a faithful and wise ministry and a loyal House of Commons. I must likewise acknowledge that I truly love and honour my good Lord Lansdowne, for whose good and welfare I am not only obliged in duty to pray, as having received so many favours from his Lordship, and do now stand happily related to his Lordship; but because I have made this observation to myself, that whenever it went well with the Granvilles, it went well with the Church of England, but when that illustrious family were obscured, or had not the smiles of the Court, it was then the Church laboured under her greatest struggles and difficulties. Our churches in Cornwall retain a letter from the blessed Martyr, King Charles, setting forth the great loss sustained by the death of Sir Bevil Granville; as though he had foreseen that the death of such a General and branch of that family was the presage, or forerunner, of the downfall of monarchy and episcopacy. Now, Sir, well knowing what good services you have done in being an instrument in rescuing us from the jaws of a devouring faction, I was obliged by all the ties of interest, principle, and love to our happy establishment, to serve you cheerfully and heartily, and to leave no stone unturned to secure your next election. And what could I do less than promote my Lord Lansdowne's interests? for should the Whigs ever again get the ascendant, they would insult his person, roast the honest clergy, and bring the Church into extreme danger. So that self preservation, and a real concern for the good of Great Britain, and the regard I owe to my mother, the Church of England, and the allegiance due to the best of Queens, did move me to exert all my strength and ability to make Grampond again happy by being represented by your honour. Sir, I have only done my duty, satisfied my conscience, and given my Lord a small grateful acknowledgment of his great kindness to me, by endeavouring to put our neighbouring boroughs under his Lordship's patronage, and continuing our corporation in great repute, by being honoured with such a burgess as Mr. Coke. I am so sensible of your favours, that I will not omit any future opportunity to complete the undertaking of myself and colleagues, and to give you more pregrant testimony, that you was not much mistaken when your honour thought fit to oblige, worthy Sir, your most faithful, thankful, and obedient servant. I humbly beg your honour to join with my Lord in procuring a small place for one Mr. Cary. Mr. Vincent has a petition signed by many of my Lord's friends in Mr. Cary's behalf.

COKE MSS.

1712–3, March 5. (Portsmouth.)—Lieut. Robert Littill to the Rt. Hble. the Vice Chamberlain at his lodgings in St. James's House, London.

Captain Paddon sailed for Plymouth to get all the ships ready that was bound for Lisbon. We in company with H.M.'s ship Rye Galley put in here to see if any ships for those parts was here. We are now in a readiness to sail, but it blows very hard. Captain Paddon is still at Plymouth, where I hope he has received the order you was pleased to promise me. I have a cabin on board here, and live very happy, until your goodness will think of something better.

1713, May 4.—The manner of proclaming the Peace with France as it was ordered by Her Majesty in Council.

The Peace to be proclaimed on horseback at St. James's Gate and then they proceed in manner following.

A Detachment of the Horse Granadiers.

Officers of the Steward's Court of Westminster.

Knight Marshall Men.

Knight Marshall. Steward of Westminster. High Bailiff of Westminster.

Queen's Trumpets.

Serjeant Trumpet bearing his mace.

Serjeants at Arms with their maces. } Pursuivant at Arms. { Serjeants at Arms with their maces.

A Serjeant at Arms. Kings of Arms. A Serjeant at Arms.

The Horse Guard.

In this manner they proceed to Temple Bar where they are received by the Lord Mayor Aldermen Recorder and Sheriffs of London on horseback attended as usual, and a little within the Gate they proclaim it a second time, after which they proceed in this manner.

Detachment of the Horse Granadiers.

Knight Marshall and his men.

The Queen's Trumpets.

Serjeant Trumpet bearing his mace.

Pursuivants at Arms.

Serjeants at Arms. Heralds of Arms. Serjeants at Arms.

A Serjeant at Arms. Kings of Arms. A Serjeant at Arms.

The City Officers and Attendants on foot. { The Sword Bearer. The Lord Mayor. } The City Officers and Attendants on foot.

Aldermen Recorder and Sheriffs in their places.

The Horse Guard.

Being come to the place where the Cross formerly stood at Cheapside over against Wood Street, they proclaim it a third time and lastly in like manner at the Royal Exchange at Change time.

1713, August 18. London.—Dr. William Smyth of Probus to [Vice Chamberlain Coke]. COKE MS

How much my Lord Lansdowne's interest at Grampound has been supported by Mr. Roger Teage is well known to your honour. Ask that his brother John Teage may be moved from his place of Collector of Excise in Gloucestershire to a like place in Cornwall. Richard Davies lately an officer in Truro division for duties on hides &c. has been dismissed upon an information against him that he is indebted to tanners and tawers. He has sent up to the Board certificates of the tanners and tawers of his division that he is not indebted to them. He has enemies by making seizures, particularly upon Peter Herle of Grampound, Mr. Boscawen's tool, and pretended Mayor of Grampound. If honest men attack Mr. B.'s friends, a means is found to discharge them, and give their posts to his agents. It will be of mighty consequence that our friends be encouraged, the elections coming on again, by bringing back Mr. John Teage, and restoring the poor man Davies. I should be glad for my friends' interest in Tregony if Mr. Can's two sons in law, Henry Tredwen and Edward Richards could be made Boatmen at Penryn: and that Richard Andrew of Tregony could succeed Mr. Asterly as land waiter at St. Ives in Cornwall. I am likewise desired to solicit for one Nicholas Andrew to be Tidewaiter at Padstow in the room of R. Croker or W. Lock. There was a petition sent up, signed by many gentlemen and freeholders of Cornwall, in behalf of Mr. Nathaniel Cary, a relation of Mr. Cary of Clovelly, that my Lord Lansdowne would be pleased to procure some small place for him. I beg that he may be gratified, for he is in great distress, and has a great family. I was likewise solicited that Mr. Richard Weekes of my parish should be placed as an extraordinary man on shipboard. I think I have gone though all the matters given me in charge in behalf of my Cornish friends. I have to ask you that by your interest with the Board or with Mr. Harley you will please to remove Mr. Broughton, the present Collector of Excise for Cornwall to some other county. There are many of Mr. Boscawen's tools at St. Mawes and other places of our County, which are kept in their places, though they vote at every election against the friends of the Queen and Ministry. Many honest Cornish electors sincerely wish Mr. Boscawen's creatures discharged, and loyal persons put in their places, before the elections. Pray exert your interest with my Lord Treasurer on this point. I think this is sufficient for Cornwall: only I wish my Lord and you would forthwith agree upon a good partner at Grampound; and that two substantial persons be recommended for Tregony. I beg leave I may intercede for my own two brothers, who live in London. They both were brought up to the drawing and flatting gold and silver wire; which trade being much decayed, and having many children, are reduced to great straits. For one I would only ask a warder's place in the Tower of London: for the other any place here, about London: he is truly honest, truly loyal. I have my only son with me, and I would gladly place him in the Charterhouse School, if you would speak to any of the Governors in his behalf. And when opportunity presents, I flatter myself that my good Lord and Mr. Coke will procure me some additional preferment to what I have already. Probably your Royal Mistress may have some to bestow in a short time, which I may have though I live in Cornwall.

(1713?)—"Order for posting the Sentinels at Windsor upon the Birthday." Sentinels to be posted by the Foot Guards.

At the Castle—

At the Iron Gate—a Sergeant and 12 men		12
In the Kitchen Court		4
At the stairs of the Green Cloth Tower		2
At the Ladies of the Bedchambers' stairs		2
At the backstairs to the Gallery		2
At the Queen's backstairs		2
At Mrs. Danvers's stairs		2
At the Keep		2
At the Old Council Chamber stairs		2
At the Maids of Honour's stairs		2
At the Lord Treasurer's stairs		2
At Mrs. Cooper's stairs		2
At the Lord Masham's stairs		2
At the Green Cloth stairs		2
At the Bishop of Ossory's stairs		2
At the Lord Bolingbroke's Office stairs		2
		44

At the Garden House. In the morning—

At the fore door a Sergeant and 11 men		12
At the door to the Kitchen Court		6
At the Duchess of Somerset's door		2
		20

As soon as the Company is dismissed at the Garden House—

At the fore door		6
At the door to the Kitchen Court		4
At the Duchess of Somerset's door		2
		12

A Subaltern Officer and 30 men to remain near the Garden House all day.

The Guards at the Queen's Garden House and at the Iron Gate to keep the passage clear of ordinary people.

The Sentinels at the several Stairs to keep the Stairs clear from any ordinary people that don't belong to the families there, and to be assistant to prevent any disorder.

Yeomen of the Guard to be posted—

At the Castle—

At the foot of the Great Stairs	6
At the top of the Great Stairs	4
At the Queen's backstairs	1
At the backstairs by the Ladies of the Bedchambers' Lodgings	1
At the backstairs by the Gallery	1
In the Privy Chamber by the Gallery door	2
	15	15

In the Garden House—
In the passage at the top of the stairs -	2
At the bottom of the same stairs - -	2
At the back stairs - - - -	1
	5	5
		20

1713–4, January 4. Cockpit.—John Evans to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

I have found a house, with the approbation of the Commissioners [of Commerce] that will do: it is next door to Newbourg House in the Park. The rent is 100*l.* for six months furnished. Considering the expense that would be in furnishing from the Great Wardrobe, I believe your Honour will think it much the cheaper way to take it furnished, and thereby save more money to the Queen. I do find by the Commissioners' Secretary that they have a great mind to Mr. Craig's house, for he told me today it would serve for another office, after they had done with it, which revived in my thoughts your Honour's opinion that it would introduce Lord Mar into the Plantation Office at Whitehall, by removing that office to Craig Court.

1713–4, January 19. Cockpit.—John Evans to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

I have spoke to Mr. Holbeck about Mr. Ireland's [of the Wardrobe] money; who has promised to stop it. Enclosed is the Managers of the Playhouse Remonstrance, and two letters for Monsieur Rosencrans and C[l] Vandernath's presents.

1713–4, January 25. Christ Church, Oxon.—W. Stratford to Vice Chamberlain Coke.

I beg leave to return my sincere thanks for all the favours I received at Windsor, and for the very easy conveyance you were pleased to provide for me to Reading. I must own I was somewhat out of countenance at the state of it, and those I met were surprised to see one of my cloth so accommodated. I must leave the Lady of Bucklebury to express her own thanks for the favour of your letter. . . . I believe you must be content to hear from her, and not expect to see her this winter, unless you go to her. I have sent you the Chronological Tables: they were published by one Marshall, but they were drawn up by the Bishop of Worcester, and are the most exact that ever yet came out. I have not yet sent the Ortelius, because I found mine was not his Geography with maps, but only his Geographical Dictionary without any maps; which would have been of no use to you, and there are much better Dictionaries since his time.

1713–4, January 31. Windsor Castle.—Lord Bolingbroke to Vice Chamberlain Coke.

Sir I have just time to acquaint you that my Lord Treasurer would have you immediatly hier Craig house for six months certain, with a power to continue it a longer time, if ocation; or any other house that is convenient for the Commissioners that are appointed to settle the Treaty of Commerce.

1714, August 18. Suffolk Street.—Earl of Suffolk (Lord Marshal) to Mr. Vice Chamberlain Coke.

Sir, the solemnity of the Interment of the late Queen being to be performed (pursuant to the Resolution of the Lords Justices in Council) with great Respect and Decency, you are appointed to assist the two Duchesses who are to bear the Chief Mourner's Train on this Occasion, and to meet in the House of Peers at Westminster on Sunday the 22nd instant, at the Hour of six in the Evening.

OXE MSS.

(1714 about), August 13.—Lady Catharine Clark to Mr. Vice Chamberlain Coke.

. . . I thank God I have mended ever since I desired Dr. Ratchcliff's opinion for my health: but my weakness and disorder is so apt to return that I thought it convenient to have his directions by me; which I find is a particular favour, granted I do suppose wholly upon Mrs. Betty Coke's account, who stood very much my friend in that, as also in every thing else, wherein I have had great experience of her kindness. I am much concerned for your lady's indisposition, but wish her a speedy recovery, and yourself and daughters free from any attacks of the like nature, together with a good journey to the Bath, and all the benefit that place can possibly afford. All this neighbourhood are confirmed in their wishes of waiting upon you at Melborne the next month, by the assurance Colonel Hunt, who is now here, has given them of your coming about that time into the country. I suppose you may have heard before now, how victorious your horse has been at Weston Race, and gained such immortal honour as to be reckoned amongst the jockeys as the best horse in England. There was a noble appearance of gentlemen, and all the ladies of that side the country; and though my health did not permit me to be in the number of spectators, yet I may brag I was in those who betted their money on your side, and must own I was particularly pleased in your good fortune.

. . .

1714, October 1.—Earl of Radnor to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

Sir, I was to wait on you at your lodgings, but had not the good fortune to find you at home. It was to acquaint you that King William gave that little lodging to Mrs. Aspinwall on the account of the sufferings of her father, Sir Ralph Freeman. It never belonged to any office, as I shall inform you, when I have the honour to see you.

1714, October.—A List of the several Lodgings in St. James's House and the Persons by whom possessed. [Indorsed by Vice-Chamberlain Coke, "List of Persons lodged in St. James's before his Majesty's arrival."]

My Lord Chamberlain. Two Rooms under the King's Lodgings.
My Lord Oxford, formerly Col. Griffith's, Officer of the Greencloth.
Mr. Vice Chamberlain.
Mr. Scarburgh, Officer of the Greencloth.
My Lord De la Warr, a Large Apartment.
My Lord Masham's Office, as Cofferer.
Bishop of London two Rooms, possessed by one of the Chapel.
Mr. Lucas, Keeper of the Chapel Closet.
Mr. Faverall's lodgings, the first Master Cook.
Mr. Hounslef, the second Master Cook.
Mr. Dissell, the third Master Cook.
Mr. Buckholt, Yeoman of the Robes to his late Royal Highness the Prince.
Mr. Hipseley (as looks after the cesspools).
Mrs. Arundell, Bedchamber Woman to Queen Anne.
Mrs. Hartstongue, Bedchamber Woman, keeps the key.
Maids of Honour. Six Lodgings.

Mr. Sherrard, Gentleman Usher of the Privy Chamber.
Mrs. Hopgood, her husband dead, belonged to Queen Anne.
Mrs. Dole, her husband was a Cook to the Duke of Gloster.
Mrs. Foiston, Necessary Woman.
Mr. Coleman, Officer in the Woodyard.
Mrs. Moore, Sempstress to Queen Anne; her lodging is cleared, but has the key.
His Majesty's Chaplains' Dining Room.
Clerk of the Kitchen's Office.
Removing Wardrobe.
Spicery, Ewry, Pantry, Scullery, Scalding House, Flesh Larder, and Laundress.
Sweeper of the Courts.
Mr. Brown, Under Housekeeper.

(Note by Vice Chamberlain Coke.)—"Lodgings granted by K. William to my Lady Freman and her daughter, upon account of many thousand pounds lent to King Charles and a considerable estate spent in his Majesty's service, King Charles the Second: of which my Lord Radnor gave an account to Monsr. Cranenburg and Baron Bothmar."

1714, November 12.—Vice Chamberlain Coke to the Earl of Oxford. (Draft.)

My Lord, Hearing your Lordship would be willing, if you could have the Charcoal House and the ground it stands upon, to build your Library, to part with the piece of ground which goes to the new buildings, which would be convenient to his Majesty's service, to make some cellars and other conveniences, which are wanting now to the family. I beg the favour to know your Lordship's mind upon it; that it may be put in a way of being exchanged to the advantage of his Majesty's service, and your accommodation.

1714, November 12.—Earl of Oxford to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

Ever since Mr. Lowman spoke to me, I have been confined to my chamber by excesive pain, which hath hindered me waiting upon you, on Mr. Lowman's proposal; for I will in no way be wanting in anything I can to accommodate his Majesty's service. My Library being all MSS., the Crown and the Nation have more real concern in them than myself. And having cost me so many thousand pounds, I was willing to have them in a place of security. It made me think of buying Lord Fitzharding's, and building a Library there, of which I had a draught. The Queen forbid me treating there, and ordered me to buy this, and promised me a lease, and ground to build. But God took away the good Queen; and I have been at great expense to make the house habitable, which I intend to leave now to my son; and would willingly secure the Library, which if lost is not to be restored. This is the truth of my case: and I hope by Monday to be able to wait upon you, because I would lose no time in retiring to the country.

1714, December 10.—Vice Chamberlain Coke to the Earl of Oxford. (Draft.)

I am desired to acquaint your Lordship that his Majesty would buy your term of the whole Grant, and that your Lordship is desired to make your demand as to the price. I mentioned what your Lordship desired as to the occasion you should have to keep it till Lady Harriet Harley had lain in: but I could not tell the time you reckoned that would be. I beg the favour of your Lordship to let me have your answer as to these particulars, and your commands in anything else to my power.

Coke MSS.

1714, December 13.—Earl of Oxford to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

Sir, Your letter found me under a relapse, not having been out of the house since Tuesday last, and my hands have been so swelled I could not hold a pen until now; which I make use of to give a distinct answer to the three particulars you mention in your letter.

The first is, 1. That it is his Majesty's pleasure to purchase my whole Grant &c.

I can answer this in no better terms than I have done before—the whole, or part, is at his Majesty's command.

2. As to the time of my daughter's lying in.

She reckons the end of January, and is immediately coming to town. Young women are not so exact in reckoning of their first child, but it cannot be much difference, and after that is over, no time will be lost in going out.

3. As to the price.

I cannot tell whether it will be decent for me to make a price to his Majesty: but as I would not ask a farthing more of the Crown than it would be worth to any private person, so I presume upon his Majesty's justice that he would not have me take less.

The prime cost was 3,500*l.* I have spent near nine months in repairing it, which has cost more than new building it would have done, as will appear upon view; besides what is done to beautify it within, and to secure it by taking all the timber out of the chimneys and walls.

I am a little cautious in naming a price, because, when I proposed an exchange so many hundred pounds to his Majesty's advantage, it was not taken as I intended it.

However, I will examine all my bills of charges, and when anyone (as is customary) is appointed to treat, I hope my proposals will appear very reasonable, being resolved to found them or those accounts of what it stands me in.

1714–5, January 7.—Vice Chamberlain Coke to the Earl of Oxford. (Draft.)

My Lord, Yesterday my Lord Halifax spoke to me to make this proposal to your Lordship—that his Majesty pay the 3,500*l.*, the first purchase money, and interest of that sum from the time your Lordship paid the money to the Duke of Grafton to the time of his Majesty's purchasing it of your Lordship, and likewise whatever your Lordship have laid out in repairing and fitting the house to the condition it is now in, as it shall appear by the bills, and the inventory of what you propose to leave in the house. If your Lordship approve of this, which I think is the ground on which you founded the demand of the 7,000*l.*, and will order anybody to prepare the bills, there will be one appointed, with the person you shall name, to prepare everything with all expedition to finish this affair as soon as possible, and I hope to your Lordship's entire satisfaction.

1714–5, January.—A paper indorsed by Vice Chamberlain Coke, "List of Pictures that were in the Earl of Oxford's Lodgings at St. James's."

1. Over the Chimney Piece—The Princess of Orange, half length, by Wissing.
2. } Two Seaports by Danckert.
3. }
4. The Duke of Buckingham's Family, by Honthorst.
5. A Diana by Gennari.

6. A Roman.
7. A half length French Lady with a horn.
8. A half length Lady Abbess—the manner of Sir Antony More.
9. The Stoning of St. Stephen—in two colours.
10. St. George a killing the Dragon.
11. A Madonna with St. Catherine and St. Jerome—after Corregio.
12. A Woman a holding a Standard.
13. A Sleeping Venus with Cupids—by Gennari.
14. Pomfret Castle.
15. A Head of the Lady Maria Henrietta.
16. An Eropia (Europa?)
17. Our Saviour Scourged.
18. Three Ladies Heads in one piece.
19. A Landscape with a Bridge.
20. A Sea Monster with seven breasts.
21. A Madonna with St. John when a child.
22. A Young Man's Head, in red slashed sleeves.
23. Actæon and Diana.
24. A Sea Piece.
25. Our Saviour a curing the blind.
26. A French Gentleman's Head with a point cravat.
27. A Seaport by Danckert.
28. A St. John with a Lamb—by Corregio.
29. A Triumph by Hell Brueghel.
30. A Ship piece in distemper.
31. A Soldier's Head—large life—with his hand on his beard.
32. A French Lady's Head—three-quarter.

1715, August 7 (N.S.) Bruxelles. T. Kennedy to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

I have received a letter from Baron Bothmar, who has done me the honour to interest himself to obtain of his Majesty the present that is usually given, which Mrs. Kennedy should have had by the death of Mr. Vrybergue: and he informs me he has had the King's orders for it, and that you were so kind as to assist him in it. Which is the reason I take the liberty to assure you of Mrs. Kennedy's and my most grateful acknowledgments for this favour: and if there be anything we can be serviceable to you and your lady at Bruxelles, I hope you will honour us with your commands.

1715, December 16. St. James.—De Robethon.

I do hereby certify that when the assignation was presented to the King to have Jane Spencer paid out of the German cash, for cleaning several apartments in the Palace, his Majesty refused to sign it, and said she ought to be paid out of the English establishment, as well as the rest of those women. And since the others, as Mrs. Peach and the like, have got warrants in order to receive money at Christmas, I hope the Lord Chamberlain will be so kind as to order a warrant to be prepared for her, and that she may also be reimbursed of her bills, being out of pocket for several little things all which I apprehend to be just and conform to the King's intentions.

(Inclosure.—His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales—for cleaning his apartments 3 days. For Count Platten—7 rooms since the King came. For Secretary Rupton—6 rooms. Mr. Hatrofe 2 rooms).

1715.—Goods furnished at St. James's Palace by the Groom Porter.

To the Countess of Schulenberg; to the young Princes; to the Prince's Dressing Room; to the Lord Powletts at Somerset House;

COKE MSS.

to Mrs. Clayton; to the Prince of Wales's New Apartment; to the Chocolate Room; to the Duchess of St. Albans; to a Lady's Room above; to the Foreign Council; to the Semstress; to the Young Princess' New Rooms; to the Lady Governess; to the Nursery; to the young Lady Schulenberg; to the Countess of Kielmanseck; to Mr. Lochman; to Mustapha Turk; to Ulrich; to the Prince's Guard Chamber; to the Waiters' Eating Room; to the Pages, Mr. Pursell and Mr. Brickman; to the Womens' Eating Room; to the Vice Chamberlain Poultry &c.; to the Vestry of the Chapel.

(No date.)—A List of the Barges that attended His Majesty to Gravesend.

The King's Shallop	The Treasury of the Navy's 8 Oared Barge
The King's 12 Oared Barge	The Office of Ordnance 8 Oared Barge
The King's 6 Oared Barge	The Navy 6 Oared Barge
The Master's 6 Oared Barge	The Admiralty 6 Oared Barge
The Master's 4 Oared Barge	Sir William Windham's 4 Oared Boat

And 5 Galleys for the Servants and Baggage.

1716, May 14.—A paper endorsed by Vice Chamberlain Coke "Lord Harley's desire about his ground at St. James's."

Lord Harley having upon several occasions accommodated the Officers of his Majesty's Works and others for his Majesty's service with the use of several parts of the ground at St. James's within his Grant: but sheds and other the like buildings having been lately erected upon the said ground without his leave first asked, or knowledge: his Lordship desires such entries may be made in the books of the Office of Works, and signification thereof sent him in writing as may be sufficient for preserving his Lordship's property in all parts of his Grant, and that the said ground may be delivered up to his Lordship when he shall desire it.

1716, July 16. Queen Street, near So-hoe.—Dr. William Smyth to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

I have been many months in town, and must beg your pardon that I have not waited on you. But really, Sir, I have met with many great disappointments, and because I could not appear before my friends with as good an interest as formerly, I have forborn to visit them: though I persuade myself I should have been received by you, with as much kindness as when I supported your election at Grampound. I shall speedily return to Cornwall, but before I go I beg the favour to let me know when it suits with your conveniency that I may wait on you, to crave your advice and assistance in reference to some matters of consequence to me and my family, who must inevitably be ruined, should our good old friend miscarry by his close confinement. I suppose Mr. Southwell is in town; and his election which was so burdensome must bear hard on me, if I have not the monies repaid: at least some part to supply my present very urgent occasions. But if Mr. Southwell will not part with any more as a debt due from him, I hope you will prevail with him to lend me some, till my Lord is at liberty.

1716, September 26.—James Brydges, Earl of Carnarvon, to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

Sir, I am under great confusion to think I have been so long in answering your last favour: but I am confident you have a juster opinion of me than to impute it to any want of respect I can be capable of towards one, with whom I have had so long a friendship, and for whom I have so perfect a value. The money you remitted on Mr. Hammond's account hath been paid to Colonel Brown, and I believe came very seasonably to him, for the sending his son over. The Prince set out on Monday from Hampton Court, for Portsmouth, and took a little tour through Kent and Sussex. His first day's journey was 57 miles, the next 56: the third day he was to rest at Portsmouth, and comes back on Thursday to Hampton Court. I hear it talked as if the Princess had an inclination to lie in at Hampton Court: but the inconveniences attending it will be so many and great, that I cannot but think those who have the honour to be about Her Royal Highness will use their utmost to dissuade her. I return my thanks for your obliging invitation into Derbyshire. I wish I had leisure enough to accept it, for I know nobody whose conversation would make me pass my time more agreeably: but my misfortune is to be detained in or near the town by business, which is of consequence enough to take up all my thoughts and time.

1716, December 15. Hanover.—Madame de Kielmensegge to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

Monsieur, Vous ne vous dementés pas à mon égard: vous continués vos manieres obligeantes dans l'absence, comme vous les avés toujours eu pendant que j'étois à Londre. Je ne puis assés vous temoigner combien je suis sensible à toutes vos honnêtetés. Les attantions que vous me marqués prouve le veritable caractaire d'un ami. J'en ay toute la reconnoissance possible, et je m'estimerois tres heureuse, si j'etois jamais en êtat de vous en temoigner une partie. Faute de ce pouvoir, vous reçevrés, j'espere, mes remerciements, et serés persuadé que quoy qu' impuissante à vous temoigner mes obligations, elles n'en sont pas moins fortes, pour cela. Je suis tres persuadée, Monsieur, qu'il n'a pas tenu à vous que ma maison de Londre et celle de Kengsington ne soyent deja prête; mais il n'est que juste que les petits marchent apres les grands. Je ne croy pas que quoy que le voyage du Roy soit assuré qu'il puisse être a Londre avant la mi Jenvier, vieux stile. Ainsi j'espere que tout sera fini. Les uns disent que S. M. va demeurer à Kengsington, les autres disent à St. James. Si c'est le dernier, je laisserai mes chembres commes elles êtoient, et la nouvelle chembre restera Dressing room, jusqu'à ce quelle soit assés sêche pour que j'y puisse coucher sans risque. Pour ce qui est de l'apartement de Mr. de Hattorf à St. James, j'espere qu'il y renoncera de bon cœur, jusqu'à ce qu'il en ait un meilleur: cela m'a du moins paru ainsy: et j'en parlerai à S. M. qui en fera sans doute êcrire au Duc de Bolton. Je vous prierai en ce cas, mon cher Monsieur, d'en hâter l'execution. A l'egard des meubles de Kengsington, les plus simples me suffiront: la maison n'est pas assés belle, pour la parer beaucoup; et d'ailleurs le moins de dépense et d'embaras que je cause m'est toujours le plus agréable. Il faut diviser la maison de Kengsington en trois petits apartements, ce qui se poura fort bien avec la nouvelle chembre: dans chaque apartement un lit, soit pour ma fille, ou pour quelque amie: et autant de lits pour les domestiques, qu'il y en a dans ma maison de St. James, ce que Mr. de Grave, page du back stairs de S. M., poura vous informer. En cas que la nouvelle chembre à Kengsington ne fût pas prête, et que le Roy y allât loger, je vous demeuderois toujours en grace que le reste fût meublé, et en ordre: mais encore une fois le plus simplement que my lord Duc et vous le jugerés apropos. Pourvu qu'on soit proprement, c'est tout ce qu'on peut exiger. Excusés toutes les peines que je vous donne, mon cher Monsieur. J'espere de pouvoir bientot vous en remercier de bouche, et avoir le plaisir d'embrasser Mrs. Kook, que je vous prie de saluer de ma part. Mr. de Kielmensegge me charge aussi de vous faire bien des compliments et amitiés de la sienne; et moy, je vous prie de croire que l'on ne peut être plus parfaitement que je la suis, Monsieur, votre tres humble et tres obeissante servante. Je vous laisse le maitre de comdamner telles fenetres que vous jugerés apropos dans ma nouvelle chembre.

CORK MSS.

(1716.)—Peers, Peeresses, Privy Councillors, summoned by Robert Burrell, James Cooke, Henry Waters, Robert Jenkinson and Adam Lysney, Grooms of the Great Chamber to His Majesty.

Living in St. James's Square and Leicester Fields.

Lord Belhaven
Lord Conway
Lord Herbert
Lord Leicester
Lord Lansdowne
Lord Hunsdon
Lord Gowran
Lord Fitzwilliam
Lord Cheney
Lord Molesworth.

The Pell Mell and all Westminster.

Duchess of Monmouth
General Earl
Duke of Schomberg
Lord Ferrers (at the Bath)
Lord Allington
Lady Effingham
Duke of Atholl
Lord Carleton
Duke and Duchess of Shrewsbury.
Duke and Duchess of Somerset
Mr. Southwell
Lords of the Admiralty
Lord Newburgh
Lady Dowager Portland
Lady Essex
Duke and Duchess of Richmond
Lord Loudoun (in Scotland)
Mr. Boscawen and his Lady
Lord and Lady Stanhope
Lord and Lady Rochester
Lady Dowager Oxford
Lord Scarsdale
Lord Lempster (?)
Lady Plymouth
Lord and Lady Halifax
Lord and Lady Abingdon
Lord and Lady Ashburnham.
Lord and Lady Lincoln
Lord Elford (?)
Lord Derby
Lord Willoughby
Lord Bingley
Archbishop of Canterbury
Bishop of Chester
„ Hereford
„ Lincoln
„ Rochester
„ Bristol „ Gloucester „ Peterborough
„ Llandaff.

Living in Covent Garden, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, Red Lion Square, Queen Square, Ormond Street, Lincoln's Inn Fields, and the Strand.

Lord Orford
Lord Thanet
Duchess Dowager of Rutland.
Lord Mountrath
Duke and Duchess of Montague
Bishop of Worcester
Duke and Duchess of Rutland
Lord Northampton
Lord Nottingham
Sir William Olds
Sir William Thomson
Lady Gainsborough
Lord Dundonald
Lord Castleton
Lady Robert Russell
Marquis of Lindsey
Lord Chancellor and Lady (Cowper).
Master of the Rolls
Lord Cardigan
Sir Edward Northey
Lord Clarendon
Lady Arlington
Bishop of London.

Duke of Montrose, Frith St.
Marquis of Annandale, Swallow St.
Earl of Sutherland, Marlborough St.
Earl of Bradford, Soho Square
Earl of Bute, Marlborough St.
Bishop of Sarum, Golden Square
Earl of Carnarvon, Albemarle St.
Lord Coningsby, Albemarle St.
Lord Foley, Soho Square
Earl of Holderness, New Buildings by Trinity Chapel.
Lord Harborough, Brewer St.
Earl of Jersey, Golden Square
Earl of Ilay, Marlborough St.
Lord Mansel, Soho Square
Lord Orrery, Glass-house St.
Lord Onslow, Marlborough St.
Lord Poulett, Albemarle St.
Lord Romney, Soho Square.
Earl of Suffolk, Poland St.
Earl of Salisbury, King Street, St. James's
Lord Teynham, Golden Square
Lord Warrington, Poland St.
Lord Windsor, Bond St.
Earl of Yarmouth, Marlborough St.
Lord Brooke
Lord North and Grey, Poland St.

Kensington and Chelsea.

Lord Chief Justice Parker, Kensington.
Lord Maynard, Kensington
Lady Torrington do.
Lady Pierrepont do.
Bishop of Bath and Wells, Kensington
Countess of Warwick do.
Lord Bartlett (?) do.
Bishop of Winchester, Chelsea
Lady Radnor, do.
Lady Ketley, do.
Countess of Lindsey do.
Marquis of Meermount (?) Brompton.
Countess of Shaftesbury, Gravel Pits, in Paddington Parish.

1717, August 29. Treasury Chambers.—Chris. Tilson to Viscount Stanhope.

Mr. Thomas, from the Earl of Oxford, was at the Office this morning to have acquainted your Lordships, in case you had been sitting, that his Lordship will have cleared the house at St. James's of all his goods on Saturday next. There is many glasses fitted to panels, locks to doors, with kitchen grates and other fixed furniture, that his Lordship will not take away, if so be the person who is to have possession shall think them useful, and will give such a price as any two indifferent persons shall value them at. I shall wait your Lordship's commands, for Mr. Thomas tells me that he, on my Lord Oxford's part, will comply with any commands of your Lordships that shall be signified by me.

1717, September 5. Whitehall.—C. Dalton to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

I called yesterday at Somerset House with a design to acquaint you how the Greencloth do usurp upon my Lord Chamberlain. First in our diet—they give us what meat they please from the King's table, which are sometimes little better than garniture, as cold fish, Salamon Gundy and the like, so that really more than once we have had much ado to make a dinner. Our table never was upon this foot to eat after a dozen or fourteen people, nor ever had we any hunting dinners either in King William's or the late Queen's time, only a dish or two to the Pages of Honour that waited. Next they have taken away all the candles, both in the Privy and Presence Chamber: so that one Council night the Lords run their noses against the hangings. Nay the Duke of Kent refuses to give us a candle to light the King, which is my Lord Chamberlain's own candle, saying he goes in always privately, and all this by way of good husbandry upon us and our under officers, when not one under him loses the value of a halfpenny. So, Sir, if you please, when you have an opportunity, to represent this to my Lord Chamberlain, that he may assert his own right, and not suffer us to be governed by the Board of Greencloth. The Societies talked of representing this KE MSS. jointly to his Grace; but I, being obliged to go into the country, chose to do it in this way, for which I ask you a hundred pardons.

1717, September 5. Bishopston. — Duke of Newcastle to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

Dear Sir,—The Serjeant at Arms attending the House of Commons being dead, and Sir John Stanley having informed me that the disposal of the office is in me, I have given it, if the King is so good as to approve of it, to my particular friend, the bearer, Mr. Thomas Spence. Sir J. Stanley has this morning sent me down the instruments for me to sign; but I would not think of doing it without having the King's leave. The favour that I would beg of you [is] that you would (with my most humble duty to his Majesty) acquaint him with the state of the case, and beg that he would give me leave to signify his pleasure to the Attorney General to prepare a Bill for a patent for Mr. Spence, who (if you will be so good as to let the King know) is one of a very considerable family in this country, always most zealous in his Majesty's interest, and for whose integrity and good behaviour in his office I hold myself responsible. You will be so kind as to let the King know that it has always been in the gift of the Lord Chamberlain, but that I would not in this, or anything else, proceed without knowing his Majesty's pleasure. I hope you will forgive this trouble, for the bearer is one for whom I am very much concerned, and your favour to me in his behalf shall be ever acknowledged. I hope you will let him know the King's pleasure as soon as you can. I should be glad if you could give a guess how long the King thinks of staying at Hampton Court, for I am just come up upon the Downs, and should be glad of a little hunting, before my return to Hampton Court: but would by no means stay so long, as not to be able to attend a considerable time upon his Majesty before he leaves Hampton Court. I wish you would be so good as to make my compliments to the King, and obtain his leave that I may remain here some little time longer, and then I will come and relieve you, and stir no more till his Majesty returns to London. I heartily thank you for all your favours, and am with great truth, dear Sir, your most faithful humble servant, Holles Newcastle.

1717, September 7 and 17.—William Thomas to the Rt. Honble. the Vice Chamberlain.

I suppose that by this time the several valuations of the goods agreed to be left in Lord Oxford's house will have been transmitted to you by the officer of the Works that took down the prices. I took notice to you and Sir J. Stanley what disadvantage it would be to his Lordship to have them valued by persons that are to furnish new in case the prices they set be not agreed to. This has appeared through the whole, but in nothing more extravagantly than in the things furnished by the Serjeant Plumber, who values them at about one fourth part of what Lord Oxford paid him for them. But as the rest of the new goods have been valued at about 20 per cent. loss, I think that a sufficient abatement in the cisterns and other leaden utensils. I proposed the same to Sir J. Stanley with respect to the glasses, that are now valued at 140*l.* and that stood his Lordship in above 225*l.* But I desire that you and Sir John Stanley will be pleased finally to settle the matter without waiting for any further orders from Lord Oxford, who I am satisfied will approve of whatever you shall determine in it.

1717.—The Memorial of Henry Wise and Joseph Carpenter.

Several complaints having been made about the service of herbs and other things from his Majesty's Gardens into the Kitchen and other Offices for his Majesty's use. The fact is as followeth—

In his late Majesty King William's time, the Gardens contained about 73 acres, for keeping of which was allowed 4,168*l.* 19*s.* per annum, and 831*l.* 1*s.* per annum to artificers for garden repairs. The Kitchen Gardens then were as much as now, and the King had no more than to serve for 6 plates a day of herbs, salads &c., out of them.

Her late Majesty Queen Anne by several new additions increased the Gardens from 73 to upwards of 140 acres, and then to reduce the expense, agrees with Mr. Wise to keep the whole for less than 3,000*l.* per annum, the Kitchen Gardens being still the same. The produce of fruits, roots and herbs of all kinds that were of use, were constantly served in for her Majesty's use.

After his Majesty King George's accession, the contract for keeping the Gardens was renewed upon the same foot, and the produce of the Kitchen Gardens has all along been served in to the King, Prince and Princesses' use, with a great deal more that has been bought by Mr. Wise, and things raised at Brompton Park. A short abstract of two years' service for the King and Princes only, (exclusive of all others, which is not a little) is here subjoined.

The Kitchen Gardens, all that can be cultivated and cropped with eatables, we believe does not exceed seven acres of the worst land that can be for that purpose, being naturally a poor dry burning sand: and was it seventy instead of seven, 'twould be impossible to equal the markets (or rather we may say, all the gardens 20 miles round London) or to have perhaps anything so early. In such a compass as twenty miles there is land and places particularly proper for each thing, besides hundreds of people endeavouring to be the first in the market. Yet it will appear by the following account that his Majesty is continually supplied by his Kitchen Gardens with what they can be made to produce, notwithstanding the smallness of them, and badness of the soil.

	£	s.	d.
From 28 May 1715 to 28 May 1717 were delivered from the Gardens for the use of his Majesty, the Prince, Princess, and young Princesses 4368 baskets of fruit of all sorts at 2*s.* 6*d.* per basket, which, if to be bought, some of them would have cost three or four times the money: and 373 melons at 1*s.* each early and late - - -	546	0	0
Delivered within the aforesaid time for the use of the King Prince and Royal Family 1684 Salads. Above 6000 Cabbage Lettuces. 3541 Cucumbers. 1088 Artichokes. 4668 Celery and Endive. 1351 Bundles of Asparagus with Radishes, Peas, Beans, French Beans, Carrots, Savoys, Cauliflowers, Onions, Sweet Herbs, Borecole and great parcels of Flowers of all kinds for Basons, Bough Pots and Chimneys &c. at the common rates, when cheapest of all worth at least - - - - - -	250	0	0
	796	0	0
All the Fruit and Kitchen Gardens including Walks Alleys Dunghill places &c. are about 10 acres at 20*l.* per acre per annum keeping for two years comes to 400*l.*: and each acre of Kitchen Garden costs us between 30*l.* and 40*l.* per annum - - -	400	0	0
	£396	0	0

oxn MSS.

Within our contract for keeping the Gardens is particularly mentioned that we shall be allowed the charges for transporting the fruits, salads, herbs &c. from one Palace to another: which allowance has been stopped ever since Midsummer 1715, though always paid before. It is all money out of pocket, and as much our due as any other part of the Agreement.

1718, January 31. (N. S.) Messina.—Thomas Chamberlayne and Ra. Lee to the Honble. —— Coke, Esquire, in London.

The Marquis Trevi sent our Consul from Palermo two marble tables, with a request he'd forward them to your Honour per first English ship bound home: they are put on board this Paige Galley, Captain Goldsborough. These ministers have so much value for his Sicilian Majesty's customs, they could not be prevailed on to ship them free.

1718, July 30. Kensington.—Lochman to Vice Chamberlain Coke.

Whereas his Excellency Baron of Bernstorff is wanting for the use of his apartments at Hampton Court the following furniture, viz.

Four sets of window curtains and valence, of crimson camlet, or flowered stuff, the valence 20 inches deep, and 7 feet 6 inches long, and the curtains to be 2¾ yards long, and one cover over the dressing table of the same.
Two Presses for clothes.
One ditto for linen, with scolves (shelves ?).
One ditto for the Confectioner, with scolves.
A Teaboard under with a press and above with scolves and with doors.
One dining table for ten people.
One ditto for six people.

His Majesty has been graciously pleased to order me to acquaint you thereof, and that his will and pleasure is that the above mentioned furniture may be ordered and finished so soon as possible, and be ready before his Majesty goes there.

1718, September 10. Paris.—Michael Kinkaid to the Rt. Honble. Thomas Coke, Vice Chamberlain to his Majesty, Hampton Court.

I have been so much taken up with seeing the curiosities of this place and Versailles that I could not inform myself sufficiently, so as to be able to give you any tolerable account of the commission you was pleased to charge me with. So far as I can find as yet, Mariette is the only man can furnish me with what you want, but he is extravagantly dear. For instance, the book of the King of France's Medals—he will not abate one farthing of 300 livers, which is near 15*l.* sterling, though the preface is only in writing. This has given me so bad an impression of him, that I have employed two booksellers to look for it, and the other books you desire. Address for me to the care of Mr. William Gordon, Banquier, in Paris. I shall not stay so long in this place as I intended, for I prefer a vaudeville on the Pont Neuf to their Opera, and the prints of Le Brun to his paintings.

1718, October 3. Paris.—Michael Kinkaid to the Vice Chamberlain at Hampton Court.

I wrote to you the 10th past, in which I advised you how we were like to be treated by Mariette. After having searched all Paris I thought fit to buy for you the books and prints according to the inclosed account [absent] which I am very well satisfied we are not wronged in. The first four articles I have delivered to Mr. Southwell, who will be sooner with you than I shall. I have taken the liberty to draw upon you for 40*l.* I take journey tomorrow to Bourdeaux, where I intend to ship off some wine, which they say is admirable good this vintage. If I can serve you there, I hope you will freely command me. My address will be Mr. Robert Gordon, Marchant, in Bourdeaux. I have got 108 portraits of Vandyke, of which above 100 are Vanden Enden, and some proofs before the plates were finished, the best that ever I saw.

1718, November 26. Bourdeaux. — Michael Kinkaid to Vice Chamberlain Coke.

It is true I proposed to take back those books and prints I left with Mr. Southwell, but had not the good fortune to meet with him. I hope you have got them by this time. When I was at Paris I left orders with Mariette for the the Gallerie of the Conseillier at Aix : he, nor no other printsellers there, had ever seen it. I shall take care to procure the books you desire, if they are to be got. I left also with Mariette a note of Poussin's prints.

1719–20, January 10. Windsor —Richard Topham to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

I have according to the liberty you was pleased to give me taken one of the prints of Commodus, of which you have two or three, and in the room of it put two or three duplicates of mine. I find that you want very few of the prints of Lasseri, but I could wish that your proofs were in a better condition. If any come to my hands that are so, I shall be very glad to add to your collection. The books will be sent tomorrow by the Windsor caravan, John Yandall, master.

1719–20, February 12. St. Petersburg.—Robert Littell to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

I ask a thousand pardons for not having in so long a time done myself the honour to acquaint you of my proceedings since I left England which was September the 25th. From the Hope we sailed for Holland, where after lying some time we proceeded for the Baltic : but in the Cattegat meeting with hard gales and contrary winds, it was the latter end of November before we got to Copenhagen. Taking some time there to fit our ship, and to get provisions, found it impossible to proceed any further, but to winter there. After lying here till the 6th of May we set sail and on the 22nd of do. anchored before Crownslott [Cronstadt], where were his Czarish Majesty with the whole Court on board of the ship which he commanded in person, hauling her out of the harbour into the roads there. I had the honour to kiss his hand, who welcomed me to his country, and that hour gave me the command of a ship of 64 guns and 470 men, in which I served the last campaign. I now command a new ship of 72 guns, which hath never been at sea : but how long I shall keep her, that I cannot tell : for it is not here as in England, as to the officers having ships by seniority, but as his Imperial Majesty thinks they can do him most service. And we are assured when we serve him well, we shall never go unrewarded, as we are to the contrary, if we do otherway. For my part I shall always think I cannot enough to serve so great and good a Prince. I thank my God I am very well respected both by his Majesty and all the Court. The Lord High Admiral told me from his Majesty if I took care to behave myself well, as he did not question but I should, then his Majesty and him would be both my friends. I never lived a more lazy life, for we are not at sea above three months in the year, and as our pay is but little, we do little for it. Only the country is something too cold : but was it in his Majesty's power to move it into 48 or 50 degrees, it would be the finest country in the world. I like it so well, I think I am settled here, at least for his Majesty's life, which God preserve. I have been very unfortunate to lose two very good friends together, as Doctor Arraskin and Rear Admiral Paddon who both was buried last December.

1722, April 7. William Fixhall to William Browne at the Honble. Thomas Coke's, Vice Chamberlain to his Majesty, at St. James.

(Indorsed by the Vice Chamberlain—"Major Fixhall about Nottingham Election.")

Yours I received on Wednesday night at Mr. Harding's by a servant of my Lord How's, and am much surprized to find that anybody could inform the Vice Chamberlain that I had not obeyed his order to Mr. Okeover. I give you my word what I wrote was strictly true, for there was four persons by when I spoke to him, and he then readily complied, and ordered me to call for a letter in the morning. But his steward coming from Wamsall that night, in the morning he had altered his mind as to Lord How, but as to Sir Robert [Sutton] he continued his promise. I wrote the next post to Mr. Harding to acquaint the Vice Chamberlain with it. All the world knows Mr. Okeover to be a positive unpersuasable man. When you have told this to the Vice Chamberlain, I beg you'll favour me with a line, for if I should suffer in his esteem in this affair, I should be much concerned. Mr. Fitzherbert and I were together this morning. Mr. Harding sets out this day for London.

1722, October 24. Rome.—W. Parker to the Rt. Honble. Thomas Coke, Vice Chamberlain, at St. James, London.

I humbly take the boldness to give you an account of my voyage. I had a three months passage by sea. I stayed a week at Leghorn: from thence to Florence where I met with much satisfaction by Mr. Coke's letters to Signor Magnolfi and Signor Bianchi, who received me very kindly, and shewed me the Grand Duke's Palace and Gallery, and promised me I should copy what I pleased. I have been to see several Masters, which are very fine. Mr. Kent gave me a letter to Ca. Lute, who received me very kindly, and shewed me all his drawings, and promised to serve me in all that lay in his power. I shall begin a Boy's Head of his drawing this week. I have met with much civility from Mr. Kent's friends, especially from Mr. Hay, who sets out for England in three or four days time. I am justly compelled to attribute all to your goodness and compassion: for which I hope time may enable me to do something worthy of your notice: graced with your acceptance, it will raise it in value in mine and the world's esteem. Wherefore beseeching your Honour to have a favourable opinion of my mind to serve you in everything I humbly subscribe myself your dutiful and obliged servant. Sir, this is my direction—Signor Guglielmo Parker, Inglese Pittore, Roma.

1724, August 12. Hatfield.—Revd. Charles Cecil to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

The occasion of the trouble I now give you is to inform you of the vacancy of a Prebendary in the Church of Westminster by the death of Dr. Linford; which I hope will not give you any suspicion that I've the least doubt of your readiness to serve me: but knowing things of this nature are what all of my profession are seeking after, was apprehensive it might be disposed of before it came to your knowledge. I hope therefore you will be so kind as to interest yourself in obtaining this which will perfectly complete the happiness of your most obliged servant.

1724, October 7. Paris.—Revd. Charles Cecil to Vice Chamberlain Coke.

I take the liberty to trouble you with this, being persuaded that the news of our safe arrival at Paris would not be unacceptable to you. We got hither about 4 o'clock yesterday not without having encountered some danger, and many little difficulties, which prevented our being here two days before. We set out from London on Saturday about noon, and reached Rochester the same night: the next we got to Canterbury, and by noon the next day to Dover, where we met with great civility from Mr. Lovel, Master of the King's Pacquet Boats, and embarked thence the day following on board one of his boats. We had a very fair wind and so large that we could have got into the harbour at Calais in two hours and a half, had there been water sufficient for our vessel to have gone in, and the sea was so high that no boat durst venture out to carry us ashore: which obliged us to ply to and fro for two hours more, during which time my sister and Mr. Bethel were extremely sick. By that time the master of our vessel apprehended there might be water enough for us to get into the harbour, which had liked to have proved a fatal mistake, for upon our entrance into the mouth of the harbour we struck three times, and it was the general opinion we had been inevitably lost, if the vessel had not been quite new. At Calais we met with the usual treatment of seaport towns, and there we purchased a Berlin which, by being new fitted up and painted for sale, concealed many infirmities we could not at that time find out, which throughout the remaining part of our journey has put us to much charge in repairs, and has been the means of preventing our making that expedition we should otherwise have done. My cousin Corbet has been so well during our journey that after having travelled near sixty miles in one day she was not the least fatigued, and I believed would have held out travelling at the same rate had our machine been as able. We are now à L'Hotel d'Antrague, Rue de Condé, where I shall be proud of receiving your commands.

1724, November 11. N.S. Paris.—Revd. Charles Cecil to the Rt. Honble. Thomas Coke.

I am very sorry you met with so much difficulty to get my waiting supplied, and am particularly concerned that the trouble you was at was caused by the misfortune which happened to Dr. Lovel. I shall be very ready to acknowledge the obligation upon any occasion to Dr. Lovel as well as Dr. Ibbot, and the rest who have been so kind as to officiate for me. I have sent by the bearer of this the map of the Canal Royal, with the aqueducts and sluices. I am very much afraid we shall not be able to get from hence this winter, for my cousin is now so very ill that it will be impossible for her to move, though like others in her distemper, she fancies herself immortal, and talks of taking a journey of one hundred leagues, when she is not able to stir out of her chair. My sister takes much pains with her French.

1724, December 12. N.S. Paris.—Revd. Charles Cecil to the Rt. Hble. Thomas Coke at St. James's House, London.

. . . If you have occasion for any French books, I don't doubt but, with the assistance of Mr. Bethel, who is a great critic that way, to be able to get them here: though indeed their shops here are the worst furnished with books in any language besides their own I ever met with. I have bought some few books here in order to obtain their language, and have so far succeeded in my endeavours, as to be able to read any of their authors in prose with almost the same facility I can OKE MSS. English. . . . If I shall be so happy as to receive a summons to return to England to take possession of any benefice you will be so good to get for me, I should not propose to remain there any longer than would be absolutely necessary to go through the forms, but return hither till my being here should answer the purposes of my first coming abroad: which were to get out of debt, and acquire the language of this country, both which ends I am in hopes will be obtained when the season will permit us to get further into the country, where we may live much cheaper, and meet with fewer English. Mr. Walpole did me the honour to invite me to dinner the other day; who has been in so bad a state of health since his being here that I believe few of his acquaintance would readily know him. . . .

1724, December, 15. N.S. Paris.—Margaret Cecil to the Rt. Hble. Thomas Coke at St. James's House, London.

. . . My brother sent you a letter and a map at the same time which I believe is lost, for we have not heard anything of the messenger since. I suppose you have expected long ago a letter from me in French, but I hope you are not very impatient, for I fear I shall be obliged to put it off for some time longer. I have now got me a master, and intend to grow very good. My brother has been much better than I: he can read French with as much ease as English, and I believe will be able to speak it very soon. He is gone today to see the ceremony of the burial of the King of Spain: it is I hear to be very magnificent. I am so discreet as to get the better of my curiosity and stay at home to preserve my legs and arms. I expect my brother will break down a scaffold and put to death many of the French: and if I destroy any of them it must be the same way, for I have not yet been able to touch the heart of a Marquis. But I shall not quite despair, till I have tried my fortune in a white curled tower stuck with flowers, which is worn here with great success. I desire my humble service to Miss Coke. My cousin Corbet is much better.

1724–5, January 11. N.S. Paris.—Margaret Cecil to Vice Chamberlain Coke.

. . . So much of my time is spent in nursing at present that I have but little for anything else. My brother has been confined with the gout ten days. . . My cousin is better, and intends in the spring to go to Naples, it being the opinion of the doctors that she can't recover without it. I don't intend to carry my compliment so far as to wait on her there, it being a journey that will by no means suit with my finances. Nor does living in Paris agree with me much better, every thing being vastly dearer than in England. Mr. Bethel intends to continue his post of knight errant, and attend on my cousin to Naples, but my brother lives in hopes of a call another way. We hear at Paris that the King goes this year to Hanover, and his Chaplain wishes much to go with him. I have just heard a piece of news that I think worthy of relating—that this morning one of the French King's Gentlemen of the Bedchamber was beheaded for stealing the gold fringe from the King's chairs. I hear if he had not been a man of quality, he would only have been hanged. The news you sent me I would have sent you long before now, only I was afraid you would have thought I did it only to give myself an air of having an English lover, because I could not get a French one. I assure you as to when the wedding will be, or when the clothes was bought is unknown to me.

1724–5, January 18. N.S. Paris.—Revd. Charles Cecil to the Rt. Hble. Thomas Coke at St. James's House, London.

The pain I have of late suffered by the gout has been so violent that I have been entirely disabled from writing: but being at present almost free from pain I lay hold of this opportunity to acknowledge the favour of your last, and likewise to let you into the particulars of an affair, as far as I am able, which I find you are not an entire stranger to: and being an affair on which my sister's future happiness so much depends, I am very glad to hear it meets with your approbation. Mr. Brown has made his addresses to my sister from her first arrival here, and by what I can judge of the matter, she does not seem to disapprove of him; at the same time I believe she is not as yet vastly smitten, and I am persuaded will not advance so far in the affair as not to have it in her power to make an honourable retreat, if there should arise any circumstances that would make it necessary for her to do so. To me I must own he appears to be a person noways to be excepted against; and he has a fortune more than sufficient to make their lives very agreeable, if all other circumstances be answerable to that. He is very desirous to have an opportunity to make appear to whomsoever she will direct him that he has more than forty thousand pounds in the funds in England, besides some effects of considerable value in Italy, and has offered to consent to any proposals of settlement &c. she will require. But for her conduct in this affair she depends entirely upon you, not doubting but that you will advise her in a matter of this consequence, having received so many instances of your inclination and readiness to contribute to her happiness.

1724–5, January 26. N.S. Paris.—Margaret Cecil to the Rt. Hble. Thomas Coke at St. James's House, London.

. . . My brother is still confined to his chamber with the gout: he intends as soon as he can get out of it to leave us and go to Dijon, in order to improve himself in French, and to live at less expense than he does here. He is very melancholy at a piece of news sent him, which was that Lady Holderness said that Dr. Locker is to go as Chaplain with the King. If it is not so pray comfort him with the news, for he is very unhappy about it at present. . . . This scrawl is excuseable at present being in haste to dress for a ball which Sir Thomas Prendergrase gives to the English. He is the very finest of men; you will soon have him in London, and he will bring with him a coat for the next birthday that will all coats outshine.

1724–5, February 13. N.S. Paris.—Margaret Cecil to the Rt. Hlbe. Thomas Coke at St. James's House, London.

. . . In your letter of January 25 you chide me for not mentioning the affair you are so kind as to interest yourself in. My reason for not doing so was my brother told me he had the post before: so I hope you will not be angry with me. I can have no reason to give, and no person can show a greater confidence in another than by trusting them with their misfortunes or their follies. I shall therefore take this opportunity of doing it, and inform you that my fortune is not so well as you imagine, having been obliged to lessen it by paying part of what my uncle Cecil left me to persons I had long been indebted to. Though it is not possible for you to conceive half the hardships I suffered from the unkindness of my mother, yet you can't be so much a stranger to her want of affection and kindness for me, but that you may easily believe what I am telling you. When she put me to my allowance it was at a time when I wanted as thorough a clothing as when I came into the world, so that more than a year's allowance went at my first setting out, which put me so much behind hand that

COKE MSS.

I continued to add to the debt till my mother died; and I believe you may remember it was a year after before my affairs was put in a method: and in all that time I had no money but what I was obliged to you for. When I received my uncle's legacy, I paid all I owed which was near 600*l.* I hope you will not entirely attribute to my folly the lessening of my fortune. This Paris journey has also helped me that way, for I am indebted to my cousin Corbet 50*l.*, which I want to pay her, and I shall want some money upon another account soon. So that I beg the favour of you to inform me if there is any method of selling my stock without my being present.

1724–5, February 13. N.S. Paris. Revd. Charles Cecil to the Rt. Hble. Thomas Coke at St. James's House, London.

Since my last Mr. Brown has taken an opportunity of acquainting me with what he proposes by way of settlement on my sister. . . . . His fortune being all in the funds he proposes to add 3,000*l.* to her fortune, to be put into the hands of trustees for her, if she survives him, and to be entirely at her disposal: but seems unwilling to tie any other part of his money by way of security for the children they may have, or any certain sum commonly styled pinmoney. Nor does she seem inclinable to demand any. . . . . I cannot indeed help observing that his conduct in this affair does not entirely correspond with his former professions.

1724–5, February 23. N.S. Paris. Margaret Cecil to the Rt. Hble. Thomas Coke, St. James's House, London.

My brother wrote you a letter with an account of the settlement Mr. Brown proposes to make. I should be glad to know your opinion of it, and beg the favour of you that in a letter to Mr. Brown you will make any objections you shall think proper. I have told him my fortune is 4,000*l.* The money my uncle left me bought 1,700*l.* South Sea Stock. I have informed Mr. Brown that 1,000*l.* of my fortune I owe to your goodness and generosity, and that in this or any affair of consequence I should always consult you, not only as a relation but as my best and kindest friend.

1724–5, March 6. N.S. St. Cloud.—Revd. Charles Cecil to the Rt. Hble. Thomas Coke at St. James's House, London.

I have been for some time in the country in the hopes of regaining the strength I have lost by my late illness. Mr. Mariette has packed up your prints, and they will be sent forward by Mr. Alexandre, who assures me they shall be taken great care of. Living at Paris so long has almost broke all my measures: but I am in hopes I shall speedily retrieve them, by accompanying my sister and brother, as I believe Mr. Brown will soon be, to Italy—all obstacles at present being removed, he having very readily accepted of the proposals you made, and will very soon send directions to proper persons in London to prepare writings agreeable thereunto, in order to be laid before you for your approbation. As for pinmoney my sister would not permit me to make any demand, having (as I believe) very good reasons for it. The real satisfaction I received from the account you sent me of the success of your meeting with the Bishop of London affected me in a more sensible manner than I am capable of expressing: I will assure his Lordship I shall make it my chief study to merit for the future the opinion he has conceived of me. Please to address as usual being but two leagues from Paris.

1724–5, March 16. N.S. Paris.—Margaret Cecil to the Rt. Hble. Thomas Coke, at St. James's House, London.

The concern I have been in for the loss of my cousin, and a fever I have had since, I hope will plead my excuse for not returning my thanks sooner for your last very kind and obliging letter of 11th of February. . . . The pleasure I should have in seeing and conversing with such a friend as you is alone sufficient to make any place in which you are preferable to any other; and will be the only reason to prevent my being very much pleased with a journey to Italy, having a great curiosity to see a place I have heard and read so much of. Mr. Brown has money in private hands in Venice, that he says would be difficult to get without his being there . . . I have sent you a copy of a writing that he has had drawn here, which he thinks will be a sufficient security to me till a settlement can be made. As for myself I think I should run no hazards, if I had no settlement, for was Mr. Brown to die, the third of his fortune which would then be mine would be much more than I shall have otherways. And he is in no danger of losing the money he has got, having left off trade entirely this nine years . . . An acquaintance of mine in London who has known him twenty years, gives him a perfect good character. If you are acquainted with Colonel Gardener, he can inform you. I believe it will be more satisfaction to you to hear any good of him from a person unconcerned than from me, because love is blind. But I give you my word, though I have a very good opinion of him, I am not so smitten as not to have my ear open. He is very desirous of the honour of being known to you, and said he intended to take the liberty of writing to you, and desired me to excuse it to you.

1724–5, March 16. N.S. Paris.—Robert Brown to the Rt. Hble. Thomas Coke at St. James's House, London.

The pleasure I hope to have at my return to England in your friendship and acquaintance will be very great, and I shall not think it a small one that of writing to you in the meantime, if you are so good as to indulge me therein, by allowing me some opportunities here, or in the country where I am going, of serving you. From the conversation I have had with Mrs. Cecil, I have learned to know your worth and your good qualities, as well as if I had passed my whole life with you. She never seems more pleased than in owning your goodness to her, and the many obligations she has to you. I would be very glad to have you imagine from thence how desirous I am of the honour of being well thought of by you, and of deserving the same all I can. I believe I cannot do it in any way more agreeable to you and so easy to myself, as that of being a good husband to Mrs. Cecil, who I shall always think deserves of me much more than will ever be in my power. . . .

1724–5, March 15. O.S. St. James's.—Vice Chamberlain Coke to Mr. Robert Brown. Paris. (Draft.)

I received the favour of yours from Paris, for which I am very much obliged to you, and shall embrace with a great deal of pleasure the obliging offers of your friendship. What my sister Cecil has said of me is more than anything I have done can deserve: but will always by my endeavours to serve her, try to merit her good word. I wish you both extremely happy in your undertaking, and a safe return into England, which I am sorry to hear is not likely to be next spring. But no distance I hope will prevent me hearing from you, and receiving your commands, with which if you will please to favour me, you will give me an opportunity of showing you the sincerity of my being, Sir, your most faithful humble servant.

COKE MSS.

1724–5, March 23. N.S. Paris.—Rev. Charles Cecil to the Rt. Hble. Thomas Coke at St. James's House, London.

. . . I have received a paper from Mr. Brown, which he calls Articles of Agreement between my sister and him, drawn up as I suppose by himself . . . My sister tells me she will send you a copy of them, which I believe you will find very defective in many particulars. However I find she is determined to marry him before I believe you can send any answer, having appointed Easter Sunday for the day of marriage according to this style . . . . They propose to set out from hence very soon after their marriage for Italy, and have been very pressing with me to accompany them thither, where they design to reside till the next spring. For which reason I must beg the favour of you, if you have any opportunity of seeing the Bishop of Lincoln, who is my diocesan, to desire his permission to be abroad, without which I may incur a very severe penalty. I hope the Bishop of London is acquainted with my being abroad, or he will take it very ill, that I have not been to wait on him to acknowledge his kind intentions to assist in obtaining a prebendary for me. I hope by this time you have received the prints you ordered to be sent.

1725, April 10. N.S. Paris.—Revd. Charles Cecil to the Rt. Hble. Thomas Coke at St. James's House, London.

I received the favour of yours by which I was very glad to find that the Articles my sister sent you would be binding, for they were signed and the marriage consummated on Easter Monday. My brother Brown and sister propose to set out from hence on their journey to Italy in very few days, and I shall accompany them, relying upon your interest to obtain leave for me of his Majesty and the Bishop of Lincoln to be absent, till I shall be so happy as to receive a summons to return home by means of your kind soliciting in my favour. I this day saw the prints you writ for packed up. . . . I hope I shall have the pleasure of being employed in some commission in Italy, where curiosities abound.

1725, April 13. N.S. Paris.—Revd. Charles Cecil to the Rt. Hble. Thomas Coke at St. James's House, London.

Since my last I have been informed where you may find the prints of the Medals in the King's Cabinet, which you writ for to Mr. Marriette, who has not been able to procure them for you. They were lately bought here by a person who makes it his business to buy things of that nature. He has sent a book with all those Medals, and several others which contain the prints of all the King's Pictures and Statues to his partner in London, James Woodman, Bookseller, in Russell St. Covent Garden. Tomorrow or next day at farthest we shall set forwards on our journey to Venice.

1725, June 6. Venice.—Revd. Charles Cecil to the Rt. Hble. Thomas Coke at St. James's House, London.

I had not the pleasure of receiving yours of the 15th of April till my arrival at Paluello the 27th of last month, where my brother Brown has a country house, the pleasantest situated I ever saw upon the river Brenta, 8 miles from Padua and 20 from Venice. Yesterday we came to Venice by water, which appeared to us a much more agreeable way of travelling than in a chaise voiturine, of which we were very heartily tired. . . . Since her arrival here my sister has had two houses to put in order, and much company continually coming in, so that she has hardly had time to rest herself from her journey. I am much obliged to you for the further leave you have obtained for me to be absent, but shall be much more glad to receive a summons to return though I must confess if my affairs did not require redress, I should be very much pleased to stay in this country some years. I hope you received my letters from Lyons and Turin, since which we met with no accident, but frequent danger of overturning by the badness of the roads, occasioned by continual rains. What is a very agreeable surprise to me is that it is very little hotter here than in England. . . . Letters sent by the common post directed to Venice seldom come safe. Please to direct for me at the British Consul's, Venice, inclosing it to Messrs. Peter Mentink and Sons Merchants at Amsterdam.

1725, August 3. N.S. Venice.—Mrs. Margaret Brown to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

. . . I wish I could make amends for my long silence by sending you any news or tittle-tattle that would divert you; but I am as yet so much a stranger that I know nothing of this place, but that it is vastly hot. . . . I have read in the News such an account of the finery of your new Order of Knights, [the Bath] that I don't expect to be made amends for the loss of that sight by any of the shows of Venice: though I am promised to be mightily entertained with the gaiety of the Saints. My brother gets the start of me quite in Italian, as he did in the French, by his great application: he understands everything that is said, and can talk a good deal. . . . I suppose you know that you are to have opera in great perfection next winter, and to our loss, for Mr. Sweng has agreed with the Faustina to go to England.

1725, October 12. Venice. — Mrs. Margaret Brown to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

. . . I was very glad to find by your letter that you have been so well this summer as to be able to take so long a ramble, and hope from the exercise of it you have laid up a stock of health for the winter. Mr. Hanbury was here but a few days after I came to Venice, so that I saw him but once. If I had known he was a friend of yours, we would have come sooner from a place we was in in the country, to have waited on him here and contributed all we could to make Venice agreeable to him. Mr. Chambers I hear is ill of the small-pox at Parma. . . . The first day I have my best looks on I will obey your commands in sitting for my picture, and will send it you, as soon as it is done. . . . I must take this opportunity to remind you of a promise which when performed will give me so much pleasure. . . . I hope you will sit for your picture at Richardson's. I am very glad to hear George has quite recovered the illness in his eyes, and that Pud is well [Mr. Coke's son and daughter Charlotte]. I desire my compliments to them and to Miss Coke.

1725, October 30. N.S. Parma. — William Chamber to [Vice-Chamberlain Coke].

Give me leave to return you my most humble thanks for your obliging recommendation of me to Mr. Robert Brown of Venice, of which my route will not permit me to profit. He let me know by a gentleman that passed this way that you had mentioned me to him, and made me offers of his service if I came to Venice. Had I not fallen ill of the small pox here, before this time I should have been in France, though really I leave Italy after two years stay in it with regret. . . . Of all the arts here cultivated Painting has been my particular delight. I have bought some pictures here at Parma, among which by accident I have got a fine Bassan, that did not cost me fifty shillings. I have several others that want baptizing, which when they arrive at Hanworth, [Middlesex] I beg you would give your judgment of what authors they are of: and if they are so happy as to meet with your approbation, I shall be entirely contented with my purchases.

COKE MSS.

1725, December 10. Gravesend.—W. Parker to Vice Chamberlain Coke.

I have sent you by the bearer a picture which I received this day from my son at Rome. He says in his letter, it's the picture of Angelica a Dora [Adora?]. And that the last I sent you is the history of [the daughter of?] Peneus or Ladon, who, flying from the violence of Apollo was turned into a baytree. Both which I hope will prove worth your acceptance.

1725, December 28. Venice.—Revd. Charles Cecil to the Rt. Hble. Thomas Coke at St. James's House, London.

My sister has furnished me with a very agreeable occasion of wishing you joy of a new relation—being safely delivered of a daughter on Christmas day: of which she had so little notice that she was very late the night before at St. Mark's to see the ceremony of that place, and about four in the morning brought to bed. . . . I see no probability of their returning to England some years: and by the preparation my brother Brown has made for a large family here confirms me in that belief. He has lately taken a very large house, which he has furnished in a manner not very agreeable to one who proposes soon to leave it. Besides so long a journey with a little family cannot but be attended with too great difficulties to be attempted. However I live in great hopes of a call home by your assistance before that time, and to be in a capacity to return hither. In the meantime I hope you will be so good as to get my leave to stay abroad continued of his Majesty and the Bishop of Lincoln, my Diocesan, and to get my waiting at Court supplied. . . . I had the pleasure to hear by my sister that you had health sufficient to undertake a Derbyshire journey.

1726, April 12. N.S. Venice.—Mrs. Margaret Brown to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

. . . The news that my brother's letter brought you I believe surprised you a little: and the occasion was a surprise to us, being long before I expected it. My curiosity carried me to the top of St. Mark's Church on Christmas Eve to see the ceremony there, and the many stairs I went up was not very suitable to a gentlewoman in my then sad circumstances: so that I was taken ill as soon as I came home. But notwithstanding I introduced your goddaughter into company a little before it was proper, she behaves herself very well, and has a great deal of wit, and I believe will make a very good wife; so pray make my compliments to my nephew, and tell him I desire him not to settle his affections upon a lady till he has first seen my daughter. . . . I must ask pardon for taking the liberty of naming you for her god-father before I had your leave. . . . I must put you in mind of your last letter that gave me the hopes of having a picture of you soon: the sight of it will be such a pleasure to me that I can't help being very impatient for it. . . . You will by the next ship that goes from hence have the face of your humble servant done by Rosalba, who assures me she never painted a picture better, and as it was for so good a friend, I behaved myself very patiently in sitting, and she commended me so much for it, that she acknowledged, if it was not like, it would be entirely her fault. There has been a great many of our country people here this Carnival: but at present there is none left. We have also lost my brother for a time: he is gone to see

Rome and Naples, but intends to be back at the Ascension, which I am told is one of the finest sights of Venice.

1726, May 18. Rathkeel.—Viscount Southwell to [his father in law] Vice Chamberlain Coke.

I had this day an account of the Duke of Newcastle's performing his promise to you, in making me one of his Majesty's Privy Council here. I return you my most humble thanks for it, and have done the same by this night's post both to his Grace and my Lord Lieutenant. I have been in this country these two months past. My wife and little ones are all well. She joins me in grateful acknowledgments for your many favours to us, and I hope you will be assured I shall always have a thorough sense of them.

1726, October 4. Venice.—Revd. Charles Cecil to Vice Chamberlain Coke.

. . . There has been a very extraordinary piece of antiquity found by accident under ground last winter near Rome, which is very much esteemed by the virtuosi there—it being the most perfect in its kind that has been discovered for many ages past. It is the Sepulchre of Livia, wife of Augustus, in which were found the urns that contained the ashes of her and all her domestics, with several very curious basso-rilievos and inscriptions, denoting the several offices each bore in her service, among which there are several that the antiquarians have never before had any knowledge of. I happened to be at Rome very soon after the discovery of it, and hoping it might be acceptable to you, I have procured a draught of it from a person the most esteemed in that way in Italy: and have since been favoured by my Lord Hope with all the inscriptions; which, when I was there, were not to be had, the persons that found it having broken most of the urns and marble, in expectation to find medals, or other treasure, and were in too much haste to use a gentler method to open them, for fear of having it discovered to the Camera Apostolica, which claims a right to all things of this kind that are found within the State: by which means several valuable pieces of antiquity are destroyed in this barbarous manner. I will take the first opportunity of sending it to you, being too large to send by the post, consisting of several sheets. It is said here, it will soon be printed: but as this is the original from whence it will be printed, I judge this might be preferable. I am informed the King goes to Hanover this spring. I know I need say no more, and hope you'll not think my having said so much proceeds from the least diffidence I can possibly have of your inclination to contribute to my going with him. . . . I believe within a few months our family is likely to be increased.

[This letter is endorsed by Mr. John Coke "The drawings received since Mr. Vice Chamberlain died."]

COKE MSS.

ADDENDA.

1602, October 20. Cambridge.—George Coke to John Coke. Brother,

For Mr. Verny's disputation,—I was not an ear witness, being all day long with our Master in our office accounts, and absolutely denied by him to go. Divers of good judgment both at home and abroad, whom I have talked withal, do give him very extraordinary commendations: his oration, his answers, very judicious, very acute, and his tongue very ready. All men say he had wrong in nothing, but in a bad replyer, whose arguments he did cut so short, with ready and philosophical distinctions, that he utterly confounded him; and yet they that knew the replyer say much for his commendation and that he was well esteemed of. His first gest was, as I have heard, "voluntas non cogitur."

For our friends in Derbyshire, I left them all in good health, brother and sister Coke, Fulwood, Bussye, all very glad of my company, and very kind unto me. Sister Bussye, I hope by this God hath delivered her safely from her burden, which I think is the fourth since her marriage. She hath an honest, kind husband: she herself lives very contentedly in the fear of God and the love and favour of all his and her own friends. Sister Coke I have found very kind, and living in true hearty affections to us all: we never forgot to remember you in our merryments, and many times in serious talk I do often wish that things might go better with her, but in truth she beareth them well and wisely, and is contented with all she cannot mend. Brother Francis, I have found him more kind than ordinary for outward carriage only: but nothing more liberal, though he grow rich, yet he is very hard, and having plenty of all things in great abundance, yet could he be contented to send me away without my annuity, with his old answer, I will send it by the next messenger. In all things else very kind and merry were we, so continued and so parted; so that I thought my time very well bestowed amongst them, but especially with my kindest sister Coke, with whom I was ever merry. Our Uncle Gilbert is dead, and my Aunt lives at Lockow, with her two younger sons and daughter: Thomas with his wife in Leicestershire groweth very rich. So cousin Daners [Danvers]. Other news we had none: only Formarke's young daughter and heir is married to one Mr. Burdett, of Warwickshire, as I think. Mr. Harpur of Swarkaston is restored to his justiceship, since my Lord of Shrewsbury was of the Council. For Aristotle, I cannot find any such in the town, Greek and Latin of Stevens print as you writ for.

I am chosen Catechiser for this year, which every Sunday I am to perform; in the discharge of which duty I intend to proceed according to my former course of study in the general heads of divinity, until I have made a perfect body. I am also rhetoric lecturer, which I must read twice every week, which will be so more pains to me. I pray you for your notes Pro Archia, if you have them, to help me. I am also senior Thesaurarius, to dispose of all charge and accounts of the College. Thus I am pressed this year with very many businesses, which all I willingly undergo with good courage, hoping for a harvest. Messe quis fruitur, qui non prius tulit sementis onera? Summe Deus, adsis mihi, ut Tuo consilio imposita mihi onera Tuâ ope perferam: tuque frater adsis mihi precibus tuis.

1607, November 18. Cambridge.—George Coke to John Coke at Sir Foulke Grevill's house at Tottenham High Cross.

Brother,—I have received your letter, and am most willing, with thanks both to God and those good means which he hath stirred up to further this blessing, to entertain your good motion: and will be ready according to his holy assistance at all times (if it be his good will that it may succeed) to the uttermost of my small gifts to discharge the same in my own person: and will endeavour so to approve your good testimony of me as that it may appear you have not been much mistaken. And I will also be ready, whensoever the patron shall require, to offer my service according to his desire. Only about this time, if it be possible I would desire some forbearance by reason of a divinity act, which within this fortnight I am to perform in the Schools: it comes unexpected upon me, sooner than I looked for, by reason of the strictness of the Vice-Chancellor of late, which doth urge everyone to keep his due course. I have written to both Sir Edmond and Mr. Henry Lucy according to your direction. I would desire you before your departure to leave certain direction what course I shall follow if in your absence the parsonage fall void. I was determined to go into Derbyshire this Christmas about gathering up of some money which there is owing me for some of my [pupils?] as also of brother Francis, with whom I much desire to make even reckoning. The reason that makes me desirous to gather up this money is an office of a bursarship which now this two years hath been laid upon me in which I am straitened by these extravagant debts. I will send cousin Streethay present word, by whose means I doubt not but to get knowledge of the old man's health, as God shall determine of him.

1608, April. From his Chamber in Pembroke College, Cambridge.—George Coke to John Coke at Sir Foulke Grevill his house in the Augustine Fryers.

Good brother, What trouble I have had by Bygrave, and what by sickness, I must let you understand. For Bygrave I have learned my lesson now the second time by a presentation from the King, and a second institution and induction. I used no friends but my purse and labours, only I acquainted both Sir F. Grevill and Sir Edmond Lucy, who offered me all means in their power, if I had found difficulty. I had certain notice of a lapse, by Dr. Sterne his being instituted into Stevenadge after he had Bygrave, and not being qualified, as also of not being minister of a year after he was inducted into Bygrave. After I had gone through both these businesses, with much charge and no less trouble both of body and mind, it pleased God to visit me with an ague, which hath held me now five times by course of every other day: which did a little more daunt me than all the other. But God had mercy upon me, and hath delivered me also from this Philistine, that I may stay yet a while to serve him at Bygrave, and learn by his correction to amend. What honourable favour I have found at Sir F. Grevill, and especially at Sir Edmond Lucy, in the most worthy manner befitting such personages, I pray you take notice from me in the most ample manner yourself can conceive. What also from my worthy patron, Mr. Warren and his virtuous and worthy bedfellow, both before and since my coming to Bygrave. I pray you in my behalf return all possible thanks. In truth in them and their favour I esteem not the least part of this great blessing, which God hath bestowed upon me. Also I pray you remember for me Mr. Henry Lucy, in whose favour and kindness, and (as himself pleaseth to term and use it) familiarity I am much comforted and encouraged: and I beseech you pray to God for me, that for these blessings I may be thankful. When I hear of your coming to London, if God enable me, I will come see you, for I desire to speak with you. Brother Francis hath sent up his sons to me, whom I have placed some in S. Johns, and some in our own College.

Coke MSS.

1623, October 30. Bygrave.—George Coke to John Coke.

Good brother,—I have been at Cambridge when my first business was to break fare with Dr. Beale, who hath all this while offered all kindness for the receiving of your children into that College (Pembroke) and next I went to Dr. Richardson, whom I found willing and glad to show any kindness in them. We have agreed with Mr. Green to be their tutor, who at the Doctor's entreaty is content to take them into his tuition, so dainty are tutors now a days in Cambridge, that they will be entreated or they will take no more. Chambers also are as hard to be gotten in that College, as in Pembroke Hall; so that if the Master had not made shift for one over himself, we might have been destitute; only for a time was I compelled to be contented with that, for I find that it will be an occasion to them to have too much commerce with the Master's men, of which also Mr. Green himself gave me a hint. * For Mr. Green, I find nothing but exceeding well, a man commended to be both learned and industrious, and of a civil and honest conversation. And this I hear of him by Dr. Beale especially, as also by Mr. Whincop of that College. For gowns you must provide so many yards of broad cloth of violet colour dyed in grain as will make them wide sleeved gowns; and a yard of serge black to line the sleeves at least half way on the fore part: no other lining at all for them. And I think you may do very well to buy them other gowns also of cloth, of any colour, for study gowns: the cloth cannot be too course, for they must never wear them but in their studies, and those gowns must also be lined with anything, only for warmth, not faced nor caped with velvet, but as plain and homely as you will, so they be warm. The time when you must send them is appointed to be the 10th day of November. *

(1625, August 4.)—Sir John Coke to Fulke Grevyl, Lord Brooke.

Right Honourable,—No servant of yours can be more sorry for your indisposition than I am, nor more glad that by your good usage you find some contentment. And I am assured that by your absence from hence you can sustain no loss: for I hear not of any meeting with the States, nor of any business of importance to give you entertainment to your mind. In Parliament, before my coming, there was much exception taken against a pardon granted to a Jesuit at Exeter, wherein the Lord Conway and the Lord Keeper were taxed; and the King himself escaped not exception, for granting it the next day after he had engaged his word to the House for their suppression. No less earnestness hath been used against Dr. Onian, who being under the censure of the House yet pressed to preach before them at the Fast, which they would not permit: and against Dr. Mountague, whose absence is excused only by his sickness. And this is all I know of the proceedings in the House, whither I came but on Tuesday, and that night had my instructions to deliver the present state of affairs to the Nether House: which on Wednesday night was changed and left doubtful whether the Lord Conway or I should relate it to both Houses in the presence of the King. And this morning, even in the Hall where we met, the counsel varied again, and the Lord Conway was required to say something, and I to present the rest: so as a greater charge, with so little warning and many changes, could hardly have been laid upon so weak shoulders. And I give God hearty thanks that it is passed over (as I hope) without shame. The first intention was a bare narration of the progress of business, since the relation made to both Houses by the Lord Duke, and, after a short intimation of the importance of the services in hand and the impossibility to bear the charge without their assistance, to leave it to their judgments whether they would now proceed to a resolution, or adjourn till winter, in regard of the sickness. But the resolution upon the present, which the King himself delivered to me in his chair, was to shew the importance of the fleet, and it could not proceed without a present supply by money or credit; which is the business that now possesseth and troubleth the whole House. And tomorrow morning is appointed to begin to debate it. The King himself first delivered his mind effectually and clearly to this end, and I presume that will be of far more force to sway our resolution than anything that could be said by any of his servants. The envy that I bear is that it hath not been known, nor is agreeable to the orders of the House, (as some think) that a Nether House man was ever employed to deliver the King's pleasure to both Houses of Parliament: which came to pass at this time only by reason of the sudden change of counsel, which gave not time to any other to be instructed for a speech of near an hour long. For my part I neither had ambition nor thought of speaking in that place. The King since dinner is gone to meet the Queen, and the Lord Duke with him. I spake with the Gentleman Usher, Mr. Harris, about your Lordships' lodging, and he telleth me he hath reserved one for you within the Court, which I have sent Mr. Woolcote to see, that he may make his choice of the best. When further occasion is offered I will give your Honour a further account; and in the meantime praying for your health and happiness, do rest your Lordship's in all humble service, John Coke.

(1633), May 27. Melbourne.—John Coke the younger "for yourself" [Sir John Coke].

This enclosed dated last from Risley was sent on Monday night to Derby. But that courier went not, so I was extremely disappointed. I sought for a conveyance from Donington, but the Countess hath deferred her journey till Tuesday next, it may be for Mr. Henry Hastings hath the small pox.

I have received more kind entertainment at Risley than you could have expected, if you had known Sir Henry Willoughby's disposition and his carriage and reservedness towards others. After that Sir Henry had so freely the first night taken notice of the intention of my coming, I desired him next day to give me leave to have some speech with his daughter. He himself went in presently and sent her out to me into the great chamber, where I had half an hour's discourse with her. And because I conceived it to be expected, after supper I rose from the table when she did and took her by the hand into a round window, and told her of the occasion of my coming. Next morning I had the opportunity to find her in the great chamber by some favour and to speak with her again concerning the same matter. Her answers are civil and such as befit her modesty. She is a gentlewoman of a good person in my eye, and of a pretty sweet disposition; not tall, about my sister Mary's height and proportion or rather not altogether so tall; something pale and of few words, those civil and discreet. I conceived the whole house to be generally well affected towards me. Having lain there two nights, on Wednesday I thought fit to take my leave for the first time. Sir Henry upon this told me he had always borne a very good affection towards this match, and now by reason of the death of his daughter Griffith he was desirous she should not be far from him that he might have the more comfort of her, and he knew if I had her I would carry her but to Melbourne. At my departure he called his lady and daughter himself into the great chamber that I might take my leave of them. And the last words he spoke to me were that he hoped he should see me again before 'twere long. Every one told me I should find him a man of few words: but I assure you he hath kept me company for the most part himself with much freeness and familiarity, insomuch that my cousin Gilbert saith he never knew him to do the like. I am bound to my lady and all the house. I intend to be at Risley again on Monday. I go to Trusley this night to receive my uncle's directions. And I hope to despatch everything so well as is requisite and to be at London the beginning of the Term. God hath blessed me hitherto exceedingly. I desire you to pardon these abrupt letters in regard of the occasion. I have sent them as they were written, to testify for me that the fault is not in me you heard from me no sooner. I pray you give me your blessing and prayers, your faithfully obedient son.

If you think fit to send these few lines to Sir Francis Darcy in regard of his desire, I have written them to that purpose.

This letter comes by Mr. Leming, the lawyer. My cousin William Coke desires to have his service presented to you.

1638-9, January 16. Melbourne.—Sir John Coke the Younger [to Secretary Sir John Coke.] [No address.]

This day the Barbary falcons came both to my hands. That which we take for a haggard, though Mr. Mayo writes her a rummage falcon, hath good flesh upon her, endues her meat and pannels very well. But the sore falcon hath suffered very much in her journey; for the bearer confesseth he received her high of her flesh, now she is very poor: yet I hope we shall recover her, for she puts away her meat and pannels reasonable well. It seems she was unruly in carriage after the first day which was I fear caused by over short feeding, and he was to blame for bringing them 15 or 16 miles at the least yesterday, which was a day bitter both for cold and snow. Yet I hope they shall both do very well. The older hawk scaped best, having been, as you write, formerly reclaimed and so the more gentle. I give you humble thanks for them, they are indeed very fine birds, and I hope, God willing, to show you sport with them at your coming into these parts next summer. By Mr. Reede I have written something unto you concerning Harlaston, and I hope by the beginning of the term to give you perfect account. May you but have a marketable price and I think little exception can be taken to the place. The land is excellent good, in a sure country for tenants, near the coals, in all respects beyond Etwall; only that it stands in the edge of Staffordshire, and that the chapel is supplied by a curate who hath but small allowance from the parson of Clifton, within whose parish it is. These are all the incommodities. If the purchaser pay dear, he may make himself some amends by raising rents upon the tenants, who are not so racked as at Etwall, and most of them at will, the rest only for one life, some two for two lives. If a reasonable pennyworth may be had, the tenants may be better entreated. If I commend the place too much, you will guess that I have respect to the hawking, which is there very convenient and near, both for the field and river, far beyond Etwall. Of Seale I cannot certainly learn that it will be sold. I shall be very well contented to pay for the saddles you have pleased to provide for me. Winter hath not begun with us until yesterday and this day: now it freezeth very hard. With the mason I have agreed for 17*l.* He is both to get, hew, and set all the stone work. I hope it will be done to your contentment. It is now generally conceived, though I know not of any express order given therein, that His Majesty's pleasure is that all such as find horses shall furnish them in those several counties where their estates lie, and that no man shall be charged where he liveth for more than the land he hath in that county. And the reasons hereof are supposed to be these. First that every county is to defend itself. Secondly that men's estates that lie in several counties cannot be exactly known in the counties where they live. And yet I know notwithstanding that certificates have been admitted by my Lord Newcastle in this county, and by others elsewhere in like cases, purporting that those gentlemen that show them are charged for their whole estates where they live. And I believe if they were admitted generally through the Kingdom it would much advance His Majesty's service, and greatly ease many that are charged with horse. For there would not be any one horse the fewer by this means through the kingdom: for all estates may notwithstanding be charged with their proportion, though the whole number of horse charged upon any one man be showed in one county. And there will be little difficulty in the discovery of men's estates if this course, or a better, be taken therein; to wit, if the Deputy Lieutenants, finding an estate fit for this charge, be directed to certify the Lieutenant of the County where the owner liveth that his estate in their county is fit to be charged with a horse or horses, whereupon he shall be charged in like manner where his abode is. Neither will any county lose any considerable part of her defence hereby, for the defect will be supplied answerably on the other side by such who live in that county and have part of their estates elsewhere. And though perchance hereby some inequality of a horse or two may happen, yet it is in no ways considerable in respect of the benefit that will redound thereby to His Majesty's service and the ease of his subjects. For by the printed orders of the year 1626 all such as are charged with horse are strictly required upon pain of severe punishment to have both their horse and armour always ready upon an hour's warning; which is utterly impossible unless he that is charged keep his horse constantly in that place for which his charge is. Now the keeping of a horse in another county than where a man's abode is necessarily draws the charge of a servant to look to him, both which will amount yearly to the sum of 20*l.* Besides that horse and servant, having no other employment nor eye over them, the disorder of the servant with the loss of the horse is certainly to be expected. But for the prevention of these inconveniences almost every man sendeth horses from the place where he liveth into several counties, even the same both horse and armour which he showeth at home; or if his other lands lie far remote, some excuse is made or otherwise the present necessity is patched and supplied by borrowing of his friends: so as I daresay every county of England loseth part of her strength hereby, whereas His Majesty's service by the other course might be advanced, for there is no man that finds three horses in several counties but he had better find four or five at home. And besides, gentlemen for their reputations will have more care of that they show in their own county than where they are strangers. And all considerable inconvenience on the other side may be easily redressed by the care and correspondency of the Lieutenants. And yet the power of a Lord Lieutenant in his Commission is not restrained to his own county, but if he see cause he may and ought to employ the strength of his county in other places, as well for the conquering of rebels as for the suppressing of riots and unlawful assemblies of an inferior nature; which wholly takes away all objection of inconvenience and inequality of a horse, two or three, drawn away from any particular shire into another. Thus much

COKE MSS.

I have presumed to offer to your consideration, and the rather because, upon conference had with some of my fellow deputies they seem to be of the same opinion. I pray God continue your good health and me in your good favour whilst I am your very obedient and thankful son.

1640, November. List of Accounts for lodgings, suppers, breakfasts, dinners, &c., of freeholders voting at the election of Sir John Coke the younger as Knight of the Shire (Derbyshire).

Freeholders.			£	s.	d.
1. Mather, John	68	- - - -	4	5	0
2. Smith, Thomas	40	- - - -	3	13	0
3. Walten, Emme	12	- - - -	1	13	0
4. Ward, John	31	- - - -	5	1	6
5. Sore, Walter	73	- - - -	8	2	0
6. Notons, Willm.	20	- - - -	4	16	0
7. Pym, Thomas	6	- - - -	0	10	6
8. At the George	-	- - - -	0	7	0
9. Bearsley, Francis	6 (horses)	- - -	0	2	9
10. Wandel, Margaret	13 (from the Peak)	- -	1	6	6
11. Statham, Mrs. (for wine, sugar, and tobacco which was for Sir Henry Willoughby's men, and wine into the town to Ed. Burnes and other places which was voices for Sir John Cooke)		- - -	8	11	0
12. Wandel, Ann	8	- - - -	0	9	6
13. Hayward, Henry	5	- - - -	0	18	6
14. Bourne, Richard	20	- - - -	1	17	0
15. Parr, Phillip	26	Richard Greaves and his company and Long Eaton and Ripley men -	5	16	6
16. Rusford, Robert	6	from Pinxton and Selston -	0	14	6
17. Davis, Robert	10	- - - -	0	15	0
18. Buck, William	71	Melbourne and Newton men and Mr. Hastings' company	5	1	0
19. Eaton, Humfrey	5	- - - -	1	3	2
20. Spicer, W. (at the Angel)	116	in 9 Chambers - -	10	13	0
21. Bould, W. -	-	- - - -	0	17	0
22. Scampton, Thomas	53	- - - -	6	8	0
23. Domelow, John	24	- - - -	2	8	0
24. Green, Jarvis	63	- - - -	3	10	0
25. Mandsfield, John	34	- - - -	2	11	6
26. Roe, John	12	(from Monyash & Scarsdale) -	2	8	0
27. Bourne, Edward (Rose and Crown)	133	- - - -	13	2	6
28. Hinckley, Eliz., Ale that Sir J. Coke's men had		-	0	4	0
29. Stables, Thomas	11	- - - -	1	8	0
30. At the Talbot	240	- - - -	33	17	6
31.	16	- - - -
32. Cordon, Richard	Wines	- - -	46	0	0
33. Shepheard, Gilbert	14	- - - -	1	8	4
34. Draper, Thomas	11	- - - -	1	16	7
35. White Hart for sack, beer, sugar, fire, and oats		-	0	7	8
36. Sack, claret, and tobacco		- - - -	8	11	6
37. Gillot, Henry, to the Angel, Talbot, Crown, and several houses, tobacco at 5*d.* an ounce and pipes		- -	2	16	8
			193	1	8

1640, November. Derby.—A Note of the number of those who had diet at the Talbot at the election of the Knights for the Parliament :—

On Wednesday night.—Supper in the Great Chamber, the Parlour, the Hall, the Kitchen - -	46	persons.
On Thursday morning.—Breakfast in the Great Chamber, in the Buttery, in the Kitchen - -	16	„
On Thursday.—Dinner in the Great Chamber, the Parlour, the Hall, the Stair, the Ceiled Chamber, the Green Chamber - - - -	240	„

£	s.	d.
17	8	0

	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
For 3 hogsheads of beer - - -	4	10	0
1 Runlet of Sack, 12 gallons - -	3	4	0
1 Runlet of Claret wine - -	1	12	0
1 Runlet of White wine - -	1	12	0
1½ lbs. of tobacco - - -	0	12	0
A gross of pipes - - -	0	2	4
Strong ale - - - -	0	1	6
4 lbs. of sugar to brown wine with -	0	5	4
fires in your chambers - - -	0	6	0
broken glasses - - - -	0	6	0
				12	14	2
				30	2	2

For Sir John Coke his dinner of Tuesday before the Election :—

	s.	d.
For two joints of roast mutton and salad - -	3	4
a couple of pullets - - - -	2	0
for wine - - - - - -	2	0
for bread and beer - - - -	5	6
	12	10

	£	s.	d.
Hay for 40 horses. Wednesday night - -	0	13	4
40 horses. Thursday - - -	0	6	8
24 „ more the same day - -	0	4	0
54 pecks oats - - - - -	1	0	7
Sir John Coke's horses on Tuesday - -	0	1	6
	2	12	6

Received in full of these four bills 33*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, Thomas Jemeson.

(1640, November.)—Gilbert Shepheard's Bill for the Right Honble. Sir John Coke, Knight, for charges of certain freeholders that lay at his house as they came and went to Derby, to give him their voices to be one of the Knights of the Shire.

Coke MSS.

	£	s.	d.
Impr. for 4 men of Okethorpe on Wednesday night for their suppers and breakfasts	0	4	0
for their horses lay all night—4 horses	0	1	0
for 4 pecks of provender	0	2	0
for 3 mens' suppers and breakfasts that came on foot from Smithsby the same night	0	3	0
for beer for the said 7 men over night and in the morning	0	2	0
Item for beer called for by 10 men of Appleby, Okethorpe, and Smithsby as they went back	0	4	4
Item for 7 men of the same towns that stayed all night for their suppers and breakfasts as they went back	0	7	0
for 4 horses hay	0	1	0
for 2 pecks of oats	0	1	0
for beer and tobacco besides over night and in the morning	0	3	0
Total sum	1	8	4

Account of Edward Bourne.—Rose and Crown.

"At the Second Meeting."

	£	s.	d.
For Wednesday night supper 46 men	1	10	8
For Thursday dinner 133 men	4	8	8
breakfast 7	0	3	6
Buns, cheese, butter, and bread	1	3	2
Tobacco and pipes	0	9	0
Two hogsheads of ale	3	0	0
Fifty horses one night at 4*d.*
Sixty-seven horses one day at 3*d.*	3	0	0
16 bushels of oats
	13	2	6

1640, November 5. (Derby.)—A note for the Right Honble. Sir John Coke of William Spicer at the Angel

		£	s.	d.
Wednesday night before 22 gent at supper		1	2	0
For breakfast on Thursday		0	3	0
In the Hall at dinner on Thursday	19	0	19	0
Little Parlour	15	0	19	0
Long Parlour	35	1	15	0
Hall-Chamber	10	0	10	0
Cieled Chamber	16	0	16	0
New Chamber	5	0	5	0
Boarded Chamber	1	0	1	0
Still Chamber	4	0	4	0
Kitchen	4	0	4	0
Afterwards in the Boarded Chamber	8	0	8	0
The sum is		7	2	0
Delivered in beer, manchent, nutmegs, and sugar		4	0	6
Your worship's horse meat comes to		1	9	2
So that the just sum in all is		12	11	8

Account of Jarvis Green :—

		£	s.	d.
In the Hall	35 men - - -	1	1	8
In the Parlour	3 - - -	0	2	0
In my Master's Chamber	9 - - -	0	6	0
In the Hall (again)	16 - - -	0	10	8
For a hogshead of beer drunk between meals	-	1	10	0
		3	10	4

A bill of Sir John Coke for the election to Thomas Stables—

	£	s.	d.
Supper, breakfast, and dinner for Godfrey Swift of Brampton, John Blyth of Norton, and Christopher Bower and Giles Cowley of Ashover - -	0	7	4
Eleven of your neighbours to dinner and for beer at times - - - - - -	0	15	4
Hay and provender for 8 horses - - -	0	6	2
	1	8	10

For Sir John Coke and Sir John Curzon—

Mr. Rolison of Norton, John Meriman of Hollinton, and Christopher Wood of Wilne meals and beer and provender - - - - -	0	6	11

(1643), (August 23, should be September.)—Mary Hartopp and Anne Sacheverell.

Indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Daughters from London," "received 30 Sept." No year. . No address. Much torn.

We make bold to present our [humble] duty to you and to let you know of our all being here. All things are quiet. We heard this news from the army from one that is there, that the King took our forces at a great disadvantage and hemmed them in and began before they were aware and so not ready, but they hasted to get ready and my Lord General did very bravely, and when the forlorn hope was unwilling to go he would have gone with them himself, but they would not suffer him, but he went up and down encouraging his soldiers and behaved himself very valiantly. The King's forces prevailed from morning till three o'clock in the afternoon, and then it pleased God to give our men the day. They won the field and followed them to Newbury and stood before the town all night, and in the morning gave them an alarm, but the King's forces were gone to Oxford, so my Lord and his army went into the town and refreshed themselves and then after that went to Reading. The number slain on our side is said generally to be 500, three good captains slain. They chiefly aimed against the London forces and shot with chain shot and all ways that would murder most cruelly. There [are on] their side slain a thousand bodies [ ] beside what they carried with them. My [Lord] Falkland is slain, the Earl of Sunder[land] and Lord Spencer slain, and my Lord [Carn]arvon and many more of note slain and taken prisoners. Sir William Waller is going speedily [to my] Lord General. Thus far we have made bold to acquaint you with the best news we have, fearing [ ]ble take leave remaining your most duty and obedient [daughter] Anne [Sacheverell].

Daughter Hartopp presents her humble duty and little [John] his.

COKE MSS.

UNDATED, TEMP. JAMES I. AND CHARLES I.

No date.—Sir Thomas Edmonds to the King.

When your Majesty was pleased to command me to undertake the employment of France, I did readily submit myself thereunto. . . . I did largely issue of my own means, my preparations for the journey, which was meant should extend as far as Piedmont, costing me no less than 2,000*l.* before my going forth. The time of my employment, being designed only for three months, lasted for almost a whole year, which, increasing my charge, forced me to spend the greatest part of a large sum of money, which I had raised by the sale of the Clerkship of the Crown, and intended for the marriage portions of my two daughters. . . . I was forced to sell away the present that was given me and to make other hard shifts to release my debts and to defray my expense in my return. . . . By the affliction which I received in my absence, by the death of my wife, I lost 1,500*l.* a year, which I enjoyed by her jointure: besides to my further grief, I then also lost by the taking away of my board wages, well near the sum of 800*l.* by the year. . . . Whereas it pleased your deceased father of glorious memory to grant unto me a pension of 750*l.* a year payable out of the Court of Wards, upon the resigning of a patent of the Greenwax made to the Duke of Richmond and myself, the which by reason of Sir Myles Fleetwood's great neglect of me, is for the most part long detained from me, may it please your Majesty to approve that my said pension may be changed and transferred on the Household payments, and in lieu thereof, to the end that the House may receive no prejudice, that the like sum may be charged upon the Wards to be paid into the House, and that my said pension of 750*l.* may be increased to 1,000*l.*, wherein, as I hope my suit is modest, so I can instance favours which in this kind has been granted to others of my condition.

(No date, no signature.)—Lord Keeper Coventry to Sir John Coke. [Indorsed by Sir John Coke, "Lord Keeper."]

Sir,—It may be you will find it necessary to read my letter to his Majesty or to show it to some other, and therefore I pray you give me leave by this private paper to yourself to . I conceive this business to be of moment, for as I have said heretofore in Starchamber and at Council Board, so I believe that the people of England have lost more by counterfeit farthing tokens and by other the consequences of this business than by all the counterfeit coins since the first year of Queen Elizabeth. And I do not see that this patent will any way remove, but rather increase the disease. I desire much that his Majesty should be rightly possessed of the business before his coming from Woodstock; for perchance at Windsor he will be set upon eagerly to pass it. For I perceive somebody was jealous I would stop it, and therefore put his Majesty on Sunday last to question me about it, when it had been but two days in my hand, and before I could read and perfectly understand it. You cannot but remember the debates that have been at the Council table about it; and now I see the advantage of a progress is taken to put it upon me to pass, when there is no Council Board held to which I might make my address for help or advice. If you could fitly acquaint my Lord of Canterbury with it before you speak to the King, and then move it to the King when he shall be present, I presume he would be sensible of so public a business and set it with you. This I leave to your own good consideration, and, if you think good, to use my name to him, and that it was my desire he should be acquainted with it. I leave that also to you, to do as you think best.

I beseech you when you have done what you think fit, convey the privy seal safe to me, with an advertisement what you have done, and how his Majesty doth relish the business, that I may know what shall be fit for me to do. And I desire that I may hear from you with as much expedition as you can. This private paper you will let none see but yourself, and when you have done with it, remit it to the fire.

Sir John Coke to [Lord Keeper?].

[Indorsed "Copy to the Lord Treasurer"]

Right Honourable,—According to your direction I have acquainted the Lord Archbishop with the contents of your letter; and took occasion to tell the King that I had received from your Lordship a letter concerning the stay made by you of the patent for farthing tokens; which in regard of the length and his Majesty's present occupations, I thought not fit to trouble him with till he had a free time: and because it seemed to me a matter of great importance both to his honour and the public, I desired that, by his leave, I might communicate it with my Lord's Grace, who was lately come to Court. This was granted: and upon conference with his Grace we attended this afternoon, and his Majesty patiently heard your letter, and our motions thereupon. My Lord Archbishop, both for respect to your Lordship, and sense of the prejudice that would grow by this grant, spake clearly and fully, relating what had passed both in the Starchamber and at the Council Board: and the Lord Marshal's earnest expressions thereupon. In conclusion his Majesty declared that, though he was willing to advantage my Lord Marshal, yet his intention was not to make him any other grant than before had been made by his father, without enlargement in any point. He commanded me therefore to let you know that he approved the stay you had [made], and that you should not let it pass till he spake with you further, when you came to Windsor. His Majesty did also let us know that this motion for my Lord Marshal's recompense in this particular proceeded from the Lord Treasurer; and that thereupon he was engaged to the Duchess, to pay her out of profits as much as she had made of it, which amounted to 1,000*l.* per annum. But though he had given charge to Sir Francis Crane to pay her duly, yet she complained that he had given her no contentment. This is all the account I can give your Lordship concerning that business. His Majesty hath also been pressed in the Earl of Carlisle's name to require your Lordship to pass the patent of Sir Purey Barton and Sir Philip Landon: but all he is pleased to do thereupon is to will your Lordship to acquaint him upon what reasons you made the stay; which you will be pleased to do when you come to court.

No date.—A paper indorsed by Sir John Coke "Lord of Collingham."

May it please your Majesty to give order to your Secretary of State Sir John Coke to draw a warrant that my Lord Treasurer and my Lord General may proceedi n determining the case questionable betwixt the Earl of Ancram and me, with power to examine the Earl upon oath and to call before them Mr. Kirke and my lawyer Mr. Bosden of the Middle Temple. . . . And to signify your royal pleasure to their Lordships that, as your Majesty was pleased to allow the Earl of Ancram 1,500*l.* towards the relief of my burdens, which, as he alleged, he fully stood engaged for, but his engagements being found far short of that sum, the residue of the moneys may be reserved for my use, for the further satisfaction of my creditors, his Lordship having as yet not paid one farthing to any of my creditors, as I can sufficiently prove.

Coxe MSS.

(1631 or 1632).—King Charles 1st to All Souls College, Oxford.

[Draft by Sir John Coke indorsed "Copy of a letter for Sir David Fowles his sons."]

Trusty and well-beloved We greet you well. We are informed that Sir David Fowles (Foulis ?), our ancient servant, hath two sons in that our University capable of preferment. And that by the death of one Ash there is now a fellowship void in your house. We have no intention to strain your oaths, or by our commandment to enforce you to elect against your statutes, which we require you strictly to observe in all your elections. But if either of these brothers be eligible for their sufficiency in learning and behaviour, and that others of greater merit shall not be put back by this means, then we would recommend one of these two unto you. And if you elect either of them to this place, we shall accept it in gracious manner.

To our trusty and well-beloved the Warden and Fellows of All Souls College in Oxford.

Undated. [Endorsed by Sir John Coke.]

"A letter to his Majesty. This was found by his Majesty in his withdrawing chamber who delivered it to mee to keep till I could discover the author."

Sir,—For God's cause and your owne stepp uppon the vantage ground of truth and reason, and there viewe the present state of affairs.

Then shall you finde that the greate worke in Germany seemes to be by you neglected. Your friends grow jealous of you. Dare not communicate counsells or designs with you, well knowing to whose views they shall come. . . . Your subjects at home unhappily distracted, full of fear, full of grief, to see you prepare craftie and artificial counsel before that of glory and safety, to see you undervalued abroade, misguided and ill-advised at home, to see [you] so to be circumstanced and wrought upon as by prodigious leases and grants to give a toleration of superstition and idolatrye. Besides, they are besett with just indignation to see men slaved to Rome and Spaine resort with confidence into your presence to be courted by your degenerate Lords and permitted even with approbation to vomitt forth their base expressions against the meritt and prosperities of your best friends and the happy restitution and establishment of your dearest sister and her royall children.

Then you shall see how disproportionable a thing it is that one man shall have the whole dependancy of the kingdom uppon him, being the sole master of your strength, of your treasure, and of your secrett affaires . . . . that dishonourable and unsafe peace with Spaine, unto whose service your owne wayes and those of your father hath here of late contributed more than the best army he hath in Christendom could possibly have effected. . . . It is humbly desired that your excellent Majesty will be pleased seasonably to call to you your Nobility, who are naturally the greate Counsell of the State, to advise you what course is fitt for you to take. . . . And in case upon their counsell it shall seem expedient for you to speak with your poor Commons in Parliament I am with reason confident that you shall find them full of dutie and affection to your Majesty. . . . It is true, Sir, and cannot be denyed but ought to be lamented, that you were justly provoked the last day of the last meeting, but God forbid that the fault of two or three should be expiated by the punishment, nay the ruin, of all; or that your Majesty's just indignation against these poor wormes, should debar your Majesty from the fruites of our love, or keepe from us the benefits of your goodness. It shall bee soe no more.

We shall not presume to touch upon your government. We shall behold your prerogative as a kind of sacred peice, not to be toucht with rude or violent hands. . . .

Your Majesties most loyall and faithfull vassall,
R. R

(1633, May $\frac{1}{11}$.)—A paper in the writing of Sir Francis Nethersole, indorsed by him "Note of moneys owing by Mr. Burlamachi to the Queen [of Bohemia] my Mistress and others that have relation to her Majesty."

	£
Mr. Burlamachi owes to the Queen my Mistress -	3,850
To Mr. Dineley her servant received out of the Exchequer without warrant, being money given him by your Majesty - - - -	1,000
To the town of Frankendale being the chief part of the jointure of her Majesty for moneys by them lent to the King your Majesty's father of blessed memory - - - - - -	4,552
In all - - -	9,402

Draft in Sir J. Coke's writing of a Latin letter from His Majesty (King Charles) to the King of Denmark, respecting the support promised by the latter to His Majesty's nephew, the Elector Palatine (sent by His Majesty's Ambassador).

No date.—Samuel Cooke. [Indorsed by Sir J. Coke "Letter to Lord Chancellor."]

Whereas I having employed a good stock of money in planting in Ireland and trading into England, wherein I have employed divers poor men, and am purposed through God's assistance and His Majesty's favour to proceed therein and to employ the greatest part of my estate in that kingdom. But both myself and my agents there have received so many and insufferable injuries by some of the natives that if I be not supported by authority I must be constrained to leave the kingdom. . . . . My cattle driven away or let out, my servants beaten, and when they struck in their own defence indicted and upon false suggestions committed. Myself with other inhabitants intending to go about the bounds of the parish met with long pitchforks, swords, and guns. I desire to be recommended to the Lord Deputy and Lord Chancellor of Ireland that I may obtain speedy justice against my injurious adversaries.

No date.—Memorial of Arthur Lake, Bishop of Bath and Wells, Francis Barber, James Bysse, Anthony Stocker, to the King in support of a Petition of the inhabitants of Corston, Co. Somerset, to grant Letters Patent for collection of a Benevolence in the adjoining counties for rebuilding their parish church, estimated to cost 400*l.* or upwards.

— July.—Lord Conway to Sir John Coke, Knight, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State.

[Indorsed by Sir J. Coke "complaint against the Constable of Ross by Childe."]

Upon a letter from the Lord Stanhope earnestly moving that some contemners of a warrant of his granted to one Mr. Charles Childe to ride post might be sent for I received this inclosed information from

COKE MSS.

Mr. Childe. I sent a warrant for Merricke and Abrall, the men complained of, to appear before the Lords. I have also caused Mr. Childe, who is to be found in the Temple, to put his name to the Information, and if his complaint shall be found frivolous he must pay the messengers' fees, and give allowance to the men of such reasonable costs as shall be ordered, to all which he hath submitted.

September 5. Rhen.—Elizabeth, Electress Palatine, to Mr. Secretary Coke.

I give you many thanks for the care you had in sending me the King my dear brother's cover. I writ an answer to it which I will send to Sir William Boswell having not time to do it now because this bearer doth make so much haste as I have not time to scarce to say thus much to you only I must entreat you to give this worthy honest man the best assistance and counsel you can. He will tell you how his case stands here, and what he leaves for the King's service if he so command it: what other news of the army he can tell you, and for my affairs you shall have all from Sir William Boswell, so I rest your very affectionate friend.

October 21. Rhen —Elizabeth, Electress Palatine, to Mr. Secretary Coke.

I must not send my son to kiss the King his uncle's hand but withal recommend him to your care that you will continue your love to me, and show it by your care of my son. This bearer Rustorf can so well inform you of all things as I need not take the pains to do it, especially being in haste, the wind being now good, which he has stayed for this fortnight at the least, but I am glad he did so having in the meantime received a kind letter from the King my dear brother which assures me of his willingness to see his nephew, it doth comfort me very much. I have commanded him to be diligent in waiting and serving his uncle. I hope he will do it for he goeth with a great deal of affection and zeal to him. I again entreat you to show your love to me in him and to believe me ever your affectionate friend.

No date.—"Survey of fisheries within the King's dominions." "A brief Survey of the fishings within your Majesty's dominions neglected by the natives and used by strangers to their inestimable profit."

Your sacred Majesty having largely considered out of history and experience how that industry and diligence have been the steps of raising of mean estates to the height of power and wealth, I forbear to trouble your Highness with discourse upon this point and take me only to represent unto your Majesty how the Belgic Pismires by their industry have out of the treasure of your Majesty's seas abated the pride of their enemies and enriched and strengthened their State, and how justly we your Majesty's subjects of this Isle may be taxed and our progenitors for our neglect of so great a blessing which the bounty of Heaven hath (as it were) cast at our doors and we never yet stooped to take it up. * * It is not above 100 years since that one Violet Stephens and other discontented fishmongers departed the realm of England and went to Enchusan (Enkhuizen) in Holland where they procured the Hollanders upon their charge to fish for them in the seas and dominions of Great Britain. And after the death of the said English the inhabitants took the whole trade to themselves which afterwards hath been dispersed into many towns in the Netherlands, and the trade is now so far increased that Holland and Zealand have above 2,000 busses of fishing ships which yearly do make two or three returns although they be remote from the seas of England, Scotland, and Ireland. And such is the blessing of God prospering their endeavours and travails that above 600,000 last of fish are taken yearly in the dominions of Great Britain only, which doth amount to ten millions of pounds sterling, as by the books of the Brigmasters and Wharfmasters of that State doth appear. * * And to let your Majesty know so far as by inquiry or reading I could learn the manner of the Netherlanders fishing in your Majesty's seas is this. They set to sea their busses about the middle of May and by the first of June (their style) they are seen to sail out of the Maese Texel and Vlie 1,000 sail together, being most of them 120 or 100 tons and some 60 tons, having aboard in every ship some 24 some 20 some 16 men: holding on their course till they come to Shetland in your Majesty's kingdom of Scotland. And about the 14th of June (a day kept by them first to lay their nets and not before) they begin to fish and do never leave the schools [shoals] of herring but come along amongst them following 500 miles in length, lading their ships twice or thrice before they come to Yarmouth in England, and sending them away by merchant ships who meeting them on their way bringeth them victuals, barrels, and more salt and nets if they need any. And these ships do carry and sell them in the east countries, some to Riga and Revel, some to the Norway, Russia, Stockholm, and all Poland, Prussia, Pomerland, Lithuania, Stettin, Lubeck, and Denmark, returning from there hemp, flax, cordage, cables, iron, soap ashes, wax, wainscot clapboards, pitch, tar, deals, hoops, and other things with plenty of money; besides what fishes is carried by them into France, Germany, sold in England and Scotland and in their own country and in the Arch Duchess' territories, amounting to an incredible mass of money. Their fishing for cod and ling is done continually with smaller ships of 40 tons burthen called pinks and flyboats, and of them they have 200 or more having small boats with them, and by means of them cod and ling is taken about the Isle of the Lewis in great abundance. * * Recommends settling a trade and plantation in the Lewis with 200 busses, besides this new mystery of making of salt of such perfect goodness and such plenty within your Majesty's dominions, serviceable for all uses of the subjects thereof whereof the like hath not formerly been. * *

Copies of Acts of James 3 (1471), James 4 (1493), James 6 (1597).

No date. (1639 probably.)—Indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Berwick Establishment," and the paper in his writing.

The Governor besides his fee had the Castle hills enclosed, and the outer Castle hills not enclosed, and Lumsden Anna, Hew water Harth and water mills, and the royal fishings on the north side of Tweed.

To be continued.—,

The Treasurer's place, Gentleman Porter, Master of Ordnance, Controller of the Cheque, Master Mason, Master Carpenter, 80 horse, or what number shall please His Majesty considering his office of Governor. Master Gunner 2*s.* 6*d.*, master's mate 16*d.* 11*d.* a piece and 60 gunners at 8*d.*

1 Trumpeter, 1 Chirurgeon to stand.

Captains 8, Lieutenants 8, Ancients 8, Sergeants 8, Drums (?) 8, and 500 soldiers divided into 8 Companies.

A preacher to be continued at 50*l.* to serve garrison and town.

Artificers to stand and exception of bowyers and fletcher.

Cellarage but as occasion shall require.

Post boat stand 2 stand.

COKE MSS.

Castle to be bought, 4 particulars Holy Island, Fern Island, Tynemouth Castle, Worck Castle, all in the establishment as belonging to the Earl's marcher.

Total { Men, 980.
Money, 12,734*l.*

To be discontinued.

The Warden's place, The Marshal, to cease the land being disposed to the town, Mayor's fee, and the Custom House Officer, 8 Constables, 42 foot officers of the old garrison, 2 clerks of the watch, 6 captains discharged and all the pensioners following, Assistants to the Watch.

(Over the page.) Present muster book.—The regiment of 2,000 foot artillery men and engineers.

No date.—As to making the Wye navigable to Hereford. Sir William Sandys' method of making locks and weirs was not only chargeable but proved very ineffectual, being founded on so rapid a river; the work was very fatal to his family.

No date.—A letter from Pietro Martire Mastignon, in Italian, faded and illegible.

No date.—A Latin list of the Electors and Princes of the Empire, "Finis Principum Spiritualium et Temporalium Imperii qui sunt numero 138."

No date.—In Spanish. Cost to the King of Spain of the Government in Flanders.

No date.—Note of Flemish goods in custody of the Mayor of Plymouth, Mr. Christopher Harris and Stallenge out of the St. Simon of Hamburg.

No date.—"The petition concerning brass battery" [making brass utensils from copper] of James Burett a citizen of Acon (Aachen?) in High Germany.

No date.—"Payments formerly made by the Keeper of the Privy Purse now paid by the Treasurer of the Chamber upon warrant of the Lord Chamberlain."

In the late Queen's time.		In our late King's time.
Anno 43.	Anno 44.	Anno 19 Regis Jacobi.
	Increased since Queen's Elizabeth's time.
Presenting of plays and bearbaiting, 120*l.*
&c.	&c.

Lodging of sundry persons out of the Court, viz.:—His Majesty's Physicians, His Apothecaries, His Surgeons, His Barber, His Clockmaker, Secretary for the Latin tongue.
Sir Wm. Alexander, Archibald Hay, and divers others. In all, 622*l.*

No date.—"Clause of the letter mentioned in my Despatch to Mr. Secretary Coke." Cloth manufacture in Westphalia described.—"Excellent methods."

No date.—"Consultatio Medica" for a tumour. "Spadensibus aquis."

No date.—A Medical Prescription:—Capiat cum aequali parte vini albi et syrupi quolibet mane jejunus.

No date.—"2 H. 3. pro villa Salop firmanda." Copy of Letters Patent.

No date.—"Concerning great wrong and grievance done to my gracious Sovereign King Charles in His Royal prerogative in his princely pre-eminence his Majesty's revenues, debts, and duties." A scheme for improving the Revenue.

No date.—Indorsed by Sir John Coke. "Sir William Boswell's Memorial." As to inhabitants in the Netherlands obtaining grants of land in Ireland.

(1616?)—Sir Arthur Ingram and others. Gunpowder and Alum. Imperfect draft by Sir J. Coke.

"L'Assemblée à Rouen, France" (temp. Henri 4) (a fragment).

Sir Robert Vaughan's Will. Notes of an argument thereon. Imperfect draft by Sir J. Coke.

"The Report of the Committees for the plantation at Londonderry in Ireland." [1628 or later.] Imperfect draft by Sir J. Coke.

No date.—Petition to the King, indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Mr. Prynne." "William Prynne a prisoner in the Tower for certain offensive and indiscreet passages unadvisedly fallen from his pen in a book intituled Histrio-mastix," abjectly asks pardon.

Without date.—Petition of inhabitants of Lincolnshire to Sir John Coke, Principal Secretary of State, stating that they the trained band of the County had by a weekly exercise attained to excellent knowledge and readiness in their arms, but they had been pillaged by strange Commanders of the forces now sent out of the County. Asks that the King may be moved to give authority to the County Captains or Lieutenants to take a true information of the sums that had been exacted.

Without date.—Petition to the King of W. Bamfield, for forty years one of the sweepers at Whitehall, asking that Counsel may be appointed to open his case in the Parliament House upon his claim to lands in Wolmerton and other places in Devon.

Without date.—Petition to the King of Sir Phillibert Vernatt and John Corselis, asking a declaration as to the scope of a reference already ordered in the matter between them and Sir Cornelius Vermuyden.

Without date.—Portions of two draft notes by Sir J. Coke on mischiefs in the Navy Administration. Allowances to Admirals. Payment of mariners at sea, &c. One of the notes is altered in the writing of Sir Fulke Grevill.

Without date.—Proposed regulations for the Navy Administration.

Without date.—Answer of John Brown, His Majesty's Founder of Ordnance, to the petition of the clothiers of Cranbrooke in Kent to the Lords of the Council with regard to the consumption of wood in their respective trades.

Without date.—"The principal heads concerning His Majesty's Navy wherein we desire to be informed for the better enabling of us to discharge our duties to His Majesty and the State." Information to be required from the Commissioners of the Navy.

Without date.—Petition to the King in Council of Mayor and Commonalty of the City of New Sarum, to stay proceedings in a matter between them and the Bishop, Dean, and Canons of the Cathedral Church, touching their respective incorporation by charter.

COKE MSS.

Without date.—A brief description of the Barbadoes by Capt. John Fincham.

Without date.—Sale of woods to be made in certain Forests and Parks, with reasons and cautions for the sales there.

2 James 1st.—Office of Treasurer of the Navy surrendered by Sir F. Grevill and granted to Sir R. Maunsell. Statement of account.

Without date.—Petition to the King in Council of Dame Elizabeth Bodvell, Widow, for a reference of matters respecting her deceased husband's estate and her son's wardship.

Without date.—Petition to the King in Council of Ralph Starkey as to a conveyance by his father unduly procured, and destruction of his will by which it had been revoked, asking a reference.

Without date.—Petition to the King in Council of Robert Tirwhitt for a Billet office to be kept in the Court of the Marches of Wales.

Without date.—Petition to the King in Council of John de la Croix, French merchant, stating that one Thomas Violett had caused his goods to be attached and sold, and asking a reference to the Lord Mayor and some Aldermen and Merchants.

Without date.—Appeal of Lady Lake. Names of the Counsel and of those nominated for Judges delegate.

Without date.—Petition to the King in Council of Alex. Stewart, stating that he had proffered to be Agent in Russia for furnishing munition for the Navy but being opposed by the Muscovia Company, asks a reference to the Lord Treasurer.

Without date. — Petition to the King in Council of Sir Ranulph Crewe, Knt., stating that in a suit by him against Lord Cholmley, in the Exchequer, at Chester, for fees, tolls, and liberties at Nantwich, decrees had been given in his favour, but Lord Cholmley had procured a letter of His Majesty to the judges there, dated 30 March 1634, tending to enervate those decrees. Asks recall of that letter.

No date.—Petition to the King, indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Thomas Cordwell," asks place of usher of the Court of Rolls.

No date.—Petition to the King, indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Robert Hambleton," for a lease of the Manor of Bewick in Northumberland.

No date.—Petition to the King, indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Mr. Latch his petition," for a new grant of the office of Engrossing Commissions of Bankrupt.

No date.—Printed paper, indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Sir Thomas Monson's case, Parliament." Notes on his claim to fees as Secretary of the Court of the Council of York.

No date.—Petition to the King, indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "John Delamare," for recovery of his father's estate in Westmeath in possession of John Nugent Fitz Edmund under a forged deed.

No date.—Petition to the King, indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Geratt FitzGerald (of Dromany) for leave to go into Ireland to sue his livery."

No date.—Petition to the King, indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "John Lambe" a prisoner in the King's Bench as a conjuror.

No date.—Petition to the King, indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "George Beardsworth for a place in the Charterhouse."

No date.—Petition to Sir J. Coke, indorsed by him, "Richard Johnson to me." The Petitioner [a cook] in Dover prison offers to give information against Captain Clarke.

No date.—Petition to the King, indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Thomas Persons" [of Westminster, Knight of the Sun] "Thomas Jarvis" [of Lyme] "Proposition," asking an audience or a reference to men of Somerset and Dorset.

No date.—Petition to the King, indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Sir Robert Spotswood, Knight" [President of the Court of Justice in Scotland], "for land in Ireland."

No date.—Petition to the King, indorsed "Michael Leigh and William Hood, prisoners in the Fleet," for killing a stag in Eltham Great Park.

No date.—Petition to the King, indorsed "Susan Hamlett, a Frenchwoman" from Rochelle, convicted of the murder of her child in Cornwall.

No date.—"The Case" of Walter Bourke of Turlogh, County Mayo, who petitions the King that his land be not taken for plantation.

No date.—Petition to the King, of "John Peirs, Esquire," claiming to be grantee of the office of Registrar of the Archbishop's Exchequer Court of York.

No date.—Petition to the King, indorsed "Edmund Dunck, Esquire, Sheriff of Berkshire, to have leave to reside in Gloucestershire."

No date.—Petition to the King, indorsed "Concerning the Lord Mountnorris." Sir Thomas Phillips states that books of the late Deputy Lord Chichester relating to plantation in Ireland are now in the hands of Sir Francis Annesley Lord Mountnorris, and should be obtained for the King's service.

No date.—Petition to the King of Phillippa Parburie, that Bartholomew Battens convicted of the murder of her husband may be executed.

No date.—Indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Lord Stanhope's reasons for surrender." His patent as Master of the Letter Office being void—Reasons for a new grant to him considered.

No date, (1626).—Petition to the King, indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Countess of Lincoln's petition." Bridget, wife of Theophilus Clinton 4th Earl of Lincoln, prays for access to her husband in the Tower. (He was imprisoned for refusing to subscribe to the forced loan.)

No date.—Petition to Sir J. Coke, indorsed by him, "Captain Wood to me." Asks support to his petition for satisfaction for his services in foreign parts.

No date.—Petition to the King, indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Aldermen of Yarmouth." Owners of the ship Hannah trading to Bilboa, ask relief—their ship detained, men illused, and money taken.

COKE MSS.

No date.—Petition to the King, indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Richard Joy" under sentence of death in the common gaol of the White Lion in Southwark for 5 kine. "A letter of reprieval sent."

No date.—Petition to the King, indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "John Willoughby" of Northlewe, Devon. Asks a "Reference" for a settlement with his creditors.

No date.—Petition to Sir J. Coke, indorsed by him, "Thomas Thornton to me," to be admitted into Sir J. Coke's service.

No date.—Petition to the King, indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "John Newell, Bachelor of Arts," asks for a Fellowship in All Souls, Oxon, with a certificate of character by John Holt, President of Corpus Christi.

1623, May 10.—Petition to the King, indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "John Worral, glassmaker, refused."

No date (1632?)—Indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Prisoners demanded by Monsieur de Chaumont." Mémoire des prisonniers des quels sa Majesté a accordé la delivrance à Monsieur de St. Chaumont Ambassadeur Extraordinaire de France. . . . Palmer au Fleet, Thomas Smith à Gate-house, Edward Ditchfield à Lancaster Castle, Jean Southwarth à Gate-house.

No date.—Request of Sir Raulph Crewe that His Majesty may be informed that he desired at first a reference of the controversy with Lord Cholmondeley. Asks that men of knowledge and integrity may hear and end the difference, as jury would be affected and partial in that country.

No date.—Robert, Lord Cholmondeley, hopes that it will stand with His Majesty's gracious pleasure that he shall have liberty to take his trial by law.

No date.—Indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "To Sir John Bridgeman and Sir Marmaduke Lloyd, Justices for Chester. Copy of His Majesty's letter for Sir Rand. Crewe."

(Draft by Sir J. Coke.)—There is (as we hear) some difference fallen out betwixt the Lord Cholmondeley and our old and faithful servant Sir Randal Crew. We consider that his years and course of life make him now unfit for suits of law, specially in the country where he hath been long a stranger and against a potent adversary. We would therefore have you take the cause into your hands and to do your best endeavour to end it by friendly agreement if you can.

No date.—Indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Sir Robert Bannisters relation for the grant of sweet wines." The late Queen Elizabeth had until about the 20th year of her reign sweet wines called sack taken by at 6*l.* per butt, and muscatels at 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* per butt. Subsequent contracts for the household, and the general trade at London described.

No date.—Indorsed by Sir John Coke, "Muster-master of Cumberland." Rough abstract of same letter.

"The names of the Deputy Lieutenants are:—Sir Patricius Curwen, Sir John Dalston, Sir Richer Fletcher, Sir Henry Blencoe, Sir Thomas Carleton and others."

No date.—Indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Giles Penn for letters of marque for the merchants of Bristol," who desire to set forth three ships to be armed for the surprising of Turks and Moors with all other such pirates and enemies of his Majesty.

No date.—Indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Order required for the soldiers stayed at Gravesend."

No date.—"Allowances for packets. Received from Sir Will. Uvedall." The word "foreign" interlined by Sir J. Coke.

No date.—A draft by Sir J. Coke, indorsed "Warrant to Mr. Attorney for a proclamation [against exportation of] fuller's earth."

No date.—A rough draft by Sir J. Coke, indorsed by him, "Lubeck." Answer by the Council to the complaint of the Lubeck agents.

No date.—A rough draft by Sir J. Coke of Notes for a Treaty. To contract as well for the infantry as cavalry of Hessen, &c.

1633, December.—Certificate of officers of the Court of the Marches of Wales against proposed grant to R. Wigmore of the office of Entering Causes, &c., signed by Jo. Bridgeman, W. Overbury, and others.

No date.—Regulations for the Council of the Marches of Wales. A fragment.

No date, (1628 ?)—"A Memorial of a standing provision for trade issued out in the 20th year of King James and 1st of King Charles of great importance for His Majesty's benefit if it were put in execution, neglected these 3 years."

Papers without Date.

To the Right honorable the Lords of his Maty.'s Most honorable Privie Counsell.

The humble peticion of Sr Allen Apsley knight Lieutenant of the Tower humbly sheweth that there are 4 Frentchmen that have been long cloase prisoners in the Tower and have no frends to sollicett in their behalf.

Minute thereon by Sr John Coke:—"Resolved by the Lords and allowed by his Maty. that Senngual (?) and his sonne and Short bee al discharged and sent away for France."

Richard Sandes.—A letter to the King, that at his Majesty's pleasure he will lay open those sundry ways for raising of money with the good liking of the subjects, for setting forth an army for placing the Prince Elector and the virtuous Lady his wife and royal issue and nobility into their just inheritance.

J. Setone. Edinburgh.—A Monsieur de Malmy Agent pour le Roi de France aupres du Roi de la Grande Bretagne en Cour. Etant arrivé en ce pays pour voir mes parens et pour donner ordre a mes affaires Monseigneur le Chancelier me fit prisonnier sans m'accuser d'aucune chose sinon que c'etait la volonté du Roi. Je vous prie de voir sa Majesté: aussitot que je pourrai donner quelque ordre içi pour mes affaires je me rendrai aupres sa Majesté pour repondre de mes actions. . . .

Coke MSS.

George Goring to the Lord Goring (his father).
Recommending his friend Sir Jacob Astley, who goes to England with 4 months' leave from the Prince of Orange.

"A means to restore the Lord Viscount Falkland to his troop and company" by suggested reductions of the troops of the Lord Moore and the Lord Chichester, of the Lord Blany's Seneschal's fee, &c.

Minute by Sir John Coke.
Two challenges were sent one by Sir Francis Wortley the other by the Lord Carlingford [Swift]. Upon the first they met and by company coming in were prevented. Upon the second made by the Lord they met again and fought, and then the Lord Carlingford being hurt Gillman their second (who is since slain) did part them. Both remain in Yorkshire and no notice taken of the offence. His Majesty being informed of this breach of his proclamation requireth Mr. Attorney to prosecute them in the Star Chamber at the King's suit.

Dorothy Carey (widow of Valentine Carey, Bishop of Exeter) to Sir J. Coke.
Asks her brother Sir J. Coke to move the Lord Keeper on her behalf, her suit being appointed by him to be heard on Monday next.

Thomas Withrings (London) to Sir John Coke (in Derbyshire).
Has delivered letters to Mr. Weckherlin who has returned them and they have been despatched according to order. Asks directions for sending letters when his Honour leaves Derbyshire. King, Queen, Prince and Princess are at Greenwich.

Letter from a Priest newly come to Brussels, partly to discharge his own function in hearing confessions, partly to help in visitation of religious houses, their state described, complains that alms sent have not been 50*l.* in seven months.

Pierre du Moulin (the younger) a M. le Chevalier Coke, Secretaire Principal.
Equidem meæ mihi tenuitatis et ignorantiæ sum conscius nec me latet quam patrem sequar non passibus æquis—mihi nunc incumbit scripturæ textus in Ecclesia Gallica intra dies decem Deo dante homiliam habituro. Sum præterea in clerum Anglicanum adoptatus et sacro diaconatus ordine insignitus. Me quoque vatem Dicunt pastores sed non ego credulus illis. Denique decrevi Cantabrigiensem Academiam adire et baccalaureatum mihi poscere.

Indorsed by Sir J. Coke, "Lord Conway to the Lords."
It is the opinion of the Earl of Essex and the rest of the Colonels here that the pay of all ranks of officers is less than in any other State.

Draft.—Sir J. Coke to Fabian Smith, His Majesty's Agent in Persia.
The Commission for his Agency has been sent by Sir John Merick and the Company. He should assist Mr. Nightingale to recover a debt from James Vicars in that country.

Extract from the Will of John Powell of Preston, in the County of Hereford (father of Sir John Coke's first wife), as to a lease of roots and stools of trees in Dean Forest granted by the procurement of Mr. Secretary Coke to Eleanor James, widow, a daughter of Mr. Powell, for and in his behalf.

Lord Wilmot protests his unwillingness to fly from his submission: he was advised by his counsel that if he did make his answer upon oath according to his submission in the Star Chamber he would have fallen into the danger and infamy of perjury: the King's title to the lands might be prejudiced by his answering the bill in the Exchequer.

William Burrell to the Commissioners of the Navy (?)

Proposes that 40 sail may be in readiness for the keeping of the narrow seas against attempts to be made out of Dunkirk or the French coast and against the passing of great fleets of heavy burden, by having on board each coal ship 3 gunners and 39 soldiers which no doubt in one summer would prove good mariners. The means to be obtained out of the coals by stricter measurement for the King's customs of the coal carried; for the owners of the coal pits give extraordinary great measure so as every ship doth make out two chaldrons for one of what they take in at Casell (Newcastle). This will appear by examining what they did lade at Casell with the meters' books in London. The King to have the over measure towards the maintenance of the 40 sail of men of war. The consideration of this proposition may be brought before the King and my Lord Duke.

Petitions.

Canada Company to Sir John Coke.

For the patent to Captain Kirk and against the patent to Sir Wm. Alexander under the Great Seal of Scotland.

Edward Courtenay to the Queen.

To be discharged without being bound to good behaviour.

Sir William Gilbert to the King.

For a grant of the fee farm of the Castle of Maryborough in Ireland.

Haggett to the King.

For a valuable entertainment as decypherer.

Postmaster for foreign letters.

Matthew de Quester to the Lords of the Council in respect of his patents from King James and King Charles.

Henry Billingsley and Merchants of London to the Commons House of Parliament, asserting an authority from Lord Stanhope and complaining of abuses by de Quester.

Portsmouth.—Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses to Sir John Coke.

Against John Brookes, Clerk of the Cheque, who with William Bold of Gosport bought salt laden in a French barque in the harbour to sell again contrary to the privilege of the Corporation.

1684–5.—"List of all His Majesty's Commissioned Officers in His Guards, Garrisons, and Land Forces with the dates of their respective Commissions."

	Captains.
First Troop of Horse Guards Granadiers	Duke of Albemarle.
Second „ „ „	Duke of Northumberland.
Granadiers	Earl of Feversham.

COKE MSS.

In the above 3 Regiments the Lieutenants, Cornets, Guidons, Quarter Masters, Brigadiers, an Adjutant, a Marshal and a Chyrurgeon are also specified by name.

Regiments of Horse	- - -	Sir John Parsons.
,,	- - -	Sir Francis Compton.
,,	- - -	Sir Charles Windham.
,,	- - -	Edwin Sandys.
,,	- - -	Sir Thomas Slingsby.
,,	- - -	Herc. Cornwall.
,,	- - -	Wal. Littleton.
,,	- - -	Charles Adderley.

In the Regiments of Horse—7 Lieutenants, 7 Cornets, 7 Quarter Masters, an Adjutant, and a Chryrurgeon are specified by name.

There are also specified by name in the—

First Regiment of Foot Guards—26 Captains, 27 Lieutenants, 21 Ensigns.

Coldstream Regiment of Foot Guards—Colonel, Lieut.-Colonel, 11 Captains, 14 Lieutenants, 12 Ensigns.

Queen's Regiment of Foot—Major, 8 Captains, 10 Lieutenants, 8 Ensigns.

Queen Dowager's Regiment—Colonel, Lieut.-Colonel, 9 Captains, 12 Lieutenants, 10 Ensigns.

Prince George, Hereditary Prince of Denmark's Regiment—Colonel, Lieutenant-Colonel, Major, 11 Captains, 12 Lieutenants, 12 Ensigns.

Holland Regiment—Colonel, Lieut.-Colonel, Major, 9 Captains, 12 Lieutenants, 11 Ensigns.

Royal Regiment of Dragoons—Colonel, Lieut.-Colonel, 4 Captains, 6 Lieutenants, 6 Cornets.

Garrisons.

Tower of London.	Guernsey.
Gravesend, Tilbury.	Portsmouth.
Hull.	Upnor Castle.
Isle of Scilly.	Plymouth.
Carlisle.	Borders of Berwick.

1688, May 16.—Rotterdam. Chauvin, M.

Monsieur Thomas Coke est venu loger chez moi le lundi seiziême de Mai de l'année courante, et sa pension a été reglée avec Monsieur son père à cinq cent livres par an monnaie de Hollande. J'ai reçu en deduction de la dite somme dix guinées, valans douze livres la piéce. À Rotterdam ce 16e de May mil six cent quatre vingt huit. Mon adresse est à Chauvin, franse predicant op de botter sloot in de Roomse Keyser à Rotterdam.

(1638, June 4.)—Rotterdam. Chauvin, M., à Monsieur Coke à Londre. Depuis que Monsieur votre fils est sous ma discipline, je l'ai etudié avec soin, et je croi le connoitre. Il a le naturel bon, et de bonnes inclinations; mais comme il est jeune, il a besoin d'être un peu excité. La langue francoise lui paroit difficile, et il aimeroit mieux travailler deux heures à autre chose, qu'une heure à la traduction francoise, qu'il n'a commençé que depuis peu de jours. Cependant je le tourne de ce côté-la principalement, sans le rebuter: et j'espére qu'il y faira des progrés qui vous satisfairont . . . Il a achevé de faire la construction des fables de Phedre, qu'il mettra au net, pour vous les envoier. Je ne croy pas qu'il faille encore luy donner un maitre d'arithmetique, pour ne le pas trop fatiguer par deux sortes d'études, ou il seroit tout neuf: en deux mois de tems il pourra commencer. Cependant il s'exerce à jouer du violon, ce qui le divertit en l'appliquant. . . . Outre la joye que j'aurai infailliblement en faisant mon devoir, j'en aurai une seconde de vous rendre un jour votre fils un peu mieux fait que je ne l'ay reçu. Ma femme fait de son côté ce qu'elle peut pour votre fils, et je croy qu'il est assez content de nous. J'ay dans la maison des jeunes messieurs avec lesquels il vit fort doucement, et un de ceux-là, qui est fils à un Conseiller du Parlement de Paris, ne luy sert pas peu pour la langue francoise dans le tems de leurs divertissements. Nous irons, s'il plait à Dieu, dans la semaine prochaine à la Haye, et de là à Houslardik pour y voir Mr. Stanly Chapelain de Madame la Princesse. Nous avons deja visité ensemble Mr. Du Bosc, qui m'a prié de vous saluer très humblement de sa part. J'iray chez luy tantôt parce qu'il a dessein d'écrire à Mr. Sion. Si vous me le permettrez je prendrai l'occasion de saluer ce bon serviteur de Dieu, que je connoy aujourdhuy pour l'auteur de la Morale de l'Evangile, l'aiant appris par Mr. Du Bosc. Son ouvrage est plein d'esprit et de piété, et par consequent tres digne de luy. Le public l'a tres bien reçu, et on le lit avec beaucoup de satisfaction. Je l'honore comme je le dois, et je luy suis tout acquis. J'ay autrefois connu à Nîmes un proposant de son nom, et de sa même patrie: si c'etait le même de qui je parle, j'en aurois une extrême joye. . . . . Je vous prie de vous reposer un peu sur moy pour ce qui regarde Mr. vôtre fils, que j'aime comme mon enfant, et que j'eléverai aussi comme si j'etois son propre père.

1688–9, January 17.—A paper indorsed "Mr. Fraunciss Bill concerning Election and receit." (Derby Borough.)

	£	s.	d.
pd for five hoggs of ale - - -	12	10	0
pd for 10 lbs. of tobacco - - -	1	0	0
pd to the poor of the town - - -	10	0	0
pd to the Ringers - - - -	2	10	0
pd to 2 sergeants - - - -	1	10	0
pd to the Cryer - - - -	1	0	0
pd to the Town's Marshall - - -	0	2	6
pd Mrs. Heathcoate for wines and tongues (?) &c. - - - - - -	4	0	0
pd in the last Entertainm[t] - - -	2	0	0
	34	12	6
pd to the prisoners - - -	0	10	0
	35	2	6

£	s.	d.
17	11	3	Received the contents above
17	11	3	17*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.* by me Will[m] Franceys
35	2	6

COKE MSS.

1688–9, January 21. London.—F. Hopegood's Account with John Coke.

	£	s.	d.
1684, July 10, paid for 2 Hogsheads Clarrett -	22	0	0
to charge on do. - -	0	7	6
„ 17, paid for Rhennish wine - -	4	13	0
1685, June 1, paid for 2 Hogshead Clarrett -	22	10	0
„ November 17, to himself when in the Tower - - - - -	64	10	0
1686, April 10, paid for a tierce of Clarrett -	7	0	0
May 21, for three hatts for your daughters	1	13	0
June 30, for a feather for Mrs. Mary -	0	11	0
„ for 2 hogsheads Clarrett -	24	0	0
March 24, for do. do. - -	24	0	0
1687, October 36, for a black beaver - -	2	15	0
„ July 17, for a bill of f. 160 payable to M. Chauvin in Rotterdam -	14	11	0
1688, August 22, to cost and charges of an Aam of Rhennish wine - -	11	2	3
for a black beaver and box -	2	16	0
	202	8	9

1696, July 31. Astead.—Francis Hopegood to Thomas Coke, chez Messrs. Scharenborg & Franco à Anvers.

Last Holland post brought me your two letters of 27th July and 2nd August N.S., the former from Rotterdam, the latter from Antwerp. I am glad you had so favourable a passage over sea. . . . There will be no occasion of depositing any Band Bills in my hands, for let it come to the last extremity, I have enough of them by me to accommodate you: but doubt not if there be money to be paid Mr. Fisher will find it out, looking . . . he is very diligent in your service, and really careful of your honour. . . . I shall go tomorrow to Puttney Bowling Green, where I hope to meet Mr. Evans, expecting to hear of John Gardiner by him. If he be departed, no doubt but he will be with you before this reaches your hands. If not I shall write him to Gravesend about the musketoons you desire. I am sure you cannot have a worse opinion of the Devil's children than I and all Englishmen ought to have: but we have most reason to curse ourselves for trusting our greatest enemies to our own ruin. But what shall I say? From a D——— Alliance, a greedy C———t and mercenary P———t, good Lord deliver us? Nothing but a peace can retrieve us, money growing scarcer and scarcer every day; and I am afraid Myn-Heer B——— comes but to encrease our wants. My service to Jennens.

1698–9, February 5. (Baggrave).—Elizabeth Edwyn to Thomas Coke.

I have notice given me that I must leave the house and grounds I rent of you at Baggrave at Mayday. My husband and his father have been tenants to the family fourscore years. It is a great trouble to me that is a widow very near fourscore years of age that I must be forced out of my house and grounds like a bad tenant that cannot pay my rent and to have no reason given me why it must be so. My late landlord your father was pleased to say he would not see my husband nor myself wronged in any respect, and we laid out many a score pounds on his estate, which is well known to Sir Francis Burdett. My son once said he would give me something to go out, but if you turn me out you force me to stoop to my cradle, and sure you will not encourage a disobedient son. You have been informed that I have two houses of my own and indeed I have: but one is but eleven shillings a year and the other is a little better, but part of it is fallen down. I was of a good family and was well educated and had a thousand pounds to my portion, and am very unwilling to live in such poor cottages as my own are. . . But if I must turn out, I desire that you will let me know the reasons why it must be so, that my friends as well as myself may be satisfied. Good Sir, consider it is a widow that writes to you in tears, and desires nothing of you but justice. Yourself once promised me I should not be wronged.

1698–1703. Extracts from bills paid by Lady Mary Coke.

		£	s.	d.
1698.	One suit pink changeable knots - -	0	10	6
	One scarlet girdle - - - -	0	4	6
1698, November.	8 yards silver Tishua at 35*s.* -	14	0	0
„	6 yards broad tabbe at 11*s.* - -	3	6	0
„	18¼ yards gold coloured velvet at 23*s.* - - - -	20	19	9
1699.	One fine tortoise shell stick to a fan - -	0	1	10
	1¾ yards fine French gauze for scarf - -	0	12	9
	One quarters schooling for the page, Keightley	0	17	0
	A fine laced toilette - - - -	14	0	0
	36 pairs of white kid gloves - - -	3	18	0
1700.	12 fine holland shifts - - - -	9	0	0
	18 yards lace for the necks of the 12 shifts at 4*s.* 6*d.* - - - - -	4	1	0
	5½ yards of lace for a head at 21*s.* - -	5	16	6
	Sprigged satin - - - - -	4	0	0
	Half a pound of tea - - - -	0	14	0
	A piece of white flowered satin - -	5	0	0
	9 yards white shagrine - - - -	2	5	0
	A gold laced scarf - - - -	8	0	0
	4¾ yards of lemon and silver ribbon - -	1	6	0
	A paper of pachis (patches) - - -	0	1	0
	3 yards of changeable scarlet Spanish for knots -	0	5	6
	A gold Stannkierk - - - -	0	14	0
	A fan painted - - - - -	1	1	6
	36 pairs of white kid gloves - - -	3	12	0
1701.	28⅜ fine gold gallone - - - -	9	13	10
	6¼ yards gold campaigne pt despaigne - -	2	7	0
	A suit of rich sky and gold knots - - -	1	13	3
	A suit of cherry and gold knots - - -	1	5	6
	20 yards black broad poodesoy - - -	10	0	0
	3¼ yards fine black rash - - - -	1	12	6
	Prunes of Tours of St. Katherine - -	0	10	0
	Muscadine grapes - - - -	0	14	0
	25 yards fine Issingham Holland at 23*s.* -	2	16	3
1702.	3¼ yards new French gauze - - -	0	14	0
	Making a 2 double furbelowed scarf - -	0	10	0
	7¼ yards of fine black cloth at 20*s.* - -	7	5	0
	14 yards of camlet for the page's coat - -	2	9	0

		£	s.	d.
1703.	A feather knot - - - -	1	1	6
	Starching a fine lace hood suit and ruffs -	0	12	0
	7 yards fine broad silver gauze galloon at 24*s.* -	8	8	0
	7 dozen silver cowled olive buttons at 3*s.* 6*d.* -	1	6	0
	Silver fine orriss - - - -	1	7	10
	12 dwts. gold orriss - - - -	0	6	0
	A Russia sable tail tippet - - -	8	12	0
	Making a black and white calico gown and coat	0	15	0
	„ a yellow gown and coat - -	1	0	0
	„ a red and silver gown and coat - -	1	10	0
	Trimming a cloth gown and coat - -	0	15	0
	„ a blue gown and coat - -	0	15	0
	A suit of knots pink and silver - - -	0	15	0
	4 lbs. of coffee - - - - -	0	17	4
	One pair woman's pink silk hose - -	0	13	0
	„ sky silk hose - - -	0	12	0
	„ grey for the page - - -	0	2	0
	16 yards white and sky striped lutes at 5*s.* 3*d.* -	4	4	0
	8 yards gold coloured mantua at 8*s.* - -	3	4	0
	16 yards yellow and white spot silks at 5*s.* 6*d.* -	4	8	0
	28 yards black and white stripe satin at 6*s.* 6*d.*	9	2	0
	Scarlet Sternkierk - - - -	1	1	0
	A pair of stitched stays, black tabby, braid and cordlace - - - - -	2	10	6 4,000 corking pins 4*s.* 8*d.*, 4,000 middling pins 4*s.*
	Thread at 3*d.*, 6*d.*, 12*d.*, and 18*d.*
	For Mr. Coke—
	18 Ells of freas holland at 8*s.* - -	7	4	0
	12 yards Mechlin lace at 13*s.* - -	7	16	0
	6 shirts making - - - -	0	12	0

(1700.) October 11.—John Wilkins (M.P. for Leicestershire) to the Earl of Chesterfield.

I can't with ease to myself meddle with other people's affairs, but can't forbear giving you this trouble, by reason I know not where Mr. Coke is. Lord Rosse [Roos] for sometime hath been persuaded to come into the House of Commons, and stand for the County of Derby. I would have taken that thing of trouble from Mr. Coke, and sent him to stand in Leicestershire very lately, but he refused it. Now my Lord Devonshire is the man that persuades him, and since Mr. Coke was so obliging to my Lord Rosse before he stood to offer him his interest, my Lord Rutland is not willing Lord Rosse should stand to oppose Mr. Coke. My Lord Devonshire is so warm, as I am told, to say he will spend 10,000*l.* to fling out Mr. Coke, and I believe he told Lord Rutland so. Now I think Mr. Coke should be apprised of this, that he look to himself. My Lord Rosse is not yet resolved, as Doctor Coke tells me to-day, for he heard my Lord Rutland spake it lately, that he would not have his son stand: but how he may be pressed at London is not easy to judge. I shall wait upon your Lordship in a short time, but my house hath been so affected lately, some people are fearful of me. I shall not enter into any particulars for your Lordship is a good judge of this affair. I have more than once begged of my Lord Rutland for my Lord Rosse to stand, and I would desist and give him my poor interest: but now it is too late, for the country is all made. The gentlemen mostly for Mr. Verney and myself, and my Lord Stamford hath been diligent in making interest for my Lord Sherard and Mr. Ashby.

(1701, March 29.)—Thomas Coke to ———. (Copy.)

I received yours, and find we were beforehand with you in drinking Sir John Harpur's health, which we did on Sunday, which I take to be his birthday; when R. Burdett, two of Mr. Curzons and Mr. Bates and J. Every did me the favour to dine with me. . . . . J. W. [John Wilkins] has been two or three times with me to meet him, which I have put off as well as I could, but t'other day, going to Hyde Park on horseback, I met him coming from his home at Kensington. He told me he heard they had a meeting at Lichfield, and designed to set me up, in case of a void election there, and that he had a great deal of interest with Lamb and Hector, and he would make them for me. I told him as to the meeting I had heard nothing of it, nor of anybody's having such a design; and that as for myself I had no intentions to stand anywhere. He seems mighty desirous to regain his past step, and says he has disobliged my Lord Rutland for ever by not making an interest for him. And indeed I believe his case is he has sat down between two stools. Yesterday was a mighty debate about Kidd's patent; and at last they carried it again to be a legal grant, which has set my Lords Somers and Oxford pretty high again. I do design to be with you pretty soon in Derbyshire: but I doubt you will have the news of a war sooner, for by letters from France I have advice that our plenipotentiaries have their answer, which is a flat denial to all their demands, which must end in a war.

(1701, October.) King's Newton.—Robert Hardinge to Thomas Coke.

I cannot go along to-morrow to Sir John Walter, but propose to go to Lichfield on Thursday and will meet you at Sir Henry Every's at 12 o'clock that day, if you appoint it. The address was drawn yesterday at the White Hart in Derby: the engineers, Sir Ph. G. [Philip Gell], Mr. Eyre, Spateman, Mr. Pole, Sir Charles Pye, and Mr. Wilmott. I was told it was modest, but somewhat otherwise was offered. 'Tis ordered to be handed to all in Commission, these three Hundreds, by Charles Adderley. I expected him with it to-day. Praying my most humble service to Sir John, and your answer about Thursday. I am, yours, R. H.

(1701, December.) Endorsed by Mr. Thomas Coke, "Countess of Holles."

. . . . In a place where I was it was said you had not gained your election: but on promise to vote for Mr. Bromley not doing so, you would lose it next time, if the same persons be then living. I can tell you how you shall not fail of being chose at Malden in Essex, where Lord Halifax was first chose, and now Mr. Fhich [Fytche] and Mr. Cumings are the sitting members. Mr. Coe that is a merchant there, and was in custody about Mr. Arbey [Irby] Montague's election, when the Committee set him by, and placed Mr. Fhich in his room, shall be your friend, and Lord Halifax can tell you how powerful he is there, though they are now enemies; and Mr. Richmond, a Captain of Militia, has so great an interest there Mr. Fhich did believe he should have stood there last choice, is now in town, and courted by Lord Rivers, and all his party. I have told him of you, and he is ready to serve you, and would have waited on you at your house, if you had pleased; though he is every day at the Court of Requests. But it is not proper to see him there, for should Fhich see him speak to you, he would suspect the matter. If you will see him send me a line by the penny post, for his stay in town will be short. You vexed me so on Sunday, and not getting a coach for my life, I was forced to go so far in the wet and dirt, I have been so ill, I have not been able to write. If you write direct for me at Captain Clarke's in Savage Garden near Great Tower Hill.

COKE MSS

1702, October 26. Castleton.—Chr. Staveley to Thomas Coke at the Parliament House.

The occasion of this trouble is about one Robert Towle, a poor prisoner in the County Gaol of Derby for a small debt due to Mr. Charles Potts, and hath been a prisoner for a year and a half, till her Majesty's gracious Act came forth to release small debts, and Towle craving the benefit of the Act was forced to list himself a soldier in Lord Huntington's regiment. At that time he owing me a sum of 20*l.* as bond, for fear of losing my money I caused him to be arrested after he was a listed soldier. Now the poor man is a baker by trade, and if he had his freedom might both pay what he owes me in some few years, and also be a means to relieve his widowed mother and several small fatherless children. Mr. Broodhouse, the Gaoler of Derby, and Towle the prisoner being fallen out, Broodhouse is very severe with him, and keeps him close up like a felon, and sometimes threatens to lay him in the under gaol. My humble request to you is that you would be pleased to intercede with Lord Huntington to send him a discharge for going a soldier, and if there be occasion for another to go in his room, Towle questions not, if he had his liberty, but he could in some small time procure another to officiate for him. I hope you will please to do me this extraordinary favour upon my own concern, and the act of charity on the prisoner's behalf. If you please to give me an answer, direct for me at Castleton in Derbyshire per Sheffield bagg, and it comes to me any Tuesday, written any Saturday.

1703–4, January 13. A paper headed "For the Funeral of the Honble. the Lady Mary Coke, performed by the Company of Upholsters over Exeter Change."

	£	s.	d.
A fine suit of crape, sheet, pillow and gloves	1	15	0
A leaden coffin lined with crape and ruffle	5	0	0
An outside double elm coffin covered with fine cloth and set off with silvered work and inscription	6	0	0
For lining the coffin with seare cloth and preserving the body	2	0	0
A large velvet pall the whole time and journey	2	0	0
A room for the body hanged in deep mourning with cloth and the Staircase, Hall, and Passage with a border	2	0	0
A Herse and 6 horses 10 days at 35*s.* per day	17	10	0
3 Mourning Coaches with 6 horses, each the same	52	10	0
17 Plumes of black feathers for the Herse and horses	3	0	0
Covering for the Herse and Houseing for the horses of velvet	3	0	0
5 Horsemen in mourning 10 days at 10*s.* each per day	25	0	0
4 yards cloth for the Pulpit	2	0	0
37 yards of Baize for the Church	1	17	0

	£	s.	d.
18 flambeaux - - - - -	0	18	0
21 Cloaks for gentlemen, horsemen and coachmen at 18*d.* per day - - - - -	15	15	0
6 Alamode Scarfs for Pall bearers at 15*s.* - -	4	10	0
1 Ditto 3¾ yards long for the Minister - -	0	18	0
× × ×	×	×
	160	13	3

1703–4, January 17.—A Paper, indorsed by Mr. Coke, "Harold's Bill," for the Funeral of Lady Ann [Mary] Coke.

	£	s.	d.
Two Achievements - - - - -	6	0	0
12 Silk at 5*s.* a piece - - - - -	3	0	0
24 Shields at 3*s.* 6*d.* a piece - - - -	3	12	0
24 large Peneills at 2*s.* a piece - - -	2	8	0
72 small Peneills at 1*s.* 6*d.* a piece - - -	5	8	0
12 shaffroons (chevrons ?) - - - -	0	18	0
4 dozen of buckram Escotcheons at 2*s.* a piece -	4	16	0
24 paper Escotcheons - - - - - -	1	4	0
12 buckram more - - - - - -	1	4	0
6 silk more - - - - - -	1	10	0
for boards bayes and irons for the two Achievements -	0	10	0
	30	10	0

1703–4, February 7. Hampton Court.—A paper indorsed by Mr. Thomas Coke "My letter to the Speaker."

Sir,—There being a Bill brought in to continue a Committee of Accounts, it being impossible for me to attend that service, if the House should choose me again to be one of that Committee, I hope my friends will have so much indulgence for me as not to name me: and must intreat your favour particularly in this matter, because it would add to my misfortunes, if the House, for whom I have so great duty and respect, should name me to any service, which in the circumstances I am now in I must of necessity decline, being incapable in person to perform it. I hope you will pardon this trouble I am forced to give you: and as soon as I come to town, I will wait upon you to return my thanks for your inquiry after me, and all your favours to your most humble and most obedient servant to command.

[Lady Mary Coke died January 11, 1703–4.]

(1704,). London.—Elizabeth Coke to Thomas Coke at Mr. Snape's house at Hampton Court.

Your daughters are both almost rid of their colds, and my Lady Catherine Stanhope is so well as to be abroad again. My Lady Stanhope begins her journey into the country to-morrow: she was here this day, and left the compliment of designing you a visit. There was a play last night at Court, as it was said there would be. It was Solomon Jingle: they say the Queen and Prince was both extremely diverted with it. There was a great deal of company, but no finery, the Court being in mourning. The red furniture is put up secure from dust. I have not yet let them do up the furniture in the drawing room, thinking to beg leave we might sometimes see company there. I take this opportunity to add one thing more, which is from my sister Alice and myself, to return you, dear Brother, a thousand thanks for all your kindness to us, especially these last few happy years we have lived together, which we hope you do not think us so unreasonable to expect a continuance of a moment longer than you think fit, but shall be ready to dispose of ourselves as formerly whenever you please: or if we can be of any service to you or yours you may command us in all respects.

Coke MSS.

(1705.) April 17. St. James's Place.—Thomas Coke to (Marshal de Tallard) at Nottingham.

Monsieur,—Je n'oserois presque pretendre vous envoyer du vin de Champagne et de Bourgogne, sachant combien ils manquent d'être si bons que ceux qu'on en boit en France. Mais ayant trouvé ce que nous estimons en ce pays ici pour être passablement bon, et ne sachant si vous en aviez encore, j'ai hazardé vous en envoyer une cinquantaine de bouteilles de vin de Champagne, et autant de Volni, par les chariots qui sont partis d'ici pour Nottinghamshire au matin, et qui s'y rendront vendredi au soir. Je serai fort aise si vous les trouvez à votre gout. Je ne partirai pas si tôt que je croyois pour la campagne, mais de que j'y arriverai je ne manquerai pas de vous venir rendre mes devoirs, et vous assurer avec quel respect je suis, Monsieur, votre serviteur tres humble et tres obéissant pour vous servir.

(Draft, indorsed by Mr. Coke "to the Marshal Tallard.")

(This paper is also indorsed by him with "For Mr. Boothby at Paulton's Coffee house over against St. Dunstan's Church in Fleet Street." "At the Golden Periwig in Little Lincoln's Inn Fields.")

1705, April 21. Nottingham.—Captain John Wroth to Thomas Coke, one of the Tellers of her Majesty's Exchequer, at his house in St. James's Place.

Sir, Marshal Tallard has desired me, being Capt. in waiting on him to remit the enclosed, who am, Sir, your most humble servant.

(1705, April 21. Nottingham.)—Marshal de Tallard to Thomas Coke.

Monsieur,—Je vous renvoye les livres que vous aves eu la bonté de me prester. Et je profite en mesme temps de cette occasion la de vous souhaitter un bon voyage, et de vous assurer que personne du monde ne prendra jamais plus de part à tout ce qui vous interessera, ny ne sera jamais avec tant de verité, Monsieur, votre tres humble et tres obeissant serviteur, le Mareschal de Tallard. La lettre cy-jointe de M^r. Lewis vous faira voir que toutes les difficultés qui regardent l'entrée de mon vin sont levées. Il n'est plus question que de vos soins, que je suis seur que vous ne me refuseres pas, puisque vous aves eu la bonté de vous en charger.

(1705.) June 22. Melbourne.—Elizabeth Coke to Thomas Coke in St. James's Place.

We got to Melborn on Saturday noon, after a very good journey [from Wing in Bucks], only a little troubled with heat the last day. Your daughter is very well, and almost out of her senses with the variety of delights this journey has afforded her. I wish I could give you as good an account of Miss Coke. I was very much struck to see so great an alteration in her, for she is extremely fallen away, and her voice so weak and inward, that I think must be from some considerable cause. It seems to me like the stone. My Lady [Carnarvon] imputes it to her having had stale beer all this summer. But they all say Miss is for the most part well, and has a very good stomach. We happened to come [to Wing] at an unlucky juncture of time, Mrs. Fines being taken ill with a fit of an apoplex, and died on Thursday night, so that my Lady was in such concern that we saw but little of her: and when we did, her thoughts was very much taken up with her trouble, and care about Mrs. Fines. By what little words did drop from my Lady, I believe she would be apt to resent anything, though but for a time, of asking for the remove of the child. My Lady told me she was making a little bed for her to lie in her room by her, and some other things was said which made me not know how to mention anything to my Lady. I gave her maid a strict charge as to her care of her: and she said it was my Lady's orders she should always wait in the outward room whilst Miss was with her. Lady Mary Bertie gave me great assurance that they thought her maid was very careful of her. Miss begins to delight in her French, and comes on with it. My wish is that, if you could, you would spare so much time as to see her yourself as you come down, by which time I believe she will be well again, or else my Lady will be willing something should be tried for her. My Lady has had a very bad fever gone through her family, and buried some of her servants of it, but they are now most of them well again. The morning I came away I ventured so far as to tell Lady Mary Bertie, you had mentioned some little thing, as if you should have been glad to have Miss with you this summer, whilst you was in the country, if my Lady approved of it. Whether I did well in this I cannot tell, but I was in a great strait what to do in it; thinking that if there should be a necessity of your removing her, some warning of this kind might make it easier for you to do it, and prevent my Lady's thinking it was upon any accounts you had had of her from us. We met the ill news of cousin Harry Burdett's death the night we came home. I suppose you will see cousin Walter: pray my service to him.

(1705.) July 30. Melbourne.—Elizabeth Coke to Thomas Coke (in St. James's Place).

I am willing to believe the time draws near for our seeing you at Melbourne, your neighbours begin to think it long, my Lord Chesterfield especially. Sir John Walter and his lady have been in this country and dined with my cousin Walter Burdett on Tuesday last, and appointed us to give them the meeting. Sir John was almost out of humour not to find you in the country, and was disappointed of seeing Mr. Hardinge that day, and but for good wine and some company he brought with him he would have been much put to it to spend the day. Marshal Talaird (Tallard) is very solicitous to know when you will be here, he said he had writ to you, and engaged both my sister and me upon our word and honour to give him intimation the next day after you were come, and it should not be four days before he would see you at your house. I should first have told you we was at Bretby to wait of Lady Catherine Stanhope the day he dined there. I would willingly have excused the being there, knowing I must make a simple figure, where I could not speak nor understand perfectly, but my Lord did us the favour to send Lady Catherine to ask it, and withal that we must not deny it. There was none but my Lord's own family, except ourselves and Captain Barnes, but the Marshal and the company he brought which was three other French officers, and four English gentlemen. But unexpected, after the bell had rung to dinner, Sir John Walter came in with four more gentlemen, which was not so lucky, but in a quarter of an hour all clouds blew over and nothing appeared that took off from the entertainment, which you will easily believe was very noble in all respects. My cousin Jennens are in great affliction for their eldest son's death. Your little one is well. All the dust and noisy work of your gardens is finished, the gravel walks being done. I believe you will be much pleased with them, and these late rains have refreshed the turfs and the trees, that you will find it in great beauty. They are now making the arches to the bason, and coping the wall round it. The little fountains are done with stone, and they have begun to level the ground in the larger grove; but they are at some stop of want of Mr. Cooke, who has not been here but once since you went. Mr. Barnes on Saturday, thinking you had come, sent a horse hither which his man has left with Francis. I suppose my sister Fanshawe may have told you she did not buy the china baskets you bid me write to her for, they being so dear. She sent two large basons and four of a lesser size, but they are not sufficient to fill so large a table as I believe you will sometimes use. Therefore if you think fit, I should be glad if you would add the baskets you mentioned to them, or more of the same sort of dishes. Those my sister has sent are very fine china and suit your plates exactly.

COKE MSS.

1705, le 9-20 d'octobre. Whitehall. —E. Lewis à M. le M[l]. de Tallard.

Monseigneur, J'ai été ce matin aupres les Commissaires de la Douane, pour leur fair sçavoir les intentions de la Reine de faire passer votre vin, de sorte que M. de Santigni n'a que leur dire le nom du vaisseau qui en est chargé, et on trouvera des moyens pour les laisser entrer sans vous donner aucune difficulté. Mais il faut que cela ce passe conformément aux lois, ce qui causera un peu de retardement. J'ai reçu l'honneur de la lettre de votre Grandeur du 17: et j'ai deja renvoyé celles qui y étaient incluses à la poste. Je vous envoye aussi quelques unes à Nottingham. Je suis, Monseigneur, avec un très profond respect, votre tres humble et tres obeissant serviteur.

1705, November 29.—Duke of Leeds to (Thomas Coke).

This bearer, Mr. Wardour, was related to my wife, and upon that account addressed himself to me to give him what help I can in the getting him restored to the place of one of the Surveyors of the Land Waiters at the Custom House. He informs me that Mr. Smith, who is now Speaker, hath promised him to assist him in that affair, and he has begged of me to recommend him to your favour on the same account. He is a very good gentleman, but hath fallen under some misfortunes, which hath reduced him under the circumstances at this time; so that your assistance will be a charity to him as well as a favour to, Sir, your most humble servant.

(1705 ?.) W. Stratford to Thomas Coke at his house in St. James's Place.

I have sent you Tully and Vasari, both fair and, I hope, very perfect. I must beg you when you see Mr. Ferne to-day to desire him to take the hamper directed to him under his protection. It is a little one, only two dozen of wine in it, and nothing else. It is on board Sanderson's yacht, the Peregrine, and was put there without the least notice given to me of it. I must beg, too, another favour that I may remind you of your promise to spend some evening, when you have leisure, in the Cloisters. If you should forget that, the hamper will be of little moment to your most obliged faithful servant.

(1705 ?) F. de Prendcourt à Monsieur Coke à Melbourne. Apres tous les remercimens les plus sensibles de toutes civilités reçues de vous et de Mesdames vos sœurs, il faut que je vous avertisse que Monsieur le Maréchal [Tallard] vous veut surprendre et venir un de ces matins sans vous avertir: car il s'en fait un plaisir. Il est venu içi [Clifton ?] ce matin avec M. de Lionne et autres Messieurs: mais il n'est pas demeuré au diner.

(1705 ?) Clifton.—F. de Prendcourt à Monsieur Coke à Melbourne.

You are so good that I hope you'll be so kind as to keep it secret that M. Tallard only and I do come to-morrow morning to surprise you at dinner. He prayed me not to tell you of it, but I believe a traitor of this nature is not to be hanged, so long as he does some service to his friends. A pen made for to compose trios for the flute is in truth not fit for to write letters.

(1706.) October 19. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to Thomas Coke.

I could not have been so long silent to my dear Brother but for the hopes we have had of seeing you in Derbyshire, and am sorry your business would not permit you to come further than Duston. I received a letter last post from my Lady Carnarvon, with an account of your daughter which I own gives me a great concern, for my Lady tells me she has found the reason of her looking so ill to be occasioned by Miss Katie Bertie and her both eating paper, and also acorns: which I much fear may occasion her ill health some time hence; as well as the eating green apples last year did, with the same little ringleader to mischief. My Lady says Miss Coke is pretty well: but by her writing word of Miss's looking pale before I came out of town, when she imputed it to the vexation of her learning French, and since, as I have writ you word, has continued to say she looks very pale, though she was very well, makes me fear this ill custom has been of long standing. It has come into my thoughts that if you had leisure sufficient you might make Wing in your way as you returned from Duston, which if it has been so lucky to happen you will have seen the child and can judge much better than by this distant relation, what you think necessary to be done for her. My Lady Carnarvon has been so very obliging as in all her letters to press our coming to Wing this year again, but we having been there last year, I think it cannot be necessary, but be rather more proper not to give my Lady the trouble again this year. I shall only wait for your directions in this, and how you like best we should dispose of ourselves. I thank God Miss Betty is extremely well; and we have no complaint, but the want of a new coat, this being both too little and too short. I sent yesterday to Bretby: I doubt my Lord is in a very ill state of health in the main; for if he does not eat but keeps low in his diet, he is very subject to be sick, and when he does venture to eat higher, then his leg inflames which makes him very desirous to get to town. Mr. Clarke and my Lady are still at Bretby. Mr. Hardinge holds out better than could be expected. Since I do not see you here, I must beg the favour that Mr. Fisher may set my money even before it be long, which comes to fifty odd pounds. Mr. Fisher told me he could help me to it in a little time, but I told him I would not receive any till I had your orders. Cooke, the Gardener, is now here, and wishes much for your orders in several things, that would give finishing strokes to the garden. I understood by Mr. Harding that John Sergent stood rebuked by you for his negligence, which I was glad to hear, for with him looking to is absolutely necessary. Could your business permit you to be more amongst them, you would find the advantage of it. We understand you and Sister Fanshawe are separated at present, but we hope by her letter last post her boy will do well.

COKE MSS

1706. December 4.—Mr. Secretary Harley to the Rt. Honble. Vice-Chamberlain (Thomas Coke).

Sir,—Her Majestie hath commanded me to signifie her pleasure that you attend to-morrow evening at six a clock in the Lodgings at Kensington. I am, Sir, your most faithful and most humble servant,

Ro. Harley.

1706. December 10. — J. Statham to the Honble. Thomas Coke, Vice-Chamberlain of Her Majesty's Household, in St. James's Place.

Let me presume to congratulate you on your late promotion: and at the same time entreat your regard of your affair of the Lott and Cope, which can never be put on so good a foot as at present. It now lies before the Auditor, who is my friend, and stays making his report till he has had the honour of discoursing you, and will then do it to your satisfaction. Lord Clifford's title he will prove bad: and for that reason they perpetually labour the Auditor. 'Tis a man of thought, and would value one half hour's conversation with you, before the presents you send him. Be pleased to order an hour at Thwaite's, the Fountain, in the Strand some time to-morrow, and I'll bring him thither, and the report shall be to your mind I doubt not.

1706–7. February 5 (N.S.). Antwerp. — Henry Cartwright to (Thomas Coke).

I have the honour of yours in relation to the lace for the Countess of Kent. There was no opportunity from hence or Ghent, therefore I sent it to a particular friend in Rotterdam, who could not meet with a fit person to intrust it with. I advised him to add weight to it, that it might appear papers, and direct it for the Rt. Honble. Robert Harley, Esq., Secretary of State, which he has done, and taken a receipt for it from the Postmaster: so that I hope you have got it, as also the two heads you ordered me to buy. I sent them by Mr. Willis, a friend of Mr. Brydges. If you have any further commands in this country, I assure you nobody shall act with more zeal and sincerity for your service than, Sir, your most humble and most obedient servant.

(1707.) September 13. Melborne.—Elizabeth Coke to Vice-Chamberlain Coke in St. James's Place.

My sister Alice is well recovered. Yesterday we went with Mrs. Hardinges to wait of my Lady Harpur, who is still very full of complaints, but she looks well and goes out every day to take the air. Marshal Tallaird (Tallard) sent us a compliment, and also to inquire when we had heard how you did, and whether you come into the country this year. But since we hope to see you soon it will be then time enough to return it as you think fit. My Lord Chesterfield has been this ten days at Buxton Wells, with my Lord Stanhope, and by his own advice to make trial of it himself. By Mr. Hardinge's directions they have just now finished the mending the foundation of the wall, by which the gardens was overflowed last winter; for one day examining Mr. Moore how it was, we found it was not the Bason that overflowed but the water coming through the foundation of the wall a little above where the bench stands. It flowed [over] all that low ground, and ran down over the slope into the great Bason: so that Mr. Hardinge thought there would be a necessity of its being mended before the floods came again, lest the wall itself should fail. I have employed Gardiner's idle time in catching some pikes to put into the great Bason, for I thought it was great pity to have year after year pass without any stock in it. What few we left last year in it seemed to have improved very well. And I ventured to set up some old grates that lay by at the arch of the melon ground, for we found that they would sometimes, upon the Bason's being full, get over the grate of the Bason and so go down the brook. Miss is very bonny and well, and gives you her duty.

1708. May 24. Mr. W. Stocker's account.	£	s.	d
Chocolate, 20 lbs., at 3*s.* 6*d.* per lb. - - -	3	10	0
2 pounds of Bohea tea, at 43*s.* per lb. - - -	4	6	0
2 pounds of green tea at 20*s.* per lb. - - -	2	0	0
Four dozen and four lemons and oranges - - -	0	11	3
Twelve loaves of double refined sugar, 66 lbs., at 12*d.* per lb.	3	6	6
Twelve loaves of single ditto 62 lbs., at 8*d.* per lb.	2	1	8
To packing boxes and barrels - - - -	0	5	3
	16	0	8
John Anderson for wines - - - - -	143	0	0
Madam Lawrence - - - 21 10 0
Do. - - - - 11 5 0
Do. - - - - 7 0 0
Do. - - - - 30 0 0
	69	15	0
Francis Landey (Cook) - - - - -	54	0	0
John Winkleure (Valet) - - - - -	59	0	0

1708. November 28. Melborne. — Elizabeth Coke to Vice-Chamberlain Coke.

My Lady Harpur dined here with Mrs. Wortley yesterday, and made use of the lanthorn home. My Lady has put us into the fashion of riding hoods, which she had from my Lady Kent, and is the most comfortable garment for Derbyshire that can be.

1709. April 12. Melborne.—Elizabeth Coke to Vice-Chamberlain Coke.

I have appointed Monday next to take down the centre of your Library, and hang the windows and doors. Green wants orders for the laying of the floor: he has seen the stone which was got in the garden, and thinks it very good for the purpose.

1709. November 21. Melborne. — Elizabeth Coke to Vice-Chamberlain Coke at his Lodgings at the Palace of St. James.

Your library has been finished some time, but is not dry yet. I believe it will not be fit to be ventured with your writings till summer, when I hope you will come to place them yourself. I believe you will like the room in all respects, but the cost.

1710. May 8. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to (Vice-Chamberlain Coke).

I have taken care of the payment of Godfrey's bill, and will put it to Misses' last year's account. Locker says the reason of the ale's lying by the way was one of the vessels leaking, but that he had a cooper to mend it. He is very earnest to be excused for this failure, and promises great care for the future. About the rates, he says for seven shillings the hundred winter and summer he will serve you with particular care. I take him to be much the best carrier upon our roads, and he will into this rate fetch and carry both from and to your house in town and country; which Edwards (Ashby de la Zouch) has often refused me, and makes it very chargeable, especially in winter when the coal roads are so bad your ox team can't go. I have chosen rather to hire than hazard your horses. The young horse is preparing to be turned out. Roger Tailor writ me word his brother John had a conveniency for him to run by himself, and he would take the same care of him as last year. Many saying the horse should go by himself, I was willing to be of the sure side; for he is so fine as has taught me to be fond of a horse; otherwise I am glad when your stable is empty, being forced to take your groom's word for what I do not understand myself. He made your grey horse's cold a great secret to me, and is still very positive it is not the glanders; but all else that see him make little doubt of it. He is this day gone with him to Ashbourn fair. The Scot can pace and gallop pretty well, but upon a trot is downright lame. George is willing to hope he'll do again. I have paid all here according to your directions, but Mr. Cook whom I have not enough to clear. I will take care as you direct concerning the payment of the workmen. Mr. Fisher has often made a doubt that Cook did not pay, which has given me occasion to enquire for some time, and I cannot find there is the least occasion to complain in it. Your garden is kept in seeming good order, and no want in the kitchen garden. But you will find a very great change in the beauty of your greens in the Parterre by last year and this also. About six weeks ago they began to promise recovery in a great measure; but the same cold winds that have taken away the fruit have strangely struck the Phyllereas that was left alive: and the laurels seem some of them to be quite killed. The yews and the round hollies are well, but the spire hollies, some of them, look but ill: whether this has come from any neglect to them, I cannot judge. I was on Saturday last to wait of Lady Catherine Clarke [at Chileote], who is so kind to be desirous that myself and your daughters would come to stay with her. They are so handsomely equipped that, if you don't disapprove, I will go with them, believing it will not be very long before you will send for your servants and horses. In my way home I called of cousin John Burdett, who is the only one that has seemed desirous you should know the proceedings of affairs here in relation to elections. Though I find he is not let into the secret, he could assure me that there was something on foot, and I believe it carried on with some earnestness: but who is the person, he would not tell. As to Mr. Curzon, he said he knew he had often been solicited to separate from you, and had declined it: but he found he was at present much disobliged by having a great many times waited of you, and never could get to see you, nor never had heard you had been to him, nor had he heard from you since his being in the country. And my cousin concluded with seeming to think there would be an absolute necessity that you should either come down amongst them yourself, or hold a greater correspondence with your friends, which he said he found several uneasy about. On Saturday last there was a general meeting of gentlemen at Kedleston, especially from Sudbury and that side. When Mr. John Hardinge came last from the Sessions he intimated that they had been much at election by discourse at a distance, and that in general he found them ready to conclude that they should not see you till next year. Not in this, but every day gives instance of the want of a friend equal in kindness and capacity to serve you with him that is gone [Robert Hardinge]: by whom your interest always was endeavoured with the same earnestness and pleasure as if it had been his own, and who used to say that, though upon these public occasions a late, after your having been sometime absent from them, his defending you was always upon the point of his sword, yet it was as wonderful to see how your presence, when you came, could engage; as also that he was sure you had the addition of having done more particular kindnesses for your countrymen then all the members put together for many, many years. John Berisford and Edward Hollingworth came to me this morning, the former to desire to part with what land he holds of you to the other, except four acres in a field, and his grass ground. I desired Mr. Fisher to send me your answer to it.

COKE MSS.

[Note by the Vice-Chamberlain. "Time enough when I come down."]

1710, May 24. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to [Vice-Chamberlain Coke].

I think it not improper to acquaint you that Swarson [Swarkeston] Club is revived and to-morrow sevennight the day appointed to begin, because there will be just time to write to any of your friends by the next post before the meeting, if you think proper. My cousin John Burdett called of me this morning in his way to Twyford, where Mr. Curzon and several are to dine this day. He still seems to think no particular person pitched of: but he gave me to understand the general disgust the proceedings in Dr. Sacheverel's business had given, and which was his own opinion, though he shall never do anything contrary to your interest, underhand, or without first giving his reasons for it to yourself. 'Tis visible every one is a politician sufficient to see into the depth of the State, and no allowances made in what they disapprove, especially in your absence. I am silent to all else, who am your faithful sister.

1710. July 8. Melbourne.—Elizabeth Coke to Vice-Chamberlain Coke.

My Lord Ferrers makes no small pains to be a very popular person. Six hogsheads of wine are sent to Chartley to entertain the Staffordshire gentlemen, who, 'tis said, he expects to come to make him their thankful acknowledgments for his great services to the Doctor [Sacheverel], who also himself, 'tis said, will be there. But they often say he comes, where he never has: though he was at Lichfield, and very foolish proceedings there was with him, which, 'tis said, was much against his will, and gave him much uneasiness.

1710–1. January 17. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to the Rt. Hon. the Vice-Chamberlain at his Lodgings at the Palace at St. James, London.

The horse rider has now had Rattle in hand this ten days, with very good success: he is as quiet as is possible, and I can't say all the man says in his commendation. He has brought a young horse with him of Marshal Tailard's [Tallard], which they tell me is usual for them to do: but I shall not dare to let him take your's to another body's stable, without your leave. Your filly grows extremely since it has been in the house.

1710–1. February 7. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to the Rt. Honble. Thomas Coke, Vice-Chamberlain of H. M.'s Household, at lodgings at St. James, London.

We are at this time covered with the deepest snow we have had yet, but not the coldest, which gives me hope winter will end with it. My cousin Walter Burdett's further opinion and desire as to your young horse is, in case you continue him in the country, you would oblige him with the care of him. His servant he thinks proper, as also has leisure to do it. He seems not to think George sufficient to be entrusted with him. The horse rider has been gone a week, and hitherto the horse is very quiet: but my cousin Burdett believes you will think it better worth your while to pay the forfeit than pay the keeping for the agreed match with your horse. 'Tis his opinion the horse will not prove strong enough to carry yourself: and therefore, as the horse is so very fine, and in so good order, that you would have him up this month, and let him appear in Hyde Park, and he thinks you need not question but be sure of the certainty of a great price for him; which he would wish you to accept. The horse rider is as confident of his strength to carry you. The Ashby carrier, having ale from Burton for you, left the vessel from hence till this week, when it will come up, and also a cage wherein is two brace of partridges, five snipe, a cock, five teal, and a pair of ducks.

COKE MSS.

1710–1. February 14. Ash Wednesday. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to the Rt. Honble. Thomas Coke, Vice-Chamberlain of H. M.'s Household, at his lodgings at St. James, London.

I hope Mr. Fisher will come down and settle everything against Lady day. I sent up by Edwards, the Ashby carrier, on Monday last, the last of the partridges, and a hare, and some wild fowl and a flitch of bacon, being a dear commodity in London, which has made me dry it all this year, instead of pickling; so that there will be more if you like it, and six hams are drying, but not yet ready to send. A malt man that was used in the summer for the Election matter, happening to bring in his bill, I would not omit the paying it, to prevent any further expectation, and have left myself as bare as possible for the present. I am much concerned that your leg still confines you. The weather is extremely cold. Your gardener tells me he thinks your greens do not yet receive any damage by the weather, and I hope it will be a means of fruit.

1710–1. March 12. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to (Vice-Chamberlain Coke).

I will take care Mr. Fisher performs your orders to Mr. Bakewell, who, I understand, is already prepared to remove to Derby. As to Mr. Troughton's [Vicar of Melbourne] expectations in being considered for the Gardens, he has long to others, though not to me, mentioned it; and the keeping his horses for so many years in the grounds and other civilities he always took as his due, and not as civility, upon the account of these small tithes. And 'tis my opinion that whatever present kindness you show him, which in some respects he deserves well from you, yet I fear it will with other former kindness be forgot, if this particular be not settled for a certainty hereafter. I thought to propose to you that I might ask him to make his own valuation of his demands for a part of the Gardens, and the grass yards, and then you might settle it. If you would shew any particular civility over and above at this time, I cannot guess anything that would be more acceptable than good tobacco; and I fancy a dozen pounds of it would be years keeping to him. I put the inclosed writing into the scrutore, and it reminds me to tell you that the Evidence Room has been kept with fires all winter, and appears to keep your writings very dry. Your charity is very great as to Betty Ellison's bill. Radford's account of the floodgate shall be settled. As to the bricks in the Common, it happening we had no ploughing, and the team being idle for the last month, I ventured to have them fetch home bricks, having experienced that nothing is safe in this place. I depended you will like to have them laid safest, which I know even in your own yards could not be but under lock and key, and therefore they are set in the inner backyard, so ranged as to be least in sight of anywhere. But there is two stacks of bricks yet upon the Common, which to fetch Mr. Fisher says would make the oxen not in fit case for Easter Fair: so he proposes the loaming the sides and covering the tops with turf to remain where they do. I desire to hear again from you as to Green proceeding in getting the stone. As to Mrs. Lineston, I think she is one you may truly depend upon for a faithful good servant, and I believe it would be hard to find one that you and my sister can entrust with more safety and credit here in your absence. She would now undertake at six pounds a year wages and four shillings a week board wages: and the hiring one to clean the house and necessary things, as mops, soaps, sand, brooms, &c. she would take the whole upon herself at twenty pounds a year, Mr. Fisher laying in what quantity of coal you may direct. I think it seems a great deal, but I cannot see how she can go lower. As to Mr. Moore [gardener] his behaviour in the main hitherto has been very much to be approved in all respects; and he has been so much left to himself that it gives great reason to believe he will do the same when your servant. As to what I mentioned in my last to you about my nieces' maid I hope you will believe I am far from pretending to judge better than you and my sister can for them, or that I shall not be easy, and truly hope what you shall determine will prove the best. There has happened a most unaccountable dispute between Mr. Fisher and Joseph Cantrill about three acres and a half of land, which adjoins to the Holme Close of John Martin's. I thought the entering into articles would have prevented any dispute to follow, and which are clear against Cantrill: besides that their plowing and sowing the land contrary to their articles was an insolence unpardonable. On the other side there was some circumstances which appeared not fair upon Cantrill. So to come to the truth I saw Ragg, Cantrill, Martin and Mr. Fisher face to face. The two first submitted and begged pardon as to the sowing, and Martin on the other side promised not to insist upon having it. All the three tenants agreed in their desire that I would lay all the circumstances before you, to be decided as you should judge fit.

(1710–1. March 21.) (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to the Rt. Honble. Thomas Coke, Vice-Chamberlain of H.M's. Household, at his lodgings in St. James's Palace, London.

Cousin Walter Burdett coming in, I advised with him as to the sending your horse, who was altogether for George riding him up, and leading him in his hand, as he should see convenient. He set out this morning early towards Leicester, the Forest way, with one with him so far to open the gates, the Loughborough road being extremely bad. George made many difficulties in venturing him, it being so dirty, but my cousin thought he was in good order for it, and no reasonable objection. I have given George the strictest charge of care I could, and hope he will bring him safe.

1711. April 8. Melbourne.—Elizabeth Coke to Vice-Chamberlain Coke.

Mr. Bakewell has finished your work of the Arbour, and has not brought in any account of it, but says, when you have seen it, he will refer himself to you. He has got a shop fitting up at Derby. He is so miserably poor that I believe he cannot remove till he has some money. So far as 5*l.* I have promised to let him have, to leave him without excuse in going. He has just sent him a very noble piece of work for my Lord Gore [Gower] and is further engaged in work for my Lord Chesterfield; and my Lord Ferrers has lately sent to him also. So I have been unwilling to press his going, to expose him too much, since his livelihood depends upon it.

Coke MSS.

1711. April 11. Melbourne.—Elizabeth Coke to Vice-Chamberlain Coke.

I think to make use of John Laffenhouse to come up, for the ways being so bad, I shall not dare to venture without him, as well as my own footman. My Lord Ferrers' family will be down on Friday next with a hired coach and two sets of hired horses, so that if you please to let Mr. Brown agree with that coach to bring us up, I believe it will be considerably saved in the expense.

1711. April 21. (Melbourne.)—Elizabeth Coke to the Rt. Honble. the Vice-Chamberlain at his lodgings at the Palace at St. James, London.

I hope the disappointment of the coach has proved lucky, we having had much unexpected great rains that 'tis now mighty floods. You have found by my last letter that I have endeavoured to have been secure of the stage, in case the other failed, but could not. I believe it will be much the more certain if you will please to secure in town that either the Leicester coach, or some other, send down one for us, that we may be certain (please God) not to be delayed longer than the next week. Your coach here cannot perform the journey; and one of the leather coaches is the best of their sort, I think: for the common stages have none, I believe, tolerable of the others, and we may hope for warm weather. We will prepare to fence against cold, should it continue. Your servants were discharged against Monday, and I think to let them go accordingly; and since Mrs. Lineston stays here, and we shall live so much of our time with my sister Hardinge, we shall make shift without all, but one. I desired Mr. Fisher to let you know as to the Burton ale: and I will endeavour to take care to have it settled with Mr. Troughton.

1712. October 7. Whitehall.—George Gordon to (Vice-Chamberlain Coke)

In obedience to your commands I herewith send you a list of the Rank of the Regiments so far as the General Officers have yet settled them, but the same has been returned to them again by Sir William Wyndham to make it more complete, which now lies before them to finish. My Lord Treasurer is recovering, having been ill the last week, and did not go to Windsor on Saturday as usually he does. I saw Major-General Hill this week: he goes into the country till he be recovered.

1712–3. February 21. Morvall.—John Buller to the Rt. Hble. Vice-Chamberlain Coke.

I received yours of the 12th instant, but never had the honour of any letter from you before now. I perceive by yours, not knowing my nephew's name or place so well, your acquaintance was not so great with him: though from my respects to my nephew's memory, and understanding he had a service for you, I promoted your interest to the utmost. And as I possibly did you some service, I gave you an account of your election. I find our friends are sensible of the same omission, and therefore for rendering my interest more successful, I guess their desire is to have a gentleman of our own country. You are pleased to mention in yours my Lord Lansdowne. I pray you give him my humble service; and if I am the plainer, I hope you will not think me the less friendly.

1718. August 4. Kensington.—Lochmann to Mr. Vice-Chamberlain Coke. COKE MSS

Je me donne l'honneur vous adviser par celle cy que Sa Majesté est contente que vous fassiez faire le tableau des oiseaux selon la mesure de l'autre, qui se trouve sur l'escalier derobé à Kensington.

"Orders for the Chapel Royal in King James the 2nd time."

None shall come into our Closet under the degree of Peers, or their wives, and Privy Councillors. On the right hand our Closet shall sit the Peers' wives who want room in our Closet, Maids of Honour, and Dressers, to our Dearest Consort. On the left hand our Closet shall sit Peers who want room in our Closet. In the absence of our Chamberlain and Vice Chamberlain a Gentleman Usher of the Privy Chamber may come into our Closet and turn the Chair, and remain there. The Gentleman Usher Daily Waiter shall attend with the Sword without the door of the Closet Chamber, and place two Yeomen of the Guard to keep the door and see good order kept in the Chapel Chamber, and shall cause a Gentleman Usher Quarter Waiter to keep the door next the Gallery with two Yeomen of the Guard to hinder unnecessary crowding the Room. And to prevent any indecency or irreverence that might be committed to the dishonour of Religion and the Government of Our Household by so great . . . . . persons as daily assemble in our Closet Chamber we hereby strictly command that none presume to walk or talk aloud there in time of Divine Service or Sermon upon pain of Our Displeasure. And the Gentleman Ushers Daily Waiters are required to admonish such as shall presume to break this Our Order and to complain to Our Chamberlain or Vice Chamberlain that we may punish the same.

By His Majesty's Command
MULGRAVE.

The places and seats in His Majesty's Chapel Royal are disposed of by His Majesty in His Orders signed by his Royal Hand and if any inferior place not therein named be to be disposed of it is to be disposed of by the Lord Chamberlain's order and no otherwise.

"Orders for the Chapel in King William's time."

That in Our going and coming from Our Chapel all persons keep their ranks orderly. That no person come into the Chapel at any other than the West ordinary door, where some of our Guard shall stand. That none presume to come into the seat of the Dean of the Chapel, whether present or absent. All the stalls beyond the Dean's seat shall be kept for the Ladies of the Bedchamber to Our dearest Consort the Queen, Wives of the Great Officers of the Household, Wives of Privy Councillors, the Wives and Daughters of the Nobility. On the other side the Chapel none to come into the stalls under the degree of a Baron, unless he be a Privy Councillor, or Captain of Our Pensioners, or Captain of Our Guard attending Our Person. No Lords or others allowed to sit within the stalls shall go beforehand into the Chapel but wait upon Us till We be set in Our Chair in the Closet and then go down in order. From the first door forwards to the end of the seat on the Dean's side none shall presume to come but the Gentlemen of Our Privy Chamber that are in waiting Chaplains of the Month Clerk of the Council Clerk of the Signet and Clerk of the Privy Seal attending, the Physician that waits, Gentlemen Ushers, Cupbearers, Carvers and Sewers. Grooms of Our Bedchamber to sit behind the Dean of Our Chapel and the Pages of Our Bedchamber behind them. The Gentlemen Pensioners to sit behind the Lords' seat behind the

Coke MSS.

Archbishop of Canterbury, the Officers of Our Greencloth below the Chaplain's seat. No Chaplain of Our Own in Ordinary or other (those of the Month only excepted) nor the Chaplains of any Nobleman or other Divine shall presume to go within any of the said stalls. No Secretary or other Gentleman belonging to any Nobleman, nor any Knight or Gentleman coming to Court, if they come into Chapel, shall presume to come into the said stalls. The Officers of Our Wardrobe to sit in the seat at the end of the stall of Our Privy Council. All and every of these Orders to stand in force in all and every of Our Chapels, wheresoever we come to Service or Sermon in Chapel.

DORSETT.

(No date.) Longford.—Sir Edward Coke to Thomas Coke.

I am much indebted to you for the favour of your frequent letters: as also upon the account of having got the covers franked in which Fox sends me the Votes. Your account is the best, and your reasonings the justest that I have received (though I have read many pamphlets) of the present juncture of affairs. The two best in my opinion are "The Duke of Anjou's Succession Considered," and "An Essay upon ——." The former is writ floridly and smells more of the gown than the camp: the other's style is more masculine, his reasonings juster and more faithful, and discovers qualifications which render him more worthy of being a Minister of State than the first. The spirit with which the Essay is writ shows the author to have lived in foreign courts, and to have served in armies. Though I think none of them have measured the force and strength of the Confederates and France fairly. . . . From the consideration of the Dutch present circumstances as they now stand with France, my judgment is that they cannot avoid being necessitated to come to a peace, though the forming of this League (which the unanimous Resolution of the Commons gave birth to) may have the consequence of France granting them better terms, and giving them a temptation to drop us: for so we shall be if the security of our Straits trade be not as much provided for: for that is (if I may so call it) our Flanders and our Barriers, for without the trades that depend from and upon the Mediterranean, England will become poor, defenceless at sea, and exposed a prey to the next invader. . . . The balance is no longer preserved than the English and Dutch keep the dominion of the seas, which can't be done without Flanders be independent of France, and some expedient be found to secure to us all the trade we have hitherto had from the West India, Straits and Levant: if we lose them they naturally fall into the hands of the French. . . . Let the Dutch consider that we can't lose any of our trade, but it will fall into the hands of a more formidable enemy to them, that will one day dispute the conquest of their country. . . . Nothing but age, the poverty of the extensive Spanish monarchy and the Italian interest could be of weight sufficient to make the King of France to quit all his glorious hopes and advantages of ascending to the universal monarchy, and sacrifice them to a general peace, which I believe we shall have. I meet your friends this week, when we shall drink your health.

(No date.) Longford.—Sir Edward Coke to [Thomas Coke].

I am extremely obliged to you on this account of the Sheriffs. Mr. Degge and Mr. Pierrepoint will probably be excused by the mediation of my Lord Devonshire and my Lord Kingston, and I don't know but the other may get off too, and if so then a pocket sheriff may put me in danger. Please to have a reserve in case of need, and a friend to screen me. I have my particular thanks to make to you for your thoughts so freely given upon our affairs. The want of succeeding in Spain is that our affairs there were not conducted with that steady firm and consummated wisdom and experience, nor their counsels there so justly concerted as both the two armies in Flanders and Italy under the commands of Duke Marlborough and Prince Eugene. I doubt the King of Sweden will prove a viper and sting the allies, though nourished in King William's bosom.

(No year.) May 10. [Ashborne ?]—Henry Boothby to Thomas Coke, at Melborne.

In a short time after I had the honour to see you in London I was taken ill of an ague, which obliged me to keep my bed some time. The intermitting fever hung on me so long, that I could not possibly stir out till last Monday. I find the country here has been considerably drained of men by several officers, which will oblige me to beg all the interest I can. I have made some progress since I came down, and those I have got are extraordinary good men. I hope you will imagine that nothing but my illness could have hindered me from waiting on you before you left London, or visiting you now. I shall not fail to wait on you on Thursday with my bottle of Jesuits bark at my back.

(No date.) Postmark June 22. [Ashborne ?]—Henry Boothby to Thomas Coke, at his house in St. James's Place, London.

I thought myself obliged to let you know the success I have had: for in four weeks and three days that I have been in the country, I have completed my company, except eight men; 40 of which are volunteers, and all raised within seven miles of Ashborne. I shall make it my business to acquit myself well of the honour you have done me in my post, and ever own myself to be your most obliged humble servant.

(No year.) November 21. Duncannon Fort.—Capt. Henry Boothby to Thomas Coke, at his house in St. James's Place, London.

I gave you the trouble of a letter by my Lord Southwell's footman soon after my landing in Ireland. I had the good fortune to show a very good company to my Lord Cutts, and have since had as good luck in keeping them. All the companies in the Regiment, except my own and Captain Adams, so very thin upon landing that the Captains themselves were sent back to recruit them, and but one is yet arrived with any men, so the duty has been hard upon Capt. Adams and myself. I have commanded in this Fort near two months, but expect to be relieved before Christmas, and I believe I shall see England very soon after. It's you wholly I must thank for having it in my power to give this account.

(No year.) January 7. Waterford.—Capt. Henry Boothby to Thomas Coke, in St. James's Place in London.

I thought I should have seen England this Christmas and returned thanks for the honour you did me of a letter to the Fort: but there being but two Captains besides myself with the Regiment, and one of them detached with a draught to Kingsaile for Catalonia, I am obliged to stay here, though I am not out of hopes I may get leave to wait of the Colonel who talks of being at London in a short time. I am infinitely obliged to you for the expressions of your favour in the latter part of your letter. . . . We have just now a talk of another Captain being sent to Kingsaile; if so it is your humble servant.

Coke MSS.

(No year.) January 19. Waterford.—Capt. Henry Boothby to Thomas Coke, at his house in St. James's Place, London.

I had not troubled you so soon again, but I am under some apprehensions of seeing Catalonia before England ; for our Lieut. Colonel tells us that we must suddenly expect to have a draft of 300 men out of our Regiment to recruit some Battalions in Catalonia, and that three or four Captains are to see the men landed in that Province. We have four Captains in England that never were with the Regiment, and the duty of this place and of Duncannon Fort has been wholly done by three of us; and on Tuesday next I relieve again Captain Adams at the Fort, and shall stay there two months, if I am not taken off of that duty to go with the detachment to Spain, for I fear Colonel Wynne will send one of his nephews in my room. I should be infinitely well satisfied to go with the whole Regiment to Catalonia; but to go a thousand miles to come back again out of my duty would a little trouble me. I now beg the favour of you to procure me leave of the Duke to see England. . . . I have some particular business in Derbyshire which makes me more urging.

(No year.) July 3. Ashborne.—Captain Henry Boothby to Thomas Coke in St. James's Place, London.

Colonel Wynne has sent me over hither to dispose of the recruiting money to the several officers, as they shall want it. We drafted 300 private men out of our regiment for Spain : and we are to receive levy money for them out of the English Treasury, which is to be placed in my hands. You will very much oblige me in letting your servant send me word when the money is issued out, that I may acquaint the Colonel with it, as he has ordered.

(No date.) Burton.—William Brown to Thomas Coke in St. James's Place. [Endorsed by Mr. Coke "Concerning Windham's Cornet."]

I received your letter this morning from brother Allsopp, and give you a million of hearty thanks. Not expecting anything this campaign, I had taken thoughts another way, to try my fortune under Venus, and accordingly about a fortnight ago was (by some friends) proposed to a lady of a very good fortune : but how I shall speed (farther than a favourable interview already) I can't tell : but upon this account will hasten to know my fate. . . . 'Tis yet a secret, and therefore desire you'll take no notice of it at present to our Derbyshire friends. Mr. Greasley and Mr. Inge are friends in this affair, and I have advised with them this morning.

(No date.)—Joseph Harris to the Honble. Thomas Coke, of Derby, at his House in St. James's Place.

Some time since I presented to your Honour a book which I writ on my Lord Duke of Marlborough ; and last summer I presented another book to you, called Luzzara, being an Encomium on Prince Eugene of Savoy. As yet I have never had any return for either of those presents to your Honour, wherefore now, by reason I am very ill and lame in rheumatism, I humbly make bold to address myself to your Honour, either for small charity, or for the return of the books, that I may present them to some other persons of quality. I have nothing but what I get by writing and translating out of Latin Greek and Spanish, to maintain and provide for my wife and four children.

(No date.)—Sir James Hayes to [Thomas Coke].

The universal character of your generous and Christian temper makes me presume to give you this trouble, most humbly to implore your assistance at this juncture of extremity, by this gentleman the bearer who has my recommendations from the Duke of Ormond and other persons of quality, relating to my present unfortunate condition, which I doubt not will move you to confer upon me your charitable answer to relieve the languishing condition of your most obliged and obedient humble servant.

(No date.)—Andrew Hopegood to Thomas Coke at St. James's Place.

I have received from Mr. Balle the note of the prices of his statues. He is in treaty for the first three. I think the Vulcan is one you had thoughts to buy. He tells me these are the prices set down to the late King:—

	£
Autumn with two Satyrs at his feet to the life	120
Ceres or Venus de Medicis to the life	120
Vulcan to the life	80
Apollo larger than the life	90
A Satyr to the life	60
An old Philosopher	30
A Pan	40
Freight and charges	45

(No date.) From on board the Monk.—John Littill to Thomas Coke, Member of Parliament, St. James's Place.

I think it to be my duty for to let your worship understand that, blessed be God, I am safely arrived to the Buoy in Nore in the Speedwell and I was pressed there for her Majesty's Ship the Monk [Monck] Capt. James Miles Commander, now riding at an anchor in the Nore. Our Lieutenant's name is Stanhope, and I would desire your worship for to be so kind as to write a letter of commendation to the Captain or Lieutenant, for indeed it would do me a great kindness, for then I should have time to learn my book, and in a short time, by the grace of God, learn the art of navigation: for as I am now I shall never learn nothing.

(No year.) August 18. Brompton Park.—George London to Thomas Coke at Hampton Court.

Being in company with the Earl of Northampton and my Lord Bishop of London I was informed that they design a journey for Derbyshire this next week: also I heard them say that they design to lodge three nights at your house of Melbourne. From this I did conclude that your Honour was in that country, but since I came to town I was informed that you are at present at Hampton Court, and that you design to go towards Derbyshire next week. I desire your Honour to signify to me by this bearer at what time you will be at Melbourne. The Lords are at present at Castle Ashby, to which place I shall go next Monday, and on the Thursday following we set out for those parts. It is a journey to see gardens and plantations, as my Lord Chesterfield's, Lord Ferrers', Duke of Devonshire's &c.

(No date.) London.—E. Repington to Thomas Coke at his house in Clarendon Court near St. James's Place.

You was pleased to promise me the verses upon the Toasts, which I desire you would order your servant to transcribe. I should not have given you this trouble, but that my Lord Stanhope and Mr. Inge will expect I should bring down something that's new for their entertainment.

COKE MSS.

(No year.) August 7.—Catherine Lady Harpur to the Honble. Mr. Coke at his Lodging at St. James's House, London.

I have just been solaceing myself with the tea you sent, which is very good and makes amends for its being dear: and the picture much better than I could express. All this deserves a great many thanks. . . . . Lord Chesterfield much obliged all Derby by being at the Assembly, and being very generous in relieving the poor prisoners. . . . . I am in great distress to make good a promise I made Lady B. Glenorchy of one of Colmar's fans. If you would be so good to use your interest to get me one 'twould be a great favour. It may be a guinea fan.

(No year.) October 4.—Catherine Lady Harpur to the Honble. Mr. Coke at his Lodging at St. James's House.

I give you a thousand thanks for getting me the fan, and beg it may be sent to my house in town. I am sorry you still continue so ill with the gout. If my wishes were effectual you would soon find yourself much at ease. You once named having a picture of mine copied by the Duke of R. I hope upon my desire you will alter your mind. Indeed 'tis not worth having, and be assured 'tis not want of true respect makes me desire this, but some trivial reasons I have. I have a picture I design to get Mr. Jarvis (?) man to mend; I will pay him altogether.

(No date.)—Benjamin Sutton to Thomas Coke, a Member of Parliament, at his house in St. James's Place, London. Free.

I and the rest of our neighbourhood give your Honour many thanks for your kindness to us in taking off the tax of windows. And we also give you many thanks for your kindness to us about the fray we had at Derby. But since I was with you Abraham Allen of Derby sent us word by a neighbour that he would indict us in the Crown Office, if we would not make him satisfaction for beating him, and we have witnesses that heard him say, when he went in, Let me go, for I can knock down four or five presently. And we all desire you to take care of this as well as the rest.

(No date.)—Count Theobald Taaffe to Thomas Coke near St. James.

I was this morning to wait on you desiring your presence in the House of Commons, my Lord Carlingford's petition being the second to be heard. Missing of you I take the liberty to inform you that the Irish business was put off till tomorrow, and my Lord's case will certainly come on. I beg your assistance in being there.

(No date.)—Sir John Walter to Thomas Coke of Melbourne.

I suppose by this time you have received an account from your groom how your horse ran. Mr. Glynn and Sir Charles Barrington, and Warwick Luke and I are now drinking your health. I discharged your horses at Woodstock, and would have sent them on to Newmarket, but the horse there by the articles is excepted against. I have sent my wagon for the beer you were pleased to give me, and hope I shall soon after have the happiness of seeing you here.

(No date.)—Sir John Walter to Thomas Coke at Melbourne.

I am very glad I can give you so good an account of your horse. He ran two heats and was distanced [in] neither. The first he came in fourth horse, and in the second in a very good place; so having tried his goodness, I did not think fit to run the third. I shall not be from home till the Parliament sits and nobody shall be gladder to see you.

I shall send your horse home to you, because he cannot run for the plate at Newmarket. Roger Manton's horse runs the four mile course the first time with nine stone ; he gives the Duke two pounds: and that day three weeks at even weights six miles.

(Temp. Anne.) Elizabeth Lady Mohun to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

After you left me last night, dear cousin Vice Chamberlain, I received a letter from the person we talked of, full of spirit, yet tempered with so much softuess and gentlemanlike good manners that, instead of proving a satisfaction, it was rather a mortification to think such a man my enemy. . . . The declaration I heard he made was that were he the whole Privy Council it should pass against me nemine contradicente. This was something so remarkable and so inconsistent with his good sense that, though I had disobliged him, I should have thought he could not have expressed so rash a sentence, till I again inquired into the truth, and it was again repeated. Now as I have never given myself a liberty of censuring anybody, much less himself, but on the contrary I have commended his person with great justice, which was all I could do, having never in my life had the least acquaintance with him, I cannot help being surprised at so unaccountable an aversion, and cannot but think some wickedly officious worthless creature has possessed him with a wrong character of me. I beg therefore dear cousin that you will try to feel his mind, for I am under the greatest impatience to know the cause : and if you meet with a fair occasion, it would be the greatest obligation to do me justice, as I think you would to all the world, and, I flatter myself, more particularly to your most faithful humble servant.

(Temp. Anne.) Windsor.—Elizabeth, Duchess of Somerset, to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

I have acquainted the Queen with your request, and she commands me to tell you that you have her leave to stay in town till the beginning of next week, and to put yourself and family in mourning : but as there is no Lord Chamberlain here, it will be necessary for you to leave it off the birthday, because you must appear to give those orders on that occasion, which cannot be properly done by anybody else.

(Temp. Anne.)—Mary Stanhope [Maid of Honour ?] to [Vice Chamberlain Coke], in St. James's Place.

I am very unwilling to give you this trouble, but 'tis impossible for me to avoid it in the behalf of my sisters and self, to beg you will let the Chaplains' room be broke open, it being the Queen's pleasure we should eat there ; and there being no other place where 'tis possible but in my own lodgings. You may easily believe it must be intolerable for we six and thirteen servants, besides the table keeper and his wife, and the only place I have to spare can hardly hold six chairs. I hope what I have said is sufficient to prevail with you, or if you think it unreasonable that you will pardon it.

(Temp. Anne.)—H. St. J. [Henry St. John], Sir John Stanley [Baronet], B.G. and G.G. [George Granville] to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

Squire Chamberlain, the inclosed will inform you that we are to save Signor Saggione's life tomorrow : therefore this is to let you know that 'tis agreed we meet tomorrow at ten of the clock at the Secretary at War's in Golden Square, from thence to proceed to the place appointed in the inclosed paper. Which is all at present from, dear derivative Tom, yours ever ——.

COKE MSS.

(Temp. Anne.) Northend, Dinner time.— "Martin." [Sir John Stanley Baronet] to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

George [Granville] and I will not fail tomorrow about six to meet you at the head of our troops near the plains of Honslow—the horse commanded by Dumplin—with stomachs prepared to storm Bucklebury Castle at the hour of dinner. Not doubting therefore of your zeal to carry on so great a design we bid you heartily farewell, the beef being on the table. I am tout à vous.

A paper indorsed by Thomas Coke "Mr. William Fanshaw's Memorial."

John Fanshawe of Parslows in the County of Essex Esquire did serve King Charles the First from the beginning of the war till the end, and afterwards continued his service to the Crown till the restoration of King Charles the Second, and being a prisoner to the then Government, had been hanged, had not the times turned; by which his service his estate was ruined, and prejudiced near twenty thousand pounds. William Fanshawe, his eldest son, being a servant to King Charles the Second, married the sister of the late Duke of Monmouth, and some time after the King gave him a pension of four hundred pound a year, as a marriage portion with his wife, and promised to double it and settle it for a term of years upon him his wife and children. This pension was duly paid by Sir Stephen Fox till the King's death, who died before any further settlement was made. After which the Papists got the pension taken from him, because he had persuaded his wife to turn Protestant. Then they seized on his estate and effects in Ireland, which was all he had, and attainted him in the Parliament in Ireland; whereby he lost above three thousand pound, and was forced to run in debt to his great prejudice.

When King William and Queen Mary came to the Crown, the Queen relieved Mrs. Fanshawe, then with child, with 250 guineas, and settled a pension on them of three hundred pound a year, promising to augment it when the war was ended. This pension was duly paid while the Queen lived, but afterwards grew in arrear, so as when King William died, 'twas near five hundred pound behind, which is yet unpaid.

When Queen Ann came to the Crown, Mr. Fanshawe set out his pretences in a petition to her Majesty, and thought himself sure of his pension, in regard his father and his family had always been faithful friends and humble servants to the Lord Chancellor Clarendon during the time of the King's banishment. But contrary to his expectation (by whose means he knows not) one half of the said four hundred pound a year was taken from him; and he being a poor crippled lame man could get no redress, which flung him into a melancholy which increased his distemper, so as the gout, scurvy and dropsy growing upon him, confined him to his chamber, where for about five years past he hath suffered most infinite pains, not being able to set his foot to the ground, nor to go to his bed or out of his chair, but as he is lifted by two servants.

In this sad condition both his housekeeper and himself have been arrested; and though he then got bail, yet those debts must be paid, or he must go to prison: and this two hundred pound a year is all he hath, to support himself and his poor children, for his paternal estate is so deeply mortgaged that it cannot bring anything in this seven years and upwards, if ever he hopes to leave anything to his poor children.

He humbly hopes that if this paper, which is every word true, were laid before the Queen, and her Majesty truly informed of his miserable condition and the pretences he hath to this pension, her Majesty's infinite goodness and mercy would persuade her to have pity of him and his poor motherless children, and grant him the said four hundred pound a year, according to his humble request, thereby to keep himself out of a prison and provide for his poor children.

(Temp. Anne.)—To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty. The Memorial of Henry Earl of Bindon, Deputy (with your Majesty's approbation) to Thomas Duke of Norfolk Earl Marshal and Hereditary Marshal of England—most humbly shewing—that the places of the Great Officers of this Realm in Parliament, Trials of Peers, Assemblies and Conferences of Council were settled by the Statute 31 Henry VIII. wherein the Great Chamberlain of England and the Marshal of England are ranked before the King's Chamberlain, now commonly called Lord Chamberlain of the Household. And that in all solemn ceremonies, as ParliamentaryProcessions, Proceedings before and at Coronations through London and to Saint Paul's Cathedral, to the Chapel Royal at Christenings and Creations of Princes &c., when the Sword of State is borne, the Lord Great Chamberlain and Lord Marshal of England have ever since that Act, agreeable to a more antient usage, gone on the right and left hand thereof (when they were present) of which many precedents are ready to be produced. But this right in the instance of going to Chapel at Whitehall being disputed by Henry Earl of St. Albans, Lord Chamberlain of the Household, the same was on All Saints Day 1672 determined against his Lordship, upon a hearing by your Royal Uncle King Charles the 2nd. And accordingly the Lord Great Chamberlain and Lord Marshal went by the Sword as well in Processions to Chapel as in all other public solemnities, till such time as in the year 1686 an Order was obtained declaring that the Lord Chamberlain of the Household should go on the right hand of the Sword and the Vice Chamberlain on the left, when the King should be attended to the Chapel Royal, and in all other Ceremonies within the Palaces, where his Majesty should reside, when the Sword should be carried before him. Which determination in the Lord Marshal's case is not only contrary to all former practice, but likewise inconsistent with the constitution of the Most Noble Order of the Garter. Yet the Lord Chamberlain of your Majesty's Household and the Vice Chamberlain, or one of them having notwithstanding assumed places by the Sword in the absence of the Lord Great Chamberlain and Lord Marshal at some of the late Processions in St. Paul's Cathedral, and pretending from those facts to do so again on like occasions. Wherefore to prevent all disputes for the future, and in vindication of the rights of the Hereditary Marshal of England, the said Earl of Bindon most humbly represents the whole matter to your Majesty, hoping you will be graciously pleased to suffer him, in case any doubt remains thereon, to be heard before your Majesty by his Counsel, that such effectual determination may afterwards be made as to your great justice and wisdom shall seem fit.

(Temp. Anne.)—"From the Mercers Weavers and Silkmen" to Vice Chamberlain Coke.

The humble request of several Mercers, Weavers, Silkmen, Lacemen, Fringemakers &c. at a meeting is that you would be pleased to represent to her Majesty the many hardships and wants thousands of her poor subjects have undergone this war by want of business, bad payments, decay of trade, Court mournings, heavy taxes, lotteries &c.; insomuch that several hundreds who were men of considerable substance ten years ago are now really reduced so low that they can scarce get bread for their families to eat, and are grieved to see so many poor souls as come daily to them almost starved, begging for work where they have it not for them. Sir, this being our case, and the case of almost all trades, as we see by the abundance of bankrupts and shops shut up all over the town and kingdom too, even in the greatest streets, such as Strand, Fleet Street &c. we only desire that our good and gracious Queen would be pleased to encourage dancings and balls at Court on her birth night and other public occasions, which are certainly the greatest support to ours and almost all other trades: for a Ball at Court not only causes a greater and richer appearance than any other entertainment on the birthday (especially if 'tis known sometime beforehand) but is also the cause of hundreds of balls among the quality in the City and all over England, which otherwise would not be, and which is such an advantage to trade as no other entertainment can be. This, Sir, is not only what we have from those who were traders in King Charles's time, when there used to be Balls at Court almost every week, but what we found by experience last birthday was twelvemonth from the little dancing that was before her Majesty that night in the room behind the drawing room, which not only produced so many balls among the quality and others as caused the gayest spring and summer that has been this reign, but also opened the hearts of the quality and gentry, being diverted by dancing from gaming (the ruin of all trade and every thing that's good) that we received several debts unexpectedly, which had we not several of us must have gone off that are still standing. Which that you may move to her Majesty the first opportunity, whose goodness is such that we doubt not of redress, is the humble request of her Majesty's most dutiful loyal subjects and your Honour's most humble and obedient servants.

COKE MSS.

(Temp. Anne.) Northend. — Sir John Stanley to the Right Honble. Mr. Vice Chamberlain [Coke].

My Lady Granville sent me the inclosed answer about her house, with a paper of the particulars of her grant, which she desires my Lord Chamberlain to lay before the Queen, that she may know her Majesty's pleasure before she goes to Windsor. I find my Lady Granville is advised not to name any sum; but by the estimate in her paper, and by what she said to me, she is resolved not to abate of 6,000*l*. She presses mightily that the matter may be determined this week, because she has contracted with builders to repair and make alterations in the house next week. I am tout à vous.

[Endorsed by Mr. Coke "About Lady Granville's house in St. James's."]

(Temp. Anne.)—G. G. (George Granville) to Thomas Coke, in St. James's Place.

Your being too much inclined to be a lazy gentleman obliges me to endeavour to wake you early this morning to attend the House about our family Bill. There are very powerful solicitations against us, and therefore we have occasion for all our friends, in which number give me leave always to depend upon you. (Seal, three rests.) (Temp. Anne.)—G. G. (George Granville) to (Vice-Chamberlain Coke).

Dear Vice,—A thousand thanks for your information. When we meet we will agree upon some time to view this habitation, which I value the more for the neighbourhood. I had a message just now from Collier requiring me to engage you to meet Cornelius and Dr. Shadwell at his house in Hatton Garden this evening at seven. I suppose you will be at Westminster by and by, and then I will expect your resolution. - - - - (Temp. George I.)—Lochmann to (Vice-Chamberlain Coke).

Monsieur le Vice-Chamberlain est très humblement prié de l'ordonner la reparation dans la maison de Mons. le Grand Maréchal d'Hardenberg. Le Clerk Ernest qui demeure dans la dite maison peut montrer tout ce que doit être reparé. Mons. Schröder prie aussi de la souvenir de la reparation de sa chambre à St. James's.

(Temp. George I.)—Duke of Bolton to (Vice-Chamberlain Coke).
I have the favour of yours, and when I met you coming through Brentford, I did not think that you was coming to Hampton Court, for I had given all the necessary orders for finishing the Prince and Princess' apartment, and the young Princesses, as last night, which I find was done by those I ordered to bring me an account of it. I see his Royal Highness yesterday, and am sorry if he had any commands to give, he would not honour me with them. As to the alteration of the beds you speak on, I believe [it] cannot answer, when I come to speak to his Royal Highness: but shall give such directions as I hope will answer what he would have. As to the alteration of the rooms as he designs them, he will do that as he pleases to his own servant, I having by his Majesty's command (as you know) given over that part of the House to his Royal Highness's service: so that I reckon that neither you nor I have any more to do with it.

(Temp. George I.)—Sir John Stanley to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].
The Great Wardrobe have sent me the inclosed appraisement of Lord Oxford's glasses, and I have since received a letter from Mr. Thomas about them which I send you. As soon as you have the King's pleasure upon it, and the estimate to be made by the Works, you will let me know whether it is to be paid by the Treasurer of the Chamber, or the Great Wardrobe, but the first will be more expeditious. I likewise send you a letter from Mr. Dalton, in which he seems to complain with reason. I never knew the King's servants eat of the King's dinner if company dined with him, but had always fresh meat; and when the King dined alone, that the dinner was divided with the Grooms. If my Lord Steward doubts this Mr. Lowman can inform him. I suppose you will also inquire about the candles; especially the candle to light the King should be there, for your own sake. I think this poor thrift and management.

(Temp. George I.)—Sir John Stanley to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].
I have writ to my Lord Chamberlain to acquaint him with Her Royal Highness's pleasure that she has a preacher to recommend for the fifth Sunday, if he has not already appointed one. The notice of the Court going out of mourning I have sent, and will take care of all the other things you mention.

(George I., accession of?).—A Paper endorsed by Vice Chamberlain Coke, "List of the Lodgings at Somerset House."

	Rooms.	Closets.	Garrets.
Lady Arlington [Alington ?] - -	9	6	4
Mr. Meremont - - - -	4	1	1
Mrs. Lockhart - - - -	5	1	4
Mrs. Malloes - - - -	3	1	1
Mrs. Ireland - - - -	4	2

	Rooms.	Closets.	Garrets.
Mr. Greenwood	1
Le Gourge	2
Lord Clarendon by the Royal apartments	4	3	1
Over the Gateway	8	1
Mr. La Force	3	1	1
Mrs. Goldsaddle	1
The Porter's Lodge	3
Mr. Rowland	5	2
Col. Sandys	5	1	1
Mrs. Yardley	2	2
Mr. Hewet	5	2	1
Mrs. Killigrew	2	2
Mrs. Morgan	2
Lady Pitts (deceased)	6
The Gardener	2
Mrs. Thornhill	6	1
Mrs. Roper	4	1
Mrs. Cramer	3
Mr. Rushee	2
Mrs. Millicent	3
Mrs. Humes	6
Mr. Sayer	9	4	1
Mr. Killigrew	3	2
Lady Cranmer	4
Mr. Wood	4
Mrs. Stephens	2	2
Mr. Burjoy	2	2	4
Sir William Saunderson	5	1	1
Mr. Hutton	5	3	1

(Temp. George I.)—Sir John Stanley to [Vice Chamberlain Coke].

I received the favour of yours last night, and have given directions that the card tables at St. James's and the four dozen of cane chairs should be sent to Hampton Court as soon as they can be. As to the Tennis Court I dare give no directions, till the King is apprised of the charge; for the putting up sails as you propose will cost at least 200*l.* The boarding it up will cost as much more, and I am sure will not be done in two months; nor the room be lighted under 10*l.* a night, which I believe the King will think too great a charge, to turn a good tennis court into a bad barn, that will endanger the lives of everybody that sits in it. I therefore desire that you will represent this to his Majesty for his commands; for without it it will not be fit for me to send a letter to my Lord Chamberlain to sign for what may be thought a great and unnecessary expense. In the meantime, if his Majesty will not please that his Presence and Privy Chamber be lighted up for that use, which will be more handsome and less expense, I can't but think the Old Guard Chamber, which is hung for the Green Cloth, but not used by them at night, or the Communication Gallery between the two Great Apartments, or even the Old Hall, will be more convenient, more warm, and a less charge, for the company to play cards than in the Tennis Court. But this is all submitted to the King's pleasure. As to the Serjeant at Arms absence, 'tis usual in that case to direct one of the Quarter Waiters or Gentlemen Pensioners to carry a mace, and I will take care to represent Hall's neglect to my Lord Chamberlain.

(Temp. George I.) (Hampton Court?)—Henry Lowman to Vice Chamberlain Coke at St. James's.

His Majesty came here about 6 o'clock. I stood to attend, and finding the King turning up towards the upper ground, I desired Milord Hertford to ask his Majesty to see the pictures as were designed for the Gallery: upon which the King came in, and saw the Basan from Windsor, and the picture of Paulo Veronese you intended to send back to Windsor, thinking it not good enough for the Gallery, and that of Shiky (?) to go with it to make Windsor Gallery good. All which his Majesty approved, but asked what should be done with the picture of King Charles with his Queen and children. I said I hoped it would remain where it hung. His Majesty went through the whole and was well pleased with the Gallery; and then the Staircase, which pleased him much. He went down into the Guard Chamber, and I showed the waved-glass sashes: he said it was well done, for he saw them windows always full. Then his Majesty desired to see the right way coming into the House, which I did, and when his Majesty was in the Court I asked if he would be pleased to step into the New Building—it was so near: but his Majesty answered then he would lose the pleasure of walking in the Garden. So I carried him into the Private Lodgings. I showed him how you had divided the overplus of the Gallery pictures in the Lodgings. In short, his Majesty approved of everything, and left us very well satisfied. He asked me how long it would be before Mr. Kent would have done: I told him in a week or ten days, as he had told me: and the scaffolding in the Gallery should be taken down next Monday, but then I should set up a rolling scaffold to finish the 28 bass relieves, and 'twould be no hindrance to his Majesty. Milord Hertford and Lord Delawar was by. I was in town on Monday, but have not been well since. I will therefore keep for some days quiet, which I cannot be at St. James's. I hear a whisper as if the King would come his birthday.

(Temp. George I.)—La liste de ceux qui viennent avec le Roi, que Mons. Bothmar souhaite fussent logés.

Mons. Bernsdorf—pr. Ministre.
Baron Gerts et sa Femme—Tresorier.
Count Plut, Grand Chamberlain.
Marechal Hernback (Hardenberg ?).
Baron Kilmansack (Kielmansegg) Grand Escuier.
Mons. Robethon, Secretaire de l'Ambassade.
Mons. Hoptoph (?), Secretaire du Cabinet.

Baron Bothmar desires the Vice Chamberlain would be pleased to provide lodgings for these gentlemen; and likewise that he would order three rooms, where they can be best spared, to be set apart for the King's German Secretaries Office.

BALLADS AND VERSES.

To my Lord Skardell.

Insulting rival, do not boast
Your conquest lately won.
No wonder that her heart was lost,
Where senses first were gone.

Coke MSS.

O'er one that's under Bedlam's laws
What triumph can be had.
For loving you was not the cause,
But sign of being mad.

Your servant,
Cutts.
×

The Miracle of the Junto.

As Moses once and Josua
And that Virago Deborah Bestrid poor Israel.
Like reverence pay to us—for who
Can ride a Nation as we do
Without a miracle.

Merit we hate, and wit we slight,
We neither act nor reason right,
Nor nothing mind but pence.
Unskilful we victorious are,
Conduct a Kingdom without care
And Councils without sense.

From the Bath. 1699.

The wife of the late Brigadier Villers.

Villers has all the charms, has all the arts
Of dress to captivate and ruin hearts.
No words can speak, no language can express
How bright, how charming, how divine she is!
In her fair face, her shape, her air, her mien
Heaven is displayed, and Paradise is seen.
Each lovely posture doth our hearts enthrall,
Whether she stands, or sits, or leans, we fall.
Each charming motion doth command our love,
With her our hearts, with her our pulses move.
But oh! what rhetoric can describe her gait,
When at her heels ten thousand Cupids wait.
She negligently treads with gentle air,
And careless, gives the sad beholders care.
Nor is her body than her mind more bright,
Nor are her eyes more sparkling than her witt.
In short would mortals know what Angels are,
They look, they move, they walk, they speak like her.

Lady Dillon.

Fair Dillon has the Irish billows crost
To make invasion on the British Coast.
Armies of Cupids do the fair attend,
And unresistably her power extend.
In vain the English boast of victories,
Ireland gains greater conquests by her eyes.

Sir Robert Worsley's Lady of the Isle of Wight.

When Worsley dances, not the spheres above,
With so much grace and harmony do move.
At every step she takes with graceful art
She sets her foot upon a vanquished heart.
Where'er she turns herself with dangerous skill,
Like the bright lightning does she move and kill.

When she, we all do move—and shake, when she—
Bend with her foot, and tremble with her knee.
With every motion of her hand she throws
Us down, and tramples on us as she goes.
The lovely conqueror walks o'er the plain
And in proud triumph strides o'er heaps of slain.
Do not, fair Madam, on the prostrate tread,
Do not insult, bright tyrant, o'er the dead.
Ah! wound not with [thy] foot, alas! there flies
Enough destruction from your charming eyes.

When Dashwood sings, her breath, like some strong wind, — Sir Robert Dashwood's sister, worth 14,000*l.*
Shakes and disturbs and agitates the mind.
When Dashwood dances, Love arms every part
Her head, her foot, her arm, her hand a dart.
But oh! when Dashwood talks the Graces throng
About her lips, and dance upon her tongue.
Mirth, humour, wit, gay conversation shine
In her discourse and make her words divine.
Easy and unconstrained her wit doth flow,
'Tis free, while we that hear her are not so.
But vainly I attempt to praise her wit,
For to speak of it, I should write with it.

Nor must we here forget her lovely Niece. — Sir Robert's daughter.
Mankind's first state appears in her fair eyes.
At once there's innocence and paradise.

Cotton with marvellous harmonious art — Sir Robert Cotton's daughter of Cheshire.
Plays on the flute, and on the hearers' heart.
The instrument and we at once are struck,
And when she shakes the note, our souls are shook.
Strange power of Art! that thus canst arm a sound,
And give weak air the strength and might to wound.

Bright Lutterell makes every heart her prize, — Lady Bankes' daughter.
At once victorious by her voice and eyes.
On the amazing beauties of her face
With mighty pleasure, mighty pain we gaze.
And when the Syren sings, her tuneful breath,
Like pestilential air, gives certain death.
In face and view the Angel doth appear.
For all we know of what these Spirits are,
Is only that they sing, and that they're fair.

An Excellent New Ballad, to the tune of "Packington's Pound," beginning:—

When Burnet perceived that the beautiful dames
Who flock to the Chapel of holy St. James,
On their lovers [alone] their kind looks did bestow,
And smiled not at him, when he bellowed below.
To the Princess he went,
With a pious intent,
This dangerous plot in the Church to prevent.
"Oh! Madam (said he) our Religion is lost,
"If the Ladies thus ogle the Knights of the Tost (Toast).

[Printed in "Poems on State Affairs." Vol. 3. 1704.]

COKE MSS.

Upon the Duchess of Rutland's Verses on Lord Halifax.

Rutland all hearts with double charms subdues,
A lovely Venus and an easy Muse.
Above all rival heights her conquests rise,
Orinda's verse and Saccharissa's eyes.
O Halifax, how happy and how blest!
Thy glory in her polished lines expressed.
From memory could wasting Time erase
Thy strains on Sunderland's enchanting face,
In thy last song could William cease to shine,
Forgot and hushed his thunder o'er the Boyne,
Thy tuneful skill, of lasting fame secure,
Shall in harmonious Rutland's praise endure;
Oblivion, concentrated thus, defy—
Nothing which she is pleased to like can die.

To the tune of "the Rummer." [June–August, 1696], beginning:—

Good People—what, will you of all be bereft?
Will you never learn wit, while a penny is left?
We're all like the dog in the fable betrayed
To let go the substance, and snap at the shade
Our specious pretences
And foreign expences
To war for religion will waste all our chink.
Its stript and its clipt
Its lent and its spent,
Till 'tis gone, till 'tis gone, to the devil, I think.

[Printed in "Poems on State Affairs." Vol. 2. 1703, and elsewhere.]

Untitled Verses, printed in Wilkins's "Political Ballads," and previously, beginning:—

There was a glorious Queen once
That filled Great Britain's throne,
She fought for her Allies,
And to preserve her own.
When a fighting we did go, did go,
When a fighting we did go.

1717. October 1. "Marlborough.—To Coronell Cope att the Bath."

Covered with dirt, and overwhelmed with spleen
At Marlborough Inn arrived, at Head of Queen,
Not such, alas! as when last night with thee
I cheerful sat till morning clock struck three.
Pensive, alone, I by the chimney sit,
No belles to warm, and not one word of wit.
Oft of my single pint I sit and sip,
And toast the charms of Salles upper lip.
Whilst you in pleasures every sense employ,
And Bath supplies eternal rounds of joy.
Laugh and coquet with Bellenger and Straw
And Jones and Sloan into your circle draw.
There to each nymph your gay idea tell,
And scarce bestow one thought on Sarah Bell,

Till midnight hour summons each maid to rest,
And Penny in five minutes will be blest.
I to my pillow now for sleep repair,
But hope to meet my Salle's image there,
More to the life than Kneller image drew,
No petticoat but lawn to bar my view.
Her own meek look and soft desiring sigh
With all the killing sweetness in her eye
Where thousand [thousand] basking Cupids lie.
Tell her her slave will ne'er be free again,
I love my thraldom and I hug my chain.

INDEX.

A.

Aachen, King of Denmark's operations at (1627); I. 306.
Abbeville, Louis XII., and Mary daughter of Henry VII., married at; I. 268.
Abbot:
George, Archbishop of Canterbury, kills his gamekeeper; I. 113.
——, letters from; I. 321, 326, 327.
—— letter to; I. 373.
Morris, governor of the East India Company; I. 219.
—— —— letters from; I. 474; II. 78.
—— bankruptcy of his son for 130,000*l.*; II. 279.
—— marriage of his daughter to Captain Styles; II. 20.
Abbotsbury, letter dated; II, 97.
Abdy:
Anthony; I. 160.
—— letter from; II. 78.
Abell, Mr.: II. 434.
Abercromby, Sir George; II. 67.
Aberdeen; I. 145, 334, II. 222.
Abigail, the ship; II. 192.
Abingdon; II. 361.
election (1701); II. 440.
Lord (1706); III. 69, 116.
Abington, Cambs.; I. 150, 285.
Abjuration Bill (1701); II. 447.
Abney:
Mr.; I. 312; II. 52.
—— death of; II. 56.
Abraham:
the ship; I. 309.
Thomas, letter from; I. 279.
Abrahamson, Rolof; I. 35.
Abrall, Mr.; III. 146.
Abrye, Thomas, waterman of Dr. Thomas Nevill; I. 31.
Absolom, Thomas; II. 353.
Abyssinia, King of, to be prevented coming to England; II. 88.
Achates, the ship; I. 13.
Acon; III. 148.
Acque, David, examination of; II. 103.
Actæon and Diana, picture of; III. 113.
Acton:
Mr., his cause; I. 185.
John, goldsmith to Charles I., warrant for; II. 208.
Acts of Parliament:
Annuity Act (1705); III. 56.
Act of Oblivion; II. 444; III. 53.
Navigation Act; III. 55.
Acworth, Mr., note for deals; I. 120.
Adams:
Thomas; I. 270.
Captain; III. 177, 178.
Addey or Adie, John; I. 34, 45.
Adderley:
Mr.; II. 349.
Charles; II. 419, 445, 447; III., 156, 161.
—— letter from; II. 431.
J., letter from; II. 358.
Addison, Lancelot, dean of Lichfield; II. 424.
Adige, the river; II. 430.
Admiral, Lord:
(1551) Lord Clinton; I. 2.
(1601) Lord Nottingham; I. 31.
(1625) Duke of Buckingham; I. 222.
drafts of letters to; I. 114, 115.
suit of, with Lady Russell touching Dunington (1604); I. 50.
office of, in commission (1642); II. 318.
Admiralty, the; III. 45, 77.
officers of; I. 33.
collectors of tenths; I. 367.
papers concerning; II. 15.
prizes for; I. 168.
Lords Commissioners of; I. 406, 429; II. 33, 38, 40, 62, 104, 112, 151, 175, 438, 443; III. 116.
—— letter from; I. 413.
—— letters to; I. 411, 417; II. 50, 52, 123, 127, 145.
—— petition to; II. 32.
—— secretary to. See Nicholas, Edward.
Admiralty Court; I. 35, 150; II. 113, 154, 202, 271.
commissions issued out of; I. 151, 152.
judge of; I. 185, 238, 356. judgment of; I. 407.
jurisdiction of; I. 440.
—— over the Thames and fishermen; II. 38.

Admiralty Court—cont.
marshal of. See Marsh, Valentine, and Smith, Solomon. registrar of; I. 433.
serjeant of. See Peckscll, John. sessions of; I. 214.
suits in; I. 184.
Admiralty, the, of Flanders, judge of; I. 470.
Advantage, the ship; I. 13.
Adventure, the ship; I. 13, 42, 116, 132, 133, 135, 137, 147, 200, 230, 279, 301, 309; II. 141, 184.
—— letter dated from aboard; I. 268, 378, 379.
Adventurers, the Merchant, of the city of London; I. 107, 160.
Advice, the ship; I. 13.
Aerssens, M., and the Prince of Piedmont (1626); I. 254.
Agard:
Mr.; I. 109.
Sir Henry; I. 453; II. 27.
—— letter from; II. 28.
—— petition of; II. 81.
Aid, the ship; I. 13.
Ailsbury:
Mr.; I. 136.
surveyor in the Navy; I. 282.
Ainsley, Mr. of Edinburgh; II. 40.
Aiscough, Sir Edward; II. 243.
Aix; III. 121.
Akred, Akrod:
Mr.; II. 441; III. 2.
John, letters from; II. 444; III. 13, 19, 51.
Alanwood, Sir John; II. 157.
Alathea, the ship; I. 219, 253, 259, 268.
Albemarle: See also Monk and Keppel.
Duke of (1684), Christopher Monk; III. 155.
Lord (1699); II. 389.
the ship; III. 45.
Albert, B., letter from; I. 334.
Albertus, Don; I. 317.
Albins, Essex, letter dated; II. 138.
Albstrat; I. 441.
Alcock, Captain; I. 429.
Aldborough:
in Suffolk; I. 187.
Bay; I. 253.
bailiffs, petition for a lighthouse (1627); I. 335.
Aldenham, letter dated; II. 30.
Aldersie; I. 426.
Aldershot, letter dated; I. 317.
Aldertan, letter dated; I. 311.
Alderwaslee; III. 20.
letter dated; III. 12.
Aldred, Mr.; I. 215.
Aldrich, Dr.; III. 54.
Aldwinkle, letter; dated II. 92.
Alexander:
Sir Wm., Secretary of Scotland; I. 318, 376, 377, 408, 409; III. 148, 155.
—— letters from; I. 405, 455.
Wm., Earl of Stirling; II. 42, 206.
M.; III. 126.
Alford:
Mr., speech in Parliament (1628) on Lord Arundel's Bill; I. 382.
Edward, letter from; I. 359.
powder and match to be provided by (1598); I. 22.
Alfreton:
letter dated; III. 77.
meeting-house built by Mr. Spateman; III. 15.
Algiers: I. 105, 261; II. 53, 158, 296. expedition to (1621); I. 104, 115, 116, 117, 122, 167.
pirates of; II. 173.
prisoners at; I. 289; II. 192.
Isle of Wight compared to; I. 203.
Alicante; I. 115, 161; III. 73.
Alienation Office; I. 295, 291.
Secretary Coke's report upon; I. 129.
Alkamar; I. 324.
Alkmanton; I. 228.
Allen: See also Alleyne.
Dr.; I. 185.
Mr.; III. 10, 92.
Abraham, of Derby; III. 180.
Captain; I. 227, 323.
—— letter to; I. 327.
—— answer of, to the Holland deputies; I. 329.
John, the "spotter," i.e., herald painter; II. 344.
Stephen; II. 382, 394.
Allenson, Ralph, mayor of Durham (?), letter from; II. 128.
Allestry:
Mr.; II. 353, 355.
James, convicted of clipping coin and pardoned; I. 195, 197, 199.
Alleyne: See also Allen.
Mr.; III. 21, 23.
Captain George, commission for; I. 96.
—— letter from; I. 268.
Henry, letter from; I. 457, 459, 460.
Allies, the, and Marlborough; III. 61.
Allington:
Lord (1716); III. 116.
Metcalfe, takes charge of Oxfordshire recruits (1627); I. 301.
Allison, Mr.; III. 11.
Allott, Dr., physician, letter from; I. 68.
Alloway, letter dated; II. 54.
Allport, Michael; I. 164.
Allsopp:
Mr.; II. 61; III. 178.
Thomas, of Derby; II. 445.
Alnwick:
Abbey; II. 21.
Charles I. at; II. 227.
letter dated; II. 220.
Alomes; I. 131.
Alresford; I. 343.
Alsace; II. 237.
Alston, Wm., letter from; II. 205.
Alton:
park; II. 269.
in the Peak; II. 249.
Surrey; II. 71, 340.

Altona (Altena); II. 207.
Alum works, the; II. 244.
co. York, lease of; II. 50.
—— rents of; II. 48.
report on; I. 84.
revenue from; I. 294.
Alured:
Mr.; I. 348, 476; II. 158.
—— secretary to Lord Eure, President of Wales, letter in favour of; I. 220.
Benjamin, petition refused; I. 197.
Thomas; I. 192.
—— M.P. for Hedon, Yorks, letters from; I. 127, 128, 142, 146, 166, 169, 219, 240, 248, 269, 286, 298, 325, 350, 365, 393, 396, 406, 411, 419, 433, 485; II. 15, 20, 47, 152.
Alva, Duke of, Viceroy of Naples; I. 165.
Amazon, the river, plantations on; II. 21.
Ambassadors and agents, list of (1635); II. 103.
Amboyna:
the massacre at; I. 290, 298, 342, 366, 404; II. 87.
—— orders by James I. upon; I. 186. men of, search for; I. 325.
Amcotes, Alexander; I. 3.
America; I. 337, 409; II. 38. description of (1632); I. 449.
discovery of, by Cabot, in 1496; I. 377.
Amersfort; I. 391.
Amiens:
letter dated; I. 202.
map of the siege at (1599); I. 25.
Amington, letter dated; III. 28, 52.
Amity, the ship; I. 347.
Amsterdam; 157, 165, 290, 336, 370, 433, 436, 448, 474; II. 52, 142.
letters dated; I. 330; II. 195, 426.
Crown jewels at, negotiations touching (1626); I. 255.
pintadoes from; I. 396.
Portuguese merchants in; I. 345.
ships of; I. 280.
Ancram, Lord: See also Ker, Robert.
Lord, his lodgings assigned to Coke; II. 240.
—— and Lord Collingham, case of; III. 143.
Anderson:
Gilbert; I. 180.
Sir Henry, letters from; I. 372, 379.
John; III. 169.
Svend; I. 281.
Andorwick, Mr. Maxwell's house; II. 19.
Andover; II. 86.
Lord (1625), feoffee for the Earl of Somerset; I. 184.
Andrew:
John; II. 13.
Nicholas; III. 107.
Richard, of Tregony; III. 107.
Andrewes, Andrews:
Captain; II. 102.
Dr., physician; I. 467.
Sir Eusebius, letter to; I. 88.
Andrewes, Andrews—cont.
Henry, letter from; I. 358; II. 78.
Philip, mayor of Plymouth, letter from; I. 485.
Robert; I. 197.
Dr. Roger, Master of Jesus College, Cambridge; I. 454.
—— letter from; I. 453.
Angel Gabriel, the ship; I. 305.
Angel, John, letter from; II. 261.
Angelica picture; III. 130.
Angers; II. 423.
Anglesey, Countess of. See Villiers, Elizabeth.
Angoulême; I. 311.
Anhalt; I. 336.
Anjou, Duke of (1700), and the succession to the Spanish throne; II. 410, 418, 420; III. 176.
Annan; II. 223.
Annandale, Marquis of (1716); III. 117.
Anne:
of Denmark, Queen of James I.; I. 172.
—— said to be pregnant (1605); I. 58.
—— servants of her establishment; I. 195.
Princess, afterwards Queen Anne; II. 409, 432.
—— letter from, on Queen Mary's death; II. 359.
—— dances excellently at a Court ball (1696); II. 365, 366.
Queen; III. 163.
—— her attachment to the Church; III. 15.
—— reported assault upon; III. 43.
—— birthday celebrations, regulations for; III. 99–100, 107–109.
—— government and policy of; III. 63.
—— reported plot to blow her Majesty up; III. 43.
—— Privy Chamber ceremonial; III. 80.
interment of, arrangements for; III. 109.
the ship; I. 330; II. 118.
Royal, the ship; I. 116, 210, 221, 259; II. 114.
—— letters dated; I. 224, 239, 251, 257.
Annesley:
letter dated; I. 194, 202, 204, 209, 415, 485.
Mr.; II. 448.
Arthur, son of Lord Mountmorris, petition of; II. 151.
Sir Francis; I. 367, 382.
—— Lord Mountmorris, committed to Dublin Castle; III. 151.
James, Earl of Anglesey (1690–1702); II. 416.
—— verses on his death; II. 449.
Wood; II. 81.

Anstreter, Anstruther:
M.; I. 281.
Sir Robert; I. 162, 378, 432; II. 10, 13, 59, 103.
—— account of, as ambassador to Germany; II. 9.
—— letters from; I. 420, 444; II. 82.
—— letter to; I. 484.
Mary, Lady, letter from; I. 484.
Answer, the ship; I. 13, 36.
Antelope:
the ship; I. 13, 42, 116, 167, 173, 233, 334, 431, 432, 436, 440, 442; II. 12, 75, 78, 175.
—— letter dated; I. 226, 444; II. 36.
Anthony:
the ship; I. 13, 17.
Mr. Adrian; I. 271
Antibes, French troops marching to; II. 416.
Antichrist, allusion to; I. 90.
Antonies, Brow; I. 35.
Antrim, Earl of (1639); II. 229, 233. See also Macdonell, Randall.
Antwerp; 38, 236, 378, 386, 388, 465; II. 6, 12, 37, 190, 191, 361, 425; III. 25, 72, 102, 158. letters dated; I. 311, 332, 336; III. 168.
velvet; III. 103.
Aphearius, Wolfgang; I. 161.
Apley, Horncastle sessions; I. 5.
Appeals, clerk of, death of; II. 195.
Appleby; II. 441.
Henry; II. 224.
Applegarth, laird of; II. 223.
Appletree hundred, co. Derby; I. 227; II. 397, 408, 446; III. 11, 93, 96.
Apscourt manor; II. 208.
Apsley:
Mr.; I. 222.
—— privy seal and proclamation concerning; II. 26.
Sir Allen, Lieutenant of the Tower; I. 94, 146, 156, 200, 207, 217, 219, 269, 280, 345; III. 153.
—— letters from; I. 177, 188, 209, 218, 219, 221, 224, 229, 231, 232, 234, 237, 278, 299, 346, 349, 405.
—— accounts of; I. 301.
—— certificate by; I. 383.
Mr. Peter; II. 23.
Wood, timber from; I. 213.
Apslyne, Nathaniel, carpenter; I. 253.
Aqua vitæ, prize capture of; I. 169.
Aquila, Rodriguez Blase, merchant; I. 183.
Aquitaine; II. 140.
Archangel, trade with; II. 273.
Archcliff bulwark, Dover, letter dated; II. 99.
Archduke, the (1601); I. 30, 44.
Archduchess, the:
(Isabella Clara Eugenia); I. 215, 381, 475. See also Infanta.
Archduchess, the—cont.
ships belonging to; I. 200.
reported death of; I. 316.
subjects of, wrongs done by; I. 470.
Archer:
Mr.; II. 229.
Sir Simon; II. 84.
Arches Court: action in; I. 388.
dean of; II. 159.
Arden, Ardern:
Mr.; I. 93; III. 12, 96.
Sir John; III. 76.
Aremberg, Duke of (1697); II. 370.
Arensberg; II. 207.
Argall, Argoll:
Sir Samuel; I. 234.
Thomas, letter from; I. 150.
Argyll, Marquis of (1642) the practice in Scotland against; II. 305. See also Campbell.
Arian:
(Aire); II. 291, 292.
Dr., of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, complaints against; I. 185.
Aristotle, analysis of his Ethics by Secretary Coke; I. 286.
Ark:
the ship; I. 22, 37.
Raleigh, the ship; I. 13.
Arkengarthdale forest, Richmondshire; I. 294.
Arlington, Lady (1716); III. 116, 185.
Armagh:
Archbishop of (1632); I. 455, 469. See also Usher, James. county of; I. 96; II. 298.
Armin, Bartholomew; I. 9.
Arminians:
strength of, in the Low Countries; I. 94.
at Schoonhoven, stir raised by; I. 306, 352, 411.
Laud and Neale of that party; I. 350.
Armouries; I. 429.
Armstrong, William, letter from; III. 63.
Army:
state and pay of, in 1599; I. 23.
regulations as to pay of, in 1700; II. 414.
recruited from Devon and Cornwall; I. 281.
Arnheim; 377, 378.
letter dated; II. 99, 189.
Arnold:
John, barber surgeon, letter from; II. 428.
Marshall, brewer of Westminster; I. 200.
William; II. 360.
Aragon, expected revolt in; II. 276, 320.
Arraskin [Erskine], Dr., death of; III. 122.
Arran (Aron), Earl of (1699); II. 389.
Array, commission of; II. 319.
Arschot; III. 64.
Arseelf; III. 72.
Arthington, Mr.; II. 414.

Arthur, Father; II. 31.
Artlebury, Northants; II. 90.
Artois; I. 257; II. 292.
overthrow of the French by the Spaniards in; II. 317.
Arundel; I. 12, 406; II. 340.
Mr.; I. 242.
Mrs.; III. 110.
Edward, merchant of Bristol; II. 117.
Earl of (1613), of Princess Elizabeth's train; I. 77.
——letters to; I. 78, 79.
—— his Countess, daughter of Gilbert Earl of Shrewsbury; I. 80.
—— —— their children described; I. 79–82.
—— —— their absence from prayers noted by Court bishops; I. 78.
Anne, Countess Dowager of, widow of Philip, Earl of Arundel, letters from; I. 77, 79–82, 89, 93.
of Wardour, Lord (1607), birth of a son to; I. 63.
House, Highgate; I. 80.
—— letters dated; II. 59, 101.
—— Prince William of Orange lodged at (1641); II. 280.
Marbles, the; I. 94.
Aschaffenburg; III. 44.
Ascough:
Edward; I. 4, 5.
Henry; I. 3.
William; I. 3.
Ash, Ashe:
letters dated; II. 222, 242, 274, 280, 285.
dock at, estimated cost of; I. 225.
Mr.; II. 332.
Henry; II. 353.
Ashbourne; II. 27, 163, 295, 358; III. 12, 50, 90, 98, 170.
letters dated; II. 410, 418, 421, 425, 453; III. 8, 65, 177, 178.
Ashburnham; II. 284, 288.
William, letter from; II. 4.
Lord and Lady (1716); III. 116.
Ashburton; I. 249.
manor, sale of; I. 395.
Ashbury, Edward; I. 354.
Ashby; II. 64, 256, 257, 333.
de la Zouch; II. 368, 447.
—— letter dated; II. 446.
Fallows; I. 228.
near Horncastle, letter dated; II. 51.
Mr.; II. 245, 418, 419; III. 170.
George; I. 296.
Ashdown forest, Sussex; I. 294.
Ashelworth manor and rectory, co. Gloucester; I. 40.
Ashenhurst, manor of Breadsall; II. 71.
Ashley:
letter dated; II. 432.
Sir Francis; I. 305.
Ashover; III. 13.
Ashridge, letter dated; II. 216.
Ashstead; II. 363; III. 158.
letter dated; II. 362.
Ashton:
letters dated; I. 190, 252, 256, 257, 283, 404.
Mr.; II. 97.
Colonel, letter from; I. 470.
Robert; III. 2.
Robert, junior; II. 454.
W., petition of; I. 128.
Ashtowne, Ireland; II. 156.
Ashurst, Sir Henry; II. 434.
Ashwell:
Mr.; II. 277, 284, 307.
William; I. 299, 462.
—— letters from; I. 414; II. 231.
—— merchant in London, letter to; I. 453.
Askew, Mr., muster master of co. Lincoln; I. 10.
Askold, Mrs., widow; I. 265.
Askwith, Mr., prosecutes Turner, officer of the Council of the North, for false imprisonment; II. 55.
Asperton manor, co. Hereford; I. 40.
Aspinwall, Mrs.; III. 110.
Assembly, Westminster; II. 337.
Asserby, Edward, of Billesbe; I. 6.
Assurance, the ship; I. 136, 159, 189, 192, 199, 218, 230; II. 114.
—— letter dated; I. 381.
Astead. See Ashstead.
Asten, Mr.; I. 427.
Asterley, Mr., landwaiter of St. Ives, Cornwall; III. 107.
Asti, treaty of, broken by the King of Spain (1616); I. 92.
Astle, Astley:
Francis; I. 417.
—— letter from; I. 393.
Sir Jacob; I. 457; II. 99, 101, 208, 211, 231; III. 154.
—— letters from; II. 194, 196.
—— letters to; II. 201, 217.
Astoft, John, letter from; II. 10.
Aston:
Arthur, defends Reading; II. 333.
Edward, successor of Robert Haford in the Jewel House; I. 185.
Sir Thomas; II. 333.
Walter, Lord, ambassador to Spain; II. 106, 119.
—— recalled from Spain (1638); II. 175.
Upthorpe, manor of; I. 269.
Athelstone, Lady (1703); III. 25.
Athlone; II. 75, 91, 185, 243, 287. contract for defences of; I. 152.
purchasers of; II. 150.
Athole, Duke of (1716); III. 116.
Atkins:
Dr.; I. 292; II. 11.
Captain Richard; II. 353.
Atkinson:
Mr.; II. 232.
Ralph; II. 61.
Atterbury:
Mr.; II. 349, 457.
Dr.; III. 97.

Attorney General: See also Heath, Sir Robert; Noy, William; Banks, Sir John; Herbert, Sir Edward.
(1604) Sir Edward Coke, opinions of; I. 51.
—— instructed to look to Sir Robt. Dudley's proceedings; I. 55.
—— speech in arraignment of H. Garnet; I. 60.
(1624) Sir Thos. Coventry, proceedings concerning Harpur, a ward; I. 157, 158.
official references to; I. 172, 214, 239, 269.
Aubern chace; I. 294.
Aubert:
M., canon of St. Denis, Avignon; I. 343.
M. Maurice, surgeon of Queen Henrietta Maria, examination of; I. 337.
Aubigny, Lord (1641), Master of the Horse to Prince Charles; II. 296.
Auckland; II. 231: See also Bishop Auckland.
Castle, letter dated; II. 87.
Audit Office, Ireland, letter dated; I. 433.
Audlem, Cheshire; III. 57.
Aufield, William, letter from; I. 232.
Augier, Monsieur; I. 421, 472; II. 33, 63, 64, 84, 103, 156, 167, 190, 232, 238, 333.
Augsburg; I. 458.
Confession, the, states of; I. 16.
Aungier, Francis, letters from; I. 328, 433.
Ausonius, quotation from; I. 477.
Austin Friars, London office of the Treasurer of the Navy in; I. 32, 41, 47.
Austin, Thomas, letter from; I. 419.
Austria; I. 378, 380, 384.
proposal for diminishing the greatness of (1626); I. 254.
and the succession in Spain (1700); II. 400.
Auvergne, Count of, his opinion of the English and Dutch; II. 377.
Auverquerque, Monsieur d', commander in the States' army (1705); III. 64.
Avaux, Count of; II. 429. See also D'Avaux.
Averay, Duke of (1697); II. 370.
Averie, Avery, Avory:
Mr.; II. 103, 284.
—— of Hamburg; II. 273.
Joseph, letter from; II. 276.
Richard, letter to; II. 158.
Samuel, deputy of the Merchant Adventurers' Company; II. 69.
Avignon, letter dated; I. 343.
Avon, the ship; I. 173.
Aylesbury, Sir Thomas, letters from; I. 166, 167, 412, 428; II. 46, 117.
Ayloffe:
Henry, letter from; II. 396.
Sir Benjamin, of Fenchurch Street; II. 396.
Aylwarde, Peter, mayor of Waterford, letter from; I. 342.
Ayr; II. 231, 290, 390.
Ayscough, Edward, counsellor of Grays Inn; II. 70. See also Aiscough.
Azores, the; I. 398.

B.

Babington:
Mr.; I. 56; II. 134.
Thomas; I. 296.
Babylon; II. 215.
Bacon:
Francis, "Mr. Attorney sworn Lord Keeper"; I. 94.
—— his book on the Court of Chancery; I. 128.
—— his corrupt decision (1625); I. 199.
Sir Nicholas, unrecovered arrears due to the Crown from; I. 184.
Leonard, of Derby, committed to Newgate; III. 75.
Mark; III. 57.
William; II. 451.
Baddeley, Richard, secretary to the bishop of Durham (1637); II. 160.
Baden; I. 338.
Marquis of; I. 254, 458.
Badlegh, Sir Ralph; I. 1, 2.
Badworth woods; I. 89.
Bagdad; II. 215.
Bagg, Bagge:
Mr.; I. 156, 203, 210.
James; I. 324.
—— letters from; I. 122, 151, 168, 173, 179, 193.
—— vice-admiral of South Cornwall, commission; I. 142.
—— junior, letters from; I. 135, 138, 140, 156.
Sir James, vice-admiral, &c.; I. 133, 213, 251, 254, 325, 332, 343, 344, 356, 365, 409, 410.
—— letters from; I. 160, 190, 219–222, 225, 230, 232, 234, 252, 285, 308, 310, 314–316, 320, 324, 329, 337, 368, 417, 428; II. 103.
—— letters to; I. 190, 215, 217, 226, 310; II. 102.
—— industry of; I. 250.
—— prizes taken by; I. 240.
—— report made to; I. 318.
Bagrave, Bygrave: I. 92, 234, 285, 286, 312, 354, 386; II. 65, 68, 77, 146, 305, 337; III. 133.
letters dated; I. 94, 221, 416; II. 52, 56; III. 134, 158.
parsonage, George Coke's; I. 342.
—— dilapidations at; II. 198.
rents; I. 386.
search for coals at; II. 45.

Bagrave—cont.
tenants; II. 338; III. 158.
—— ship money warrant levied on; II. 209.
Hall; III. 27.
Bagley woods; I. 447.
Bagnall, Bagnold:
Mr.; II. 357.
John; II. 353.
Sir Samuel; I. 27.
Bagot, Edward, letter from; II. 376.
Bagshawe:
Mr.; II. 451; III. 99.
Sir Edward, letter from; I. 451.
Thomas; II. 71.
William; II. 61, 62.
Bagshot; II. 241.
letters dated; I. 315, 316, 440.
Bahinto; II. 132.
Bailiffs, Mr., of Derby; I. 386.
Bailey, Baily: See also Bayly.
Mr.; I. 415.
James; I. 174.
John, of Normanby-by-Trent; I. 3.
William, information by; I. 41.
Bainbridge, Bainbrigge; I. 12.
Mr.; I. 393; II. 134.
Dr. Thomas, Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge University, and Master of Christ's College, letters from; I. 341, 456.
Welsbourne, arrest of; II. 108, 113.
Baker:
Mr.; I. 30; II. 417, 419, 424; III. 24.
—— sheriff of Suffolk; II. 107.
Alexander, chirurgeon in ordinary to James I.; I. 195.
Christopher; I. 40.
Humphry; I. 270.
Sir John; I. 1, 2.
Thomas, of King's Lynn; I. 275.
William; II. 353.
—— petition of; I. 199.
Bakewell; II. 358, 407; III. 11, 99.
Mr.; II. 392, 393; III. 172, 173.
Balborough; III. 11.
Balconquell:
Walter, D.D., letter from; I. 307.
—— nominated for the deanery of Durham; II. 224.
Baldock; I. 342; II. 146. land at, belonging to Dr. George Coke; II. 181.
Baldwin:
Father, plot of, to despatch Lord Salisbury (1606); I. 62.
Robert, attends the Bishop of Norwich to view Badworth woods; I. 89.
Bale, Sir John; II. 269.
Balfour, Sir William; II. 210.
Balghy, Balguy:
John; III. 2, 50, 58.
Mr.; III. 6.
Balincor; II. 132.
Balladmongers of May, 1642, sing contrary, &c.; II. 317.
Ballard, Colonel; II. 332.
Balle, Mr.; III. 179.
Ballindon, Mr.; III. 84, 90.
Balmerino, Lord (1639), signature; II. 220.
Baltimore:
Lord. See Calvert, George.
harbour; I. 251.
Baltinglas, Lord (1631), letter from; I. 431.
Baltomane; II. 132, 133, 156.
Bamfield, William, petition of; III. 149.
Bampfylde, John, letter from; I. 276.
Bamford, Mr.; III. 96.
Banaster, Bannister:
Sir Robert; I. 123; II. 245; III. 152.
Banbury; II. 320, 349.
Bancroft, John, bishop of Oxford (1632-1641) commission to; II. 121.
—— letter from; II. 17.
—— dispute with Lord Chief Justice Richardson; II. 19.
Bandon Bridge, mine at; I. 454.
Bandinel:
David, Dean of Jersey, letters from; I. 263; II. 30.
—— imprisoned at Calais; I. 341.
Bangor; I. 480.
bishop of. See Bayly, Lewis.
Banier or Baneere, the Swedish general; II. 237, 287.
Bankes, Banks:
Mr., of Sheffield; II. 414.
Lord (1642); II. 316, 317.
John, vicar of Margate (1637), letter from; II. 161.
Sir John, attorney-general; I. 466; II. 59, 62, 79, 93, 126, 130, 155, 160, 167, 176, 231, 257.
—— examinations before; II. 84, 103, 173.
—— letters from; II. 112, 139, 145, 233.
—— versus Mayor of London, case of; II. 99.
—— opinions of; I. 421; II. 187.
Lady (1700), her daughter Lutterell, verses on; III. 189.
Bann, the river; fishing grant to the Londoners from James I.; I. 464.
Bantam; I. 411.
Bantre, Darby, an Irish beggar; II. 216.
Bantry Bay; I. 332.
Bapaume; II. 292.
Barbadoes, the; II. 21, 150.
Barbary:
I. 289; II. 251.
Company; II. 269, 296, 297.
—— cause against; II. 271.
gold; I. 168, 326.
ships; II. 201, 270.
trade; II. 218, 236.
Barber, Francis, memorial of; III. 145.
Barber-surgeons Hall; I. 396.
Barbican, the, letter dated; II. 188.
Barbutt, John, bailiff of Ipswich; II. 197.

Barcelona:
II. 248; III. 64, 65.
siege of (1706); III. 73.
surrender of, to Louis XIII (1641); II. 276.
Barcksteed, Michael, goldsmith of St. Clement Danes, deposition of; I. 326.
Bard, Rafe, of Kelsey; I. 4.
Bardwell, Mr.; I. 429.
Barfleur, document dated; III. 43.
Bargrave:
Captain, of the Peter and John; I. 314.
Dr. Isaac, dean of Canterbury, made vicar of Lydd; I. 326.
Barker:
Mr.; I. 344, 380; II. 248.
Sir [John]; I. 127.
reputed witch, curious growth on her ear; II. 80.
John; II. 261.
—— petition to James I.; I. 179.
—— mayor and alderman of Bristol; II. 29, 78.
—— letter to the Council; I. 274.
—— abuse of his corpse; II. 137.
Barkham:
Mr., his state in the fens; II. 267.
Sir Edward, acquittance of; II. 344.
Barking:
coach, robbing of; II. 364.
letter dated; II. 71.
Hall, letter dated; II. 71.
Barkley. See Berkeley.
Barkway; I. 32.
Barlow:
Robert, letter from; I. 330.
Dr. offers marriage to Susan, daughter of Sir Francis Coke; I. 116.
Dr., William, dean of Chester, afterwards bishop of Lincoln, letter from; I. 27.
Barmen; I. 309.
Barnabee, Robert; I. 167.
Barnard:
Mr.; II. 94.
Archibald; I. 5.
Barnes:
Captain William; III. 165.
—— letters from; II. 381, 390, 409.
Barnet; II. 376.
Barnett, Samuel; II. 353.
Barnevelt, John, chief friend of the Arminian party (1617); I. 94.
Barnewall:
Mr.; II. 133.
Richard; I. 482.
Barnham, Sir Francis; I. 212.
Barnsley:
Hall, co. Worcester; II. 177.
Mr.; I. 228.
Mrs., English gentlewoman imprisoned in Russia (1638); II. 177–179.
Barnstaple; I. 192.
Barnwood forest disafforested; I. 294.
Baro, Dr. P.; I. 16.
Barr, Robert, merchant; II. 197.
Barracote, letter dated; I. 36, 119.
Barradell, Mr., burned to death; II. 343.
Barrett, Barretts:
Mr., warrant to take partridges in Sussex for Nonsuch; I. 164.
Sir Edward, ambassador to France, letter from; I. 193.
—— his horses recommended to Sir John Coke; I. 230.
Edward, Lord Newburgh, Chancellor of the Duchy; I. 360, 376; II. 53, 81, 175, 219, 223, 266, 284, 318.
—— petition of; I. 377.
—— letters from; II. 119, 155, 188, 245.
Thomas, grievances of; I. 185.
Barrington, Sir Charles; III. 61, 180.
Barrow, Luke, letters from; II. 378, 379.
Barry:
David, Earl of Barrymore; II. 223, 237, 238.
—— petition of; II. 270.
James; I. 458.
Bartell, Captain, Dutchman; I. 152.
Bartholomew Fair; II. 291, 403.
Bartlett:
Lord (1716); III. 117.
Court, letter dated; I. 113.
Bartley [Sir Edward], justice of the peace; II. 46.
Bartolotti, William, of Amsterdam; I. 370.
Barton:
Caistor sessions; I. 4. powder to be provided by (1598); I. 22.
Derbyshire; I. 228.
Sir Purey; III. 143.
Barwardcote, letter dated; II. 184.
Barwell:
Henry; II. 353.
—— letter from; II. 399.
Basford; III. 93, 96.
Bashell; I. 392.
Basherville, Lady, her horses; I. 27.
Basil:
Matthew, letter from; I. 342.
friar of Rouen, letter to; I. 342.
Baskervill:
Ensign; I. 321.
Mr., his account with Sir F. Greville; I. 70.
Basle, report of the siege and capture of, by Tilly; I. 172.
Baslow; II. 60.
Bass, Robert, innkeeper, the One Crane, Leicester; III. 27.
Bassan picture; III. 129, 187.
Bassano, M.; II. 221.
Bassett:
Mr.; I. 163, 165.
Francis, vice-admiral of North Cornwall, commission to; I. 142.
Bastille, the; I. 336, 400, 401; II. 270.
Bastwick, Dr.; II. 267.

Bate :
Mr. ; I. 16 ; II. 56.
—— of Foxton ; II. 410.
Richard, letter from ; III. 50.
Thomas ; I. 402.
—— mercer, of Ashby de la Zouch ; II. 447.
Bateman :
Mr. ; I. 160.
Robert ; I. 397.
—— governor of the East India Company, letter from ; I. 474.
William ; II. 27.
Bates :
Robert and Susan, niece of Sir John Coke, letter from ; I. 283.
Susan, letter from ; I. 255.
William, his house on the Derwent, near Derby ; II. 180.
Bath :
II. 37 ; III. 58, 61, 73, 110, 190.
letters dated ; III. 24, 25, 101.
waters ; II. 361.
knights of the order of the ; I. 232.
Earl of. See Bourchier, Edward and Henry.
Sir John ; II. 106.
and Wells, bishop of, Gilbert Bourn (1554–1560) ; I. 39.
—— George Hooper (1716) ; III. 117.
—— dean and chapter of, congé d'élire for ; I. 480.
Bathe, James ; I. 482.
Bathory, Stephen, the Transylvanian ; I. 18.
Bathurst, Sir Benjamin ; II. 437 ; III. 11.
Batson, Mr., an attorney ; I. 197.
Batt, Batte :
Anthony ; I. 285.
Edward, senior bursar of Trinity College, Cambridge (1594) ; I. 15.
Batten, Battens :
Andrew ; I. 241.
—— master of the Salutation ; I. 482.
Bartholomew ; III. 151.
Battersea, letter dated ; II. 145.
Battier, M., letter from ; II. 190.
Battista, Friar ; I. 18.
Baudry, Daniel, letter from ; II. 106.
Bavaria :
I. 408 ; II. 115, 320.
Duke of ; I. 336, 338 ; II. 14, 237, 276.
—— electorship of the Palatinate conferred by the Emperor on (1627) ; I. 311.
Elector of (1698) ; II. 380, 404, 405 ; III. 44.
—— (1704), victory of the English over ; III. 36, 37, 38.
movements of, after Blenheim ; III. 40–43.
Electress of, and her children ; III. 42.
Baxter :
Captain, information ; I. 366.
Captain Alexander ; I. 330.
Baye, Dutch fleet of ; I. 215.
Bayles, James of Artlebury, Northamptonshire ; II. 90.
Baylie, Bayly : See also Bailey.
Mr. ; II. 361.
James, his grant for clerk of the fairs ; I. 353.
Lewis, bishop of Bangor ; I. 444.
Dr. Richard, President of St. John's College, Oxford, signature ; II. 91.
Baynton, William, pardon to ; I. 143.
Bayonne ; I. 266, 336, 340.
ships of ; I. 152.
wines of ; I. 167.
Beaker, Richard ; I. 481.
Beale :
Mr. ; I. 389.
Captain ; I. 427.
Dr. ; III. 134.
Nicholas, haberdasher, examination of ; I. 390.
Richard, Lieutenant ; I. 371.
Beamondhall manor, Cheshunt ; II. 196.
Bear, the ship ; I. 31, 37, 371.
Bearbaiting, Mr. Martin's Bill against, note on ; III. 7.
Beardly, Robert ; II. 445.
Bearsley, Francis ; III. 138.
Beardsworth :
George, testimonial in favour of ; I. 123.
—— petition of ; III. 151.
Beaucaire ; I. 363.
Beauchamps Court (Sir Fulke Greville's) ; I. 36, 50, 57, 63, 64, 66, 69, 88.
Beaudesert park ; I. 39.
Beaulieu ; I. 421, 440, 470, 471 ; II. 177. documents dated ; I. 147, 148, 469, 471.
Beaumaris ; II. 21, 24, 191, 193.
Beaumont :
Grange, Duchy land ; I. 164.
Sir Henry, knighted at Warsop (1603) ; I. 43.
John, a recusant ; I. 181.
Sir John ; II. 256, 257.
Beauregard, Captain, rewarded for taking M. de Montmorency prisoner ; II. 1.
Beaver, the ship ; II. 154.
Beckingham ; I. 8, 9, 10.
Beech, Thomas, letter from ; I. 35.
Beecher, Becher :
Mr. ; I. 123.
Sir William, clerk of the Council in ordinary ; I. 241, 310, 317, 319, 320, 324, 385, 408, 425, 431, 437, 455 ; II. 82, 169.
—— letters from ; I. 343, 437, 438 ; II. 27.
Bedford, Earl of : See Russell, John.
Lady (1605), keepeth her prerogative of greatness at Court ; I. 52.

Bedford—cont.
letter dated; II. 456.
House, letter dated; I. 146; II. 44.
Beddinfield, Mr.; I. 342.
Bedingfield, Mr., attorney general of the Duchy of Lancaster; II. 188.
Beddingtonshire:
coast of, Northumberland; II. 89, 90.
"audacious fact" there; II. 113, 117.
Bedloe:
Isaac; II. 84.
Nicholas; I. 226.
Bedmar, Marquis de; II. 425.
Bedwell, William, letter from; I. 271.
Beerhaven, report of Turkish ships at; I. 477.
Beewports, Beewes, letter dated; II. 81.
Beighton; II. 442; III. 11.
Belasyse, Thomas, Lord Fauconberg; I. 420.
William, letter from; II. 128.
Sir William; II. 89.
Belcheleworth, Horncastle sessions; I. 5.
Belfast, Lord. See Chichester, Sir Arthur.
Belfore, James, petition of; I. 184.
Belgium merchants licensed to export gold; I. 487.
Belgrave; I. 424.
Belhaven, Lord (1716); III. 116.
Belhouse, letter dated; II. 188.
Belin, M.; I. 421.
Bell:
Mr.; I. 160.
Captain; I. 453.
—— Henry, letter from; II. 82.
Sarah; III. 190.
Bellamont:
Lady (1701); II. 426; III. 24, 95.
—— and Lord Culling, dispute between; III. 81.
Belleanes, Dr.; I. 255.
Belle Isle, fleets at; I. 344; II. 127.
Bellingham:
Sir Henry; I. 371.
John; I. 3.
Belper; II. 442.
Belvoir; II. 425.
letter dated; II. 212.
Castle, Duke of Buckingham at (1624); I. 168.
—— fortified by Robert, Lord Camden, March 1643; II. 332.
Bembrigg. See Bainbrigg.
Benbow, Admiral; II. 431, 435.
Benediction, the ship; I. 300.
Benevolences:
forced loans, &c.; I. 296, 298; II. 9, 25.
contributed by Cumberland; I. 280.
not binding on the clergy, although granted by Convocation; II. 268.
Benham Park, Newbury, letter dated; II. 94.
Benin, Africa; I. 316.
Bennett:
Mr., of Welby; II. 446.
Dr., patent for saltpetre; I. 148.
Bennett—cont.
Adam, mayor of Exeter, letter from; II. 108.
Claudius, provincial of York; I. 407.
E., letter from; I. 210.
George, kills his shepherd; I. 182.
J., letter from; II. 149.
Sir John; I. 94, 172.
—— prisoner in the Fleet, letter from; I. 141.
—— letter to; I. 60.
T., letters from; II. 404, 405, 406.
Bennington, letter dated; I. 275.
Bentheim, dispute concerning the county of; II. 391.
Bentinck, William, Earl of Portland (1689–1709); II. 390, 437.
Bentley:
letter dated; II. 453.
living of; II. 444.
Mr.; II. 445.
John, to be a Land Tax Commissioner; II. 422.
Berchen, J. V., letters from; I. 56, 57.
Berehaven; I. 258, 259.
Beresford:
Mr.; II. 423; III. 12, 32, 89, 90, 92, 93, 98.
Edward, letter from; II. 453.
Henry; III. 76.
Jervis; II. 353.
John; III. 14, 15, 171.
Captain John, of Ashborne; II. 408, 445; III. 30, 79, 85.
—— letters from; II. 410, 418, 421, 425, 453; III. 8, 11, 12, 53, 56, 59, 65, 70, 76.
—— letters to; II. 421.
Thomas, letter from; III. 65.
Bergen:
on the Rhine; I. 30.
—— letter dated; II. 291.
op Zoom; I. 57; II. 388.
—— fortifications of, described; II. 402.
Bergland; I. 391.
Bergne, Mlle. de; II. 370.
Berkell, Petronilla de, denization; I. 359.
Berkley, Barkley:
Robert, petition of; I. 198.
—— justice of the King's Bench; II. 54, 270, 317.
—— to be tried before the House of Lords; II. 315.
—— sentenced to pay a fine of 20,000*l.*; II. 337.
Lady Berkeley (1629); I. 383.
William, petition of; II. 42.
Mr. and Lord Kingston, dispute between (1698); II. 375.
Berkhampstead Forest; I. 294.
Berkshire; II. 4, 94.
purveyance composition in; I. 127.
Earl of. See Howard, Thomas.
Countess of (1624); I. 158.
Lord (1706); III. 78.
Bermudas, the; I. 363.

Bernard: See also Barnard.
Mr., escapes from Cambridge (1632); I. 479.
Duke; II. 175, 237.
Nicholas, letter to; I. 26.
Berne; I. 338; II. 175.
Berney, Richard; I. 263.
Bernino, Signor; II. 186.
Bernsdorf, M.; III. 187.
Baron; III. 120.
Berott, James; I. 30.
Berrensteen, Jean, letters from; I. 387, 388, 389.
Berrington, Mr.; I. 120.
Berry:
Mr.; I. 312.
Thomas of Walesbie; I. 4.
Bertie:
Captain of H.M.S. Betty; II. 431.
Colonel; I. 310.
Charles; III. 46.
Kate; III. 167.
Lady Mary (1706); III. 166, 167.
Montagu, Earl of Abingdon (1699–1743); III. 8.
Robert, Earl of Lindsey; I. 335, 379, 385, 446; II. 32, 68, 86, 88, 92, 95, 97, 107, 194, 234, 236, 239, 286.
—— draft commission to; II. 138.
—— letters from; I. 368, 369, 417; II. 142, 209, 225, 227, 237, 322.
—— letter to; II. 143.
—— proposed grant to; I. 464.
—— commands for the King; II. 319.
—— taken prisoner at Edgehill by the Parliament; II. 324.
—— his assault upon Lord Mowbray (1641); II. 289.
Berule, Cardinal; I. 400, 401.
Berwick; I. 30, 42; II. 19, 21, 135, 219, 220, 225, 228; III. 156.
letters dated; II. 44, 225, 227, 234; III. 147.
burgess for; I. 352.
Charles I. at; II. 224.
camp at, delineated; II. 247.
garrison at; II. 217, 239.
mayor and bailiffs of, petition; I. 171.
munition at, inventory of; II. 189, 234, 235.
Beskwood Park, Notts; I. 294.
Bessanger, a servant of Lord Conway; II. 84.
Best:
Mr., attorney; I. 270.
Mrs.; I. 431.
Captain; I. 177, 339.
Captain J.; I. 330.
—— letter from; I. 141.
Captain Thomas, of the Guardland, instructions to; I. 143.
—— letters from; I. 143–147.
Bethel, Mr.; III. 123, 124.
Betty, the, H.M.S.; II. 431.
Betune, Bethune:
Andrew; II. 159.
Dr.; I. 292.
Colonel, death of; I. 44.
Beveren, M.:
Ambassador Extraordinary of the States General; II. 109.
—— letter from; II. 145.
Beverley:
Richard; I. 3.
Captain of the Ninth Whelp; II. 145.
Bewdley; I. 50; II. 323, 324.
letter dated; I. 310.
chapel annexed to Ribbesford rectory; II. 213.
Bewicke, Robert, alderman of Newcastle-on Tyne, letter from; II. 31.
Bewinthebbers, the; I. 290.
Bewsborough, inhabitants of, petition; I. 163.
Beza, imputation upon; I. 168.
Beziers; II. 399.
Bianchi, Signor; III. 122.
Bicester, Oxon; II. 360.
Bickel, Captain of the Discovery; I. 448.
Biddlesden, Bucks; I. 103.
Biddulph, Sir Michael, M.P.; II. 419, 425, 451.
Biggs, Abraham, letter from; I. 371.
Bigland, Serjeant; II. 430; III. 3.
Bigrave. See Baggrave.
Bilandt House on the Waal, letters dated; II. 100, 110.
Bilboa, barque of; I. 262.
Bilderbeck, —, letter from; II. 174.
Billesley, Bilsley; II. 136.
letters dated; I. 209, 237, 371.
Billinghurst:
John, deputy coroner in the Isle of Wight; I. 402.
Zachary; II. 161.
Billingsgate; II. 267.
Billingsley, Henry:
appointed "Post" of London merchants; I. 295, 330.
petition of; III. 155.
Bills in Parliament (1705); III. 56, 65, 163.
Bindon, Henry, Earl of, memorial of; III. 183.
Bing:
Mr. Serjeant; I. 449.
Sir George, letter from; III. 81.
Bingham; II. 408.
Bingley:
manor, co. Warwick; I. 103.
Mr.; II. 146.
Lord (1716); III. 116.
Dame Agrippina, jointure of; I. 408.
Sir John; I. 107, 454.
—— letters from; I. 277, 448, 450; II. 148.
Sir Ralph; I. 408.
Sir Richard, of the Happy Entrance and the Guardland; I. 133, 148, 163, 177, 180, 186, 188, 199, 211.
—— certificate of; I. 96.
—— despatched to Spain with the Prince's servants (1623); I. 135.

Bingley, Sir Richard—cont.
—— instructions to; I. 139.
—— letters from; I. 129, 136, 152, 157, 170, 175, 178, 185, 186, 192.
—— prizes brought by; I. 189.
Binion, Mr., censured by both Houses; II. 307.
Birch:
Mr., buys plate stolen from the Duchess of Richmond; I. 199.
James, conductor of Hertfordshire recruits; I. 301.
Bird:
Mr.; I. 217; II. 418, 419.
George; II. 219.
Ralph; I. 215, 232.
Sir William; I. 94.
Birkbeck, Henry, certificate by; I. 338.
Birke, Count Herman van; I. 43.
Birnes, the, territory of; I. 425; II. 111.
Birre, Bryan; I. 482.
Biscay, Biscayers; I. 375, 376; II. 31, 32, 53.
Bishop Auckland, letters dated; II. 45, 84, 96, 128, 130, 160, 232, 235, 245.
Bishops: See also Episcopacy.
Lords' resolution that they shall have votes, notwithstanding the Commons' resolution (May 1641); II. 284.
impeachment and imprisonment of ten; II. 302, 306.
bailed by the Lords; II. 314.
Extirpation Bill, "bishops voted down root and branch"; II. 329, 330.
Bishopthorpe, York; II. 16.
Bishopton, letter dated; III. 118.
Bisse:
Philip, of Derby; II. 451.
James; III. 145.
Black, —, tailor to Charles I.; I. 194.
Blackborough, Edith; II. 52.
Blackbourne, George; II. 346.
Black Bull, the ship, of Amsterdam; II. 119, 147.
Blackburn, John and Dorothy; I. 328.
Blacker, —, widow, of Chilton; I. 71.
Blackett, Sir Edward; II. 435.
Black Forest; III. 37, 44.
Blackfriars, letters dated; I. 286, 298, 419, 420, 433; II. 48, 76, 286.
Black Hamilton; III. 81.
Blackheath; II. 311.
Blackleche, James, legacy of; I. 467.
Blackley; II. 43.
Blackmore, Sir Richard, author, physician to Queen Anne; II. 359.
Blackstone:
Mr., of Newcastle; II. 232.
Dr.; I. 454.
Blackwall:
war ships sent from; I. 234.
Ralph; II. 71.
Blackwater, the; I. 36.
Blackwell Hall, London, wool to be viewed and searched at; II. 182.
Blagden, Captain, petition of; I. 195.
Blage; II. 297.
Blagge, Cornwallis; I. 132.
Blaggrave, John, clerk of All Saints, Derby (1701); II. 445.
Blainville, M.; I. 256, 257, 260, 262.
Blair:
Robert, secretary; I. 455.
—— charges against; I. 469.
Blaithwait, W., of the War Office; III. 33.
Blake:
Nicholas, merchant, mayor of Plymouth; I. 231.
—— letters from; I. 233, 237, 270.
Robert, gentleman of the chamber, English agent at Morocco, letter of credence for; II. 202.
—— letter from; II. 236.
Bland, John; I. 299.
Blandford, bailiffs and burgesses of, petition refused; I. 197.
Blanet; I. 290.
Blankenbergh; I. 470.
Blasquets, the; I. 226.
Blaye; I. 467.
Blayney, Lord [Edward]; III. 154.
Bleakley, Bucks [Bletchley]; I. 103.
Bleith, Geoffrey, bishop of Coventry and Lichfield; I. 39.
Blencoe, Sir Henry; III. 152.
Blenheim, Oxon; III. 71.
the victory at, the news conveyed in eight days; III. 39.
—— particulars of prisoners taken; III. 40.
—— list of killed and wounded; III. 41.
—— reference to; III. 51.
Blessing, the ship, of Burntisland; I. 204, 226.
Blithfield, letter dated; II. 376.
Block, Captain; I. 235.
Blockley; III. 102.
letter dated; III. 104.
Blois; II. 399.
Blood, William, of the Lees, Dalbury; I. 66.
Bloom Pot, the ship, of Rotterdam; I. 218, 223, 232, 239.
Blount, Blunt:
Charles, Lord Mountjoy, Earl of Devon, Lord Deputy of Ireland (1600); I. 27, 45.
Mary; I. 473.
Mountjoy, Earl of Newport, Master of the Ordnance; I. 413; II. 41, 69, 194, 221, 222.
—— letter from; II. 194.
—— memorial of; II. 207.
Sir Thomas Pope; I. 127.
Bludder:
Sir Thomas, J.P. for Surrey; I. 220.
—— petition of; II. 37.
Blue Dove, the ship; I. 239.
Blunden, Sir George; I. 248.
Blyeth, William, saltpetre maker, petition of, I. 176.
Blyth, river; II. 89.
Blythman, John, mayor of Plymouth (1590); I. 13.

Boat :
Mr.; I. 176, 204, 355, 412.
Augustine; I. 412, 431.
Edward, letters from; I. 138, 149, 163, 178, 188, 385, 432.
—— naval accounts and estimates by; I. 132, 388.
Bochochecho; III. 99.
Bodley, Sir Josias, captain; I. 27, 466.
Bodman, Thomas; I. 152.
Bodvell Dame Elizabeth, widow, petition; III. 150.
Boffom Ness; II. 134.
Bogan, Richard, letters from; I. 418, 458, 459–465, 471, 474, 475, 484.
Bogans, Mr., merchant of Rouen; I. 331; II. 76.
Bohemia; II. 100, 287.
Fredk., Elector Palatine, King of; I. 108, 113, 257, 380, 408, 458; II. 96, 189, 238.
—— excluded by the Diet; I. 172.
—— references to the death of; I. 486; II. 2.
—— ambassador's charges for condoling his death; II. 9.
—— ambassador from; I. 107.
King and Queen of, new year's gifts to; I. 424.
—— legacy for the recovery of the country of; I. 467.
—— sponsors for James, Duke of York, afterwards James II.; II. 37.
Elizabeth, Queen of; I. 161, 206; II. 13, 14, 20, 26, 97–99, 101, 105, 128, 148, 195, 238, 241.
—— letters from; II. 2, 75, 85.
—— letter to; II. 2.
—— order by Charles I. for the payment of her debts; I. 340.
—— entertainment of; I. 487.
—— her son Henry Frederick elected Prince Elector II.; 7, 8.
—— her daughter; II. 118.
—— moneys owing to; III. 145.
Boisgandrie, le Chevalier de, letter from; I. 401.
Bois le Duc; I. 44, 388; III. 36.
bishop of; II. 237.
letters dated; III. 33, 59.
siege of; I. 386.
Boislorée, —, petition of; I. 185.
Bold, William, of Gosport; III. 158.
Bolekerarre; II. 156.
Bolelin; II. 132.
Boleneconbegg; II. 156.
Bolenenalge; II. 156.
Bolenestavoy; II. 156.
Bolincas; II. 132.
Bolingbroke bailiwick, Lincolnshire; I. 171.
Boller, Captain; I. 429.
Bolles :
Charles and Richard; I. 6.
Sir John, M.P. for Lincoln; II. 428.
Bollyballygooch; II. 156.
Bolsover; II. 446.
letters dated; I. 443, 444.
Bolton :
Captain; I. 309, 312.
Duke of (1701); II. 432.
—— letter from; III. 185.
E., letters from; II. 1, 65.
Richard, letter from; I. 328.
Sir Richard; I. 106.
——, Lord Chief Baron and Attorney of the Court of Wards, Ireland; I. 306.
——, Lord Chancellor of Ireland; II. 275.
Bonadventure, the ship; I. 13, 17, 37, 116, 146, 147, 167, 173, 186, 192, 238, 248, 249, 265, 300, 332, 436, 440, 485; II. 40, 139.
letters dated from; I. 287, 434, 437; II. 6, 50.
Bonavolia, the ship; I. 13.
Bond :
A., letter from; I. 308.
Captain, of Portland Castle; I. 169.
Sir Henry; II. 435.
Jo., letter from; I. 329.
Lambert; I. 175.
Richard, his agreement with Charles I.; I. 359.
Bondclift, Mr.; III. 97.
Bonef; III. 26.
Bonnington :
—, cousin of Sir Francis Coke; I. 34, 54, 56, 153, 181, 416.
——, sues for a protection; I. 154.
Dorothy, letter from; II. 184.
Peter, son of the last named; II. 184.
Ralph, letters from; I. 36, 119, 307.
William; I. 27.
——, letters from; I. 22, 26, 35, 44.
Bonsall; II. 442.
Bontheller, M.; Finance Minister of France; II. 333.
Bonython, Captain John; I. 240.
——, letters from; I. 215, 235, 264, 265, 278, 279.
Books :
"Aristotle" (printed by Stevens); III. 132. Cicero; III. 116.
"Cicero: Pro Archia"; III. 132.
"Cavarrutra's Spanish Dictionary"; II. 358.
"Deodati's Italian Bible"; II. 337.
Dr. C. Davenant's "Resumption of Grants"; II. 419.
"Euclid" in Greek and Latin; I. 18.
"Grotius: Notes upon the Evangelists"; II. 307.
"Grotius: In Novum Testamentum"; II. 308.
"Heinsius: Exercitationes Sacræ"; II. 307.
"King of France's Medals"; III. 120.
"Lloyd's (Bishop of Worcester): Chronological Tables"; III. 109.
"Mare Liberum"; II. 113.
"Mariana's History of Spain"; II. 358.

Books—cont.
"Mead's Apostasy of the Latter Times"; II. 307, 308.
"Morton (Bishop of Durham): The Popish Doctrine of Merit"; II. 156, 160.
"Peter du Moulin's Buckler of Faith" I. 411.
"Ortelius"; III. 109.
"Practice of Piety"; I. 108.
"Prynne's Histrio-mastix"; III. 149.
"Book of Common Prayer"; II. 14, 206, 214.
"Officium Beatæ Virginis Mariæ"; II. 216.
"Selden's Works"; II. 90.
"Stow's Survey of London"; II. 38.
"Sion's Gospel Morality"; III. 157.
"Sleidan's Chronicles"; I. 284.
"Index Expurgatorius"; II. 263.
"Tacitus: Annals"; II. 66.
"Tasso" (Louvre and Genoa edition); III. 81.
"Filli de Sciro" (Ferrara edition); III. 81.
"Usher's Answer to a Jesuit in Ireland"; I. 411.
"Vasari"; III. 166.
"Wonders of the Peak"; II. 358.
"Wotton's Reflections on Ancient and Modern Learning"; III. 65.
"Zanchius' Works"; II. 337.
prices of, at Cambridge in 1626; I. 284.
Boone, Henry, surgeon of London, examination of; I. 389.
Booth:
Mr.; II. 454.
Lady; I. 119, 416.
Charles of Rane; I. 5.
George; II. 448.
Sir George, letters from; II. 6, 7.
Henry; II. 84.
——, of Calais; I. 299.
Robert, letters from; I. 12, 30, 396.
Thomas; I. 3.
Boothby:
Mr.; III. 90, 96, 98, 164.
Henry; III. 56, 59.
——, letters from; III. 177, 178.
Sir William; II. 425.
—— letters from; II. 420.
—— Brooke, his son; II. 425; III. 14.
Boraston, John, clerk; II. 213.
Bordeaux; I. 336, 356.
letters dated; II. 398; III. 121.
English ships arrested at; I. 260, 300.
ships intercepted by Dunkirkers; I. 236.
Borders, the Scottish, defence of; I. 7.
Bordman, Geoffrey; II. 331.
Borough:
Sir John; II. 210.
W.; I. 15, 19.
Borough—cont.
Walter, alderman of Exeter, letter from; I. 276.
Boroughbridge; II. 354, 435.
Borrett, Anthony; II. 185.
Borsville, Sir Daniel, letter from; I. 326.
Borthwick, Serjeant-major; I. 420.
Boscawen:
Mr.; III. 107, 116.
marriage of, to Charlotte Godfrey (1700); II. 403.
Bosch, letter dated; III. 67.
Bosden, Mr., of the Middle Temple; III. 143.
Bosc, —; I. 336.
Boston; I. 10, 11.
powder and match to be provided by (1598); I. 21.
transport of calfskins from; I. 199.
sewers, commission of, for the fens near; II. 68.
R., Lord Chief Baron of Ireland, letter from; I. 451.
Richard, letter from; I. 433.
Boswell:
Mr.; I. 120, 239, 395, 435, 454, 469.
Sir David, accused of embezzling a ship; I. 316, 317.
William, afterwards Sir William, ambassador at the Hague; II. 13, 14, 15, 23, 26, 28, 34, 44, 49, 75, 82, 85, 86, 98, 103, 105, 135, 142, 150, 168, 195, 241, 329, 330.
—— letters from; I. 96, 149, 268, 391, 406, 434; II. 2.
—— letter to; II. 249.
—— knighthood bestowed on; II. 20.
—— memorial of; III. 149.
Botburrigh, letter dated; II. 195.
Bothmar, Baron; III. 111, 113, 187.
Bott, Thomas, mayor of Derby, letter from; III. 69.
Bottier, M., letter from; I. 343.
Bottomley, Mrs.; I. 323.
Bouchain; I. 471.
Boughton:
Mr.; I. 123, 124, 131, 374; II. 127, 200, 208.
Stephen, letter from; I. 128.
Bouillon, Bullin:
M., leader of the Religion in France (1596); I. 18.
J., letter from; II. 249.
Duke de, General of the French horse; II. 63, 99, 118, 287, 288.
Cardinal, hopes to be made Pope; II. 399.
Bould:
Mr., rector of Bredsall, death of; II. 425.
W.; III. 138.
Boulogne; I. 200, 458; II. 127.
Duke of Buckingham at (1625); I. 196.
Queen Henrietta Maria at (1625); I. 197.
Bourbon, his body to be seen at the Castle (Naples) (1614); I. 83.

Bourbonnais, the French King's brother in (1632); I. 465.
Bourchier:
Edward, Earl of Bath (1633); II. 26.
—— his answer to a proposal for his second marriage; II. 14.
letter from; II. 15.
Henry, Earl of Bath (1636–1654); II. 324.
—— friendly to the bishops; II. 274.
J., patentee for alum making; I. 84.
Sir John; II. 23.
Richard, letter from; II. 72.
Bourg, Sir Thomas; I. 27.
Bourguel, letter dated; II. 100.
Bourke:
Mr.; I. 277; II. 64, 254.
lands of; II. 46.
John; I. 434, 436; II. 116.
Lord of Brittas; I. 436; II. 116.
Theobald, baron of Castle Connell; I. 45.
Walter, of Turlogh, petition of; III. 151.
Bourne:
Lincolnshire, powder and match to be provided by (1598); I. 21.
Mr., minister of Ashover; II. 306.
Edward; III. 138, 140.
Gilbert, bishop of Bath and Wells (1554–1560); I. 39.
John; I. 296.
Richard; III. 138.
Bourton-on-the-Hill, letter dated; I. 476.
Boutillier, "garde sceau," of France (1630); I. 400.
Bowden Chapel le Frith; II. 150.
Bower:
Mr.; III. 1.
Sir John; II. 17.
Dr.; III. 55.
Bowles, Dr.; I. 127.
Bownest, Thomas; I. 299.
——, letter from; II. 135.
Bowser, Sir John; II. 318.
Bowstead, Sir William, on purveyance; I. 74.
Bowwood; I. 294.
Bowyer:
E.; I. 213.
George, receipt by; I. 94.
Robert, certifies extract from the Patent Rolls; I. 55.
W.; I. 169.
Boy, Serjeant, his assignment for sweet wines for Charles I.; I. 293.
Boyle:
Charles, M.P. for Huntington (1700); II. 415.
H., letter from; III. 80.
Richard, Earl of Cork; 434, 437; II. 106, 205, 288, 290.
—— letters from; I. 398, 424, 428, 436, 452, 454, 455, 457, 459, 482; II. 1, 4.
—— letter to; I. 408.
Boylenrush; II. 156.
Boyne, the; III. 190.
Boynton:
Colonel; II. 342.
Sir M., to be excused service as sheriff of York; I. 286.
Boys:
Edward, justice of the peace, Kent; I. 274.
Robert, petition signed by; I. 128.
Brabant; II. 276; III. 77.
George, letter from; II. 28.
Bracy, Mr.; II. 78.
Bradbury, Mr.; II. 445.
Bradford:
Mr., apothecary in the Old Bailey, London; II. 358.
upholsterer in the Strand; I. 326.
Lord. See Newport, Francis.
Earl of (1716); III. 117.
Slater; II. 346, 353.
Bradgate, letter dated; II. 111.
Bradimand, Thomas, a Gatehouse prisoner; I. 319.
Bradley:
Caistor sessions; I. 4.
Mr.; II. 410.
Bradshaw:
Mr.; I. 308; III. 97.
Henry; III. 5.
Bradstock, William, conductor of Berkshire recruits; I. 301.
Braems:
Arnold; II. 141.
—— letter from; I. 453.
Jacob, Customer of Dover, letter from; II. 141.
—— letter to; II. 125.
—— declaration by; II. 142.
Braiden Forest; I. 294.
Brailsford, James, letter from; II. 442.
Bramam:
Mr., serjeant of Pomfret, stabbing of; I. 443.
—— his widow and children; I. 445.
Bramber rape; I. 213.
Bramcote; II. 447; III. 78.
letters dated; II. 382, 383, 407, 417, 420; III. 51, 57, 69.
Bramhall, John, bishop of Derry (March 1641); II. 275.
Bramle, near Chudleigh, letter dated; I. 249.
Brampton:
letter dated; III. 13, 51.
Moor, letter dated; III. 11.
Bramshill, the Court at; I. 410.
Bramston:
Mr.; II. 225.
John; I. 418.
Chief Justice; I. 270, 330.
Brancepeth, Brantspith:
Durham; I. 294, 301, 337, 338; II. 128.
manor; II. 16.
park; II. 9.
—— disparking of (1628); II. 28.
Brand, J., brewer of Tothill Street; I. 200.

Brandenburg; I. 257, 395; II. 207.
Elector of (1630); I. 408.
—— turns Lutheran; I. 311.
Electress of, at Loo (1700); II. 404.
Marquis of (1634); II. 59, 123.
Brandling, Mr., of Alnwick Abbey, petition of; II. 21.
Brandon manor, Suffolk; I. 103.
Brant, Richard; I. 296.
Branthwaite, Mr., of Emanuel College, Cambridge; I. 19, 437, 438; II. 103.
Brassington, Derbyshire; I. 450; II. 451.
Bratoft, Horncastle sessions; I. 5.
Braunske; II. 195.
Braxted, letter dated; I. 396.
Bray:
co. Berks, letter dated; II. 182.
Mr.; II. 176.
Brazil; I. 16, 256, 409; II. 165, 207. overthrow of Dutch in; I. 110.
ships of, taken by the English; I. 299.
Brearcliffe, John; II. 243.
Breaston, Derbyshire; II. 451.
Breda; II. 65, 66, 161, 164, 377, 388, 402; III. 60.
taking of; II. 168.
William III. at; II. 390, 432.
letter dated; III. 51.
Bredeman, Captain Thomas, letter from; I. 296.
Bredgate, Captain Matthew; I. 36.
Bredsall, presentation to the rectory of, disputed (1701); II. 425.
Breedon, disorders at; II. 255.
Brelsford; II. 417.
Bremble, letter dated; I. 251.
Bremen; II. 207.
Bremond:
M. James, le Prieur de, almoner of the Court of Soissons; I. 378.
—— letters from; I. 358, 365, 372.
—— letters to; I. 330, 332, 343.
—— information against; I. 379.
Brend, Sir Matthew, petition of; I. 185.
Brent:
Mr.; II. 302.
Sir Nathaniel, vicar general of the Archbishop of Canterbury; II. 75, 82, 123.
Brenta, the river; III. 128.
Brentford; I. 419; II. 320; III. 185.
letter dated; I. 484.
conflict between Prince Rupert and the Parliament forces at; II. 325, 326.
Brenz; III. 42.
Brereton:
John, letter from; I. 275.
Sir William; II. 118, 306.
—— letters from; II. 6, 153, 174.
—— his victory at Nantwich; II. 341.
Brest; I. 35, 260, 319; III. 45.
French preparations at, for invading England (1639); II. 215.
Bretby manor or park; I. 312; II. 373, 375–80, 390, 402, 420, 427; III. 13, 73, 165, 167.
letters dated; II. 399, 402, 406; III. 7, 9, 17, 25, 26, 72, 80.
Brett:
Mr.; II. 158.
Lieutenant-Colonel; I. 429.
—— petition of; II. 37.
Richard; II. 353.
Brickhill, Bucks, Sir Robert Lovell's estate at; II. 283, 335.
Brickman, Mr.; III. 114.
Bridewell, master of the; I. 115.
Bridge House; I. 374.
Bridgeman, Brydgeman:
Mr.; I. 184; II. 294.
Mr. Serjeant, to be judge of the Marches; I. 236, 239.
Sir John, Chief Justice of Chester; II. 51; III. 152, 153.
—— certificates of; I. 425, 426.
—— letters from; I. 452; II. 73, 76.
John, bishop of Chester; II. 15, 274.
—— letters from; I. 401; II. 77, 80.
Thomas, letter from; I. 190.
Bridgenorth, fortified by Charles I.; II. 322, 324.
Bridges, Brydges:
Mr.; II. 406, 427, 437; III. 13, 14, 36, 41, 168.
Sir Giles; I. 429.
J., letters from; II. 398, 400, 410, 413, 424, 433, 434, 437; III. 72.
James; III. 32, 35, 38, 42, 45, 48.
—— Earl of Carnarvon (1716), letter from; III. 114.
Bridgewater; I. 192.
Bridiman, Serjeant-major; II. 240.
Brigg, powder and match to be provided by (1598); I. 22.
Briggs, Daniel; I. 27, 28.
Brignola, Ferdinand de; I. 183.
Bright, Mr.; I. 30, 385.
Brightman, John; II. 348.
Brill, the; I. 36, 46; II. 191.
letters dated; I. 22, 34, 35, 43–45, 56, 57.
landing of the Duke of Buckingham at (1625); I. 233.
Brindswood or Brindgewood forest, Herefordshire; I. 294, 464.
Brinker, Sir William, petition of; I. 185.
Brisselcote; I. 227.
Bristol; I. 160, 332, 452, 454, 459; II. 12, 46, 70, 106, 117, 328. bishop of (1626), Robert Wright; I. 271. See also Coke, George.
—— (1716) George Smallridge; III. 116.
Castle, Sir John Coke's report on; I. 129.

Bristol—cont.
city and county of; I. 164: II. 74.
—— mayor and aldermen of, letter from; I. 274.
—— licence in mortmain for; I. 199.
—— meet Bishop Coke; II. 29.
Dean and Chapter of, congé d'élire for; I. 480.
—— letter to; II. 167.
Earl of. See Digby, John.
Lord (1624); I. 163.
merchants; III. 152.
port of; I. 334.
plot of Prince Rupert against (1643); I. 331, 333.
letters dated; I. 332; II. 28, 35, 38, 74, 77, 78, 81–83, 86, 89, 102, 105, 107, 147.
Bristowe, Ellis; I. 167.
Brittany; I. 25, 277.
Brittas, co. Limerick: castle and manor of; I. 436; II. 116.
Lord of; I. 442.
Broadgate, Thomas; I. 296.
Brodgate; II. 396.
Brockett, Herts; I. 406.
Elizabeth; I. 406.
Brodyn, Gilbert, seminary priest, examination of; I. 393.
Broile Forest, Sussex; I. 294.
Bromaat, Juan, letter from; I. 470.
Bromley:
Mr.; II. 437; III. 15, 52, 57, 161.
J., letters from; III. 13, 14.
Baron; I. 171.
Sir George, vice-president of the Welsh Marches; I. 39.
Bromont Hall, Essex; I. 103.
Brompton Park; II. 435; III. 74, 119.
letter dated; III. 179.
Bromriche, Dr.; II. 274.
Bromsbarrow, letter dated; I. 67.
Broodhouse, Mr., gaoler of Derby; III. 162.
Brooke:
Sir Basil, of Shropshire; I. 228.
Francis; I. 369.
—— letters from; I. 474; II. 6, 40, 42, 46.
House, Holborn; I. 391.
—— letters dated; I. 120, 370.
Lord (1639); II. 224.
—— (1716); III. 117.
Mr.; I. 167, 226, 344, 428; II. 64, 69, 84.
—— cousin of W. Burdett; II. 397.
Matthew, of Portsmouth Dock; I. 149, 358.
—— letters from; I. 129, 134, 137, 151, 152, 156, 157, 165, 181, 189, 218, 267, 280, 301, 329, 366, 367.
—— illness of; I. 370.
Sir Richard; III. 12.
Samuel, Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, letter from; I. 403.
Tom; III. 57.
Brookes, Brooks:
Mr.; I. 231; II. 40.
John, clerk of the cheque; III. 155.
Brookhill; I. 413, 414.
Brookhouse:
Alderman; III. 2.
Thomas; III. 23.
William, letter from; III. 4.
Brookhousen; II. 379.
Brooksby:
letter dated; II. 62.
Villiers; II. 348, 349, 353.
Brotherton:
M.P. for Newton, Lancashire, death of; II. 420, 421.
—— his house in Chancery Lane; II. 422.
Broughton:
Leicestershire; I. 103.
Mr.; I. 474; II. 232.
—— collector of excise in Cornwall; III. 107.
John, letter from; II. 5, 51, 231.
Sir John, letter from; II. 157.
Brown, Browne:
Captain, chases and takes a Flemish ship; I. 157, 160.
Colonel; III. 115.
—— a woodmonger of Fleet Street, Parliamentary commander; II. 327.
Mr.; I. 116, 285, 416; II. 74, 103; III. 111, 174.
—— cousin of Mrs. Mary Coke (1623); I. 130.
—— of Wirkesworth, death of (1705); III. 58.
Agnes, petition of; I. 185.
Sir Anthony, Clerk in the Court; I. 194.
Edmund, of Rotterdam; II. 363.
Francis; II. 113.
—— Viscount Montagu; II. 48.
John, ordnance founder to James I.; I. 126; II. 46; III. 149.
Sir John; I. 305.
Margaret (née Cecil), letters from; III. 129, 130.
Robert (married to Margaret Cecil); III. 125–128.
—— letter from; III. 127.
Richard, servant of Sir J. Wake; I. 463.
Thomas; I. 388.
Valentine, of Croft; I. 5.
William; II. 396; III. 95, 96, 98.
—— letter from; III. 178.
—— letter to; III. 122.
—— of Stretton; II. 424.
Broxbourne; I. 116.
letter dated; I. 210.
Broxholme, Thomas; I. 7.
Broxton hundred; I. 477; II. 346.
Bruce:
Mrs.; I. 210.
Sir Henry; II. 230, 233.
Brueghel, Hell, picture by; III. 113.
Bruges; II. 71, 92.
letter dated; II. 168.
Brumby, Lincolnshire, lordship of; II. 115.

Bruneau, Jacques, Secretary of State for the Low Countries; I. 239.
Brunswick; II. 207.
Duke of (1625); I. 189.
dukedom of; I. 333, 336.
Duchess of (1636); II. 108.
Brussels; I. 308, 322, 388, 393, 438, 457, 461, 465, 475, 478; II. 63, 120, 168, 232, 237, 251, 288; III. 63, 154.
letters dated; I. 94, 97; II. 88, 370, 425; III. 113.
nunnery at; I. 407.
city of, banquets Marquis Spinola; I. 336.
tumult in; I. 463.
Buchan, Lord. See Erskine, James.
Buck:
Mr.; I. 39, 41, 180, 204.
—— senior bedel of Cambridge University; I. 479.
Peter; I. 32, 34, 41, 42.
—— letters from; I. 192, 240, 264.
Thomas and John, printers to Cambridge University; I. 382.
William; III. 138.
Buckbury, Anthony, postmaster of the Court (1625); II. 244.
Buckden, letter dated; I. 329; II. 85, 152, 153.
Buckholt:
Forest; I. 419.
Mr., yeoman of the robes to Prince George of Denmark; III. 110.
Buckhurst, Lord. See Sackville, Edward.
Buckingham:
Duke of. See Villiers, George.
archdeacon of. See Newell, Robt.
colour, the fashion in cloth (1623); I. 131.
House, letters dated from; I. 360, 361.
shire; II. 4.
—— address of, to Parliament (1700); II. 403.
Buckland manor, co. Berks; I. 40.
Bucklebury; III. 39, 46, 49, 65, 71, 104, 109.
letters dated; III. 62, 63, 103.
Buckminster; II. 78, 181, 251, 254, 343.
letters dated; II. 116, 165, 170, 259, 276.
Bucknall, —; II. 57.
Bucquoy, operations of; I. 63.
Budd; I. 55.
Buglio of Venice; II. 203.
Bulstrode, Henry, note by; I. 126.
Bull:
Mr., chanter of Hereford Cathedral; II. 200.
Francis, petition of; I. 185.
the ship, of Amsterdam; II. 89.
Bullingham, John, bishop of Gloucester (1584); I. 40.
Bullion, Peter; I. 308.
Bullock:
Mr., inventor and builder of Dungeness Light; I. 111.
Bullock—cont.
case of; I. 148.
Hugh, letter from; I. 154.
—— Captain of the White Hart, relation of; I. 232.
John; II. 27.
Bullyn, William, conveys a prebend to Henry VIII.; II. 79.
Bulmer, —, of Newcastle; II. 63.
Burchet, Mr. Secretary, letter to; III. 81.
Burdett:
Mr.; II. 249, 336; III. 102.
Mrs.; II. 372; III. 97.
Mr., of the Three Crowns, Fleet Street; II. 343.
Mr., of Warwickshire; III. 132.
Lady; I. 412; II. 373.
—— death and burial of; II. 424.
Dorothy; II. 396, 402; III. 11.
Sir Francis; III. 158.
—— (1697) death of; II. 368.
Francis, letter from; III. 24.
Harry; II. 447; III. 167.
Mary, death and burial of; II. 424.
John; II. 385–388, 441, 448; III. 11, 78, 86, 89, 90, 92, 170, 171.
—— letters from; II. 384, 395, 454.
—— marriage of (1706); III. 70.
—— of Donisthorp; III. 85.
Robert; II. 361, 363, 364.
—— of Foremarke; II. 447; III. 11, 29, 89, 93.
Sir Robert; II. 368, 383, 385, 447; III. 24, 96.
—— hurt by a fall from his horse; III. 83.
—— M.P., letters from; II. 382, 383, 386, 387, 396, 407, 417, 420; III. 51, 67, 69.
Sir Thomas, of Bisley; I. 446, 450; II. 27, 257, 310, 331.
W.; III. 2.
Walter; II. 390, 392–394, 396, 441, 447, 448; III. 1, 11, 17, 83, 87, 92, 95, 96, 99, 164, 171, 173.
—— letters from; II. 346, 382, 385, 397, 401, 419, 442; III. 3, 18, 37, 54, 76. family of Foremark; III. 89.
family of Knolehill; III. 89.
Burduse fleet; I. 482.
Burett, James, of Acon; III. 148.
Burges, Burgess:
Mr.; I. 274.
Dr., examination of; II. 272.
William, son of an alderman of Hull; I. 128.
William, letter from; I. 424.
Burgh, Sir John, letters from; I. 307.
Burgh, Richard de, Earl of Clanricarde, letter from; I. 306.
Burghill, Dr.; II. 198, 199.
Burghley, Lord. See Cecil, William.
Burleigh; II. 435.
letter dated; II. 401.
Captain John, admiral of the Narrow Seas; I. 210, 287.
—— letter from; I. 190, 203.

Burgundy, Duke of, commander of the French in Flanders (1701); II. 429.
Burhampoor; I. 448.
Burke, W., brewer of Queenhithe; I. 200. See also Bourke.
Burlacy, Sir John; I. 424.
Burlamachi:
Gerard; II. 88.
Philip; I. 78, 89, 113, 203, 214, 237, 241, 255, 271, 300, 340, 356, 421, 424, 448, 460, 462, 463, 478, 484; II. 10, 28, 70, 88, 126, 128, 129, 131, 262; III. 145.
—— letters from; I. 190, 201, 202, 250, 288, 298, 303, 304, 323, 342, 345, 348, 358, 369, 372, 383, 384, 386, 408, 429; II. 34, 35, 37, 44, 143, 154, 167, 175, 186, 190, 244.
—— letters to; I. 332, 460.
—— seizure of his goods; I. 136.
—— bargain made with; I. 299.
—— treated with for soldiers' pay; I. 311.
—— —— for victualling Rochelle;
—— broken in credit; II. 8.
Burley:
—, pirate; I. 186.
Captain Barnaby, admiral; I. 316.
Burlings; I. 215.
Burlington; I. 253.
Burnes, Edward; III. 138.
Burnet:
Mr.; III. 189.
William, merchant; I. 482.
Burnham, Norfolk; I. 275.
Burntisland; I. 226.
Burrell:
Mr., the elder, death from fever; I. 411.
Andrewes; I. 130.
Robert; III. 116.
S., son of William; I. 115.
William, Master of the Shipwright's Company, letter from; I. 111.
—— Navy Commissioner; I. 114, 130, 180, 187, 188, 193, 204, 205, 213, 234, 240, 304, 320, 322, 401, 404, 412, 429, 445; II. 1, 125, 147.
—— his life threatened; I. 106.
—— complaints against; I. 119, 149, 161, 166, 176.
—— plan for two new ships; I. 167.
—— letters from; I. 115, 148, 177, 184, 189, 192, 207, 208, 211, 214, 219, 229, 231, 263, 275, 277, 278, 317, 328, 330, 333, 404, 406; III. 155.
—— letters to; I. 167, 210, 219.
Burrington, Sir Thomas; II. 314.
Burroughs, Burrows:
Mr.; I. 18, 23; II. 12, 18, 66; III. 17.
—— of the Exchequer Office; II. 256.
Sir John; I. 203, 295.
—— herald (1639); II. 247.
Lady; I. 164.
Burslem Slade; I. 145.
Burton; II. 374–376, 381, 423, 442, 450; III. 86, 167, 171.
Arthur, his patent for saltpetre; I. 148.
Francis, of Weston; III. 66.
Godfrey; III. 66.
Michael; III. 65.
—— letters from; II. 457; III. 20, 22, 29, 50, 57, 70, 75.
—— letter to; III. 31.
Thomas; I. 431.
—— letters from; III. 14, 15, 18, 24, 31, 36.
Captain Thomas, killed at Blenheim; III. 40.
Fleming, Yorkshire; I. 103.
Burwell, Thomas, letter of; II. 128.
Bury:
St. Edmunds, liberty of; I. 182, 184.
Mr.; I. 290; II. 163.
—— cousin of Mary Hartopp; II. 343.
Thomas, letters from; I. 416; II. 52, 56.
Bush:
Mr.; I. 30.
John; I. 2.
Busher, John, commissioner for passage, Margate; II. 161.
Busse, the, the besieged of; I. 391.
Bussy:
Mr.; I. 56, 64, 159, 392; III. 132.
Charles, tenant of Sir F. Grevill; I. 84, 392.
—— letter from; I. 205.
Francis, brother-in-law of Sir John Coke, letters from; I. 29, 84.
Margaret, his wife, letters from; I. 82, 150, 202.
Busslyn, Philip; I. 382.
Bute, Earl of (1716); III. 117.
Butler:
Lord (1637); II. 170.
Mr.; II. 371.
family of, a monk of the; I. 387.
George, letters from; II. 205, 208.
Abraham, letter from; III. 3.
James; III. 104. See also Wiltshire.
—— Earl, afterwards Marquess of Ormonde (1688–1715); II. 233, 413; III. 17, 20, 32.
—— —— letter from; II. 108.
John; III. 105.
Sir John, death at Tunbridge Wells; II. 61.
Thomas, Duke of Ormonde; III. 70, 100, 103.
Sir Thomas; II. 108.
Lord Ormonde (1624); I. 164, 387.
Lord Cahir (1631); I. 436.
Lady; II. 98.
Nathaniel, stationer, letter from; I. 312.
Butt, Dr. Henry, Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge University, letters from; I. 427, 449.

Button:
Mr.; I. 479.
Captain; I. 52.
Sir Thomas; admiral on the Irish coast; I. 192, 422, 452, 454.
—— annuities to; I. 99.
—— letters from; I. 160, 206, 220, 233.
—— letter to; I. 226.
—— instructions for; I. 334.
—— his unreasonable gains in victuals; I. 138.
—— death of; II. 53.
Buttons, manufacture of, at Sheffield and Macclesfield; III. 51.
Buxton; II. 346; III. 168.
Edward, of Lime Street; II. 84, 103.
Samuel; II. 353.
Bygrave. See Bagrave.
Byrne, Edward; II. 180.
Byron:
Sir John, knighted at Warsop (1603); I. 43.
—— sent to the Tower; II. 305.
—— commands for the King; II. 319, 341.
Lord (1699); II. 391.

C.

Cabot, Sebastian, discovery of America by; I. 377.
Cabu, Rory og ill; I. 367.
Cademan, Dr.; II. 11.
Cadiz; I. 165, 216, 217, 232, 411, 427; II. 248.
Bay, letter dated; I. 419.
the expedition of 1626 to; I. 230, 295, 397.
—— Hugh Bullock's journals of; I. 232.
—— Captain Levet's journals of; I. 242-245.
—— news of, brought to Charles I. at Theobalds; I. 235, 238.
—— notes on the failure of; I. 241, 242.
the expedition of 1702 under the Duke of Ormonde, failure of; III. 17.
trade of Flemish merchants with; I. 236.
Cadogan:
Colonel; III. 30, 37, 41.
Mrs., Bill for her naturalization; III. 56.
Cæsar:
Sir Julius, Master of the Rolls; I. 140, 310, 464.
Thomas, clock-keeper to Charles I.; I. 195, 199.
—— petition of; I. 197.
Cahir, Lord of (1636); II. 116. See also Butler.
Cain and Abel; I. 372.
Caistor:
powder and match to be provided by (1598); I. 22.
sessions, musters within; I. 4.
Caivani, Duke, secretary of Philip IV. of Spain, letter from; II. 113.
Calais; I. 200, 249, 285, 299, 311, 313, 316, 337, 378, 379, 402, 435, 458-460, 467; II. 33, 92, 117, 119, 128, 144, 145, 320.
letters dated; I. 309, 341, 387, 388, 461, 463; II. 6.
frigates of; II. 125.
governor of; I. 313.
—— letter to; II. 181.
Calcott, Thomas; I. 296.
Caldecott, Mr., woollen-draper of Salisbury Court, Fleet Street, letter to; III. 23.
Caldwell; II. 450, 451.
Calenborgst, J., Comte de; II. 109.
Calendrini, Julian; I. 255, 258, 380, 384; II. 34, 126, 129, 142, 143.
—— letter to; II. 190.
Calicoes, trade in; I. 155.
Calke; II. 257, 258, 282, 384, 386, 402, 407; III. 70, 94.
letter dated; II. 425.
Call, Giles, bailiff of Great Yarmouth, letter from; I. 480.
Callowe retaken (1638); II. 185.
Calveley:
Sir Richard, his patent for Chester imposts; I. 293.
Lady (1700); II. 395.
Calvert:
Sir George, made secretary vice Lake; I. 104, 130, 132, 133.
George, Lord Baltimore (1625-1628), letters from; I. 187, 214, 337.
Lady Baltimore, death of (January 1701); II. 416.
Calvin:
James, agent for the Scots (1641); II. 290.
John, the Reformer; I. 352.
Calvinists and Lutherans; I. 236: II. 13.
Cam, Mr. William; I. 124.
Camberwell, letters dated; II. 149, 158.
Cambray; I. 471.
Cambridge; I. 20, 44, 47, 209, 254; II. 109, 411.
letters dated; I. 12, 19, 47, 153, 177, 252, 260, 269, 270, 341, 456; III. 132.
St. Mary's, incident during sermon at (1632); I. 479.
bishops' visitation at; I. 468. election of Sir John Coke to represent (1625); I. 247, 252, 257. election of A. Hammond (1700); II. 415.
Sir John Coke's sons educated at; I. 149.
—— college expenses of; I. 191, 286.
spotted fever carries off Joseph Coke at; I. 158. and London, post charges between, (1611); I. 72.

Cambridge—cont.
University printers and the Stationers' Company, dispute between; I. 381.
—— doctor's degree taken by London divines; I. 352.
—— professorship for John Dorislaus; I. 370.
—— Vice-Chancellor of; I. 32.
—— —— letters from; I. 427, 449, 479.
—— colleges of, viz.:
Catherine Hall, letter dated; I. 34.
Christ's College; I. 111.
—— fellows, letter to; II. 9.
—— letters dated; I. 123; II. 32.
—— statutes of; I. 456; II. 45.
Corpus Christi College, letters dated; I. 427, 429.
Jesus College, fellowship of; I. 420.
—— mastership of; I. 453, 454.
King's College; I. 19, 115.
Pembroke Hall, letter dated; I. 29; III. 133, 134.
Peterhouse; I. 357.
—— letter dated; II. 156.
St. John's College; I. 18.
—— letters dated; II. 406; III. 134.
Trinity College; I. 15, 19, 148–150, 158, 286; II. 65.
—— letters dated; I. 23, 31, 37, 173, 214, 306, 393, 403, 430, 444.
—— excellent state of; I. 150.
—— fellows of; I. 20, 153.
—— master and seniors of; I. 185, 323.
—— —— recommend Parker as bedel (1625); I. 185.
—— and St. Johns, quarrel between; I. 404.
Trinity Hall, letters dated; I. 33, 37, 45; II. 100.
—— statute as to fellows being Norfolk or Suffolk men; II. 100.
shire; II. 157.
Cambury; I. 30. See also Canonbury.
letter dated; II. 163.
Camerarius, Mr., the Swedish Ambassador (1633); II. 13.
Camerton, Thomas; II. 181.
Campbell;
Archibald, Earl of Argyll; I. 319; II. 226, 227.
—— letters from; II. 159, 213, 225.
—— bill in the Exchequer chamber on behalf of; II. 106.
—— his appearance before the Council in Ireland; II. 233.
—— mystery concerning; II. 308.
John, of the Strand; III. 27.
—— Earl of Loudoun; II. 231, 308.
Cambden vicarage; I. 171.
Campden, letter dated; I. 149.
Campeachy ware; I. 252.
Camphier in Zealand, pink of; I. 253; II. 143.
Camphor supplied to His Majesty's ships for fireworks (1603); I. 37.
Camus, letter dated; II. 2.
Can, Mr.; III. 107.
Canada:
or New France; I. 374, 377, 409, 443.
Company, petition of; III. 155. trade with; II. 42.
Canaries, the; I. 299; II. 392.
wines from; I. 168.
Candal, Mr., J.P.; II. 348.
Canell, Hugh, Popish Primate of Ireland; I. 448.
Canner, Father Edmund; I. 402.
Cannock; I. 50.
churchyard; I. 28.
heath; II. 420.
rents; I. 28.
wood, grant of; I. 39.
Sir F. Greville's estate at; I. 69.
Cannon, Mr.; I. 188.
Canonbury, letters dated; I. 390, 391, 409, 430, 475; II. 20, 59, 195.
Canon Frome, letter dated; I. 72.
Canons, the, of the church, dispute about; II. 263, 267.
—— resolutions of the House of Commons touching (1640); II. 268.
Cantarini, M.; II. 186.
Canterbury; I. 32, 44, 238.
Archbishop of (1551); I. 1. See also Abbot, George; Laud, William.
—— (1588); I. 8.
—— (1716); III. 116.
alms room at; I. 148.
dean of (1603); I. 45, 46.
—— Dr. Bargrave, made vicar of Lydd; I. 326. justices of the peace assembled at; I. 274.
letters dated; I. 452, 460.
mayor and alderman of, claim deputy lieutenants of their own corporation; I. 148.
visit of Charles I., Queen Henrietta Maria, and Princess Mary to (1642); II. 306.
train band of; I. 212.
Cantrill, Mr.; III. 91.
—— of Newton; II. 449; III. 54.
Joseph; III. 173.
John, of Hartshorne; II. 450, 451; III. 17.
Cantwell, John; I. 387.
Cantyre; II. 233.
Cape Clear; I. 334.
Capel, Arthur Lord (1643); II. 339.
Cardenas, Don Alonzo de; II. 104.
Cardiff, bailiffs and aldermen of; II. 73.

Cardigan; I. 164. ship money rates in; II. 188.
Lord (1716); III. 116.
Cardinals, creation of eighteen (1609); I. 67.
Cardonel, Mr.; III. 40, 66.
A., letter from; III. 32.
Carew:
Sir George, his house in the Strand; I. 57.
George Lord, Master of the Ordnance; I. 176.
George, Earl of Totnes, letters from: I. 297, 383.
Carey, Cary:
Mr.; I. 416.
Mrs.; II. 12, 34. See also below (Dorothy).
Mr., parson; II. 14, 95.
—— of Clovelly; III. 106, 107.
Dorothy, sister of Secretary Coke, wife of Valentine, bishop of Exeter; I. 123, 285, 354, 356, 428, 430, 438.
—— letters from; I. 392; III. 154.
—— death and will of, account of; II. 45.
Sir Edmund, king's servant, petition of; I. 171.
Ernestus, his mésalliance; II. 34.
Henry, Viscount Falkland, Lord Deputy of Ireland; I. 361, 362, 427, 439; II. 4, 75, 266, 270, 295, 304, 316, 323; III. 154.
—— letters from; I. 277, 278, 328, 333, 341, 344, 367, 370–372, 379, 382, 387, 388, 390, 399, 403, 424, 449, 450; II. 30.
—— letters to; I. 342, 367, 405, 438.
—— commission to; I. 469.
—— his character described by Sir John Coke; I. 483.
—— his speech about Charles I. being abused; II. 267.
—— his debt to Alderman Gore; I. 270.
—— made a Privy Councillor (Jan. 1642); II. 302.
—— killed at Newbury; II. 337; III. 141.
Lady; II. 53.
Sir Lorenzo; II. 119.
Nathaniel; III. 107.
Peter, receiver of Guernsey; I. 312.
Sir Philip; II. 67.
Robert, Earl of Monmouth (1626–1639); II. 194.
Thomas, letter from; I. 311.
Valentine, of Christ's College, Cambridge; I. 110.
—— bishop of Exeter, letters from; I. 157, 177, 212, 249, 251.
William, letter from; I. 201.
—— Captain, of Topsham; I. 201.
Carignan; I. 410.
Carington; II. 339.
Carinthia; I. 380.
Carlton, letter dated; III. 78.
Carleton:
Mr., revenue commissioner in Dublin; III. 20.
Mr., afterwards Sir Dudley, Viscount Dorchester, ambassador at the Hague and in France; I. 250, 290, 304, 323, 327, 366, 379, 385, 392, 420, 421, 432, 443, 456; II. 2.
—— despatches, letters, &c. from; I. 254–256, 260, 390–391, 403, 406, 408–410, 417, 418, 432.
—— despatches, letters, &c. to; I. 255, 257, 262, 324, 398, 413, 421.
—— reported successor of Lord Conway as Secretary of State; I. 359.
Vice-Chamberlain of the Household; I. 364.
entertains Rubens; I. 387.
entertains Charles I., Queen Henrietta Maria, and Princess Mary; I. 414.
—— death of (1632); I. 463; II. 14, 94.
—— papers of; II. 139.
—— his ill will to Viscount Chaworth; II. 194.
Sir Dudley (1639), signatures of; II. 219, 252.
—— and Sir Francis Nethersole (1633); II. 3, 5.
Anne, Viscountess Dorchester, and Dr. Paul; I. 92, 237; II. 46.
—— letter from; II. 51.
Lord (1716); III. 116.
John; I. 406.
Sir Thomas; III. 152.
Carlingford, Earl of: See Taafe, Francis.
Lord, and Sir Francis Wortley, duel between; III. 154.
Carlingthwaite, letter dated; II. 35.
Carlisle; I. 155; II. 31, 219, 220, 229, 252; III. 156.
letters dated; I. 280; II. 222, 223, 241. bishop of. See White, Fras.; Potter, Barnabas; Smith, Thomas.
Lord (1624); I. 177. See also Howard, Charles.
Castle, letter dated; II. 233, 237.
Castle and town, survey ordered as to ordnance; II. 234.
gunners; II. 239.
Carlos, Don; I 395.
Carlow; II. 230.
Carmarden, Ensign; II. 157.
Carmarthen; I. 164; II. 73.
Richard, surveyor of customs; I. 35, 38.
Carnaby, Sir William; II. 89.
Carnarvon:
Earl of, his flight (1641); II. 283. See also Dormer, Robert.
—— (1704); III. 32, 117.
Lady; III. 58, 167.
shire; II. 196.
Carnation, the ship, letter dated; I. 367.
Carnefield, letter dated; II. 62.

Caron, Sir Noel, propositions of the Lord Admiral to; I. 134.
—— letter from; I. 137.
Carpenter:
Mr., servant to the Lord Deputy of Ireland (1633); II. 10.
Joseph, memorial of; III. 118.
Thomas, letter from; I. 356.
Carr:
Mr.; I. 428; II. 23.
Frances, Countess [of Essex and] of Somerset, marriage of; I. 87.
Robert, the younger; I. 11.
Sir Robert; I. 184; II. 11.
Robert, Earl of Somerset; I. 158; II. 15.
—— his marriage; I. 87.
—— his lands; I. 88.
—— appropriates the title of Mr. Neville; 88.
—— his feoffees; I. 184.
Dame Anna, letter from; II. 218.
Rochester, her son; II. 218.
Richard, letter from; II. 218.
Carrack:
the; I. 42, 43.
capture of; I. 36.
sale of; I. 38.
Carrfield; III. 12.
Carrick:
letter dated; II. 108.
Richard, letter from; I. 68.
Carrickfergus; II. 36, 237.
Charles I. refuses to put it into the Scots' hands; II. 304, 305.
Carrickroe; II. 132, 156.
Carrington, Mr., of Spoondon; II. 445.
Carroll, Sir James; II. 114.
Cartagena; I. 161; III. 99.
Carter:
Mr.; III. 6.
Francis, petition; I. 128.
Mr., of Leicester; II. 429, 430.
Paul; II. 353.
Thomas; III. 5.
Carteret, Cartwright:
Captain G.; II. 117, 146, 151, 398.
—— letter from; II. 119, 127.
Sir Philip; I. 263, 314, 317.
Captain, aide de camp of Lord Cutts; II. 433, 434.
Captain H., letters from; II. 414, 426, 427, 443.
Henry, of the Comptroll Office, letters from; III. 33–35, 57, 168.
John, letter from; II. 272.
—— of Teelbie; I. 4.
Carver, Mr., case of; II. 163.
Casaubon:
Isaac, letter from; I. 18.
—— widow of, and his pension of 300*l.*; I. 194.
Case, John; I. 296.
Cashel; II. 218.
Archbishop of, letter from; II, 2.
Casimir, Prince of Poland; II. 237, 238.
Cassal in Italy, governor of; I. 484.
Cassel; I. 410.
Casselton, Captain Timothy; II. 174.
Castile: expected revolt of; II. 276.
soap; I. 167.
and Leon, union of; I. 57.
Castillion, Francis, letter from; II. 94.
Castle:
Edward, mayor of Truro, letter from; I. 276.
Ashby; III. 179.
Connell; I. 400.
—— baron of. See Bourke, Theobald.
Donington; II. 309; III. 21.
Gresley, co. Derby; I. 227.
Haven, Earl of, his suit with Lord Cottington; II. 286.
Keven, manor of; II. 114, 124, 132, 156.
Rising; III. 13.
Castleton:
letter dated; III. 6, 162.
Lord (1716); III. 116.
Nathaniel; II. 401.
Castres; I. 363.
letter dated; II. 140.
Comte de; II. 140.
Caswell:
Sir John; I. 452, 456, 478.
—— order for examination of; I. 479.
Catalonia; II. 147; III. 64, 73, 177, 178, 275.
Catcher, Sir John; I. 270.
Catherine of Braganza, Queen of Charles II.; III. 75.
Catholics:
the, in England (1599); I. 25.
notices of; I. 407.
Catinal, M.; II. 430, 432.
Catt Down, accident in; II. 102, 103.
Cattegat, the; III. 121.
Catterstock parsonage, Dorset; II. 77.
Cattes; I. 312.
Cattewater, letter dated; I. 409.
Caulfield:
Lord; I. 450.
Sir Toby, his articles for training undertakers; I. 96.
Cavan county; II. 298.
Cave:
Lady (Susanna and Elizabeth); I. 269, 285.
George, English general; I. 17.
Sir Francis; I. 100.
R., letter from; I. 135.
Sir Richard; II. 185.
—— letter from; II. 179, 184, 189, 195, 238.
Thomas, Comptroller of Customs, Dublin, letter from; I. 386.
Cavendish:
Mr.; III. 98.
Mrs. III. 95.
Lord (1689), letter to; II. 351.
Augustine, of Orby; I. 5.

Cavendish—cont.
Christian, Countess Dowager of Devonshire (1634); II. 69, 70.
Elizabeth, Countess of Devonshire (1637); II. 164.
—— (1642); II. 254, 302.
Duchess of (1701); II. 416.
—— letter from; III. 10.
Grace, letter from; I. 100.
Henry; II. 358.
Lord James (1701–1705); II. 416, 418; III. 56, 81.
W., letter from; I. 92.
William, second earl of Devonshire, letter from; I. 325.
—— —— Bill of; I. 353.
—— third earl; II. 289, 320.
—— —— letters from; II. 228, 252, 259.
—— fourth earl, afterwards duke, of Devonshire; II. 345, 347, 350, 353, 355, 357, 415, 436, 444; III. 1, 12, 14, 15, 160, 176, 179.
—— —— letters to; II. 346, 347.
—— Marquess of Hartington (afterwards second duke); II. 397, 412, 413, 418, 432, 440, 442; III. 2, 5, 8, 11, 12, 14, 22, 27, 30.
—— —— letter from; II. 384.
—— —— his election for Derbyshire (1701); II. 444, 446, 451, 454.
—— second duke; III. 93.
William, Viscount Mansfield (afterwards Duke of Newcastle); II. 54, 61, 120, 153, 163, 221, 228, 285, 310, 327, 329, 330, 335, 339; III. 137.
—— —— letters from; I. 303, 325, 413, 415, 443, 444; II. 219.
—— —— letter to; II. 60.
—— —— his duel with the Earl of Holland (1639); II. 240.
—— —— appointed by Charles I. governor of Hull; II. 303.
—— —— marriage of his daughter; II. 290.
Cawfield regiment; III. 38.
Cawood Castle, letter dated; I. 283.
Cawsand Bay; I. 432.
pirates in; I. 135.
Cawse, Mr.; I. 222.
Cayley, William, a deputy lieutenant of Yorkshire, letter from; II. 208.
Cecil:
Lord (1603); I. 45, 52, 53.
Reverend Charles, letters from; III. 122–124, 126, 128, 130, 131.
Corbet; III. 123.
—— death of; III. 127.
Sir Edward; I. 207, 208.
—— death of his wife; I. 92.
Edward, Viscount Wimbledon; I. 269.
—— —— letters from; I. 224, 226, 258, 261, 286, 297, 315; II. 179.
Cecil—cont.
Margaret, sister of Vice Chamberlain Coke, married to Robert Brown; III. 127.
—— —— letters from; III. 124–127. See also Brown.
Robert, Earl of Salisbury; I. 22, 37, 406, 458.
—— —— letter from; I. 56.
—— —— petition of Father Baldwin against; I. 62.
—— —— jewels for Queen Elizabeth delivered to; I. 35.
William, Lord Burghley; I. 2, 24.
—— —— letters from; I. 7.
—— —— letters to; I. 9–12, 14–16, 18, 20.
—— —— passing of a Bill for, precedent quoted; I. 353.
William, second earl of Exeter; II. 223.
—— —— letters from; I. 314; II. 3.
—— —— Countess of Exeter (1639–1643); II. 217, 292, 331.
David, third earl of Exeter, death of (1643); II. 333.
William, second earl of Salisbury; II. 118, 210, 219, 233, 268, 305, 330.
—— —— sworn captain of the guard (1617); I. 94.
—— —— letters from; I. 312, 416
Cecill, island of; I. 217.
Ceeley:
Thomas, mayor of Plymouth; I. 206.
—— certificate by; I. 215.
—— merchant; I. 231.
Celsey; I. 294.
Cephalonia; I. 482.
Cesius, Angelus; I. 438.
Chadock, —; II. 382.
Thomas; II. 395.
Chadwick:
James; I. 477.
—— letter from; I. 463.
Dr., prebendary of Woodborough, Southwell; I. 432.
Chalcedon, bishop of; I. 331. See also Smith, Dr. Richard, and Bishop, William.
Chalfont:
Richard, petition of; II. 82.
proceedings as to his fellowship at Lincoln College; II. 85, 91.
Chalingwood, Peter; II. 302.
Challenor, —, servant of Grace Cavendyshe; I. 100.
Chalmington, Dorset, letter dated; I. 305.
Chaloner:
Mr., of Duffield; II. 269.
Sir Thomas, chamberlain of the Prince of Wales' household; I. 71.
—— patentee for alum making; I. 84.
—— petition of the children of; I. 185.

Chamberlain :
Lord. See Herbert, Philip, Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery.
—— (1607), sponsor with James I. for Lord Arundel's son; I. 63.
Mr.; I. 290.
Abraham; I. 224.
Robert; I. 459.
Father Captain (sic), confessor to Count Tyller (1630); I. 407.
Sir Thomas; I. 172.
—— death of; I. 256.
Captain Thomas, letters from; I. 272, 441, 455.
Thomas, letter from; III. 120.
Chamberlen; 167.
John, recusant; I. 197.
Robert; II. 408.
Chambers :
Mr.; III. 129.
Dr.; I. 292; II. 82.
—— letter from; II. 11, 130.
Thomas, a salter; II. 351.
William, letter from; III. 129.
Champagne; I. 458.
Chance, a spaniel of Sir John Coke the younger; II. 64.
Chancellor of the Exchequer. See Exchequer.
Chancery :
Court of; II. 71, 277.
—— decrees of; I. 171, 449; II. 192.
—— examiners in; I. 333.
—— examinator in; I. 380.
proceedings in; II. 57, 94.
Chancery Lane, riot in (1629); I. 389.
Chandler :
Mr.; II. 16.
Edward; I. 130.
John; II. 252.
Chantilly; II. 33.
Chapel en le Frith; II. 71.
Chapel Royal, orders for the; III. 175.
Chapman :
Mr.; II. 34.
Francis; II. 103.
Captain Thomas; II. 353.
Chappel, William, provost of Trinity College, Dublin, to be bishop of Cork (1638); II. 193.
Charcoal House, the, wanted for a library by the Earl of Oxford (1714); III. 111.
Charity, the ship; I. 300.
Charlcott, letter dated; II. 36.
Charles, Prince (afterwards Charles I.) and the Spanish match; I. 134, 154.
Charles I.
proclaimed King; I. 189.
arrangements for his coronation; I. 232, 239.
—— in Scotland (1633); II. 21.
audiences with; I. 194, 351.
bishops' New Years gifts to; II. 38. demands a Crown jewel from Robert Carr, Earl of Somerset (1633); II. 11.
Charles I.—cont.
his care of the Church; I. 468, 469.
Council held by, for settling the revenue of the Crown; I. 273.
—— after Buckingham's death; I. 364.
—— sits daily in, in April 1641; II. 281.
and the King of Denmark; III. 145.
his treatment of the Fleet Street riot (August 1629); I. 390.
his fishery rights on the coast of Ireland; I. 464.
pardons a Jesuit at Exeter; I. 208. discharges divers Jesuits from the Tower; II. 263.
letters from, viz., to the Lord Admiral (Buckingham); I. 295.
—— to the Mogul; I. 447.
—— to Lady Hatton; I. 267.
—— to Sir John Coke for a free gift; I. 280.
—— to the Doge of Venice; I. 330.
—— to the Duchess of Richmond (1633); II. 25.
—— to the corporation of Derby; II. 180.
—— to the Dean and Chapter of Norwich; I. 302.
—— to the churches of Cornwall, after the death of Sir B. Grenville; III. 105.
—— touching Sedgmoor; I. 476.
letters to, viz.. from Francis Lord Cottington; II. 170.
—— from the Hague (anonymous); II. 226; III. 144.
—— from the warden and fellows of All Souls, Oxford; III. 144.
—— from G. Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury; I. 326.
—— from Sir John Coke (draft); I. 320.
—— from Christian, King of Denmark; I. 478.
—— from the Lord Deputy and Council of Ireland; I. 328.
loans to; I. 305, 381.
pawning of the jewels of; I. 255.
and the bishopric of Man; II. 29, 31.
and Queen Henrietta Maria, their meeting at Stratford; II. 26.
—— memorial touching attendance upon; I. 382.
condoles with the Prince of Orange on the death of the Elector Palatine (1632); I. 486.
and his Parliaments, notes of the speech from the throne to his first Parliament; I. 206.
—— his answer to the Remonstrance; I. 350, 355.
—— messages and negotiations between; II. 319, 334.
—— gives audience to the Commons (1628); I. 351.
—— his answer touching a Fast (1628) I. 343.

Charles I.—cont.
petitions to; I. 272, 422; II. 8, 11.
—— from William Knollys, Earl of Banbury; I. 269.
—— from Lady Hatton; I. 267.
—— from Henry Montagu, Earl of Manchester; I. 343.
his resolution touching Rochelle; I. 357. goes to Portsmouth; I. 354, 355, 359.
directs alterations in the Prayer Book on the death of the Elector Palatine; II. 14.
his order to the bishops of Scotland for making a book of Common Prayer; II. 206.
his declaration touching precedency; I. 373.
proclamations by, referred to; I. 273.
progress, journeys, &c., of; II. 134.
—— to Scotland; II. 8, 19.
—— to the north; II. 210, 219.
—— to York; II. 309.
revenue of, schemes for improving; II. 186; III. 149.
—— observations as to pensions; I. 264.
long conference with Rubens at Greenwich; I. 387. treaty with Sallee; II. 158. his relations with sheriffs in respect of ship money; II. 70, 72, 143, 203.
his answer touching Strafford's letters to him; II. 264.
his presence every day at Strafford trial; II. 278.
signs Strafford's bill of attainder, with tears; II. 281.
his Committee for Foreign Affairs; II. 137.
his communications with the Judges; I. 426; II. 59, 60.
requires Sir Edward Coke to send him his book; II. 268.
directs the vacating and cancelling of a decree in the Star Chamber; II. 163.
notes, commissions, &c. in the handwriting of; I. 461, 469; II. 174; III. 3. household of, lists of servants of his establishment; I. 195, 198, 199.
—— provisions of wines for; II. 25.
—— his seven physicians; I. 292.
order for the wardrobe of; I. 423.
jewels of; II. 88.
touches for the king's evil; I. 283, 428, 485.
visit to Egham, dines at 8 a.m. (1639); II. 241.
and the Universities, Cambridge, incorporates himself a member of Trinity College; I. 286.
—— Oxford; II. 121.
vacillation of (Jan. 1642); II. 303, 314.
Charles I.—cont.
displeasure of, at the carriage of Spanish silver to Dunkirk (1636); II. 141. warrants of; II. 54, 232.
Charles I. and his children; II. 26.
Charles, Prince of Wales, birth of; I. 410, 421.
—— infancy and childhood of; II. 11, 15, 17, 18, 26, 28, 93.
—— custody of his person; II. 308.
—— proposed marriage of; II. 321.
Mary, afterwards Queen, notices of; II. 12, 17, 18.
Charles I. and the Civil War:
the King's preparations for an army at York; II. 210, 212.
is guarded at Whitehall by the trained band of Middlesex; II. 302.
charges Essex and those with him with being traitors; II. 321.
refuses and afterwards agrees to put Carrickfergus into the hands of the Scots; II. 304.
his chief councillors; II. 304.
his answer touching the command of the militia; II. 305.
departs suddenly from Royston for York (March 1642); II. 308.
petitions from divers counties for his return to the Parliament; II. 310.
appears on Heworth Moor, York (June 1642); II. 318.
Charles III. of Spain; III. 73.
Charles V., Emperor of Germany; I. 384.
Charles, Prince Elector Palatine. See Palatinate, the.
Charles, the ship; I. 13, 23, 24, 142, 143, 151, 165, 167, 168, 214, 279, 327, 381.
letters dated; I. 157.
of Bristol; I. 332. of London; II. 35. of Southampton; II. 117.
Charlton; II. 401.
letter dated; II. 384.
Mr.; III. 81.
—— French merchant in London; II. 76.
John, letter from; II. 350.
Captain; II. 352, 353.
Charnell:
Park; II. 398, 418.
Mr.; II. 351.
Charnells; II. 257.
Charnock:
Mr.; II. 165.
Mrs., widow; II. 170.
Thomas; II. 5.
Charnwood forest, meeting of recusants in; I. 228.
Charterhouse, the:
I. 17; II. 109, 319, 323; III. 107.
letters dated; I. 68, 70, 199, 384; II. 334.
admission into; I. 164.
commissioners of, petition to; I. 171.

Chartley forest; II. 396.
letters dated; II. 359, 368.
Chasteauneuf, Mons. de, French Ambassador; I. 388; II. 333.
Chastillon, M. de; II. 239.
Chatham; I. 37, 41, 42, 308, 329, 418, 439; II. 48, 137, 152.
letters dated; I. 30, 31, 119, 147, 152, 159, 161, 163, 165–167, 170, 173, 176–178, 180, 187, 189, 192, 193, 210, 211, 218, 219, 240, 264, 280, 282, 299, 301, 333, 371, 404, 412, 428, 429, 431, 442, 443, 450.
carpenters at; I. 18.
dock; I. 42.
—— letters dated; I. 187–189, 192, 204, 302, 304.
harbour; I. 12.
men and officers at, disorders amongst; I. 259.
navy controller's house at; I. 415.
naval stores at; I. 152.
ships at; I. 101, 153, 201.
hill; I. 214.
—— letters dated; I. 404, 431; II. 114.
Chatillon, Maréchal, French general; II. 287, 289.
Chatsworth; III. 12, 61.
letters dated; I. 325; II. 259.
Chatwall, letter dated; I. 411.
Chaumont, Mons. de, French Ambassador; III. 152.
Chauvin, Mons., tutor of Thomas Coke; III. 158.
letter from; III. 156.
Chaworth:
Mr.; III. 23.
George Viscount, letters from; I. 409, 415, 485; II. 57, 58, 81, 194, 202–204, 209, 233.
—— letter to; II. 203.
P., letter from; III. 23.
Cheesman, Alexander, musician; I. 159.
Cheevers, —; II. 229.
Cheke, Robert, letter from; I. 34.
Chelmarton; II. 27.
Chelmsford, letter dated; III. 31.
Chelsea:
people of quality living in (1710); III. 117.
letter dated; I. 147; III. 24.
Chene [Cheyne], of Woodhay, Berks; II. 94.
Cheney, Lord (1716); III. 116.
Chepwell; II. 128.
Cherbury, Lord, committed by the House of Lords to the custody of Black Rod (1642); II. 316.
Cheribough; II. 309.
Cheriton Fitzhame; I. 151.
Cheriton, Hampshire, letter dated; I. 453.
Chertsey Mills, lease of; I. 184.
Cheshire; I. 2; II. 344.
Cheshunt; I. 202; II. 196.
Cheslin, Mr.; II. 363.
Chester; I. 401; II. 24, 73.
letter dated; II. 10, 46, 77, 195.
bishop of (1716); III. 116.
chamberlain of. See Stanley, Wm., Earl of Derby.
Court of Exchequer at; II. 49, 58, 60.
horse race at; II. 7. justices of assize; II. 153.
post of, to be put down; I. 292.
trade at, condition of; I. 275.
Sir John; II. 386–388.
Sir Robert; I. 127.
—— letter to; II. 180.
Chesterfield; I. 412; II. 61, 358; III. 13, 97.
letters dated; II. 444; III. 9, 10.
Lord (1699); II. 393; III. 179, 180. See also Stanhope, Philip.
Chesterton, letter dated; II. 109.
Chestnut Park, letter dated; I. 206.
Chetwind:
Mr.; III. 58.
Walter; I. 169.
Chevers, Marc; I. 482.
Chevigny, Secretary of State (France); II. 333.
Chevreux, Chevereux:
Madame de; II. 333.
Duchess of; II. 240.
Chew, Mr.; I. 313.
Cheyne:
Mr.; I. 313.
Lord (1635); II. 94.
—— chosen M.P. for two places (1701); II. 416.
Robert; II. 94.
T.; I. 1.
Chichester:
alms room in; I. 171.
billeting of soldiers in; I. 359.
magistrates' memorial to the Navy Commissioners; I. 213. taken by the forces of the Parliament (1642); II. 327. bishop of (1642), taken prisoner by the Parliament; II. 329. See also Montagu, Richard; Duppa, Brian.
Sir Arthur, Lord Deputy of Ireland; II. 180; III. 151, 154, 195.
—— letter from; I. 78, 148.
Arthur, his son, son-in-law of the Earl of Bristol; II. 180.
Edward Lord Viscount, brother of Lord Arthur; II. 180.
John, ward of Charles I.; II. 180.
Chigwell, letter dated; I. 432.
Chilcote; II. 367, 421.
letters dated; II. 383, 386, 396, 417, 422–424; III. 84, 101.
Child:
Mr., of Gray's Inn; II. 68, 69.
Charles; III. 145, 146.
Robert, letter from; III. 20.
W., licence to; II. 173.
Chimay, Prince, to be made grandee of Spain (1697); II. 370.

Chippenham, Wilts, concealments in; I. 197.
Chippingdale, Dr.; I. 296.
Chiswick, letters dated; I. 148; II. 165.
Cholmeley, Cholmondeley:
Sir Hugh, vice-president of the Council for the Welsh Marches; I. 39.
Viscount (1629); I. 383.
Hugh, Lord (1633); II. 24.
Lord (1689); II. 353.
—— (1703); III. 24, 150, 152.
Hugh, letter from; II. 205, 208.
Robert Lord; II. 49, 54, 60.
Thomas; II. 353.
Chopwell woods; II. 9.
Christian, King of Denmark; I. 384.
letters from; I. 478; II. 243.
Christian prisoners captured by the Turks; I. 151, 152.
Christiansen, Christian, gunner; I. 402.
Chrystien, Edward, letter from; I. 147.
Chudleigh; I. 249.
bridge destroyed by floods; I. 21.
Captain, of His Majesty's pinnace the Charles, commission to; I. 142.
—— kinsman of Arthur Chichester, Lord Belfast; I. 148, 156.
—— instructions to; I. 204.
—— letters from; I. 156, 157, 204–206, 208.
Sir George; I. 222, 249, 251.
—— letters from; I. 190, 238, 252, 256, 257, 275, 276, 281, 283, 288, 302, 303, 404; II. 43, 85, 112, 181.
Captain John; I. 168.
—— letters from; I. 151, 152, 158, 160, 163, 165, 166, 168, 175, 196.
Sir John; I. 234, 251, 287, 339.
—— letters from; I. 328.
—— his squadron; I. 327.
Church, Bartholomew; I. 172.
Churchill:
Colonel; III. 44, 48, 69.
John, Earl and Duke of Marlborough; II. 427, 432–434, 438, 440, 456; III. 14, 16, 26, 30–51, 57, 59, 61, 66.
—— writes the news of Blenheim on horseback with a blacklead pencil; III. 39.
—— book by Joseph Harris upon; III. 178.
—— loses his heir (1704); III. 53.
—— letters from; III. 32, 72.
—— letters to; III. 33, 37, 39, 77.
Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough; II. 6.
—— letter from; III. 83.
Chute, C.; I. 197.
Cider, effect of drinking; I. 102.
Cinque Ports, the; I. 290, 440; II. 56.
Lord Warden of (1624); I. 157, 186. See also Howard, Theophilus. election of burgesses for (1642); II. 305.
Cinque Ports, the—cont.
sergeant of the admiralty of; I. 173.
ships of; I. 177.
Cipière, Comte de; II. 190.
Cirencester; II. 337.
Citran, M. de; II. 140.
Cize, Count, agent of Savoy; II. 196.
Clagett, Mr.; II. 265, 266.
Clandeboye, Lord (1609); II. 114.
Clapham, Sir Sheffield, letter from; I. 384.
Clapmarsh, Captain; I. 308.
Clapperton, Mr., a Scottish minister; II. 220.
Clare:
Dr.; II. 120.
Earl of. See Holles, John.
Lord (1638); II. 183, 264.
Clarendon:
Lord Chancellor; III. 182, 186.
Lord (1711); III. 116.
Clarges:
Mme.; III. 79.
Sir Walter; II. 432, 435.
—— stands for Westminster; 415.
Clarke, Clerke:
Mr.; I. 127, 324, 366; II. 221, 442; III. 13, 38, 81, 102, 167.
Mrs., letter to; II. 408.
Captain; III. 151.
—— of Savage Garden, Great Tower Hill; III. 162.
Daniel, petition of; I. 128.
Lady Catherine, of Chilcote; III. 73, 77, 82, 84, 87, 89, 92, 170.
—— letters from; III. 80, 110.
George, M.P.; III. 64.
Sir Gilbert, M.P.; II. 358, 397, 408, 410–413, 417, 421, 425; III. 89.
—— letters from; II. 346, 367, 368, 383, 396, 417, 422–424; III. 16.
Godfrey, son of Sir Gilbert; II. 395, 417, 423; III. 73, 77, 82, 84, 90, 91, 96, 98.
—— letter from; II. 423.
Sir Henry; II. 115.
John, letter from; I. 324.
Robert, surgeon; II. 61, 62, 355.
Thomas, postmaster for packets; I. 185.
—— secretary of the Merchant Adventurers' Company; II. 69.
William, petition; I. 128.
—— post of Daventry (1603); I. 38, 88.
Clatworthy; I. 31.
Clavill, Sir William, engaged in the alum works; I. 84.
Clay, —; II. 452.
Clayton:
Mrs.; III. 113.
Lieutenant-Colonel; III. 79.
Cleave, John, letter from; I. 341.
Cleere, Sir Edward, Vice-admiral of England; I. 176.
Cleghorn, James, petition of; II. 211.
Clements, Mr., merchant; II. 43, 201.

Clements Inn; I. 149.
Clergy, the, profligacy of (1702); III. 8.
Clerkenwell:
arrest of a seminary priest in; I. 273.
bear garden, bull-baiting in; III. 7.
Cleves; II. 101, 110, 364.
Cliffen, Mr.; II. 347, 348.
Clifford:
Lady Anne; I. 47.
George, Earl of Cumberland (1569–1605), his voyages; I. 16, 17.
Henry, Earl of Cumberland (1641–1643); II. 128, 217, 309, 313.
—— letters from; II. 2, 21, 190, 222, 233.
letter to; II. 234.
Lord (1706); III. 168.
Thomas, J. P., letter from; I. 276.
Clifton; I. 480.
letters dated; I. 150; II. 39.
North, letter dated; I. 84.
Mr.; I. 266.
Sir Gervase; I. 181; II. 309.
—— letter from; II. 29, 39.
—— recommended as sheriff of Nottingham; I. 236.
John, letter from; I. 248.
Clinckadagger, Henry; yeoman of the bakehouse; I. 198.
Clinton:
George, Lord, Lord High Admiral (1551); I. 1.
Theophilus, Earl of Lincoln; I. 383.
—— Bridget, wife of, petition; III. 151.
Clipbie, Caistor sessions; I. 4.
Clipstone, Notts; I. 294.
Clist St. George; I. 213.
Clitherow:
Mr., letter from; I. 331.
Christopher, deputy governor of the East India Company, letter from; I. 474; II. 78.
Clobery:
Oliver and William, of London, merchants, petition; I. 377.
Mr.; II. 218.
Clogher, Dean of; I. 367.
Closby, E.; II. 348.
Cloth:
aunage of, revival of the office of; II. 176.
sealing of; I. 465.
Clothworkers and dyers; I. 164.
Clotworthy, Sir John; II. 304.
Clowne; II. 446.
Clutterbuck, Giles, keeper of Worcester Castle; I. 344.
Clutton, Somerset, report on coal mines at; I. 71.
Coates, Agnes; I. 179.
Cob, Sir Nathaniel; II. 348.
Cobham; II. 322.
George, Lord; I. 1, 2.
Cobly, John, postmaster of Loughborough; II. 134.
Cobsden, Surrey; II. 401.
Cochrane, Cockran:
Captain; II. 94.
Richard, of Rye; II. 103.
Sir William; II. 298.
Cocke:
H.; I. 123.
John; II. 347.
Cockayne:
Mr.; II. 64, 307.
Sir Edward, knighted at Warsop (1603); I. 43.
Nicholas; I. 164.
Cockburn, Coburne:
David, examination of; I. 206.
John; II. 139.
Cockin, Sir William; I. 115.
Cockroft, William, treasurer of the Merchant Adventurers' Company; II. 69.
Cocks, Mr.; III. 30.
Cockshutt, Mr.; II. 142.
Coddington, letter dated; II. 143.
Coe, Mr.; III. 161.
Coen, the revocation of; I. 290.
Cofferd, Richard; I. 415, 433.
Coinage, the, farthing tokens; III. 142, 143.
Coire; II. 37.
Coke:
Mr., of Trusley (1702); III. 2, 90, 93.
—— of Walton (1701); II. 442.
family, the (1710); III. 84.
Dr.; II. 408. See also Cooke, Dr. Alan.
Alice, sister of Mr. Vice-Chamberlain; II. 362, 363, 437; III. 87, 93–95, 97, 164, 168.
—— letters from; II. 361–369, 376; III. 86.
Ann, daughter of Mr. Secretary; I. 247.
Sir Charles, letter to; I. 279.
Charlotte, daughter of Mr. Vice Chamberlain; III. 129.
Dorothy, sister of Mr. Secretary; I. 27, 91.
—— daughter of Mr. Secretary; I. 162, 247.
Sir Edward (1617) praise of his daughter; I. 94.
—— Commissioner for the Navy; I. 102.
—— his successor in the Common Pleas; I. 248.
—— (1626) petition of his wife, Lady Elizabeth Hatton; I. 267.
—— (1628) his speech on the tonnage and poundage Bill; I. 351, 352.
—— (1640) his MSS. and books, motion of his son touching; II. 266.
—— resolutions of Parliament concerning; II. 270.
Sir Edward, of Longford (1710); III. 88, 90.
—— letters from; II. 408, 417, 419; III. 66, 74, 176.

Coke—cont.
Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. Secretary; I. 247.
Elizabeth, Ann and Elways, his step-children; I. 355, 477.
—— wife of Sir Francis, of Trusley. letters from; I. 19, 54.
—— wife of Sir John the Younger, letters from; II. 251.
—— sister of Mr. Vice-Chamberlain; II. 361–363, 371, 372, 399, 426, 437; III. 110.
—— letters from; II. 364, 366, 370, 372; III. 32, 58, 59, 73, 77, 81–86, 98, 163–174.
—— daughter of Mr. Vice-Chamberlain, Dahl's picture of; III. 58, 59.
Francis, afterwards Sir Francis, of Trusley, brother of Mr. Secretary; I. 19, 51, 54, 55, 157, 357, 386, 450, 463; II. 83, 169, 228; III. 132–134.
—— certificate from; II. 150.
—— letters from; I. 22, 26, 28, 35, 43, 47, 54, 56, 59, 64, 66, 67, 70, 109, 111, 114, 116, 119, 128, 143, 148, 153, 154, 168, 181, 212, 220, 227, 276, 282, 283, 303, 325, 340, 412, 413–416, 454, 459, 471, 485, 488; II. 26, 36, 170.
—— letters to; I. 125, 140, 149; II. 44.
—— death of; II. 276.
Francis, son of Sir Francis; I. 116.
Francis, son of bishop George Coke, Fellow of Christ's and precentor in Hereford Cathedral, parson of Risley; II. 9, 199, 201, 211, 277.
—— letters from; II. 32, 45.
George, brother of Mr. Secretary, successively bishop of Bristol and Hereford; I. 92, 150, 190, 284, 355, 453, 480, 485; II. 12, 47, 97, 98, 119, 127, 218.
—— letters from; I. 19, 91, 94, 123, 285; II. 28, 35, 38, 74, 77, 78, 81, 83, 86, 89, 102, 105, 107, 136, 146, 154–159, 169, 171–174, 181–183, 197, 200, 208, 211, 232, 277, 313, 315.
—— letters to; I. 68, 342; II. 198.
—— his difference with Laud; II. 198, 200.
—— imprisoned in the Tower and released; II. 302, 317.
—— his sons, John, William, and Thomas; II. 173.
George, son of Mr. Vice-Chamberlain; III. 129.
Gilbert, son of Sir Francis; I. 144, 454.
—— letters from; II. 52, 65, 66, 105, 184, 291.
Heigham, letter from; III. 66.
Dame Joan, widow of Alderman Gore, second wife of Mr. Secretary, letter from; I. 355.
Coke—cont.
Sir John, Secretary of State (1624–1639):
deputy treasurer of the Navy (1599); I. 23.
paymaster of the Navy (1603); I. 45.
collector of the subsidy for Radlow hundred (1611); I. 72.
master of the Court of Requests; I. 120, 121.
Secretary of State (1624) vice Sir A. Morton; I. 172, 212.
analyses Aristotle's Ethics; I. 286.
audiences with James I.; I. 104, 148, 158, 159, 163, 171. care to preserve papers; I. 358.
Charles I., audiences with; I. 197, 198.
—— addresses a privy seal for loan of 50*l.* to him; I. 280, 379.
—— chooses him to deliver his pleasure to both Houses although he is a nether-house man (1625); I. 209; III. 134.
children of, notices of; I. 64, 67, 70, 99.
—— education at Cambridge, &c.; I. 108–111, 124, 132, 149, 150, 158, 173, 191, 221, 284, 286, 323, 393.
—— John, marriage of; I. 462; II. 26.
—— Joseph, death from spotted fever; I. 155, 158.
—— daughter, death of; I. 350, 354.
—— nephew, captured by Dunkirkers; I. 229.
favour of Buckingham towards; I. 150, 346, 363.
granted 300*l.* a year in the Navy (1621); I. 114.
—— lands in Ireland; II. 124.
journal of a sea voyage; I. 23.
marries, first, Mary Powell (1604?); I. 46. marries, secondly, Joan, widow of Alderman Gore, and gives bond; I. 169, 176.
parentage of, allusion to; I. 122.
Parliament, elected for St. Germans and Cambridge; I. 157, 251, 252, 341.
—— reports proceedings in (1625); I. 208.
—— speeches in; I. 247.
secretary of, death of; I. 357.
servants of; I. 46.
tradesmen of; I. 245–247; II. 29.
letters from and to, passim usque ad; II. 341.
letters from, to his wife (Mary Powell); I. 46, 60, 62, 85, 97, 104, 107, 118, 121–125, 159. letters to, from his said wife; I. 58, 120, 123, 124, 130.

COKE—cont.
SIR JOHN—cont.
removes from Melbourne to Swithland, Leicestershire (1643); II. 329.
warrant against his estate; II. 338. arms demanded of him; II. 322, 328, 329.
fears arrest; II. 335.
is offered shelter at Leicester; II. 339. his last letter; 341.
John, son of Mr. Secretary, afterwards SIR JOHN COKE THE YOUNGER:
letters from; II. 252, 256, 263–271, 273, 275, 277–285, 288, 290, 295–297, 303–308, 310, 314, 316, 318, 319, 326, 329, 330–337, 339–341.
letters to; II. 27, 29, 34, 37, 39, 48, 64, 65, 68, 78, 115, 118, 163, 272:
accusation against; II. 262.
description of; II. 211.
education of; I. 108–111, 124, 132, 149, 150, 158, 173, 191, 221, 284, 286, 323, 393. marriage of his sister to Sir Robt. Lovel's son; II. 283. election expenses (1640); III. 138.
wise and temperate carriage of; II. 328.
his opinion of Strafford; II. 283.
John, son of Bishop George Coke; II. 136, 218.
John, the "conventionist" M.P. for Derby, father of Mr. Vice-Chamberlain, styled also Captain and Colonel; II. 347, 350–354, 356, 360, 365.
letters from; II. 344, 355.
letter to; II. 345, 346, 354–358; III. 156.
John Coke, brother of Mr. Vice-Chamberlain; II. 369, 370, 404–406; III. 84.
letters from; II. 360, 362, 374, 395–398, 400, 403, 416, 422–429, 440, 441, 446.
letter to; II. 407.
Dr. John, physician; II. 371–373, 408; III. 23, 25, 56, 84, 94, 160.
letters from; III. 6, 28, 38, 61.
Joseph, son of Mr. Secretary; I. 111, 155, 158.
Leigh, son of Sir Francis; I. 116.
Mary (Powell), first wife of Mr. Secretary; I. 132.
letters from; I. 58, 120, 123, 124, 130.
letters to; I. 46, 60, 62, 85, 97, 104, 107, 118, 121–125, 159.
funeral charges of; I. 162.
Mary, daughter of Mr. Secretary; I. 356; II. 12, 45; III. 135.
proposed marriage of; I. 450.

COKE—cont.
Mary, wife of Thomas Coke, M.P. for Leicester, son of Mr. Secretary, letter from; II. 343.
his widow, resident at Newington, Middlesex (1656); II. 344.
Mary, eldest daughter of Mr. Vice-Chamberlain, and wife of Thomas, second Baron Southwell; III. 131.
Lady Mary (née Stanhope), wife of Mr. Vice-Chamberlain; II. 407, 409, 417–419, 426.
letters from; II. 415, 416, 447, 448, 452; III. 24, 25.
letters to; III. 1, 83.
bills paid by; III. 158.
funeral account of; III. 29, 162, 163.
and the Earl of Huntingdon (1701); II. 428.
Richard, cousin of Thomas Coke, M.P. for Leicester, letter from; II. 343.
—— son of Sir Francis Coke of Trusley; II. 276.
Robert (1699), of Melbourne, letter to; II. 392.
Sir Robert (1683), of Derby; II. 344.
Susan, daughter of Sir Francis Coke of Trusley; I. 116.
Thomas, brother of Mr. Secretary; I. 26, 46, 47, 51.
letters from; I. 27, 63, 68, 71, 73, 80, 88, 91–96, 108, 109.
letters to; I. 23, 77, 78, 80, 84, 89, 92, 93.
travels with Lord Arundel in Italy; I. 66, 78, 82.
illness of; I. 87.
death of (1622); I. 116.
Thomas, barrister of Grays' Inn, M.P. for Leicester, son of Mr. Secretary; I. 355; II. 12, 47, 61, 211, 265, 293, 294, 323. chosen M.P. for Leicester; II. 252, 261, 262.
letters from; II. 254, 256, 301, 303, 309.
letters to; II. 256, 343, 344.
fined for delinquency; II. 342.
buried at Melbourne (1656); II. 344.
THOMAS, afterwards MR. VICE-CHAMBERLAIN; II. 358, 365; III. 23.
education in Holland; III. 156. chosen M.P. for co. Derby; II. 377, 415, 443.
election petition against his return withdrawn; II. 454.
asked to stand for various places; II. 421–424.
marriage to Lady Mary Stanhope (1698); II. 373.
second marriage of (1709); III. 82. birth of a daughter; III. 91.

Coke—cont.
Thomas—cont.
declines the Comptroll Office; III. 35 estate at Oswestry, sale of; III. 56. made one of the Commissioners of Accounts; III. 2, 3.
letters from; II. 401; III. 33, 36–39, 54, 77, 111, 127, 161–164. letters to; II. 360 et passim usque ad finem; III. passim.
Timothy; II. 281.
Walter; I. 141.
—— letters from; II. 149.
William, son of Sir John Coke, the younger; II. 37.
—— son of Sir Francis, letters from; I. 86, 283, 367; II. 302.
—— letter to; II. 259.
Colchester; III. 31.
Viscount. See Savage.
Cole:
Mr.; I. 231, 241; II. 191, 337.
Michael; I. 431.
Sir William; II. 298, 299, 301.
Coleman, Mr.; III. 111.
Colepepper:
Sir Thomas, letters from; II. 96–100, 136, 148, 157.
Colonel, reported death of; II. 194.
Coleraine; II. 299, 300, 302, 312.
Coles, John, letters from; II. 343.
Coleshill; II. 424.
Coleway school, Ledbury; I. 108.
Collard, Christopher, petition; I. 128.
Collier:
Mr.; III. 184.
Lieut., tried by court-martial; III. 81.
James, postmaster at Stone, Staffordshire; II. 241.
Collins:
Martin, cousin of Secretary Coke, his dispute with his bishop; I. 61.
—— letter from; I. 63.
Dr., Provost of King's College, Cambridge; I. 115.
Collombiers; I. 484.
Collope, John; I. 126.
Colmars fans; III. 180.
Colnbrook; II. 325, 326, 336.
Cologne; I. 26, 311, 386, 408; II. 292.
letters dated; II. 174, 237.
elector of (1640); II. 250.
news from; I. 311.
Colonna:
Don Carlos, ambassador from Spain; I. 165, 394.
—— letters from; I. 167, 404.
Colville; I. 319; II. 280.
Colwych prebend; I. 444.
Colyson, George; I. 36.
Combe:
Thomas, Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge University, letter from; I. 479.
Thomas, mayor of Southampton, letters from; I. 344, 345, 347, 356.
Comb Smete manor, Warwickshire; I. 103.
Commissioners: See also Navy; Piracies. of Accounts (1701); II. 430, 433. for the treaty of commerce; III. 109.
for sales, letter to; I. 341.
for defective titles; II. 46, 116, 193.
for buildings; II. 49.
divers; I. 287.
Great Seal; II. 284, 340. of Charles I. at York; I. 466.
Common Pleas, Court of; II. 7, 107.
Common Prayer, the Book of, torn up in Old Jewry Church; II. 291.
Commons, House of:
Committee's report touching the Fast; I. 271.
Committee sitting at Haberdashers Hall; II. 334. desires satisfaction as to the Court of Wards; I. 68.
speeches in; I. 261.
Remonstrance of; I. 268.
sits in the Guildhall, London (1642); II. 302.
petitions Charles I. to displace evil counsellors; II. 304.
petition of the apprentices and labourers to; II. 306.
Speaker of (1704); III. 50–64.
—— letter from; III. 77.
—— letter to; III. 163.
sergeant-at-arms, appointment of; III. 118.
Compiègne; II. 140.
Compton; I. 47, 67.
letters dated; I. 59, 63, 64; II. 119.
Sir Francis; II. 457; III. 156.
Henry, bishop of London (1675–1713); II. 357, 358, 419; III. 17, 179.
Spencer, Earl of Northampton (1630–1643); II. 101.
—— letter from; II. 281.
—— voted a traitor by Parliament; II. 320.
—— loses a piece of his cheek in battering Warwick Castle; II. 320.
—— slain at Stafford (1643); II. 332.
William, Earl of Northampton (1628–1630); I. 219, 313.
letter from; I. 310.
Comptroll Office, letter dated; III. 33, 57.
Conardale forest, Richmondshire; I. 294.
Concord, the ship, of Poole; II. 191, 192.
Condé:
Prince de; I. 82; II. 373.
—— recognised as the heir of Henry IV. (1596); I. 18.
Conformity, Bill to prevent occasional (1702); III. 18, 20, 53.
Congreve, William, the dramatist; II. 359, 368.
—— acting of the "Mourning Bride"; II. 368.

Coningsby :
Captain ; II. 194.
Lady, imprisonment of her husband (1623) ; I. 148, 197.
Lord (1716) ; III. 117.
Connaught ; I. 442 ; II. 95, 128, 129, 157, 230.
Lord President of ; I. 152.
Connecticut river, the, plantation on (1634) ; II. 64.
Connor, diocese of ; I. 455, 482.
Conradus, Heer ; II. 250.
Constable :
Mr. ; II. 63.
Dr., physician to James II. in Paris (1700) ; II. 405.
Sir William, Bart. ; I. 194.
Constant, the ship ; I. 330.
Constantinople ; II. 221, 229.
document dated ; II. 215.
ambassador at ; II. 203.
Consulters, the assembly of, to meet in Henry VII. chapel, Westminster ; II. 315.
Content, the ship ; I. 330.
Contrie, John, boatswain of the Dreadnought ; I. 288.
Convertine, the ship ; I. 116, 173, 186, 192, 238, 239, 249, 265, 274, 329, 442, 459 ; II. 146, 175.
letters dated ; I. 411, 419, 427.
Convocation, proceedings in (1640) ; II. 268.
Conway :
Sir Edward, Lieut.-Governor of the Brill ; I. 35, 36, 68, 70.
—— letters from ; I. 22, 24, 43–45, 56, 57.
—— letters to ; I. 44, 46, 56.
—— Secretary of State, first viscount, &c. ; I. 156, 201, 203, 207–210, 217, 225, 226, 239, 367.
—— sent to settle the differences in Jersey (1617) ; I. 94.
—— his daughter to be married to Sir R. Lee's son ; I. 237.
—— his indisposition ; I. 255.
—— warrants signed by ; I. 345, 356, 385.
—— to be removed from the secretaryship ; I. 359.
—— death of his daughter, Lady Smith ; I. 411.
—— letters from ; I. 130–139, 144, 146–148, 164, 174, 259, 269, 285, 308–313, 315–321, 324–327, 339, 350, 355, 357–366.
—— letters to ; I. 130–139, 145, 190, 232, 281, 290, 296, 310, 416, 423.
Sir Edward, afterwards second viscount (1631–1655) ; I. 239, 424 ; II. 84, 138, 292, 294, 331.
—— letters from ; II. 92, 117, 125, 130, 134, 141, 143, 161, 163, 165 ; III. 145.
—— letter to ; II. 70.
—— his town of Lisnagarvey near Lisburn ; II. 304.
Conway—cont.
resigns his command ; II. 279.
Sir Fulke ; I. 97.
Sir Thomas ; I. 438.
Wake ; I. 313.
Conyers :
Mr., bailiff of Brauncepeth park ; II. 28.
John, letter from ; II. 128.
William, certificate by ; I. 338.
Cooke :
Mr. ; I. 188 ; II. 133.
Dr. ; II. 148, 152, 156, 157, 247, 408.
—— letter to ; II. 157.
Dr. Alan ; II. 133, 314.
—— letters from ; II. 132, 171, 193.
Captain ; II. 345.
Hierome, clerk to the Council of Prince Charles (afterward Charles I.) ; I. 198.
James ; I. 442 ; III. 116.
John, the Quaker, death of ; III. 55.
Samuel, memorial of ; III. 145.
Stephen ; I. 426, 427.
T. ; I. 280.
Thomas, letter from ; I. 361.
Sir Walsingham ; II. 193.
William, of King's Lynn ; I. 275.
—— son-in-law of William Hammond ; I. 131.
—— letters from ; I. 239, 299, 301, 427, 442, 486 ; II. 35.
—— junior, letter from ; II. 456.
Sir William, letter from ; I. 64.
Cooper :
Mr. ; II. 120, 121.
Captain, journals of ; I. 409.
Dawtry, letter from ; I. 411.
Francis ; I. 36.
Coote :
Sir Charles ; I. 427 ; II. 75, 233.
—— information of ; I. 152.
—— letter from ; I. 426.
—— death of ; II. 316.
Colonel ; II. 360.
Coparario's music ; I. 195.
Cope :
Anthony ; I. 199.
J., Colonel ; III. 190.
—— letter from ; III. 100.
Michael, lessee under the Duchy of Lancaster of the Dove fishing ; II. 422, 423.
Sir Walter, knighted at Warsop (1603) ; I. 43.
William, of Windley ; II. 451.
Copenhagen ; I. 222 ; III. 121.
Copley :
Sir Godfrey ; II. 424.
—— letter from ; II. 414.
Copuldike, Francis ; I. 6.
Coquette Roads ; I. 381.
Corbeil, letter dated ; I. 310.

Corbet:
Mr.; II. 343.
Lady; II. 170.
Clement; I. 263.
Sir John, vice president of the Court of the Welsh Marches; I. 39.
Richard, bishop of Norwich; I. 468; II. 103.
Corbin, Thomas; I. 194.
Corboylt; II. 156.
Cordage:
survey of; I. 384, 472.
trade in; II. 39.
Cordale, Mr.; II. 346.
Cordon, Richard; III. 138.
Cordwell:
Mr.; II. 128.
Thomas, petition; III. 150.
Corea, Bras, Spanish prisoner; I. 17.
Coreille; I. 320.
Cork; I. 239.
letters dated; I. 34, 471.
Lord of. See Boyle, Richard. bishopric of (1638) for William Chappel, provost of Trinity College, Dublin; II. 193.
Corme, George; II. 161.
Cormorants, the keepership of, to Charles I. to be suppressed; I. 291.
Cornbury, Lord: See Hyde.
Park, Oxon, letters dated; I. 320, 328.
Cornelis:
the Dutch engineer; I. 310, 320, 322.
Leonard, captain of L'Espérance; II. 145.
Cornwall; I. 42, 469; II. 53; III. 107.
gentlemen of, ill-disposed towards Sir George Chudleigh; I. 302.
manors belonging to the King in; I. 282.
presters; I. 12.
purveyance compositions in; I. 73.
towns of, man and victual a ship of 200 tons; I. 276, 277.
Hercules; III. 156.
Cornewallis:
Sir Charles, imprisoned in the Tower; I. 87.
Frederick; III. 16.
Lady, accident to; II. 288.
Coronation, fines for not accepting knighthood at; I. 415, 423.
Correggio, pictures in the style of; III. 113.
Corrington; I. 384.
Corselis, John, petition of; III. 149.
Corston, Somerset, re-building of the parish church of; III. 145.
Cortrecht; I. 236.
Corunna, dispatch of the horses and staff of Prince Charles to; I. 138, 139.
Cosford; I. 420.
Cosin:
Dr. Joseph, master of Peterhouse, Cambridge, letter from; II. 156.
Leonard, master-bailiff of East Retford; I. 302.
Cosne; I. 474.
Cotchett, Mr., J.P. of Derbyshire; II. 387, 394; III. 10–17, 70.
Coten hill, Shropshire, letter dated; III. 28.
Cotes:
Spital sessions; I. 3.
Mr.; I. 150; II. 261.
Coton; II. 450.
Cotterell, Sir Clement, vice admiral of Lincolnshire; I. 445; II. 9.
Cottington:
Mr.; I. 94.
Sir Francis; I. 199, 388, 394, 411, 431.
—— Mr. Secretary; I. 170.
—— keeper of the King's game at Hampton Court; I. 385.
—— his conference with James I.; I. 142.
—— his interview with Rubens; I. 387.
Francis Lord, Chancellor of the Exchequer, &c.; I. 479, 487; II. 15, 28, 32, 49, 51, 70, 86, 119, 122–124, 147, 169, 182, 191, 194, 223, 239, 268, 275, 277, 279.
—— letters from; II. 17, 21, 23, 50, 59, 125, 170, 223, 229, 233.
—— constable of the Tower (1640); II. 267.
—— relinquishes the chancellorship of the Exchequer; II. 265, 286.
—— sick at Hanworth; II. 281–283.
—— and the East India Company; 260.
Sir Thomas (? error for Francis) letter from; I. 324.
Cotton:
Mr.; III. 87–97.
Dodmore, one of the King's carvers (1623); I. 150; II. 128.
Edward, J.P., letter from; I. 276.
Robert, petition of; I. 128.
Sir Robert; I. 72.
—— committed to an alderman's house; I. 81.
—— his "Leger" book; II. 343.
—— verses on his daughter; III. 189.
Coulthey, Giles, letter (from or to?); I. 165.
Council, the: See also Privy Council and North, the, Council of.
Privy, Lords of; I. 337, 363; II. 47.
—— clerk; II. 27.
—— letter from; I. 152.
—— letters to; I. 300–303, 368; II. 28.
—— orders of; I. 359.
—— —— proclaiming the peace of Utrecht; III. 106.
—— examinations sent to; I. 393.
—— meetings of; I. 392, 403; II. 26.
—— —— on Buckingham's assassination; I. 364.

Council, the—cont.
Privy, petition to; I. 402.
—— remonstrance to; I. 366.
in the Marches of Wales; I. 161.
—— clerk of; I. 2.
of War (1624); I. 164.
—— advices of; I. 339; II. 210.
Court, the:
ceremonies to be observed in attendance at (1629); I. 382.
masques, the; I. 87.
news; I. 233.
offices which have New Year's gifts from the Secretary of State (1623); I. 154. and Country parties (1696); II. 367, 424.
Courtenay, Courtney:
Edward, petition; III. 155.
Colonel; I. 429.
Cousade, Seigneur de la; II. 140.
Covenanters, the; II. 217, 220, 222, 225.
Covent Garden, letter dated; II. 184.
Coventry; I. 217; II. 328, 339, 386.
letters dated; II. 347.
Cateaton Street; II. 348.
bishop of. See Morton, Thomas.
vicarage of Trinity Church; II. 181.
Mr., M.P.; II. 311.
Sir Thomas, Attorney-General, afterwards Lord Keeper; I. 172, 310, 434, 449, 464; II. 12, 18, 34, 47, 52–55, 71, 92, 97, 98, 115, 126, 139, 219, 223, 226.
—— letters from; I. 77, 181, 211, 388, 391, 418, 475, 476; II. 59, 107, 163, 195, 203; III. 142.
—— letters to; I. 220, 282, 453; II. 1.
—— opinions of; II. 17.
—— report by; II. 46, 48.
—— objects to cancel Star Chamber records; II. 164.
Lady; II. 97, 98.
Cow, Captain; III. 45.
Cowern, co. Hereford; I. 40.
Cowes; I. 152, 157, 316, 323, 344, 347, 402, 437, 440; II. 6.
letters dated; I. 218, 324, 325.
Castle; I. 285.
—— letters dated; I. 202, 345, 347.
Cowper:
Mr. (1705); III. 65.
Robert, of Crumsall, Lancashire; II. 217.
William, Lord Chancellor (1716); III. 116.
Cox:
Mr., of Castle Ditch; I. 128.
Frances and Thomas; I. 416.
Thomas, money paid to; I. 51.
—— servant of Sir F. Greville; I. 64, 69.
John, letter from; I. 67.
Richard; I. 123.
Coye, the, Cheshire; II. 7.
Cradock, Mr., of the Angel, Leicester; II. 348.
Cracow:
Lord of; I. 331.
letter dated; I. 15.
Cragge, Dr.; I. 292.
Craggs, Craigs:
Mr.; II. 410.
—— his house to be hired by the Commissioners for the Treaty of Commerce; III. 109.
James; II. 410.
—— letters from; III. 35, 36, 79.
Court; III. 109.
Cramer, Mrs.; III. 186.
Crampone, Thomas, mayor of Plymouth, letter from; II. 125.
Cranborne:
letter dated; I. 147.
Lord (1605), farms the Customs; I. 58.
Cranbrooke, Kent, clothiers of; III. 149.
Crane:
the ship; I. 13, 32, 42.
Sir Francis; III. 143.
—— letter from; I. 307.
Cranenburg, M.; III. 111.
Cranfield:
Lionel, Earl of Middlesex; I. 110, 176, 179, 184, 283; II. 66.
—— made Master of the Court of Wards; I. 103, 106, 111.
—— succeeds Lord Mandeville, as Treasurer (1622); I. 120, 126.
—— fined 20,000*l.*; I. 182.
—— letter from; I. 147.
—— gifts to; II. 67.
Cranmer, Lady; III. 186.
Cranstoun, Earl of (1639); II. 218.
Craven:
John Lord; II. 232, 250, 387, 388.
—— letter to; II. 148.
Crawford:
Earl of (1642); II. 327, 340.
Colonel; II. 435.
James, petition; I. 197.
Crawley:
Mr., Senior; II. 34.
Judge (1640); II. 270.
Crediton, letter dated; I. 276.
Creech, Mr.; I. 270.
Creed:
Mr.; II. 446.
Mrs. and Colonel Rolls; II. 416.
Staring; II. 416.
Captain, match with Millie Thouth (?); II. 403.
Crempen; I. 365.
Cressy, Ann, letter from; I. 399.
Crew: See also Carew.
Mr.; II. 185, 295, 337.
—— M.P. for Northamptonshire; II. 255.
Peter, clerk of St. Peter the Poor; I. 162.
Sir Randolph, Lord Chief Justice; I. 263, 273; II. 60.

Crew—cont.
Sir Randolph, letters from; I. 282, 327, 328, 434; II. 24, 49, 52, 54, 58, 165; III. 150.
—— and Lord Cholmondeley; III. 152.
Crewkerne:
John; II. 76.
—— letter from; II. 117.
Cricklowe, Samuel, letter from; II. 347.
Crispe, Henry; II. 97, 98, 107.
Croatia, bishop in; I. 94.
Croft; II. 116.
Horncastle sessions; I. 5.
John, of Lincoln College, to be fellow of All Souls, Oxford; I. 480.
Crofts:
Mr.; II. 305.
Miss, her dancing at a Court ball (1696); II. 366.
Sir William; II. 10.
Croissant, French ship, capture of; I. 132.
Croix, John de la, French merchant, petition of; III. 150.
Croke, Sir George, letter from; I. 416. See also Crooke.
Croker, R.; III. 107.
Cromer; I. 253.
Cromhall; II. 102.
Crompe, Henry; I. 482. See also Crump.
Crompton:
Mr.; II. 451; III. 53, 55, 97.
Sir Thomas, letter to; I. 60.
Cromwell:
Sir Oliver, entertains James I.; I. 50.
—— marries the widow of Horatio Pallavicini; I. 67.
Viscount (1625); I. 201, 216, 234, 248.
—— (1639); II. 228.
—— letter from; II. 220.
Oliver, his victories at Gainsborough and Newark; II. 338, 339.
—— his complaint against Lord Willoughby, of Parham; II. 342.
—— Lord Protector, city train-band raised for his guard; II. 343.
Cronstadt; III. 121.
Crooke:
Sir Henry, petition of; I. 185.
Sir Samuel; II. 32, 65.
Judge, allowed to retire; II. 288.
Crookhaven; I. 251, 258, 259.
letter dated; II. 32.
Crookhouse, John, letter from; I. 215.
Cropton, Caistor sessions; I. 4.
Crosby:
House, letter dated; II. 281.
Ravensworth, Westmoreland; I. 385.
Sir Pierce (Percy); I. 438; II. 118, 290.
—— letter from; II. 216.
—— and the Lord Deputy of Ireland; II. 226, 229.
Crossbrook manor, Cheshunt; II. 196.
Crossinge, Thomas, alderman of Exeter, letter from; I. 276.
Croswick, Brittany; I. 277.
Crow, Crowe:
Mr.; II. 109, 307.
—— his patent for casting iron ordnance; I. 126.
Sir John; III. 76.
Sackville; I. 116, 255; II. 57, 215, 221, 229.
Sir Sackville, letters from; I. 359, 384.
William, surgeon in the navy; I. 208.
Crowder, Mark, provincial of Canterbury; I. 407.
Crowland; I. 277.
Crown, the, issues of, report by Sir John Bingher on; I. 85.
Croxton; II. 185.
Croy:
M. le, concert given to William III. by; II. 404.
Duke of, taken prisoner by the King of Sweden (1700); II. 413.
Croydon; I. 27, 219.
Crump, —, his water engine for mines; I. 156.
Crutberg, Flanders; II. 401.
Cubley; I. 47.
Cuddesdn, enclosure of a coney warren at; II. 173.
Cudner, Robert, letter to; II. 311.
Cudworth; I. 150.
Cueva:
Cardinal de la; I. 239.
—— resident at Brussels for the King of Spain; I. 458.
Culling, Lord and Lady Bellamont, dispute between; III. 81.
Culmer, Mr.; I. 415.
Culmington, letter dated; II. 261.
Culpepper:
Colonel; II. 105.
Sir John; I. 389; II. 295.
—— Chancellor of the Exchequer; II. 302, 304.
Sir Thomas; I. 212.
Cumberland, II. 128, 130, 190. muster master of; III. 152.
Earl of. See Clifford, George and Henry.
Lord (1605), his meeting with Sir Fulke Greville; I. 52.
Cumin, Patrick, grant to; I. 158.
Cumings, Mr., M.P.; III. 161.
Cundy:
— cousin of Sir Francis Coke; I. 459.
Henry, letter from; I. 453.
Cunningham, Sir William; I. 307, 413.
Cuffe, —; II. 201.
Currants, report on; I. 352.
Curson, Comte de; II. 140.

Curwen :
Mr.; I. 29.
Sir Patricius; II. 233, 238; III. 152.
—— letters from; II. 223, 228, 237.
Curzon :
Mr.; II. 412, 441, 442, 449, 453, 457; III. 30, 84–98, 161, 170.
Mrs.; II. 373.
John, M.P.; II. 258, 444, 446; III. 7, 51, 54, 78.
—— letter from; III. 11.
—— letter to; III. 9.
Sir John, Baronet; II. 228, 308, 310, 315, 326, 336.
—— letter from; II. 260.
—— letter to; III. 259.
—— fined; II. 270.
Mary, Countess of Dorset, letter from; II. 56.
Sir Nathaniel; II. 384, 395, 401, 403, 408, 411, 449; III. 4, 13, 17, 23, 77, 79, 84–86.
—— story about his daughters; III. 38, 39.
Nellie; III. 8.
Cusake, Ham., letter from; I. 405.
—— certificate by; II. 116.
Cust, Captain Purey; II. 353.
—— letter to; II. 355.
Custom House, London, letter dated; II. 187.
Customs, the, lease of; I. 142, 156, 158.
of London; I. 104.
farmers of; I. 317, 319; II. 101.
farmed by Lord Cranborne; I. 58.
Cutteris, Edmond; I. 171.
Cutts :
Lord (1701); II. 427, 433; III. 177.
—— verses by; III. 187.
Henry; I. 140.
Cyprus; II. 447.
Czar, the (1698), plot for deposing; II. 376.

D.

Dacombe, Sir John, lessee of the provision of French wines for James I.; II. 25.
Dade, Henry, letter from; I. 429.
—— commissioner of Suffolk; II. 100.
Daglingworth, letter dated; I. 180.
Dahl, M., paints Vice-Chamberlain Coke's daughter's picture; III. 58, 59.
Dainty, the ship; I. 14.
Dakin, Dakeyne :
Mr.; III. 96.
John; II. 445.
—— letter from; III. 45.
Miss Mary; III. 58.
Dalby :
Leicestershire; I. 103.
manor; II. 115.
Mr., keeps his fellowship at Oxford (1696); II. 361.
John, letter from; II. 364, 365.
Dale, Mr.; II. 350.
Dalkeith; II. 18.
Lord and Lady (1703); III. 24.
Dallavall, Mr.; II. 39. See also Delaval.
Dallbier, Mons.; I. 317, 360.
Dallison :
Thomas; II. 231, 232.
Sir Thomas; II. 259.
Dalmatia, all bishops of, subject to the Archbishop of Spalato; I. 94.
Dalrigcourt, Mr.; I. 28.
Dalston :
Sir George; II. 190.
—— letters from; I. 280; II. 237.
Sir John; III. 152.
Dalton :
Mr.; III. 185.
C., letter from; III. 117.
W.; II. 224.
—— letter from; II. 95, 108.
Dalyson, William; I. 3.
Damport, Mr.; I. 412; II. 34. See also Davenport.
Damville, M., letter to; I. 378, 380, 386, 388.
Danby :
manor; I. 171.
Lord; I. 313. See Danvers, Henry.
John, examination of; I. 41.
Sir A., M.P. for Aldborough (1700); II. 414.
Thomas, deputy lieutenant of Yorkshire, letter from; II. 208.
Sir Thomas, M.P.; II. 311.
Danckert, —, pictures by; III. 112, 113.
Dand, Francis, of Mansfield, letter from; I. 34.
Dandoine, Philippe, of Calais; I. 308.
Daniel, Danyell :
—, buyer of the plate stolen from the Duchess of Richmond (1625); I. 199.
John, clerk of the peace in Ireland, petition of; I. 406.
—— of Dover; I. 336.
Danno, —; II. 257.
Dantzic; I. 20; II. 96.
letter dated; I. 395.
Dantzickers, the, masters of the sea; I. 252, 331.
Danvers :
Mr.; III. 132.
Lord (1625); I. 167, 385.
Elizabeth, letter from; II. 339.
Francis; I. 296.
Henry, Earl of Danby; I. 314, 397, 427; II. 136.
—— governor of Guernsey; I. 320.
—— letters from; I. 328, 365.
—— letter to; I. 315.

Danvers—cont.
Sir John, letter from; I. 331.
Wm., cousin of Sir John Coke, letters from; I. 328; II. 103, 134, 159, 249, 250, 331, 333, 336–338, 341.
Darcy:
Mr.; III. 81.
Lord (1551); I. 2.
Sir Francis; III. 136.
Nicholas; I. 482.
Darell:
Marmaduke; I. 9, 123.
Sir Marmaduke, cofferer to the Household; I. 210, 403; II. 208.
Robert, justice of the peace in Kent; I. 274.
Sir Robert; I. 212.
Darien, capitulation of the Scots at; II. 399.
Darlington fortified by the Scots' army; II. 280.
Darnyll, Mr.; I. 3.
Darrawart; II. 390.
Dartford; II. 275.
Dartmouth; I. 14, 234, 279; II. 76, 138.
letters dated; I. 151, 152, 279, 287, 289, 328; II. 117.
mayor of; I. 190.
——, letter from; I. 276.
men or ships of, capture effected by; I. 179.
ships of, to be taken up for the King's service; I. 253, 256, 326.
victualling operations at; I. 156.
Dashfield, —, Lord Keeper Coventry's servant; II. 151, 195.
Dashwood, Sir Robert, verses on his sister and daughter; III. 189.
D'Autriche, Cardinal; I. 25.
D'Avoux, Mons., afterwards Count, French ambassador at Hamburg and at the Hague; II. 237, 433, 437.
Davenant, Dr.; II. 350, 436.
Dr. Charles, letters from; I. 283; II. 388, 391, 409–411, 436.
——, elected M.P.; II. 415.
——, his book "Resumption of Grants"; II. 419.
John, bishop of Salisbury, letter to; II. 2.
—— death of; II. 281.
Davenport. See also Damport.
Sir Humphrey, Lord Chief Baron; II. 173, 270.
—— letter from Charles I. to; II. 106.
—— letters to; I. 424; II. 79.
Sir William, knighted at Warsop (1603); I. 43.
Daventry; II. 193.
the post of, William Clarke; I. 88.
David and Absalom; I. 372.
Davids, John; II. 348.
Davie, Davey:
Henry, bailiff of Yarmouth, letters from; I. 340; II. 169.
James, of Lyme Regis; II. 117.
Davis:
Mr.; II. 25, 26, 72, 350, 351.
—— letter to; II. 350.
—— servant of Wm., Earl of Devonshire; II. 360.
——, Commissioner for regulating hawkers and pedlars at Tower Hill; II. 360.
George, his account of Alderman Gore's estate; II. 248.
Paul, certificate of; II. 197.
Richard, excise officer in Truro; III. 107.
Robert; II. 355; III. 138.
——, letters from; II. 345, 352, 354.
Walter; II. 117.
Davison:
Alexander, mayor of Newcastle-on-Tyne, letter to; II. 218.
Thomas, burgess of Berwick; II. 261.
Dawes:
boatswain; I. 279.
Mr., his conference with Charles I.; I. 351, 352.
Sir Abraham; II. 164.
Captain; III. 31.
Dawnay:
E., letter from; II. 10.
Henry, Viscount Downe, M.P.; II. 414.
Dawson:
Mr.; I. 373.
Sir George; II. 234.
——, letter to; II. 235.
James, clerk of the peace in Ireland, petition of; I. 406.
John, letter from; I. 113.
Daye, Richard, letter from; II. 186.
Deakins, Henry; II. 353.
Deal; II. 159.
postmaster of; II. 127.
Dean, forest of; I. 294, 384, 387, 430, 439; 474; II. 51, 109, 225, 231, 233; III. 154.
—— letter dated; I. 301.
—— farmers of; II. 157.
—— ironworks in; I. 446.
—— propositions for; I. 265.
—— riots in; I. 452.
Mr.; II. 27.
Sir Richard, Lord Mayor of London (1629); I. 389, 390.
Deans and chapters, revenues of; II. 274.
Dearsley, John; I. 130.
Death, Roger; I. 6.
De Burgh Ulick, Earl of St. Albans and Earl of Clanricarde; II. 165.
—— letter from; I. 138.
Deccan, the; I. 447, 448.
Deeping; I. 277.
powder and match to be provided by (1598); I. 21.
Deering; II. 388.
letter dated; II. 390.
Sir Edward; II. 295.
Defiance, the ship; I. 13, 22, 32, 37, 137, III. 99.

De Fontaine, Comte; II. 168.
Degge, Mr.; III. 176.
De Grey, William; I. 263.
Dehaze, Cæsar; II. 84.
Deighton, Mr.; I. 68.
Deincourt, Francis, Lord (1625), letter from; I. 232.
De Jars, Chevalier; I. 423, 424.
De La Barre, merchant; I. 488; III. 88.
De La Frere, marshal; I. 475.
De La Grange, le Sieur Jacques; I. 403.
Delahay, John, conductor of Surrey recruits; I. 301.
Delahyde, L.; I. 482.
Delamare Forest, Cheshire; II. 185.
John, petition of; III. 150.
De Lange, Jacques, letter from; I. 403.
Delaval, Sir John; III. 89.
Delawarr, Lord; I. 201, 216; III. 46, 110, 187. scandal touching his mother-in-law (1705); III. 64.
D'Elbœuf, Duc; I. 475; II. 337.
Deleap, Jacob; II. 84.
Delft; I. 255, 304, 379; II. 8, 69, 150.
letter dated; I. 465.
Delight, the ship; I. 224.
Delinquents, fines imposed by the Goldsmiths' Hall Committee on; II. 311, 342.
De Lisle, M.; II. 44.
Delyn, N., sergeant-at-law, letter from; II. 91.
Demanty, Sieur; I. 260.
Demarke, John; II. 84.
De Matveoff, Muscovite ambassador, letter from; III. 79.
Denam, —; II. 107.
Denbigh, Earl of (1625); I. 201, 215. See also Fielding, Wm.
Denbighshire; II. 196.
Denham; II. 295, 306.
Sir John, baron of the Exchequer; I. 403.
Nicholas II. 309.
Denmark, King of; I. 162, 203, 233, 311, 365, 379, 380, 384, 388, 414; II. 28, 91, 230, 232, 304.
ambassador from; I. 320; II. 260.
——, petition presented by; I. 281.
ambassador to; I. 387.
son of, money furnished to; II. 231.
fleet of, off the coast of Norway (1606); I. 62.
promised contributions to; I. 257.
levies, recruits, volunteers for; I. 271, 297, 303, 318.
obtains troops from France; I. 340. operations of, at Aachen and on the Elbe; I. 306, 309.
courtesy shown to; I. 326.
state of his affairs (1627); I. 332, 335.
reported to be preparing to invade England (March 1642); II. 309. reported defeat of, by Van Tromp; II. 310–312.
—— by the Sweedes; II. 342.
Denmark, King of—cont.
reported death of; II. 330.
and the States General; II. 250.
Denmark House, Strand, Queen Henrietta Maria at; I. 392.
Privy Council to meet at; I. 403.
Dennell, John, letter from; II. 125.
Dennis, Denys:
Sir Edward; I. 203.
John (1696); II. 360.
Thomas, voted out of the magistracy at Grampound (1712); III. 100.
Denny:
Mr., of Weymouth; II. 36.
Lord, offer of, for [Sir] John Coke's house (1622); I. 120.
Edward, Earl of Norwich; II. 83.
Denton, letter dated; I. 308.
Depontanus, Marquis; I. 25.
Deprepetit, Mons.; II. 345, 348–350, 353, 355.
letters from; II. 346, 348.
letters to; II. 352.
manuscripts brought by the wife of; III. 32.
Deptford; I. 26, 28, 30, 37, 45, 46, 418, 434, 445; II. 143, 360, 456.
letters dated; I. 12, 14, 15, 30, 35, 39, 44, 148, 149, 165, 207, 279, 304, 307, 439, 445,; 4, 48, 75, 77.
naval stores at; I. 108.
ships at; I. 101.
yard; I. 280, 443, 447.
De Questor, Mr.; I. 330.
Matthew, letter from; I. 415.
Derby; I. 303, 386; II. 28, 56, 271, 322, 344, 383, 384, 474; III. 85, 86. ale; II. 403, 411.
boats, dispute about; II. 401.
the Court at; I. 168.
corporation of, letter from Charles I. to; II. 180.
borough election (1701); II. 444.
—— (1704); III. 54.
—— (1710); III. 86–99.
letters dated; I. 415; II. 259, 328, 351, 358, 455, 456; III. 3, 4, 38, 45, 67–70.
gaol, prisoners in, petition of (1702); III. 4.
Lord (1716); III. 116. See also Stanley, James, &c. mayor of, Wm. Fraunceys; II. 407, 408.
—— letter from; II. 413.
William, of Chester, letter from; I. 275.
St. Whalburg's parish in; III. 23.
the Talbot inn; III. 138, 139.
the White Hart; III. 161.
Derby Hills; II. 257, 264, 282.
Derby House, letter dated; I. 114.
Derbyshire; I. 44, 413, 415; II. 326, 338. deputy lieutenants of; II. 228, 255, 310.
grand jury of, letter from; II. 449.

Derbyshire—cont.
election (1701); II. 442.
—— moneys spent at; II. 445.
—— votes polled at; II. 446.
"inclosurers" in (1631); I. 426.
justices of the peace; I. 119; II. 282.
mines in; II. 29.
miners, tumult of; II. 61, 62, 69, 70.
papists' rising in; II. 305.
recusants; I. 227.
Derham, Thomas; I. 263.
Dering:
Anthony, justice of Kent; I. 274.
Sir Edward, Lieutenant of Dover Castle; II. 56, 263, 311, 341.
—— letters from; I. 452, 460, 463, 467, 487; II. 5.
—— letter to; I. 456.
Derribas, letter dated; I. 20.
Derry, the (Londonderry); I. 450.
bishop of (1632); I. 469. See also Bramhall.
Derval forest, Herefordshire; I. 294.
Derwent river, Derbyshire; II. 153, 180, 383; III. 19.
Desert [Dysart?], Lord (1699); II. 395.
Désiré, the ship, pinnace of Charles I.; I. 151, 152, 279, 300.
letter dated; I. 148, 156.
Desmond, Earl of (1619–1624); I. 106, 158, 170.
D'Espernon:
M.; II. 140.
Duke, made general of the French army at Rochelle; II. 333, 467.
Despotin, Gaspar, doctor of physic; I. 329, 330.
Destiny, the ship; I. 101, 161.
De Toran, governor of Cassall;
Deunen, letter dated; II. 66.
Devater; I. 57.
Devereux:
Robert, Earl of Essex (1576–1601); I. 15, 16, 24, 28, 36.
—— arraignment and execution of; I. 29.
—— (1603–1646); I. 201, 216; II. 123, 221, 225, 273, 285, 302, 303, 314, 341; III. 154.
—— Lord General of the Parliamentary forces; II. 321, 323, 327, 331, 341.
—— and the Cadiz expedition; I. 241, 243.
—— his perquisites as vice-admiral; I. 225.
—— his arrival at Pendennis (1625); I. 235.
—— —— at Colnbrook; II. 336.
—— letter from; II. 319.
—— letters to; II. 217, 223.
—— success of; II. 324.
—— enters London with the Parliamentary army; II. 325.
—— sits down before Reading (April 1643); II. 333.
Devereux—cont.
Robert, in a letter to the House expresses a wish for peace; II. 335.
—— long march of; II. 337.
—— protest of; II. 304.
Sir Walter, petition of; I. 198.
Devic (De Vie), Mr., agent of Charles I. to the King of France; I. 364, 418, 472 II. 33, 62, 103, 142, 190, 196; III. 84.
Devizes, confirmation of charter for (1639); II. 213, 226.
Devon; I. 35, 42, 393, 395.
Lord (1700), i.e., Cavendish; II. 412.
Devonshire:
commissioners of the navy in; I. 275.
deputy lieutenants and justices of; I. 216.
Earl of. See Blount, Charles.
Earl and Duke of. See Cavendish, William. foresters; I. 15.
ministers in; II. 44.
papists in; I. 393.
purveyance compositions in; I. 73.
severe snowstorm in (1625); I. 230.
vice-admiral of, orders to; I. 122.
Devorax park; I. 152.
Dewchurch, Herefordshire; I. 40.
Dexamon, Jean; II. 178.
D'Eyncourt:
Lord (1625); I. 229.
—— ill-usage of, by his stepmother; I. 220.
—— (1633); II. 16, 61.
Diaz, Bartholomew; I. 20.
Dickenson:
Mr.; II. 47.
—— letter from; II. 5.
Dickins, Francis, letter from; II. 450.
Dickson, George, curate and vicar of Preston, letter from; I. 381, 405.
Dieppe; I. 200, 207, 287, 318, 335, 379, 400, 409, 462; II. 93, 101, 102, 117, 202–204.
letter dated; I. 487.
Diest; III. 64.
Diet, the, of Germany; II. 115.
Digby:
George, governor of the Guinea Company, letter from; I. 275.
George, Lord, son of the Earl of Bristol, his conduct and speeches in Strafford's case; II. 279.
John, Earl of Bristol; I. 139, 353; II. 118, 156, 263, 304, 305, 320, 321, 330.
—— letter from; II. 180.
—— thought to be aiming at the deputyship of Ireland; II. 272.
—— committed to the Tower; II. 311.
Lord (1642); II. 290.
—— arrival at Flushing; II. 304.
—— (1697); II. 369, 400.

Digby—cont.
Sir Kenelm; I. 413, 417, 439, 455; II. 12, 65, 154, 320.
—— letters from; I. 428, 439; II. 1, 32, 60, 64, 85, 90, 92–94.
—— letter to; II. 247.
Captain Simon, cousin of Sir Kenelm; I. 485, 486; II. 95.
—— letter from; I. 482.
—— English agent in Russia of Charles I.; II. 178.
Digges:
Fabian, commissioner for passage at Margate; II. 161.
Sir Dudley; I. 183, 212.
Dighton:
John of Horstowe; I. 4.
Thomas of Wadingworth; I. 5.
Digin; I. 421.
Dilkes, Sir Thomas; III. 58.
Dillingers; III. 43.
letter dated; III. 40.
Dillington, Robert, letter from; I. 344.
Dillon:
Lord Viscount; I. 399.
Lady, verses on; III. 188.
James; I. 481.
R.; II. 231, 233.
Dineley:
Mr., servant of the Queen of Bohemia; II. 26; III. 145.
T., letter from; II. 44.
Dingle, Decouth; I. 332.
Dingley, William; I. 164.
Diogenes Laertius; I. 284.
Discharge, the ship; I. 35.
Discovery, the ship; I. 448.
Dish, Captain Robert; I. 429.
Dissell, Mr.; III. 110.
Dissenters; II. 444.
Ditchfield, Edward, prisoner at Lancaster Castle; III. 152.
Ditton, letter dated; II. 196.
Dives, Sir Lewis; II. 322, 323.
Dixie:
Sir Wolstan; I. 296, 430.
Mrs., formerly wife of John, son of Sir Richard Harpur; I. 181.
Dixon, Mr.; I. 384.
Dixwell, Sir Basil, the King's gamekeeper at Folkestone; II. 180.
Dobbs, Mrs.; II. 41.
Dobson, Mr.; II. 84.
Docksey, Ralph, letter from; III. 79.
Doctors Commons, letter dated from; I. 159, 239, 388; II. 58, 154.
Docwra, Henry, letter from; I. 328.
Dodds, William, examination of; II. 107.
Dodson, Mr.; III. 68.
Doll, Mrs.; III. 111.
Dollard, —; II. 193.
Dolman, Captain; III. 65.
Dolphin, the ship; I. 344, 345.
Domelow, John; III. 138.
Domesday Book, extracts; II. 343.
Donalsond, Thomas; II. 231.
Doncaster; II. 346.
letter dated; II. 13, 354, 451; III. 4.
Lord, James Hay; I. 44, 105, 113.
Donegal; I. 408; II. 298.
Castle; II. 298, 299.
freebooters in; II. 230.
regiments of; III. 38.
Donnington; I. 277; II. 245, 246, 249, 255, 264, 282; III. 135.
letter dated; I. 448.
powder and match to be provided by (1598); I. 21.
manor; II. 306.
park; II. 428.
Donisthorp; II. 454; III. 11, 85, 95.
Donnell, Captain Richard, letter from; II. 164.
Dopt, Mr.; III. 16.
Dorchester; I 383.
gaol, letter dated; I. 470.
Viscount. See Carleton, Dudley.
Dores, S., letter from; II. 149.
Dorington, Sir William; I. 471.
Dorislaus, Isaac, letters from; I. 370, 377.
Dorking; I. 220.
letter dated; II. 437.
Dorman, David, examiner of foreign news to be printed by the Stationer; I. 158.
Dormer:
Lord, hereditary master of the hawks (temp. Eliz.); I. 291.
Lady, widow; I. 120.
Charles; II. 377, 390, 391.
R.; II. 403.
Robert, Lord Carnarvon, killed at Newbury; II. 337; III. 141.
—— valour of; II. 260.
Dorney Court, Windsor, letter dated; III. 16.
Dorset:
Lord; III. 176. See also Sackville.
house, letter dated; I. 186, 264, 392.
Mary, Countess of (1625), letter from; I. 186.
shire; I. 419.
—— musters; I. 22.
—— recusants numerous in; I. 242.
Dort; I. 271.
Douay; I. 448; II. 52.
Doubleday, Henry; II. 353–355.
Doughty, William, mayor of King's Lynn, letter from; I. 275.
Douglas:
Captain, slain at Worcester; II. 322.
Captain Alexander, letters from; I. 345, 347.
Sir George, English ambassador in Poland; II. 103, 106, 127.
—— instructions for; II. 95.
—— allowances for the funeral of; II. 181.
James, his brother and administrator; II. 181.
Sir John, letter from; I. 305.
William, Earl of Morton; I. 360, 366.
—— Marquis of (1639); II. 231.
Sir William, sheriff of Teviotdale; II. 260.

Dove :
the river ; II. 397.
—— fishing lease in ; II. 422, 423.
Captain ; III. 22.
Dovebridge ; III. 98.
Dover ; I. 170, 212, 238, 331, 336, 341, 423, 461, 467 ; II. 5, 82, 84, 87, 98, 106, 128, 133, 162, 196 ; III. 123.
letters dated ; I. 180, 183, 193, 226, 271, 453 ; II. 69, 92, 141, 157, 188.
admiral's court at ; I. 189.
Castle ; I. 186, 189, 318, 423, 459, 487.
—— letters dated ; I. 177, 196, 200, 225, 226, 229–231, 237, 254, 289, 315, 316, 318, 319, 337, 456, 467, 470 ; II. 5, 56, 96, 144, 157, 181, 187.
—— church in, damage done to the tower of ; I. 173.
—— lieutenant of ; II. 176.
—— marshal of ; II. 96.
port of, customs of ; II. 187.
governor of ; II. 151.
graving-dock at ; I. 236.
harbour ; I. 452 ; II. 119.
magistrates of ; II. 187.
mayor and jurates of, letter from ; I. 229.
member of Parliament for ; I. 343.
merchants of ; II. 139.
passage-boat ; II. 107.
pier ; I. 240.
soldiers transported from ; I. 177.
Earl of (1634) ; III. 65.
Road, letters dated ; II. 148, 161.
Doves, Cobham, pirate ; I. 478.
Dowce, Sir Edward, cupbearer of Anne of Denmark, Queen of James I. ; I. 198.
Dowd, Charles ; I. 482.
Dowdell, Mr., a lawyer ; I. 389.
Dowell :
Captain Richard, examination of ; I. 402.
—— petition of ; I. 403.
Dowesdale fen ; I. 277.
Down, county ; II. 298, 301.
Down and Connor, bishop of (1632) ; I. 455, 469.
Downemore ; II. 156.
Downes :
— a pirate ; I. 432.
Andrew, letter from ; I. 31.
Edward ; I. 130.
Downing :
Captain ; I. 117, 229, 348.
Dr., examination of ; II. 272.
Mr., memorials of ; I. 126, 236, 456.
Emanuel, letters from ; I. 160, 211, 434, 442, 464 ; II. 38, 64, 72.
—— letters to ; I. 449, 482 ; II. 46.
Josua ; I. 130, 185.
—— appointed commissioner for survey of ships vice T. Norreys ; I. 183.
Downing—cont.
Josua, letters from ; I. 187, 189, 204, 210, 218, 219, 274, 280, 282, 301, 302, 304.
Downpatrick ; I. 385 ; II. 85.
Downs, the ; I. 23, 417, 432.
letters dated ; I. 147, 152, 157, 175, 178, 185, 199, 219, 226, 258, 273.
ships in ; I. 146, 232, 330, 379, 434, 444 ; II. 6, 86, 87, 119, 122.
storms and disasters in ; I. 173.
Dragon, the ship ; I. 258.
Drake :
Mr. ; II. 217.
—— cousin of Sir James Bagge ; I. 190.
—— of Devonshire, cousin of Buckingham ; I. 221.
Francis, certificate by ; I. 140.
Sir Francis, letters from ; I. 9, 13, 14, 18, 275.
John, letters from ; I. 242, 274, 276, 282, 285.
Drakelow ; II. 361, 363.
Draper :
Captain ; I. 217.
Thomas ; III. 138.
Drapers' trade secrets revealed by mixed marriages ; I. 466.
Drauffield, Thomas ; I. 402.
Dreadnought, the ship ; I. 13, 30, 32, 109, 192, 199, 254, 288, 485, 486 ; II. 6, 12, 227.
—— letters dated ; II. 4, 19.
Drent ; II. 110.
Driffield, frauds by the deputy victualler of ; I. 288.
Driver, Captain ; I. 307.
Drogheda ; I. 402.
letter dated ; I. 448.
Droiscourt manor, Gloucestershire ; I. 40.
Drum, the laird of (1639), spoiled by the Covenanters ; II. 222.
Drumbler, the ship ; I. 167, 236.
Drummond :
David ; I. 159.
Lady Jane, marriage of ; I. 80, 82, 87.
Drury :
Mr. ; II. 68.
Captain ; II. 151.
Anthony ; I. 263.
Sir Robert, kills Sir Robt. Killigrew in a duel in Spain ; I. 62.
Drywood :
Mr. ; II. 65.
—— letter from ; II. 169.
Duart, Jacques, jeweller to Charles I. ; II. 186.
Dublin ; I. 160, 448 ; II. 53, 145, 156, 286, 312.
letters dated ; I. 36, 324, 361, 362, 379, 382, 386, 389, 398, 408, 426, 427, 436, 444, 448, 450–452, 454, 459, 473, 480, 482 ; II. 4, 32, 59, 65, 78, 83, 101, 132, 148, 152, 155, 171, 193, 211, 220, 227, 229, 233, 448, 455.

Dublin—cont.
Archbishop, mayor, &c. of, affront offered to (1630); I. 399.
Castle, letters dated; I. 328, 333, 342, 344, 371, 372, 388, 427, 455, 457; II. 11, 116.
Cook Street, house of friars in; I. 399.
masshouses, number of, contrasted with number of churches in; I. 361, 362.
papistical aldermen of, committed to prison; I. 399.
pirates at; II. 11.
rebels round; II. 302.
Trinity College; I. 367; II. 193.
Duboys, —, an engineer; II. 224.
Du Bosc, M.; III. 157.
Duchy Court, proposed abolition of (1628); I. 351.
House, letters dated; I. 370, 399, 403; II. 53, 119, 155.
Ducie, Sir R.; II. 102.
Duck, Dr. Arthur, chancellor of the diocese of London; I. 416; II. 262.
Duckett:
—, notable thief; I. 282.
John; I. 167.
Du Cass, —; III. 99.
Dudeney, Mr.; II. 43, 85.
Dudley:
John, Earl of Warwick (1549); I. 1, 39.
Joseph; II. 353.
Robert, Earl of Leicester; I. 9.
Sir Robert (1603–1605); I. 45, 51, 55.
—— (1639); II. 248.
Due Repulse, the ship; I. 13.
Duffield; II. 269; III. 94, 95.
Anne, letter to; I. 411.
Mr., note of, as to light on Goodwin Sands; I. 134.
Dumbarton Castle; II. 298.
Forth; II. 231.
Dumbrow; II. 19.
Dumfries; II. 222, 223.
Dumlanerick, Lord (1639); II. 223.
Du Moulin; I. 423, 424. See also Moulin.
M., letter to; I. 310.
Dunaeus; I. 18.
Dunbar, Mr., a sectary; I. 455.
Duncannon Fort; III. 177, 178.
Dunck, Edmund, sheriff of Berkshire, petition of; III. 151.
Duncombe:
Mr.; II. 388.
—— comptroller of the army, death from small-pox; III. 34, 35.
Dundonald, Lord (1716); III. 116.
Dunfermline, Lord (1640); II. 265.
Dunford, Mr.; II. 248.
Dungarvan; I. 34.
Castle; II. 300.
Lord (1632), letter from; I. 468.
Dungeness lighthouse, built by Bullook; I. 111, 150, 151, 212.
Dunham, Spittle sessions; I. 3.
Dunington, suit between the Lord Admiral (1604) and Lady Russell touching; I. 50.
Dunkirk; I. 211, 223, 231, 289, 395, 399, 444, 467, 487; II. 6, 107, 119, 122, 128, 141, 145, 148, 151, 185, 188, 243, 248, 249; III. 71, 155. the army of; I. 309, 311.
the harbour of the Splinter at, plan to destroy it; I. 236.
ill-usage of Englishmen at (1628–1632); I. 336, 461.
letter dated; I. 403.
operations at; I. 211, 214, 235.
ships; I. 143–147, 163, 189, 207, 219, 226, 312, 319, 320, 322, 334, 409, 456, 487; II. 7, 16, 89, 117, 130, 154, 166.
Dunkirkers; I. 178, 219, 251, 278, 287, 304, 417–419, 440; II. 33.
capture of; I. 268.
sink twelve of the English fleet sent to Rochelle; I. 341.
damage done by; I. 263; II. 175.
intercept wine-laden English ships from Bordeaux; I. 236.
chase boats; I. 157.
pirates; I. 260, 337, 445.
at Harwich; I. 253.
at the Spurn; I. 253.
at Scarborough; I. 223.
at Purbeck; I. 347.
Dunne:
near Berwick; II. 248.
Mr.; I. 127.
Dunning:
Captain; II. 119, 130.
John, protection for; I. 148.
Dunnose; I. 344.
Dunsany; I. 482.
Dunsmore:
Lord (1639); II. 170.
—— marriage of his daughter to the Earl of Southampton; II. 314.
—— his licence to impark at Apscourt manor; II. 208.
Dunstable; II. 40.
Dunster, Robert; I. 451.
Du Pont, Mons.; I. 400.
Duport, James, of Trinity College, Cambridge; I. 404.
Duppa:
Captain; I. 115, 262, 323, 330, 435.
—— and the brewers of London; II. 174.
Dr., to be bishop of Chichester; II. 209.
Dupplin, Lord; II. 70.
Duras, Marquis de; II. 140.
Durdans, the, Epsom, illuminations in the Grove at (1701); II. 433.
Durham (Dereham), Lady (1698); II. 372, 373.
Durham; II. 63, 87, 89, 232, 260, 435.
county; II. 128.
letter dated; II. 6, 7, 16, 50, 80, 89, 113, 240. warrant dated; II. 16.

Durham—cont.
assizes; I. 466.
bishop of. See Morton, Thomas.
bishopric of; I. 290, 379.
cathedral; I. 466.
House, in St. John's, London; I. 262.
—— letters dated; I. 418, 431, 433, 434, 446, 484, 485; II. 15, 47, 107, 152, 203, 226.
Durie, Gilbert, letter from; II. 44.
Durlock, Lord of; I. 311.
Du Roché, Mons.; I. 400, 401.
Durton; III. 167.
Dusseldorf; I. 391.
Duston; II. 248–250, 254, 256.
letters dated; II. 343.
Dutch:
captains; I. 170.
church in Vernacks Draining; II. 127.
East India Company, ships of. See East India Company.
fishermen, dispersed by the Earl of Northumberland (1636); II. 136. fleet off St. Ives; I. 215.
freebooters; I. 222.
in Brazil, overthrow of; I. 110.
prosecution of, by English merchants; I. 172.
ships, capture of; I. 133.
—— engagement with (1623); I. 146.
wrongs done to; I. 102.
Dutlingen; III. 44.
Dutton, Mr.; II. 7.
Sir Thomas; I. 449.
Dyer, James, town clerk of Bristol; II. 147.
Dymmock:
Charles, of Cotes; I. 3.
Edward, of Thornton; I. 5.
Sir Edward; I. 5, 6, 10, 11.
—— letters from; I. 10, 11.
Dyott:
——; II. 417, 419.
Madame; II. 425.
Richard, letter from; II. 40.
Dyseworth grange, Kegworth; II. 419.
Dyx, Mr.; I. 81.

E.

Eachard, John, bailiff of Yarmouth, letter from; I. 322.
Eade, Walter; II. 84.
Eagle, the ship; I. 371.
Eare:
Mr., of Edale; I. 282.
Thomas, of Hassop, Derbyshire; I. 228.
Francis, collector of ship money; II. 150.
Earl, General (1716); III. 116.
Earle, M.; II. 333.
Earnshaw, Francis, his widow; I. 194.
Eason, —; I. 214.
East Goscot hundred, subsidy rolls; I. 296.
East India Company; I. 231, 252, 290, 429; II. 16, 46. complaint of; I. 186, 189.
governors of, letter from; I. 474.
money claimed from; I. 160.
and Lord Cottington; II. 260.
Dutch, ships of; I. 323–327, 366; II. 6.
Merchants' remonstrance; I. 366.
—— treated with for victualling the Navy; I. 213.
Bill for a new company (1698); II. 374.
East Indies; I. 465; II. 105, 145.
trade with, advantages of; I. 154, 172, 290.
ships from; II. 162.
Eastland Company; I. 162, 213.
—— petition of; I. 402.
ports; I. 430.
East Mark, letter dated; II. 115.
Easton:
letters dated; I. 311.
Captain Richard, letter from; II. 56.
Eaton:
Mr., III. 8.
Humfry; III. 138.
Thomas; II. 445.
Ebersbach; III. 44.
Ebersdorf; II. 379.
Edale; I. 282; III. 6.
Eden, Dr.; II. 75, 100, 154.
Edenshall, particulars of land at; I. 145.
Edinburgh; II. 12, 290; III. 28.
letters dated; II, 220, 225; III. 153.
mob abuse the messeugers of Charles I.; II. 206.
Parliament at; II. 280.
Castle, letters dated; II. 95, 129.
—— plans as to; II. 219.
Edisbury:
Mr.; I. 214; II. 112.
Henry, letter from; I. 165.
Kenrick; I. 355.
—— letters from; I. 347–349, 361, 369, 370, 430; II. 4, 48, 52, 75, 123, 146, 152.
Edmonds, Edmunds:
M.; II. 63.
Edward; I. 285.
Thomas, letter from; I. 471.
Sir Thomas, treasurer of the household; I. 94; II. 52, 126, 131, 241.
—— ambassador to France; I. 386.
—— letter from; II. 138.
—— memorial of; III. 142.
—— proceedings before; II. 3.
Edmonton; I. 354.
letters dated; I. 166, 169, 219, 240, 248, 269, 325, 350, 360, 412.

Edward III.:
poverty of England during the reign of; III. 52.
revival of the office of aunage of linen cloths from the time of; II. 176.
Edward, the Black Prince; III. 52.
Edward VI., his travail with his sister Mary to conform in religion; I. 1.
Edwards:
the Ashby carrier; III. 169, 172.
Mr., deputy of the Merchant Adventurers' Company; II. 309.
Edwin:
John, of Baggrave; III. 27.
Elizabeth, letter from; III. 158.
Effingham, Lady (1716); III. 116.
Egan, Thomas, of East Looe; I. 265.
Egerton:
Edward, claims of; I. 158.
—— petition of; I. 199.
Sir John, Viscount Brackley and first earl of Bridgewater; I. 94.
—— Lord President of Wales; I. 310; II. 101, 219.
—— marriage of his son; II. 290.
—— letters from; I.; 464; II. 74, 76, 158, 188, 205, 212, 216.
—— letter to; II. 73, 188.
Thomas, Lord Ellesmere, Lord Chancellor, death of (March 1617); I. 94.
Egginton; I. 77.
Egham; I. 319, 343; II. 241.
Egmont, Count; II. 188, 276.
Elan, Jacques, merchant of Antwerp; I. 388.
Elbe, the; I. 234, 307, 309, 317, 334, 340, 378, 387, 414, 436; II. 185.
Elbing, news from; I. 331.
Elbœuf, Duke d'; I. 475; II. 337.
Electresses, the two, at Loo, Sept. 1700; II. 404.
Elford, Lord (1716); III. 116.
Elliot:
Mr., parson of Wolston; I. 99.
—— the King's page; II. 316.
Sir John, vice-admiral of Devon, accounts of; I. 177, 179.
—— commission for; I. 156, 157.
—— examination of; I. 145.
—— opposes the pressing of seamen; I. 190.
—— father-in-law of, practice of; I. 282.
—— mutinous opinions of; I. 329.
—— visitors to his window in the tower; I. 384.
—— his influence in St. Germans; I. 251. servant of Sir Francis Stewart; I. 222.
Elizabeth:
Princess, daughter of James I., Electress Palatine; I. 77, 199. See also Bohemia, Queen of.
Elizabeth—cont.
Queen of England; I. 19; II. 67, 79, 87.
—— grants by; I. 39, 40.
—— jewels adjudged to, from prizes: I. 35.
—— debts and bonds of, to Sir H. Palavicini; I. 67.
—— household establishment charges of; I. 292.
—— statute against recusants in the second year of; I. 481.
—— policy of, sketched by Secretary Coke; II. 296.
the ship; I. 22, 31, 37.
Jonas, the ship; I. 13.
Ellenburg; I. 441.
Ellis:
George; II. 213.
Robert; II. 103.
Thomas; I. 6.
—— glover, created a Knight; I. 164.
Mr., letter from; II. 68, 95.
Ellison, Elizabeth; III. 172.
Elsey, Mr.; I. 347.
Elsinore; I. 233, 234, 430, 431, 436, 441; II. 52.
fleet preparing at, for the invasion of England (1642); II. 309.
Eltham park, deer killed by James I. in; I. 163; III. 151.
Elways, Elwes:
Mr.; I. 178, 209, 361, 386, 410.
Mrs.; her death from small-pox; I. 348, 353.
Philip, her son, his death at Edmonton; I. 354.
Henry; I. 299.
John, grandson of Sir John Coke; I. 438, 479.
Ely:
bishop of. See Felton, Nicholas; Turner, Francis; White, Francis; Wren, Matthew.
House, letter dated from; I. 308.
Embden; I. 365; II. 110, 244.
letters dated; I. 20, 23, 26, 380.
burghers of; I. 336, 414.
Emerich, garrison of; I. 113, 391; II. 110.
Emperor, the, of Germany, Ferdinand II.; I. 336.
—— resolutions of, at Ratisbon (1630); I. 408.
Emyn, William, churchwarden of St. Martins-in-the-Fields (1623); I. 128.
England, invasion of, preparations in Portugal for (1628); I. 342.
Englefield, Sir Francis; I. 228.
Englis, Friar Angel, Capuchin priest, letter from; I. 105.
Enkhuisen, Holland; I. 328, 366; III. 146.
Ennerdale forest, Cumberland; I. 294.
Ennisboffin; I. 210.
Enniskillen, letter dated; I. 367.
Ensor, Mr.; III. 27.

Entrance, the ship; I. 189, 219, 229, 240, 241, 313, 322.
letters dated; I. 250, 252; II. 119.
Epictetus, edition in Greek and Latin of; I. 284.
Episcopacy:
its re-establishment in Scotland by James I.; I. 58.
abolition of, debated in the Commons (1641); II. 285, 288.
Bill for extirpation of; II. 329, 330.
petition in favour of; II. 295.
opinion of Sir John Coke the younger on; II. 272.
Epitaphs, Secretary Coke's observations on; I. 91.
Epping, Essex; II. 261.
Eppingen, letter dated; III. 44.
Epsley. See Hippisley.
Epsom; II. 403.
Epworth; I. 3.
Eredagh, Ireland; II. 125.
Eresby, letter dated; II. 142.
Erisey, Richard, letter from; I. 276.
Ermyn, Sir William; II. 383, 413. See also Armyn.
Errington, Henry; II. 21.
Ersfield, Captain Anthony; I. 151, 203.
letters from; I. 33, 34, 36, 61, 152, 218.
Erskine: See also Arraskin.
Lord (1634), letter from; II. 54.
Sir Alexander; II. 210.
James, Earl of Buchan; II. 95.
John, Earl of Mar, letters from; II. 121, 129.
Robert, tailor to James I.; I. 194.
Thomas, Earl of Kellie, letter from; II. 71, 162.
Erwin, Sir William; I. 308.
Esau and Jacob; I. 372.
Escaglio, Abbot; I. 323.
Eskrigge; I. 20.
Esmonde:
Lawrence, Lord of; II. 132.
—— fine imposed on; II. 229.
Espérance, the ship; I. 302, 346, 355.
Essex; I. 420.
pressing of seamen in; I. 300.
purveyance, compositions for; I. 73.
tumults in, touching commons; II. 281.
Earl of. See Devereux, Robert.
Mrs. Mary, cause in the Court of Requests; I. 174, 186.
Lady (1716); III. 116.
House, Strand; I. 19, 22.
Eston, Lady; I. 308.
Estkerkbie, Horncastle sessions; I. 5.
Etherope, letter dated; II. 146.
Ethiopia, pretended king of, in Paris (1635); II. 88.
Eton:
College; I. 31, 159, 380.
—— master at; I. 91.
provost of, Henry Saville; I. 115.
Etwall; I. 228; III. 136.
Eugene:
Prince; II. 430, 435, 444; III. 37, 39, 43, 44, 46, 59, 100.
—— Luzzara, an enconium upon; III. 178.
Eure, Lord, Lord President of Wales; I. 220, 290, 406.
Europe and the Spanish succession (1701); II. 420.
Euston; II. 216.
Evans:
Mr.; II. 363; III. 158.
Miss, benefit of; III. 79.
John, letter from; III. 109.
Roger, bellringer to Prince Henry (son of James I.) and to Charles I.; I. 198.
Evelyn:
Mr.; I. 434; II. 49, 56, 128.
Sir John; II. 325.
—— declared a traitor by Charles I.; II. 326.
Everingham, Henry; I. 4.
Evers, Peter; I. 3.
Eversfield, Mr.; I. 24.
Every:
Mr., chosen burgess for Leceister; II. 252.
Captain, love affair of; II. 415.
Lady; III. 68.
Ann; II. 407.
Sir Henry, Bart.; II. 344, 358, 397, 399, 403, 408; III. 2, 11, 161.
—— letter from; II. 394, 453.
—— death of; II. 407.
J.; III. 161.
Lady; II. 407.
Ewen, William, letter from; II. 149.
Ewens, Robert, auditor, letter from; I. 67.
Exchange, the New, Strand; II. 20, 48, 97, 135, 213.
Exchequer, the:
arrears due to Sir John Coke from; I. 358.
barons of; II. 70, 155. See also Walter, Sir John; Davenport, Humphry.
—— order to; II. 19.
Chamber, Bill pending in; II. 106.
Chancellor of. See Weston, Richard Lord.
Court of; I. 423; II. 91.
—— return of a commission into; I. 325.
decrees in; I. 457, 461, 472; II. 79. fees; I. 418.
office; II. 82, 256.
revenue of, mode of increasing it; I. 291, 292.
tellers of; I. 366; III. 54.
Excise Commissioners; II. 350.
Exeter; II. 138; III. 15.
bishop of, letter to (1623); I. 136.
—— —— (1624); I. 157, 201. See also Carey, Valentine; Hall, Joseph.
—— successor to (1626); I. 271.

Exeter—cont.
letters dated; I. 190, 201, 302, 303, 417, 452; II. 85, 108, 116, 215.
wall of the castle of, hole made therein by the Earl of Bedford (1623); I. 136.
commissioners of oyer and terminer at; I. 156.
Earl of (1623); I. 120, 298. See also Cecil, William.
House; I. 255.
Jesuit at, pardoned by Charles I.; I. 208; III. 134.
mayor of; I. 190.
—— and aldermen of, letter from; I. 276.
merchants, complaint of; II. 43.
plague at; I. 213, 249.
Exmoor forest; I. 294.
Exmouth, prize ships brought into; I. 280.
Eyre:
Mr.; III. 161.
—— of Holm; III. 2, 6, 21.
Francis; II. 170.
Gervase; II. 414.
Thomas; III. 21, 23, 57.
William; II. 358.
Eyton, Sir Philip of Shropshire; I. 433.

F.

Fagan, Mr., chancery suit (Ireland) of; II. 51.
Fairfax:
Ferdinand; II. 228.
Francis; II. 68.
Thomas Viscount, of Emely; II. 68.
Sir Thomas, Lord General; II. 318, 322, 339.
—— encounters the Duke of Newcastle; II. 328.
—— victory of, at Nantwich; II. 341.
Faith, the ship; I. 226, 253.
Falconbridge, Lord. See Belasyse, Thomas.
Falconberg, Lord (1632); I. 475. See also Belasyse, Thomas.
Falconry, notices of; III. 136.
Falkener:
Edward, letters from; I. 445; II. 77, 112. See also Faulkner.
John; II. 143.
Falkland; I. 159.
letter dated; II. 25.
Viscount. See Carey, Henry.
Lady (1627); I. 304.
Falkingham; II. 162, 352.
Falmouth; I. 216, 223, 234, 240, 249, 324, 417; II. 118, 145, 202.
graving dock at; I. 236.
pressing of seamen at; I. 326.
ships brought into; I. 371.
Fanning, John; I. 194.
Fanshawe:
Mr.; II. 176, 364, 396.
—— death of (1699); II. 395.
Mrs., sister of Vice-Chamberlain Coke; II. 399, 416, 417, 430, 431; III. 82, 165, 167.
Mistress Ann; II. 364.
—— letter from; II. 371.
Mr. Auditor; I. 426.
Sir Henry; I. 54.
John, letters from; II. 376, 394.
—— of Parslowes, Essex; III. 182.
Mrs. Katherine, letter from; II. 371.
Lionel; II. 310.
Margaret; III. 58.
Mrs. Mary (sister of Vice-Chamberlain Coke), letters from; II. 365, 369, 410.
Sir Thomas; I. 294; II. 362, 363, 369; III. 58.
Lady; II. 362, 363.
—— gives birth to a son (1696); II. 363, 369.
William; II. 46.
—— memorial of; III. 182.
—— eldest son of John Fanshawe of Parslowes; III. 182.
Fareham; I. 406.
letter dated; I. 152.
Farinton, regiment of; III. 72.
Farleigh manor, Gloucestershire; I. 40.
Farmer, Sir George; I. 37.
Farnell, Captain Morgan; II. 5.
Farneton, letter dated; II. 42.
Farnham; II. 195.
letter dated; I. 466.
seeks incorporation (1632); I. 467.
Farnworth, Ellis; III. 30.
Farre, Sir Robert; II. 211.
Farrer:
Colonel; I. 429.
John, of Cropton; I. 4.
William; I. 184.
Farringdon, Lord General Essex and the King face each other at; II. 337.
Fast, General, appointed by Charles I.; I. 343.
Faughera, co. Louth; I. 27.
Fauld, letter dated; I. 28.
Faulkner, Mr.; I. 30.
Faunt, Fawnt:
Mr.; II. 255.
Mrs., sister of Sir John Coke the younger (?); II. 283.
Mrs., widow; II. 332.
Anthony; I. 296.
George, petition of; II. 262.
Timothy; II. 125.
Sir William; I. 296.
—— letter from; II. 197.
Faverall, Mr., master cook; III. 110.
Fawlay, purchase of; I. 128.

Fay, Noe du, letter from; I. 156.
Fayal; I. 17.
Fayus, Mr.; I. 68.
Feartry. See Vartry.
Featley:
Mr.; I. 185.
Dr. Daniel, letter from; I. 286.
Fecknam Forest, Worcestershire; I. 294.
Fell:
Dr. Samuel, Dean of Christchurch, Oxford; I. 354, 355, 374.
—— letters from; I. 372; II. 168, 216.
Fellowship, the ship; I. 329.
Felton, Nicholas, bishop of Ely, letter from; I. 271.
Fenner, William, arrest of; II. 106.
Fenny Stratford; I. 103.
Fens, the, the draining of, offer for (1626); I. 277.
Fenton, Mr.; II. 81.
Fenwick, Sir John, bill of attainder against; II. 367.
Ferdinand III., Emperor of Germany, his offer touching the Palatinate; II. 276.
Ferdinando, Don, Cardinal of Spain, news of; I. 438.
Fermanagh; I. 367; II. 298.
Ferme, Captain; I. 311, 313, 314; III. 166.
Fern, Mr.; III. 30.
Fern Island; III. 148.
Ferrabosco, Alphonso, composer of music to Charles I.; I. 341.
Ferrale, Feral:
Morgan; I. 482.
R.; I. 482.
Ferrara; I. 25.
Ferré, Peter, confectioner in the Haymarket; II. 386.
Ferreby, Caistor sessions; I. 4.
Ferrers:
Lord (1699); II. 391, 408.
—— (1705); III. 59.
—— (1710); III. 116, 171, 173, 174, 179.
Sir Humphrey; II. 450.
John; II. 450.
Ferris, Thomas, of Hull, pardon to; I. 143.
Ferrour, John; I. 199.
Fertry. See Vartry.
Festin, Mr., his tunes; III. 67.
Fetcham, Surrey, letter dated; II. 88.
Feversham, the ship; III. 104.
Earl of (1684); III. 155.
Field:
Mrs.; II. 119.
Theophilus, bishop of Hereford; II. 198.
Fielding:
William, Earl of Denbigh, Admiral of the Fleet; I. 225, 279, 280, 290, 291, 302, 332, 335, 345, 361, 381, 458; II. 22.
—— letters from; I. 346–349.
—— letter to; I. 346.
Fielding—cont.
Basil, Viscount Denbigh; II. 41, 241.
—— master of the great wardrobe; II. 54.
—— English ambassador at Paris (1634); II. 73.
——, Ambassador Extraordinary at Venice; II. 116.
—— letter from; II. 203.
—— letter to; II. 203.
—— marriage to Sir John Lambe's daughter; II. 240.
—— accident to; II. 288.
—— pardoned by Queen Anne; III. 46.
Fiennes, Sir John; II. 10.
William, Viscount Say and Sele; I. 383; II. 115, 224, 226, 263, 279, 292, 318.
—— made Master of the Wards; II. 272, 283, 284.
Fifield, Essex, ship money case at; II. 173.
Fillingham, Caistor sessions; I. 3.
letter dated; I. 229.
Filmer, Sir Thomas, letter from; II. 395.
Filwood forest; I. 294.
Finch:
Daniel, Earl of Nottingham (1682–1729); II. 441; III. 15, 21, 28, 35.
Lord (1636); II. 115.
Elizabeth, widow of Sir Moyle, afterwards Viscountess Maidstone and Countess of Winchelsea; I. 395.
Heneage; I. 378.
Sir John, Speaker, Lord Chief Justice of the C. P. and Lord Keeper; II. 62, 87, 118, 270.
—— letters from; I. 342, 343; II. 99, 114, 165.
Fincham, Mr.; I. 400, 478.
— his relation read to Charles I.; I. 399.
John, draft warrant for; I. 417.
—— letters from; I. 304, 307, 317, 331, 407, 419.
Captain John; III. 150.
Findern; III. 91.
Fines, Mrs.; III. 166.
Finet, John, petition signed by; I. 128.
Fingall, Earl of (1629–1632); I. 389, 392, 481. See also Plunkett, Lucas.
Finke, Arian, murder of; I. 402.
Finlanders; I. 441.
Firth, Mr. and Mrs.; III. 9.
Fish, laws of Scotland relating to sale of; I. 451.
Mr.; I. 215.
Fisher, Mr.; I. 416.
John, steward of Vice-Chamberlain Coke; II. 361, 364, 365, 369, 370, 398, 415, 441, 448, 450, 452, 455; III. 3, 25, 56, 74, 75, 83, 88, 91–98, 102, 158, 167, 170–174.
—— letters from; II. 450; III. 2.
Sir Clement, pricked sheriff for Warwickshire; III. 21.

Fisher—cont.
Edward; I. 171.
Sir Edward; I. 211.
Sir Thomas; II. 343.
Fisheries; I. 189, 204; II. 104. questions as to, between England and France (1636); II. 123. survey of; III. 146.
in the Gulf of Canada; I. 375.
Fishmongers' Company, gift to; I. 352.
Fitzedmund, John Nugent; III. 150.
Fitzgerald:
[Elizabeth], Countess Dowager of Kildare; I. 321, 398.
Henry, 12th Earl of Kildare, petition of his widow; I. 335.
Geratt, of Dromany, petition of; III. 150.
L.; I. 481.
Oliver; I. 482.
Fitzhardinge, Lord (1714); III. 111.
Fitzharris, —; II. 229
Fitzherbert:
Mr.; III. 89, 90, 93, 98, 122.
—— sheriff of Bristol; II. 29.
John; II. 105; III. 17.
—— letter from; III. 18.
Sir John, of Norbury, co. Derby; II. 103, 228, 252.
—— certificate from; II. 150.
—— letter from; II. 212.
—— letter to; II. 259.
William; III. 50.
Rev. William (1683); II. 344.
the family of; III. 87.
Fitz John, Mr.; I. 110.
Fitz Roy, Charles, Duke of Grafton; III. 112.
Fitz William, Lord (1632); I. 481.
—— (1716); III. 116.
Colonel; II. 216.
—— letters from; II. 355, 357.
Fitz Williams, Mr.; I. 312.
——, of Scampton; I. 3.
William; I. 6.
Fixhall, Major William, letter from; III. 122.
Flacket, Mr.; II. 169.
Flagge; II. 27.
Flamborough:
Head; II. 139.
manor, in the Constable family since William Rufus; I. 194.
Flanders; I. 10, 317, 436, 438; II. 5, 249, 276, 317, 418. the campaign in (1702); III. 18. threatened descents upon; I. 257, 433.
exports to; II. 141.
merchants made bankrupt; I. 236.
supplies for; I. 244.
Fleet, the:
of the Rochelle expedition, delayed at Portsmouth; I. 355.
general conditions of (1629); I. 385.
injuries done to (1627); I. 332.
instructions as to; II. 104.
Fleet manor, Lincolnshire; I. 103. prison; II. 47, 137, 321; III. 57.
—— letters dated; I. 165, 366, 461; II. 169.
—— prisoners in; I. 141; II. 173, 255.
—— warden of; I. 272, 352.
Fleet Street riots (August 1639), the; I. 389, 390.
Fleetwood:
Sir Miles, Receiver of the Court of Wards; I. 289; II. 57, 58, 79, 92; III. 142.
—— letters from; I. 156; II. 182, 224.
—— his proposals touching the revenue; I. 293, 351.
Luke, his brother; II. 92.
Fleming:
Mr.; I. 331, 378, 472; II. 103, 164.
Denzil, Navy Commissioner and Clerk of the Navy; I. 200.
—— letters from; I. 229, 231, 274, 278, 428; II. 123, 149, 158.
James; I. 481.
Oliver, agent of Charles I. in Switzerland; II. 37, 241.
Thomas; I. 482.
Flemings, Flemish:
the; I. 402, 465, 477, 484; II. 33.
merchants; II. 148, 149.
pirates; I. 151, 156, 160, 165, 167.
Fletcher:
Mr.; III. 105.
—— to be a judge in Ireland; II. 151.
Anthony, assistant of the Merchant Adventurers' Company; II. 69.
Richard, bishop of Bristol (1592), leases by; I. 40.
Sir Richard; III. 152.
Robert; II. 103.
Roger; II. 84.
Fletcheville, Lady (1702); III. 17.
Flintshire; I. 2.
Flood, Dr., his fraud upon Rocher, the inventor of transmuting iron into steel; I. 197.
Florence; I. 18; III. 122.
Grand Duke of; II. 317.
—— gallery of; III. 122.
Flores, in the Azores; I. 17.
Flushing; I. 189, 229, 288, 337, 341, 379; II. 33, 92, 100.
letter dated; I. 175.
Fogge, Captain Richard, letter from; II. 6.
Foiston, Mrs.; III. 111.
Foley, Lord (1716); III. 117.
Folkstone; II. 180, 183.
Folliatt, Follett:
Sir Henry; I. 27.
John, seminary priest; II. 39.
Robert, letter from; I. 279.
Fontaine, Mons.; I. 280.
Fontainebleau; II. 33, 403, 406.
letter dated; I. 205.

Fontarabia, French and Spanish armies attacking and defending (1638); II. 191.
Forbes:
Lord (1704); III. 43.
Mr., Presbyterian minister at Delft, complaint against; I. 467.
Ford:
co. Kent; I. 321.
letter dated; I. 326.
William; I. 213.
Fordwich, letter dated; I. 314.
Foresight, the ship; I. 22, 32.
Formark, Foremark; II. 360, 362, 364, 365, 407, 448; III. 11. letter dated; II. 346, 370, 372, 382, 385, 397, 401, 407, 419; III. 11.
Forrester:
Mr., certificate for; I. 149.
Alexander, letter from; II. 428.
Fortescue:
Mr.; I. 439.
J., Chancellor of the Exchequer (1593); I. 15.
Sir John; I. 27, 37.
Sir Nicholas, Navy Commissioner; I. 140, 153.
Forth, Earl of (1644); II. 341.
Fortrye, Peter, information by; I. 137.
Fortune, the ship; I. 215, 221, 422; II. 59.
letter dated; I. 419.
the Margate hoy; II. 243.
the French ship; II. 182.
Fosbrook:
Mr.; II. 394.
Leonard; III. 2.
—— the younger, letter from; III. 7.
Foster:
Mr. I. 380, 400; II. 249.
Alexander; I. 164.
William, nominated by Lord Derby to the bishopric of Man (1633); II. 31.
Foston, letters dated; II. 197; III. 50.
Fotsissen, Arnold, grant for making gowns; I. 194.
Foulis:
Sir David, patentee for alum making; I. 84.
letter on behalf of the sons of, from Charles I.; III. 144.
Foulkes, Sir Henry; I. 36.
Fountain:
Mr., lawyer, committed for contempt of Parliament; II. 324.
Sir Erasmus; II. 163.
Peter; II. 103.
Fouquett, M.; I. 400, 401.
Fowell, John, letter from; I. 257.
Fowey; I. 225, 235.
fort at; I. 264.
letters dated; I. 163, 168, 190.
Fowler:
Mr., letter from; II. 69.
John, of Bucklersbury; II. 84.
Richard, petition of; I. 171.
Fownes, Thomas, certificate by; I. 215.
Fox:
Mr.; II. 228.
—— bookseller in Westminster Hall (1700); II. 409, 420.
Charles; I. 2.
James; II. 353.
Sir Stephen; III. 182.
Foxholes, letter dated; I. 20.
Foyle, Lough, fishings in, granted by James I. to the Londoners; I. 464.
France; I. 18, 35, 266; II. 12, 49, 95. admiral of (1625); I. 203, 216.
ambassador from; I. 187, 200, 205, 211, 298, 388, 391, 459, 461; II. 15, 68, 97, 182, 202, 314. See also D'Effiat, Marquis; Tilliers, Comte de; Blainville, M. de.
—— remonstrance by; I. 225.
—— witnesses the drill of the City militia (1642); II. 317.
—— demands restitution of Watt Montague (1643); II. 338. ambassador to; II. 255, 458. See also Wake, Sir Isaac; Edmonds, Sir Thomas; Barrett, Sir Edward; Morton, Sir Albertus; Carleton, Sir Dudley; Richard, Lord Kensington; Herbert, Sir Edward; John, Lord Scudamore. civil wars of; I. 203, 205.
generals and captains of, received at Portsmouth; I. 302.
gold exported to; II. 76, 103.
invasion of England by, threats of; II. 282, 367, 423.
King of; I. 423; II. 1, 291.
—— Henry IV., stabbed by Ravillac (1610); I. 70.
—— Louis XIII.; I. 268, 322, 465, 470.
—— —— letter from; I. 205.
—— —— besieges Rochelle; I. 218, 256.
—— —— audiences with; I. 260.
—— —— seizes English merchants' goods at Bordeaux; I. 300.
—— —— illness at Villeroi; I. 310, 311, 319.
—— —— declares war against England; I. 315.
—— —— removes the Duke d'Angouleme from the generalship of his army; I. 333.
—— —— sends English ensigns taken at Rhé to Paris; I. 336.
—— —— his patent to M. de Monts; I. 375.
—— —— passes the Alps and compels the Duke of Savoy to come to terms; I. 383.
—— brother of, Duc d'Orléans; I. 465, 474, 475; II. 76.
—— —— congratules Charles I. on the birth of a son; I. 409.
—— impatronizes himself of the Duchy of Lorraine (1634); II. 48.
—— defrays the expenses of the King of Ethiopia; II. 88.

France—cont.
King of, soldiers for, levied in England; II. 108, 109.
—— fleet of; II. 176.
—— projects of, against England (1639); II. 219.
—— pardons those banished in Cardinal Richelieu's time; II. 328.
—— sickness of; II. 333.
—— (1715), theft of the gold fringe of the chairs of, punishment for; III. 124.
lawyers of, contrasted with those of England; II. 399.
letters from; I. 254; II. 62.
merchants of; I. 285, 341; II. 92.
merchants trading with, memorial of; I. 128.
persons coming from, arrest of; I. 372.
plantations of, in Canada; I. 376. prisoners of; I. 308, 362.
Protestants of; II. 304.
Queen Mother of; I. 386, 438, 475; II. 290. See also Medici, Mary de, and Anne of Austria.
Queen of (1614); I. 82.
ships of; I. 287, 318, 319, 325, 337, 366, 409; II. 46, 117, 137, 260.
—— pillage committed by; II. 175.
naval engagement with (1704); III. 45.
trade with; I. 322, 418.
Vice-admiral of; I. 235, 236.
war preparations of (1642); II. 313.
wines of; I. 377, 395.
—— lease of the provision of, for the royal household; II. 25.
and England, fishing between the coasts of; II. 104.
and the Emperor, war between; I. 408.
and Holland, trade between; I. 321.
and Spain; II. 420.
—— combination of, to extirpate the Religion; I. 267.
—— war between (1632); I. 467.
—— conclude league with Portugal; II. 431.
and Sweden, alliance between; II. 115.
Frances Bonadventure, the ship; I. 253, 259.
Franche, Charles, of Wallbrook; II. 84, 103, 364.
Francis:
—; I. 312.
Edward, letter from; I. 270.
John, letter from; I. 333.
William, Father Fraunceys, letter from; II. 351.
—— surgeon; II. 449.
—— Derby election bill; III. 157.
—— mayor of Derby, letter from; II. 413.
—— Captain, letter from; II. 413.
W.; III. 96.
Francker, letter dated; I. 62.
Francq, M., of Antwerp; III. 158.
Frankendale; I. 118; III. 145.
Frankfort; I. 15; II. 9; III. 41, 42.
letters dated; II. 115, 149.
Franklin, Mr.; II. 114.
Frankland, William, certificate of; II. 198.
Fraystarre Besingley, Yorkshire; I. 103.
Frederick, Elector Palatine. See Bohemia, King of, and Palsgrave, the.
Freeman:
Mr.; II. 387; III. 61.
Mrs., mother-in-law of Lord Delaware (1705); III. 64.
Alderman; I. 395.
Lady, lodging granted by William III. to; III. 111.
Charles; II. 353.
John, charge against; I. 115.
Ralph; I. 295; II. 37, 82; III. 75.
Sir Ralph, Master of Requests; I. 127, 460; II. 54, 223; III. 110.
—— answer of; I. 160.
—— letter from; I. 123.
—— letter to; II. 2.
Freiburg, on the Elbe; I. 308.
French, Peter, money paid to; I. 51.
French Secretary, allowances of; I. 368.
French Company trading in wines; I. 377.
Fretchville:
Mr.; II. 61.
John; II. 228.
—— letter to; II. 252, 259.
Sir Peter, knighted at Warsop (1603); I. 43, 128, 144, 153, 412.
Frewen, Dr., President of Magdalen College, Oxford; II. 91.
Friedberg near Augsburg; III. 39.
Friesland; I. 336, 448; II. 110.
lords of; II. 52.
Frisby on the Wreak, letter dated; I. 286.
Friuli, Venetians strong in; I. 92.
Frizell, Mr.; II. 18, 47.
Frobisher, Martin, his pay as admiral of the fleet; I. 39.
Frost, Captain; I. 310, 361.
Frothingham impropriation; II. 115.
Froyle; I. 299.
Fryer:
Colonel; I. 429.
Leonard; I. 41.
Fuentes, Count, news of the death of; I. 71.
Fuerm Sconce by Bommel; II. 136.
Fulham; I. 54, 220, 226.
letters dated; I, 233, 467; II. 31, 150, 151, 164, 193.
Fullerton, Mr.; I. 400; 401.
Fulneby, Mr., of Fulneby; I. 5.
Fulwood:
Mr., of Gray's Inn; I. 212, 246, 399, 410, 435, 478; II. 15, 24, 36, 55, 71, 251, 303, 307, 308, 331; III. 132.
Mistress; II. 23.

Fulwood—cont.
Christopher, eldest son of Sir George; I. 415.
—— letters from; I. 426, 449; II. 27, 56, 57, 61, 62, 82.
—— letter to; I. 340.
George; I. 30.
—— pedigree of; I. 56.
Sir George; I. 242; II. 36.
Humphrey, letters from; I. 354, 356, 358, 368, 386, 438, 477; II. 47.
Mary, letters from; I. 29, 242.
Funthill manor; II. 286.
Furne Skonce, Holland, letter dated; II. 184.
Furness, Sir H.; II. 421.
Furney; I. 174.
Furnivall's Inn; II. 344.
Furs from Canada, export of; I. 375.
Fussenberg; II. 184.
Fyfield Woods; I. 447.
Fyne, the river; II. 299.
Fyshe, Robert, letter from; II. 108.
Fytche, Mr., M.P.; III. 161.

G.

Gabalione, Signor, knighted by James I.; I. 77.
Gabelle, the, or house tax, introduction of; I. 467.
Gabor, Bethlehem; I. 364.
Gabott, see Cabot.
Gabriel, servant of George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham; I. 221.
Gaeta, the rock at, which clove at Christ's death; I. 83.
Gage:
George, priest of the English College at Rome; I. 407.
Sir John; I. 1, 2.
Gainsborough; II. 9.
powder and match to be provided by (1598); I. 21.
Lady (1716); III. 116.
Galata; II. 215.
Gale, Gall:
Mr., of the Signet Office; I. 342.
John; II. 350.
Patrick, huntsman of Charles I.; II. 54.
Gallard, Joshua, petition of; II. 42.
Gallas, Mr.; II. 239.
Galloway, Lord (1704), sent on a mission to Portugal; III. 38.
Galtres Forest; I. 294; II. 23.
Galway; I. 170; II. 138.
Lord (1706); III. 76.
Gandiers, Jean, banker of Paris; II. 398.
Gannock, William, of Sibsey; I. 5.
Gara, Foger and John; I. 482.
Gardener, Gardiner:
Colonel; III. 127.
Edmund, master of the John and Humfry; I. 135.
James, bishop of Lincoln (1695–1705); II. 419.
John, letters from; I. 169, 341.
—— letter to; I. 167.
Thomas, II. 280.
Garland, the ship; I. 13, 17, 32, 37, 286, 302, 313, 412, 431; II. 48, 75, 146, 149.
—— anchors off Margate with the Duke of Buckingham on board (1625); I. 237.
letters dated; I. 265, 321, 345, 347, 349, 361.
Thomas, letter from; I. 411.
Garnet, Henry, the Jesuit, arraignment of; I. 60.
Garrat:
Mr.; II. 126, 455; III. 2, 54.
Robert; I. 263.
Garrard:
George; II. 319.
—— letter from; II. 334.
Garraway, Sir William; I. 158.
Gartach, near Heilbronn; III. 37.
Garter, the order of the, presented to the Duke of Wurtemburg (1603); I. 44.
—— to the Elector of Hanover (1701); II. 430.
—— to the Duke of Shrewsbury (1701); II. 430.
Garth, Mr.; III. 64.
Garwaie:
Henry, Governor of the East India Company; I. 299.
—— letters from; I. 474; II. 78.
Sir William, petition of; I. 142.
Gason, John, his offer to drain the Fens; I. 277, 294.
Gaspe; I. 375, 376.
Gatehouse:
the prison; I. 102; II. 106, 327.
—— prisoners in; I. 184, 308, 319; II. 256, 324.
Gateshead; II. 89.
Gaurane, David; I. 482.
Gaye, Mr.; I. 73.
Gayman, Eleanor, letter from; III. 48.
Gayner, William; II. 39.
Gaynsford, Captain Thomas; I. 27.
Gazettes, the weekly, suppressed by the Privy Council (1632); I. 479; II. 291.
Gedney, Andrew; I. 6.
Gee, Thomas; I. 245.
Geere, Captain Michael, letter from; I. 199.
Sir Michael, his ill carriage; I. 259.
Geislingen; III. 37.
Gell:
Colonel; III. 11.
Mr., collector of ship money; II. 170.
Sir John; II. 310, 326, 328, 331, 336, 338.

Gell—cont.
Sir Philip, Baronet; II. 358, 455, 457; III. 12, 21, 30, 161.
Thomas; II. 328.
Genappe; II. 288, 290.
Geneva; I. 18, 323.
Gennari, pictures by; III. 112, 113.
Gennet, Lieutenant James; I. 310.
Genoa; I. 156, 157, 160, 165, 217, 224.
letters dated; I. 86, 179.
the republic of; II. 61.
books published at; III. 81.
ships of; I. 226.
Gentillot, —, execution of, at Rheims (1625); I. 203.
Gentilesco, Signor, employed by Charles I. on special service in Italy; I. 311.
Gentleshaw; I. 39.
Geoffrey, John, letter from; I. 279.
George, the ship; I. 13, 161, 300, 325.
GEORGE I., household servants of; III. 113.
George, Prince, of Denmark, consort of Queen Anne, Lord High Admiral; III. 1, 9, 38.
Gerard:
Mr., complaint against Burlamachi; II. 88.
Sir Charles; I. 164, 199.
Charles, Earl of Macclesfield (1651–1701); II. 446.
Dr., Regius Professor of Civil Law, Oxford (1635); II. 91.
Dr. W., Vice-President of the Welsh Marches; I. 39.
Lucas; I. 387.
Gerbier:
Balthazar, English Resident at Brussels; I. 387, 423; II. 103, 104, 120, 168, 234, 237, 238, 251.
—— letters from; I. 321, 322; II. 88.
Germaine:
Mr.; II. 285.
proposed marriage to Lady Mary Mordaunt (1701); II. 434.
German secretary, allowances of (1628); I. 369.
Germany; I. 25, 254; II. 227, 230. advertisements from; I. 338, 342, 462; II. 26, 34.
the Diet of; I. 420; II. 279.
the Emperor of; I. 386, 432; II. 13, 34, 42, 48, 108, 110, 115, 153, 215, 391. See also Ferdinand III.
—— defeat of; II. 320.
—— desertions to (1627); I. 332.
—— advance of the troops of; II. 416.
—— victory of the forces of; III. 33.
—— treaty with (1701); II. 435.
English Ambassador to; II. 79. See also Howard, Thomas.
the war in; I. 441; II. 37.
the Gospel in; I. 336.
Gertruidenborg; III. 22.
letter dated; III. 18, 31.
Gerts, Baron; III. 187.
Gery, Mr.; III. 98.
Geskie, Mr.; II. 287.
Gessell, Edmund, foreign opposer of the Court of Exchequer, Ireland; I. 451.
Ghent; I. 236, 475; II. 6; III. 71, 168.
letter dated; II. 364; III. 100, 102, 103.
Colonel; I. 391.
Ghilan; I. 448.
Gibb, Mr., feoffee for the Earl of Somerset (1625); I. 184.
Gibbon, John, letter from; II. 221.
Gibbons:
Mr.; I. 474.
Captain, letter from; I. 409.
Dr.; II. 372.
Gibbs:
Mr., judge of the Sheriff's Court, London; I. 475.
—, purchases Brancepeth Castle; I. 337; II. 28.
Mrs.; III. 101.
Sir Henry; II. 106.
Thomas, master of the Sarah; II. 148.
Gibraltar; II. 140; III. 45, 58, 59.
the taking of (1704); III. 42.
Gibson, Mr.; I. 421; II. 344.
Giffard, Captain; III. 8.
Gift of God, the ship; I. 344, 345.
Gilbert:
Mr., cousin of Sir Francis Coke; I. 421, 450, 454, 463; II. 157, 323, 411; III. 32.
—, of Lockhoe; III. 91, 92, 96, 136.
Captain; II. 358.
Henry, letters from; II. 385, 388, 454; III. 15, 19, 20, 70.
Isabel; II. 450.
John, petition of; I. 171.
Thomas, of Lockhoe, letters from; I. 384, 385, 446, 477; II. 4, 83.
—— letters to; I. 384, 392.
William, cousin of Sir John Coke; I. 285.
—— letter from; I. 312.
—— letter to; II. 246.
Sir William, petition of; III. 155.
Gilborne, Sir Nicholas; I. 408.
Giles:
Mr., of Clifford's Inn; I. 159.
Captain Edward; I. 157, 190, 195, 218.
—— letters from; I. 187, 259, 268, 276.
—— letters to; I. 216.
Father, letter from; I. 334.
Gillingham; I. 192, 214, 302; II. 48.
letter dated; I. 427.
Gillot, Henry; III. 138.
Gilman, Mr.; II. 350; III. 154.
Gilpin:
Captain; I. 429.
Mr., death of; I. 20, 22.
Richard, letter from; I. 15.
Girlington, Nicholas; I. 33.
Gisborne:
Mr.; II. 451; III. 30.
Edward, J.P. of Kent; I. 274.

Gittins, W.; I. 196.
Giustina, Giovanni, Venetian ambassador (1638), letter from; II. 206.
Glamorgan; II. 73, 101.
Glames, letter dated; II. 431.
Glanville:
Francis, letter from; I. 276.
John, Secretary; I. 201, 421.
Thomas; I. 232.
Glasgow:
letter dated; I. 155.
archbishop of (1605); I. 58.
Glasmolin; II. 132, 156.
Gleane, Peter, letter from; I. 163.
Glemham, Charles, letter from; I. 86.
Glemharm, letter dated; I. 31.
Glenham, Mary, sister of Anne Viscountess Dorchester, marriage of; II. 46.
Glenorchy, Lady; III. 180.
Glisson, Paul, letter from; II. 100.
Globe, the ship; I. 251, 300.
Glossop free school; III. 5.
letter dated; III. 5.
Gloucester; I. 61; II. 7, 328, 433.
Duke of. See William, Prince.
almsroom at; I. 148, 171.
assizes; II. 211.
bishop of (1623); I. 149.
—— (1640), suspended by Convocation from his bishopric; II. 256.
—— (1716); III. 116. See also Goodman, Godfrey. cathedral; III. 15.
dean and church of; I. 185.
letters dated; I. 64; II. 209, 434.
siege of (1643); II. 336.
shire; I. 2; II. 82.
—— sheriff of; II. 74.
Glover:
Roger; I. 357.
Thomas; II. 193.
Glovers' Company of London, incorporation of; II. 196.
Gluckstadt on the Elbe; I. 308, 358, 365, 369, 378, 383, 391, 482; II. 304.
letter dated; II. 243.
Glyn:
Sir W., M.P. for Warwick; III. 14.
Mr.; III. 180.
Goa, defence of, and capture by the Dutch (1632); I. 464, 465.
Goddard:
Henry; I. 130; II. 48.
—— letters from; I. 119, 147, 152, 159, 161, 166, 177, 180, 193, 240, 371, 429, 431, 443; II. 77, 78.
Goderich Castle and manor granted to Wm. Lord Herbert; I. 55.
Godfrey:
Mr.; III. 169.
Charlotte, married to young Boscawen (1700); II. 403.
Nicholas, captive in Sallee; I. 231.
Godolphin:
Charles; II. 375, 378, 379, 392.
—— letter from; II. 393.
Sir Francis, to be treasurer and paymaster of Cornwall; I. 303.
Godolphin—cont.
Mrs.; II. 377.
Sidney, lord treasurer; II. 375, 410, 438, 439; III. 33–41, 57.
—— illness of; III. 48.
Sir William; I. 27.
—— letter from; I. 56.
—— letter to; I. 29.
Godwin:
Dr.; I. 445.
—— parson of Whitborne; II. 158, 200.
Morgan, made archdeacon of Middlesex; II. 200.
Thomas, his dispute with Dr. George Coke; II. 198.
Gold export from England prohibited; I. 484.
Golden Grove, letter dated; I. 369.
Golden Lion, the ship; I. 17, 230.
Golding, —; II. 257.
Goldsaddle, Mrs.; III. 186.
Goldsborough, Captain; III. 120.
Goldsmith, Henry, letter from; I. 180.
Goldsmiths' Hall, committee for compounding at; II. 342.
Gondelfingen; III. 42.
Gondomar; I. 215, 224.
Count de, artillery purchased by; I. 167.
Gonston, Benjamin, treasurer of the Navy; I. 63.
Gooch:
Dr. Bartholomew, letter from; I. 136.
Dr. Henry, fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; I. 153.
—— letters from; I. 430, 444.
Goodall, serjeant-major; I. 201.
Goodfellow, Mr.; II. 363, 374.
Goodhand, Mr.; I. 426.
Goodin, Mr.; I. 428.
Goodman:
Mr.; II. 367.
George, rector of Croft; II. 116.
Godfrey, bishop of Gloucester; I. 405.
—— suspended for refusing to subscribe to the new canons; II. 256.
Goodriche, Mr., of Estkerbie; I. 5.
Goodrich, letter dated; I. 67.
Goodricke:
Henry, letter from; II. 205, 208.
Sir Henry; II. 346.
Goodwin:
Colonel; II. 335.
Alice, examination of; I. 41.
Mr., and the vicarage of Melbourne; II. 259, 320.
Robert, mayor of Harwich, letters from; I. 300, 301.
Thomas, Mary and Samuel, annuity of; III. 56.
Timothy; II. 447.
Goodwin Sands, the; I. 134, 150; II. 456.
Goodyeare, Mr.; II. 363.
Gopsall, letter dated; II. 447.

Gorcom, Holland; III. 60, 66.
Gordon:
Mr.; II. 106.
Sir Alexander, letter from; II. 33.
Francis, English agent in Poland; II. 96.
George, letter from; III. 174.
Robert, merchant of Bordeaux; III. 121.
William, banker of Paris; III. 120.
Gore; I. 454; II. 149.
End; I. 442.
Captain; I. 39.
Elways, son of Joan Coke by her first husband; I. 215.
Jarrett and William; I. 209.
Joan, second wife of Sir John Coke; I. 196, 215.
John; I. 295.
Ralph; I. 166.
Sir Ralph; II. 298, 299.
Robert; II. 263.
—— letter from; II. 170.
Thomas; I. 270.
William, Alderman of London, debts due to; I. 166.
—— survey of his estate; I. 176, 248, 270.
Ann, Benjamin, Gerard, Joan, Robert, and William, his children; I. 270.
William, sick of small-pox at London House; I. 359.
Gorges:
Mr.; I. 260.
Sir Ferdinando; I. 42; II. 38.
—— letters from; I. 193, 231, 236, 239, 241, 256, 257, 259, 266; II. 156, 157.
—— letters to; I. 265, 310.
Sir Frederick; I. 389.
Sir Thomas; I. 38.
—— daughter of, married to Sir Hugh Smyth; I. 43.
William, captain; II. 156.
Goring:
Mr.; II. 321.
Sir George, afterwards Lord; I. 463, 469; II. 25, 52, 195, 239, 277.
—— Master of the Horse to Queen Henrietta Maria; I. 359, 286.
—— letters from; I. 392, 417, 445; II. 10, 16, 18, 19, 22, 24, 34, 146; III. 154.
—— letter to; III. 154.
—— his company for a plantation on the Amazon; II. 21.
—— his care of Queen Henrietta Maria; II. 18.
—— his dispute with Sir Francis Nethersole; II. 17, 18, 20, 22, 24, 26.
Colonel; II. 66, 117, 279, 281, 285.
Gormanstown, Viscount (1630); I. 399, 481.
Gorstey Leys; III. 8, 30, 74, 75.
Gorsuch, Daniel, merchant, petition; I. 115.
Goslin, Dr., Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge University; I. 286.
—— letter from; I. 252.
Gosnold, Henry, to be judge of the verge of court; I. 194.
—— chief justice in Munster; letters from; I. 194, 321, 348, 471.
Gosport, sailors at; I. 363.
Gosperton, Sir Fulk Greville's estate at; I. 70.
Gossen, William; I. 195.
Goston, Sir Francis, Commissioner of the Navy; I. 126, 140, 200, 273.
—— letters from; I. 109, 123, 167, 219.
Gothurst, letter dated; II. 60, 64.
Goudge:
Mr.; II. 378.
Edward, letters from; II. 373, 375, 379, 392; III. 3.
Gough, Sir Henry; II. 424, 447; III. 58.
Goulden, Sir Robert; I. 312.
Gouphill:
Caistor sessions; I. 4.
Manor, Lincolnshire; I. 103.
Gower:
Sir John Leveson, letter from; II. 412.
Lord (1711); III. 173.
Thomas, Deputy Lieutenant of Yorkshire, letter from; II. 208.
Gowre in Holland; II. 379.
Gowkin, Mr., his scheme for maintaining an army in Ireland; I. 297.
Gowran, Lord (1716); III. 116.
Grace, David; I. 245.
Gradisca, siege of; I. 92.
Grafton, honor of; II. 182.
Graham:
Mr., petition of; I. 379.
James, Earl of Montrose; II. 260, 290, 291, 308.
Richard, letters from; I. 223, 247, 306.
Sir Richard; II. 149.
—— letters from; II. 222.
Graile, Edmund, physician of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, letter from; II. 209.
Grampound, Cornwall; III. 105.
letters dated; III. 100, 101, 102.
mayor of, the question as to; III. 101, 102.
Granborow, William; II. 343, 344.
Granby:
Lord (1704); III. 34, 74, 87, 95.
Marquis of, stands for Grantham (1704); III. 54.
Grand Canal in the south of France described; II. 399.
Grandenor; I. 223.
Grand Seignior; II. 57. See also Turkey, the Sultan of.
Grandison, Lord, Lord Deputy of Ireland; I. 233, 433.
—— letter of James I. to; I. 106.
—— commands for Charles I. (1642); II. 319.

Grandison, Lord—cont.
taken prisoner; II. 327.
court-martialed at Oxford; II. 329.
death of; II. 338.
Grange, Mr., master of the George, drumbler; I. 188.
Granger, Mr.; I. 20.
Grantham; I. 11; II. 259, 332, 335.
powder and match to be provided by (1598); I. 21.
letter dated; II. 9.
Robert, of Dunham; I. 3.
Granville:
Mrs., her dancing at Court (1696); II. 366.
Colonel, proposed for the Speakership (1698); II. 380; III. 16.
—— letter from; II. 432.
George, Lord Lansdowne (1711–1734); III. 103–107, 182.
—— letters from; III. 65, 181, 184.
Lady; III. 184.
Sir Bevil; III. 14, 105. See also Grenville.
Gratrian, the Roman Emperor; I. 477.
Graunt, William; I. 245.
Grave (Graaf) M. de, page of the backstairs; III. 115.
Gravelines; I. 467; II. 239.
English and Irish nuns of; I. 402.
Gravenmoer, S., to be married to Lord Albemarle (1701); II. 431.
Graves, Mr.; I. 404; II. 152.
Gravesend; I. 219, 279, 341, 417; II. 50, 69; III. 156.
letters dated; I. 168, 196, 303; III. 130.
the sickness at (1636); II. 118.
Gray:
Mr.; II. 449; III. 1, 43.
Anchitill; II. 358.
—— letter from; II. 383.
Sir Henry, knighted at Warsop (1603); I. 43.
Henry, Lord (1627); I. 296.
—— Earl of Stamford. See Grey.
Thomas; I. 213.
Lord (1643); II. 338, 339, 341.
Gray's Inn; I. 446; II. 437.
letters dated; I. 180, 317, 342, 426; II. 34, 112, 253, 256, 270, 281, 301, 303, 326.
Sir John Coke's books at; II. 61.
Great James, the ship; I. 447.
Great Neptune, the ship; I. 157, 200, 211, 223, 230, 253, 296.
—— letters dated; I. 259, 268.
Great Okeley Hall, Essex; I. 103.
Great St. Andrew, the ship; II. 201.
Great Seahorse, the ship; I. 385.
Great Tiger, the ship (French); I. 17.
Great Yarmouth. See Yarmouth.
Greaves, Greeves:
Mr.; II. 310.
John; I. 130.
Richard; III. 138.
Green:
Mr., a Parliament man (1629); I. 383.
—, tutor of Sir John Coke's son; I. 149, 158; III. 134.
A., petition by; I. 128.
Captain; I. 349.
Daniel; I. 286.
—— letter from; I. 323.
Edward, bailiff of Yarmouth; I. 468.
—— letter from; I. 473.
Jervas of Derby; II. 271; III. 138, 141.
Joshua, of King's Lynn; I. 275.
Michael, letters from; I. 362, 363.
Thomas, bailiff of Yarmouth, letter from; I. 455.
Greencloth, Board of; (1717); III. 117.
—— officers of; I. 127.
Greenhithe; II. 185.
Greenhough, Richard, of Newcastle-on-Tyne; I. 272.
Greenhouse, John; I. 404.
Greenland; I. 379.
Greenwell, Thomas; I. 16, 17.
Greenwich; I. 9, 386, 438, 466; II. 11, 26, 165. armoury at; I. 429.
the court at; II. 81; III. 154.
letters dated; I. 163, 164, 432, 435, 458; II. 10, 16, 18, 19, 22.
Queen Henrietta Maria's lying-in at (1629); I. 383.
Greenwood:
Mr.; III. 186.
Henry, petition of; I. 185.
Richard; II. 223.
Gregory:
Pope XV., his exhortation to the Prince of Wales (1623); I. 138.
Mr., of Gainsborough; I. 8.
Francis; I. 285.
Gregson:
Mr.; II. 414, 415, 451; III. 15.
—— letter from; III. 4.
—— of Derby; II. 381.
Henry; II. 445.
William; II. 217.
Grenville (Grenfield) Sir Bernard; I. 140, 235.
Grenoble; I. 314, 421, 422.
the Grande Chartreuse near; I. 224.
Gresey, Count de; II. 337.
Greasley, Gresley:
Mr.; III. 178.
—— cousin of Sir Francis Coke; I. 412.
Sir George; II. 326.
—— letter from; II. 328.
Thomas; II. 395, 450; III. 96, 99.
Sir Thomas; II. 349.
William, esquire bedel; II. 361, 363, 364, 373.
hundred of, co. Derby; II. 450; III. 70, 92.
Gretorix, Mr.; II. 445.
Gretna Kirk, muster of Scots at; II. 223.

Greville :
Mr. ; I. 16, 22, 27, 31.
Lady ; I. 97.
Sir Edward, of Haroldscourt, Tottenham ; I. 73, 174.
Elizabeth, letters from ; I. 29, 32.
Sir Fulke, treasurer of the Navy ; I. 20, 32, 34–37, 39, 40, 43–45, 63, 68, 70, 73, 120, 121, 362.
—— Lord Brooke ; I. 194, 324, 365, 370, 388, 406, 449 ; II. 294 ; III. 133, 134, 150.
—— letters from ; I. 19, 26, 27, 30, 33, 50, 57, 71, 75, 77, 79, 84, 89, 96, 101, 102, 107, 109, 110, 113, 116, 136, 137, 148, 163, 217, 230, 232, 233, 237.
—— letters to ; I. 15, 16, 18, 22, 23, 30, 31, 33, 35–39, 41, 45, 54, 64, 90, 92, 138, 162, 172, 208, 218, 223, 234, 236, 239, 272, 277.
—— grant of fees in the Welsh marches to ; I. 2, 122.
—— his various houses at Austin Friars, Deptford, and Tottenham ; I. 26–37.
—— stay of proceedings against ; I. 50.
—— visit of James I. to ; I. 95.
—— commissioner for reform of the Navy ; I. 77.
—— history lecture founded by ; I. 427.
—— memorandum on usury addressed to ; I. 93.
—— accounts of his establishment ; I. 64, 65, 72.
—— revenue of his lands ; I. 66–69.
—— will of ; I. 388, 449.
Robert, Lord Brooke ; I. 449 ; II. 65, 226, 315, 318–321.
—— his dispute with Corpus Christi College, Cambridge ; I. 427.
—— letters from ; I. 462 ; II. 39.
—— printed works of ; I. 483.
—— speech of ; II. 273.
Varney, brother of Fulke ; I. 27, 32.
Grey, Mrs. ; III. 94, 95, 96.
—— letter to ; III. 54.
Lord, of Warke (1643) ; II. 333, 338.
Henry, Earl of Stamford ; I. 430 ; II. 68, 103, 255, 270, 283, 314, 319–323, 329, 331, 339, 408 ; III. 10, 160.
—— letters from ; II. 111, 217.
Thomas, Lord Grey de Wilton ; I. 18.
—— Earl of Stamford (1673–1720) ; II. 393 ; III. 70.
Greyhound ; I. 435.
Griffin, the ship, of Hamburg ; I. 238.
Mr. ; I. 214, 307.
Griffith :
Colonel ; III. 110.
Henry, letters from ; II. 205, 208.
John, letter from ; I. 420.
Thomas, petition of ; I. 197.
Grimall, Thomas, of King's Lynn ; I. 275.
Grimbergne, Mademoiselle ; II. 370.
Grimes, Mr., master of the horse to Buckingham ; I. 274.
Colonel ; III. 28.
Grimsby ; I. 4, 10, 11, 21 ; III. 10.
powder and match to be provided by (1598) ; I. 21.
threatened landing of Dunkirkers on (1627) ; I. 312.
Grimsthorpe, the Court at ; II. 59.
Grimston, Serjeant, petition ; I. 148.
Gringley, letter dated ; II. 13.
Grinling, —, II. 287.
Grinzburg ; I. 338.
Groats (tax), business of ; I. 393.
Grobbell, John, letter from ; I. 257.
Grobbendonck ; III. 64.
Grocers' Company ; I. 108.
Hall Committee, London ; II. 303.
Groeningen ; I. 26.
Groine (Corunna) Prince Charles' servants landed at ; I. 133. See also Groyne.
Groler, Jacob ; II. 103.
Grolle in Guelderland, capture of ; I. 63, 311, 315.
Gross :
Mr. ; I. 486.
John of Yarmouth, examination of ; II. 181.
Gross Gordach, letter dated ; III. 44.
Gross Heppach ; III. 44.
Gross Seissen ; III. 44.
Grosvenor, Sir Richard ; I. 270.
Groton, letter dated ; I. 211.
Grouffe, Peter, the confession of ; I. 135.
Grove :
Mr. ; I. 266.
—— the saltpetre man ; II. 49.
Henry ; I. 158.
Groyne :
the ; II. 243, 248.
letter dated ; II. 119.
arrival of ships at ; II. 121.
plate transported from ; II. 122.
Grymes, Sir Richard ; II. 164.
Guardland, the ship ; I. 109, 132–134, 146, 165, 167, 185, 186, 214, 223, 230, 288.
Gueldres ; II. 249.
Guelfsdale Forest, Cumberland ; I. 294.
Guevara, Francis ; I. 5.
Guiana, voyage to, furnished by Sir Walter Raleigh ; I. 92, 94.
Guienne ; I. 285, 363.
Guernsey ; I. 166, 167, 309, 319, 320–323, 328, 358, 379, 381, 465 ; II. 136, 176 ; III. 156.
advertisements from ; I. 312.
exempted from the tobacco proclamation ; I. 316.
plot to betray ; I. 400.
priest apprehended in ; I. 309.
prize goods at ; I. 385.
Guildford, Lord. See North, Francis.
Guildford, —, "mother" of Mary, Queen of Louis XII., daughter of Henry VII. ; I. 268.
Sir Henry ; II. 93.
Guillam, Colonel ; III. 1.

Guinea and Benin Company ask for ships to prosecute discovery; I. 275.
Guinegauld, M. and Mdme. de; II. 167, 186, 190.
Guingenay; I. 343.
Guise, Maréchal de, general of the French in Hainault, overthrow of; II. 317.
Gunstone, Mr., clerk of the Navy; I. 176.
Gurnall, Gregory, of King's Lynn, letter from; I. 275.
Gurney, Alderman, chosen Lord Mayor of London; II. 292.
Gurr, Robert, examination of; I. 42.
Guttenstein, Lieutenant-General; III. 44.
Gussoni, Vincenzo, letter to; II. 41.
Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden. See Sweden.
Guttetter, Frederick; I. 15.
Gwynn, Thomas; I. 197.
Gwiney. See Guinea.

H.

Haberdashers' Hall, committee sitting at; II. 334.
Hacker, Sir John, petition; I. 194.
Hackluit, Colonel; I. 429.
Hackney:
Manor; I. 171.
letter dated; I. 148.
Sir Fulk Greville's estate at; I. 69, 70.
coaches, petition concerning; I. 148.
Hackwell, Captain Robert, letter from; I. 367.
Haddon Hall; II. 411–425.
Hadeln; II. 207.
Hadley, Anne, Lady Torrington (1697); II. 370.
Hadsor:
Bartholomew; II. 117.
Richard, letter from; I. 463.
Hadstock, the living of; I. 323.
Haford, Robert, of the Jewel House; I. 185.
Hagbourne Rectory; I. 269.
Hage, Cape; I. 397.
Hagerston, Mr.; I. 151.
Haggett:
Mr., decipherer of letters, petition; III. 155.
—— postmaster at Royston, committed to Prison; II. 180.
Bartholomew, letters from; I. 239, 384, 410; II. 159.
Hague:
the; I. 38, 46, 386, 391, 423, 424, 478, 486; II. 3, 9, 13, 52, 99, 128, 189, 195, 244, 389, 401, 423, 426, 434; III. 15, 157.
—— English resident at; I. 342.
—— French agent at; I. 303.
Hague, the—cont.
—— letters dated; I. 44, 46, 56, 57, 255, 306, 321, 322, 404; II. 2, 6, 44, 51, 75, 85, 98, 103, 109, 136, 185, 196, 218, 220, 226, 249, 426, 429.
—— marriage of Lord Albemarle and S. Gravenmoer at (1701); II. 431.
—— news from; I. 383.
—— reception of Buckingham at; I. 233.
—— treaty of; I. 254.
—— —— rejected by Charles I.; I. 257.
Hagworthingham, Lincolnshire; I. 5.
Hailes, Sir Christopher; II. 428.
Hainault; II. 317.
Haines Hill, Sir Fras. Windebank's house at; I. 467; II. 129, 165.
Hakewill, W.; I. 418.
Hale, William, letter from; II. 357.
Hales:
Mr.; II. 103.
Anthony, English agent at the Duke of Savoy's, claim of; II. 73.
Edward, justice of Kent; I. 274.
—— letter from; I. 212.
Sir James; I. 212.
Sir Thomas; I. 212.
Halford:
Richard of Wistow; II. 269.
William; I. 296.
Halfpenny:
Thomas, conductor of Bedfordshire recruits; I. 301.
William, of Greenwich; I. 200.
Haliburton, George, falconer of James I.; I. 194.
Halifax:
Lord (1700–1715); II. 410, 419, 430; III. 112, 116, 161, 190.
Lady (1701); II. 417, 440, 441; III. 3, 116.
Hall:
Mr.; II. 7.
Mrs.; II. 56.
Captain; II. 15, 184.
Joseph, of Emmanuel College, Cambridge; I. 19.
—— bishop of Exeter; II. 16.
—— —— letter from; II. 116.
Richard, conductor of Oxfordshire recruits; I. 301.
Robert; II. 353.
T., letter from; III. 21.
Hall Court near Much Marcle, Herefordshire; I. 71, 72, 75, 88, 91, 92, 94, 113, 372, 374; II. 216. land near; I. 145, 152.
purchase of; I. 354.
progress of works at; I. 146.
Hall, the Kings, marshals and sewers of, their antiquity and use; I. 194, 198.
Halle; I. 410, 441.
Hallen, the; I. 374.
Hallestrop, Louth sessions; I. 6.
Halley, John; II. 349.

Hallowes, Nathaniel, letter from; II. 328.
Hallsall, Sir Cuthbert; I. 181.
Halse, Captain William, letter from; I. 287.
Sir Nicholas; I. 140, 148.
Halsey:
Dr.; I. 472.
Major; III. 61.
Halton, Mr., of Wingfield manor; II. 442.
Halwick, Francis; II. 89.
Hambleton, Robert, petition; III. 150.
Hambourck; I. 383.
Hamborough, Mr.; I. 474.
Hamburg; I. 280, 333, 336, 379, 388, 430, 453, 466, 484; II. 99, 207, 231, 243, 291.
letters dated; I. 420; II. 276.
merchants of; I. 317.
news from; I. 345.
ships of; I. 178, 203, 217, 218, 230, 231, 234, 238, 319, 408, 409.
—— or Hamburgers; I. 173, 186–189, 223, 225, 241, 250, 305, 309.
—— —— capture of; I. 285.
—— —— reprisals against; I. 455.
—— bound for Leghorn; I. 345.
—— —— Spain; I. 226, 334, 335, 378.
—— stayed by the King of Spain; I. 309.
soldiers to be transported to; I. 271.
Hamersley:
Hugh; I. 295.
—— letter from; II. 78.
Hamford, Sir Humphrey; I. 160.
Hamilton:
Brigadier; III. 48.
Colonel; II. 164.
Duke of (1701); II. 446.
Sir Alexander; II. 210.
Sir Frederick, gentleman of the Privy Chamber, letters from; II. 78, 101.
Sir George, letters from; II. 155, 184.
Hans, letter from; III. 25.
James, Marquis of; I. 171, 185, 321, 433–438, 457; II. 169, 190, 207, 210, 222, 225, 234, 239, 268, 308, 316.
—— letters from; I. 434, 436, 437; II. 147, 181, 195.
—— abandoned by his soldiers (1631); I. 445.
—— supplies for; II. 227, 229.
Lady, sponsor for James Duke of York; II. 37.
William, member of the Long Parliament; I. 272; II. 341.
—— of the bedchamber of Queen Henrietta Maria; II. 161.
Hamlett, Susan, of Rochelle; III. 151.
Hammersmith, letter dated; I. 196.
Hammond, Hamond:
Mr.; I. 71, 82; II. 410, 413, 425, 427, 437; III. 115.
—— letter from; II. 428.
—— of Broad Street, London; I. 20.
—— payment to; I. 51.
Mrs., widow, petition; I. 184.
Hammond—cont.
Anthony; II. 433–435, 436.
—— letters from; II. 406, 411, 415, 432–438, 443; III. 64, 65.
Bryant; II. 141.
Francis; I. 478.
William; I. 131, 330.
Sir William, Italian letter to; I. 91.
Hampden:
Alexander, cousin of the patriot; II. 333, 334.
John; II. 295.
—— absent from the House (1642); II. 314.
—— raises horse and foot in Buckinghamshire; II. 320.
—— death of; II. 335.
Hampshire; II. 129.
address to Parliament from (1700); II. 403.
billeting of soldiers and pressing of seamen in (1628); I. 360.
justices of, letter to; I. 471.
Woodward of, petition; I. 197.
Hampson, Thomas, letter from, I. 210.
Hampstead, East; II. 241.
—— park, letter dated; I, 451.
barbarous murder at Lord Wootten's house in (1704); III. 48.
Hampton; II. 183.
letter dated; III. 3.
Court; I. 44, 233, 394, 414; II. 93, 354, 430; III. 31, 115, 185, 186.
—— documents dated; I. 54, 170, 230, 324, 392; II. 117, 128, 146, 147, 153; III. 163.
—— Charles I. at; I. 218, 241, 391; II. 69, 117, 294.
—— William III. at; II. 393, 394.
—— the ship; III. 58, 75.
Stanke; II. 119, 127, 171, 172, 175.
Hamsley, Captain John, letter to; I. 251.
Hanan; III. 41, 42.
Hanaper, the:
clerk of; I. 464. See also Mynnes, George.
dividends, fees of; I. 359, 368, 371.
Hanbury, Mr.; III. 129.
Hanby:
Louth sessions; I. 6.
Mr.; I. 6.
Hanced alias Rogers, John; I. 42.
Hanckin, John; I. 270.
Hancock, Mr.; II. 410.
Hand, Mr.; III. 54.
Handforth; letters dated; II. 153, 174.
Handmaid, the ship; I. 330.
Handow, letter dated; III. 24.
Hanford, Captain; I. 37.
Hanmer, Mr.; I. 417.
Hannah, the ship; III. 151.
Hanningham, Captain; II. 346.
Hanover; I. 44; III. 124.
letter dated; III. 115.
ladies of; II. 380.
elector of (1698); II. 379.
—— made K.G.; II. 430.
electors of, Sophia; II. 380, 404.

Hanse towns; I. 15, 20, 38, 380; II. 99.
Hanserd, Richard; I. 5.
Hanslop; II. 182.
Hanson:
Mr.; II. 69.
—, of Tydey; I. 131.
George; I. 66.
Hanworth, Middlesex; II. 283; III. 129.
—— letter dated; I. 324.
Happy Entrance, the ship; I. 141, 148, 223, 230, 279; II. 75, 117, 146, 191.
—— letters dated; I. 323; II. 127.
Harbert, Mrs.; II. 365.
Harbie:
Clement; I. 299.
Job; II. 129, 143, 148.
—— letter from; II. 135.
—— authorised to redeem the Crown jewels in Holland; II. 142.
Sir Job, letters from; II. 176, 221.
Harbord, Sir Charles; II. 166, 169, 187.
—— letter from; II. 68.
Harborough, Lord (1716); III. 117.
Harcourt:
Mr.; II. 398, 428, 440.
Colonel; II. 20.
Count de, maréchal de France, ambassador from France; II. 317, 337, 338, 341.
Duc d', French ambassador at Madrid; II. 416.
John; I. 443.
Robert; I. 107–197.
Sir Simon; II. 294, 302.
Hardenberg, marshal; III. 185, 187.
Harding, Hardinge:
Mr.; II. 399, 430, 441, 452; III. 44, 55, 90, 91, 93, 122, 164, 167.
—, surgeon; II. 9.
Mrs.; III. 174.
Mrs. Katherine and the Countess of Suffolk, cause between (1633); II. 9.
John; III. 85–87, 90.
—— letter from; III. 85.
Mary, daughter of Robert; III. 82, 88.
Nicholas; II. 374; III. 88, 98.
Richard; II. 192.
Robert; II. 385; III. 2, 11.
—— letters from; II. 373, 381–384, 395–398, 407, 408, 414, 418, 419, 424, 447–457; III. 1, 8–10, 17, 21, 23, 30, 54, 55, 70, 74, 75, 161.
—— letter to; II. 431.
—— informations against; II. 342.
—— death of; III. 81.
Hardware, George, letter from; I. 251.
Hardwick:
Mr.; I. 286.
—, fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; I. 214.
Hardy, Mr.; II. 282, 398.
Hare, Lady; III. 25.
Harewell, Thomas, letter from; I. 70.
Harfleur; I. 312.
Hargate, Edward, of King's Lynn; I. 275.
Harlaston; III. 136.
Harley:
Sir Robert; I. 371; II. 173.
Robert, Earl of Oxford, Secretary of State, &c.; II. 443; III. 107, 109, 110, 117, 118, 161, 168, 185.
—— letters from; III. 62, 111, 112, 168.
—— letters to; III. 111, 112.
—— pictures of; III. 112.
Lord (1716); III. 114.
Lady Harriet, daughter of Robert, Earl of Oxford; III. 111.
Harmans, Hans; I. 35.
Harold, —, his bill for Lady Mary Coke's funeral; III. 163.
Harperley; II. 256, 443; III. 51, 53, 54, 81.
Harpur, Harper:
Captain; III. 98.
Mr.; the King's ward (1623); I. 153, 157.
—, of Swarkeston (1602), restored to his justiceship; III. 132.
Henry; III. 11.
John, M.P.; II. 397–399, 444, 448, 453, 455, 456; III. 1, 14, 17, 23, 57, 61.
—— letters from; III. 22, 55, 60, 75.
—— sheriff of Derbyshire (1710); III. 84, 88–91.
Sir John, knighted at Warsop (1603); I. 43, 50, 144, 153, 181.
—— particulars of his will; I. 128.
—— Deputy Lieutenant of Derbyshire (1639); II. 228, 257.
—— (1698–1710); II. 384–388, 399, 414, 420, 423, 425, 451–457; III. 1, 11, 12, 17, 54, 60, 89, 92–97, 161.
—— letter from; II. 246.
Lady, Catherine; II. 290; III. 49, 58, 73, 78, 97, 168, 169.
—— letter from; III. 180.
Sir Richard, letters from; I. 325, 391.
Harriman:
Thomas; II. 457.
—— letter from; II. 455.
Harrington; I. 37.
Lord (1604) entertains James I.; I. 50.
—— (1613) to be of the train of the Princess Elizabeth, Electress Palatine; I. 77.
Harris:
Mr.; I. 69, 173.
—— gentleman usher (1625); I. 209; III. 135.
—— baronet, to be Chief Justice of Wales; I. 232.
Captain; I. 220; II. 75.
Arthur, letter from; I. 276.
Christopher; I. 151; III. 148.
Edmond; I. 460.
Ezekiel, bailiff of Great Yarmouth, letters from; I. 455, 468, 473.
Francis, priest; II. 41.
Sir James; I. 57.
John; I. 484.

Harris—cont.
Joseph, letter from; III. 178.
Richard; I. 369; III. 7.
Captain Richard, letter from; I. 253.
Harrison:
Mr.; I. 316.
—— (1705); III. 61.
Captain John, letter from; I. 289.
Sir Richard; I. 127.
Harrolds Park; I. 109.
letters dated; I. 29, 32.
Harsnet, Samuel, bishop of Norwich and archbishop of York; I. 432.
Hart:
Captain; I. 312.
C., letter from; III. 12.
Sir Perceval; I. 212, 270.
William, letters from; I. 26, 62.
Hartington:
Manor, Derbyshire; I. 103.
Marquis of. See Cavendish, James.
Hartlebury, letter dated; I. 479.
Hartley Field, Charles I. at; II. 232.
Hartopp:
Sir Edward; I. 296, 416; II. 78, 181, 219, 257, 258, 309.
—— letters from; II. 116, 165, 170, 259, 276, 331, 338.
—— letter to; II. 72.
—— death of; II. 343.
Mary, Lady, daughter of Secretary Coke; II. 332.
—— letters from; II. 343; III. 141.
Sir John; III. 1.
Sir Thomas, Deputy Lieutenant of Leicestershire; II. 248, 309.
Hartpury Rectory, Gloucestershire; I. 40.
Hartshorn; II. 450, 451; III. 17, 91.
Hartslett, Sir Christopher; I. 212.
Hartstongue, Mrs; III. 110.
Harvey:
Mr.; I. 441; II. 199, 307.
Dr., attends the Earl of Arundel's son Charles; I. 93.
C., alderman of Nottingham; II. 346.
Daniel and Eliab; II. 307.
John, letter from; II. 79.
Captain John, letter from; I. 332.
Sir John, Governor of Virginia; II. 81.
Nathaniel, voted out of the magistracy at Grampound (1712); III. 100.
Sir Sebastian, his loan to Charles I.; I. 305.
Sir Simon; 140, 185. 319.
—— letters from; I. 136, 200.
Captain William; I. 27.
Harwich; I. 187, 223, 419; II. 165, 184, 197.
decayed state of; I. 210.
Dunkirkers at; I. 253.
ports at; I. 288.
letters dated; I. 268, 300, 301, 323, 326, 328; II. 456; III. 32.
ships at; I. 157.
Harwood:
Mr.; II. 130.
John, mayor of Poole, letters from; II. 191, 192.
Haslerigge:
Sir Arthur; II. 263.
—— his bill for vesting the military and naval forces of the Crown in two generals and an admiral; II. 296.
—— motion of; II. 269.
Sir Robert (1701); II. 419.
Haslingden; III. 57.
Hassop, Derbyshire; I. 228.
Hastings:
Mr.; III. 138.
C., Countess of Huntingdon (1631); I. 443; III. 135.
Ferdinando, 6th Earl of Huntingdon; II. 342.
Francis, 2nd Earl of Huntingdon; I. 1, 7.
George, Lord, afterwards 8th Earl of Huntingdon; II. 384, 385, 389, 391, 395, 428, 437, 454, 457; III. 3, 5, 162.
—— letters from; II. 385, 429–431.
Sir George, his death from the plague (1641); II. 289.
Henry, 5th Earl of Huntingdon; I. 459; II. 257, 263, 289.
—— letter from; I. 448.
—— petition against; II. 262.
Henry; II. 248, 263, 269, 331; III. 135.
—— made sheriff of Leicestershire; II. 318, 319.
—— declared a traitor by Parliament (1642); II. 320.
Sir Henry, of Branson; II. 269.
Ralph, his account of recruits; I. 301.
Robert, of Huttoft; I. 6.
Theophilus, 7th Earl of Huntingdon; II. 373, 381–388, 391, 403.
—— —— death of (1701); II. 427.
—— 9th Earl of Huntingdon; III. 98.
—— —— birth (1696); II. 367.
Hatcher, Mr.; I. 383.
Hatclif, Thomas; I. 4, 5.
Hats, beaver, price of, in 1601; I. 30.
Hatfield:
letter dated; III. 122.
Chace, Yorkshire; I. 294.
House, letter dated; II. 168.
Mr., keeper of Alton Park; II. 269.
Hatton:
Mr.; III. 23.
House; I. 114, 267.
Lady; I. 185.
—— wife of Sir Edward Coke, letter from Charles I. to; I. 267.
Sir Christopher (1585); I. 2, 9.
Roger; I. 354.
Sir Thomas; I. 171.
Sir William; I. 267.

Hattorf, M.; III. 113, 115, 187.
Hatzfeld; II. 239.
Haughton, letter dated; I. 236.
Hautin, M., admiral of the States General; I. 168.
Havant; I. 359.
Haversham, Lord. See Thompson, Sir John.
Havre de Grace or Newhaven; I. 200, 253, 319.
Hawarden Church; II. 7.
Hawe, R.; I. 213.
Hawk:
the ship, of Schiedam; I. 218.
John; II. 353.
Hawker, Samuel, receipt; II. 352.
Hawkins:
Alderman John; II. 346.
—— letter from; II. 350.
Sir John, treasurer of the Navy (1588); I. 63.
—— letters from; I. 12, 14–16, 18.
Lady, death of; I. 15.
Philip; III. 104.
Hawley:
Mr.; I. 396.
Matthew; II. 36.
Hay:
Mr.; I. 451; III. 122.
—— letter from; II. 84.
Lord (1616); I. 92.
Archibald; III. 148.
Sir George, Lord Keeper of Scotland; I. 377.
—— letter to; I. 271.
George, Earl of Kinnoul (1634–1644), letter to; II. 225.
James, Lord, letters from; I. 120, 162.
—— Lord Doncaster (1603); I. 44.
—— Earl of Carlisle, ambassador to France; I. 138, 322, 363, 386, 391–394, 458, 485; II. 5, 20, 26, 56, 61, 67.
—— his dispute with the Earl of Pembroke (1623); I. 142.
—— entertains Rubens; I. 387.
—— letters from; I. 316, 471; II. 45.
Lord John (1704); III. 41.
Sir John; II. 291.
Haydock; II. 421.
Haydon, Sir John; II. 258. See also Heydon.
Hayne, John, letter from; II. 443.
Hayes, Sir James, letter from; III. 178.
Hayward, Henry; III. 138.
Haywood:
bailiwick in Cannock; I. 50.
Ralph, servant of Lord Brooke, wounds him; I. 365.
Hazard, Mr., of Hartshorn; III. 91.
Heanes, —, of Ashborne; III. 68.
Hearne, Nicholas; I. 270.
Hearth money; II. 350.
Heath:
Mr.; II. 364.
Nicholas, Bishop of Worcester; I. 39.
Heath—cont.
Sir Robert, Attorney-General, and Chief Justice of the Common Pleas; I. 270, 297, 305, 306, 339, 418, 449; II. 54–56, 163, 211, 283.
—— letters from; I. 141, 149, 181, 250, 287–289, 360, 392, 393, 428, 457, 461, 462, 472, 478; II. 29, 153.
—— speech in the House of Commons; I. 261.
Thomas, bond by; I. 451.
William, letter from; I. 167.
Heathcote:
Mr.; II. 421, 445; III. 54.
Samuel; II. 384.
Heblethwaite, Thomas, Deputy Lieutenant of Yorkshire, letters from; II. 208.
Hector, the ship; I. 211, 230, 260, 268, 325, 329; III. 161.
—— letter dated; I. 253.
Hedges, Sir Charles, secretary; II. 429, 436; III. 65.
Hedleston Hall; I. 228.
Hegactie, Father Patrick; I. 402.
Heidelberg; I. 15; II. 14, 35.
Heilbronn; II. 9.
Helder, the village; I. 327, 329.
Hele, William, Mayor of Plymouth, letters from; I. 393; II. 215.
Helen and George, the ship; II. 154.
Helford; I. 278, 409.
prize ships taken to; I. 133, 135.
Heling, Caistor Sessions; I. 4.
Hellier, Mr., ironmonger of Bristol; II. 70.
Helmsley; II. 212.
letter dated; II. 208.
Helston; I. 58.
Helvetius, Dr., Paris physician (1700); II. 405.
Hemins, —; II. 186.
Hempsfield, laird of; II. 223.
Hempson, David; II. 84.
Henbury Gayte; I. 424.
Hendereta (Henrietta?), the ship; I. 442.
Henderson:
Mr.; II. 265, 337.
Colonel; II. 242.
Hendon; I. 15.
Hendricks, Adrian; I. 249.
Henricks, —, a Dutchman, subject of the Archduchess; I. 224.
Hendy, Henry; II. 107.
Henley:
Mr.; II. 182–191, 309.
Park; I. 462.
Henne, Henry, serjeant of the carriage, petition; I. 198.
Heneage, Henneage:
Sir George; I. 5.
—— his lease of Pinton Fen; I. 84.
H.; I. 9.
Sir Thomas, Vice-Chamberlain, letter to; I. 16.
William, sheriff of Lincolnshire; I. 5, 6.

Henrickson, Dirich; I. 35.
Henrietta, the ship; I. 436.
Henrietta Maria:
the ship; II. 2.
Queen of Charles I.; I. 359, 388, 392; II. 7, 17, 25, 141, 236, 272, 275, 280, 288, 289, 308, 331.
—— her arrival in England; I. 200.
—— her lying-in; I. 383, 386.
—— her illness during Charles' absence in Scotland; II. 15, 18, 20, 22.
—— vote of the Commons that she shall have no priests about her; II. 304.
—— impeached of high treason by Mr. Pym; II. 334.
—— confessor of. See Philip, Father.
—— chamberlain to. See Sackville, Edward, Earl of Dorset.
—— midwife of. See Parton, Mme.
—— surgeon to. See Aubert.
Henry IV. of France; I. 18.
Henry VII. of England, marriage of his daughter Mary to Louis XII.; I. 268.
Henry VIII. of England; II. 107, 114. conveyance of a prebend by William Bullyn to; II. 79. establishment of; II. 210.
Henry:
Prince of Wales, son of James I.; I. 168, 195.
the ship; I. 335.
Henton Daubney, letter dated; I. 391.
Hepp, Mr., a barber in Fleet Street; I. 389.
Heppach, letter dated; II. 37.
Herbert:
Mr.; I. 450.
Captain; I. 219.
Colonel; II. 20.
Mrs., courted by Lord Macclesfield (1701); II. 446.
Lord (1629); I. 398.
—— (1642); II. 329, 330.
Edward, Lord of Cherbury, letters from; II. 136, 146, 184.
Sir Edward, Attorney-General; II. 309.
Colonel Henry, letter from; II. 51.
Sir Henry, letter from; II. 220.
Lord (1716) Henry, afterwards 9th Earl of Pembroke; III. 116.
James, M.P. for Aylesbury; II. 14.
Nicholas, letter from; II. 228.
Philip, Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, Lord Chamberlain; I. 359, 406, 419, 426, 428, 444, 449; II. 27, 52, 54, 82, 99, 210, 231, 281, 320, 325, 326.
—— letter from; I. 341.
—— letter to; II. 186.
—— admitted on his knees to the bar of the House of Lords (1641); II. 290.
Herbert—cont.
William, Baron, Earl of Pembroke (temp. Edward IV.), grant to; I. 55.
Sir William, K.G., Earl of Pembroke (temp. Edward VI. and Elizabeth); I. 17, 39.
William, 3rd Earl of Pembroke, Comptroller of the Household, Lord Warden of the Stannaries, and Lord Steward; I. 115, 142, 195, 359, 363, 587, 403.
—— letter from; I. 337.
—— letter to; I. 301.
—— warrant signed by; I. 385.
—— Lord Powys; I. 426.
Hereford; I. 146, 322, 445; II. 160, 213, 323, 326, 328, 329.
letters dated; II. 119; III. 38.
bishop of (1607); I. 63.
—— (1716); III. 116.
Cathedral, commission for a visitation of; I. 168.
—— lectures for; I. 160.
—— prebends in; II. 201.
—— residentiaryship claimed in; I. 159.
mayor of (1585), letter from the Privy Council touching the; I. 2.
shire; I. 2, 40.
—— recusants, proceedings in the Star Chamber concerning; I. 62.
—— saltpetre manufacture in; I. 394.
Herentals; III. 64.
Herle:
Nicholas; III. 104.
Peter, pretended mayor of Grampound; III. 107.
Hernback, Marshal; III. 187. See also Hardenberg.
Herne:
Peter, of Love Lane; II. 84.
William; I. 184.
Herring:
Andrew; I. 36.
Michael; II. 342.
Herriott:
Mr.; I. 148, 151.
Captain; I. 164, 166, 168.
—— his capture of the Neptune; I. 183.
General, a Scotchman; I. 166.
Alexander, payment for jewellery to; II. 180.
George, Captain; I. 140, 144.
Richard; I. 168.
Hertford:
Earl of. See Seymour.
Lord (1714); III. 187.
shire; I. 453.
—— petition to the House of Commons from (1642); II. 304.
—— purveyance compositions in; I. 127.
—— recusants of; I. 301.

Hervey :
William, Lord, rear-admiral ; I. 335. See also Harvey.
—— letters from ; I. 410, 475.
Hesse ; III. 153.
landgrave of ; I. 333, 336.
—— arrives at Dover ; II. 148.
Prince of ; II. 390, 404 ; III. 65.
troops of ; III. 61.
Heswell, Durham, letter dated ; I. 372, 379.
Hevenyngham, John ; I. 263.
Hewet, Hewitt :
Mr. ; III. 186.
Captain ; I. 160, 168.
Sir W. ; II. 140.
Heworth ; I. 480.
Moor, York, Charles I. at ; II. 318.
Hexham, letter dated ; II. 218.
Heyder, Baron d' (1699) ; II. 391.
Heydon :
Court, seat of Edward Morrissy ; I. 67.
Captain ; I. 339.
—— memorial of ; I. 312.
James, archer ; I. 194.
Captain John ; I. 323.
—— letter from ; I. 320, 322.
Sir John, letters from ; II. 46, 221, 258.
Sir William ; I. 291, 310.
—— letter from ; I. 299.
Heyham, Captain ; II. 100.
Heynam, letter dated ; I. 67.
Heyricke :
Mr., surgeon ; II. 457.
Sir William ; I. 296.
Heywood :
Park ; I. 39.
Gawin ; II. 257.
Peter, letter from ; II. 139.
Hickman :
Eleazar, letter from ; I. 18.
—— money paid to ; I. 51.
Hicks, Hickes :
Sir Baptist, letter from ; I. 149.
—— petition of ; I. 171.
Sir Ellis, captain of a Whelp ; II. 117.
Hickson, Peter, petition ; I. 171.
Higdon, Robert ; I. 404.
Higgon, John ; III. 27.
High Commission Court ; I. 466 ; II. 63.
abolition of ; II. 288.
cases in ; II. 137.
meeting of ; II. 262.
records of, torn to pieces by the mob (1640) ; II. 262.
Higham or Heigham :
Captain John, letter from ; I. 299.
—— disperses the Arminians ; I. 306.
Highgate papists ; I. 224.
High Peak ; II. 446.
Hildesheim ; II. 207.
Hill :
Anthony, churchwarden of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields ; I. 128.
Colonel ; III. 79.
Major-General ; III. 174.
Lewis, certificate by ; I. 140.
William, servant of Francis Coke ; I. 54.
Hillary, Mr., of the Exchequer Office ; II. 82.
Hills :
Mr., letter to ; I. 31.
William, of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, a freemason ; I. 128.
Hillyard, Mr. ; III. 63.
Hilton ; I. 411 ; II. 453.
Hinchinbrook ; III. 41.
letter dated ; II. 411.
Hinckley ; II. 418.
Elizabeth ; III. 138.
Hinton :
Gloucestershire ; I. 40, 249.
—— letters dated ; I. 247, 250 ; II. 76.
Mr., of Derby ; III. 94.
Sir Thomas ; I. 305, 306.
Hinxworth Rectory, Herts ; II. 120.
Hippisley :
Mr. ; III. 110.
Sir John, Governor of Dover Castle ; I. 186, 187, 225, 240, 269, 280 ; II. 325, 326.
—— letters from ; I. 177, 180, 189, 196, 226, 229, 231, 237, 254, 289, 313–319, 337.
—— fleet under ; I. 316.
—— ships taken by ; I. 326.
Hispaniola ; III. 99.
Histon Parsonage ; II. 173, 182, 183.
Hixall, Lieutenant ; III. 70.
Hoare :
Sir Richard ; III. 38.
—— letter from ; III. 68.
Hobbs, Thomas, comedian of Charles I. ; I. 198 ; II. 251.
Hochsteten, the victory at (Blenheim) ; III. 40, 41, 43.
Hockley in the Hole, Clerkenwell, bear garden at ; III. 5, 7.
Hoddesdonbury, Herts ; I. 224.
Hodges, Mr. ; I. 312 ; II. 231.
Hodgkinson :
Mr. ; II. 351 ; III. 59.
—— attorney of Derby ; II. 445.
William, letters from ; II. 439, 442 ; III. 5, 19.
Hodgson :
Mr. ; II. 318.
Henry ; II. 84, 96.
—— servant of the bishop of Durham ; II. 80.
Hodsock ; II. 40.
Hoffenheim ; III. 37.
Hogan, Sir Adrian ; I. 164.
Holbech, William, of the Stamp Office, Exeter ; III. 15.
Holbecke, Mr. ; I. 230 ; II. 305 ; III. 109.
Holbrooke, —, a Dutchman ; I. 224.

Holcraft, Sir Henry; I. 333, 451.
Holden:
Mr.; II. 441.
—— counsellor; III. 90.
Robert, letter from; II. 441.
Holdenby; II. 64.
letter dated; II. 65.
Holderness: threatened landing of Dunkirkers in; I. 312.
Earl of (1716); III. 117.
Lady; III. 125.
Holditche, Mr.; I. 270.
Holford, Mr., grazier of Leicestershire; II. 263, 268.
Holl, Thomas; I. 263.
Holland, United Provinces, Low Countries; I. 23, 35, 38, 43, 224, 342, 345, 386, 403, 430, 454; II. 87, 375; III. 46. ambassadors from; I. 298, 325, 366, 476; II. 18, 88, 89, 108, 117, 132, 341.
—— remonstrance of; II. 86, 91.
—— negotiate marriage between Princess Mary and William Prince of Orange; II. 274.
—— mediate between King and Parliament; II. 317.
ambassador to; I. 424; II. 221.
breed of horses in; I. 247.
cloths; I. 155.
commissioners from; I. 381.
deputies of; I. 329.
English army in; II. 78.
and France, trade between; I. 321.
officers of the States' service; I. 429.
ships of; I. 251, 318, 319, 334, 349, 366, 369, 406, 411, 412, 417, 419, 433, 456, 487; II. 7, 10, 16, 21, 31, 32, 36, 53, 56, 86, 87, 91, 100, 130, 144, 147, 166; III. 45.
—— bound for Leghorn; I. 345, 346.
—— trade with Ireland; I. 395.
—— pillage committed by; II. 175.
Pensionary of; I. 255.
Resident in; I. 304.
successes of, over Spain; I. 394. war with, determined upon by the Emperor (1630); I. 408. war in; I. 230.
entertainment of Queen Henrietta Maria in (1642); II. 308, 310. supplies from, for Charles I.; II. 320. and the Long Parliament, negotiations between; II. 323.
and Portugal, united against Spain; II. 275.
the Dutch Church in Vernack's Draining; II. 127.
the Dutch in America; II. 39.
the Dutch in India; I. 448.
—— taking of Goa by (1632); I. 465.
Hollanders; I. 145, 196, 322, 443, 444; II. 191. assist M. Soubise; I. 236. captures by; I. 371.
captures of; I. 324.
and Dunkirkers, fight between; I. 163, 311.
and French; II. 18.
at Plymouth; II. 102.
at Porto Rico; I. 256.
drive Spaniards ashore between Dover and Sandwich; I. 62. victory of; II. 12.
West India fleet of; I. 482.
Holland, co. Lincoln; I. 11.
Mr.; I. 373.
Lord (1627); I. 233, 250, 269, 314. See also Rich, Henry, Earl of Holland.
John; I. 370.
Sir John; II. 319, 330.
Richard, of Twycross; III. 21.
Hollier, Thomas, letter from; II. 245.
Hollingworth:
Edward; III. 171.
Roderick, letter from; II. 211.
Hollis, Holles:
Mr.; I. 383; II. 272, 295, 314, 326.
Denzil; I. 4.
—— petition of; I. 422.
—— brother of; I. 383.
—— excuses himself from going against Hopton; II. 328.
John, Earl of Clare; II. 211, 277, 309.
—— letter from; II. 207.
—— his countess; II. 309.
——, ——, (1701); III. 161.
—— afterwards Duke of Newcastle (1701); II. 415, 417; III. 43.
Thomas, Duke of Newcastle; III. 131.
—— Lord Chamberlain; III. 118.
Holloway, John; I. 270.
Holme; I. 3.
Holme Lacy, letter dated; I. 289.
Holme Manor, the possession of the Constables from William Rufus; I. 194.
Holmes, Leonard, bailiff of Yarmouth, letters from; II. 70, 72.
Holmesfield; III. 30.
letter dated; III. 29, 50.
Holmsted, Mr.; I. 473.
Holsatia, the dukedom of; I. 333, 336.
Holstein; I. 365.
Duke of; I. 327; II. 273.
Governor of; I. 281.
Holstock, Mr., comptroller; I. 176.
Holstrate or Hoogstraat, siege of; I. 43, 44.
Holt:
Mr.; I. 345.
Chief Justice; II. 422.
Henry, letter from; I. 343.
John, Resident of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, certificate by; III. 152.
Holybrooks; III. 5.

Holy Island; I. 436; III. 148.
letter dated; II. 217.
the ship; I. 279.
Home:
David, letter from; II. 63.
James, Earl of; II. 220, 231.
Homiston, Thomas; I. 169.
Hone, Lieut.-Colonel; I. 429.
Honnest, James, petition signed by; I. 128.
Honour, the ship; I. 37.
Honthorst, paintings by; III. 112.
Hony, Henry, letter from; I. 135.
Honywood, Sir John; I. 212, 274.
Hood, Paul, Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford; II. 85.
William, prisoner in the Fleet, petition; III. 151.
Hooe; I. 222.
Hooke, Captain; I. 410, 452.
Hooker, —, goldsmith near the Pope's Head; I. 178.
Hooper:
Captain; I. 288.
Serjeant; III. 101.
Hope:
the ship; I. 13, 32, 41.
Lord (1726); III. 131.
Hopgood, Hopegood:
Mrs.; II. 372; III. 111.
Andrew, letter from; III. 179.
Frank; II. 364, 395, 440, 442; III. 11, 87.
—— letters from; II. 361–364; III. 158.
Hopewell, the ship; II. 201, 269.
Hopkinson:
Mr., of Holme; I. 3.
William; III. 54, 56.
Hopton:
Mr.; I. 64, 123, 127; II. 85, 86, 88, 413.
Sir Arthur; II. 191, 236.
—— letter from; II. 120.
—— ambassador to Spain; II. 175, 180.
Sir Ralph; II. 295, 324.
—— his campaign in the West; II. 328, 330.
Sir Richard, letter from; I. 72.
Samuel; I. 33, 70, 75, 77.
—— letter from; II. 67, 91.
—— letter to; I. 94.
—— chosen steward to the Marquis of Buckingham; I. 124.
Hoptoph, Mr.; III. 187.
Horace, mistresses of; II. 409.
Hore, Philip; II. 51.
Horn:
Countess of (1697); II. 370.
Gustavus; II. 34.
Hornbie, Mr.; I. 6.
Horncastle; I. 2.
powder and match to be provided by (1598); I. 22.
sessions, musters within; I. 5.
Horne, Patrick, letter from; III. 5.
Hornington; II. 450.
Horstowe, Caistor sessions; I. 4.
Horton:
Mr.; II. 119, 257.
—— steward of Lady Halifax (1702) III. 3.
Walter, letter from; III. 14.
Horwood, John; II. 21.
Hose, J.; I. 482.
Hosier, Stephen, picture drawer in glass to Charles I.; I. 198.
Hoskins:
Mr., his speech in Parliament against the Scots; I. 87.
Dr. John; I. 173, 368.
—— letters from; I. 160, 168, 272, 306, 414.
Hotchin, Mr., of Harperley; II. 256.
Hotham:
Mr.; II. 441.
Sir John; II. 335.
—— appointed governor of Hull; II. 303, 306, 312.
—— letters from; II. 205, 208.
Hough:
Daniel, fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford; II. 85.
John, bishop of Lichfield and Coventry; III. 19.
Houghen, —, town crier of Derby (1701); II. 445.
Houghton:
Mr.; II. 399, 452.
Edmund, petition from; II. 82.
—— proceedings concerning; II. 85, 91.
Sir Richard, engaged in alum works; I. 84.
Hounslef, Mr., second master cook; III. 110.
Household, the royal (temp. Eliz.); I. 292.
Houslardick; III. 157.
How, Howe:
Lord (1722); III. 122.
Mr.; II. 16.
John, M.P.; II. 401, 411, 427, 432–439, 443.
—— elected for Bodmin and Gloucester (1702); III. 13, 14.
—— letters from; II. 430; III. 16.
Richard; II. 447.
Howard:
Alathea, Countess of Arundel, wife of Thomas, 23rd Earl, letters to; I. 79, 83, 155.
Anne, Countess Dowager of Arundel, widow of Philip, 22nd Earl, letters from; I. 79–83.
Charles, Lord, of Effingham, Earl of Nottingham, Lord High Admiral; I. 9, 19.
—— letters from; I. 23, 31, 36, 37.
Charles, Earl of Carlisle (1692–1738); II. 436.
Edward, Lord (1637); II. 159.
Elizabeth, Lady, wife of Theophilus, 2nd Earl of Suffolk, birth of a son to (1615); I. 87.

Howard—cont.
Lady Frances, Countess Dowager of Kildare, widow of Henry, 12th Earl, petition; I. 335.
Sir F.; II. 237.
Lord George (1702); III. 5.
Henry, 7th Duke of Norfolk (1684–1701); II. 399.
Henry, Earl of Northampton (1603–1614), Lord Privy Seal, illness and death of; I. 78, 81, 84, 86.
Henry Frederick, Lord Mowbray and Maltravers, afterwards 24th Earl of Arundel; II. 16, 289, 290.
Henry, 6th Earl of Suffolk, Deputy Lord Marshal (1714), letter from; III. 109.
James, Lord (1638), afterwards 3rd Earl of Suffolk; II. 190.
Katherine, Countess Dowager of Suffolk, widow of Thomas, 1st Earl; II. 9.
Phœnix, letter from; I. 385.
Theophilus, 2nd Earl of Suffolk, Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports; I. 107, 359, 403; II. 96, 99, 139, 141, 183, 192.
—— examination before; II. 145.
—— letters from; I. 467, 470; II. 144, 176.
—— letters to; I. 46, 487.
—— petitions from; II. 123, 124.
—— petition to; I. 470.
Thomas, 23rd Earl of Arundel, afterwards Earl of Norfolk; I. 79, 83, 102, 119, 320, 352, 446; II. 16, 18, 23, 26, 27, 47, 52, 54, 79, 149, 165 185, 194, 233, 234, 281, 293.
—— illness and death of his son Charles (1616); I. 93.
—— interrogatories for; I. 262.
—— letters from; I. 83; II. 101.
—— letters to; I. 84, 86, 87, 93, 94, 105; II. 232.
—— proxy sponsor for the Duke of York; II. 37.
—— statues brought from Italy by; I. 94.
—— travels of; I. 79, 83, 86.
—— 1st Earl of Berkshire (1626–1660); II. 159, 219, 226, 231, 239.
—— Earl of Norfolk (temp. Henry VIII.); I. 268.
—— 1st Earl of Suffolk (1603–1626), Lord High Treasurer; I. 45; II. 9.
William, Lord (1585); I. 2.
Sir William, K.B., afterwards 13th Baron Stafford (younger son of Thomas, 23rd Earl of Arundel); II. 17, 161, 290.
—— letter from; II. 225.
Howell, James, letter from; II. 176.
Howlett:
letters dated; I. 286, 302, 308, 427.
Nicholas, prebendary of Norwich, letter from; I. 465.
Howth; II. 11.
Hoy, Thomas, professor of physic in Oxford University; II. 13; III. 60.
Hucks, Aquila, keeper of the Gatehouse; I. 164.
Hudibras, quotation from; III. 22.
Hudson, John, of Sittingbourne; I. 41.
Huesden; III. 60.
letter dated; II. 65, 110.
Hugesson, Hughssen:
Mr.; I. 189.
—— merchant of Dover; I. 136, 196.
Abraham; I. 249.
James; I. 237.
—— the younger, letter from; I. 193.
Hughes. See also Huse.
Mr.; III. 104.
Dr. John, letter from; I. 445.
Hugoll, Thomas, merchant of Antwerp; I. 378.
Huguenots, the; I. 254.
Hull; I. 180, 430; II. 196, 201, 211, 216, 306, 309, 328, 335; III. 156. levying of men for; I. 310.
mayor of, his refusal to receive the governor appointed by Charles I.; II. 303.
motion in Parliament concerning ammunition at; II. 312.
ships of; I. 253; III. 9, 10.
Hulsharst, Hermann, letter from; II. 35.
Hume. See also Home:
Mrs.; III. 186.
Sir Alex.; II. 95, 129, 185, 189.
Hundleby, John, of Saltfletby; I. 6.
Hundon, Caistor sessions; I. 4.
Hungary:
King of; II. 136, 224.
—— and Queen; I. 432.
defeat of; III. 33.
Hungate, Sir Henry; I. 344; II. 238, 317.
Hungerford, Edward, letter from; III. 103.
Hungerton; I. 285.
letter dated; II. 245.
vicar of; I. 285.
Hunsdon:
Abraham; I. 270.
Lord (1716); III. 116.
Hunt:
Mr.; III. 56, 60.
Dr., Dean of Durham; II. 224.
Colonel Henry; III. 102, 110.
—— letters from; III. 101, 104.
Hunter, William; II. 21.
Huntingdon:
Lord (1604); I. 50. See also Hastings, Henry.
charter of; I. 409.
shire election (1700); II. 415.
—— riots in (1641); II. 282, 284.
Huntley, Marquis of (1639), imprisonment of; II. 159, 222.
Hurst:
near Twyford, Wilts; I. 467.
Castle; I. 322.

Hurstfield Steeple; II. 71.
Hurt, Mr.; III. 20.
Husband:
Mr.; II. 369.
Richard, letters from; III. 38, 75, 79.
Huse, Captain; I. 369.
Hutchins, Edward; I. 414.
Hutchinson:
Mr., lead dealer of Derbyshire; III. 70.
Sir Thomas; II. 309.
Huthwayte, Mr., of Nottingham; III. 9.
Huttoft, Louth sessions; I. 6.
Hutton:
Matthew, archbishop of York, letter to; I. 56.
Dr.; III. 97, 186.
Mr. Justice; II. 45, 113, 116.
Huxton:
Thomas, of Yarmouth; II. 181.
—— examination of; II. 183.
Huy:
siege of; III. 28, 61.
letters dated; III. 25, 26.
Hyde:
Park in 1701; II. 434.
Mr.; II. 266, 267, 402.
Edward, Lord Cornbury; II. 457.
Lord Henry, M.P. for Launceston (1704); III. 44.
Sir Lawrence, Attorney-General of Anne, Queen Consort of James I.; I. 198.
—— Earl of Rochester (1682–1711) Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; II. 410–412, 433, 434, 438, 440; III. 17, 44.
Sir Nicholas, Lord Chief Justice; I. 127.
—— certificate signed by; I. 381.
—— letters from; I. 304, 391, 426.
—— letter to; I. 390.
Sir Robert, petition; I. 197.
Hylen, Mr., prebendary of Lincoln Cathedral; II. 112.

I.

Ibbott, Dr.; III. 123.
Iceland; I. 379.
Ilam:
letters dated; III. 7, 26, 67.
vicar of; III. 26.
Ilan, M., merchant of Antwerp; I. 386. See also Elan.
Ilfordecombe, French prize brought into; I. 133, 139.
Illing:
Mr.; I. 31.
John, letter from; I. 26.
Images, order of the Commons for deposing of; II. 293.
Imbault, M. la Ferté; II. 288, 289.
Imbercourt; I. 414.
Imperiales, Signor, bills of; I. 115.
Imperialists, victory of, over the French in Italy (1701); II. 432; III. 37.
Inclosures:
in Dean Forest; I. 430.
in Derbyshire; I. 426.
in Leicestershire; I. 430.
India. See also East Indies.
Company, East; I. 397.
famine and pestilence in (1632); I. 447, 474.
Industry, the ship; II. 162.
Infanta, the. See Isabella.
Ing, Inge:
Mr.; III. 178, 179.
Richard; II. 353.
William; II. 395; III. 28.
—— letters from; II. 409; III. 5, 14, 18.
Ingham, Edward, letter from; I. 366.
Ingersby; I. 285.
Ingleby:
Mr.; II. 305–307.
Lady, petition of; I. 197.
Inglewood Forest; I. 294.
Ingoldsby:
Lieut.-General; III. 48.
Rectory; I. 164.
Ingoldstadt; I. 458; III. 39, 44.
Ingram:
Anne, widow of H.; I. 159.
Arthur, letters from; II. 205, 208.
Sir Arthur, Cofferer of the Household; I. 89, 214; II. 212; III. 149.
James, Warden of the Fleet prison, petition; I. 272.
Inner Temple; I. 159.
letters dated; I. 181, 190, 289, 305, 463; II. 441.
Inns of Court:
men of, requested by Charles I. to present a masque; II. 34.
—— at the Court masques; II. 87.
—— offer their services to Charles I. (1642); II. 302.
Invasion, measures to be taken against (1598); I. 21.
Inverary, letter dated; II. 215.
Ipswich; I. 157, 210.
letters dated; I. 187, 429.
shipowners of, attempt to dissolve the Shipwrights' Company; I. 111.
Ireland; I. 10, 26, 258, 272, 275; II. 50, 318, 323. affairs in (1628); I. 371, 421.
—— (1632); I. 456.
—— (1639); II. 237.
army for; I. 276, 297, 398.

Ireland—cont.
army in, to be employed for the reduction of England (1640); II. 254.
—— supplies of powder for; II. 243.
—— troops for; II. 238.
church, the, in; II. 2.
—— beneficed ministers outlawed; I. 385.
—— and sectaries; I. 455, 457, 469.
coast of, attacks upon; I. 477.
—— —— by Biscayners; II. 36.
—— —— by Spaniards; I. 278, 324.
—— —— by pirates; II. 10.
—— guarding of; I. 334; II. 40, 227.
commissioners of (1699); II. 392. committee for (1630); I. 405.
council of; I. 408; II. 4.
—— letter from; II. 231.
courts of, King's Bench; I. 408.
—— chancery examiners; I. 344, 372.
—— seals of; II. 65.
—— suits in; I. 426, 433.
Lord Chancellor of. See also Loftus, Adam.
—— (1638); II. 157, 205.
Lord Chief Justice of. See Shurley.
—— Master of the Rolls to be; II. 111.
Lord Deputy of. See also Cary, Henry; Wentworth, Thos.; Hyde, Lawrence.
—— I. 45, 119, 313; II. 4, 151, 165, 202.
—— letters from; I. 328; II. 162.
—— letters to; I. 95, 152, 306.
—— Earl of Essex sent (1599); I. 24.
—— Earl of Rochester (1700); II. 411, 412.
Lords Justices of. See Loftus, Adam; and Boyle, R.
—— I. 424.
—— letters from; I. 455, 457, 473.
—— letter to; I. 486.
—— proclamations by; II. 308; III. 50.
—— and the Long Parliament; II. 310.
Lord Treasurer (1602); I. 33.
Louis XIII., and his project regarding (1639); II. 219.
mint in, proposed erection of; I. 295.
—— coinage of halfpence for (1702); III. 15.
papers concerning, directions of Charles I. touching; II. 251.
Parliament of; II. 53, 265, 275.
plantations in; I. 192, 450, 454, 471; II. 16, 53, 54, 95, 98, 121, 128, 148, 162, 184.
—— petition of the patentees for; II. 37.
Popery in; I. 262, 361, 425, 448, 451. rebellion in; II. 294, 295, 297–302, 312, 314.
—— fomented in England; II. 312.
—— Scotch volunteers for suppressing; II. 303.
recusants in; I. 399, 480, 481.
Solicitor-General for; I. 437.
supplies from, for victualling the fleet; III. 52.
surveyor of the ordnance of; I. 33.
Mr., of the Wardrobe (1714); III. 109.
Mrs.; III. 185.
James, skinner, of Wigan; II. 80.
John, surgeon, of London, examination of; I. 389.
Ironwood, Mr., letter from; I. 44.
Isaac, Richard, petition of; I. 159.
Isabella Clara Eugenia, Archduchess, Regent of Flanders; I. 146, 224; II. 92, 168, 194, 209, 227, 288.
—— letter from; I. 183.
—— letter to; I. 183.
Isham, Mr.; II. 362.
Islay, Earl of (1716); III. 117.
Islington; II. 376.
letters dated; I. 10, 100.
fire at; II. 343.
Italy; I. 25, 37, 378, 394, 458.
newsletters from; I. 106, 109.
books printed in, value of; III. 181. defeat of the French in (1706); III. 74.

J.

Jacob:
Captain; I. 203.
Abraham, purveyor of French wines to Charles I.; I. 293, 299.
Lucas, of Botolph's Lane; II. 84.
the ship; I. 305.
Jacobites; III. 14.
Jacobssen, Reyer, van Schermhoven; I. 137.
Jackson:
Mr.; I. 30, 434; II. 35, 441.
John; I. 39.
—— petition of; I. 128.
—— letters from; I. 308, 309.
Robert; II. 217.
Sir Robert, mayor and muster master of Berwick; II. 189, 227.
—— letter from; II. 44.
Dr., President of Corpus Christi College, Oxford; II. 91.
Dr. Thomas, letter from; II. 218.

Jamaica; III. 99, 101.
James I.:
a speech made to him at Berwick on his accession; I. 42.
suits to, procedure touching; I. 47–50.
hunts at Sir Oliver Cromwell's; I. 50. refuses composition with Sir Robert Dudley; I. 55.
re-establishes bishops in Scotland; I. 58.
his proclamation of the royal style; I. 58.
—— against building in London; II. 48.
builds at Royston in the house that was the Greyhound; II. 58.
progresses of, with his Queen; I. 62.
his dislike of recusants; I. 62.
stands sponsor to Lord Arundell's son (1607); I. 63.
his debts reduced by the husbandry of the Lord Treasurer (1610); I. 68.
his demands touching prize ships and pirates; I. 134, 137.
still dissolves for want of resolving (1613); I. 77.
attends Lord Roxburgh's wedding; I. 80, 82.
his tenderness for the Duke of Buckingham; I. 163.
his straits for money; I. 182.
gives long audiences; I. 109.
his gifts to the Earl of Middlesex; II. 67.
his grants to Secretary Coke; I. 114.
—— to the Londoners; I. 464.
—— to Sir Thomas Myau; II. 180.
letter from; I. 106.
letters to; I. 95, 126, 178, 183.
letters patent of; II. 114, 116.
warrant of; I. 221.
and the discovery of the North-West passage; I. 183.
and the Spanish marriage; I. 146, 147, 161.
and supplies from the Commons; I. 68, 161.
account of his death by Sir Allen Apsley; I. 188.
servants of, list of; I. 194, 198, 199.
Queen of (Anne of Denmark), her servants; I. 195, 198.
—— invites the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London to her house; I. 80.
Duke of York, afterwards James II.; II. 341.
—— birth and christening of; II. 34, 37.
James II.:
Duke of York made Lord High Admiral; II. 180.
—— his statue in Newcastle pulled down (1689); II. 356.
—— his illness (1701); II. 423.
—— mourning for; II. 436.
James:
Captain; II. 21, 24, 43, 53.
Mr.; I. 184.
—— keeper of Newgate; II. 47.
—— secretary to Secretary Coke, letter to; I. 213.
Mrs.; II. 105.
Eleanor, letter from; II. 43; III. 154.
the ship, of Salcombe; I. 346; II. 22, 46, 48, 146.
Town; II. 81.
—— Connaught; II. 76.
—— Virginia, letter dated; II. 79.
Jancy; I. 463.
Jane, Dr.; III. 14.
Japan, present to Secretary Coke of an escritoire from; I. 448.
Jarbier. See Gerbier.
Jarmyn, Mrs., daughter of Alderman Gore; I. 270. See also Jermyn.
Jarningham, —; I. 184.
Jarrett:
Mr., at London House; I. 359.
Sir Thomas, prisoner in the Tower; I. 235.
Jarrow; I. 290.
Jarvis:
Mr.; III. 180.
Thomas, of Lynn, proposal of; III. 151.
Jay, Mr.; I. 407.
Jefferyes, Jeffreys:
Mr.; II. 451.
George; II. 388.
Jehan, Khan; I. 448.
Jemmet, John, letter from; II. 261.
Jemozalaus; I. 16.
Jenkins, Jinkings:
II. 369; III. 58.
letter dated; II. 369.
Sir Lionel, letter to; II. 344.
Toby, M.P.; II. 414.
Jenkinson:
Mr.; I. 209.
Sir Paul, Bart.; II. 358.
Sir Robert, letter from; II. 216; III. 116.
Jennens:
Mr.; I. 173; II. 397, 407, 408; III. 158, 165.
Charles; II. 395.
—— letter from; II. 447.
Owen; I. 151.
—— letter from; I. 156.

Jennens—cont.
Robert; II. 362, 363, 367.
—— letters from; II. 374–379, 388–394, 401–403, 413, 415, 427, 429–432, 436, 439, 444; III. 31, 34, 39, 45, 46.
Jennett, the ship; I. 13.
Jennings:
Mr., to be surveyor of the waterworks; I. 197.
Thomas, merchant of London; I. 332, 336.
—— —— letter to; I. 311.
Jephson:
Sir John, Deputy Governor of Portsmouth; I. 437.
—— —— letter from; I. 301.
—— —— letter to; I. 299.
William, armour dresser; I. 302.
Jermyn:
Mr.; I. 410; II. 7.
—— letter from; II. 8.
Henry; II. 30.
—— flight of; II. 282, 283.
—— letter from; II. 40.
—— Earl of St. Albans (1660–1683); III. 183.
Dr. Michael, letter from; I. 306.
Philip, letter from; II. 140, 142.
Robert, letter from; II. 62.
Sir Thomas, Vice-Chamberlain of Queen Henrietta Maria; I. 359.
—— Comptroller of the Household; II. 223, 263, 268.
Jerroms, the, family of; III. 54.
Jersey; I. 309, 319, 341, 361, 379; II. 176.
Earl of (1716); III. 117. See also Villiers, Edward.
Governor and people of, difference between; I. 94.
letters dated; I. 263; II. 30.
the ship; III. 99, 101.
Jervoise, Sir Thomas; I. 313, 362.
Jesson, William; II. 386, 388.
Jesuits, the; I. 224, 251, 277, 278, 376, 407; II. 188, 263; III. 134. measures for apprehending (1598); I. 21.
their treatment in Parliament; I. 208.
in Ireland; I. 358, 399, 425. powder or bark; III. 58, 177.
Jewell, Bishop; I. 411.
Jewel Office; III. 81.
Jewels taken as prize (1602); I. 35.
Crown, pawned in Holland; II. 129, 142, 148, 186.
Jews, the; I. 230.
buy horses in Germany for Louis XIV.; III. 49.
redemption of; I. 115.
Joachini, Sir Albertus, Ambassador of the States-General; II. 109.
—— letters from; II. 186, 225.
Jobert, Thomas; II. 353.
Jobson, John; I. 480.
Jodrell:
Mr.; II. 402; III. 56.
—— counsellor at law; II. 422.
Burdett, letters from; II. 448, 455.
Edmund; II. 454.
Elizabeth; III. 11, 92.
John, the ship, of London; II. 117.
John and Humphrey, the ship; I. 135.
John Bonadventure, the ship; I. 211.
John, Don, of Austria; I. 33, 34.
Johns:
Mr. Justice; I. 405. See also Jones, Sir Wm.
Dr. Gilbert, chancellor of Bristol; II. 81.
Johnson:
—; I. 12.
Mr., engineer; I. 301.
Alexander, of Edinburgh; II. 217.
B.; I. 159.
Nicholas, letter from; I. 309, 312.
Richard; III. 151.
Robert, alderman; I. 160.
—— his report on the alum works; I. 84.
William, brewer of Hoff; I. 200.
Johnston, Lord (1639); II. 220, 223.
Joliffe, Mr.; I. 203.
Jolley, Elias, saddler to Charles I.; I. 194.
Jon, John; I. 4.
Jonathan, the ship; I. 187, 296.
Jonchal, M. de la, captain, letter to; I. 331.
Jones:
Mr., brother of Thomas Alured; I. 269.
Captain; I. 18.
David; I. 195.
John, of Calais, letters from; I. 280, 299.
—— —— letter to; I. 280.
Sir Roger, instructions to; I. 341.
Sir William; I. 265, 431; II. 7, 107, 173, 263.
—— letters from; I. 413, 433.
Jordan, N.; I. 213.
Joseph and his brethren; I. 372.
Joseph, Capuchin friar; I. 400.
Joy, Richard, petition; III. 152.
Joyeuse, la, the ship; I. 356.
Joynesborough, Mr.; I. 203.
Judges, the, bound over in 10,000*l.* to abide the judgment of Parliament (1640); II. 270.
Judicature charges in 1614; I. 85.
Julich; I. 113.
Julichland; II. 110.
Jurdain, Ignatius, alderman of Exeter, letter from; I. 276.
Jutland; I. 365.
Juttia; I. 333, 336.
Juxon, William, bishop of London, Lord Treasurer, &c. (1633–1660); II. 127, 130, 164, 166, 168, 173, 182, 191, 194, 218, 219, 229, 232, 235, 244, 277.
——. letters from; II. 125, 128, 129, 164, 204, 225, 233, 239.

Juxon—cont.
William, Bishop of London, &c., letter to; II. 131.
—— report of; II. 124.

K.

Kay:
Captain; I. 389.
Sir John, M.P. (1700); II. 414.
Matthew, letter from; II. 10.
Kedlaston or Kedleston; II. 407, 410; III. 30, 38, 85, 86, 170.
letters dated; II. 260, 395; III. 11.
Keelby, Caistor sessions; I. 4.
Keele; III. 57.
Kegworth; II. 419.
Keightley:
Mr.; III. 38.
—, page of Lady Mary Coke; III. 159.
Charles, letter from; III. 101.
George, letter from; III. 73.
Keith, Sir Andrew; I. 310.
Kelham, Mr.; I. 389.
Kelke, Christopher; I. 4.
Kellby, John; II. 349.
Kellie, Earl of. See Erskine, Thomas.
Kelly, John; I. 482.
Kelsey, Caistor sessions; I. 4.
Kemp:
Mr., letter to; II. 79.
Edward, letter from; I. 456.
John, fellow of Lincoln College; II. 85.
Kendal, letter dated; II. 357.
Kenerick, Mr.; II. 167.
Kennedy:
Mrs.; III. 113.
Sir John; I. 159, 197.
T., letter from; III. 113.
Kensington; II. 394, 430; III. 83, 115, 175.
letters dated; I. 313, 314; II. 5, 6; III. 120.
people of quality living at (1716); III. 117.
William III. at; II. 413.
Kent; I. 44; II. 94.
defences of, report on (1625); I. 211, 212.
justices of; II. 29.
—— letter to the Council from; I. 274.
petitioners of; II. 403, 432.
—— wish to be governed by Acts of Parliament (1642); II. 311, 312.
state of, in 1642; II. 322.
Mr.; III. 122, 187.
Earl of (1633); II. 27.
Countess of (1707); III. 168, 169.
Duke of (1716); III. 117.
William, letter from; I. 279.
Keppel:
Arnold J. von, Earl of Albemarle (1690–1718); II. 390, 391.
—— his marriage at the Hague (1701); II. 431.
Ker:
Robert, Earl of Ancram; II. 47, 240, 241.
—— letters from; II. 53, 56.
—— Earl of Roxburgh (1616–1650), I. 486; II. 207, 228, 305.
—— —— letter to; II. 218.
William, Earl of Lothian; II. 231.
Kerck. See Kirk.
Kerry; I. 442.
Kesteven; I. 11.
Ketelby:
Captain Thomas; II. 227.
—— letters from; II. 6, 7, 191, 193.
Ketley, Lady (1716); III. 117.
Kettlewell, Seth, of Trinity College, Cambridge; I. 404.
Key, Mrs., dispute between Lord Kingston and Mr. Berkeley about (1698); II. 375.
Keys, Captain Henry, petition of; I. 397.
Keysar, Mr.; I. 456.
Kidd, Mr., patent of; III. 161.
Kielmansegg, Mons. or Baron; III. 116, 187.
Mme. or Countess; III. 113.
—— letter from; III. 115.
Kieltson, Eric; I. 281.
Kiffin, Mr.; II. 358.
Kilbie, Richard, sub-rector of Lincoln College; II. 85.
Kildare, Countess Dowager of. See Fitzgerald.
Kilkenny; III. 20, 50.
letter dated; III. 50.
Killamarsh; III. 11.
Killatow; I. 383.
Killberryens, Yester; II. 220.
Killby, Henry; II. 348.
Killigrew:
Mr.; I. 139.
Mrs.; III. 186.
Sir John; I. 235.
Sir Peter, despatched by Parliament to Charles I.; II. 326, 327.
—— returns from Oxford (1643); II. 330.
Sir Robert; I. 240.
—— slain by Sir Robert Dury in a duel in Spain; I. 62.
Simon, groom of the privy chamber of Anne, Queen of James I.; I. 198.
Sir William; I. 410.
Kilmorey, Lord (1701), illness of; II. 429.
Kilpatrick, servant of Sir Francis Stewart; I. 222.
Kilvirt:
Mr.; II. 153.
Richard, petition; I. 172.
Kimbolton Castle, letter dated; I. 318.
Kimford, Gloucestershire, tithes of; I. 40.
Kinerston. See also Kynaston.
Sir Edward, letter from; II. 187.

King :
Mr. ; III. 57.
Edward, letter from ; II. 352.
Giles, ranger of Malvern Chace ; I. 472, 473.
Henry, Bishop of Chichester, taken prisoner by the Parliament (1647) ; II. 329.
James, General of the Parliament's forces ; II. 189, 281, 330, 331.
—— —— letter from ; II. 195.
—— herald painter ; III. 29.
John, conductor of Berkshire recruits ; I. 301.
Sir Robert ; II. 265.
William, letter from ; I. 210.
Kingdom, Mrs. ; II. 403.
King's Bench :
Court of ; I. 405, 482.
(Ireland) ; I. 408. prison, letter dated ; I. 307.
—— prisoners in ; I. 466.
—— —— certificate by ; I. 166.
—— —— petition of ; I. 41.
Kings County, Ireland ; II. 230.
King's evil, the ; I. 478.
Kingsland, letter dated ; I. 455.
King's Lynn ; II. 72.
Kingsmill, Sir Francis, letter of credence for ; I. 78.
King's Mills ; II. 306, 307.
King's Newton ; II. 342, 431 ; III. 82, 94.
letters dated ; II. 373, 381, 382, 397, 398, 407, 408, 414, 418, 419, 424, 448, 454, 455, 457 ; III. 1, 8, 17, 21, 23, 30, 54, 70, 74, 75, 85, 161.
Kingston-on-Hull ; II. 90, 91. See also Hull.
Kingston-on-Thames ; I. 220. taken by the Earl of Crawford for the King ; II. 327.
Kingston, Lord (1698) ; II. 375, 405, 406 ; III. 35, 46, 176.
Kingswood Forest ; I. 129, 294.
Kinkaide, Michael ; III. 120, 121.
Kinnoul, Earl of. See Hay, George.
Kinsale ; I. 164, 226, 233, 258, 259, 393 ; II. 33, 147, 193 ; III. 177.
letters dated ; I. 33, 238, 239, 251.
Kinvare Forest, Staffordshire ; I. 294.
Kinwaston ; I. 374.
Kirk :
Mr. ; I. 360, 443 ; II. 35, 255 ; III. 143.
Mrs., death of ; II. 288.
Mr., of Tideswell ; II. 62.
Captain ; I. 375, 376, 485 ; II. 75 ; III. 155.
—— letter from ; II. 119.
Diana ; II. 403.
George, gentleman of the bedchamber to Charles I., letter from ; II. 185.
—— —— letters to ; I. 360, 462.
—— and David, petition of ; II. 42.
John ; II. 202.
Kirkby, Lincolnshire ; I. 164 ; II. 276.
Kirkby Moorside ; I. 103.
Kirkcudbright, Lord (1639) ; II. 223.
Kirkham, Kyrkham :
Mr. ; II. 47.
J., letter from ; II. 92.
R. ; II. 54.
Sir R. ; I 460.
Kirton, powder and match to be provided by (1598) ; I. 22.
Kirwan, An, signature ; I. 482.
Kiste, William, letter from ; I. 213.
Kiteley, Mr. ; II. 307.
Kiveton, letter dated ; II. 204.
Knaresborough ; III. 75.
wells and waters of ; I. 314 ; II. 228.
Knatchbull, Norton, justice of the peace in Kent ; I. 274.
Kneller, Sir Godfrey ; III. 191.
Knight :
Jervase, letter to ; II. 239.
John ; II. 363.
William ; I. 51.
Knighthood :
honour of ; I. 248.
fees for not accepting ; I. 423.
new order, of the Bath ; III. 129.
Knightley :
Robert, conductor of Northamptonshire recruits ; I. 301.
Sir Richard ; I. 37.
—— letter to ; I. 88.
Knighton, [Niton], Isle of Wight, letter dated ; I. 344.
Kniphausen ; I. 364, 365 ; II. 249.
Knockfergus ; II. 230, 302.
Knocklevin, letter dated ; II. 133.
Knockrahenbegg ; II. 156.
Knollys, Knolles, Niulls :
Sir Francis ; I. 2, 12, 127.
Sir W., treasurer of the household (1603) ; I. 37.
William, petition of ; I. 128.
—— Earl of Banbury, petition of ; I. 269.
Knott, Nicholas, marshal of Dover Castle ; II. 96.
Knowle ; II. 321, 382, 397.
Knowlehills :
near Derby ; II. 448 ; III. 3, 6, 34, 73, 92, 96.
—— letters dated ; II. 442 ; III. 8, 33, 36, 37, 54.
Knowles :
Sir Harry ; II. 159.
Lady ; I. 79, 82.
Knyveton :
Baron ; I. 168.
Mr. ; II. 54, 83.
Matthew ; I. 140.
Peter, memorandum by ; II. 329.
Richard ; II. 381, 382, 387.
Sir William ; I. 412, 424.
Knyvett, Lord (1620) ; I. 248.
Koch, Philip, letter from ; II. 184.
Königsberg ; I. 395.
Kynalmeaky, Lady ; II. 288.
Kynaston ; I. 107, 265.
Thomas ; I. 195.

Kyrle:
James, of Walford, deputy constable of Dean Forest; II. 51.
John, letters from; I. 125, 161, 265, 281, 331.
Sir John, letters from; I. 429; II. 70, 93.
William, nephew of Sir John; II. 93.

L.

La Baya [Bahia?]; II. 207.
La Blacquière, M.; I. 363.
Lac Mons. du; I. 332.
La Cadia; I. 373.
Lacy, Nathaniel; I. 296.
Ladenburg; III. 37.
letter dated; III. 36.
Ladustchz, Mark; I. 188.
L'Advantagia, the ship; I. 32.
La Faye, Mr.; III. 75.
La Ferté M.; II. 288, 289.
Laffenhouse, John; III. 174.
La Force, Marshal; I. 465; III. 186.
La Fossée; I. 257.
Lagg, the laird of; II. 223.
Laiaski Sidde Hamel, treaty with; II. 158.
Lake:
Arthur, bishop of Bath and Wells, memorial of; III. 145.
Sir Arthur; II. 47.
Lady, arrest of; II. 47.
Lancelot, his contempt; II. 47.
Nicholas, Earl of Scarsdale; III. 88–90, 97.
Sir Thomas, Principal Secretary of State; I. 91.
—— committed to the Tower; I. 104.
—— letters from; I. 428, 430.
Lady; I. 431; III. 150.
William, letters from; I. 435, 472; II. 28.
Lallo:
—, and Charles Dormer, match between; II. 391.
—, regiment of; III. 72.
Lamb:
Mr.; III. 161.
Dr.; II. 75, 240.
—— prisoner in the King's Bench; I. 166; III. 151.
Barbara, her marriage to Lord Fielding; II. 240.
George; I. 95.
—— M.P. for Dungarvan, note by; III. 7.
John, petition of; I. 242; III. 151.
—— letter from; II. 425.
Sir John; II. 240.
Lambert:
Mr., treatise of; I. 128.
Charles, Lord; I. 463; II. 92.
—— letters from; I. 276, 324, 469; II. 40, 57.
—— and Lord Robartes, dispute between; II. 27.
Sir Oliver; I. 27.
Lambeth; II. 31, 80.
letters dated; II. 198.
Palace; I. 8.
—— assault on (May 1650); II. 255.
Lamboy, Imperialist General (1641); II. 288.
La Mott, John, merchant; I. 210.
Lancashire; I. 392, 401; II. 344.
preachers appointed by James I.; II. 31.
priest executed in; I. 407.
Lancaster; II. 77, 369.
letter dated; II. 80.
sheriff of, fine set on; II. 155.
Duchy of; II. 246.
—— attorney-general of; III. 76.
—— chancellor of. See May, Sir Humphrey.
—— house, letter dated; II. 266.
—— lease from, of the fishing of the Dove; II. 423.
—— manors of; I. 40.
—— records of; II. 56.
—— suits in; I. 29.
Elizabeth, Lady (1635); II. 103.
Landau, siege of; III. 16, 46–51.
Lander, Mr., of Alfreton; III. 9.
Landey, Francis; III. 169.
Landgreard Port; I. 271.
Landon, Sir Philip, gentleman pensioner; I. 445; III. 143.
Landrecies; III. 100.
Lands End, the; II. 137, 166.
Land Tax Commissioners; II. 422, 424, 454; III. 17.
Lane:
Richard, attorney-general for the Prince [Charles]; II. 36, 256, 278, 279.
—— letter from; II. 73.
Thomas; I. 317.
Sir W.; I. 37.
Lang, Dr. chaplain; II. 89.
Langebrück; III. 44.
Langeman, Mr.; III. 42.
Langford; II. 407.
Manor; I. 40.
Mrs.; I. 228.
George, mayor of Nottingham (1688); II. 346.
Richard, letter from; I. 215.
Langham:
Captain; II. 263.
George; I. 299.
Langley:
Forest, Durham; I. 294.
letter dated; I. 416.
Dr., master of Eton, widow of; I. 91.

Langton, Mr., of Langton; I. 5.
Languedoc; I. 363, 467, 474, 484; II. 398.
Parliament of; I. 475.
persecution of Protestants; I. 462.
Lannerick, Earl of (1644); I. 272; II. 341.
Lansdowne, Lord (1716); III. 116, 174.
La Pointe; I. 320.
La Rivière, M.; I. 400.
La Roche; II. 403.
M.; II. 432; III. 78.
Lasley, Mr.; I. 479.
Lassalls, Mr.; II. 414.
Lasseri prints; III. 121.
La Superlativa, the ship; I. 32.
Latch, Mr., petition; III. 150.
Lathom, letter dated; II. 97.
Latimer:
letter dated; II. 150, 152.
Lord. See Nevill.
Mr.; I. 215, 240, 269.
Latin Secretary, allowances of; I. 368.
La Touche, M. de; I. 378, 379.
Laud:
William, bishop of London, and archbishop, &c.; I. 123, 350, 351; II. 16, 53, 58, 80, 81, 83, 86, 102, 103, 105, 106, 115, 121, 126, 137, 150, 154, 159, 168, 171, 197, 208, 211, 219, 223, 229, 267, 268; III. 142, 143.
—— letters from; I. 435, 453; II. 31, 198, 199.
—— letters to; I. 465, 466; II. 2, 89, 126, 213.
—— assaulted at Lambeth (1640); II. 255.
—— his great design; II. 268.
—— report by; II. 46.
—— trial of; II. 284.
Lauenburg, Prince of; I. 338.
Lauffen; III. 44.
Lauingen; III. 40, 43.
Laune, Gideon, apothecary-in-ordinary; I. 199.
Launsborough, letter dated; II. 2.
Launsheim; III. 44.
Lavington, letters dated; II. 156, 157.
Lawe, Corporal; II. 353.
Lawrence:
Madame; III. 169.
Sir Thomas (1702); III. 16.
Lay, Mr., of Mayfield; III. 96, 98.
Layfield: purchased by Sir F. Grevyll; I. 65, 69.
Dr., physician; I. 63.
Lea, Rowland, bishop of Coventry and Lechfield; I. 39.
Leach:
Mr.; II. 452. See also Leech.
Robert, of Belcheleworth; I. 5.
Leafield, William, conductor of Northamptonshire recruits; I. 301.
League, the Catholic; I. 254, 338.
Leake:
Sir Francis; I. 220. See also Leeke.
Sir Andrew; III. 45.
Leake—cont.
John; II. 103.
Sir John; III. 45, 58, 75.
Le Brun; III. 120.
Lecale; II. 220.
Lecane, Mr.; II. 103.
Ledbury; I. 108, 113, 381.
Chace; I. 294.
letters dated; I. 160, 272, 306, 322, 414; II. 121.
Lee, Leigh; I. 323.
Captain; I. 406.
Ensign; II. 6.
Mr.; I. 479; II. 128, 420.
Sir Francis; II. 210.
George; II. 152.
Henry, letters from; I. 358, 473.
Sir Henry; I. 194, 315.
Humphrey; II. 169.
Joan, afterwards Gore, 2nd wife of Secretary Coke; I. 215.
John, letter from; II. 220.
Michael, petition of; III. 151.
Pierce, heir of Sir Peter, of Lyme; I. 159.
Ralph, letter from; III. 120.
Richard, letter from; I. 336.
Sir Robert; I. 166, 209, 354; II. 84.
—— brother-in-law of Secretary Coke; I. 371.
—— letter from; I. 237.
Thomas, clerk of the peace, Ireland, petition of; I. 406.
Leech:
Mrs.; III. 96.
Sir Edward; I. 418, 426.
Sir H.; I. 119.
Leeds; II. 335.
Mr., of Wintringham; I. 3.
Leeke, James, letter from; I. 357.
Leers; III. 81.
Legar, Isaac; II. 103.
Legarde, J., deputy lieutenant of Yorkshire, letter from; II. 208.
Legat; I. 41.
Legge:
Mr., treasurer of the Navy; I. 176.
Thomas, servant of Gilbert Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury; I. 78.
Captain; II. 212.
Legh:
Mr.; II. 422.
John, arrest of; I. 186.
P., letter from; II. 421.
J., member of Parliament (1706); II. 422.
Leghorn; I. 370; II. 57, 101, 398; III. 122.
letter dated; I. 68.
ships bound for; I. 345.
Le Gourge, M.; III. 186.
Leicester; I. 340; II. 40, 62, 110, 252, 308, 338, 342, 401.
letters dated; II. 103, 252, 261, 331, 345; III. 3, 13, 14, 27.
Earl of. See Sydney, Robert.
—— Robert Dudley; I. 176.
—— (1716); III. 116.

Leicester—cont.
Fields. See London.
member of Parliament for. See May, Sir Humphrey. the Newark in; II. 339.
shire; II. 255.
—— clergy; I. 459.
—— election (1700); II. 418, 419.
—— candidates (1707); III. 78.
—— recusants; I. 228.
—— sheriff of (1642); II. 318, 319.
Leigh Road; II. 50.
Leiningen, Count de; III. 44.
Leinster:
vice-admiralty of; II. 132, 171.
Lord (1716); III. 116.
Leipsic; I. 441.
Leith; II. 130.
roadstead, letters dated; I. 95, 145.
Leitrim; II. 132.
Leke:
Sir Francis; I. 56.
Nicholas, Earl of Scarsdale; III. 85.
Robert, Earl of Scarsdale (1680–1707); III. 27, 61.
—— letters from; II. 441, 443, 444; III. 15.
Lelant; I. 337.
Leming, Mr., the lawyer; III. 136.
Lemme, William, of Apley; I. 5.
Lenan, Pierce, impostor claiming to be the Earl of Ormonde; I. 170.
Lennox. See also Stuart.
Duke of (1605); I. 58, 77.
—— (1627); I. 306.
—— letter from; I. 155.
Lenthall:
Mr., merchant; II. 269.
Sir William, Speaker, to be Master of the Rolls; II. 330.
Lenton; I. 282.
Leon and Castille, union of; I. 57.
Leopard, the ship; II. 158, 191.
Leopold, Archduke; I. 338.
Lerma, Duke of (1632); I. 461.
Lesdignieres; I. 18.
Leslie, Lesly:
Captain; I. 318.
Dr., chaplain in ordinary to James I.; I. 194.
Lord General; II. 217, 226, 228; III. 53.
Sir James; I. 271.
John, Earl of Rothes; II. 231, 232, 265.
—— letter from; II. 220.
Lester, Dr.; II. 11.
Le Strange, Hamon; I. 263.
Lett, Nicholas, merchant; I. 115.
Letten, Peter, merchant of Dover, petition of; I. 470.
Letters of marque; I. 440.
Leucata besieged by the Spaniards; II. 166.
Levant, the, currants of; I. 395.
Company, governor of, letter to; II. 57.
Leveningham, Captain; II. 358.
Leventhorpe:
Lucy, death of; II. 369.
Sir Thomas; II. 357.
Lever, Sampson, certificate by; I. 338.
Leveridge; III. 63.
Leveson:
Sir John; I. 18; II. 380, 408, 432, 433; III. 6.
Sir Richard; I. 38, 41, 45, 54, 112.
—— letter from; I. 36.
Levett:
Mr., seeks a commission for New England; I. 337.
Captain, his relation touching the Cadiz expedition; I. 242.
Captain Christopher, letters from; I. 178, 248, 269, 287, 321, 331.
Captain Thomas, letter from; I. 199.
Levinge:
Mr. Counsellor, of the Inner Temple; I. 228.
Sir Philip; III. 96.
Sir Richard, letter from; III. 100.
Sir Thomas, letter from; I. 149.
Levingston, Helen, daughter of James I.'s nurse; I. 171.
Levis, Richard, deputy to the sheriff of Derbyshire (1701); II. 443.
Leviston, a sectary; I. 455.
Lewdell, Mrs., of West Hallam, recusant; I. 227.
Lewis. See also Louis.
the; III. 147.
E.; III. 164.
—— letter from; III. 165.
Thomas, letters from; I. 384, 385.
Sir Thomas, letter from; I. 392.
Lewisham, letters dated; I. 409; II. 139, 147, 151.
Lewknor:
Mr., taken at Chichester; II. 329.
R.; I. 213.
—— letter from; I. 359.
Lewson. See Leveson.
Lexington, Lord. See Sutton, Robert.
Ley:
Sir James, Earl of Marlborough, Lord Treasurer; I. 212, 310, 358, 359.
—— letter to; I. 303.
Leyden; II. 293.
Leygh, Sir Henry, sheriff; I. 77.
Leytrim; II. 156.
Lichfield; II. 420, 423, 424; III. 161, 171. bishop of (1701); II. 426.
Palace; II. 416.
letters dated; II. 381, 400, 419–421, 423–425, 451; III. 21–23, 58.
Liège; I. 378, 380, 386, 388; II. 250; III. 26.
J., patent for tobacco pipes; I. 149.
Lier; III. 64.
Liliston, —, petition of; II. 395.
Lilly, Stephen; II. 351.
Limavady, letter dated; I. 95.
Limbourg; III. 26.

Limerick; I. 226.
bishop of; I. 393.
Limehouse; I. 30.
Lincoln; I. 7, 9–11, 21.
letter dated; I. 11.
Cathedral, outlay on the fabric and on the library of; II. 112.
bishop of. See Williams, John.
—— (1716); III. 116, 128, 130.
Earl of (1605–1625); I. 58, 158.
Countess of. See Clinton.
Lord and Lady (1716); III. 116.
close; I. 10.
lord lieutenants of; I. 7, 10, 11.
mayor of (1689), letter to; I. 352.
musters at; I. 3.
powder and match to be provided by (1598); I. 21.
sheriffs; I. 6; II. 138, 142, 143.
shire; I. 445; II. 309, 342.
—— commissioners of sewers in; II. 68, 69.
—— foresters of; I. 15.
—— inhabitants, petition of; III. 149.
—— —— abused by the apprentices of York; II. 313.
—— trained bands of, called out; II. 227.
Lincoln's Inn; I. 390.
letter dated; I. 451.
Lindsay, John, Earl of; II. 231, 234, 318, 327.
Lindsey; I. 30.
Earl of. See Bertie, Robert.
Lord (1704); III. 34.
Countess of (1716); III. 117.
Marquess of; III. 116.
Lineston, Mrs.; III. 173, 174.
Linford, Dr., prebendary of Westminster, death of; III. 122.
Ling, —, constable of Fifield, Essex; II. 173.
Linlithgow; II. 8, 25.
Linton; II. 450.
Lion, the ship; I. 17, 35, 37, 192, 199, 204, 206, 209, 216, 217, 222, 224, 225, 229, 254, 266, 300, 395; II. 318, 321.
Lion's Claw, the ship; I. 344, 345, 349.
Lion's Whelps, the; I. 32, 183, 349, 371, 404, 487; II. 40, 117, 161.
—— the First; II. 101, 102, 164.
—— the Second; I. 482; II. 48.
—— the Third; I. 385; II. 149, 150.
—— the Fifth; I. 444, 454; II. 6, 162.
—— the Seventh; I. 411.
—— the Eighth; II. 6.
—— the Ninth; I. 403, 454; II. 12, 145.
—— the Tenth; I. 409, 419, 454; II. 6, 139.
Lisbon; I. 35, 165, 231, 238, 241, 251, 252, 342, 419, 427; II. 33–46, 58. arrival of carracks at; I. 332.
fleet at, prepared to invade England; I. 265.
Lisbon—cont.
capture of; I. 222.
arrival of armed elephants from Persia at; II. 248.
ships from; I. 215.
Spanish goods from; I. 285.
Lisenstadt, Austria; I. 188.
Lisle:
Lord (1613); I. 77.
William, letter from; II. 109.
Lisnegarvey, Lisburn, battle between English and Scotch at (1642); II. 304.
Lister:
Mr., of Sysonby; III. 57.
Dr.; I. 292.
Sir Matthew, letter to; II. 213.
William, letter from; II. 205, 208.
Litchfield, Thomas; I. 40.
Litchurch, Derbyshire; I. 227; II. 446.
Lithuania and Poland, union of; I. 57.
Littel, Little:
Mr.; II. 275, 395.
John, letter from; III. 6.
Lieutenant Robert; III. 75.
—— letters from; III. 58, 99, 104, 106, 121.
Littleberry:
John, of Hagworthingham; I. 5.
Thomas, of Staynsby; I. 6.
Little Brickhill, Bucks; I. 103.
Little Ireton in Muginton; II. 344.
Little Neptune, the ship; I. 296.
Littleport; I. 30.
Little St. John, the ship of Mons. Soubise; I. 266.
Littleton:
Charles I. at; I. 283.
Captain; III. 41.
Sir Edward, Attorney-General, Chief Justice and Lord Keeper; II. 155, 174, 185, 265, 266, 270, 316; III. 80.
Sir Thomas, set up by the Court party as speaker (1701); II. 443, 444; III. 13.
Walter; III. 156.
Litton:
Mr.; I. 127; II. 61.
Henry, to be Rouge Dragon (1638); II. 173.
Liverpool, ships of; II. 10, 11.
Livewraye, J., letter from; I. 37.
Livia, wife of Augustus, discovery in 1726 of her sepulchre near Rome; III. 131.
Llandaff:
bishop of (1636); II. 107.
—— (1716); III. 116.
Llanhedrock, letter dated; I. 276.
Lloyd:
Humphrey, of Highgate, recusant; I. 224.
Marmaduke; I. 385.
—— letter from; I. 393; II. 188.
Sir Marmaduke; III. 152.
Pierce, sheriff of Anglesey, fined; II. 208.

Lloyd—cont.
Rowland, clerk, grant to; II. 208.
William, bishop of Worcester, 'Chronological Tables' of; III. 109.
Loate, Henry; II. 381, 382, 452.
Lock, Mr.; III. 107.
Locker, Dr.; III. 125, 169.
Lockhart, Mrs.; III. 185.
Lochmann:
Mr.; III. 114.
—— letters from; III. 120, 185.
Lockoe; I. 477; III. 91, 92, 132.
letters dated; I. 384, 385, 446; II. 4, 83, 385, 388, 454; III. 19, 20.
Loddenham; I. 68.
Loe:
Richard, vicar of Melbourne; II. 245, 249, 251.
—— letter from; II. 246.
Loftus:
Adam, Viscount Ely, Lord Chancellor of Ireland; I. 357, 367, 371, 382, 409, 427, 433, 437; II. 233, 240.
—— —— letters from; I. 328, 406, 428, 433, 451, 455, 457, 473.
—— —— letter to; I. 408.
Sir Edward; II. 234, 238, 239.
Sir Robert and Dame Eleanor; II. 202.
Loge, R.; II. 103.
Lombe, William, letter from; II. 39.
Londesborough, letter dated; II. 21.
London:
letters dated; I. 149, 154, 156, 157, 160, 339, 345-349, 355-361, 372, 388, 394, 404, 408, 413-415, 417-428, 439, 442, 467-470, 474-479, 486; II. 12, 15-18, 20, 23-27, 33, 34, 37, 64, 75, 78, 82, 83-85, 90, 92-94, 98, 99, 102, 109, 120, 133, 135, 149, 159, 167, 174, 176, 183, 184, 189-191, 195, 218-221, 223-226, 229, 231, 236, 238, 240, 243, 248, 252, 253, 261-265, 268, 272-275, 279-283, 285, 287-290, 293-296, 304-308, 310, 312, 316, 318-325, 327-330, 332-337, 343, 345, 352, 357, 358, 360, 361, 364, 367, 371, 372, 374, 375, 378, 379, 392-394, 411-413, 415, 416, 422, 426-441, 443, 444; III. 1, 5, 6, 13, 14, 28, 30-33, 37, 39, 42, 45, 46, 48.
the ship; II. 162, 191.
assessments in, for setting out a fleet (1635); II. 177. bishop of, R. Vaughan; I. 54. See also Mountain, George.
—— J. Robinson (1714); III. 110, 116, 126.
—— town house of (London House), letters dated; I. 453; II. 204.
buildings, proclamation of James I. concerning; I. 127.
brewers and butchers, lists of (1625); I. 200.
Chamber, the; I. 270.
London—cont.
city of, common council; I. 171; II. 309.
—— companies, plantation of Ulster by; I. 59.
—— —— Merchant, Adventures of; I. 160.
—— —— Staplers; I. 160.
—— —— Stationers; I. 382.
—— and the Civil War.
—— refuses to supply Charles I. with money; II. 255.
—— aldermen of, committed to the fleet prison; II. 255.
—— petition for justice against Strafford; II. 278, 280, 304.
—— —— for command of the Militia; II. 307, 309.
—— train bands exercised by the new lieutenants in presence of Members Parliament; II. 314.
—— state of, in October 1642; II. 323. assists Parliament with 30,000*l.* and 40,000*l.*; II. 327, 332.
—— petitions for peace (December 1642); II. 328.
city of, debt due from Charles I. to; I. 305.
—— demands of (1636); II. 129.
—— goldsmiths of; II. 76.
—— grant for cleansing the Thames; II. 189.
—— Jesuits in; I. 358.
—— Lord Mayor of; I. 435, 475. 479.
—— —— lightly esteemed by the gentlemen of the Temple; I. 389.
—— —— offence against, referred to the judges (1629); I. 391.
—— —— and the Attorney-General, cause between; II. 99.
—— —— and Recorder, "under a cloud"; II. 311.
—— —— —— censured by Parliament; II. 307, 321.
—— merchants of; I. 332.
—— —— petition of; III. 155.
—— murders prevalent in (1704); III. 48.
—— sheriffs of, censured by the Privy Council (1638); II. 175.
—— soldiers pressed in, mutiny of (1627); I. 303.
—— soldiers to be levied in; I. 31.
—— street disorders, tumults, &c. in; II. 87, 89, 291, 309, 310.
—— ships of; I. 17, 33, 35.
—— ships furnished by (1635); II. 78.
—— sickness, mortality, plague in; I. 47, 110, 212.
—— steelyard in; I. 41.
—— Stow's Survey of, condemned by Sir H. Martin; II. 38.

London and Westminster, streets, parishes, &c. of :
Albemarle Street; III. 41, 117.
Aldersgate Street; I. 271; II. 31, 38.
Arundel Buildings; II. 345–351.
Austin Friars; I. 32, 33, 35–37, 47, 57, 150, 151, 161, 173, 196, 208; III. 133.
Barbican; I. 464; II. 212.
Bath House, Holborn; I. 111, 123.
Baynards Castle; I. 431.
Beaufort Buildings; II. 373, 375, 390.
Bedford House; II. 83.
Belle Sauvage; I. 419.
Bishopsgate; II. 78.
Blackfriars; I. 146, 419; II. 37.
Bloomsbury; III. 116.
Bond Street; III. 117.
Botolph's Lane; II. 84.
Bow Lane; I. 203, 384.
Brewer Street; III. 117.
Broad Sanctuary, Westminster; I. 348.
Broad Street; I. 20, 23, 35, 47, 88, 91.
Brooke House, Holborn; I. 117, 118, 140.
Bucklersbury; I. 299; II. 84.
Burse, the; II. 233.
Canning Street; II. 84.
Chancery Lane; II. 46, 115, 422.
Channel Row; I. 323.
Charing Cross; I. 88, 420; II. 17, 21, 22, 60, 61, 84, 140, 185, 193; III. 12, 15.
Cheapside; II. 77; III. 106.
—— the cross at, to be pulled down (1642); II. 304; III. 106.
Cockpit; III. 109.
Clerkenwell; I. 179.
Clifford's Inn; I. 159.
Cocoa Tree, Pall Mall; II. 373.
Covent Garden; II. 167; III. 169.
—— inhabitants of, in 1716; III. 116.
Crutched Friars; I. 173.
Doctors' Commons; I. 159, 433.
Dover Street; II. 436.
Drury Lane; I. 157, 177, 201, 384, 393, 410, 428; II. 45, 61, 78, 186, 195, 224, 226, 229–232, 236–238.
—— gallows erected in; III. 48.
Ely House, Holborn; II. 243.
Essex Buildings; II. 350.
Exchange, the; II. 68; III. 43.
Exeter Change; III. 162.
Fenchurch Street; II. 76, 396.
Fetter Lane; I. 58, 62; II. 280, 308.
Fleet Conduit; I. 482.
Fleet Street; I. 159, 419, 434; II. 43, 166, 169, 327; III. 164, 184.
—— new great inn in (1605); I. 53.
—— the Bishop's Head in; I. 449.
Friday Street; II. 333.
Frith Street; III. 117.
London and Westminster, &c.—cont.
Furnivall's Inn; II. 344, 422.
Gardener's Lane; II. 140.
Garlick Hill or Hithe; I. 177, 178, 180, 186–192, 269, 270, 330, 353, 386, 393, 406, 410, 413, 414, 419, 424, 427, 432, 439, 447, 449, 457, 459, 460; II. 30, 38, 49, 52, 55, 56, 74, 83, 102, 105, 156, 181, 235, 239, 286.
Gerrard Street; II. 350.
Glasshouse Street; III. 117.
Golden Square; III. 117.
Gray's Inn; I. 399.
Gray's Inn Lane; I. 307.
—— the "Three Blackbirds" in; I. 384.
—— letters dated; II. 112, 326.
Great Russell Street; III. 116.
Greek Street, Soho; II. 360.
Guildhall; II. 295, 335.
—— Charles I. entertained at (Nov. 1641); II. 295.
Hatton Garden; III. 184.
Holborn; I. 167, 403, 413; II. 197; III. 63.
Houndsditch; II. 46.
Hyde Park; III. 171.
Inner Temple; II. 441.
King Street; I. 477; II. 263.
—— Westminster; II. 232.
—— St. James; III. 117.
Knightrider Street; I. 409; II. 100.
Leicester Fields; II. 360.
Lee Street; II. 439.
Lime Street; I. 332.
Lincoln's Inn Fields; III. 116, 164.
—— playhouse in; II. 367.
Lindsey House, Westminster; III. 69.
Little Britain; I. 323.
Little Sanctuary; II. 277, 315.
Lombard Street; II. 362.
Long Acre; II. 119.
Long Lane; II. 41, 306.
Lothbury; II. 363, 372.
Love Lane; II. 84.
Marlborough Street; III. 117.
Mincing Lane; I. 12, 14–16; II. 52, 152.
Minories; I. 172, 320, 322.
Moorfields; II. 369.
Moyle Street; I. 396.
Ormond Street; III. 116.
Pall Mall; II. 368, 372, 373.
—— list of inhabitants of (1716); III. 116.
Philpot Lane; I. 145–147.
Poland Street; III. 117.
Pope's Head Alley; I. 178.
Poultry Compter; I. 129, 159.
Puddler Wharf; I. 31.
Queen Square; III. 116.
Queen Street; II. 363; III. 114.
Red Lion Square; II. 439; III. 116.
Red Lion Street; II. 5.
Royal Exchange; III. 106.

London and Westminster, &c.—cont.
Russell Street, Covent Garden; III. 128.
St. Giles in the Fields; I. 407.
St. James'; I. 270; II. 56.
St. James' Square, list of inhabitants of (1716); III. 116.
St. James' Place; II. 360, 373, 374–381.
St. Katherine's; I. 35.
St. Lawrence Lane; I. 119.
St. Martin's in the Fields, petition of the inhabitants of; I. 128.
St. Martin's Lane; I. 127, 131, 164, 320, 323, 326, 339; II. 197, 201.
St. Mary, Bow; I. 388.
St. Paul's Churchyard; I. 68.
St. Peter's Street, Westminster; II. 256.
Salisbury Court; I. 159, 419.
Salisbury House; II. 4.
Seething Lane; I. 153, 156.
Savoy, the; I. 173, 176, 286, 307.
Serjeants' Inn, Fleet Street; I. 304, 416, 426.
Silver Street; I. 57.
Smithfield, the gatehouse in St. John's; I. 147, 186.
Soho Square; III. 117.
Somerset Garden; II. 346.
Somerset House; III. 97.
Southampton Square; II. 381.
Spring Garden, Charing Cross; II. 140; III. 12, 15.
Strand; I. 57, 62, 149, 326, 339–341, 443; II. 47, 53, 179, 213, 236, 350, 352; III. 116, 168, 184.
Surry Street; II. 345, 346, 350–353.
Swallow Street; III. 117.
Tower; I. 177.
Tower Hill, foundry at; II. 46, 159.
Tower Street; I. 150, 193, 276.
Tower Wharf; I. 237.
Vintry; I. 330.
Walbrook; II. 84.
Wallingford House; I. 409.
Westminster; I. 12; II. 139, 175, 176, 193, 238–241, 209, 271, 334.
—— College; II. 112.
Whitehall; I. 150, 182; II. 103, 108, 180, 200, 203, 215, 241, 242, 250, 251.
Wood Street; III. 106.
York House; I. 127, 152.
London, George, letters from; II. 435; III. 179.
Londoners, the, lands sold by; I. 394.
—— grant by James I. to; I. 464.
plantations in Ireland; I. 466; II. 91, 99, 148.
Londonderry; I. 278, 437, 454; II. 298–302.
Long:
Mr.; II. 307.
—— of Bentley, death of; I. 83.
Mr. Justice; II. 311.
Nicholas; I. 404.
Walter, letter from; II. 8, 172.
Long Eaton; II. 448; III. 138, 176.
Longford:
letters dated; II. 408, 417, 419.
Captain; I. 27.
Longstone, letter dated; II. 61.
Longueville, Duke of; I. 484.
Lord. See Yelverton, Henry.
Longwood, lord of; II. 20.
Longworth, Captain; I. 363.
Lonsdale, Lord (1700), his life despaired of; II. 400.
Loo in Flanders; II. 363, 364, 376–379, 388, 389.
—— letters, dated; II. 391, 401–403.
—— William III. and his hounds at; II. 415.
Looe; I. 218.
Loppers Hay; II. 420.
Lord, John, letter from; II. 446.
Lord:
Admiral, functions of; I. 99.
—— and the Navy Commission; I. 339.
—— office of; I. 440.
—— —— placed in commission; II. 318.
Chamberlain. See Herbert Philip, Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery.
—— (1625) to take order for kind usage of Sonbise's refugees; I. 213.
—— certificate of, as to marshals and sewers of the hall; I. 198.
—— (1717), complaints to; III. 117.
Chancellor (1606); I. 62.
Keeper (temp. Charles I.); I. 218, 219, 223, 231, 365; II. 317.
Chief Justice of the Common Pleas; I. 303.
Deputy of Ireland. See Carey, Henry, Viscount Falkland.
Marshal; I. 239.
President (Dec. 1625); I. 236.
Privy Seal; I. 83. See also Howard, Henry, Earl of Northampton, and Somerset, Edward, Earl of Worcester.
Steward. See Herbert, Wm., care of Pembroke.
—— his report concerning the Earl of Middlesex (1624); I. 179.
Treasurer (1625), complaint of Sir Robt. Pye, against; I. 229.
—— (1628) purchase of the place of; I. 359.
Lordington, Sussex, letter dated; II. 140, 142.
Lords:
House of; I. 269; II. 68.
—— refuse to join the Commons in petition for displacing evil counsellors of Charles I.; II. 304.
—— proceedings of; II. 304.
—— peers created after May 1642 not to have a vote in; II. 315.
Lorée, De Bois; I. 172, 174.
Lorne, Lord (1626); I. 262.

Lorraine; II. 33, 48.
Duke of; I. 462, 463, 465; II. 48, 276, 288.
Lorrentin, Mr., French merchant in Londonderry; I. 278.
Lothian, Earl of. See Ker, William.
Lottery, State (1710); III. 84.
Loudoun:
Earl of (1643), reported to be stabbed at Oxford; II. 330, 331.
Lord (1641), to be treasurer of Scotland; II. 265, 292. See also Campbell, John.
—— (1716); III. 116.
Loughborough; II. 64, 134, 323, 368, 369; III. 63.
Lord of; II. 342.
Louis. See also France, King of.
XII. and Mary, daughter of Henry VII. married at Abbéville; I. 268.
XIII. and the Duke of Lorraine; II. 276.
XIV.; II. 399, 400.
—— magnificence of his houses and poverty of his country (1700); II. 403.
—— his advantage from the treaty for the succession in Spain; II. 401.
—— sickness of; II. 333.
—— surly answer of, to the Dutch Ambassador; II. 410.
—— requires the acknowledgment of the Duke of Anjou as King of Spain; II. 410.
—— doats on the Prince of Wales (i.e., the Old Pretender) (1701); II. 436, 439.
Prince, of Baden; III. 37, 39, 43–45, 51.
Louithe, Oliver; I. 481.
Louth:
Ireland; I. 27.
Lincolnshire; I. 2, 6.
—— powder and match to be provided by (1598); I. 22.
Louvre:
the, conference of ambassadors at (1626); I. 254.
editions of books; III. 81.
Love:
Captain Thomas, of H.M.S. Bonaventure and Assurance; I. 127, 143, 186.
—— accounts of; I. 115, 116.
—— information touching prize ships; I. 136, 139.
—— instructions for; I. 216.
—— letters from; I. 196, 197, 200, 221, 226.
—— letter to; I. 166.
Sir Thomas, treasurer for the Army; I. 201, 242, 258.
—— letters from; I. 238, 239, 251, 257.
Loveden, Mr. J.; II. 94.
Lovell:
Mr., of the Dover packet service; III. 123.
Sir Robert, death of; I. 27.
Dr.; III. 123.
Lovelace:
John, Lord (1693–1709); III. 28.
Sir Richard; I. 127.
Lovet:
Mr., and Archbishop Abbot; I. 327.
Sir Robert, proposed marriage of; II. 283.
Loving, John, letter from; II. 344.
Low Countries; I. 168, 224. See also Holland and States General.
Arminians in; I. 94.
Commissioners from; I. 102.
officers of, press Englishmen as soldiers; I. 303.
propositions on behalf of, to Sir Noel Caron; I. 134.
ships of, captured, laden with Spanish goods; I. 280.
trade of, with England, &c.; I. 100, 154.
Lowe:
Mr.; I. 128, 181; III. 2, 70.
—— vicar of Melbourne, death of; II. 259. See also Loe.
Captain; II. 345.
Mrs.; I. 153.
—— petition of; I. 158.
Dr., letter from; I. 158.
John, letter from; III. 67.
Lowen, John, porter of James I.; I. 194.
Lowenberg; II. 207.
Lowman:
Mr.; III. 111, 185.
Henry, letter from; III. 187.
Lowndes, Lowns:
Mr.; II. 396, 399, 410, 428.
William; II. 433.
Lowth, William; III. 338.
Lowther:
Chief Justice in Ireland; I. 211; II. 275.
Gerard; II. 231.
John, letter from; II. 40, 68, 95.
Loyalty, the ship; I. 325, 337, 346.
Lubeck; I. 20, 309, 317, 327, 383; II. 192, 207; III. 153.
secretary of, answer to; I. 326.
ships of; I. 152, 240, 241, 316, 334.
Lucas:
Mr.; II. 236.
—— secretary to the Earl of Holland; I. 479.
—— keeper of the chapel closet; III. 110.
Sir Charles; II. 244.
Captain Fredk.; I. 133–135, 138.
Henry, secretary to Lord Dorchester; II. 3.
John, bailiff of Yarmouth, letter from; II. 144.

Lucy:
Sir Edmond; I. 116; III. 133.
—— and Frances, his wife, letters from; I. 59, 210.
Sir Edward, knighted at Warsop (1603); I. 43.
Sir Richard; I. 127, 210.
Sir Thomas, letter from; II. 36.
Ludlow; I. 180; II. 73, 152.
letters dated; I. 100, 385, 452; II. 73.
Castle, letters dated; I. 393, 425, 426.
Luffenham, Rutland; II. 364.
Luggelah; II. 156.
Luke:
Sir John; I. 127.
Warwick; III. 180.
Lullington; II. 450.
Lumley:
Castle; II. 435.
Richard, Earl of Scarborough (1690–1721); II. 432, 435.
Lunsford:
Colonel; II. 257, 258.
—— apprehended at Hampton Court; II. 303.
—— taken prisoner by the Parliament; II. 324.
Lupo:
Thomas, composer on the violin to Charles I.; I. 199.
Theophilus, his son; I. 199.
Lusher, Mr., an apothecary in Fetter Lane; I. 280.
Lute, Ca[rolo]; III. 122.
Luther, Thomas, of Shrewsbury; II. 90.
Lutherans and Calvinists; I. 336; II. 13.
Luttrell:
Mrs.; II. 375, 378, 379.
Miss, married to Admiral Rook (1701); II. 417.
Luxemburg; II. 207, 416.
Luxstadt. See Gluckstadt.
Lydd, Kent, vicar of; I. 326.
Lyde, Richard; I. 426.
Lygon:
Lady, sister of Thomas Harewell; I. 70.
Mary; I. 70.
Sir William; I. 70.
Lyme; I. 159; II. 117.
Cheshire; II. 421, 422; III. 65.
Lynch, Dom.; I. 482.
Lyndhurst; II. 87–89, 94, 165.
Lyndsell, Augustine, bishop of Hereford; II. 198.
Lynn (Norfolk); I. 199, 316.
—— ships of; I. 253.
—— taken by the Earl of Manchester (1643); II. 337.
Samuel, letter from; III. 64.
Lyon:
Elizabeth; I. 407.
Henry; II. 348, 349.
Lyon—cont.
John, Earl of Strathmore (1695–1712), letter from; II. 431.
Elizabeth, Lady Strathmore; III. 83.
Lyons; I. 421, 462, 474; II. 406.
Lysney, Adam; III. 116.

M.

Maas or Maese, the river; I. 26, 63, 167; II. 65, 161, 250; III. 147.
Mablesfield Forest, Cheshire; I, 294.
Macclesfield:
bill promoted by, for suppressing the making of horn buttons; III. 51.
Earl of. See Gerard, Charles.
Macdonell:
Alexander; II. 300.
Sir Donald; II. 162, 233.
Randall, Earl of Antrim; II. 133, 162, 233.
—— letter from; II. 185.
Macartney: regiment of; III. 72.
Daniel; I. 458.
Mackay:
Donald, Lord Reay, letter from; I. 464.
Sir Donald; I. 271.
Lord, discharged from the Tower; I. 438.
Lady; I. 431.
MacCarthy, Daniel, letter from; I. 342.
MacConnell, Brian, the Prince's footman (1624); I. 164.
McDonnaghy, Cahell; I. 482.
McDonogh, Henry; I. 482.
McFeagh, Phelim; I. 371, 425.
McHugh Feogh; II. 114.
McMahon, Hugh; II. 185.
McManus, Farell; I. 482.
McNawa, Gerald; I. 482.
McWard, Father Owen, Franciscan friar; I. 402, 403, 439.
Maddins, William, of Titchfield, Hants; II. 90.
Maddison:
Edward; I. 4.
Henry, letter from; II. 31.
Lionel, mayor of Newcastle-on-Tyne (1633); II. 31.
Madeira delivered to Holland; II. 276.
Madrid; II. 191, 209, 375.
Maestricht; II. 425.
siege of; I. 463, 465, 467, 470; II. 65, 66.
Maffey, Count; III. 44.
Magdeburg; I. 410.
Magnolfi, Signor; III. 122.
Maguire, Hugh, priest; I. 367.
Mahomet III. (the young Turk); I. 18.
Maidenhead, letter dated; I. 225.

Maiden Newton, rectory of; II. 81-83, 86, 89, 97.
Maidstone:
letters dated; I. 274, 410.
assizes (1642) scenes at; II. 311.
Mailscott; I. 430.
Maine, M. de la; II. 221.
Mainwaring, Mannering; I. 169; II. 406.
Dr., makes his submission at the bar of the Commons; I. 352.
Sir Arthur; II. 210.
Benjamin, mayor of Chester, letter from; I. 275.
Christopher, letter from; I. 452.
Sir Henry; I. 302, 324, 339, 343, 344.
—— letters from; I. 325, 330.
Sir John; III. 8.
Philip; II. 233.
Sir Philip; II. 264.
Mairing (Mareham) Horncastle Sessions; I. 5.
Maitland, Lord; II. 337.
Major, Mr., of Derby; II. 407.
Malaga; I 238, 248, 250.
fruits from; I. 79.
Cape, naval engagement off (1704); III. 45.
Malaspina, Marquis; I. 45.
Malden, Essex; II. 9; III. 161.
Mallett:
Mr.; I. 64, 65, 70, 231, 233, 234, 449.
Michael; I. 85.
Judge; II. 289, 311.
Malignants; I. 468; II. 321.
Malloes, Mrs.; III. 185.
Mallory:
Sir Henry; I. 185.
William, M.P.; II. 311.
—— deputy lieutenant of Yorkshire; II. 208.
Malmesbury; I. 184.
Malmy, M. de; III. 153.
Malta, knight of; I. 200.
Malt making, abuses in; II. 119.
Maltravers, Lord (1607); I. 63, 262. See also Howard, Henry.
Malvern Chace; I. 294.
disafforesting of; I. 473.
proceedings in the Star Chamber touching; I. 457, 461.
Man, John; I. 106.
Man:
Isle of, bishopric of; II. 29, 31, 32.
—— bishop of, death of (1631); I. 440.
—— letter dated; II. 53.
Manby:
Francis; I. 4.
Isaac, letter from; III. 20.
Manchester; II. 217.
letters dated; I. 424; II. 43, 216.
Mandeville, Lord (1622), gives up the treasurership; I. 120.
—— (1641); II. 284.
Manlie:
Captain John; I. 429.
Thomas, certificate of; I. 41.
Manners:
Mr.; I. 59; II. 212, 411.
Mrs.; I. 478.
Lady (1627); I. 298.
Francis, 6th Earl of Rutland; I. 147.
—— letters from; I. 146, 163, 393.
George, 7th Earl of Rutland; II. 209.
—— letter from; II. 212.
—— suit in the Star Chamber against; II. 36.
John; II. 228.
—— letter to; II. 259.
—— 8th Earl of Rutland; II. 319.
—— 1st Duke of Rutland; II. 408, 418, 425; III. 21, 23, 93, 95, 99, 160, 161.
Sir John, knighted at Warsop (1603); I. 43.
Roger, pupil of Sir John Coke; II. 65.
—— 5th Earl of Rutland; I. 10, 44.
—— —— letter to; I. 35.
Mannheim; I. 45, 118.
Mansel:
Lord (1716); III. 117.
Sir Robert, treasurer of the Navy; I. 52, 53, 63, 101, 110; III. 150.
—— admiral; I. 115, 116, 127, 167, 172, 199, 439.
—— his reconciliation with the Duke of Buckingham; I. 357.
Tom; II. 391; III. 35.
Mansfeldt:
Count; I. 175, 180, 250, 257, 364.
—— army of; I. 119.
—— entertained in France; I. 162.
—— lands at Dover; I. 170.
—— ruin of his army; I. 203, 204.
—— levies for; I. 271.
—— with his army at Ulm; I. 338.
Ernest, letter from; I. 183.
Mansfield:
Notts; I. 477; II. 64, 74.
—— letters dated; I. 34; II. 29.
Mr., of Derby; II. 343.
John; III. 138.
Mantee, M. de; I. 235, 240.
Manton, Roger; III. 181.
Manthorpe, Thomas, bailiff of Yarmouth, letter from; II. 243.
Manwood, Sir J., lieutenant of Dover Castle; II. 181, 183, 187, 188.
Maples, Thomas, of Cambridge; I. 254.
Mapperley, Lord Chesterfield's land in; I. 454.
Mar:
Earl of (1625); I. 241.
Lord (1714); III. 109.
Marbury:
Mr.; I. 5, 165.
Captain; I. 259.
Marches:
Council of the; I. 412, 425.
Court of the; II. 51.
Marcle; I. 145, 281, 331.
Audleys, manor of; I. 374.

Margaret Constance, the ship; II. 101.
Margate; I. 23, 237, 367; II. 161, 267.
Margetts, William, letter from; I. 349.
Maria, the ship; I. 330.
Maria Anne, the ship; I. 196, 200.
Mariette, M., bookseller of Paris (1718); I. 126, 128.
Markeland; II. 110.
Market Rasen, powder to be provided by (1598); I. 22.
Markets, clerk of the, his office; I. 295.
Markham:
Lady (1625); I. 182, 185.
Gervase, of East Retford; I. 302, 303.
Sir Griffin; II. 248.
—— letter from; I. 37.
John, widow of; I. 180.
Nathaniel, petition of; I. 172.
Marks, Mr.; II. 3.
Marlborough, Earl of. See Ley, James; Churchill, John.
Marliue, the ship; I. 13.
Marque, letters of; I. 211, 215, 237.
Marseilles; I. 461, 488.
Marsh:
Mr.; I. 217.
Gabriel; I. 185.
Valentine, marshal of the Admiralty Court; II. 102.
Marshall:
Mr.; III. 81.
Mrs.; II. 139.
Corporal; II. 353.
Sir George; I. 184.
Ingram, serjeant; II. 113.
John, petition of; I. 199.
William, of Hilton; II. 453.
Marshalsea:
prisoners in the; I. 273, 372.
Court; I. 348.
Marsiu, Maréchal de; III. 40.
Marston:
Derbyshire; II. 453.
Mr., merchant; II. 269.
Marstrand in Norway; I. 281.
Marten:
Sir Henry, Judge of the Admiralty Court; I. 145, 165, 168, 225, 316; II. 58, 75, 121, 171.
—— letters from; I. 140, 313, 314, 325, 388, 433; II. 31, 38, 102, 154, 182, 202.
—— letter to; II. 59.
—— death of; II. 292, 297.
Martignone, Pietro, letters from; I. 79, 91, 93; III. 148.
Martin:
Captain; II. 257, 258.
John; I. 151; III. 173.
alias Strelley, Nicholas; I. 199.
Truthgrow; I. 414.
Marvyn, John, bailiff of Yarmouth, letter from; II. 144.
Mary, Queen of Louis XII., daughter of Henry VII., letters from; I. 268.
Mary de Medicis, Queen Mother of France. See Medicis.
Mary, Princess, daughter of Charles I. afterwards Queen; II. 26, 28, 281.
—— treaty for her marriage with William, Prince of Orange; II. 274.
Mary Tudor, her chaplains not to say mass (1551); I. 1.
Mary and John, the ship; I. 470.
Maryborough Castle, Ireland; III. 155.
Maryland, governorship vacant (1702); III. 16.
Marylebone Park; I. 230.
Maryport; II. 248.
Mary Rose:
the ship; I. 13, 14, 32, 37, 167, 175, 186, 192, 207, 230, 279, 308, 322, 337, 411, 434, 435; II. 114, 185.
—— letters dated; I. 329, 345, 417.
Masey, Joseph, clerk at the Council; I. 476.
Masham, Lord (1714), Cofferer; III. 110.
Mason:
Mr.; I. 185, 352; II. 348.
Mrs.; II. 348.
Ambrose; I. 164.
Captain; I. 187; II. 86, 108, 109, 113.
—— Henry, letter from; I. 275.
John, letter from; I. 413.
Robert, letter from; II. 58.
Masques at the Inns of Court (1633), request by Charles I. for; II. 84.
Massachusetts Bay; I. 449.
Massingberd:
Jonathan; I. 397.
Thomas, of Bratoft; I. 5.
Masterson, Mr.; II. 132.
Mather, John; III. 138.
Matthew:
the ship; I. 217.
Samuel, letter from; II. 81.
Tobie, letters from; I. 84, 94.
—— letter to; I. 73.
Sir Tobie, flight of; II. 268.
Matlock; II. 442.
Maubert, Mr.; II. 103.
Maudesley, Henry, clerk of the peace in Ireland, petition of; I. 406.
Maulton, Robert; I. 308.
Maurice:
Count; I. 43, 44; II. 207.
Prince; I. 145; II. 434.
—— landing of, with Prince Rupert at Newcastle; II. 321.
—— wounded at Worcester fight; II. 322, 323.
Mavis, John; I. 4.
Maw, in Morvthen; I. 384, 392.
Mawe, Dr. Leonard, letter from; I. 214.
Maxwell:
Mr.; I. 164, 438.
John, bishop of Rosse (1639); III. 236.
May:
Mr.; I. 420; II. 191.
Hugh, and Sir H. Agarde, dispute between; II. 81.

May—cont.
Sir Humphrey, Chancellor of the Duchy and Vice-Chamberlain; I. 385, 405.
—— letter from; I. 381.
John, of Mairing, Lincolnshire; I. 5.
Mayart:
Mr.; I. 211.
Judge; I. 442.
Mayence; I. 408; II. 153; III. 36, 37.
Mayerne, Sir Theodore, physician to Charles I.; I. 292, 400; II. 11, 289.
Mayes, John; I. 301.
Mayfield, Father, assistant to the bishop of Chalcedon; I. 407.
Mayflower, the ship; I. 17.
Maynard:
Lord (1716); III. 117.
Henry, secretary to Lord Treasurer Burghley; I. 14.
Mayne:
H., captain of the Prosperous of Oreston; I. 318.
Jasper, petition of; I. 171.
Mayo:
Mr.; II. 152, 197, 257, 269, 283, 308, 330; III. 136.
—— servant of Sir John Coke; II. 32.
James, his account; I. 162; II. 248.
—— letter from; II. 78, 343.
—— letter to; II. 78.
John; I. 85.
Richard; I. 118.
—— of the Hythe; I. 131, 174.
Robin; I. 123.
Mazarin:
Cardinal; II. 328, 333.
Madame; II. 436.
Mead Hole by Cowes; I. 323.
Meadow, Thomas, bailiff of Yarmouth, letter from; II. 243.
Mease:
Peter, tutor of Secretary Coke's sons; I. 97, 446, 232.
—— letters from; I. 108, 111, 117, 124, 136, 432; II. 261.
—— letter to; I. 111.
Measham; III. 92.
Meat, Daniel; II. 349.
Meath, Earl of (1636); II. 148.
Meautys:
Mr.; I. 451.
H., letter from; I. 431.
T.; II. 46.
Mecklenburg; II. 207.
Medburne; I. 245.
Meden; I. 43.
Medicis, Mary de, Queen Mother of France; I. 256; II. 49, 69, 194, 196, 197.
Medina, Duke of, stays French shipping; I. 331.
Mediterranean, the, Spanish islands in; II. 154.
Médoc; II. 140.
Medway, the; I. 219, 427.
Meende, letter dated; I. 173.
Meerlebuck, Ghent, letter dated; III. 71.
Meerman, M., grand maitre of the King of the Romans (1704); III. 47.
Meermount, Marquess of (1716); III. 117.
Megano, Johan, letter from; I. 46.
Megant Sir Adrian de, joins the army of Count Mansfeldt; I. 119.
Megg, Oliver, of Lubeck; II. 192.
Mehrenberg; II. 184.
Meilleray, M.; II. 239.
Melander, M.; II. 281, 282.
Melbourne; I. 354, 410, 412, 485, 488; II. 26, 27, 61, 68, 71, 115, 118, 163, 239, 240, 261, 272, 304-310, 311-313, 315, 317-319, 329, 331, 342, 364, 365, 413.
Church, Peers' chapel in; III. 83.
Common; III. 55.
inclosures at; I. 448, 459.
letters dated; I. 393, 453; II. 245, 246, 256, 322, 450, 452, 456; III. 81-84, 86-98, 135, 136, 164, 166-174.
Park; I. 417, 425.
Rectory; I. 339.
—— purchase money for the lease of; I. 361.
—— bill in Parliament relating to (1702); II. 453.
Melcombe Regis; II. 192, 193.
letters dated; I. 169, 341.
Meldrum:
Sir John; II. 85.
—— letter from; I. 344.
Melfort, Lord, receives a lettre de cachet from Louis XIV.; II. 422.
Mellor, Mr., minister of Teddington; II. 61.
Melo, Don Francisco di, Spanish Governor of Flanders; II. 317, 320.
Melrose, Earl of (1625); I. 241.
Melton; II. 56; III. 3.
John; II. 224.
—— letters from; II. 40, 44, 68.
Sir John; II. 16.
—— letters from; II. 23, 209.
Mowbray; II. 406.
Meming; I. 338.
Menger, Captain John; III. 22.
Mennill, Francis; II. 410, 445.
Mennes:
Captain John; II. 134.
—— letters from; I. 378, 379.
Mentink, Peter, merchant of Amsterdam; III. 129.
Mepham, —, a tanner; I. 120.
Mercers and Weavers, memorial of; III. 183.
Merchant Adventurers:
the Company of; I. 38, 275, 317, 330, 414, 465; II. 167, 309.
—— their grievances against the States; II. 150.
—— to be treated with for victualling the Navy; I. 213.
—— of Delft; I. 465; II. 69.
Merchant Bonadventure, the ship; I. 224.
Merchant Royal, the ship, of Sandwich; I. 226.

Mercury, the ship; I. 31, 32.
Meredith:
Mrs.; II. 64.
Colonel; III. 41.
Robert; II. 231, 233.
—— letter from; II. 46.
Meremont, Mr.; III. 185.
Merhonneur, the ship; I. 22, 32, 210; II. 92.
Meriot, Mr.; I. 389.
Meroda, Colonel; I. 338.
Merrick:
Mr.; III. 146.
Dr.; II. 292.
Sir John, governor of the Russia Company; II. 273; III. 154.
Merry:
John; I. 227.
Sir Henry, tenants of; I. 228.
Mervyn:
Captain; I. 105.
Colonel Audley; II. 299–301.
Sir Henry, Admiral of the Narrow Seas; I. 129, 132, 133–139, 178, 215, 287, 290, 291, 313, 332, 414, 415, 422, 430; II. 145, 146, 149, 150.
—— certificate in the cause of; I. 140.
—— interrogatories to; I. 134.
—— letters from; I. 133, 318, 324, 325, 327, 395, 413; II. 148, 149.
—— letter to; I. 323.
Captain James, letter from; I. 324.
Messias, Don Diego, mission of; I. 321, 322.
Messina, letter dated; III. 120.
Metham:
Sir Thomas; II. 228.
—— letters from; II. 205, 208.
William; I. 5.
George, of Hanby; I. 6.
Metz; I. 458.
Meulenaer, M.; II. 361.
Meuse, the river. See Maas.
Mevy, letter dated; I. 275.
Mew, Peter, bishop of Winchester (1684–1707); II. 361.
Mexico, revolt of; II. 276.
Mey, Mr.; I. 307.
Meynell:
Mr.; II. 457.
—— of Langley; III. 28.
F.; III. 2.
Meyrick, Rowland; I. 170.
Miboyse, Antoine, letter from; I. 309.
Michell, Henry, mayor of Weymouth, letter from; II. 192.
Mickleover, letter dated; II. 387.
Micklethwaite, Dr.; II. 183.
Middle Temple, the; II. 36, 261.
letters dated; I. 433, 463.
Readers' feast at; II. 88.
Middleburg; I. 20, 379.
letter dated; I. 50.
Middleham; I. 425. lordship of, purchased from Charles I.; II. 70.
Middlesborough; I. 38.
Middlesex; II. 150.
Earl of. See Cranfield, Lionel. highways, Commissioners for; I. 304.
justices; II. 167.
sessions; II. 174.
Middleton; I. 34.
letters dated; I. 449; II. 27, 62.
Mr., letters from; II. 57, 61.
Captain Thomas; II. 234.
Sir Thomas; I. 337, 393.
Captain William, secretary to William, Earl of Pembroke; I. 16, 17.
Midgley, chapel to be consecrated at; I. 164.
Midlands, the, ruinous condition of (1704); III. 52.
Midds, Thomas; I. 38.
Milan; II. 416.
letter dated; I. 91.
the French at; I. 423.
Thomas Coke's visit to (1613); I. 78.
Mademoiselle; II. 370.
Milander (Prince of Milan); II. 189.
Milbank, Mr.; II. 414.
Mildecaif, —, a priest; I. 402.
Mildmay:
A., letter from; II. 166.
Sir Henry; I. 239; II. 46, 67, 208.
—— letter from; II. 197.
Miles, Milles:
James; I. 379.
Captain James; III. 179.
Milford; I. 160.
Haven; I. 300; II. 145.
Spaniards at (1601); I. 30.
Stairs; I. 389.
Military expenditure in 1614; I. 85.
Militia, the.
question as to the command of; II. 304, 305.
Bill passed; II. 313.
Millctière, M. de; II. 71.
Millicent, Mrs.; III. 186.
Millington, Mr.; II. 240, 241.
Milner:
Francis, bursar of Trinity (1598); I. 20.
Gregory; I. 19.
—— letter from; I. 23.
Milton; II. 37.
Bucks; III. 65.
—— letter dated; II. 437.
near Gravesend; I. 41, 417.
—— letter dated; I. 303, 304, 330.
Milward:
Mr.; II. 347–349.
John; servant of Sir Ralph Sadler (1579); I. 149.
—— lieutenant; II. 351, 353, 355.
Sir Thomas, letter from; II. 195.
Minden; II. 189.
Minehead; I. 192.
Miners' wages in coal mines at Clutton (1610); I. 71.

Minikin, the ship; I. 279.
Ministers deprived and silenced (1606); I. 62.
Minories, the, porter's place in; I. 383.
Minors, Ralph, tutor to Secretary Coke's children, letter from; I. 221.
Minshull, Mr., Queen's Attorney for Cheshire and Flint (1702); III. 8.
Mint, the; I. 247.
controllership of; I. 164.
effect of trade with the East Indies on; I. 155. removed to York (1642); II. 309.
Mirabel, —; I. 322.
Miscon; I. 375.
Misselden:
Edward, deputy agent of the English merchants at Delft; I. 467.
—— letters from; I. 465, 467.
Misseuden, Francis, of Heling; I. 4.
Mitcham, letter dated; II. 186.
Mitchell. See also Michell.
Mr., M.P. for Sandwich (1700); II. 401.
John; II. 57, 61, 62.
—— the King's ward (1625); I. 198.
Michael, conductor of Buckinghamshire recruits; I. 301.
Moate, Canterbury, letter dated; II. 114.
Mocapo; II. 21.
Mocktree Forest, Herefordshire; I. 294, 464.
Modyford, John, alderman of Exeter, letter from; I. 213, 276.
Moersburg; I. 441.
Moghary, Cormicus; I. 482.
Mogul, the; I. 447.
Mohun:
Sir Reynold; I. 235, 252.
Elizabeth, Lady, letter from; III. 181.
Charles, Lord (1682–1712); II. 446.
Molenabige; II. 132, 156.
Molesworth, Lord (1716); III. 116.
Molins, John, letter from; II. 435.
Molyneux:
Daniel, Ulster King of Arms, and William, his son; I. 473.
Sir Richard v. Lady Torbock; I. 148.
Mombazon, Duke of; II. 1.
Mompesson:
Sir Giles; I. 429.
—— his offer touching trees in the New Forest; I. 95.
—— letter to; I. 107.
Monaghan; II. 298.
Monceaux, Madame de; I. 26.
Monck, W.; I. 328.
Monckton, Mr.; I. 399.
Mondelsheim; III. 37.
Money, coinage of, regulations as to (1696); II. 367.
Monings, Sir William; I. 212.
Monk, the ship; III. 6, 8, 179.
Monmouth; II. 101.
mayor and aldermen of, refuse obedience to an order of the House of Commons; II. 312.
sheriff of; II. 73.
Duke of; III. 182.
Duchess of; III. 116.
Earl of. See Carey, Robert.
shire; I. 2; II. 188.
Mons; II. 370.
Monson:
Mr.; I. 15.
Lady; I. 393.
family of; I. 399.
Sir John; II. 225, 243.
Sir Thomas, to be arraigned; I, 91.
—— Secretary of the Council of the North; III. 150.
Sir William, sent to the Tower; I. 91.
—— petition of; I. 171.
Montague:
Mr.; I. 255, 256, 408, 452; II. 240.
—— chaplain in ordinary to Charles I.; I. 206.
Dr. (1625); I. 208; III. 134.
—— bishop of Chichester; I. 373.
Duke and Duchess of (1716); III. 116.
Sir Edward; I. 1, 2.
Henry, 1st Earl of Manchester (1626–1642), Lord President of the Council, afterwards Lord Privy Seal; I. 356, 358, 435, 443; II. 54, 58, 72, 105, 115, 121, 188, 219, 223, 268, 281.
—— —— letters from; I. 318, 343.
Irby; III. 161.
Edward, 2nd Earl of Manchester (1642–1671), Parliamentary general; II. 337–339.
—— —— challenged by Lord Willoughby of Parham; II. 341.
Charles, 4th Earl of Manchester (1682–1722); II. 405, 422; III. 24.
—— —— coldly received at Versailles (1701); II. 416.
George, Lord Halifax (1700); II. 410.
Charles, Earl of Halifax (1715); III. 112.
—— his Countess (Ann Yelverton); II. 417, 440, 441.
Richard, bishop of Norwich, death of (1641); II. 281.
Sydney; I. 272; II. 82, 211.
Sir Sydney; I. 123; II. 141.
Walter; II. 237.
—— seized disguised at Rochester, and sent to the Tower (1643); II. 338.
Wortley; II. 415.
Montaigne. See Mountain.
Monteith, Lord (1631); I. 431.
Monteux, M., translator of the "Sham Doctor" play; II. 367.

Montgomery :
Earl of (1625), grant of Enfield Park ; I. 194.
Viscount (1641) ; II. 298, 301.
Captain George ; II. 298, 301.
Sir James ; II. 298, 301.
shire ; I. 452.
Montigny, M., governor of Dieppe, letter from ; I. 487.
Montmédy ; II. 239.
Montmorency :
M. de ; I. 471, 484.
—— reward for his capture ; II. 1.
Due de, Admiral of France ; I. 205.
Montpellier ; I. 476.
letter dated ; II. 395, 397, 398.
university of ; I. 395.
Montrose, Duke of (1716) ; III. 117. See also Graham.
Monyash ; II. 27 ; III. 138.
Moodie, Mr. ; I. 389.
Moon, the ship ; I. 13, 214, 442.
Moore ; II. 68. See also More.
Mr. ; II. 5, 410 ; III. 168, 173.
Mrs. ; III. 111.
Lord (Ireland) ; III. 154.
Lady (1639) ; II. 240.
Adam, letter from ; II. 169.
Andrew ; II. 217.
George, letter from ; I. 67 ; II. 441.
Sir George, J.P., Surrey ; I. 220.
Henry, letter from ; I. 275.
John, alderman of London ; I. 275.
Sir John ; II. 440.
Thomas, brewer, of Southwark ; I. 200.
Moorhead, Wm. ; II. 127, 181.
Moorish prisoners, transport of ; I. 289.
Mootham, Captain ; I. 261.
Mordaunt :
Mr. ; II. 236.
John, Earl of Peterborough (1631), letter from ; I. 425 ; II. 70.
—— (1697–1735), daughter of ; II. 415.
Lord (1704) ; III. 43, 64.
Lady Mary, expected marriage of (1701) ; II. 434.
More. See also Moore.
Mr., prebendary of Lincoln Cathedral ; II. 112 ; III. 74.
Sir Antony, picture after ; III. 113.
Gabriel, chaplain of the Duke of Buckingham ; I. 164.
John ; II. 174, 186.
—— letter from ; II. 47.
Mungo ; I. 398.
Sir William, propositions of ; I. 398.
Morecocke, John ; I. 393.
Morecroft, Ferdinand, letter from ; II. 128.
Moreton :
Gloucestershire ; I. 40.
a robber executed at Buckingham ; I. 282.
Morewood :
Mr. ; II. 331.
Rowland, letter from ; III. 27.
Morewoods, the ; I. 413.
Morgan :
Mr. ; I. 345, 383.
Mrs. ; III. 186.
Colonel ; I. 333 ; II. 20, 126.
General ; I. 391.
Sir Charles ; I. 309, 340, 378 ; II. 34.
—— acquittance of ; I. 448.
—— letter from ; II. 28.
—— troops under ; I. 311.
E., brewer ; I. 200.
Thomas ; I. 99.
William, petition of ; I. 171.
Morice, Morrice :
Mr., Secretary of the Queen of Bohemia ; II. 55, 85.
Francis, letter from ; I. 459.
John, grant to ; I. 148.
Morlaix ; I. 318.
Morleston, Derbyshire ; I. 227 ; II. 397, 446 ; III. 70.
Morley :
Thomas ; I. 164.
William ; II. 432.
—— letters from ; II. 403, 433.
Sir William, sheriff of Sussex (1642) ; II. 329.
Morocco ; II. 296, 297.
Emperor of ; I. 316.
—— letter from (to Charles I.) ; II. 202.
Morriman, John, of Hollinton ; III. 141.
Morris :
Captain ; I. 109.
James ; III. 2.
the ship ; I. 396.
Morrison, Moryson :
Sir Charles ; I. 127.
Sir Richard ; I. 27.
Thomas ; I. 6.
Morrissy, Edward, cousin of Richard ; I. 67.
Morsach ; I. 113.
Morth Forest ; I. 294.
Mortimer, — ; II. 162.
Mortlake, letter dated ; I. 307.
Morton, Moreton :
Dr. ; I. 68.
Earl of (1627) ; I. 315.
—— (1639) ; II. 210.
Lord (1641) ; II. 292.
Sir Albert, Secretary of State, death of ; I. 211, 214, 230.
T., Dean of Winchester, letter from ; I. 66.
Thomas, bishop of Coventry and Lichfield ; I. 396.
—— —— letters from ; I. 444.
—— bishop of Durham ; II. 96, 105, 156, 209, 246, 259 ; III. 105.
—— —— letters from ; I. 484 ; II. 45, 50, 84, 87, 89, 113, 128, 130, 160, 232, 235, 240, 245.
—— —— letters to ; II. 116, 230.
Moscow ; I. 441 ; II. 179.
Moselle, the ; III. 48, 50, 61.

Moseley:
Sir E., attorney of the Duchy; I. 354.
Dr. John, vicar of Newark; II. 225, 226.
Mosson; II. 43.
Mostyn, Sir Roger; III. 8, 12, 57.
Mouldsworth, Captain; I. 429.
Moulin:
Pierre du; II. 63. See also Dumoulin.
—— letter from; III. 154.
Seigneur du; I. 308.
Moulson, Thomas, Lord Mayor of London (1633); II. 25.
Mounger, Captain; III. 36.
Mounson, John; I. 3, 4.
Mountain, Montaigne:
George, Bishop of London; I. 185, 212.
—— letter from; I. 165.
—— Archbishop of York, letter from; I. 384.
Mountfort, Miss, benefit of; III. 79.
Mountjoy, Lord; I. 307.
Mounts Bay, Cornwall; II. 125.
Mountmorris:
Lord (1631); I. 425, 431, 437, 438, 455; II. 264, 265. See also Annesley, Sir Francis.
—— (1642), indicted for striking Dr. Coke in Westminster Hall; II. 314.
Mountrath, Lord (1716); III. 116.
Mountrey, Mr.; II. 445.
Moye, Lambert, the pirate; I. 137, 139.
Moysey:
Andrew, letter from; I. 279.
William, bailiff of Ipswich; II. 197.
Moze Hall and Park, Essex; I. 103.
Much Marcle:
Secretary Coke's house at; I. 107, 109, 110.
letter dated; I. 265.
manor of; I. 374.
Muddiford, John, of Exeter; I. 213, 276.
Muginton; II. 344.
Muirhead, Mr.; II. 69.
Mulgrave:
Earl of (1635); II. 84.
—— (1718); III. 175.
Mulhausen; I. 15.
electoral assembly of; I. 380.
Mullingar, Dominican priory at; I. 448.
Munday, Mundy:
Mr., J.P.; I. 471.
——; II. 411.
Anthony, enlarges Stow's Survey of London and is chastised therefor; II. 38.
Robert, letter from; III. 51.
Thomas; I. 195.
Mundelsheim; III. 44.
Munden, Sir J., trial and acquittal of; III. 13.
Munich; III. 43.
Munster:
Ireland, condition of; I. 254; II. 53, 230.
—— bishop of (1699); II. 391.
—— chief justice of (1628); I. 348.
—— Lord President of (1625); I. 238; II. 2.
Germany; II. 110.
—— the wars in; I. 454.
—— treaty of peace at; II. 333.
Murford, Nicholas, letter from; II. 191.
Muriett, Mr.; II. 348.
Murphy, Mr., of Portugal; I. 342.
Murray:
Mr.; I. 95, 293.
—— of the Bedchamber to Charles I.; II. 83.
William; II. 294.
—— voted by the Commons to be removed from the King (Charles I.); II. 305.
Muschamp, Captain; II. 217.
Muscovy:
Company of Adventurers to Greenland; I. 451; III. 150.
yarn; I. 189.
Muses, Cornelius, signature; II. 109.
Musgrave; II. 164.
Mr., M.P. (1701); II. 428.
and Vaux, trial between; II. 95.
Christopher, death of; III. 38.
Sir Philip; II. 190.
Musket, Father; I. 331, 332.
Mustard, Anne; II. 147.
Musters; I. 3–5, 20, 412; II. 207, 211.
on board ship at Chatham; I. 140.
in Yorkshire; II. 205.
Mr., cousin of Alice and John Coke (1696); II. 362, 368.
Mustian, Colonel; I. 457.
Myan, Sir Thomas, knight harbinger, grant to; II. 180.
Myne, Mynnes:
Mr.; II. 126, 130.
George, clerk of the Hanaper; I. 464.

N.

Naarden; I. 391.
Namur, siege of; III. 24, 26.
Naney; I. 463.
Nanmoith Frith; I. 198.
Nantes; I. 241, 277, 318.
Nantwich; II. 341; III. 150.
Napier, L., letter from; II. 219.
Naples; I. 167, 217; II. 248, 398; III. 124.
letters dated; I. 165; II. 113.
soap; II. 428.
viceroy of, detains the St. George; I. 179.

Napleton, Christopher, advertisements from; I. 312, 336.
Napper, Sir Nathaniel, of Dorset; I. 362.
Naps, Mr., of Basinghall Street; II. 351.
Narboune; I. 475; II. 166.
Narrow Seas, the, ships in; I. 379, 455.
Nassau:
Count William of; II. 65, 184.
William Henry, Lord Tunbridge, brings the news of Blenheim; III. 40.
Naule, Robert; II. 57, 61.
Naunton:
Robert, M.P. for Helston, afterwards Sir Robert; I. 47, 94, 102, 110, 310; II. 60, 61, 64.
—— letters from; I. 24, 26, 32, 33, 44, 45, 58, 62, 63, 68, 70, 77, 95, 130; II. 22.
—— letters to; I. 24, 38, 100.
—— marriage of; I. 63.
—— made secretary; I. 95.
—— made Master of the Court of Wards; I. 172.
Navarre and Portugal, union of; I. 57.
Navigation Act; III. 55.
Navy, the:
abuses in; I. 40–42, 105, 106, 112.
accounts, moneys, &c.; I. 107, 155, 203.
administration, papers on; III. 149. commission for the (1619); I. 102.
—— (1628) discharged by Charles I.; I. 339.
commissioner of the, draft appointment of a; I. 403.
Commissioners; I. 116, 117, 177, 268, 331.
—— (1619), their character; I. 104.
—— —— list of; I. 101.
—— (1626), commanded by Sir E. Cecyll; I. 258.
—— certificate of; I. 215.
—— discoveries before; I. 171.
—— letters, warrants, &c. from; I. 104, 106, 107, 110, 114, 115, 145, 200, 219, 229, 231, 278, 287, 288, 299, 309, 326, 417.
—— letters, memorials, petitions, &c. to; I. 145–148, 187, 193, 196, 197, 200, 204, 213, 230, 233, 253, 301; III. 155. condition of; I. 99, 260, 261, 282, 414, 415.
—— inquiry into; I. 149.
—— notes by Secretary Coke on; I 192.
—— projects for improving; I. 99.
estimates; I. 2; II. 16.
masters of the; I. 299.
mortality on board ships; I. 248.
mutiny of seamen; I. 274, 277, 288.
office, the; I. 27, 45; III. 41, 65. officers of the; I. 176, 413, 414, 476; II. 62, 181.
—— functions of; I. 96.
—— in 1547; I. 23.
—— ignorance and remissness of; I. 357.
Navy—cont.
papers; I. 378, 422. pay; I. 112, 258, 398.
pensions; I. 220.
pressing for the; I. 201.
pursers in, duties of; I. 178.
shipbuilding, repairs, &c. for; I. 240, 285, 287; II. 1.
stores, reports on; I. 188, 208.
timber from the New Forest for; I. 34–95.
Treasurers of, list of; I. 63.
—— official notices of; I. 223, 345, 346.
victualling of ships; I. 210, 213, 221, 237, 265, 275, 277, 279, 347, 407.
Neale, Neyle;
Captain, certificate of; II. 193.
Dr. Richard, Bishop of Winchester; I. 350, 351, 432.
—— Archbishop of York; II. 31, 56.
—— —— letter from; I, 466.
—— —— death of; II. 264.
Neaven, Thomas, grant to; II. 92.
Nebal, Heinriaq, deputy of the States; I. 327.
Nece, Mr.; II. 70.
Neckar, the river III. 44.
Nedham, Needham:
Sir Francis; I. 339, 453.
—— letters from; I. 340; II. 71.
—— purchases the lease of Melbourne Rectory; I. 361.
—— payments to; I. 354.
Sir John, letter to; I. 88.
Needwood; II. 370, 386, 394, 423; III. 15.
Negro, the ship; I. 309.
Nelmes:
Captain Thomas, of the St. George; I. 165, 168, 179.
—— attestation of; I. 217.
—— letter from; I. 170.
—— letters to; I. 156, 157, 160, 165.
Nelmo, letter dated; II. 38.
Nelson, William, of Barton; I. 4.
Nemo, William, mayor of Berwick; II. 217.
Neppen, David; II. 84.
Neptune, the ship; I. 183, 248.
Ness, the; I. 22.
Nesse, Daniel; I. 249.
Netherby, letter dated; II. 222.
Nether Halliock manor, co. Leicester; I. 103.
Netherlands, the, fisheries of; III. 146, 147.
Nethersole:
Sir Francis; I. 486.
—— apprehension and imprisonment of; II. 43, 44.
—— his disputes with Carleton and Lord Goring; II. 3, 5, 17, 18, 20–24.
—— and the Queen of Bohemia; II. 26.

Nethersole, Sir Francis—cont.
—— letters from; I. 339–341; II. 8, 13, 17.
—— note by; III. 145.
Sarah, letter from; II. 72.
Nethway, Thomas, merchant of Bristol; II. 117.
Nettervill, John and Luke; I. 481.
Neve, Jeffery; I. 283, 319.
Neville:
Mr.; II. 442.
Ralph, Earl of Westmoreland (1615); I. 88.
(1639); II. 248.
Randolf; I. 213.
Dr. Thomas, master of Trinity College, Cambridge; I. 68.
—— letters from; I. 31, 37.
Nevison, Sir Roger; I. 212.
Newark; I. 314; II. 226, 330–332, 335, 339.
Charles I. at; II. 292.
letters dated; I. 3, 232.
list of troops of; II. 353.
Neuburg, Duke of (1628); I. 338.
Newburgh, Lord (1716); III. 116. See also Barrett, Edward.
Newbury:
battle of; II. 337; III. 141.
mayor of; II. 167.
Mr.; I. 127.
Newby; II. 435.
Newcastle; I. 271, 272, 379, 428; II. 16, 63, 80, 145, 217, 231, 234, 435; III. 101.
burgesses of, their grievances; II. 23. corporation, customs of; II. 96.
Earl of. See Cavendish, Wm.; and Holles, John.
letters dated; II. 31, 219, 221, 228, 230.
mayor of; II. 223.
presters of; I. 15.
Scots' entry into; II. 259.
ships; I. 210, 223, 242.
sickness at; II. 190.
statue of James II. at, pulled down; II. 356.
under Lyme; I. 169.
Newchurch; II. 105.
Newcombe, Newcome:
Sir Beverley; I. 234; II. 53.
John, of Salaby; I. 6.
Newdigate, Sir Richard; III. 60.
Newell:
John, petition of; III. 152.
Robert, archdeacon of Buckingham, letter from; I. 342.
New England; I. 449; II. 147. fisheries of; I. 331.
plantations in; I. 287, 321; II. 64.
Newent; I. 131.
Newett, John; letter from; I. 60.
New Exchange, Strand; II. 167.
New Forest, the; I. 95, 432; II. 123, 129.
Newfoundland; I. 337, 440; II. 215, 224. fisheries of; I. 179, 395; II. 137, 165.
ships of; I. 411; II. 192.
visited by Lord Baltimore (1625); I. 187.
New France (Canada); I. 374, 377.
Newgate Prison; II. 47, 114, 173, 275; III. 19.
New Hall; I. 182.
Newham, John, of Whittington; III. 19.
Newhaven (Havre de Grace); I. 166, 241, 290, 312, 319, 330; II. 215.
Newhouse, Richard, register of Durham, proceedings against; II. 45, 50.
Newington, Middlesex; II. 344.
Newman, —; II. 130, 251.
Newmarket; I. 134, 135, 158, 159, 297, 298, 340, 403, 410, 480; II. 146, 174, 176, 309, 436; III. 34, 48, 57, 180.
Secretary Coke's audience with James I. at; I. 158, 184.
the Court at; I. 156, 182.
Charles I. at; II. 47–50.
Munster; II. 94.
Newport:
Monmouthshire; I. 40; II. 188, 289, 339; III. 71.
Isle of Wight; I. 151, 211, 285, 344.
Pagnel; II. 338, 437.
Mr., M.P. for Winchelsea, his election declared void (1700); II. 422.
Earl of (1627); I. 307. See also Mountjoy, Blount.
Sir Francis, knighted at Warsop (1603); I. 43.
—— Earl of Bradford (1694–1708), II. 427.
New Sarum. See Salisbury.
New Scotland; I. 377.
Newsletters from Venice, Cologne, and Rome; I. 67, 113.
Newsom, Richard; II. 198.
Newspapers; The Postman (1700); II. 409.
Newton: II. 386; III. 78, 138.
Bushel, Devon, bridge destroyed by floods (1625); I. 217.
Derbyshire; II. 449.
Lancashire; II. 421, 422.
Mr.; I. 485; II. 264.
—— pilloried for his letter about the Danes; II. 312.
—— Secretary of the Prince of Wales' household (1610); I. 71.
James; I. 173.
—— servant of Sir Francis Coke; II. 101.
Peter; I. 2.
Thomas, seminary priest, arrest of; I. 272, 273.
New Years' Gifts by a Secretary of State (1625); I. 244.
Niceby, William; II. 353.
Nichobaldi; I. 472; II. 42, 135.
Nicholardo, —; II. 133.

Nicholas :
Mr. ; I. 190, 220, 221, 230, 265, 312, 440, 464 ; II. 103, 117, 129 ; III. 69.
Edward, Secretary to the Duke of Buckingham, &c. ; I. 210, 214, 218, 256, 297, 309, 314, 323, 326, 343, 415.
Secretary to the Admiralty ; I. 429 ; II. 325.
—— letters from ; I. 173, 177, 210, 343, 357, 410, 411, 415, 443 ; II. 12, 24, 40, 173, 176.
—— letter to ; II. 4.
—— note by ; II. 167.
Nicholl, Nicol :
Mr. ; I. 188, 384.
Christopher ; I. 270.
Robert, petition signed by ; I. 128.
Nicholson, Otto, receiver for assarts ; I. 171.
Nicodemus, the ship ; I. 435.
Nightingale, Mr. ; III. 154.
Nimeguen ; II. 65, 376, 427.
letter dated ; II. 194.
Nîmes ; III. 157.
Niulls. See Knollys.
Nixon, T. ; II. 211.
Noades, George ; I. 270.
Noah ; I. 372.
Noble, Mr. ; II. 61.
Noel, Nowell :
Mr. ; II. 369.
Robert, Lord Camden, death at Oxford ; II. 332.
Sir Edward, of Rutlandshire, created Baron Noel ; I. 94.
William ; I. 296.
Nonconformity, cases of ; I. 465, 467 ; II. 20, 22.
Nonpareil, the ; I. 13, 42.
Nonsuch ; I. 355 ; II. 146.
Charles I. at ; I. 472 ; II. 26.
letter dated ; I. 309.
partridges for ; I. 164.
the ship ; I. 136, 159, 214, 223, 337 ; II. 16, 136 ; III. 99.
Noon, Thomas, governor of the East India Company, letter from ; I. 474.
Norbury, co. Derby ; II. 103, 228.
Nore, the ; III. 6.
Norfolk : II. 200.
Duke of (1700) ; II. 399. See also Howard.
Francis ; I. 172.
Norgate, Edward ; II. 213.
Norham ; II. 235.
Norman :
Mr., Vice-Admiral of Nutt, the pirate ; II. 5.
Mistress ; III. 46.
William, letter from ; II. 10.
Normanby by Trent ; I. 3.
Normandy ; I. 363, 458 ; II. 76.
Norreys, Norris :
Mr. ; I. 166.
Captain ; I. 177, 311.
—— letter to ; I. 152.
—— John, letter from ; I. 45.
Norreys, Norris—cont.
G. ; I. 67.
Thomas ; I. 130.
—— letters from ; I. 22, 141, 147, 148, 155, 165, 167, 173.
—— Captain, letter from ; I. 176.
—— Commissioner of the Navy ; I. 167, 183.
Lord (1601), death of ; I. 30.
Sir William ; II. 434.
North, the :
Army of, petition from ; II. 270.
Council of ; II. 17, 31, 90, 155, 174, 204, 275.
—— letter from ; II. 44.
—— its oath disallowed by the judges ; II. 55.
—— orders of ; I. 480 ; II. 108.
—— persons summoned before ; I. 475.
—— proceedings of ; II. 40.
Mr. ; II. 249.
Dudley, Lord (1600-1666) ; II. 43.
—— letters from ; I. 199 ; II. 224.
Francis, Lord Guildford (1685-1729) II. 369.
Sir J. ; II. 176.
Roger ; I. 107.
Captain R., letter from ; II. 39.
William, Lord ; III. 30, 32, 117.
Northallerton election (1700) ; II. 414.
Northampton ; II. 40, 248, 249, 256, 299, 332, 339, 344.
letters dated ; I. 50, 459, 460 ; II. 73, 303.
Earl of (1623) ; I. 149, 200. See also Howard, Thomas ; Compton, William.
—— (1716) ; III. 116, 179.
Castle ; II. 250.
shire ; I. 37.
North Cape ; I. 215.
Northcote, John, J.P., letter from ; I. 276.
Northend ; III. 65, 66 ; III. 182, 184.
Northey, Sir Edward, Attorney-General (1716) ; III. 116.
North Foreland ; I. 117, 379.
North Kelsey ; I. 4.
Northleach Rectory, co. Gloucester ; I. 40.
North Muskham, prebend of ; I. 446.
North Seas, the, fishermen trading to ; I. 340.
Northumberland ; II. 128, 130, 311.
Earl of. See Percy, Algernon.
Duke of (1684) ; III. 155.
sheriff of ; I. 372, 379.
North West Passage, discovery of ; I. 183, 220 ; II. 43.
Norton ; I. 269, 298.
Mr. ; I. 127 ; II. 55.
Captain ; III. 49.
Dudley ; I. 433.
—— letter from ; I. 328.
Robert, receipt by ; II. 354.
Sir Walter, sheriff of co. Lincoln ; II. 138, 142-144.
Norway ; II. 117.

Norwich : II. 72, 190.
letters dated ; I. 465 ; II. 182.
Bishop of (1615) ; I. 89.
—— (1630) ; I. 480 ; II. 103.
Dean and Chapter of ; I. 302, 455.
Earl of. See Denny, Edward.
mayor and aldermen of, petition ; I. 163.
Noseworthy, Francis ; I. 285.
Notons, Wm. ; III. 138.
Notre Dame de Halle, Brussels ; I. 336.
Nottingham ; II. 61, 62, 132, 306, 307, 309, 328, 342, 344 ; III. 9, 91.
letters dated ; I. 156 ; II. 105, 346 ; III. 9, 164.
petition presented to a judge on the Bench (1642) for the King's return to the Parliament ; II. 309.
Charles I. raises his standard at ; II. 321.
Earl of. See Finch, Daniel.
Lord (1716) ; III. 116.
shire ; I. 46, 413 ; II. 259. sheriff of ; I. 236 ; II. 170, 202–204.
shire hall at ; I. 67.
general election (1700) ; II. 414.
Nowell's catechism ; I. 221.
Noy, Sir Wm., Attorney-General ; I. 476, 479 ; II. 8, 12, 17, 18, 30, 58, 59, 61, 71, 266, 268.
letters from ; I. 451, 477.
Nugent :
—, daughter of Richard, Earl of Westmeath ; I. 399.
James ; II. 117.
—— Franciscan friar ; I. 402, 403.
—— and William ; I. 448.
Thomas ; I. 481.
Nunnington manor, co. York ; I. 395.
Nuremberg ; I. 257, 384, 386, 475 ; II. 115.
Nurrey, William, of Poole ; I. 161.
Nurse, —, barrister of Gray's Inn ; I. 161.
Nuthall, Mr. ; I. 428.
Nutley, W. ; II. 455.
Nutt :
Captain John, the pirate ; I. 145, 150, 432, 459, 477.
—— reported capture of ; I. 482.

O.

Oaking (Woking), letter dated ; I. 318.
Oatlands ; I. 437, 470, 472 ; II. 48, 85, 86, 139, 192, 236, 241, 294. letters, &c. dated ; I. 36, 390, 435, 467 ; II. 123, 124.
Charles I. at ; I. 466 ; II. 67.
O'Brien, Mr. ; II. 448.
Ockbrook, Derbyshire ; II. 451.
Ocley, Shropshire ; I. 294.
O'Connor :
Edward, bailiff of Yarmouth, letters from ; II. 70, 72.
Hugh ; I. 482.
Odby ; I. 298.
O'Donell ; I. 33.
O'Dowd, William ; I. 482.
Oeilles, Mons. ; II. 310.
Oetzius, Daniel, a Palatine ; II. 116.
Oevel ; III. 64.
Offenberg ; I. 15 ; II. 195.
Offices :
receiving New Year's Gifts from Secretary of State ; I. 154. various, in the time of James I. and Charles I. ; I. 194, 198.
Offley, Mr. ; III. 57.
Ogbourne, Mr. ; II. 390.
Ogle :
Captain ; II. 218.
—— letter from ; I. 44.
H., credit for ; I. 78.
Sir John ; I. 218.
—— letter from ; I. 196.
Nicholas ; I. 11.
Sir William ; II. 115.
Oglethorp [General] ; III. 43, 46.
O'Hana, Erihna ; I. 482.
Okeley Park, Essex ; I. 103.
Okeover, Mr. ; II. 410 ; III. 122.
Okethorpe ; III. 140.
Oldenburg, letter dated ; I. 96.
Oldfield, Ralph ; II. 61, 62.
Oldham, Mr. ; II. 445.
Oldisworth, Michael, letters from ; I. 150 ; II. 215.
Olds, Oldys :
Mr. ; II. 432.
Sir William ; III. 116.
Oleron, isle of ; I. 260, 310.
Olivarez, Count ; I. 178, 387 ; II. 135.
Oliver :
C., brewer of Bridge House ; I. 200.
John ; I. 153.
Olson, Olaf ; I. 281.
Ombury, advowson ; I. 171.
O'Neale, O'Neill :
Colonel, death of ; II. 260.
Father James ; I. 402.
Sir Phelim ; II. 299–301, 303.
the sept of ; I. 454 ; II. 284.
Onian, Dr. ; I. 208 ; III. 134.
Only, Mrs. ; II. 159.
Onslow, Lord (1716) ; III. 117.
Ophell, Mrs., presented by the Duke of Bedford with gold plate ; II. 415.
Oporto ; I. 217, 230.
Orange :
Henry Fredk., Prince of ; I. 113, 168, 235, 240, 280, 306, 311, 380, 391, 394, 424, 461, 465, 486 ; II. 7, 14, 15, 34, 37, 52, 65, 66, 99–101, 123, 136, 145, 161, 189, 194, 226, 241, 249 ,288, 310, 313, 321.

Orange—cont.
William, Prince of; II. 274, 279, 280, 281.
Polder, William III. lands at; II. 431.
Orby:
Horncastle sessions; I. 5.
Robert, brewer of Whitefriars; I. 200.
Ordinary, the ship; I. 381.
Ordnance, the:
Commissioners of; I. 116.
Master of. See Carew, George, and Vere, Horace. surveyor of; I. 403.
—— Ireland; I. 33.
Office; I. 279, 299; II. 126.
—— clerk of; I. 148.
—— officers of; II. 50.
report touching; I. 126, 214.
export of, forbidden; I. 101.
Oresbie, Thomas, of Theddlethorpe; I. 6.
Oreston; I. 318.
Orford Ness; I. 193, 251, 253.
Earl of. See Russell, Edward.
Lord (1716); III. 116.
Organ, Mr.; I. 127.
Orkney, Lord (1704); III. 48.
Orleans; I. 51.
letter dated; I. 18.
Duke of (1632); I. 474, 475, 484.
—— (1706); III. 74.
Ormaston; II. 385.
Ormond; I. 442, 471; II. 220, 385.
Earl of (1619); I. 106.
—— Walter, petition of; I. 169.
Duke of; III. 179.
O'Rorke:
Bryan, seizure of his lands; I. 197.
Captain, letter to; I. 455.
Sheane oge; I. 482.
Orrange, —, teacher of mathematics; I. 208.
Orrery, Lord (1704–1717); III. 32, 70, 117.
Orston; II. 102.
Ortyll, Mr.; I. 12.
O'Ryan, Donough Duff; I. 425.
Osborne:
Christopher, captain of the Loyalty; I. 314.
—— letter from; I. 328.
Sir Edward, pricked sheriff of Notts; I. 236.
—— Vice-President of the Council of the North; II. 20, 23, 237.
—— —— letters from; II. 16, 40, 44, 55, 63, 68, 95, 108, 113, 174, 189, 204, 205, 211, 212, 224, 227, 228, 232, 235, 237.
—— —— letters to; II. 108, 109, 208.
Sir John, letters from; I. 155, 161.
Sir Peter; I. 314.
—— letters from; I. 315, 316.
Thomas, Earl of Danby; II. 346.
—— Duke of Leeds (1694–1712); III. 11, 165.
O'Shagnessy, William; I. 482.
Osmaston; III. 4, 10.
Ostend; I. 32, 44, 289; II. 119, 164; III. 25, 71. project for surprising; I. 321.
investment of (1706); III. 72.
Osterwick, York; I. 480.
O'Sullivan, Owen, letter to; II. 216.
Oswestry, letter dated; III. 56, 60.
O'Toole:
the family of; II. 157, 253, 295.
Barnaby, Luke and Terlogh; II. 114.
Sir Luke, 500*l.* offered for his head; II. 308.
Otley, letter dated; II. 187.
Ottoman Empire, the; I. 16.
Oudenarde; III. 71.
Oughterlony, Sir James; II. 123.
Ouse, the, of Cambridgeshire; II. 196.
Over, Sir F. Greville's estate at; I. 69.
Overall, Dr. John, letter from; I. 34.
Overbury:
Sir Nicholas, Justice of the Welsh Marches; I. 385; II. 195.
—— certificates by; I. 425, 426.
—— letters from; I. 393, 476.
—— letter to; I. 397.
W.; III. 153.
Overhaddon; I. 418, 449; II. 27, 249.
Overhalliock manor, Leicestershire; I. 103.
Overkirk, Mr.; III. 72.
Over Thurvaston, co. Derby; I. 228.
Overton, letters dated; II. 439; III. 19.
Over Yssel; II. 110.
Ovid, quotation from; I. 429.
Owen:
Mr.; I. 402; II. 44.
Hugh; Deputy Lieutenant of Pembroke; II. 213.
John, of Montgomeryshire; I. 452.
Owen; I. 367.
Robert, petition of; I. 171.
Owlesworth, Mr.; II. 220.
Owsley, Sir Charles; III. 74.
Owterby, Louth sessions; I. 6.
Oxenden, Sir James; I. 212.
Oxenstern, Ambassador of Sweden; II. 50.
Oxford; I. 447, 453; II. 123, 136, 138, 324, 345.
letters dated; II. 137, 138, 360.
Charles I. at; II. 327.
company of tailors of, grant of incorporation to; I. 393.
Parliament at; II. 344.
escape of prisoners from; II. 333.
shire; II. 4.
Earl of. See Vere, Aubrey de: Harley, Robert.
University; I. 381, 382, 395, 447.
—— Colleges; All Souls; I. 480; III. 152.
—— —— letters to the Warden of; I. 272; III. 144.
—— Brazenose; II. 173.

Oxford University—cont.
—— Christchurch; I. 158; II. 364.
—— —— letters dated; I. 372; II. 168, 216; III. 65, 71, 109.
—— Corpus Christi; I. 185; III. 152.
—— —— letter dated; II. 218.
—— Lincoln; I. 480; II. 82, 85.
—— New; I. 278; II. 364.
—— Statutes of (Laudian) confirmed; II. 121.
—— studies in 1612; I. 76.
—— Vice-Chancellor of (Robert Pinck); II. 82, 85, 91.
Lord [Bishop] of (1624); I. 167; 168. See also Bancroft, John; Laud, William.
Dowager Lady (1716); III. 116.
Oxwick, Robert, merchant; I. 210.

P.

Packer:
John, letter from; I. 107, 123.
Thomas, letter from; I. 182.
—— petition of; I. 185.
Packington; II., 363.
Sir John, M.P. for Aylesbury; III. 14, 27.
Paddon:
Captain; III. 104, 106.
Rear Admiral, death of (December 1719); III. 122.
Padstow; III. 107.
Padua; III. 128.
letters dated; I. 71, 108, 109.
Thomas Coke's visit to; I. 77.
Page:
Mr., silkman in Lombard Street; I. 178.
—— letters from; I. 311.
J., letters from; I. 332, 336.
Paget:
Mr., of the Admiralty (1701); II. 438, 444.
J., letter from; III. 77.
Thomas, Lord (1551); I. 2, 39.
Sir William (1551); I. 1.
Lord (1702); II. 449.
Painted Chamber, the; II. 262, 263.
Palace Yard, Westminster, plague at; II. 293.
Palatinate, the; I. 161, 224, 462; II. 9. 13, 35, 85, 193, 293, 314. visit of the Princess Elizabeth to (1613); I. 77. war in, money gathered for; I. 171.
ceded to Bavaria; I. 311; II. 115. war on behalf of the restoration of; II. 126, 156, 179.
negotiations with the Emperor of Germany for; II. 215, 276.
Palatinate, the—cont.
means for recovering; III. 153.
manifesto of Charles I. concerning; II. 288.
Charles I. and the King of Denmark in relation to; II. 243.
Palatine:
Charles Lewis, the Elector; II. 123, 128, 153, 161, 162, 179, 195, 204, 240, 241.
—— —— declaration of; II. 174.
—— —— letters from; II. 185, 218.
—— —— presentation of the garter to; II. 14.
—— —— prayer for; II. 14.
—— —— visit to England (1635); II. 99.
Elizabeth, Electress Palatine, letter from; III. 146.
Elector (1699); II. 99. See also Bohemia.
troops; III. 61.
Pallavicini:
Sir Horatio; I. 15.
—— his widow married to Sir Oliver Cromwell, claim of; I. 67.
Palermo; III. 120.
Palfreyman, Mr.; I. 5.
Pallenger, Sieur (pastor of M. Soubize); I. 222.
Palmer:
Mr.; II. 399, 403.
—— the lawyer; II. 295.
—— prisoner in the Fleet; III. 152.
George, letter from; III. 78.
Henry; I. 32.
—— letter from; II. 52.
Sir Henry, Admiral of the Narrow Seas; I. 15, 22, 23, 35, 39, 217, 218, 219, 253, 316, 344, 348, 355, 381, 385, 397, 439.
—— letters from; I. 218, 219, 223, 226, 238, 240, 241, 250, 252, 265, 271, 273, 286, 302, 308, 319, 322, 345, 347, 381, 427, 431, 450; II. 114, 118, 123.
—— orders for; II. 253.
James, of Royston; I. 184.
Sir James; I. 426.
John; III. 103.
—— letter from; I. 20.
Sir Matthew; II. 55.
Palmes:
Captain; II. 347, 354, 357.
Colonel; III. 41.
Palsgrave, the, bill for naturalizing; I. 78. See also Palatine.
Paluello, Italy; III. 128.
Pamington, tithes of; I. 174.
Paper Office, the; II. 251, 264.
Papists: See also Popery.
allusions to; I. 221, 483.
in Ireland; I. 442.
Pappenheim, General; I. 467, 470.
Paragon, the ship; I. 300.
Paramore, Paramour:
Mr.; II. 49.
Henry; I. 36.

Paramore, Paramour—cont.
Thomas, J.P. of Kent; I. 274.
—— letter to; I. 452.
Parburie, Philippa, petition; III. 151.
Paris; I. 203, 205, 286, 380, 400, 462, 463, 472, 475; II. 175, 287.
letters dated; I. 24, 26, 377; II. 1, 63, 71, 94, 154, 190, 213, 403–406, 422–424; III. 120, 123–128.
despatches from; I. 254, 321.
gazettes; II. 314.
living in; III. 124.
English ambassador at. See France.
Venetian ambassador in; I. 378.
English ensigns taken at Rhé sent to; I. 386.
Parliament of; I. 18; II. 48, 333. streets of; I. 26.
Prince of Wales in (1700); II. 412.
pretended king of Ethiopia in; II. 88.
Parke, Seaney, Lord Paget's bailiff at Burton; II. 450.
Parker:
Mr.; I. 67; II. 34, 256, 401, 407, 424, 445; III. 55, 56.
—— servant of Sir N. Fortescue (1623); I. 153.
—— bedel at Cambridge; I. 185.
Colonel, aide de camp of Marlborough, who brought the news of Blenheim in eight days; III. 39.
Lord Chief Justice; III. 117.
Sir George; III. 74.
Sir Nicholas; II. 81.
William; II. 161.
—— English painter (1722); III. 122.
—— letters from; III. 122, 130.
Parkhurst:
Henry; I. 315.
Roger; I. 170.
Parkinson, Father, priest living as a farmer (1630); I. 407.
Parliament: See also Charles I. and the Civil War.
Acts of; I. 1; III. 51, 53. See also Acts. of 1610, its character; I. 71.
of 1614, speeches in; I. 87.
of 1622, complaints against purveyors; I. 125.
of 1624, proceedings in; I. 161, 162.
of 1625, proceedings in; I. 206, 208, 239; III. 125.
—— discourages the captains of the Low Countries; I. 256.
of 1628, resolutions of; I. 342.
—— note of the message from the King; I. 342.
—— conference between the two Houses; I. 344.
—— persecution by the Commons of the King's favourites; I. 349.
—— the Grand Remonstrance; I. 350.
its umbrage at Buckingham's kneeling to Charles I. and the King giving him his hand to kiss; I. 350.
Parliament—cont.
—— commits four Westcountry gentlemen to the Tower; I. 356.
—— breaks up; I. 355, 356.
—— characteristics of; I. 380.
anticipated calling of (December 1639); II. 246.
of 1640, the Long; II. 261.
—— —— petitions to, and proceedings in; II. 262, 272, 281, 295, 296.
—— —— committee for religion; II. 265.
bishops ordered to withdraw from the discussion of Strafford's case; II. 274.
—— —— order for the deposing of images; II. 293.
—— —— —— for guarding both Houses; II. 293.
—— —— refuses to allow the Great Seal to go to York; II. 309.
—— —— motion in, touching ammunition at Hull; II. 312.
—— —— votes of; II. 330.
of 1696, late sitting of, "till after 10"; II. 367.
of 1697, resolutions of, as to the army; II. 372.
of 1700, scandal ever fresh against; II. 403, 411, 413.
of 1701, proceedings in; II. 415, 417, 422, 430, 439. of 1702, meeting of; II. 444, 446.
—— its character; III. 14.
—— proposes to elect Colonel Granville Speaker; III. 16.
of 1705, general election; III. 61. garrisons of, list of (1642); II. 328.
Houses of, insanitary condition of (1700); II. 411.
Parma; III. 129.
letter dated; III. 129.
Prince of; I. 379; II. 317.
Parr, Philip; III. 138.
Parrott, John; II. 84.
Parry:
Captain; II. 90.
Mrs., of Clerkenwell, harbours seminary priests; I. 273.
Edward, captive in Sallee; I. 331.
Parslows, Essex; II. 362, 364, 368.
letters dated; II. 363–366, 368, 369, 376, 394.
Parsons:
Sir John; III. 156.
R., almsroom in Worcester Cathedral for; II. 209.
W.; II. 231.
—— letters from; I. 328, 433.
Sir William; I. 450; II. 193.
—— Master of the Wards, Ireland; I. 359.
Parton, Madame, midwife of Queen Henrietta Maria; II. 101, 102.
Pasqual, M.; I. 422.
Passage in Biscay; I. 152.
Passages in Spain, boat building in; I. 266.

Passes or licences to travel; I. 464, 469, 470, 485; II. 3, 5, 16, 39, 52, 76, 78, 81, 84, 118, 174, 179, 196, 334, 335.
Patacke, the ship; I. 296.
Patent Rolls, certified extract from; I. 55.
Patents, applications for; I. 148, 158, 159.
Patriarch, the, of the Greek Church (1631); I. 441.
Patrick, Father, Capuchin; II. 20.
Patten, Richard, petition; I. 185.
Paul Veronese picture; III. 187.
Paul, William, and Lady Dorchester, case of; II. 46.
Paulet:
Mr., of Hinton; I. 216, 249.
—— letters from; I. 222, 247, 250.
John, Marquis of Winchester; I. 342.
John, Lord; II. 324; III. 41.
—— letter from; II. 76.
Sir John, Lieutenant Colonel; II. 258.
William, Earl of Wiltshire (1551), afterwards Marquis of Winchester; I. 1.
Lord (1716); III. 113, 117.
Lady; II. 83.
Paulton's, Fleet Street coffee-house; III. 164.
Pavia, battle of, and Blenheim contrasted; III. 41.
Paynam, Sir Philip, Colonel; II. 99, 100.
Payne, Philip; I. 428.
Peach, Mrs.; III. 113.
Peak:
the; II. 408, 412; III. 11.
forest, purchased by the Earl of Shrewsbury (1604); I. 50.
mines in; II. 289.
Peard, Mr.; II. 305.
Peear, letter dated; III. 14.
Pecksall, John, serjeant of the Admiralty, warrant to; I. 356.
Pedgebank; I. 338.
woods; II. 16, 28, 305, 318.
Pedley, Mr., candidate for Huntingdon, retires (1701); II. 415.
Peers created after May 1642 excluded by vote of the House of Commons; II. 315.
Peers, Launcet; I. 131.
Peeters, Mr.; II. 411.
Pegge:
Mr.; II. 451.
Samuel; II. 353.
Pelham:
Thomas Holles, Duke of Newcastle (1715–1768), letter from; III. 118.
William, lieutenant of the Ordnance; I. 40.
Sir William, sheriff of Lincolnshire; II. 138.
Pell:
Captain; I. 321, 363, 439.
Sir Anthony; II. 163, 164.
Pembroke; I. 164.
Castle, town and demesne of, granted to William Baron Herbert; I. 55.
Hall, hearing of the cause of; I. 406.
Earl of; I. 185. See also Herbert.
Pendarves, Alexander; III. 104, 105.
Pendennis:
letters dated; I. 215, 235, 240, 265, 278, 279.
defenceless condition of the castle; I. 264.
Penial, John, messenger of the Chamber; I. 479.
Penkridge manor; I. 40, 69.
Penn, Captain Giles, letter from; II. 147; III. 152.
Pennant, Ensign, cashiered by Sir Edward Cecyll; I. 226.
Pennethorp, Oliver, of Gromelbie; I. 6.
Pennyman:
Sir Wm., Bart., deputy lieutenant of Yorkshire; I. 480; II. 180, 311.
—— letters from; II. 208, 220.
Pennington:
Alderman Isaac, M.P.; II. 265.
Captain John, afterwards Admiral; I. 238, 250, 257, 279, 280, 310, 335, 343, 374, 443; II. 21, 24, 49, 312.
—— letters from; I. 200, 203, 204, 207, 249, 253, 256, 260, 265; II. 159.
—— letter to; I. 205.
—— instruction for; I. 300.
—— his care of his mariners; I. 266.
Sir John; II. 100, 134, 175, 193, 210.
—— letters from; II. 101, 102, 106, 145, 185, 191, 201.
Thomas, letter from; I. 87.
—— petition of; I. 172.
Penruddock;
Thomas, letter from; I. 87.
Sir Thomas; I. 83.
Penryn; I. 218, 235; III. 107.
Pensioners of Charles I., payments to; II. 233.
Peplitz, M., proposals of; I. 364, 365.
Pepper contractors, intercession of Sir John Hawkins for; I. 16.
Perceval:
Anthony, letter from; II. 99.
John, of King's Lynn; I. 275.
Percy:
Algernon, Earl of Northumberland; I. 434; II. 26, 125, 129, 130, 134, 136, 141, 161, 219, 220, 223, 228, 239, 314, 325, 326, 330.
—— —— letters from; II. 118, 122, 124, 134, 136, 139, 144, 146, 162, 166, 231.
—— —— letters to; II. 137, 234.
—— —— instructions for; II. 122.
—— —— Lord General of the forces at sea (1636); II. 144.
—— —— his dispute with Witheriugs, the postmaster; II. 195.
—— —— resigns his command; II. 279.

Percy, Algernon, Earl of Northumberland —cont.
—— —— protest of; II. 304.
—— —— refuses to be taxed; II. 329.
Sir Charles; I. 27.
Henry; II. 173, 305.
—— letter from; I. 428.
—— flight of; II. 282–284.
Peregrine, the ship; III. 166.
Periam; II. 181.
Perin, —, information against; I. 41.
Perira, Nune Velio, Spanish prisoner; I. 17.
Perkins:
Mr.; II. 179.
William, letter from; II. 128.
Perlier, Captain Élie; I. 356.
Pernambuco (Fernambuck), Brazil; I. 302, 419, 436; II. 12, 165.
Peronne; I. 460.
Duke of; II. 328.
Perpetty, Mr.; II. 345. See also Deprepetit, M.
Perpignan; II. 320.
Perpoynt, Sir Henry, knighted at Warsop; I. 43. See also Pierrepoint.
Perrott:
Sir James, letter from; I. 300.
John; II. 103.
Perry, R.; I. 223.
Persia; II. 128.
ambassador from; I. 172.
armed elephants from; II. 248.
King of; I. 264.
silks of; I. 264.
trade with; I. 172, 448.
Persons, Thomas, of Westminster, Knight of the Sun; III. 151.
Perth, Lord (1701); II. 423.
Pescod, Nicholas, letter from; I. 361.
Peshall, Sir John, letter from; II. 103.
Peter:
the ship; I. 305, 373, 381.
—— of Havre de Grace; I. 253. and Andrew, the ship; I. 300.
and John, the ship; I. 313, 325.
Bonadventure, the ship; I. 187.
King of Castille; III. 53.
Peterborough:
bishop of (1716); III. 116.
dean and chapter, congé d'élire; I. 480.
Fens; I. 277.
Lord and Lady (1705); III. 64, 73.
Petersham, letter dated; III. 44.
Peterson, Captain, a Fleming; I. 129.
Peto. See Peyto.
Petre, Sir William, secretary to the Privy Council; I. 1, 2.
Petty:
Captain; I. 213, 412; II. 130.
Elizabeth, petition of; II. 32.
Joseph; II. 52.
Phineas; I. 130, 404; II. 32, 62.
—— letters from; I. 406, 428; II. 123.
Pett, Phineas—cont.
—— builds ships for the Navy; I. 109.
—— patent for him to be a Commissioner of the Navy; I. 403.
—— frauds by; I. 36, 37, 41.
Pettenger, Mr.; I. 304.
Petty:
Bag fees, dividends, &c., for the Secretary of State; I. 358, 368, 370.
Francis, letter from; III. 27.
William, letter from; II. 59.
Pettyford, Corporal; II. 353.
Peverel; I. 477.
Pevis, John, petition of; III. 151.
Peyto, Sir Edward, defends Warwick Castle; II. 320.
Peyton:
Mr.; II. 30.
Sir John, letters from; I. 263, 431.
Pharsalia, the battle of, and that of Blenheim contrasted; III. 41.
Phelps, Thomas; I. 450.
Phelipeaux (Phelips?), Secretary, letter from; I. 310.
Phillack, French ships brought into; I. 337.
Philip IV., King of Spain; II. 99.
Philip, Philipps:
Mr.; I. 372; III. 92, 96.
Captain Dudley; II. 300.
Father, confessor of Queen Henrietta Maria; II. 161.
—— letter to; I. 334.
—— committed to the Tower (1641); II. 294.
John, letters from; I. 322; II. 121.
Robert, of Wispington; I. 5.
Thomas, letter from; I. 95.
Sir Thomas; I. 438, 450, 451, 454; II. 99; III. 151.
—— letter from; I. 466.
—— memorial of; I. 416.
Philipsburgh; II. 44; III. 44.
Philpott:
Mr., the herald; II. 20.
Henry, of co. Southampton, licence to travel; II. 174.
Phœnix, the ship; I. 138, 164, 330.
Phoule, General, commander of the Swedish army; II. 287.
Picardy; I. 458, 471, 474, 475; II. 140, 320.
Piccolomini, General; II. 287, 320.
Pickard, Mr.; III. 5.
Pickering:
Mr.; II. 317.
John, armourer to Prince Henry and Prince Charles, sons of James I.; I. 198.
Pictures:
list of, in the lodgings of Robert, Earl of Oxford (1715); III. 112.
the "Lanfranc"; III. 21.
Piedmont; II. 73; III. 142.
the persecution in; I. 314.
the Prince of; I. 254, 257.

Pierce, Piers:
Mr.; II. 167.
William, bishop of Bath and Wells; II. 200.
—— flight of; II. 270.
Pierpoint:
Mr.; II. 441; III. 176.
Lady (1716); III. 117.
Lady Grace (1701); II. 440.
Pieter; II. 135.
Piggin, Mr., of Ockbrook; II. 451.
Pigott:
Mr.; I. 389.
Mrs., widow, of Abington, Cambs.; I. 150.
Pilgrim, the ship; I. 17.
Pilkington, Mr., letter to; II. 115.
Pillan:
the; I. 395.
Mr.; I. 175.
Pillorans, M., made a peer of France; II. 76.
Pinck, Dr. Robert, of New College, Oxford, vice-chancellor, letter from; I. 278; II. 91.
Pinder:
Mr., of Duffield; III. 94.
Sir Paul; I. 332; II. 159.
—— letter from; II. 187.
Pink, the ship; I. 167.
Pinkney, Timothy, petition of; I. 197.
Pinnell, Mr.; II. 432.
Pintadoes, list of; I. 396.
Pinton Fen, Lincolnshire; I. 84.
Pipe, the, teller and comptroller of; I. 277.
Piracies, commissioners for; I. 137.
Piracy:
cases of; I. 193, 206; II. 31, 33, 53.
—— off the Irish coast; II. 10, 11, 21, 24.
Pishobury, letter dated; II. 408.
Pitcairne, Mr., master falconer of Charles I.; II. 117.
Pitt:
Richard, petition of; I. 194.
William, letter from; I. 99.
Sir William; I. 394.
Pitts:
John, yeoman of the pantry (1625); I. 199.
Lady; III. 186.
Place, —, servant of James I. for furnishing body-linen; I. 194.
Plague, the:
notices of; I. 45, 410; II. 140, 163, 291–293.
—— at Plymouth; I. 213.
—— in London; I. 209–211, 218, 223.
Plain Joan, the ship, petition for its release; I. 358.
Plantation, the ship; I. 348.
Plantations, the; I. 375, 376; II. 236, 237.
New England; I. 287.
commissioners for; III. 34.
—— office of, Whitehall; III. 109.
Plate:
transport of; II. 122.
forced gifts of; II. 324.
Platten, Count; III. 113.
Player; I. 364.
Pleiades, the ship; II. 162.
Pleasure, the ship; I. 330.
Plessington, Charles and H.; I. 33.
Plowden, Mr.; II. 47.
Plut, Count; III. 187.
Plumleigh:
Captain Richard; I. 409, 482; II. 12, 21, 24.
—— letters from; I. 411, 418, 419, 427, 431, 433, 436, 437, 440, 442, 444, 445, 477, 485–487; II. 32.
—— letter to; I. 436.
Sir Richard; II. 32.
—— letters from; II. 36, 50, 53.
William, letter from; I. 279.
—— mayor of Dartmouth, letter from; I. 276.
Plunket:
James, letter to (from the Pope); II. 20.
Lucas, Earl of Fingal, case of; I. 392, 399.
Plush; II. 39.
Plutarch; I. 361.
Plymouth; I. 17, 36, 151, 196, 199, 204, 205, 252, 265, 327, 328, 332, 334, 343, 365, 373, 397, 419; II. 5, 138, 166, 176, 275; III. 58, 106, 156.
letters dated; I. 9, 14, 18, 35, 156, 160, 173, 179, 193, 206, 208, 212, 215, 216, 218, 219, 225, 230–232, 236, 237, 239, 248, 249, 253, 256–260, 308, 310, 314–320, 324, 325, 329, 332, 337, 367, 369, 371, 381, 485; II. 125, 215.
Church, letter for; II. 16.
Fort; II. 102.
—— letter dated; I. 241, 266.
Lady (1716); III. 116.
mayor of (1590); I. 13.
—— (1625–1636); I. 190, 220, 231; II. 103, 129.
—— letters from; I. 233, 451, 485.
—— proclamation by; I. 213.
—— takes Flemish goods; III. 148.
—— sickness at; I. 266.
men impressed; I. 326.
ships of; I. 33.
—— departure from; I. 217.
French ships in; I. 344.
Spanish ships brought to; I. 122.
ships at; I. 361, 370; II 118, 119.
Sound; I. 165, 367. summoned by Sir Ralph Hopton to surrender; II. 330.
Plympton; I. 281.
Poe:
Mr.; I. 435.
Dr. Leonard, physician to the household of James I.; I. 198, 292.
Poinet, Mr., report as to the Medway; I. 179.
Pointall Point; I. 221.

Poitiers, strange fight at; II. 303.
Poiton; I. 465.
Polacca, the, gift of, to Gilbert Raleigh; I. 166.
Poland; I. 158, 472; II. 87, 118.
ambassador from; II. 10, 13, 15, 118, 165.
ambassador to; II. 233.
impostor from; II. 106.
King of, I. 20; II. 13, 95, 96, 402.
—— letter from; II. 2.
news from; I. 395.
Parliament of; I. 331.
and Lithuania, union of; I. 57.
Pole, Rev. Charles, letter from; II. 425.
Polhill, Mr.; II. 182, 191.
Polkinghorne, Captain; I. 234.
Pollard:
Mr.; II. 284, 288.
Lewes, letter from; I. 276.
Pollexfen, John, letter from; I. 482.
Pomerania; I. 395, 410; II. 237.
Pomeroy, Andrew, letter from; II. 102.
Ponsett Forest; I. 419.
Pontacks; II. 354.
Pontefract: accident at; I. 443.
honor of; I. 392.
Poole:
Mr., servant of Secretary Coke; II. 236, 251, 258, 310, 313, 317, 321, 323, 333, 336–338, 397, 408, 451, 453; III. 4, 12, 23, 91, 161.
—— cousin of Vice-Chamberlain Coke; III. 55.
—— of Radbourn; III. 84, 93.
Richard; I. 306, 322.
—— letters from; I. 339, 353, 355, 361, 368, 410, 478; II. 12, 15, 24, 29, 39, 49, 55, 61, 98, 131, 239, 323.
Dorsetshire; I. 344, 347, 349; II. 191.
letters dated; I. 167, 361; II. 192.
men of, to be pressed; I. 326.
Pooley, Sir William; II. 91.
Poor Laws, the; II. 387.
Pope, the (1625–1632); I. 336, 458.
declaration against his authority; I. 263.
dispensations given by, to recusants; I. 228.
mission sent by; I. 402.
news of; II. 313, 317.
Mr.; I. 31; II. 348.
Richard, lieutenant &c., letters from; II. 353–355, 360, 364, 437, 454, 456; III. 16, 18, 26, 31, 33, 36, 37, 40, 42, 43, 44, 46–48, 51, 59, 60, 62, 67, 71.
Roger; II. 354.
William, sergeant of the Admiralty Court, letter to; I. 35.
Popery:
in Germany, progress of; I. 336.
in Ireland, progress of; I. 358, 361, 362, 448, 451, 457.
Popery—cont.
in Scotland, fears of; II. 207.
in Wigan (1630); I. 401.
Popham:
Captain; II. 162.
Lady Anne; II. 366.
Sir William, his audience with Charles I.; I. 351.
Popingale, the ship; I. 13.
Poplar; I. 177, 210, 219.
letters dated; I. 192, 208, 263.
Porchester, Viscount; I. 394, 402.
Pormont, George, mayor of Grimsby; I. 4.
Pors, Jean, letter from; II. 149.
Porsier; I. 400.
Port:
Mr.; II. 408.
Alice, letter from; III. 28.
Captain J.; III. 11, 67, 86.
—— letters from; III. 7, 26.
Porter:
Mr.; I. 378, 470; II. 44, 161, 170.
— removed from command of the company in Westminster; II. 305.
Captain, of H.M.S. Convertine; I. 186.
Edmund, prebendary of Norwich, letter from; I. 465.
Endymion; I. 283; II. 54.
—— letter from; I. 474.
—— death of his son; II. 260.
Richard, of London, examination of; I. 389.
Portington:
Mr.; I. 3.
William, signature; I. 128.
Portland; I. 427; II. 176.
letter dated; I. 206.
Lord. See Bentinck, W.
Dowager Lady (1716); III. 116.
Port Mead, near Oxford, races at; III. 65.
Port Royal; I. 221.
Port Sualy, letter dated; I. 447.
Portocarrero, Cardinal, to be regent of Spain (1701); II. 416.
Porto Rico, Puerto Rico; I. 20, 256.
Portsea Island; I. 299.
Portsmon, Mr.; II. 386.
Portsmouth; I. 15, 18, 26, 41, 149, 151, 207, 227, 298, 314, 320, 324, 329, 335, 344, 345, 354, 358, 361, 363–369, 379, 381, 389, 398, 414, 418, 439; II. 36, 50, 70, 117, 145, 147, 320, 321, 328; III. 45, 58, 115, 156.
letters dated; I. 156–160, 165–167, 181, 189, 211, 274, 277, 281, 288, 299, 309, 315, 327, 329, 343, 346, 355, 363, 369, 370, 373, 381, 385, 412, 432; II. 6, 42, 46, 77, 78, 146; III. 106.
French generals and captains received at; I. 302.
Charles I. at; I. 346, 347.
soldiers brought to; I. 359.
arrest of Brémond at; I. 372.

Portsmouth—cont.
fortifications of, cost of repairs; II. 221.
mayor and burgesses, petition of; III. 155.
ships, the fleet, &c. at; I. 274, 283, 317, 357, 371; II. 6, 7.
proposed joint stock company of; I. 474.
Dock; I. 24, 236, 367.
—— letters dated; I. 151, 152, 156, 207, 267, 280, 301, 366, 406; II. 40.
Harbour; II. 150.
Island; II. 320.
Portugal, Portuguese; I. 230; II. 437; III. 26, 38, 42, 45.
invasion of England by; I. 342.
merchants of, in Amsterdam; I. 345.
ambassadors from; II. 275.
and France and Spain, league between; II. 431.
wines of; III. 33.
and Navarre, union of; I. 57.
in India; I. 447, 448.
King of Persia to be defended against; I. 264.
ships; I. 237, 302, 443.
defeat of; II. 12.
Post, the; I. 38; II. 4, 6, 12, 25, 92, 102, 103, 145, 159, 162, 164, 171, 172, 195, 196, 217, 236, 241, 244, 269. cost of, in 1610; I. 71.
paymaster of; I. 148.
penny (in 1700); II. 398.
London post, Henry Billingsley; I. 295; II. 38. disorders in; I. 478; II. 97.
Antwerp; I. 230.
Ireland; II. 228.
Plymouth and Falmouth; I. 218.
speed of; I. 192, 197.
Posthorse, the ship, of Copenhagen; I. 221.
Postmasters at Whitehall, letter from; II. 180.
Post Office; II. 351.
Pott, Thomas, petition of; I. 164.
Potter:
Dr., provost of Queen's College, Oxford; II. 91.
Barnabas, bishop of Carlisle; II. 250, 253, 263.
—— —— letter from; II. 221.
Edward; I. 434.
Isaac, of Marston-on-Dove, Derbyshire; II. 453.
Thomas; II. 353.
Potts, Charles; II. 445; III. 162.
Poulett. See Paulett.
Pound, Mr.; II. 219.
Pountac wines; II. 398.
Poussin, —; II. 436; III. 121.
Powder Plot, the, torture to be used in investigating; I. 60.
Powell:
Mr.; I. 62, 63, 180, 297, 381, 405; II. 284.
—— officer of Sir Fulk Greville; I. 69.
—— letter to; I. 60.
—— his house at Preston; I. 59.
Captain; I. 206, 429.
Charles, letters from; I. 474; II. 82.
—— letter to; II. 5.
Edward, letter from; I. 109.
Sir Edward; I. 123, 127.
—— letter from; I. 124.
—— business of, before the Privy Council; II. 195.
Mrs. Eleanor, letter from; I. 331.
John, father-in-law of Secretary Coke; I. 28, 128, 384, 387, 446; III. 154.
—— letters from; I. 47, 50, 99, 100, 146, 152, 174.
—— brother-in-law of Secretary Coke; I. 125.
Mary, letter to; I. 46.
Richard, letter from; II. 109.
Thomas, brother-in-law of Secretary Coke, death of; I. 124.
William, draft letter to; I. 75.
Power, John; II. 353.
Powerscourt manor; II. 114, 132, 133.
Powys:
Hugh; I. 124.
Lord. See Herbert, William.
Praitans, the, in France; II. 400.
Prague; II. 237.
Pratt, Jeremy; III. 22.
Precedence of the nobility in England, Scotland, and Ireland; I. 373.
Prendcourt:
F. de; III. 166, 167.
G., letter from; III. 67.
Prendergrasse, Sir Thomas; III. 125.
Presburg, siege of (1621); I. 113.
Presbyterians, the; II. 440; III. 20.
in Holland; I. 465.
and Independents in the Westminster Assembly; II. 342.
President of the Council. See Montagu, Henry; Ley, James; Conway, Edward Visct.
Press and conduct money, rate of; I. 349.
Preston; I. 57.
letters dated; I. 47, 50, 58, 146, 174, 381, 405, 445; II. 31.
manor (near Ledbury), Gloucestershire; I. 40, 59, 62, 63, 66, 124.
curate of; I. 381.
Christopher, Viscount Gorman; I. 399.
Thomas, Portcullis herald, letter from; I. 421.
Prestwold, letter dated; I. 296.
Price:
Baron; III. 74.
Daniel; I. 159.
alias Jones, Father, President of Douay College; I. 407.
M.; I. 310.
William; I. 159.

Prices, agricultural (1704); III. 52.
Pricker, John, of Copenhagen; I. 222.
Prickman, Mr.; I. 222.
Prieur, M. le, de Brémond, letters to; I. 330, 332. See also Brémond.
Priest, Mrs.; II. 424.
Priests and Jesuits; I. 391, 407; II. 265.
warrant for removing; I. 341.
proclamation banishing; II. 275.
Prime, Captain Philip; II. 353, 355; III. 40, 49, 58, 61, 96.
Primrose, the ship; I. 161, 167, 300.
Primerose:
Mr., a refugee minister from Guienne; I. 285, 372, 400; II. 63.
Dr., chaplain of Charles II., letter to; I. 334.
G., letter from; I. 467.
J., M.D. of Montpellier and Oxford; I. 395.
J., letter from; II. 71.
Prince, the ship; I. 114, 141, 184, 189, 199.
Prince of Orange, the ship; I. 389.
Prince Royal, the ship; I. 120, 134, 192, 196, 197, 200.
Pringall, Nathaniel; II. 84.
Prinknesh, Ludlow; I. 452.
Printing of books at Cambridge, dispute as to; I. 382.
Prior:
Mr.; II. 413.
—— death of; I. 118.
John; I. 118.
—— of Aston, Derbyshire; II. 449.
Matthew, letter from; III. 54.
Privy Council; I. 52, 167, 318, 424, 450; II. 18, 19, 31, 40, 60, 80, 103, 159, 161, 170, 171, 187, 195, 209, 429. See also Council. letters, orders, &c. of; I. 1, 2, 8, 9, 122, 272, 310, 471; II. 5, 19, 223, 233, 252. letters, petitions, &c. to; I. 13, 78, 206, 254, 274–279, 405, 406, 433; II. 118, 125, 128, 192, 205, 234; III. 153, 155. business, suits, &c. before; I. 45, 332, 451.
meetings of; I. 210, 453; II. 241, 412, 413, 438.
—— order observed at; I. 245. minutes of; II. 194.
ordinance touching recusancy (1625); I. 227.
Privy Seal, Lord. See Somerset, Edward; Montague, Henry.
Privy Seals; I. 195, 207, 208, 280, 463, 480; II. 128, 129, 131. or fish at Theobalds; I. 158. for diets; II. 50.
for loans; I. 379, 408.
for ships; I. 162.
for suppressing usury; I. 93.
records burnt (1619); I. 103.
Prizes (ships); I. 129, 219, 221, 223, 249, 451. abuse in praising of; I. 385.
capture of; I. 115, 140.
Probus, letter dated; III. 104.
Proclamations; II. 48, 112, 139, 151, 207, 213. against building; II. 47.
touching tobacco; II. 50.
touching hemp and flax; II. 176.
touching greyhounds; II. 176.
against export of horses (1638); II. 194.
for banishing Jesuits; II. 275. against libellous pamphlets from Scotland; II. 216. for Scotland; II. 224.
Procter, Charles; I. 404.
Pronoville, Captain Richard, letter from; II. 32.
Prosperous, the ship; I. 279, 318.
Protestants; I. 25.
at Rochelle; I. 239.
molested by the King of France; II. 48, 296.
in Germany; II. 77. and Catholics, disputes between; I. 362, 482, 483; II. 391.
Irish, in London, petition; II. 310.
Provence; II. 395, 398.
Providence, the ship, of Whitby; II. 114, 191.
Prudence, the ship; I. 141, 196, 258.
Prusen, Hild., letter from; I. 149.
Prussia:
troops of; III. 47, 61.
deals; I. 188.
elks from; II. 123.
Prynne:
Mr.; II. 167.
—— his seat in the chapel in the Tower; II. 267.
William, petition of; III. 149.
Pryse, Mr., his suit against William Woodcock; I. 129.
Puckham, Sir George, petition of; I. 198.
Pulborough, Sussex; I. 213.
Pulford, John; II. 232.
Pullen, Robert, letter from; II. 181.
Pulley, Mr.; II. 250.
Punsbourne, Sir Edwd. Lucy's house; I. 210.
Purbeck:
Castle, command of; I. 185.
Lord Viscount, brother of Buckingham; I. 181.
Purdey, Mr.; II. 350.
Purley, Robert, of Hallestroppe; I. 6.
Purseaye, Mr., defends Warwick Castle (1642); II. 320.
Pursell, Mr.; III. 114.
Purslowe, Susan; II. 120.
Purveyance:
abuses of; I. 42, 125.
compositions for; I. 73–75, 119, 125, 127.

Pusey :
Mr. ; II. 35–37, 40, 194.
Timothy ; II. 61, 69.
—— letters from ; II. 13, 44, 69, 70, 164, 170, 201, 241.
Willoughby ; II. 13.
Pustine, M. ; II. 432.
Putley, co. Gloucester ; I. 40.
Putney ; II. 143, 244 ; III. 158.
Pye :
Sir Charles ; II. 451 ; III. 17, 20–22, 70, 161.
Robert, afterwards Sir Robert, Commissioner of the Navy ; I. 123, 127, 200, 207, 209, 273, 302, 351, 353, 478 ; II. 36, 46, 47, 127, 224, 270, 295.
—— letters from ; I. 107, 110, 116, 143, 195, 203, 206, 208, 214, 229, 371, 418, 426, 427, 463 ; II. 66, 126.
—— letter to ; I. 206.
Sir Walter ; I. 153.
—— letters from ; I. 107, 112.
Pym :
John, M.P. ; II. 272, 295, 312.
—— motion of ; II. 264, 265, 267, 310.
—— to be Chancellor of the Exchequer ; II. 272, 286.
—— his notable speech ; II. 262.
—— his conduct in Strafford's attainder ; II. 279.
—— his impeachment of Queen Henrietta Maria (1643) ; II. 334.
—— is asked for by the women of Westminster presenting a petition ; II. 336.
—— character of ; II. 293, 294.
Thomas ; III. 138.

Q.

Quail, Captain ; I. 349 ; II. 21.
Quarles :
Mr. ; II. 196.
Captain, commander of Dutch ships ; I. 235, 332.
Colonel, death of ; II. 327.
Sir George ; I. 296.
John, assistant of the Merchant Adventurers' Company ; II. 69.
Quasch, Captain ; I. 417.
Quassate, Everard ; I. 304.
Quebec ; I. 375, 376.
Queenborough ; I. 201, 204, 304 ; II. 50.
advertisements from ; I. 331.
letters dated ; I. 196, 419.
Queenhithe ; II. 267.
Queen's County, Ireland, planting of ; I. 442 ; II. 230.
Queensberry, Duke of, installation at Windsor (1701) ; II. 432.
Queensferry, Scotland, ship of ; I. 454.
Quenby ; I. 285.
Quester, Matthew de, foreign postmaster ; II. 47, 49 ; III. 155.
Quinton, Rebecca ; III. 83.
Quittance, the ship ; I. 13, 22.
Quondam, Mrs. ; II. 419.

R.

Rabnett, Thomas, master of the Charles ; I. 143, 188.
Raby :
Durham ; I. 294.
Castle, letter dated ; II. 26.
Radborne ; II. 408 ; III. 4, 93.
Radcliffe, Ratcliffe :
Cross ; I. 234.
Mr. ; II. 149.
—— cousin of Lord Deputy Wentworth ; II. 155.
—— J.P., of Manchester ; II. 217.
Dr., principal of Brazenose College, Oxford ; II. 173.
—— physician ; II. 372 ; III. 24, 25, 110.
George ; II. 116.
—— letter from ; II. 11.
Sir George ; II. 152, 220, 233, 247, 254, 275.
—— letter to ; II. 157.
—— accused of high treason ; II. 265.
William ; III. 55.
—— letter from ; II. 216.
Radford, Abraham, of Linton ; II. 450.
Radley, Mr., of Yarborough ; I. 6.
Radlow hundred, subsidy from ; I. 72.
Radnor, Lady (1716) ; III. 117.
Radzivill, Prince ; II. 241, 249.
Ragg, Mr. ; III. 173.
Ragland, letter dated ; II. 136.
Ragley ; I. 211.
Rahin, village of ; II. 132, 156.
Raighan, Castle ; II. 298, 299.
Railton, Raylton :
Mr. ; II. 62, 239, 264, 330, 425.
William, agent of Lord Deputy Wentworth ; II. 243, 253.
—— letters from ; II. 78, 150, 151, 193, 197, 201, 240.
Rainborough :
Captain ; I. 434, 435.
William ; II. 158, 161, 163, 202.

Rainbow, the ship; I. 13, 116, 165, 188, 189, 192, 196, 199, 204–206, 208, 226, 238, 258, 302, 304, 332, 346.
Raine, Robert; I. 195.
Rainham, Chatham; I. 45; II. 48.
Rainsborough; II. 49.
Rainsford:
Christopher, lieutenant-governor of Jersey; II. 30.
Edward, letter from; II. 136.
Raleigh:
Dr.; I. 27.
Gilbert, deputy vice-admiral; I. 169.
—— prize ship in his custody; I. 151.
—— gift of a polacca to; I. 207.
Sir Walter, has liberty to furnish his Guinea voyage; I. 92, 94.
—— his ship, the Destiny; I. 101.
Ramay, letter dated; III. 62.
Ramilies, battle of; III. 71.
Rampton; I. 29.
Ramsden, John, deputy lieutenant of Yorkshire; II. 208.
Ramsey:
Hants; I. 277.
David; I. 476, 477, 480.
—— letter from; I. 435.
—— Lord, and Lord Reay, cause between; I. 464.
—— gentleman of the Privy Chamber; II. 147.
Randall:
Mr., examination of; I. 145.
Mrs., brewer of Broken Wharf; I. 200.
Rane, Horneastle sessions; I. 5.
Ranelagh; I. 425.
the ship; III. 45.
Lord, paymaster-general; I. 427, 450; II. 183, 427, 428.
Ranger, Edward, post of Dover; II. 84, 99, 103.
Ranzow, Marshal; II. 237.
Raphoe:
bishop of; I. 457.
dean and chapter of; I. 455, 457.
Rastadt; III. 44.
Rastell, Rastalf:
Mr.; I. 410.
Thomas; I. 397, 474.
—— letter from; I. 447.
Rathkeel, letter dated; III. 131.
Ratisbon; I. 15, 16, 20, 408, 410, 420; II. 149.
Raven, Mr., surveyor in Ireland; I. 450; II. 157.
Ravinglass; II. 228.
Rawcliffe; II. 10.
Rawlins:
Father, captain, alias Wright; I. 407.
Mr., master-gunner of the Lion; I. 204.
Raymond, Mr.; I. 428.
Raymont, Captain; I. 222.
Reade, Reed:
Mr.; I., 203, 442; II. 46, 312; III. 136.
—— clerk; I. 434.
—— very inward with the provost of Eton (1621); I. 115.
Captain, a Scotchman; II. 312.
Edmond; I. 436.
Edward; I. 434; II. 65, 251.
—— letters from; I. 67, 68, 70, 94, 97, 102, 103, 211, 285, 365; II. 18, 37, 118, 133, 135, 226, 275, 290, 291–294, 306, 312, 313, 317, 318, 320–325, 327, 328.
—— letters to; I. 70; II. 64.
Thomas, petition of; I. 171.
William, attorney; I. 296.
Sir William; I. 11.
Reading:
assizes; I. 218, 282.
mayor of; II. 167.
Mr.; II. 344.
Reay, Lord. See Mackay, Donald.
Reliefs and heriots, Ireland, suit for; I. 471.
Records in the banqueting house, Whitehall, burnt (1619); I. 103.
Reculver; I. 212.
Recusants: I. 8, 62, 227, 350, 402, 417.
Durham; I. 281, 290.
order touching; II. 280.
proceedings against; I. 242; II. 80.
Ireland; I. 272, 399, 454, 457, 481–483.
—— stay of proceedings against; I. 486.
Redding, Mr.; II. 349.
Red Hart, the ship, of Calais; I. 221.
Red Lion:
H.M.S.; I. 265.
the ship; I. 189, 221, 274, 288.
Rees, garrison of; I. 391.
Reesby (Revesby), Horncastle; I. 5.
Reeves, Dr.; II. 75. See also Ryves, Dr.
Reformation, the ship; I. 188, 192, 211, 239, 251; II. 114.
Rember, William, curate of St. Martins-in-the-Fields; I. 128.
Renalds, Mrs.; II. 384. See also Reynolds.
Rendesburg, letter dated; I. 478.
Renselaer, Cardinal; II. 276.
Repington, Edward, letters from; III. 28, 52, 179.
Repton:
Derbyshire; I. 227; II. 376; III. 92, 96.
Park; II. 363.
Repulse, the ship; I. 240, 302, 304, 330.
Requests:
Court of; II. 36, 57, 255.
—— suits in; II. 120.
master of, John Coke; I. 121, 123, 426.
Retford, East, arms at, to be seized; I. 302.
Return, the ship, inquiry touching; I. 310.

Retz; I. 313, 326.
Revel; III. 147.
Revell:
Mr.; I. 485; II. 44.
Edward; I. 413, 414.
—— letters from; II. 35, 62.
Robert, sheriff of Derbyshire; II. 408.
Rowland; I. 73.
Willmott; II. 408.
Revenge, the ship; III. 38, 58.
Revenue, the:
the Lords Commissioners of; I. 277, 289.
of Charles I., proposals touching; I. 291.
—— scheme for improving; III. 148.
Revolution, the, of 1688; II. 344, 348–350.
Reymes, Barney, assistant of the Merchant Adventurers' Company; II. 69.
Reynell:
Richard, J.P., letter from; I. 276.
Captain Walter; II. 128.
Reyner, Richard, deposition of; II. 344.
Reynolds:
Mr.; I. 54.
William, of Milton, butcher; I. 41.
Rhé, Isle of; I. 260, 314, 332, 380, 397, 412, 413; II. 18, 128, 152.
letter dated; I. 310.
the expedition to; I. 331, 333–335.
English ensigns taken at, sent to Paris; I. 336.
Rheims; I. 203, 460.
Rheine, near the Hague; II. 98; III. 146.
Rhine, the; III. 44, 45.
Rho, Alessandro de; I. 78.
Rhodes, Sir John; II. 441. See also Rodes.
Ribbesford rectory; II. 213.
Ribble, the river, portents in; II. 43.
Ricard, Anthony, of Taloone; II. 192.
Rice, Captain Anthony, letters from; I. 226, 403.
Rich:
Mr.; II. 386.
Lady (1603); I. 45, 63.
Lord (1629); I. 384.
Sir Charles; I. 413.
Henry, Earl of Holland; I. 317, 319, 321, 327, 328, 470, 479; II. 52, 54, 62, 126, 168, 236, 239–241, 285, 303, 314, 319, 330, 335.
—— —— letters, despatches, &c. from; I. 254, 256, 260, 366, 435, 449, 471; II. 9, 69, 118, 226.
—— —— letters to; I. 255, 257, 262; II. 14, 15, 255.
—— —— fleet under; I. 332.
—— —— warrant to; II. 16.
—— —— to be Lord Chamberlain; I. 359.
—— —— Lord Chief Justice in eyre of the forest; II. 123.
—— —— Lord High Admiral; II. 127.
—— —— made general of the army; II. 279, 280.
Rich—cont.
Sir Nathaniel; I. 268.
R., Lord Chancellor (1551); I. 1.
Robert, Earl of Warwick; I. 315, 325; II. 275, 312, 314, 333, 362.
—— ——, letters from; I. 271, 288; 296, 297, 299, 302; II. 174.
—— —— letter to; II. 168.
—— —— made a Privy Councillor (1641); II. 280.
—— —— displaced from being Lord High Admiral; II. 318, 323.
—— —— (1675–1701), death of; II. 434.
Richards, Edward; III. 107.
Richardson:
Mr.; I. 32, 433, 434; III. 129.
—— his patent for saltpetre in Herefordshire; I. 394.
Dr., King Charles' chaplain; I. 159; III. 134.
John, J.P., of Durham; II. 232.
—— letter from; II. 128.
—— warrant to; II. 16.
Dr. John, master of Trinity College, Cambridge; I. 148, 149, 150.
—— letters from; I. 37, 91, 149, 150, 153, 173.
—— death of; I. 270.
Sir Thomas, Lord Chief Justice; I. 403.
—— certificate signed by; I. 381.
—— dispute with the bishop of Oxford; II. 17, 19.
—— dispute with Witherings; II. 20.
—— letter from; II. 46.
Richelieu, Cardinal; I. 322, 372, 398, 400, 436, 484; II. 1, 140, 219, 289. report of conference with; I. 254, 256.
his private vow; II. 18.
troubled with hemorrhoids; II. 239.
Richmond; I. 1, 23, 438; II. 63, 294, 306; III. 81.
Surrey; II. 401.
Yorkshire; I. 425; II. 224.
letters dated; I. 208, 214; II. 24, 66, 126, 130, 220, 246.
bowling green at; I. 199.
lordship of, bought from Charles I.; II. 70.
Mr.; III. 161.
Earl of (1613); I. 81.
Duke of (1610); III. 142.
Duke and Duchess of (1716); III. 116.
Duchess of, her stolen plate; I. 199. See also Stuart, Frances. and Lenox, Duke of (1642); II. 304–306.
Rickman, Mr.; I. 181.
Richaut, Rycaut:
Mr.; I. 170, 209; II. 133, 135.
Peter; I. 179, 340, 478; II. 33.
—— letters from; I. 156, 157, 160, 165, 168, 179, 370, 371.
—— letter to; I. 167.

Richaut, Rycaut—cont.
—— claims goods in the St. Peter; I. 119.
—— sells ships and ordnance to strangers; I. 191.
Riddell, Peter, alderman of Newcastle, letter from; II. 31.
Ridhale, Mr.; I. 131.
Riddesdale, invasion of; II. 218.
Ridway, —; II. 170.
Riga; I. 113; III. 147.
Rigby, Captain; II. 323.
Rigden, Robert, office of coal meter; I. 148.
Rigemortes, Sir Peter; I. 210.
Rimes, Mr.; I. 231.
Ringsend, near Dublin; III. 50.
Ripley; III. 138.
Ripon, treaty at; II. 263.
Risley; I. 446; II. 383; III. 135, 136.
letters dated; I. 462; II. 45.
Rivers:
Lord (1701–1708); III. 79, 161.
Sir George, of the Alienation Office; I. 86.
John, J.P. of Kent; I. 274.
Rives, Ryves:
Dr. F.; I. 260.
—— letter from; I. 153, 239; II. 52.
Robert, fellow of New College, Oxford; I. 278.
Dr. Thomas; II. 121.
Rivington, John; II. 353.
Robbine, Dr.; II. 11.
Robbins:
James; I. 432.
John, bailiff of Yarmouth; II. 169.
Robartes:
Lord; II. 10, 57.
Charles Bodville, Lord Radnor; III. 111.
—— —— letter from; III. 110.
Foulke, letter from; I. 465.
Richard, Lord, and Lord Lambert, dispute between; I. 469; II. 27.
Thomas, mayor of Poole, letter from; I. 347, 361.
Robe, William, receipt by; II. 351.
Robert and George, the ship; II. 360.
Roberts:
N., under-sheriff; I. 197.
Russell, M.P. for Bodmin; III. 14.
Sir Thomas; I. 212.
Sir William; I. 296.
Robertson, Captain; I. 455.
Robethon, M. de; III. 113, 187.
Robinson:
Richard; I. 16.
Sir William; II. 80, 164, 435; III. 20.
Robson:
Mr., of Northumberland; II. 40.
—— of Norton; III. 141.
Roche:
forest; I. 294.
—— disafforested; I. 360.
John, his widow; I. 197.
Lord (1639); II. 218, 238.
family of (1704); III. 50.
Rochelle; I. 35, 203, 249, 311, 342, 343, 356, 372, 377, 380, 397, 400; II. 191.
letters dated; I. 319, 331, 332.
the siege of; I. 218, 236, 239, 240, 254, 320, 334, 337.
the expedition to; I. 341, 344, 347, 349, 364, 413.
—— estimates for; I. 358, 370.
advertisements from; I. 357.
surrender of; I. 368.
preparations at, for invasion of England (1639); II. 215.
salt; I. 278.
Rochellers; I. 222, 230, 254, 255, 260, 266, 298. at Fowey; I. 225.
bring a Spanish ship to Plymouth; I. 122.
Rochester; I. 41, 413, 436; II. 338.
letters dated; I. 431; II. 377, 378.
bishop of (1716); III. 116.
bishopric of, voidance of; II. 168.
gaol; I. 229.
Earl of. See Hyde, Lawrence.
Lord and Lady (1716); III. 116.
Rochefort; II. 1.
Michael; I. 482.
Rock, Mr.; I. 161.
Rockley:
Mr.; II. 198.
R., letters from; II. 205, 208.
Rocksavage, Lord (1638); II. 185.
Rockwell:
Mr.; I. 44, 166, 219.
John, letter from; I. 160.
Rockwood mine; III. 12.
Roclift, York; I. 480.
Roden, Captain Marmaduke; II. 316.
Rodes, Edward, letter from; II. 208.
Roe, Rowe:
Mr.; I. 153.
Jacob; II. 353.
John; III. 138.
Robert; II. 345, 347.
Rev. Thomas, letter from; III. 6.
Sir Thomas, ambassador to Poland; I. 312, 387, 395; II. 185, 204, 232, 277, 279, 293, 314.
—— —— letter from; II. 224.
—— —— duel with Sir T. H.; I. 57.
Roebuck, the ship; I. 435; II. 119, 144, 146.
Roehampton; I. 476.
letters dated; I. 472; II. 28.
William III. at; II. 354.
Roermonde; I. 465.
Rogers:
Dr.; II. 199, 200, 208.
Francis, letter from; I. 308.
Rohan:
M. de; I. 462; II. 37, 63, 71, 175.
Madame de, memorial; I. 363.
Roiden, Captain; I. 486. See also Roden.
Rolf, John; II. 192.
Rolleston, —; II. 384; III. 30.

Rolls:
Court; III. 150.
Henry, heir of Sir Henry, of Torrington, Devon; I. 213.
Master of the; I. 299; II. 204. See also Cæsar, Sir Julius.
a messenger; I. 323.
Romans, King of the (1704); III. 46, 47.
Rome; I. 26, 46, 402, 451; II. 36.
letter dated; III. 122.
the patricians of; I. 361.
Romere, Isaac; II. 103.
Romford fairs and markets, profits of; I. 197.
Romney, Lord (1716); III. 117. See also Sydney, Henry.
Romudoes Company; I. 414.
Roney, Mr.; III. 160.
Ronsselaer, letter dated; III. 72.
Rooke:
Sir George, Admiral; II. 435, 438; III. 38, 46, 48, 49.
—— —— marriage to Mrs. Lutterell (1701); II. 417.
—— —— refuses to sit at the Admiralty Board with Lord Haversham; II. 443.
—— —— his engagement with the French; III. 45.
Lady; III. 13.
Roos:
Yorkshire; I. 298.
John, Lord, son of the Earl of Rutland; II. 418, 440; III. 3, 8, 160.
—— —— stands for Derbyshire; II. 407, 408, 412, 413, 444, 446.
—— —— loses his election; III. 14.
Roper:
Mr., of Eltham, search of his house; II. 321, 322.
Mrs.; III. 186.
Thomas, Viscount Baltinglas, letters from; I. 328, 407.
Rest, Ireland, letters dated; I. 407.
Rosalba; III. 130.
Rose:
Mrs.; III. 97.
Hugh; I. 315.
Castle, letter dated; II. 221.
Rosencranz, M.; III. 109.
Roskimmer, Captain; I. 217, 218, 222, 225.
Rosleston; II. 450.
Rosny, Marquis; I. 102.
Ross:
Brigadier; III. 41, 71.
constable of; III. 145.
Lord (1616); I. 92.
Lady (1619), committed to the Tower; I. 104.
Rosse:
Bishop of. See Maxwell, John.
John, Lord. See Roos.
Rossendolf; II. 378.
Rossie, Lady, letter from; II. 220.
Rossiter, Mr.; I. 4, 26.
Rothergh, Rice, his cause against Sir Robert Mansel; I. 199.
Rothes, Earl of. See Leslie, John.
Rotterdam; I. 166, 167, 193; II. 69, 150, 167, 250, 370; III. 158.
letters dated; II. 170; III. 356.
ships of; I. 203, 218, 280.
Rotweil; III. 43, 44.
Rouen; I. 342; II. 33, 76.
letters dated; I. 418, 458, 459–465, 471, 474, 475, 484; II. 106.
articles of; I. 24.
merchants of; I. 331.
parliament of; I. 285.
ships for; I. 223.
Rouillac, Marquis; II. 244.
Rouse, Rowse:
Anthony, petition of; I. 185.
William; I. 163, 164.
Rowland:
Mr.; II. 249, 257, 295; III. 186.
Henry, petition of; I. 172.
Rowlands, John Baptist, letter to; I. 295.
Rowlandson, Thomas, English Resident at Venice; II. 73, 103.
Rowles, William, letter from; I. 302.
Rowlet, William; II. 21.
Rowley, James, a Covenanter; II. 220.
Rowlins, Caleb, fraud of; I. 197.
Rowney, Thomas, M.P. for Oxford; II. 428.
Roxburgh, Lord (1614), his marriage to Lady Jane Drummond; I. 80–82, 87.
Roy, Edward, of Weymouth, examination of; I. 137.
Royal Ann, the ship; I. 226.
Royal Catharine, the ship; III. 48.
Royal Exchange, the ship; II. 243.
Royal Gardens, outlay on (temp. William III.); III. 118–120.
Royal James, the ship; I. 113.
Royal Town (i.e., Prince Town) manor of; I. 195.
Royston; I. 110.
letter dated; I. 174.
James I. at; I. 95, 159, 184.
sickness at; I. 52.
Charles I. suddenly leaves, for York; II. 308.
postmaster, committed to prison; II. 180.
Ruairk, Thadeus; I. 482.
Rubens, Peter Paul; I. 322, 386, 387, 403, 404.
Ruby, the ship; III. 104.
Rudd, Mr.; II. 221.
Rudge manor, co. Gloucester; I. 40.
Rudhall, co. Hereford; I. 112.
letter dated; I. 252; II. 109.
Mr.; I. 272.
John, letters from; I. 252; II. 109.
Rudyard:
Sir Benjamin; II. 330.
—— letter from; I. 427.
Ruel; II. 33.

Rufford; II. 128, 129, 135.
letters dated; I. 46, 92; II. 131.
Charles I. at; II. 131.
Abbey, letter dated; II. 132.
Rugge, Captain Robert, letter from; II. 217.
Rupert, Prince; II. 324, 330, 331.
his exchange with Prince Casimir; II. 237, 238. arrives in England; II. 307.
with Prince Maurice at Newcastle; II. 321. is hurt at Worcester; II. 322.
mistress of; II. 404.
Rupert, the ship; I. 33.
Rupton, Secretary; III. 113.
Ruremond; III. 16, 61.
Rusford, Robert; III. 138.
Rushee, Mr.; III. 186.
Russell:
Mr.; II. 422.
Lady (1604), her suit touching Dunington; I. 50.
Lady Robert (1716); III. 116.
Edward, Earl of Orford (1697–1727), impeachment of; II. 427, 428, 430.
Francis, petition of; I. 128.
—— Earl of Bedford; I. 136, 462, 467, 468; II. 15, 26, 167, 320.
—— —— letters from; II. 14, 44.
—— —— to be Lord Keeper or Lord Treasurer (1641); II. 272, 276.
—— —— death from small-pox (1641); II. 282.
John, Duke of Bedford (1701); II. 415.
—— Earl of Bedford (1550–1554); I. 1.
Sir Thomas; I. 164.
—— and Sir William, his son; I. 457, 461, 472.
Sir William, treasurer of the Navy, &c.; I. 101, 105, 161, 163, 165, 195, 204, 226, 269, 320, 331, 401, 407, 439; II. 236, 269, 297.
—— letters from; I. 150, 193, 207, 238, 276, 278, 355; II. 52, 218.
Russia; I. 379.
Czar, the; I. 308, 441, 472; II. 272, 413, 414; III. 121.
—— (1638), Michael Feodorvich, letter from (to Charles I.); II. 177.
—— (1698), plot for deposing; II. 376.
cordage and hemp from; I. 189.
company, governor and corporation of; II. 273.
merchant of; II. 230.
women of; II. 110.
Rustorf, Mr.; II. 123; III. 146.
Rutland:
Earl of (1605), Sir Robert Dudley practises with; I. 55.
—— (1626); I. 286. See also Manners.
Rutland—cont.
Duke and Duchess of (1716); III. 116, 190.
shire; II. 309.
—— purveyance compositions in; I. 74.
Rye; I. 212, 460; II. 94.
letter dated; II, 93.
mayor of; I. 459.
the ship; III. 106.
Ryddall, Mr., of Ferreby; I. 4.
Ryder, Captain; I. 173, 217.
Rynberk, letter dated; II. 15.
Ryswick, peace of; II. 433.

S.

Sablière, Sieur de la; I. 421.
Sacheverel:
Mr.; I. 56; II. 184, 194, 209, 337, 408, 445.
Anne, daughter of Secretary Coke; II. 326.
—— letters from; II. 323, 324, 332; III. 141.
Captain Jacinth, letter from; I. 140.
—— examination of; I. 326.
Dr., the business of (1710); III. 84, 85, 171.
Sackville:
Sir Edward; I. 141.
Edward, Earl of Dorset, Lord Chamberlain of Queen Henrietta Maria; I. 336, 359, 364, 379, 387, 443, 449; II. 32, 58, 94, 182, 223, 321, 327.
—— —— letters from; I. 264, 321; II. 7.
Mary, Countess of Dorset (née Curzon), letters from; I. 392; II. 179.
Charles, Earl of Dorset (1677–1706), owns his marriage with one of the Roches; III. 50.
Sir John, arrested in church in time of service; II. 321.
Thomas, Lord Buckhurst, Lord High Treasurer; I. 35, 37.
Saggione, Signor; III. 181.
St. Albans; II. 316, 324; III. 83.
concealments in the liberties of; I. 197.
Duchess of (1715); III. 113.
Earl of (Henry Jermyn), Lord Chamberlain of the Household (temp. Car. II.); III. 183.
Lord. See Bacon, Francis.
St. Andrew, the ship; I. 13, 116, 192, 237, 238, 337, 349; II. 78, 88, 135, 129, 145, 185, 191.
St. Andrews, Archbishop of (1605); I. 58.

St. Anne, the ship ; I. 224.
St. Anthony, the ship ; II. 59.
St. Arthur's Mount ; II. 37.
St. Augustine's (Canterbury) lathe ; I. 212.
St. Austell ; I. 218.
St. Briavell's Castle ; II. 51.
St. Bridget's Heath ; III. 55.
St. Chaumont, Marquis de ; I. 458, 461 ; II. 92.
St. Clara, Francis, a Romish priest ; II. 80.
St. Clare. See Sinclair.
St. Claud, the ship ; I. 224, 275, 337, 432, 440.
St. Cloud, letter dated ; III. 126.
St. Denys, the ship ; I. 485, 486.
St. Dunstan's church, Fleet Street ; I. 159.
St. Gravemoer, Lord de, marriage of his daughter Gertrude to the Earl of Albemarle (1701) ; II. 431.
St. Esprit, the French ship ; I. 268, 344.
St. Feriol, mountains of ; II. 399.
St. George :
the ship ; I. 116, 139, 165, 167, 179, 192, 226, 327, 337, 368, 417 ; II. 78–92, 161 ; III. 75.
Madame de ; II. 190.
and Shrewsbury, the ship ; III. 45.
St. George's Channel ; I. 379.
Windsor ; I. 198.
St. Germains, France ; II. 33.
the Jacobites at ; II. 416, 423.
St. Germans :
Cornwall, pocket borough of the bishop of Exeter, I. 157, 249, 251, 252.
—— exempted from billeting as a favour to Sir John Eliot ; I. 329.
St. Helens ; I. 345, 409 ; III. 58.
St. Hierosme, the ship ; II. 154.
St. Ignatius, effigy of, pulled down in Brussels ; I. 463.
St. Ives, Dutch fleet at ; I. 215, 337.
St. Jacques, the ship, of Dieppe ; I. 202, 224.
St. James :
palace of, birth of Charles II. at ; I. 410.
—— documents dated ; I. 170 ; II. 11, 106, 179 ; III. 113.
House, list of lodgings in (1714) ; III. 110.
ground belonging to Lord Harley at ; III. 114.
the ship, of Dunkirk ; II. 36.
St. Jean de Luz ; I. 340.
St. Jean de Morienne ; I. 421, 422.
St. Joan de Puerto Rico ; I. 20.
St. John, the ship ; I. 235, 240, 409.
St. John :
Henry, Lord Bolingbroke ; III. 13, 14, 31, 41, 43, 49, 54, 55, 64, 65, 103.
—— —— made Secretary at War ; III. 32–35, 57.
—— —— letters from ; III. 49, 56, 61, 63, 109, 181.
St. John—cont.
Mrs., letter from ; III. 65.
John, a priest, letter from ; I. 373.
Sir William, Admiral ; I. 129, 132, 133, 149.
—— —— certificate in his cause ; I. 140.
—— —— his capture of a sugar ship ; I. 137, 150.
—— —— draft warrant for ; I. 467.
St. Julians ; II. 188.
St. Lawrence :
near Liege, letter dated ; III. 18.
Sir Christopher ; I. 27.
William, letter from ; II. 140.
St. Leger :
Sir Anthony, former Lord Deputy of Ireland ; II. 114.
Sir William ; I. 196, 201, 206, 234.
—— letter from ; I. 208.
—— Lord President of Munster ; I. 471.
St. Lucar, Spain ; I. 133, 165, 193, 216, 221, 222, 240, 268, 331, 419 ; II. 141.
St. Lucas ; I. 200, 249.
St. Malo ; I. 256, 278, 317, 379.
English vessels arrested at ; I. 260.
preparations at, for war ; II. 215.
St. Martin's, Isle of Rhé ; I. 315, 330.
—— letter dated ; I. 310, 312, 314, 317 ; II. 255.
St. Mary, Bow, London, Arches Court sits in (1629) ; I. 388.
St. Mary Gate, York ; I. 480.
St. Mary Port ; I. 241.
St. Mary's, siege raised ; II. 185.
St. Matthew, the ship ; I. 13.
St. Mawes ; III. 107.
St. Michaels, Azores ; I. 17, 240, 398 ; II. 252.
St. Michel, abbey of ; I. 358.
St. Nicholas island, Plymouth ; I. 13, 14.
St. Omare, relief of ; II. 187.
St. Omé ; II. 252.
St. Omer, seminary of priests ; II. 239.
St. Patrick, the ship ; II. 147.
St. Paul's, London :
burial of Mrs. Carey in ; II. 45.
dean of (1603) ; I. 45.
organs and ornaments in ; II. 291.
repair of ; I. 435.
St. Peter :
the ship ; I. 240, 241, 252, 275.
—— of Calais ; I. 249, 250.
—— of Horn ; I. 370.
—— of Newhaven, arrested in the Thames ; I. 261.
St. Petersburg, letter dated ; III. 121.
St. Poole :
George ; I. 3, 4, 11.
Lady ; I. 4.
St. Quentin ; I. 460.
St. Ravie, servant of Mons. Soubise ; I. 135.
St. Rigoles, Brussels ; I. 308.
St. Sebastian ; I. 453 ; II. 33, 36, 108, 135, 248. boat-building in ; I. 266.

St. Simon, the ship, of Hamburg; III. 148.
St. Stephens chapel; III. 25.
St. Valentine, the ship; I. 35.
Saithwaite, Thomas, prisoner, to be tortured; I. 60.
Salaby, Louth, sessions; I. 6.
Salamanca; I. 448.
Saleey Forest; I. 294.
Salcombe; II. 125.
Sale:
Mr.; II. 347.
Cornet Richard; II. 353.
William; III. 1.
Sales, Commissioners for; I. 299.
Salisbury; I. 242, 419.
letters dated; I. 45, 146, 218, 221, 468.
bishop of (1716); III. 117.
dean and chapter of; I. 163.
Earl of (1632); I. 450. See also Cecil, Robert.
—— (1716); III. 117.
mayor and commonalty of; III. 149.
Sallanow, a French pirate; I. 160.
Sallee; I. 326; II. 147, 149, 202, 296. pirates of; I. 231, 434.
prisoners; I. 263, 289.
ships of; I. 206; II. 117.
treaty of; I. 313, 316; II. 158.
Sallendra, Peter; I. 135.
Saltash; I. 266.
Salter, Sir Nicholas; I. 158.
Saltfleetby; I. 6.
Saltonstall:
Sir Peter, postmaster; I. 194.
Captain Richard, letters from; I. 300, 449.
Saltram, letter dated; I. 285.
Salutation, the ship; I. 482, 485.
Sambourn, R., examination of; I. 136.
Sames, Dr., surrogate to Sir Henry Martin; I. 326.
Sampford, Mr.; I. 182.
Sampson, Richd., bishop of Coventry and Lichfield; I. 39.
Samson and Delilah; I. 372.
Samson, the ship; I. 16, 17; II. 92.
Samuel, Samwell:
Sir Richard; II. 256, 343.
Sancie, Mons. de; I. 261, 337, 338.
Sandby, Mr., and Mary Hardinge, proposed marriage of; III. 88.
Sand Pitts; I. 381.
Sanders, John; II. 354. See also Saunders.
Sanderson: See also Saunderson.
Mr.; III. 166.
Mrs., letter from; III. 97.
Henry, letter from; I. 337.
Raleigh; II. 189.
Sandford:
Mr., fine of; I. 185.
Richard, water bailiff of Milton; I. 41.
Sands, Mr.; II. 322.
Sandwich; I. 167, 212; II. 401. customer of; I. 487.
Sandys:
Colonel; III. 80, 186.
Edwin; III. 156.
Sir Edwin, M.P. for Penryn, letter from; I. 271.
Sir William; III. 148.
Sanquehar Castle; II. 223.
Santander; I. 137, 139.
Santigne, M. de; III. 165.
Sarah, the ship, of London; II. 148.
Sargeant, John; II. 171, 448, 457; III. 92, 93, 95, 96, 167.
Sarsden; II. 386.
Saucy, Père, the Oratorian; I. 401.
Saumur; II. 400.
Saunders, Thomas; II. 344.
Saunderson:
Mr., of Fillingham; I. 3.
—— of the bishopric of Durham; I. 301.
Mrs., widow; II. 365.
Henry, certificate by; I. 338.
Sir Nicholas, letter from; I. 229.
Nicholas, of Revesby; I. 5.
Sir William; III. 186.
Savage:
Mr.; II. 103.
Sir Arthur, comptroller of the Prince of Wales' household; I. 71, 367, 382, 449, 450; II. 246.
Sir John, petition of; I. 171.
Richard, Earl Rivers (1694–1712), death of; III. 103.
Sir Thomas; I. 273; II. 30.
Thomas, Viscount Colchester, letters from; I. 196; II. 165.
Savile:
Colonel; II. 247.
Mr.; I. 18, 393, 456; II. 10, 249, 411.
Sir George; I. 56, 393.
Sir Henry, provost of Eton (1596–1622); I. 31.
Sir John; I. 273.
—— commission to; I. 293.
John, Lord, comptroller of the household; I. 443.
John, letter from; II. 128.
Sir Robert; I. 5.
Thomas, Lord; II. 318.
William; I. 399.
—— deputy lieutenant of Yorkshire; II. 208.
Sir William, M.P.; II. 204, 311.
Savoy; I. 323, 394; III. 42.
Duke of; I. 257, 363, 383, 400; II. 61; III. 44, 64, 70, 73.
—— armour presented by; I. 198.
—— his second son admiral in Spanish navy; II 248.
Duchess of; II. 196.
ambassador from; II. 68, 85, 196.
cardinal of; II. 85.
London; II. 402.
—— letter dated; I. 297.
—— mastership of; I. 255.

Sawley; II. 394, 448; III. 52.
Sawre, William, of Thorp; I. 5.
Sawyer, Sir Edmond, committed to the Tower; I. 351, 352, 354, 356.
Saxe:
Duke of; II. 14, 59.
Elector of, letter from; I. 441.
Saxony; I. 408; II. 13, 207.
Duke of; I. 383.
Say and Sele, Viscount. See Fiennes, William.
Sayer:
Mr.; III. 186.
Robert, bailiff of Yarmouth, letter from; I. 322.
Saywell, William, letter from; I. 35.
Scalia; I. 381.
Scampton:
Spittal sessions; I. 3.
Thomas; III. 138.
Scarborough; I. 223, 334; II. 86–88, 92, 136, 320; III. 73, 110.
letters dated; II. 108, 134.
Earl of. See Lumley, Richard.
the insolence of Hollanders at; II. 89–91, 108, 109, 116, 119.
Scarsdale; II. 442, 446; III. 2, 11, 13, 97, 138.
Lord (1700); II. 406, 416; III. 116. See also Lake, Nicholas and Robert. troops; II. 358.
Scawood, Lancashire; I. 294.
Scharenborg, M., of Antwerp; II. 362; III. 158.
Scheldt, the river; III. 71, 72.
Schellenberg; III. 40, 43.
Schenk Sconce. See Skink Sconce.
Schiedam, ships of; I. 218, 219.
Schomberg; II. 249.
Marshal; I. 254, 465, 484.
—— letter from; II. 351.
—— engagement with; II. 352.
Duke of; II. 357, 455, 456; III. 26, 59, 116.
Schoonhoven, Holland, stir by Arminians at; I. 306.
Schröder, M.; III. 185.
Schulenberg, Countess of; III. 113.
Schwinge, the; I. 340.
Scilly; I. 474; II. 118, 137, 139, 192; III. 156.
Scobell, Francis, M.P. for Grampound; II. 428.
Scot, Scott:
Edward; I. 212.
Lord Henry; III. 32.
Sir James; I. 368; II. 210.
—— Privy Councillor (1585); I. 2.
Sir John; II. 206.
Luke; II. 348.
Thomas; II. 179.
William, mayor of York (1638), letters from; II. 205, 208.
Scotland; I. 366, 369; II. 191, 206, 212, 253. arraying of men in, opinion of Attorney-General as to; II. 187.
army of; II. 280, 338.
—— march into England; II. 259, 260, 263.
—— intended march on London; II. 278.
—— demands of; II. 274.
—— invited to assist the Parliament against Charles I.; II. 326. assembly of, to be convened; II. 316.
capitulation of, at Darien; II. 399.
Lord Chancellor of (Sir George Hay), letter to; I. 271.
the Church in, and the introduction of the Prayer Book into; II. 214, 217.
—— project for converting to Romanism; I. 402.
Commissioners of; II. 269, 305, 341.
Covenanters of; II. 227, 230, 233, 240, 336, 341.
laws of, as to selling fish to the English; I. 451.
the rebellion in; II. 220, 226, 233.
—— pamphlets from; II. 216.
Parliament of, resolution of; II. 292.
Secretary of; I. 317, 319. See also Alexander, Sir William.
peace with; II. 239.
ships of; I. 145, 200, 408.
treaty with; II. 280, 282, 284, 327.
negotiations of Charles I. with; II. 308.
volunteers from, for suppressing the Irish rebellion; II. 303.
Scotchmen in Ireland; II. 312.
—— in London, oath tendered to; II. 232.
and the Elector Palatine; II. 241.
William III. and Mary proclaimed in; II. 354.
the Scotch plot (1703); III. 31, 32.
the Scotch Act of Security; III. 53.
Scout, the ship; I. 13.
Scriven, George; I. 328.
Scrope, Emanuel, Lord, afterwards Earl of Sunderland, Lord President of the Council of York; I. 326.
Scroope, —, servant of the Duke of Richmond (1642); II. 305.
Scudamore:
Mr.; II. 173.
Sir John, letter from; I. 289.
John, Lord, ambassador to France; II. 87, 103, 108, 142, 213, 232.
William, sheriff of Hereford; II. 109.
Seaborne, George; I. 402
Seahorse, the ship; I. 30.
Seale; II. 396, 450; III. 136.
Seaman:
Dr.; I. 174.
—, son of, his escape from Newgate and re-capture; II. 47.

Seamen, pressing of; I. 344, 346–349, 360, 362, 363.
Sea Venture, the ship; I. 349.
Sedan, defeat of the French by the Princes at; II. 287, 289.
Sedgmoor; II. 169.
grant of parts of; I. 172, 194.
Commissioners for, letter to; I. 476.
letter from Charles I. touching; I. 478.
Sefelingen; III. 42–44.
Segovia wools; II. 244.
Segres, Cape; I. 241.
Seguier, M., chancellor of France; II. 333.
Schestett, Lord Hannibal; II. 231.
Seidgeweake, W., brewer, of Fleet Bridge; I. 200.
Seiton, Mr.; I. 308.
Selby; I. 393; II. 217.
Selden:
John; I. 352, 383; II. 112, 272.
adoration done to his window in the Tower; I. 384.
progress of his book; II. 90.
and the Mare Liberum: II. 113. on the right of bishops to sit in Parliament; II. 274.
Sellers, R.; II. 61, 62.
Sellsy, Richard; II. 217.
Selston, Notts; II. 13, 34, 39, 44, 58, 64, 68, 78, 83, 241.
letters dated; II. 69, 70.
Selwood, Somerset; I. 294.
forest, disafforestation of; I. 360.
Semple:
Hugh; II. 217.
John, letters from; II. 37, 48, 76, 217.
Lord (1639), letter to; II. 217.
Seneca, quoted by Henry More of Benningtон; I. 275.
Senterre, M., extraordinary French ambassador (1635); II. 87.
Sergeant. See Sargeant.
Serjeant's Inn, Chancery Lane; I. 389, 390.
Serracold, Mr.; III. 7.
Seton:
Colonel; II. 10.
J. petition of; III. 153.
Settlement, Act of; II. 453; III. 53.
Setuval, in Portugal; I. 194.
Seven Stars, the ship; I. 167, 279.
Severn:
water-bailiwick of; I. 163.
the ship; III. 81.
Sewers: and marshals of the Hall, their antiquity and use; I. 194, 198.
Commissioners of; II. 68, 225.
—— letter to; II. 69.
—— for Hatfield Chase; II. 119.
Sewtas, Master, a lawyer; I. 466.
Seyers, Mr.; III. 46.
Seyliard, Thomas, J.P. of Kent; I. 274.
Seymour:
Mr.; II. 428.
Colonel; II. 403.
Charles, eleventh Duke of Somerset, letter from; III. 81.
Dorothy proposed by Charles I. as a second wife to the Earl of Bath; II. 14, 15.
Edward, sixth Duke of Somerset; I. 1.
—— tenth Earl of Hertford, returns from the Archduke (1606); I. 62.
—— Army Commissioner (1626), letter from; I. 276.
Sir Edward; I. 190, 221; II. 420, 422; III. 35.
—— goes to Ireland with great pomp (1700); II. 400.
Sir Francis; I. 371.
Francis, Lord; II. 304, 310.
Henry; II. 421.
William, first Marquis of Hertford, Governor to Prince Charles afterwards Charles II.; II. 285, 304, 308, 310, 313, 320, 321, 323, 329.
Shackerstone, letter dated; III. 21.
Shadforth, Robert, of Gainsborough; I. 3.
Shadwell, Dr., physician to Lord Manchester; II. 405, 406; III. 60, 184.
Shaffneis, W., prisoner in the Gatehouse; I. 288.
Shaftesbury, Countess of (1716); III. 117.
Shakerley, Peter, M.P. for Chester; II. 417, 422, 423.
Shallcots, Mr.; II. 411.
Shardlow, letter dated; III. 7.
Sharloe, Isaac; II. 353.
Sharton, Mr., of Trinity College, Cambridge; II. 19.
Shaw:
Mr.; II. 441.
Henry, petition of; I. 199.
John; II. 448, 450, 452.
William; I. 184.
Shawler, W., letter from; I. 433.
Shee, John; I. 482.
Sheffield; II. 328; III. 51.
Lodge; I. 27.
Mr., of Croxbie; I. 4.
Edmund, Lord, afterwards Earl of Mulgrave, letters from; I. 196; II. 48.
—— his patent for alum making; I. 84.
Robert, of Epworth; I. 3.
Shegham manor, Essex; I. 103.
Shel, Mr.; II. 235.
Sheldon, Thomas; I. 296.
Shelford; III. 25.
Shelley, Mr., business of; II. 152, 153.
Shelton, Richard; I. 378.
Shenston, Sir F. Greville's park at; I. 69.
Sheppard, Shepherd:
Mr.; II. 354.
Gilbert; III. 138, 139.
Owen; I. 263.
Richard; II. 445.
Stephen; II. 353.

Sherard :
Mr. ; II. 369 ; III. 111.
Mrs. ; II. 395.
Bennet, Lord, M.P. for Leicester ; II. 72, 418, 440 ; III. 3, 14, 161.
—— —— letters from ; II. 345.
Sherborne ; I. 199.
letters dated ; I. 178, 248, 321, 331 ; II. 180.
Castle ; II. 320, 321.
Mr. ; II. 194, 221, 224, 258.
Sherwe Hall in Thurveston ; I. 43.
Sherfield :
Henry, recorder of Salisbury ; II. 2.
—— letters from ; II. 205, 208.
W., letter from ; II. 213.
Sherland, Christopher, his motion ; I. 343.
Sherratt, James ; II. 445. letter from ; 454.
Sherston, Thomas, of Milton, examination of ; I. 41.
Sherwell :
Nicholas, certificate by ; I. 215.
—— and Thomas, trustees for borough of Plymouth ; I. 393.
Sherwood :
Forest ; II. 209.
Joseph, of New Inn (1712) ; III. 100.
Sheson, Mr. ; III. 45.
Shetland Isles ; I. 334 ; III. 147.
Shilling, Mr. ; I. 44.
Shilton, Richard, Solicitor-General, letter from ; I. 305.
Shingle Hall, letters dated ; II. 356, 368.
Shipbuilding for the navy ; I. 114, 167.
Shipmoney ; I. 220, 275 ; II. 70, 73, 109, 119, 136, 150, 170, 173, 188, 204, 209, 224, 232, 236, 237, 239, 241, 253.
proposal for raising money to countervail ; II. 186.
day appointed by the House for discussing ; II. 263.
Ships :
tolls upon, for light on Goodwin Sands ; I. 134.
cost of victualling ; I. 346. See also Victualling.
Shipton wives' prophecy ; II. 228.
Shipwrights' Company, attempt by Ipswich shipowners to dissolve ; I. 111, 404.
Shires, George, apothecary in ordinary to Charles I. ; I. 195, 199.
Shirley ; II. 417. See also Shurley.
Captain ; I. 429.
——, letter to ; II. 260.
Mr. ; II. 450.
George ; I. 312.
Sir George, letter from ; II. 32.
Sir Henry ; I. 228, 296, 303.
Robert ; I. 264.
—— afterwards Earl Ferrers ; II. 417, 450 ; III. 32, 84, 87, 88, 91, 98.
—— letters from ; II. 359, 365, 368, 380.
Thomas, letter from ; II. 259.
Sir Thomas ; I. 50, 158, 184.
Shore, Lady ; III. 68.
Shoreham ; I. 316.
Short, Mr. ; I. 369, 423.
Shotbolt :
Mr., certificate by ; I. 140.
John ; I. 194.
—— petition of ; I. 172.
Shotover Forest ; I. 439, 446, 447 ; II. 4.
Shotwick, Cheshire ; I. 294.
Shovel :
Sir Cloudesley ; III. 45, 48.
—— his report of an engagement with the French ; II. 43.
Shower, Sir Bartholomew, death of ; II. 441.
Shrewsbury ; II. 90.
fortified by Charles I. ; II. 322.
letters patent for ; III. 149.
Earl of. See Talbot.
Shropshire ; I. 2.
Shurley, Sir George, Chief Justice of Ireland ; I. 392.
—— letters from ; I. 389, 408, 444 ; II. 65.
Arthur, his son ; II. 65.
Sibourg :
Colonel ; III. 18, 37, 40, 59, 62.
—— and Marlborough, difference between ; III. 67.
General C., letters from ; III. 102, 103.
Sibsey, Horncastle sessions ; I. 5.
Sibthorpe :
Captain ; I. 429.
Sir Christopher ; I. 482.
Sidley, Sir John, his loan to the Benchers for rebuilding Lincoln's Inn Chapel (1625) ; I. 197.
Sidenham, Sydenham :
Mr. ; I. 323 ; II. 163, 249, 308, 309.
Edward ; I. 163.
—— letter from ; II. 287.
Captain Francis ; I. 337, 411, 417, 487 ; II. 12, 21, 22.
—— letters from ; I. 320, 329, 345 ; II, 419.
Sir Ralph ; II. 195.
Sidney. See Sydney.
Sienna ; I. 18.
silks bought by Countess of Arundel at ; I. 81.
Signet :
the ship ; I. 13.
the office ; I. 434, 464 ; II. 52, 264 ; III. 75.
—— clerk of, in Wales ; I. 2.
—— dividends for the Secretary of State ; I. 342, 359, 368, 371, 460.
—— records burnt (1619) ; I. 103.
Silesia :
cloths of ; I. 155.
wars in ; I. 311.
Siloam, pool of ; I. 28.
Simcott, Mr., of Chancery Lane ; II. 115.
Simley, Peter, carpenter ; I. 42.
Simons, Mr., consul of Zante ; II. 204.
Sims, Samuel ; III. 91, 93, 98.
Sinclair, Rothes ; II. 220.

Sinedale, Henry; I. 164.
Sinfin Moor; III. 30, 78.
Singleton, William, letter to; I. 385.
Sion, Alexander, chaplain of Mr. Coke; II. 357, 358.
Sitterick, Mr.; II. 287.
Sittingbourne; I. 41, 212.
Skardell (Scarsdale?), Lord, verses of Lord Cutts to; III. 187.
Skelhorne, Mr., of Gravesend; I. 330.
Skell, the, ships at; I. 324.
Skerne, Mr., of Bonbie; I. 4.
Skink Skonce; I. 63; II. 86, 99–101, 110, 168.
Skinner:
Mr.; II. 183.
—— letter to; I. 15.
—— merchant of Dover; II. 6, 127, 128.
Dr. (1631); I. 445.
David, letters from; I. 461, 463.
John; I. 71.
—— letter from; I. 414.
William; I. 171.
Skipton Castle, letter dated; II. 190.
Skipwith:
Mr., J.P.; I. 353.
Daniel, of Theddlethorpe; I. 6.
George; I. 4.
Sir Henry; I. 296.
—— letter from; I. 296.
John, knighted at Warsop; I. 43.
Thomas, of Owterby; I. 6.
Sir Thomas; II. 365.
Sir William; I. 6.
Skrine, William, letter from; III. 101.
Skrymshire, Sir Charles; III. 57.
Skutt, George, of Poole, letter from; II. 191, 192.
Skye; II. 231.
Slane [Lord]; I. 481; II. 209.
Slaneing, Sir Nicholas; II. 229.
Slaney, Humphrey, his goods taken in the Blue Dove; I. 239.
Slater, Captain, of Herefordshire; II. 316.
Slaves, price of, in 1621; I. 115.
Sleaford:
letters dated; II. 218, 352.
powder and match to be provided by (1598); I. 21.
Sleeve, the, the English fleet in; I. 345.
Sleigh, Sligh:
John; II. 217.
Richard; I. 51.
Sir Samuel; II. 310.
Slingsby:
Captain; II. 117, 144.
Lady; I. 451.
Sir Guilford; I. 427.
—— letters from; I. 138, 172, 176, 370, 404, 412, 418, 428.
Sir Henry; II. 23.
Captain R., letter from; II. 150.
Sir Thomas; III. 156.
William, petition of; I. 128.
Sluys; II. 429.
Small-pox, notices of; I. 155.
Smallridge, Mr.; III. 97.
Smart:
Mr.; I. 466; II. 346.
Edward; II. 353.
Richard, adultery of; I. 158.
Smedley:
Stephen; II. 353, 355.
Thomas; II. 445.
Smedmore, Thomas, deputy officer of customs, letter from; I. 167.
Smiles, Richard, letter from; III. 153.
Smisby; II. 450.
Smith, Smyth:
Mr.; I. 331.
—— otherwise Gowan; I. 448.
—— parson; II. 331.
—— his right to Upton parsonage; I. 185.
—— secretary to the Earl of Northumberland (1638); II. 195.
—— J.P. of Derbyshire (1699); II. 387.
—— of Denbigh; III. 2.
Captain; II. 255; III. 7.
Lady, daughter of Lord Conway (1630), death of; I. 411.
Fabian, English agent in Persia; III. 154.
Sir Francis, of Ashby Fallows; I. 228.
Helen, adultery of; I. 158.
Sir Hugh, knighted at Warsop (1603); I. 43.
Joanna, widow of Richard; I. 173.
John; I. 263.
John, shoemaker to James I.; I. 159.
Sir J., Speaker (1706), letters from; III. 77, 165.
Mary; I. 159.
Nathaniel, letter from; II. 141.
Dr. Richard, bishop of Chalcedon; I. 400, 402, 437.
—— warrant for his apprehension; I. 417.
Robert, deputy-postmaster of Deal; II. 159.
Roger; I. 296.
Solomon, deputy-marshal of the Admiralty Court; II. 102.
Thomas; I. 212; II. 169, 445; III. 138.
—— prisoner in the Gatehouse; III. 152.
—— son-in-law of Lord Paulet; II. 82.
—— bishop of Carlisle (1684–1702); II. 435, 452.
—— letters from; II. 94, 125, 139, 147, 151, 166, 185, 187, 189.
Sir Thomas, petition of; I. 160.
William, bishop of Lincoln, Lord President of the Welsh Marches; I. 38, 39.
—— depositions of; II. 145.
Dr. William, of Probus, letters from; III. 104, 107, 114.
Sir William; I. 185.
Smithfield Market; I. 47.

Smithsby, baker of James I., sent by the King to the Duke of Buckingham; I. 162.
Smyrna; III. 6.
Snaith, letter dated; II. 10.
Snape, Mr., of Hampton Court; III. 163.
Snead, William; I. 88, 152.
Sneyd:
Ralph, signature; I. 169.
Mr., of Keele; III. 57.
Snelling, B.; I. 299.
Snowden, Mr.; II. 51.
Soame, Thomas, of King's Lynn; I. 275.
Soham, Cambs.; I. 164.
Soinies Wood; III. 62.
Soissons:
Comte de, French commander; I. 331, 332, 475; II. 287.
—— —— death of; II. 289.
Soldiers, illegal billeting of; I. 359.
Sole, co. Gloucester; I. 20.
Solicitor-General:
(1628); I. 351. See also Shilton, Richard.
(1635); II. 81.
Somercotes; I. 20.
Somers:
John, Lord, Lord Chancellor; II. 411, 427, 428, 444; III. 161.
—— —— acquittal of; II. 429.
Somerset. See Seymour; Carr, Robert.
Elizabeth, Duchess of Somerset (temp. Anne), letter from; III. 181.
Sir Thomas, Viscount Cashel, letters from; II. 218, 238.
Edward, Earl of Worcester, Lord Privy Seal; I. 81, 92, 392.
Henry, 5th Earl of Worcester, letter to; II. 101.
Lord Herbert; II. 101.
House, Strand; I. 326, 464; II. 337, 338; III. 117, 185.
—— marriage of Lord Roxburgh and Lady Jane Drummond at (1614); I. 80, 82, 87.
shire, recruits from; I. 301.
—— sheriff of; II. 74.
Somershall; II. 13, 18.
Somes, Alderman; II. 295.
Somme, the; II. 127.
Somner, John, letter from; II. 350.
Sondes, Sir Richard; I. 212.
Sonne, the ship; I. 13.
Sophia Dorothea, Electress of Hanover; II. 404.
Sorbonne, the; I. 377.
Sore, Walter; III. 138.
Sorocol, Mr.; III. 60.
Sotchill, Anthony; I. 3.
Soubise, M. de; I. 135, 137, 203, 231, 235, 248–250, 255, 364, 377, 407.
takes refuge in England (1625); I. 216. designs against; I. 204, 205.
letters from; I. 222, 261; II. 100.
letter to; I. 260.
ships of; I. 240, 266, 335.
Soubise, M. de—cont.
at Falmouth; I. 215.
assailed by the French; I. 236.
at Plymouth; I. 254.
South:
Mr., of Keelbie; I. 4.
Captain; II. 351, 355.
Mrs.; II. 446.
Cape; I. 238.
Southampton; I. 210, 317, 346, 347; II. 117, 138.
letters dated; I. 166, 212, 302, 344, 345, 347, 348, 356, 361.
projected attack on (1639); II. 219.
soldiers at; I. 320.
Earl of. See Wriothesley.
Lord (1624); I. 157, 259.
House, Holborn; II. 196.
South Duke, Flanders; II. 401.
Southern, Mr., playwright; II. 360.
South Foreland; II. 7.
Southlake; I. 277.
Southsea Castle, accidental burning of (1627); I. 299, 301.
Southwark:
fairs in, prohibited (1636); II. 129.
gaol of, White Lion; III. 152.
Southwarth, John, Gatehouse prisoner; III. 152.
Southwell:
Colonel; III. 73.
Mr.; III. 114, 116, 120, 121.
Viscount, son-in-law of V.-C. Coke, letters from; III. 131, 177.
prebends of; I. 446.
Southwick:
letters dated; I. 308, 309, 361, 364–366.
Charles I. and Buckingham at; I. 362.
Sovereign, the ship; II. 191.
Soy, Comte de; II. 370.
Spa, waters taken by Queen Henrietta Maria; II. 289.
Spain, Spaniards, Spanish; I. 2, 9, 46, 271; II. 275.
agents of England in; II. 175.
ambassador to, refused by the Emperor the practice of divine service according to the English use (1551); I. 1.
ambassador from, required by the Emperor to be permitted to use the mass after the Popish manner; I. 1.
ambassador from; I. 403; II. 119, 126, 133, 135.
—— (1625) letter from; I. 242.
—— (1636) illness of; II. 121, 122.
—— at Brussels, Cuena; I. 458.
consulship in; II. 16.
Infanta of; I. 322; II. 61, 288.
—— desires an accommodation with Great Britain; I. 321.
King of (1588); I. 9.
—— (1599); I. 24, 25.
—— (1616) breaks the treaty of Aste; I. 92.

Spain, King of—cont.
—— (1627) sickness of; I. 319.
—— (1632) his effigy in Brussels pulled down; I. 463.
—— (1642) weary of the charge of Flanders; II. 328; III. 148.
—— (1698) fits of; II. 375.
—— (1700) consequences of his death; II. 409, 410.
—— (1724) burial of; III. 124.
expeditions against; I. 145–147, 216, 221, 261, 296, 317. journey of Earl of Carbery to; I. 369.
general misery in (1632); I. 465.
horses to be got from; I. 147.
news from; I. 304.
nobility of, their revenues; I. 2.
preparations in, for invading England; I. 94, 265–267, 309.
—— for war with France; II. 209, 313.
proposal for diminishing the greatness of; I. 254.
peace with; I. 381, 388, 427. relations of, to the Low Countries; I. 411.
regency of, and Louis XIV. (1701); II. 416.
the succession in; II. 392, 418, 420; III. 176.
—— treaty for; II. 400, 402.
voyage to, narrative of (1636); II. 121. war with; I. 295.
Spaniards:
landing at Milford of (1601); I. 30.
capture of; II. 243.
Spanish:
Armado of 1639; II. 248. aid to the rebels in Ireland (1602); I. 33.
fleet, instructions for finding; I. 201.
—— to be followed by Drake; I. 13.
—— treasure ships in the Channel (1599); I. 23.
—— plate fleet; I. 239.
Inquisition; I. 372. islands in the Mediterranean; II. 154.
marriage, Prince Charles and the Infanta; I. 94, 116, 134, 143, 146, 154, 161.
—— libel on the Duke of Buckingham; I. 164.
merchants; II. 436.
money; II. 134.
navy, admiral and vice-admiral of; II. 99, 248.
ships; I. 23, 35, 36, 237, 238, 365, 381, 444, 467.
—— stay of; I. 122, 178, 233, 334, 379.
—— taken as prize; I. 252, 288, 332.
—— at Dunkirk; II. 166.
tobacco, taken as prize; I. 250.
Spanish—cont.
tourney, great expense of; I. 198.
trade, merchants engaged in; I. 130. wools; I. 167.
Spalato, archbishop of; I. 94.
Spalding; I. 277.
powder and match to be provided by (1598); I. 21.
Spaldwick Manor, Hunts; I. 184.
Spanby Hedge; II. 352.
Sparke, Robert, letter from; I. 480.
Spateman, Mr., of Alfreton; III. 12, 14, 15, 21, 29, 161.
Speed:
Adolphus, letter from; II. 42.
George, of Fleet Street; II. 43.
Speedwell, the ship; I. 104, 105, 116, 167, 178, 175; III. 179.
Spence, Spens:
Sir James; I. 310.
Thomas, to be serjeant-at-arms of the House of Commons; III. 118.
Spencer:
Mr.; I. 350, 352; II. 41, 311.
Arnold, grants to; II. 196.
Henry, third Baron, Earl of Sunderland, killed at Newbury (1643); II. 337; III. 141.
Sir James, ambassador to the King of Sweden; I. 309.
Jane; III. 113.
John, petition of; I. 290.
—— gunner in the Tower; II. 234, 235.
Robert, first Baron (1603); I. 44.
Spendlove:
John, of Hallestroppe; I. 6.
—— prebendary of Norwich, letter from; I. 465.
Speranza, the ship; I. 166.
Spicer:
Alexander, letters from; I. 361, 362; II. 106.
Mr. Dean, death of; II. 193.
W.; III. 138, 140.
Spiller, Sir Henry; II. 265.
Spilsby, powder and match to be provided by (1598); I. 22.
Spinola:
Sir Francis, of Genoa; I. 63, 113, 156, 157, 160, 169, 200, 211, 215, 217, 317, 403; II. 71.
—— banqueted by the city of Brussels; I. 336.
—— letter to; I. 179.
Marquis, the younger; II. 168, 248.
Spithead; I. 385; II. 435; III. 81.
Spittle, Spittal, Lincolnshire; I. 3, 11.
Splinter, the, Dunkirk; I. 236; II. 107, 166.
Spotswood, Sir Robert, President of the Court of Justice, Scotland; III. 151.
Spralin, Marquis; II. 287.
Sprat, —; I. 419.
Sprocke, —; II. 287.
Sprotborough, letter dated; II. 414.
Sprusen, Hild., letter from; I. 261.

Spruser, Mr., his note for deals; I. 120.
Spry, Colonel; I. 310.
Spurn Head; I. 253.
Spurway, Thomas, letter from; I. 279.
Spy, the ship; I. 13, 42; II. 110.
Squebb, Squibb:
Mr.; I. 462.
Arthur, teller in the Exchequer; I. 397.
Captain, letter from; I. 316.
Stables, Thomas; III. 138.
Stade, Staden; I. 15, 38, 308, 333, 336, 345, 384, 448.
Stafford; II. 331, 332, 447.
Anthony and Thomas; II. 454.
Staines; II. 337.
Stamford; I. 11; II. 9, 111, 162.
powder and match to be provided by (1598); I. 21.
Earl of. See Grey.
Standish, Captain; I. 312.
Stanford, Mr.; II. 56.
John, son of William; II. 103.
Lord. See Grey.
Stanhope:
Lieutenant; III. 179.
Lord (1627); I. 312.
Lord (1716); III. 116, 145, 155, 179.
Mr.; II. 370, 375, 401, 424, 428, 444, 448, 456; III. 23, 53–55, 60, 94.
—— at the Hague; II. 423, 426, 429.
Hon. Alexander; III. 17.
Lady Catharine, afterwards wife of Godfrey Clarke; III. 8, 25, 32, 163, 165.
Charles, Lord, of Harrington, Postmaster-General; I. 383; II. 162, 171; III. 151.
—— —— letter from; I. 147.
C., afterwards Wotton; III. 2, 4, 29.
—— letter from; II. 451.
—— illness of; II. 439.
Elizabeth, Lady; II. 431.
James, of Elvaston, afterwards Baron and Earl (1718); III. 86, 87, 89.
—— —— letter to; III. 117.
Sir John, of Harrington, Privy Councillor and Vice-Chamberlain (1601); I. 30, 37.
Kate, cousin of Vice-Chamberlain Coke; III. 23.
Lady Mary, afterwards wife of V.-C. Coke; II. 373, 374.
P., letter from; II. 205.
Philip, afterwards first Earl of Chesterfield (1628–1656); I. 454.
—— —— letter from; I. 88.
—— second Earl of Chesterfield (1656–1713); II. 303, 374, 381, 408, 431; III. 8, 58, 59, 73, 82, 92, 94, 164, 168, 173.
—— —— buys the Lanfranc picture; III. 21.
—— —— letters from; II. 399, 402, 403, 406, 411, 413, 427, 437, 439, 440; III. 1, 7, 9, 17, 25, 26, 29, 34, 37, 38, 72.
—— —— letters to; III. 10, 160.
Stanhope—cont.
Philip, Lord, brother of Lady Mary Coke, afterwards third Earl of Chesterfield (1713–1726); II. 402, 414, 416, 417, 431; III. 28, 80, 168, 173.
—— —— deafness of; III. 22, 73.
—— —— letters from; II. 381, 400, 419–424, 446, 451; III. 21–23, 58.
—— —— letter to; II. 422.
Stanley:
Grange, Appletree; I. 227.
Mr.; I. 435; II. 436.
Edward, Earl of Derby (1551); I. 1.
Sir Guy; II. 248.
James, Lord Strange; II. 310, 313, 323; III. 7, 153.
—— —— letters from; II. 31, 97.
—— —— letter to; II. 29.
John, of Stinford (1587); I. 5.
Sir John; III. 118.
—— letters from; III. 78, 181, 182, 184–186.
M., chaplain to Anne, Princess of Denmark (1688); III. 157.
Sir Thomas, knighted at Warsop (1603); I. 43.
William, Earl of Derby, chamberlain of Chester; II. 24, 32, 52, 58, 60, 153.
—— —— letter from; II. 31.
—— —— letter to; II. 29.
Stanmore, near Edgware; II. 398, 400.
Stannard, William, petition of; I. 197.
Stanton:
by Bridge, letters dated; II. 390, 409.
Mr., of St. John's, Cambridge; I. 19.
Woods; I. 447.
Stanwell, letters dated; II. 139, 145.
Stanwick, Northamptonshire; I. 476.
Stapenhill; II. 449, 450.
Stapleford; II. 345.
Staple Inn; II. 250.
Staplers' Company, their institution; I. 160.
Staples, Sir Thomas; I. 463.
Stapleton:
Edward; I. 164.
Elizabeth, letter from; I. 156.
Gilbert, letter from; II. 10.
M., Superior of the Jesuits; I. 342.
Sir Philip; II. 319, 335.
Star:
the ship; I. 214.
—— of Amsterdam; I. 252.
—— of Schiedam; I. 218.
Starch, the business about; II. 174.
Star Chamber, the; I. 235, 452, 473; II. 15, 53, 57, 98. cases in; I. 87; II. 43.
censures and decrees of; I. 153, 381, 448; II. 2, 8, 11, 47, 126.
defaulters in; II. 93.
documents dated from; I. 453, 454.
fines; I. 158, 295; II. 99, 172.

Star Chamber, the—cont.
proceedings; I. 55, 242, 327, 466; II. 17, 27, 36, 163, 164.
—— against Herefordshire recusants; I. 62.
—— against Henry Alleyn; I. 459.
—— touching Malvern Chace; I. 457.
—— complaints of; II. 262.
prosecutions directed to be made; I. 390; III. 154.
bishops excluded from voting in; II. 284.
abolition of; II. 288.
Starkey, Ralph, petition of; III. 150.
Start Point; III. 46.
Start, William, letter from; I. 19, 23.
States General, the; I. 255; II. 189; III. 26. See also Holland.
letter from; II. 109.
ambassador of, remonstrance by; I. 225.
army defeated; II. 185.
grievances of the Merchant Adventurers against; II. 150. levies resolved on by; II. 249.
propositions to; II. 244.
Statham:
Mr.; II. 445; III. 22, 89, 93, 138.
J., letter from; III. 168.
Stationers' Company, London, and Cambridge University, dispute between; I. 381.
Staunton; II. 368; III. 87.
letters dated; II. 365, 380, 381.
Staveley:
Christopher, letter from; III. 162.
Francis, letter from; II. 9.
Stawel, William, Lord; III. 33. See also Stowell.
Stayley, Mr.; II. 445.
Staynsby, Louth sessions; I. 6.
Steedman, —, recusant; I. 228.
Steelyard, the, in London; I. 41, 42, 45.
Steeple Colehills; II. 71.
Steinheim, letter dated; III. 40.
Stelcius, Charles, letter from; I. 311.
Stenson; III. 91.
Stephens:
Mrs.; III. 186.
Miss, married to Mr. Philipps; II. 417.
Violet; III. 146.
Stevens, Thomas; I. 198.
Stepney; I. 171, 330.
Stern; I. 389.
Sterndale, Mr.; III. 27.
Stevenson:
Alexander; I. 164.
Richard, of Yarmouth, examination of; II. 181, 183.
Robert, preacher at Yarmouth; II. 21.
Thomas, letter to; I. 156, 179.
Steward. See also Stuart.
Alexander, carver to James I.; I. 199.
—— letter from; I. 472.
—— petition of; III. 150.
Captain (Francis?); I. 441, 456; II. 119, 127, 133, 134, 141, 142.
Sir Francis, Captain of the Nonsuch; I. 132–134, 136, 139, 206, 208, 210, 213, 222, 316.
—— his commission to act as Vice-Admiral; I. 114.
—— journal of; II. 121.
—— letters from; I. 139, 201, 204, 206, 209.
—— prize ships of; I. 137.
—— ships of; I. 150, 156, 157.
Lady Elizabeth, her marriage with Lord Maltravers' son; I. 262.
N., letter from; I. 461.
Sir Robert, relation of; II. 298–301.
Sir William; II. 210, 298.
Captain W.; II. 125.
—— letters from; II. 120, 125.
Stiggins, Richard; I. 213.
Stiles, Sir Humphrey; I. 134, 137.
Stinford, Horncastle sessions; I. 5.
Stirling; II. 8, 25.
proclamation of Charles I. at; II. 207.
Stirumb, Count of; I. 391.
Stiston, letter dated; I. 47.
Stoade-on-the-Elbe; I. 298; II. 28. See also Stade.
Stock, John, letter from; I. 67.
Stockdale, Mr.; I. 268; II. 15, 272.
Stocker:
Anthony, memorial of; III. 145.
W., account of; III. 169.
Stockwith; III. 9.
Stoke, house of Sir Edward Coke at; II. 268.
Stokes Bay; I. 146, 207, 218, 325, 344, 373, 381, 409.
letters dated; I. 269, 319, 325.
ships in; I. 329.
Stolhoven; III. 37.
Stone:
Nicholas, petition; I. 128.
Samuel, of Stenson; II. 451.
Stonedish Moreton, Gloucestershire; I. 40.
Stonehouse:
Frank; II. 410.
J.; II. 361.
Stott, Gilbert, warrant to; II. 16.
Stour, the, Essex; II. 196.
Stourton, Edward; I. 296.
Stow, John, his "Survey of London" censured; II. 38.
Stowell, Sir John, M.P.; II. 311. See also Stawell.
Stowood Forest; I. 439, 446, 447; II. 4.
Strabane Castle; II. 299.
Stradling:
Captain Henry; I. 445; II. 134, 318, 321.
—— letter from; I. 454.

Strafford. See Wentworth.
Stralsund, Pomerania; I. 437.
Strandt Island; I. 365.
Strangesor, Olef; I. 281.
Strangeways:
Captain; II. 252.
Sir John; I. 305; II. 81, 83, 86, 89, 107, 263, 272, 274, 294, 295, 322.
—— letter from; II. 97.
—— withdrawal of; II. 279.
Strasburg; II. 44, 115.
Stratford-at-Bŏw, meeting of Charles I. and Queen Henrietta Maria at; II. 26.
William; III. 49, 54.
—— letters from; III. 30, 33, 39, 43, 46, 49, 62, 63, 65, 71, 81, 109, 166.
Stratherne, Mr.; II. 219.
Strathmore, Earl of. See Lyon, John.
Straton, Israel; II. 353.
Street, William, of Ashover; III. 59, 187.
Streethay:
John, cousin of the Cokes; I. 92; II. 38, 77, 102, 146, 175, 182, 183, 197, 211, 248, 250, 281, 291; III. 133.
—— letters from; I. 35, 47.
Strensham, letter dated; II. 453.
Stretton:
Manor, co. Hereford; I. 40; II. 396, 424.
Mr., lessee of the Duchy of Lancaster; I. 149.
Stretch, Nicholas; I. 303.
Strickland, Robert, letter from; II. 208.
Strode:
Sir Richard, letter from; I. 305.
Sir William; I. 190.
—— letters from; I. 275, 276.
Strong, John, paymaster of the Posts; I. 148.
Stroud:
Mr.; I. 110; II. 115, 324, 373–375.
Sir George; II. 311.
Sir William; I. 222.
Stuart. See also Steward.
Lady Arabella (1607); I. 63.
Archibald; II. 162.
Frances, Dowager Duchess of Richmond; I. 267.
—— letters to (from Charles I.); II. 25, 42.
James, Duke of Lennox; I. 269, 409; II. 42, 99.
—— Duke of Richmond, made Lord Steward; II. 296, 298.
John, Earl of Traquair, Lord High Treasurer of Scotland; II. 268.
—— —— Commissioner for the Assembly; II. 207, 239, 290, 306.
Stubbs, Ottewell, mercer of Newcastle-under-Lyne; I. 169.
Stuckley, Sir Lewis, committed to the Gatehouse for clipping gold; I. 102, 103.
Studd, Sir Edward, death at Bergen-op-Zoom; I. 57.
Studwell, Sir Francis; I. 220.
Sturt, J., death of; I. 195.
Stuttgardt, entertainment of Marlborough at; III. 44.
Style, R., petition; I. 128.
Styles:
Mr.; I. 219.
Captain, married to Morris Abbot's daughter; II. 20.
Suabia, forces to be raised in; I. 338.
Subpœna Office, fees of; I. 464.
Subsidies; I. 164, 280. disputes touching; I. 345, 350.
Suckley, Worcestershire; III. 66.
Suckling:
Sir John; I. 269; II. 67, 285.
—— flight of; II. 282, 283.
Lady, widow of Sir John, petition of; I. 302.
Suder, John, to be Chancellor of the Cheque; I. 126.
Suffolk; II. 64, 100, 107.
sheriff of; II. 49.
Earl of. See also Howard, Thomas and Henry.
—— (1605); I. 52–54, 142, 177.
—— (1625) petition of; I. 197, 233.
—— (1714) Lord Chamberlain; III. 110, 117.
House, Strand, bequeathed to the Earl of Suffolk; I. 87; II. 99.
—— letter dated; II. 176.
Sugnell, letter dated; II. 103.
Sulley, Captain; III. 49.
Summer Islands, the plantations in; I. 250.
Sumpter, Robert, mayor of Norwich, letter from; II. 182.
Sunderland, Earls of. See Scrope and Spencer.
Surat; I. 447.
pestilence in (1632); I. 474.
ships from; I. 113.
Surgeons' Hall. See Barber Surgeons.
Surley, Mr.; III. 87, 99.
Surrey justices refuse to levy carriages for timber at Dorking; I. 220.
Susan, the ship; I. 137, 139.
Susan and Ellen, the ship; I. 269.
Sussex; II. 93.
billeting of soldiers in; I. 360.
timber; I. 219.
Earl of (1626); I. 288.
Sutbury; II. 407.
Sutendal, letter dated; III. 16.
Sutherland, Earl of (1716); III. 117.
Sutton; I. 43; II. 23.
letters dated; I. 79, 83, 93; II. 441, 442.
Mr.; I. 30; II. 309, 346.
—— of King's College, proctor at Cambridge; I. 19.
Benjamin; II. 352.
—— letter from; III. 180.
John; II. 354.
Joseph; II. 353.
Nicholas, of Willerton; I. 3.
Robert, Lord Lexington (1668–1723); II. 394.
Sir Robert; III. 122.

Sutton's Hospital; I. 197; II. 152, 281, 284.
Swaine, Swayne:
Mr.; I. 297, 385; II. 354, 355.
John, officer of Sir F. Greville; I. 59, 69.
Swallow, the ship; I. 13; II. 102, 135, 148, 191, 193, 227.
Swan:
the ship; I. 435.
Richard, servant of William Dadds; II. 107.
Sir Thomas; II. 185.
Swarkeston; I. 158, 181, 355, 356; II. 306, 342, 390; III. 81, 85-87, 96.
Bridge; II. 163, 363.
Club, revival of; III. 171.
Swaton Common, fight at (1689); II. 352.
Swean, Thomas; II. 353.
Sweden; I. 20, 398, 438; II. 13, 87, 96, 195.
King of; I. 234, 310, 326, 379, 380, 395, 408, 410, 438, 441, 456, 458, 462, 466, 475; II. 42, 71.
—— besieges Riga (1621); I. 113.
—— Gustavus Adolphus, relieves Narva (1700); II. 412, 414.
—— ambassador of, at Southampton; I. 211.
—— ambassador to, charges of; II. 9.
and France, alliance between; II. 115. victory over Denmark; II. 291, 342. and the Imperialist troops, battle between; II. 287, 288.
ships of; I. 331.
Sweng, Mr.; III. 129.
Swerius, a Dutchman; II. 377.
Swetenham, Mr., a barrister; III. 8.
Swift:
Mr.; I. 32.
—— witch of Wigan; II. 80.
Sir Francis; I. 97.
Lady; I. 97.
Godfrey, of Brampton; III. 141.
Richard, letter from; I. 226.
Swiftsure, the ship; I. 13, 32, 116, 159, 192, 234, 249, 406, 412; II. 78.
Swinburn, T., letter from; II. 128.
Swindell:
M ; II. 349.
—— of Tonge; III. 98.
Swinfen, Mr.; II. 447. See also Sinfin.
Swithland, Leicestershire; II. 134, 159, 308, 329, 339.
Switzerland:
diet of Protestant cantons and cities of; I. 338.
agent for. See Fleming, Oliver.
Switzers; I. 338, 342.
Swynton, Thomas, of Swynton; I. 3.
Sydney:
Lord (1605); I. 55.
Henry, Earl of Romney (1694–1704), groom of the Stole, death; III. 33, 34.
Sir Henry; I. 2, 39.
Sir Philip, his ensign bearer at Zutphen; I. 17.
Robert, Earl of Leicester; II. 141, 175, 190, 221, 223, 238.
—— Lord Deputy of Ireland; II. 285–290, 292, 294, 319.
—— letters from; II. 78, 213.
Sye, James, letter from; II. 244.
Symcott, William; I. 6.
Symonds, —; II. 176.
Sysonby, near Melton Mowbray; III. 57.

T.

Taaffe:
Francis, third Earl of Carlingford, Count of the German Empire; II. 425.
Count (1632); I. 481.
—— Theobald, letter from; III. 180.
Tabarea; I. 161.
Tacey, Joseph; II. 61.
Tadcaster, the fight at; II. 328.
Tadousac; I. 375–377.
Tailors, Company of, of Oxford, charter for; I. 393.
Talbois, Robert, to be keeper of Richmond bowling-green; I. 199.
Talbot:
Elizabeth, Countess of Shrewsbury (1618); I. 100.
—— sponsor by proxy to Lord Arundel's son (1607); I. 63.
Francis, eighth Earl of Shrewsbury (1551); I. 1.
Gilbert, tenth Earl of Shrewsbury (1601), made a Privy Councillor; I. 30; III. 132.
—— his house in Broad Street; I. 23.
—— entertains the young Duke at Worksop; I. 50.
—— debts paid by; I. 69.
—— evil lodging of his wife; I. 80, 81.
—— letters from; I. 46, 77, 78, 80.
Charles, first Duke of Shrewsbury; III. 12, 97–99, 116.
—— suspected of Jacobite designs (1700); II. 412.
—— made a K.G. (1701); II. 430.
John; I. 482.
Mary, Countess of Shrewsbury, letter from (1625); I. 179.
Robert; I. 482.

Tallard, Marshal; II. 411; III. 80, 167, 168, 171.
—— taken prisoner at Blenheim; III. 39–42.
—— letter from; III. 164.
—— letter to; III. 164, 165.
Tallaton rectory, Devon; I. 158.
Tamworth; II. 447.
Tamworthy, Mrs., a recusant; I. 227.
Tanner, Mr.; I. 274.
Tarlton, Mr.; II. 10.
Tarras; I. 170.
Tate:
Captain Henry; III. 96.
—— letters from; II. 401, 412, 444.
Tatler, the; III. 83.
Tattershall, powder and match to be provided by (1598); I. 22.
Tatton, Colonel; III. 48.
Tatum, Mr.; III. 70.
Taunton, incorporation of; I. 171, 466.
Tavenor, Mr.; II. 87.
Tavern licences, revenue from; 294.
Taverner, E., letter from; II. 215.
Taxis, Countess; II. 6.
Taylor:
Mr.; II. 89, 224, 354, 457.
E.; I. 195.
Captain; I. 429.
John; II. 230.
Joseph, receipt by; I. 280.
Roger; III. 170.
Teage:
John; III. 107.
Roger; III. 107.
—— letters from; III. 100–102.
Teelbie, Caistor sessions; I. 4.
Telfate; II. 228.
Tempest:
Sir Francis; II. 370.
Thomas, letter from; II. 128.
Temple, the; I. 410; III. 146.
gentlemen of, affront the Lord Mayor (1629); I. 389.
Stairs; I. 389.
Mr.; I. 485.
—— death of; I. 45.
—— drowning of; II. 355.
—— regiment of; III. 72.
—— a surveyor; I. 337.
James; I. 58.
Sir John; II. 285, 288.
—— letter from; II. 286.
Thomas; II. 4.
Sir William, provost of Trinity College, Dublin, and secretary to the Earl of Essex; II. 4.
Tennant, William, letter from; II. 108.
Terceira, Terceras, the (islands); I. 17, 398; II. 252.
Termonfecken, letters dated; I. 358, 438, 439.
Terrell, Sir Robert; II. 375.
Terrett, Mr. Robert, of Kettleby; I. 303.
Terrie, Terry:
Mr., lends money to Sir F. Grevyll; I. 69.
John, of Canning Street; II. 84.
Terroa, Portugal, letter dated; III. 101.
Tetuan; I. 115.
Teviotdale, sheriff of; II. 218. See also Douglas, Sir Wm.
Tewkesbury; I. 414; II. 337.
Texel, the, Holland; I. 320, 326, 330, 336, 366, 433, 436, 443; III. 147.
—— letter dated; I. 324.
Teynham, Lord (1716); III. 117.
Thacker:
Mr., Secretary Coke's servant; I. 47, 123, 153, 186, 312, 354.
—— death of; I. 356, 357, 368.
—— II. 439; III. 89, 98.
Francis, letter to; II. 344.
Gilbert; II. 397.
—— letters from; I. 214, 230, 348.
Robert, yeoman of the tilt staves; I. 198.
——, imprisonment of; I. 56.
Thame; I. 39.
Thames, the; I. 419, 422.
anchorage of ships in, a perquisite of the Lord High Admiral; I. 379.
proposed cleansing of; II. 189.
ships in; I. 233, 273, 356.
Thanet:
Lord (1643), escape of; II. 329.
—— (1716); III. 116.
Theddlethorpe, Louth sessions; I. 6.
Thelwell, Sir Euball; I. 153.
Theobalds; II. 11, 105, 109, 169, 291.
Charles I. hunts at; I. 223, 235, 392.
the Court at; I. 298; II. 54.
letters dated; I. 166, 187, 310, 321, 323, 408, 416; II. 9.
Park, works at; I. 115.
pools at, privy seal for storing fish in; I. 158.
Thewe, Thomas, of Hull; I. 180.
Thierheim, Lieut.-General; III. 44.
Thimelby:
John, recusant; I. 8, 9.
Stephen, recusant; I. 3.
Thionville, the disaster at; II. 232.
Tholone, Comte de, French admiral; III. 38.
Thomas:
Court near Dublin, letter dated; I. 390.
and Catharine, the ship; III. 81.
Mr.; III. 117, 185.
Sir Anthony; I. 148; II. 68, 141.
David, parson, letter from; III. 69.
Joan, mother of Sir Anthony; I. 148.
John, linen draper of Bristol; I. 99.
William, letter from; III. 118.
Thomond:
Lord of (1627); I. 306.
—— (1634); II. 64.
—— letter from; II. 59.
Thompson, Thomson, Tomson:
Mr.; I. 177, 340, 354, 406, 407; II. 353, 430.
—— postmaster of Wetherby; II. 164.
—— tenant of Secretary Coke; II. 52.

Thompson, Thomson, Tomson—cont.
Edward, elected M.P. for York (Dec. 1700); II. 414.
John; II. 30.
Sir John, Commissioner of the Admiralty, Baron Haversham; II. 438, 439, 444.
Lawrence; II. 152.
Thomas, bailiff of Yarmouth, letter from; I. 480.
Sir William; III. 116.
Thorigny; I. 343.
Thorn:
George; I. 35.
Robert; I. 388.
Thomas; I. 5.
Thornborough, John, bishop of Worcester, letter from; I. 479.
Thornby church, dispute as to seats in; II. 357.
Thorndike, Nicholas, of Greenfield; I. 6.
Thornell, Sir Timothy; I. 212.
Thorney; I. 277.
Woods; II. 446.
Sir Francis; II. 209.
Thornhill, Mrs.; III. 186.
Thornton:
College, alms-room in; I. 158.
Horncastle sessions; I. 5.
Mrs.; II. 441.
Sir Richard, knighted at Warsop (1603); I. 43.
Thomas; III. 152.
Thorold:
Sir Anthony; I. 7.
—— letters from; I. 8–11, 20.
Markham; I. 185.
Thorpe:
Horncastle sessions; I. 5.
Constantine, letters dated; II. 409; III. 5, 18.
Mr.; II. 445.
—— of Claxbie; I. 6.
Joseph, petition signed by; I. 128.
Thraunton, George, of Caldwell; II. 450.
Throckmorton, Throgmorton:
Sir Arthur; I. 37.
Sir Bainham; II. 109, 225.
Sir John; I. 39.
Sir William; I. 158.
Thrussington, letters dated; I. 285, 312.
Thunger, General, besieges Ulm; III. 43, 44.
Thurgood, Serjeant; II. 187.
Thurland, Mr.; I. 2.
Thurleton, letter dated; II. 181.
Thurston, James, letter from; I. 41.
Thurveston; I. 43.
Thwaite, —, of the Fountain in the Strand; III. 168.
Thynne:
Sir Thomas, audience with Charles I.; I. 351.
—— dispute as to the testament of (1639); II. 240.
—— Viscount Weymouth (1682–1714); II. 447; III. 34.
Tichborne:
Mr.; II. 47.
Sir Benjamin; I. 308.
Sir Henry; I. 437.
Sir Richard; I. 438.
Tickenhall, Ticknall; II. 257, 258; III. 54, 96.
letters dated; I. 417, 420, 425.
Tideswell:
Cross; II. 62.
letter dated; II. 454.
Tidsdale Forest, Durham; I. 294.
Tiger, the ship; I. 13, 316.
Tilbury; I. 331.
fort at; I. 417.
letter dated; II. 118.
Hope; I. 211, 214, 304, 308; II. 50, 114.
—— letter dated; II. 35.
the ship; III. 32.
Tilenus; II. 63.
Till; II. 249.
Tilliers, Comte de; I. 400, 401, 407.
Tillington; I. 15, 19, 20, 37, 51, 52.
Tilly, the Imperialist general; I. 172, 306, 309, 336, 380, 410, 441.
Tilson, Christopher, letter from; III. 117.
Tilton; II. 56.
Tiluss, Madame; II. 447.
Timbury coal mines, exhaustion of; I. 71.
Tin in Cornwall, state of; I. 86.
Tinker, Mr.; I. 404.
Tipper, Robert, his offer to drain the fens; I. 277, 294.
Tirlemont; III. 71.
Tirley [Preston], letters dated; I. 152, 384, 387.
Tirrell, Tyrrell:
Mrs.; II. 182.
Robert, of Westmeath; II. 90.
Sir Timothy; I. 447.
Tirwhit, Tyrwhit:
Mr.; I. 417, 462.
Edward; I. 5, 6.
Marmaduke; I. 3, 4.
Philip; I. 3, 4.
Robert, petition; III. 150.
Tristram, of Graynesbie; I. 4.
William; I. 4.
Tissington, letter dated; II. 212.
Titchfield:
Hants; II. 90.
—— Charles I. hunts at; I. 308.
Park; II. 77.
Tithes Bill (1702); III. 19, 20.
Tobacco, notices of; I. 250, 294, 454; II. 48, 49, 240.
Toll, Mr.; II. 352, 355.
Tomedarough; II. 132, 156.
Tomkins:
Tom, musical composer to Charles I., grant to; I. 341.
William; II. 117.
Tomolan; II. 132.
Tomrelaun; II. 156.
Tong, George, letter from; II. 128.

Tonnage and poundage, question of; I. 351, 380, 381; II. 313.
Tonstall:
Frederick; II. 252.
Sir John; II. 221.
—— letter from; II. 252.
Toole. See also O'Toole.
Mr.; II. 132, 133.
Barnaby; II. 133.
Brian; II. 133.
Luke; II. 133.
Tooley Park, valuation of; II. 286.
Toon; II. 450.
Toothbie, John; I. 6.
Topcliffe, Richard; I. 3.
Topham:
Anthony, dean of Lincoln; I. 392.
—— chaplain of Charles I., letter from; I. 269, 306.
Richard, letter from; III. 121.
Topsham; I. 201, 213.
letter dated; I. 215.
Torbay; I. 283; II. 5. capture of Dutch ships in; I. 133, 143.
letter dated; I. 418.
proceedings of Nutt, the pirate, at; I. 145.
Torbock, Lady, and Sir Richard Molyneux; I. 148.
Torrington:
Devon; I. 213.
Lady (1697); II. 370.
—— (1716); III. 117.
Tothill Fields:
letter dated; II. 52.
training ground for cavalry (1642); II. 319.
Totnes; I. 276.
letter dated; I. 279.
mayor of, entertains M. Soubise; I. 216.
Totsfield, Mr.; I. 25.
Tottenham:
Sir John Coke's house at; I. 208, 210, 211, 215, 269, 348, 350, 353, 354, 359, 386, 391, 392, 414, 438, 439, 443, 477; II. 15, 56, 85, 140, 146, 176, 206, 240, 286.
letters dated; I. 71, 236, 271, 410; II. 20, 29, 68, 97, 126, 131, 163.
Cross; I. 32, 33, 63, 221, 339; II. 30.
Totton, J., letter from; II. 149.
Toulon; III. 45.
Toulouse, description of (in 1700); II. 398, 399.
Tour, Baron de la; II. 140.
Tourney, Captain; II. 6.
Tours; II. 400, 402.
letter dated; II. 400.
Tower, the; I. 418, 438; II. 32, 50, 222, 291, 294, 337; III. 107, 156.
letters dated; I. 37, 188, 209, 221, 224, 229, 232, 234, 237, 299, 405; II. 8, 313.
armoury at; I. 429.
axe at; II. 267.
Tower, the—cont.
chapel in, crowded daily (1642); II. 313.
committals to; I. 354; II. 255, 263.
discharges from; I. 356; II. 263.
Lieutenants of; I. 94. See also Apsley, Sir Allen.
officers of; II. 258.
ordnance ordered for; II. 234, 235. prisoners in; I. 44, 60, 235, 383; II. 172, 305, 313; III. 149, 153.
recruits billeted in hamlets near; I. 300.
Strafford's imprisonment in; II. 267, 279.
—— plot to rescue; II. 282.
—— execution of; II. 282.
Towerson:
Captain; I. 324.
Roger; I. 151.
William; I. 151, 277.
Towle, Robert; III. 162.
Townerowe, Ralph, letter from; II. 51.
Townsend:
Mr. Justice; I. 100.
Mr.; II. 7.
Ralph, letter from; II. 51.
Sir Robert; II. 9.
Townson, Lord (1698); II. 374.
Towy, the ship; III. 45.
Toyras, M. de; I. 314.
Trade: committee for; II. 270, 271.
with the East Indies; I. 155. foreign; I. 154.
notices of; I. 58, 160, 466.
Trafford; I. 424.
Trained bands; I. 389.
Trankmoore, Mr.; II. 152.
Transylvania; I. 16, 18.
Prince of, besieges Presburg; I. 113.
Trant, Sir John; III. 58.
Traquair, Earl of. See Stuart, John.
Travis, Edmund; I. 270.
Treason statutes cited in Strafford's case; II. 278.
Treasurer, Lord; I. 52, 150, 172. See also Cecil, Wm.; Godolphin, Sidney.
Treasury Chambers, letter dated; III. 117.
Treaty, the Partition; II. 438.
Trebeck, Michael; I. 167.
Treby, Lord Chief Justice, death; II. 411.
Tredagh, siege of; II. 312.
Tredenham:
John, M.P.; II. 428, 436.
Sir Joseph; III. 35, 36.
Tredwen, Henry; III. 107.
Trefusis:
Mr.; I. 225.
John, J.P. for Cornwall; I. 217.
—— letter from; I. 276.
Tregony; III. 107.
Trelawny, Francis; I. 217, 232.
Trembley, M., governor of the Bastille; I. 400.
Tremontane, the ship; I. 13.
Tremouille; I. 18.

Trenchfield, Captain; I. 434.
Trent:
the; II. 180, 383.
Germany; II. 416.
Trentham, Sir Thomas; I. 228.
Treslebris, M., letter from; I. 260.
Treswell:
Mr.; I. 164.
—— his offer for the forest of Dean; I. 294.
—— warrant for; I. 199.
Trevanion:
Captain; III. 30.
Richard, letter from; I. 276.
Trèves; I. 408, 475; III. 61.
Elector of (1704); III. 36.
Trevi, Marquis; III. 120.
Trevor:
Mr.; I. 23, 39, 41; III. 23.
F.; I. 30.
Sir John; I. 18, 31, 39, 53.
—— Baron of the Exchequer; II. 7, 270.
—— Lord Chief Justice; III. 68.
—— Master of the Rolls (1716); III. 116.
Sir Sackville, Admiral of the Fleet; I. 325, 326, 328, 335.
—— letter from; I. 323.
Trewesdale, Mr., of Hunsdon; I. 4.
Trewinnerd, John, letter from; I. 337.
Trial, the ship; I. 330.
Triennial Parliaments; III. 1.
Trierbach; III. 46, 49.
Trigg, Mr.; I. 389.
Trinity College. See also Cambridge, University of, excessive wine drinking in (1615); I. 91.
House; II. 139, 149, 177.
—— masters of; I. 31, 330, 331; II. 1.
—— letter dated; I. 330.
Trionville, siege of; III. 61.
Triumph, the ship; I. 13, 22, 31, 32, 37, 299, 355, 393, 412; II. 118, 135, 136, 139, 141–144.
—— letters dated; I. 434; II. 118, 122, 124, 125, 130, 134, 161–164, 166.
Trott:
Captain; III. 70.
Mr.; II. 445; III. 96.
Jemmy; III. 30, 32.
Captain John, letter from; III. 50.
Troughton, Rev. John, vicar of Melbourn; II. 449, 453; III. 8, 92–96, 98, 172, 174.
—— letter from; II. 450.
Troyes; I. 421, 462.
Truelove, the ship; I. 225, 230, 316.
Truman:
Samuel; II. 350.
Thomas; II. 350.
—— letter from; II. 346.
Trumbull:
Mr.; I. 460; II. 63.
—— letters from; I. 451; II. 53
Sir W.; III. 35, 36.
Truro; I. 218; III. 104.
letter dated from; I. 276.
Trusley (Sir Francis Coke's); I. 114, 236; II. 26, 83, 134; III. 84, 89, 136.
letters dated; I. 19, 28, 35, 43, 47, 54, 59, 64, 66, 70, 86, 111, 148, 168, 227, 276, 283, 413, 459; II. 36, 170, 276, 302, 343.
Tuam, archbishop of. See Vesey.
Tubny Woods; I. 447.
Tuck, auditor, his house at Wormley; I. 116.
Tucker:
Mr., prebendary of Bristol; II. 82.
George; I. 215.
—— letters from; I. 303, 304, 330.
Tufton:
Sir Humphrey; I. 212.
John, Earl of Thanet; II. 48.
Nicholas, J.P.; I. 274.
Sir Nicholas; I. 212.
Tullaghgory; II. 156.
Tunbridge; II. 59, 60.
Lord. See Nassau, William.
Wells; II. 57, 61, 361.
—— letter dated; II. 58.
Tunis; II. 158.
Tunstall, Thomas, alderman of Durham; II. 240.
Turin; I. 394; II. 203; III. 44, 64.
Turk:
the Grand, the Grand Seignior; II. 203, 215.
—— death of (1618); I. 96.
—— descent into Hungary; II. 289.
Turkey; I. 23; II. 296.
Company; I. 213, 336.
ships from; I. 180, 278, 320, 324, 452, 454, 474; II. 5, 72, 117, 127. pirates; I. 260, 457, 477; II. 129, 138, 165, 191, 192.
Turks, the; I. 151, 208, 276, 289, 436; II. 53, 124, 135.
Turkish prisoners at Launceston; I. 273.
Turlogh, co. Mayo; III. 151.
Turly, vicarage of; I. 414.
Turner:
Mr., action against, for false imprisonment; II. 55.
—— cousin of Lady Mary Coke; II. 417, 445, 451; III. 3, 92, 96, 97.
Mrs., of Derby; III. 90.
F., letter from; III. 68.
Francis, bishop of Ely, death of; II. 408.
Hugh; I. 131.
Thomas; I. 40.
William, letters from; II. 447; III. 68.
Turnham Green, Earl of Essex at; II. 327.
Turwin, Robert, letter from; II. 13.
Tutbury; II. 134.
Manor; II. 81.
the Court at (1624); I. 168.
Tutchen, A., letter from; II. 149.
Tuttof, Mr.; I. 5.
Twemlow; II. 396.

Twisden:
Sir Robert; II. 311.
Sir Thomas; III. 60.
Twisleton, Sir George, Bart.; II. 71.
Twist, Dr.; II. 335.
Twittenham, letter dated; I. 283.
Twizel-on-Tweed, letter dated; II. 226.
Twyford, letter dated, &c.; II. 197; III. 84, 171.
Tydey; I. 131.
Tyldesley, Thomas, letters from; II. 40, 44, 68.
Tyller, Count; I. 407. See also Tilliers.
Tyndale, invasion of; II. 218.
Tynemouth fort, to be slighted; II. 194.
Tyres, —; I. 282.
Tyrol; III. 44.
Tyrone:
county; II. 298, 301.
Earl of; I. 33, 458; II. 248.

U.

Udal:
Captain; I. 217.
Sir W.; I. 419.
Ulm; I. 338; III. 37, 42–44, 46.
Ulrich; III. 114.
Ulster; II. 99, 298.
garrisoning of (1638); II. 205.
plantation of; I. 95.
—— by Londoners; I. 413, 416; II. 91, 304, 305.
—— muster master of; I. 96.
royal fishings in; I. 463.
Unicorn, the ship; II. 46, 48, 146.
Uniformity, Statute of, enforced at Leicester (1701); II. 419.
Union, the, of England and Scotland under one king; I. 57, 58.
United States or Provinces. See Holland.
Upnor Castle; I. 13, 18, 30, 100, 219, 279; III. 156.
Upton; II. 343.
Hammond; I. 5.
parsonage; I. 185.
Upward; I. 75.
Urban VIII., Pope:
encyclical of; I. 437.
letter from; II. 20.
Uridge, Richard, vicar of Walton-on-Thames, petition; I. 171.
Usberge, Mr.; I. 458.
Ushant; I. 367, 433; II. 191.
Usher:
Dr. James, archbishop of Armagh; I. 402, 421; II. 106.
—— letters from; I. 260, 351, 438, 439, 448.
Sir William, clerk of the Council, Ireland; I. 260, 473.
Usury, suppression of; I. 93.
Utrecht, the peace of, order for proclaiming; III. 106.
Uttoxeter; II. 306.
Uvedall, Sir Wm., Treasurer of the Chamber; I. 385, 407; II. 216; III. 153.
Uxbridge; II. 320.

V.

Vachell:
Colonel; III. 73.
Sir Thomas; I. 27.
Vagrants' Bill, notices of; II. 395, 397.
Valenciennes, letter dated; I. 471.
Valentia; II. 248; III. 73.
isle of; I. 477.
Viscount; I. 201.
Vallentine, Benjamin; I. 383.
Valerien, M.; I. 334.
Valteline, the; I. 162, 254.
Vandenberg, Van den Berghe:
Count Henry; I. 463, 471.
—— commander of the Spaniards; I. 391.
Van der Base, Elias; II. 90.
Vanderber, Frederick; I. 44.
Van der Broeck, M.; II. 100, 101.
Vanderesch, Mr., his book to be answered by H. Cartwright (1705); III. 57.
Vanderneth, C.; III. 109.
Vandyck, M., letter from; II. 114.
Vandyke portraits; III. 121.
Van Dorpe, Admiral (Dutch); II. 99.
Vane:
Colonel; II. 247.
Sir Henry, ambassador to the States (Low Countries); I. 137, 139, 386, 388, 411, 417, 457, 475; II. 15.
—— bills of; I. 424.
—— Comptroller of H.M. Household; II. 31, 32, 166, 194, 208, 210, 233, 234, 264.
—— Treasurer of H.M. Household; II. 268, 269, 274, 284, 303, 475.
—— letters from; I. 404, 440; II. 26, 128.
—— letters to; II. 229, 231, 233.
—— Principal Secretary of State in succession to Sir John Coke; II. 251.
—— sons of; II. 292.
—— his testimony against Strafford; II. 279, 280.
Vanelli, Mr.; II. 186.
Vangalen, John, captain of a Dutch ship; II. 89, 90, 119.
Vangirard, Delannoy, letter from; II. 112.

Vanguard, the, H.M.S.; I. 13, 39, 41, 116, 192, 200, 204, 207, 214, 240, 302, 304, 307, 347, 348; II. 12, 161.
—— letters dated; I. 203, 349; II. 101, 102, 106.
Van Homrigh, Mr., death of; III. 20.
Vanlore, Sir Peter; I. 255; II. 67.
Vannalli, Sieur Laurent; II. 167.
Van Reckteren, J., deputy of the States; I. 327.
Vardugals (farthingales); I. 58.
Vartry (Feartry), the:
co. Wicklow; II. 124, 132, 133, 148, 247, 253, 295.
—— land granted to Secretary Coke; II. 152, 156, 157, 171.
—— inquisition as to; II. 111, 114.
Vasquez, Don Jean; I. 404.
Vaughan:
Mr.; I. 383.
—— muster master of Devon; II. 44.
Captain; I. 18.
John, Lord, of the Adventure; I. 137.
—— letter from; I. 170.
Sir John; I. 450.
—— Earl of Carbery, letter from; I. 369.
Sir Robert, will of, notes of an argument thereon; III. 149.
Thomas, letter from; I. 414.
Captain Thomas; I. 141.
—— letter from; I. 196.
Vause, Mrs., recusant; I. 227.
Vaux:
Lord; I. 235.
—— and Musgrave, trial between; II. 95.
Vavasour:
Colonel; II. 87.
William, letter from; II. 105.
Vendome, Duc de; II. 328; III. 74.
Venette; II. 140.
Venice; I. 154, 458; II. 70, 73, 229; III. 127, 128. letters dated, news from; I. 18, 26, 46; III. 128–130.
ambassador from; I. 253, 313, 317, 378, 423; II. 165, 188.
—— letter to; II. 41.
—— quarrel in the streets between his servant and Londoners; II. 87–91.
ambassador to. See Wake, Sir Isaac; Fielding, Basil, Lord. carnival at (1726); III. 130.
Doge of, draft letter from Charles I. to; I. 330.
Duke of; II. 203.
gazettes of; I. 104.
negotiations with; II. 438.
republic of, bound to pay Zurich and Berne 4,000 ducats a month in war; I. 338.
ships of; I. 226.
St. Mark's; III. 130.
Venloo; I. 465. taken by the Prince of Orange; I. 461. surrender of; III. 16.
Venn:
John, M.P. for the city of London (1640); II. 295.
—— commands Windsor for the Parliament; II. 325.
Verburgh or Conradus, Heer; II. 250.
Vercelini, Francesco; I. 97.
Vere:
General; I. 126, 319.
Lady; I. 323; II. 128.
Aubrey de, Earl of Oxford (1632–1702); III. 13.
Sir Edward, slain at Wessel; I. 391.
Sir Francis, governor at the Brill; I. 30, 36, 57, 58.
—— —— of Portsmouth; I. 61.
Henry de, Earl of Oxford, Admiral; I. 114.
Sir Horace; I. 43, 68.
—— General of the British forces in the Palatinate; I. 118.
Horace, Lord, of Tilbury, Master of the Ordnance; I. 383, 454; II. 20, 34, 44.
—— —— letters from; II. 6, 15.
Verge, the, judge of; I. 194.
Vermuyden, Sir Cornelius; I. 457; II. 17, 20, 29; III. 149.
Vernacks Draining; II. 127.
Vernatt, Sir Phillibert, letters, &c.; II. 119; III. 149.
Verney:
Mr.; I. 32, 59, 283, 308, 393; II. 440; III. 132.
Sir Edmund; II. 210, 240.
George; I. 211.
—— letters from; I. 420; II. 54, 60, 61, 84.
Greville; I. 32, 38, 47, 63, 68.
—— letters from; I. 59, 64; II. 119.
Sir Greville, brother of John; I. 483; II. 226.
John, letters from; I. 128, 195, 433, 488.
—— letter to; II. 36.
—— petition of; I. 415.
—— M.P. for Leicestershire (1701); II. 418; III. 10, 14.
—— —— letters from; III. 3, 14.
—— —— letter to; II. 36.
Margaret, letter from; I. 63.
Moll and Nan; I. 63, 67.
Mary, marriage of; I. 63, 64.
Richard, Lord Willoughby de Broke (1696–1711); III. 15.
Sir Richard; I. 44, 70.
—— letters from; I. 47, 63, 67, 68.
—— debts of; I. 69.
John George, pastor in Mehrenburgh, letter from; II. 184.
Vernon:
Mr.; II. 415; III. 85, 87, 89, 90, 98.
—— Justice; II. 20.

Vernon—cont.
Captain; III. 99.
Colonel, III. 75.
Secretary; II. 438, 439.
Christopher; I. 184.
—— letter from; I. 182.
Edward; II. 258.
Sir Edward; II. 228, 252, 310.
—— letter to; II. 259.
Captain Francis, letters from; I. 344, 345, 348.
George, M.P. for Derby; II. 344, 382, 385.
—— and Sir R. Carew; I. 327.
—— letters from; II. 379; III. 5.
Mrs. Mary; III. 5.
Robert; I. 123.
Thomas, son of Sir Thomas; III. 57.
Verona; III. 59.
Versailles; II. 416; III. 120.
fountains play for Lord Kingston (1700); II. 405.
Vesey, Vessey:
Brigadier; III. 101.
archbishop of Tuam; II. 455.
John, bishop of Exeter (1525); I. 39.
Vicars, James; III. 154.
Victory, the ship; I. 13, 17, 37, 109, 189, 302, 304; II. 88, 121, 122, 128, 142.
letters dated; I. 485–487.
Victualling, navy; I. 145–147, 151, 357.
Vienna; I. 336; II. 230, 239, 376, 404; III. 66.
the Diet at; II. 293.
famine at (1621); I. 113.
letters dated; I. 432, 444.
Viette, Pierre, letters from; I. 331, 332.
Vieuville, Marquis de la; II. 241.
Vigo; III. 18.
Villanediana, Conde de; II. 104.
Ville-aux-Clercs, M.; I. 254, 400.
Villeroy, Marshal; III. 28, 43.
Villiers:
Brigadier; III. 188.
Sir Edward, president of Munster (1626); I. 254, 258, 269, 430.
—— pension of 500*l.* for; I. 159.
Lady; I. 429.
Edward, Earl of Jersey (1697–1711); II. 402, 427, 429.
Eleanor and Henry Jermyn; II. 40.
Elizabeth, Countess of Anglesey; II. 106.
George (Buckingham); I. 116, 125, 304, 336, 458; III. 135.
—— letters from; I. 100, 101, 105, 122, 142, 182, 187, 202, 221, 310, 314, 317, 344–349, 357, 360, 361, 363.
—— letters to; I. 98, 99, 104, 105, 108, 119, 120, 122, 129, 150, 160, 164, 168, 181, 204, 216, 232, 273, 287, 291, 299, 334, 343, 355.
—— appointed Master of the Horse (1616); I. 91, 92.
Villiers, George (Buckingham)—cont.
—— made a Privy Councillor (1617); I. 94.
—— rents revenues, &c. of; I. 103.
—— employed in the business of the Spanish match; I. 154.
—— goes to the new well at Wellingborough; I. 168.
—— arrives at the Court when James I. is dying; I. 188.
—— lands at Boulogne; I. 196.
—— goes to the Low Countries; I. 223, 224, 230, 236, 237.
—— goes to Burley; I. 239.
—— goes to Portsmouth, Plymouth; I. 330, 332.
—— illness of; I. 148, 163, 172.
—— information against; I. 242.
—— instructions for; I. 201.
—— gives a polacca to Gilbert Raleigh; I. 207.
—— birth of his son and heir; I. 235.
—— attempt upon his life; I. 314.
—— speech by Attorney-General Heath in defence of; I. 261.
—— impeachment of, by the Commons; I. 269.
—— charges against; I. 285, 348, 350.
—— parts with the lord wardenship of the Cinque Ports to the Earl of Suffolk; I. 359.
—— official notices of; I. 201, 212, 254, 264, 302, 393, 397.
—— his opinion of Sir John Coke; I. 353.
—— petition to; I. 176.
—— death of; I. 364.
—— —— compassed by Richelieu; I. 400.
—— warrant of; I. 356.
Katharine, Duchess of Buckingham; I. 367, 451; II. 126, 191, 193, 237.
Mary (his daughter), Countess of Buckingham; I. 350.
Sir William; I. 296.
Vincent, Mr.; I. 174, 334; III. 101, 102, 106.
Vinch, John; I. 437.
Violet:
the ship, of Lynn; I. 316.
Mr.; II. 103.
Thomas; III. 150.
Virgil, quoted by Henry Moore of Bennington; I. 275.
Virginia; I. 396, 410, 454; II. 38. disturbances in; II. 79, 81.
governor of. See Wyatt, Sir Francis.
governorship of; I. 340.
plantations in; I. 250.
Vivian, Hannibal; II. 85.
Voille, Claude; II. 167.
Vorden; II. 207.
Vost; II. 377.
Vrybergue, Mr.; III. 113.
Vucht; III. 60.

Vyner:
Mr.; I. 124, 159, 174.
Henry, letters from; I. 102, 120; II. 55, 98.
Richard, letters from; I. 297; II. 7.
Thomas, of King's Lynn; I. 275.
—— petition of; I. 163.
William; I. 30, 43, 64, 65, 88.
—— account of; I. 70.
—— letters from; I. 71, 82, 87.
—— letter to; I. 96.

W.

Waad:
Thomas, servant of postmaster Witherings; II. 190.
William, of Dover; I. 180.
—— letter from; II. 92.
Waade, Sir William, Lieutenant of the Tower, letter to; I. 60.
Waal, the river; II. 65.
Waddlesworth, Henry; II. 281.
Waddon, John, mayor of Plymouth, letter from; I. 451.
Wadingworth, Horncastle sessions; I. 5.
Wadland, Mr.; II. 339.
Wael, Mr., commissary; I. 329.
Wagria; I. 333.
Wagstaff, Mr.; III. 5.
Wainstead, letters dated; I. 361, 366.
Wake:
Mr.; II. 70.
Anne, Lady, letter from; II. 70.
Sir Isaac, ambassador to France, Venice, &c.; I. 162; II. 139.
—— letter from; I. 78.
—— letters to; I. 394, 458.
—— funeral of; I. 463.
Wakefield; I. 399, 456; II. 335.
Wakeman, John; II. 114.
Wakerlin. See Weckherlin.
Wakerley, Mr.; I. 339.
Walcot, letter dated; II. 216.
Waldeck, Count; II. 249.
Waldmanshausen, Colonel, petition; I. 126.
Waldram, John, land of, in Odby; I. 298.
Wales:
Chief Justice of; I. 232.
Lord President of; I. 310; II. 147, 157. See also Compton, Wm.; Egerton, John.
—— letter to; I. 2.
Prince of (1610), allowance to; I. 71.
—— (1700); II 412.
—— —— pretended; II. 449.
—— (1716); III. 115.
Secretary of; I. 406.
Wales—cont.
Marches of, Court of; I. 2, 39, 220, 351, 385, 388, 406, 464; II. 228; III. 150, 153.
North and South; I. 2, 300.
Walesbie, Caistor sessions; I. 4.
Walford; II. 51.
Walgrave, Henry, petition of; I. 172.
Walker:
Mr., minister at St. Warburg's, Derby; III. 30.
—— death of; III. 97.
—— Secretary Coke's man; I. 146.
Edmund; II. 445.
—— letter from; II. 456.
Thomas; I. 131, 174; II. 445.
—— mayor of Exeter; I. 213.
—— —— letter from; I. 276.
Wall, General; II. 287.
Wallenstein:
Count; I. 336, 380, 386, 395, 410, 411.
—— report of his death; II. 48.
Waller:
Mr.; II. 295, 330.
—— of Buckinghamshire; II. 376, 377.
—— steward to Lord Paget; II. 450.
Sir William; II. 335, 338, 340; III. 141.
—— takes Malmesbury; II. 332.
—— at Staines; II. 337.
Walles, alias Coke, Thomas, letter from; I. 31.
Walley, Charles, letter from; II. 10.
Wallinger, Randall, ensign; II. 113.
Wallingford House; I. 409.
James I. comes to; I. 172.
Council of War at; I. 295.
letter dated; I. 487; II. 5, 181.
Wallis, John, of King's Lynn; I. 275.
Walloons; II. 33; III. 72.
Wallop:
Sir Henry, audience with Charles I.; I. 351.
John; II. 84.
—— certificate of; I. 470.
Walmer Castle; I. 157, 487; II. 7.
Walmerode, Commissary; II. 115.
Walmisley, Walmsley:
Mr.; II. 417, 419, 422; III. 24.
—— disputed election of; II. 424, 425.
Walpole, Mr.; III. 124.
Walsingham:
Sir Francis; I. 9.
Sir Thomas; I. 212.
House; I. 348.
Walstadt; II. 287.
Walter:
Mr.; I. 421.
Edward, to be Chester herald; II. 173.
Sir John, Lord Chief Baron; I. 382; II. 20, 386, 407; III. 161, 164, 165.
—— letter from; III. 180.
William, letter from; I. 115.

Walthall, Mr.; I. 270.
Waltham; I. 32.
Mr., of Kenn; I. 216.
Richard, J.P., letter from; I. 276.
Abbey; II. 83.
Cross; II. 105.
Forest; II. 52.
Walthamstow; II. 190, 191, 239.
Walton:
Emma; III. 138.
Lancelot; I. 164.
-on-Thames; I. 171.
-on-Trent; I. 450.
Manor; I. 171.
Walwenes Castle and Manor, South Wales; I. 55.
Walwin, Foulke, letter from; I. 173.
Wandel, Ann and Margaret; III. 138.
Wandesford, Sir Christopher, death of; II. 267.
Wanley, Richmondshire; I. 294.
Wansford, Mr., M.P., his speech in Parliament (1628); I. 352.
Wanstead:
Essex; I. 103.
letters dated; I. 57, 459.
Charles I. at; I. 392.
promise of James I. to Secretary Coke at; I. 121.
Wapping; I. 433.
War, Council of, commission for; I. 340.
Warburton, Sir George; III. 12, 57.
Ward:
Mr.; I. 159, 339, 340; III. 94.
Mrs.; I. 417.
—— letters from; I. 420, 425.
Lord Chief Baron (1705); III. 56.
Gilbert; I. 354–356.
—— letter from; I. 157.
John; II. 282; III. 138.
—— certificate by; I. 338.
Rev. John, letter from; II. 387.
Richard; I. 453.
Wardich; I. 146.
Wardour:
Mr.; III. 165.
Sir Edward; I. 229.
Nicholas, signature; I. 128.
Wardrobe, the, order for; I. 423.
Wards:
Court of; I. 153, 156, 181, 456; II. 153, 170, 277; III. 142.
—— Attorney of; I. 118, 293.
—— Master of; I. 24, 103; II. 58. See also Naunton, Sir Robert.
—— fees, revenue, &c., from; I. 103, 291; II. 79.
—— Commons' desire for satisfaction as to; I. 68.
Ware:
Sir James; I. 406.
James, letter from; I. 433.
Waring:
Arnold, of Thorpe Arnold; I. 296.
John, of Eastwell; I. 296.
Richard, receipt by; II. 342.
Wark; II. 235.
Warmouth, William, alderman of Newcastle, letter from; II. 31.
Warner, Mrs., of Surrey Street, Strand; II. 345–357.
Warre, Thomas, grant to; II. 92.
Warren:
Mr.; II. 17, 78, 81, 89, 95, 96, 133.
John, bailiff of Yarmouth, letter from; I. 340.
Simon; I. 164.
Warrington, Lord (1716); III. 117.
Warsaw; I. 331.
Warsopp, knights made by James I. at (1603); I. 43.
Warspite, the ship; I. 13, 32, 37, 41, 210, 240, 301, 302, 304, 355; II. 16.
Warwick; I. 217, 230, 232, 233, 297, 416; II. 7, 39, 55, 98, 136; III. 98.
the ship; I. 296.
Castle, Sir F. Greville's; I. 69, 163, 236–239.
—— visit of James I. to; I. 95.
—— attempt to batter; II. 320, 322.
House, London; II. 168.
Earl of (temp. Eliz.); I. 176.
Countess of (1716); III. 117.
shire; II. 318, 321.
—— ship-money cases in; II. 136.
Wash, the; I. 277.
Washington:
A., letter from; II. 10.
George; I. 199.
Wastness, Sir Hardolph, spared serving as sheriff of Nottingham; I. 236.
Wastspite, the ship. See Warspite, the.
Water Eaton, Bucks; I. 103.
Waterford:
letters dated; I. 477; III. 177, 178.
mayor of; I. 452.
—— letter from; I. 342.
priests of; I. 341.
revolt of; II. 303.
Waterhouse:
Dr., and Dr. Richardson of Trinity College, Cambridge; I. 148–150.
Dr. Tobias, letter from; I. 150.
Waters:
Edward, Justice of the Marches; I. 425.
—— letter from; I. 385.
—— certificate of; I. 426.
Henry; III. 116.
Watkinson:
Mr.; II. 444; III. 13.
Godfrey, letters from; III. 9–11.
Watson:
Mr.; I. 193, 268.
Stephen, master of the Providence of Whitby; II. 113.
Thomas, bishop of St. David's, letter from; III. 19.
William, of Alnwick; II. 21.
Watts:
Mr.; II. 183.
Sir John, letters from; I. 277, 288.
Waugh, Thomas; II. 21.
Wayte, Alexander, of Poole, letters from; II. 191, 192.

Wealch, Mr., loses his election (1701); II. 453.
Weale, George, signature; I. 128.
Weatherhall, Peter, ancient; I. 310.
Webb:
Mr.; III. 38.
Sir Anthony, letter from; I. 95.
Webster:
Mr., of Caldwell; II. 451.
Paul, of Chesterfield; II. 444.
—— letter from; III. 9, 10.
Wechfris, Thomas, letter from; I. 166.
Weckherlin:
Mr.; I. 312, 480; II. 12, 25, 27, 98, 140, 152, 224, 240, 251; III. 154.
—— letters from; II. 68, 117, 118, 123, 132, 152, 196, 239–241.
—— letter to; II. 141.
—— junior; II. 108.
—— G. R., letters from; II. 85, 97.
Ralph, secretary of Secretary Coke, letters to; II. 186, 236.
Wedell, Captain; I. 348.
Wedgnock:
Park; I. 51, 56, 65, 71.
Sir F. Greville's estate at; I. 69.
herbage of; I. 28.
Weeks:
Mr., brewer of Lambeth; I. 200.
Aquila, petition; I. 184.
Richard; III. 107.
Weimar, Duke of; II. 34.
Weissenbourg, letter dated; II. 46, 48, 51.
Welbeck; I. 27; II. 63.
letters dated; II. 60, 120.
Welby:
Mr.; II. 447.
—— of Gouphill; I. 4.
Vincent, of Hawstead; I. 5.
Welde, W., letter from; I. 321, 323.
Weldon, Ralph; I. 123.
Welles, E., letter from; I. 269, 279.
Wellesbourne parsonage; II. 84.
Wellesley; III. 92.
Wellingborough:
letter dated; I. 316.
the new well at, Buckingham at; I. 168.
Wellington, letter dated; II. 109.
Wells:
Norfolk; I. 275; II. 421.
Mr.; I. 108, 161, 445.
Welsh, Mr., a sectary; I. 455.
Wembes, —, prebendary of Lincoln; II. 112.
Wemyss; III. 28.
Wenderby; II. 348.
Wenman, Lord; II. 325, 326, 330.
Wentworth:
Mr.; I. 399.
George, deputy lieutenant of Yorkshire, letter from; II. 208.
Sir George; II. 78, 83.
—— letter from; II. 255.
Godfrey; II. 414.
Wentworth—cont.
Sir Peter; II. 123.
Serjeant-Major; II. 28.
Sir Thomas, speech in Parliament (1621); I. 351, 352.
Thomas, Viscount; I. 171, 172, 270, 371, 393, 417, 480.
—— letters from; I. 420, 475.
—— letter to; I. 401.
—— Lord President of the Council of the North; I. 446.
—— Lord Deputy of Ireland; II. 10, 21, 24, 46–48, 53, 54, 58, 62, 65, 80, 84, 95, 99, 106, 108, 116, 121, 128, 129, 146–148, 150, 151, 155, 157, 164, 179–181, 184, 185, 193, 195, 197, 201, 218, 222, 226, 229, 237, 238, 240, 247, 311.
—— letters from; II. 111, 152, 155, 162, 227, 229, 231, 233.
—— letters to; II. 11, 32, 75, 91, 92, 124, 180, 205, 253.
—— his government of Ireland; II. 92, 268.
—— becomes Lord Treasurer in England; II. 241.
—— Earl of Strafford, articles against; II. 262.
—— —— behaviour in the Tower; II. 267.
—— —— letter to Charles I. from; II. 264.
—— —— trial of; II. 267, 272, 273, 275–279, 282.
—— —— plot to help the escape of; II. 283.
Thomas, Earl of Cleveland, letter from; II. 143.
W.; II. 224.
—— letter from; II. 155.
Wering Flats; I. 328.
Wesell surprised; I. 391.
Weser, the river; I. 380.
Wesly, Valo; I. 482.
Wessington; II. 61.
West:
Captain John, acting governor of Virginia (1635); II. 81.
—— muster master of Virginia; II. 236, 237.
Isabella, Lady De La Warr, letter from; II. 240.
West Broughton; I. 228.
West Chester, a station for arms; II. 306, 307.
West Dean, near Chichester; I. 359.
West Hallam, co. Derby; I. 227.
West Indies; I. 41, 256, 482; II. 39, 133, 135, 435. fleet; I. 222, 226, 238; III. 50.
—— of Holland; I. 482.
—— of Spain; I. 278.
attempts on Spanish possessions in; III. 52.
expedition to; I. 297.
mines of the King of Spain in; II. 293, 418.

West Indies—cont.
trade with; III. 176.
ships from; I. 332.
West India Company, project for forming; I. 192; II. 161, 207.
West Tilbury; I. 279.
Westcombe, letter dated; II. 244.
Westeote, Mr.; I. 209.
Westeott, Lieutenant, muster master of Devon; II. 44.
Westfaling:
Mr.; II. 172, 175, 200, 208.
—— letter to; II. 127.
H., letter from; II. 119.
Westmeath; I. 442; II. 90; III. 150.
Earl of; I. 399, 481, 482. See also Nugent.
Westminster; I. 12. See also London and Westminster.
letters dated; I. 170, 203, 268, 356, 371, 391, 394, 406, 410, 411, 415, 418, 435, 438, 441, 443, 463, 477, 478, 486; II. 12, 24–26, 40, 43, 47, 49, 53, 62, 85, 92, 97, 106, 304.
Assembly; II. 336, 341, 342.
College, letter dated; I. 342.
Hall; II. 267, 314.
—— letter dated; II. 82.
—— bookseller in; II. 409.
—— quarrel in; II. 342.
—— Strafford's trial in; II. 273–280.
Palace of; I. 272; II. 10.
scholars, election of; I. 329.
women at, great concourse of; II. 335.
tumults at (1641); II. 281.
Westmony Island, fishermen trading to; I. 340.
Westmoreland; II. 128, 130, 190.
Earl of (1625), Francis Fane; I. 197.
Weston:
races; III. 110.
Mr.; I. 458; II. 100.
Judge; II. 270.
Anne, William, and John; I. 433.
H.; I. 169.
Lord Ambassador; I. 472.
Richard; I. 310.
Sir Richard, Chancellor of the Exchequer; I. 120, 343.
—— made Lord Treasurer; I. 358.
—— Baron, afterwards Earl of Portland; I. 363, 371, 379, 384, 394, 405, 410, 412, 414, 425, 428, 429, 435, 438, 443, 449, 450, 463, 474; II. 12, 15, 26, 30, 47, 49, 50, 53, 58, 69, 70, 115, 119, 122, 141.
—— letters from; I. 366, 417, 472, 476; II. 48.
—— letters to; I. 409; II. 42.
—— orders of; I. 487; II. 5.
—— out of favour with the King; I. 411.
—— addressed by Rubens; I. 387.
—— sponsor by proxy for James, Duke of York; II. 37.
Weston—cont.
Thomas; II. 24.
William, letter from; I. 409.
Wetham, William; I. 6.
Wetherwicke, Mr.; I. 4.
Wexford; II. 230.
Weybridge; II. 132.
letters dated; II. 126, 130.
Weymouth; I. 167, 175, 207, 344, 383; II. 36.
letters dated; I. 169, 341, 362, 363; II. 192, 193.
mayor of; I. 151, 363.
—— letter from; I. 349.
—— defence of; I. 22.
prize ships at; I. 136.
pressing of seamen in; I. 326, 362.
projected attack on; II. 219.
Lord. See Thynne, Sir Thomas.
Whaddon and Nash, Bucks; I. 103.
Whalley:
Mr.; I. 386.
William, cousin of Secretary Coke; I. 296.
—— letters from; I. 269, 298.
Wharf, Mr., of Clipbie; I. 4.
Wharton, Thomas, Lord; II. 324, 437.
Wheat, price of, in 1623; I. 146.
Wheate, William, mercer, of Mansfield II. 39.
Wheatley, Nathaniel; II. 193.
Whiche, —; I. 441.
Whigs, the; II. 410; III. 105.
Whincop:
Mr.; III. 134.
—— Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin; I. 173.
John, letter from; I. 393.
Dr. John, letter from; II. 168.
Whitaker, Whittaker:
Dr.; I. 31.
Lawrence, letter from; I. 86.
Whitborne; II. 314, 316.
letters dated; II. 136, 146, 154, 156, 158, 159, 169, 172–174.
Court, letters dated; II. 181–183, 197, 208, 211, 232.
parsonage of; II. 158, 199, 200.
Whitby; II. 91, 109, 114.
Whitby Hagborne, manor of; I. 269.
White, Whyte:
Mr.; I. 222–225; II. 327, 350.
Captain; I. 217, 218.
Dr., will of; I. 308.
Cornelius; II. 346.
Francis, bishop of Ely; I. 467.
—— —— letter to; I. 468.
John; II. 326.
Martin; II. 81, 82.
Peter, letters from; I. 373, 381.
Robert, Captain, of Weymouth; I. 175.
—— of Breaston; II. 350, 451.
William; II. 125.
White Bear, the ship; I. 13, 32.
White Hart, the ship; I. 232.

Whitehall; I. 386, 462; II. 37, 46, 59, 107.
letters dated; I. 33, 156, 269, 310, 337, 341, 343–345, 348–350, 354–360, 363, 405, 406, 417, 418, 427, 434, 449, 455, 484; II. 2, 10, 39, 45, 50, 78, 101, 250–252, 351; III. 49, 57, 61, 117, 165, 174.
audiences of Charles I. at; I. 194, 197, 198.
banqueting house burnt (1619); I. 103.
Sir R. Naunton's lodgings at; I. 130. I. 130.
attendance of both Houses on Charles I. at (1641); II. 280.
postmasters, letter from; II. 180.
project of Charles I. to rebuild; II. 186.
Whitehaven; II. 228, 233.
letter dated; II. 237.
White's chocolate-house; II. 392.
White staves; I. 198.
Whitfelde, Whitfield:
Ralph; I. 418.
Sir Ralph; II. 185.
Mr.; III. 57.
Mrs.; III. 34, 35.
Whitgreave, Edward, letter from; I. 88.
Whithepool, Sir William; I. 429.
Whiting, Walter; I. 130.
Whitlock:
Mr., of the Wafery; I. 305.
Mr. Justice; I. 172, 307; II. 68.
Whitmore, Sir George, sent to Yarmouth gaol; II. 330.
Whitson, John, letter from; I. 332.
Whitterne; I. 131.
Whittington, Mr.; I. 270; III. 90.
Whittlesey Fen; I. 277.
Whitton, John, sword-cutler; II. 352.
Whitwell; III. 11.
Whitworth Woods, sold to Mr. Baxter; I. 337, 338.
Wich, Sir Cyril; II. 448.
Wichall, P.; II. 242.
Wickham, Mr.; I. 15.
Wicklow; I. 442, 486; II. 230, 295. lands in, granted to Secretary Coke; II. 156.
Widdrington:
Sir Thomas; II. 306.
Sir William, M.P.; II. 311.
William, Lord (1697), letter from; II. 370.
Wiffin, L., brewer of Thames Street; I. 200.
Wigan:
Hall; I. 401.
witches in (1635); II. 77, 80.
Wiggins, Edward, examination of; I. 396.
Wight:
Isle of; I. 152, 156, 157, 203, 231, 348, 360, 366, 437, 438; II. 42, 191.
—— accounts of the governor of; I. 259.
Wigmore:
Mr.; servant of the Duke of Buckingham; I. 420, 425.
R.; III. 153.
Wilbraham:
Captain, of H.M.S. Mary Rose; I. 186.
Ralph; I. 159.
Sir Roger, death of; I. 277.
Thomas; I. 159.
—— letter from; I. 168.
Wild: See also Wylde.
Mr.; II. 417.
Richard; I. 473.
Serjeant, to be Lord Chief Baron; II. 330.
Wildmore; I. 10.
Wildon Ferry; II. 306, 430–432.
Wilford:
Mr.; II. 337.
Sir Thomas; I. 212.
Wilkes, J.; II. 209.
Wilkins:
Mr.; II. 414, 440; III. 98.
—— "Political Ballads" of; III. 190.
John, M.P. for Leicestershire; II. 418; III. 2, 3, 9, 10, 14, 17, 161.
—— letters from; II. 429; III. 3, 6, 10, 14, 160.
—— letters to; II. 425.
Wilkinson:
Mr.; III. 62.
Roger, brewer of Whitefriars; I. 200.
Willaston; III. 57.
Willcocke, George, letter from; I. 286.
Willelmstadt; III. 15, 35.
Willerton, Spittal sessions; I. 3.
Willes:
E., letters from; I. 304, 307.
Mark; II. 84.
Willett, Henry; II. 350.
William:
Duke of Gloucester, son of Prince George and Princess Anne of Denmark, afterwards Queen Anne, sudden death of; II. 402, 403, 409; III. 17.
Prince of Orange, afterwards William III.; II. 346.
William III.:
coronation festivities; II. 353.
dines at Roehampton with the Earl of Devonshire; II. 354. letter from Princess Anne to, on the death of Queen Mary (1694); II. 359. at Oxford; II. 366.
at Richmond; II. 367. is entertained by the Duke of Zell in Holland; II. 379, 404.
his long speech in the Lords; II. 393, 430.
illness of; II. 400.
gives the French ambassador a favourable reception; II. 411.
falls lame and is cured; II. 435, 438.
and Secretary Vernon; II. 438. his belief in predestination; II. 439. spends his last winter at Kensington; II. 444.

William :
the ship ; I. 217, 230.
—— of London ; I. 234.
and John, the ship ; I. 330.
Williams :
Mr. ; I. 270, 475.
—— clerk of the Alienation Office ; I. 86.
—— collector of revenue from tavern licences ; I. 294.
Captain, of the Centaur of Amsterdam ;
Abraham ; I. 467 ; II. 180, 244.
Sir Abraham ; I. 356 ; II. 263.
John, bishop of Lincoln, Lord Keeper, &c. ; I. 113, 457, 459 ; II. 82, 120.
—— —— letters from ; I. 329 ; II. 85, 112, 152, 153.
—— —— his treatment of the Dutch Church ; II. 127.
—— —— proposed degradation of, for misdemeanour ; II. 160.
—— —— examination of ; II. 164.
John, of Cardiff and Bristol ; II. 137.
—— goldsmith, of Cheapside ; II. 67, 77.
—— Lord, of Thame ; I. 39.
—— and Marie, petition for pardon for intermarrying ; I. 158.
Kenrick ; II. 188.
alias Cromwell, Sir Oliver ; I. 67.
Rosamond ; I. 158.
Thomas, examination of ; I. 252.
Williamson :
Mr., of Gainsborough ; I. 3.
G. ; I. 428.
George and Henry ; I. 159.
Thomas, letter from ; II. 115.
Willis :
Mr. ; I. 30, 127, 386 ; III. 168.
—— servant of Sir F. Greville ; I. 64, 67.
Dr., dean of Lincoln ; II. 444 ; III. 96.
Eleanor, letter from ; I. 126.
Henry, grant to ; I. 446.
Philip, letter from ; I. 142.
Richard ; I. 42, 45, 111, 164.
—— letters from ; I. 113, 156, 170, 190, 195, 308, 390, 409, 430, 431, 433, 434, 446, 453, 454.
Willocke, —, keeper of Bretby Park ; I. 312.
Willoughby ; I. 439.
de Broke. See Verney, Richard.
Charles, Lord, of Parham ; I. 4, 7, 30.
Lord, Lord Admiral ; I. 279, 282, 287.
—— captain of the Footguard ; II. 247.
Francis, Lord, of Parham ; II. 260, 341.
—— —— letter from ; II. 94.
—— —— warrant from ; II. 239.
Sir Francis ; II. 222, 229.
—— letters from ; II. 237, 238, 241.
Willoughby—cont.
Sir Henry ; I. 450, 459 ; II. 42, 228, 252 ; III. 135, 138.
—— letter from ; I. 462.
—— letter to ; II. 259.
—— Francis Coke, a Levite in his house ; II. 45.
John, of Northlewe, Devon, petition ; III. 152.
Lord (1716) ; III. 116.
Sir Perceval, knighted at Warsop ; I. 43.
Robert ; I. 40. See also Bertie, Robert.
Sir Thomas ; II. 419 ; III. 95.
William ; I. 4.
—— letters from ; I. 8, 10, 11, 20.
—— son of Sir Francis ; II. 220.
—— purveyance of ; I. 447.
—— purveyor of timber ; II. 4.
Wills, William ; I. 188.
Wilmot :
Mr. ; II. 284, 288, 319, 322, 441, 451 ; III. 21, 161.
—— sheriff ; II. 346.
—— of Duffield, Derbyshire ; III. 93.
—— of Osmaston ; III. 4, 11.
Mrs. ; III. 68.
Lord ; I. 158 ; II. 183, 193 ; III. 155.
Charles, Viscount ; I. 327, 367, 462 ; II. 91, 323.
—— —— letter from ; II. 75, 83, 85, 91, 150, 152, 287.
—— —— warrant signed by ; I. 385.
Captain Henry, reported death of ; II. 260, 323.
Robert ; II. 358, 385 ; III. 23, 89.
R., letter from ; III. 10.
T., letter from ; II. 243.
Wilne :
ferry ; II. 424.
Edward ; II. 451, 457.
Wilson :
Mr. ; I. 365, 417 ; III. 27, 28.
Colonel ; III. 17, 96.
Arthur, letter from ; II. 168.
Cuthbert, of Durham ; II. 231.
James ; I. 171.
Thomas, letter to ; I. 308.
Sir Thomas, letter from ; I. 224.
Wilton ; I. 214, 429.
Wiltshire :
chaces in ; I. 294.
pressing of seamen in ; I. 360.
Earl of, James Butler (1461) ; I. 55.
—— William Paulet (1551) ; I. 1.
Wimbledon :
letters dated ; I. 261, 297.
Viscount. See Cecil, Sir Edward.
Winchcomb, Mrs., death of ; III. 62.
Winchelsea ; II. 422.
Countess of. See Finch.
Winchester ; I. 45, 472 ; II. 147, 327, 329.
letter dated ; I. 50.
alms-room at ; I. 148, 158.

Winchester—cont.
bishop of (1625); I. 185, 283. See also Montagu, James; Neile, Richard.
—— (1716); III. 117.
bishopric of; I. 467.
dean of. See Morton, Thomas.
mayor of; I. 313.
Windebank:
Francis, afterwards Sir Francis; I. 306, 359, 371.
—— succeeds Sir Dudley Carleton; I. 463.
—— Secretary of State; II. 17, 32, 50, 52, 59, 119, 135, 141, 161, 175, 187, 191, 216, 223, 251, 263–267.
—— letters from; I. 467, 479; II. 10, 15, 16, 20, 25, 26, 43, 49, 53, 59, 62, 85–92, 106, 108, 129, 165, 175, 193, 195, 219, 224, 226, 229–232, 236, 237, 238.
—— letters to; I. 473; II. 18, 91, 118, 235.
—— commanded by the House of Commons to withdraw; II. 264.
—— his flight beyond seas; II. 266, 267, 270.
Windham, Wyndham:
Mr.; II. 245, 264.
his offer for Sedgmoor; II. 169.
Captain, death of; III. 46.
Sir Charles; III. 156.
Edward and Christobella, his wife, nurse to Charles II. when Prince; II. 92.
Sir William; III. 114, 174.
Windley, Derbyshire; II. 451.
Window, Mr.; II. 103.
Windslade, in Clist St. George, near Topsham; I. 213.
Windsor; I. 30, 148, 408; II. 92, 142, 145; III. 48, 187.
letters dated; I. 313; II. 184; III. 16, 121, 181.
Charles I. at; I. 213, 218, 410.
dean and chapter of; I. 172.
fortified against Charles I.; II. 325.
Earl of Essex, Parliamentary General at; II. 327.
Lord (1629); I. 396.
—— (1705); III. 64, 117.
Castle; II. 324; III. 81, 109.
Forest; II. 394.
Park; I. 195; III. 83.
Old, the property of John Mitchell, M.P. for Sandwich (1700); II. 401.
Wines, sweet, not used by Charles I.; I. 293.
Winfield, Wingfield: See also Winkfield.
Manor (Lady Halifax's); III. 3.
John; I. 5, 74, 79; II. 445.
Wing, co. Bucks; II. 403; III. 2, 23, 45, 59, 73, 77, 166, 167.
Wingate, Captain; II. 322.
Wingham Manor, Kent; I. 184.
Winkfield, Sir Edward; II. 132, 171.
Winkleure, John; III. 169.
Winn: See also Wynne.
Francis, customer of Whitby; II. 109, 114.
Richard, huntsman to Princes Henry and Charles, sons of James I.; I. 195.
Winslow, Mr.; II. 72.
Winsor, Mr.; II. 125.
Winstanley, Mr.; II. 444.
Winster; III. 11.
Winter:
Sir John, secretary of Queen Henrietta Maria; I. 294; II. 275, 305.
Sir William, Surveyor of the Navy; I. 176.
Winterton Ness; I. 259; II. 85.
Winthrop, Mr.; II. 38.
Wintour:
Mr.; I. 474.
Sir John; II. 231.
Wintringham, Spittle sessions; I. 3.
Winwood:
Mr.; I. 44.
Sir Ralph, secretary; I. 91, 95, 458; II. 14, 47.
Wirksworth, Derbyshire; I. 71, 163, 319, 408, 423, 446; III. 20, 70, 96.
letter dated; II. 447.
leadworks at; II. 180.
Wisbech; I. 317; II. 72.
Wise: See also Wyes.
Mr.; II. 435.
Henry, memorial of; III. 118.
Nicholas, mayor of Totnes, letter from; I. 279.
Vryan; I. 174.
—— letter from; I. 180.
Wiseman:
Mr.; I. 389.
Arabella, Lady, letter from; II. 408.
John, petition; I. 185.
Sir Richard; II. 302.
Wishart:
Sir John; I. 163.
—— letter from; I. 164.
Wispington, Horncastle sessions; I. 5.
Wissing, his picture of the Princess of Orange; III. 112.
Witchcraft, notices of; II. 53, 77, 80.
Witcher, George; I. 42.
Witherell, Thomas, merchant; I. 210.
Witherings:
Thomas, Postmaster-General; I. 478; II. 15, 16, 18, 20, 47, 78, 83, 98, 100, 119, 129, 151, 163, 175, 235, 236, 248, 249, 254, 256, 267, 269, 275, 283, 294, 315, 331, 333.
—— letters from; II. 6, 17, 25, 149, 191, 195, 224, 262; III. 154.
—— letter to; II. 92.
—— his petition to the House of Commons; II. 262, 314.
—— reported death; II. 190.
Witherington, Mr.; I. 385.

Withinfield, the manor of, granted to William, Baron Herbert (1461); I. 55.
Witteslingen; III. 40.
Woburn, Beds; II. 15, 316, 317.
Woking; I. 208.
letters dated; I. 318, 499.
Wolf, —; I. 391.
Wolfen, Mr.; I. 359.
Wolfenbuttel; II. 287, 291.
Wolferston, John, letter from; I. 405.
Wollaston, Sir John, chosen Lord Mayor of London (1643); II. 337.
Wolmerton, Devon; III. 149.
Wolstenholme:
Sir John; I. 140, 200, 207, 209, 219, 320, 331, 332; II. 101.
—— letters from; I. 142, 156, 183, 211, 214, 229, 231, 233, 278, 329; II. 187.
—— letter to; I. 253.
Wolston; I. 99, 174.
Wood:
Mr.; II. 45, 84; III. 186.
Captain; I. 129; III. 151.
Christopher, of Wilne; III. 141.
George, printer, petition; I. 185.
Josias, constable of Harlow, refractory about ship-money; II. 173.
Robert; I. 172.
Woodborough, prebend of; I. 446.
Woodbridge; I. 187.
Woodcock:
Francis; I. 165.
William; I. 55, 111, 116, 118, 119.
—— letters from; I. 79, 129, 159, 165.
Woodford; I. 219.
Woodhouse:
Thomas; I. 263.
Sir William, Master of the Ordnance of Ships; I. 176.
Mr., of Dyseworth Grange, Kegworth; II. 419, 424.
—— letter from; II. 419.
Woodington, musician to James I.; I. 195.
Woodman, James, bookseller; III. 128.
Woodstock; I. 155, 437; II. 90, 91, 135–137, 287, 290, 324, 349; III. 65, 180.
Charles I. at; I. 311; II. 26, 28.
letters dated; I. 312, 313.
Woodward:
Mr.; II. 307.
Captain; I. 429.
Woolby, Vincent; I. 5.
Woolcote, Mr.; III. 135.
Wooley, J.; I. 9.
Woolgast, letter dated; I. 437.
Woolwich; I. 307; II. 48.
cordage; I. 150; II. 16.
Woorsopp, Mr.; I. 270; II. 68.
Wooton, Mr.; II. 402, 409.
Wooten:
Lord, murder at Hampstead of the gardener of; III. 48.
Sir Henry; I. 330.
Worcester; II. 322, 329.
bishop of (1478), John Alcock; I. 39.
—— (1553) Nicholas Heath; I. 39.
—— (1714) William Lloyd; III. 109, 116.
Castle, history from Edward I.; I. 344.
Earl of (1589–1628), Edward Somerset; I. 30, 92, 185.
Countess of, death; II. 218.
shire; I. 2, 36.
—— riots in; I. 472, 473.
—— sheriffwick of; I. 344.
Workington; II. 223, 238.
Works, office of, and Lord Harley; III. 114.
Worksop; I. 397, 477.
Wormley; I. 116.
Worms; II. 115.
Worral, John, glassmaker, petition; III. 152.
Worsley, Sir Robert, verses on his lady; III. 188.
Worsnam, Worstnam. See Wolstenholme.
Worthington:
Mr.; II. 47.
Edward; I. 64, 65, 70.
Father, doctor of Douay; I. 407.
Wortley:
Mrs.; III. 169.
Sir Francis; II. 281.
—— his duel with Lord Carlingford; III. 154.
John, certificate by; I. 338.
Wotton: See also Wooton.
Mr.; II. 15, 85.
—— of Milton, Bucks; III. 65.
Charles Stanhope, afterwards Wotton; II. 439.
Henry; I. 24.
Sir Henry; I. 230, 380.
—— letter from; I. 305.
—— visits Venice; I. 92.
Wratislaw, Count; III. 44.
Wray:
Mr.; II. 61.
Sir Christopher, Lord Chief Justice; I. 3; II. 342.
Hild, letter from; I. 149.
Wren:
Dr., of Peterhouse, Cambridge; I. 357.
Matthew, bishop of Ely; II. 229.
—— —— letter from; II. 243.
—— bishop of Norwich; II. 103, 154.
Wriothesley:
Henry, Earl of Southampton; I. 39, 168.
—— —— letter from; I. 167.
Thomas, Earl of Southampton; II. 57, 77, 302, 304, 310, 314.

Wright :
Mr., of Eyam, death of ; III. 57.
—— Clerk of Parliament ; I. 412, 459, 460.
F. ; II. 457 ; III. 15.
—— letter from ; II. 417.
Hugh, letter from ; II. 128.
James, of Bradley ; I. 4.
Captain James ; II. 347, 353.
John ; II. 443, 445.
—— clerk to the Earl of Devonshire's troop (1688) ; II. 345, 347.
Sir Nathan, Lord Keeper ; II. 398, 401, 408, 411 ; III. 8, 14, 15, 27.
Robert, bishop of Lichfield and Coventry ; II. 74, 123, 277.
—— letter from ; II. 352.
—— letter to ; II. 259.
Thomas ; II. 445.
—— letter from ; II. 412.
—— of Sudbury ; III. 54.
Tobie ; I. 245.
William ; II. 61.
Wrooth, Lady ; I. 83.
Wroth, Captain John, letter from ; III. 164.
Wurtemburg ; III. 42.
Duke of ; I. 338 ; III. 44, 71.
—— garter for ; I. 44.
—— death at Sluys ; II. 429.
Wurtzburg, bishop of ; II. 115.
Wyan :
Mr. ; I. 251.
—— of Doctors' Commons, letters to ; I. 253, 256.
R., letters from ; I. 249, 261.
Wyatt, Sir Francis, governor of Virginia, letter from ; II. 236.
Wyche :
Jane, Lady, letter from ; II. 229.
Sir Peter ; II. 221, 229, 230.
Wye, the, navigation ; III. 148.
Wyes, Thomas, letter from ; I. 276. See also Wise.
Wylde : See also Wild.
Captain Henry, letter from ; II. 110.
Sir John ; I. 212.
Wymondham ; II. 159.
Wyndham. See Windham.
Wynland ; I. 418.
Wynne : See also Winn.
Mr., solicitor of Lord Strange ; II. 7.
Colonel ; III. 178.
Ellis ; I. 328.
Godfrey, letter from ; I. 275.
Peter, of Flintshire ; II. 188.
Sir Richard ; II. 210.
Wyon :
Mr., sells Captain Steward's ship ; I. 134.
Richard, letter from ; I. 225.
Wyre prest ; I. 294.
Wythe, Robert, letter from ; I. 203.
Wytton, John, letter from ; II. 244.
Wyvell, Robert, letter from ; II. 208.

Y.

Yandall, John ; III. 121.
Yarborough, Louth sessions ; I. 6.
Mr., of Northrop ; I. 3.
Yardley, Mrs. ; III. 186.
Yarmouth :
Castle ; I. 190.
Great ; I. 253, 436, 485 ; II. 72, 105, 106, 139, 141, 183, 185, 190, 202 ; III. 101, 117.
—— aldermen of ; III. 151.
—— bailiffs of ; I. 455, 467.
—— —— letters from ; I. 319, 322, 340, 367, 480.
—— corporation of, beg licence to export herrings in stranger bottoms ; I. 322.
—— —— petition for a new lecturer ; I. 465.
—— fisheries of ; I. 367 ; II. 143, 169.
—— gaol of ; II. 330.
—— letters dated ; I. 251, 283, 327, 411, 468 ; II. 70, 72, 144, 169, 243.
Isle of Wight ; I. 151, 203.
Yelverton ;
Henry, Viscount Longueville ; III. 33.
Mr. Justice ; II. 68.
Yonge : See also Young.
Patrick ; II. 84.
Sir Richard ; II. 61.
—— letters from ; II. 126, 130, 132.
York ; I. 445, 446 ; II. 15, 27, 31, 63, 204, 255, 260, 328, 331, 435 ; III. 9.
letters dated ; I. 420, 475, 480 ; II. 16, 23, 40, 44, 68, 95, 155, 205, 209, 211-213, 224, 353.
apprentices, punished by Charles I. ; II. 313.
archbishop of (Tobias Matthew), letter from ; I. 283. See also Matthew, Tobias ; Mountaigne, George ; and Harsnet, George.
—— (temp. Henry VII.) letter to ; I. 268. assembly of peers at (1640) ; II. 263, 316.
association of gentlemen of ; II. 323.
Charles I., his house at ; II. 210.
—— summons various persons to meet him at ; II. 220.
Council of. See North, Council of the.
House, letter dated ; I. 247.
Manor, letters dated ; II. 55, 63, 108, 113, 174, 227, 228, 232, 235.
mayor and aldermen of, censured ; II. 23. removal of the Mint to ; II. 309.

York—cont.
musters at; II. 189.
postmaster of; II. 44.
prisoner going to, rescued by women; II. 23.
privy seal sent to; I. 199.
St. Mary's, tenant of; I. 163.
shrievalty of; I. 286; II. 219.
shire; I. 372, 379, 395; II. 211, 212.
—— addresses of the gentry of, to Parliament (1700); II. 403.
—— deputy lieutenants of, lists of; II. 205, 208.
—— foresters of; I. 15.
—— gentry of, assembly of; II. 316.
—— forcible levy of money in; II. 275.
—— North Riding of; II. 128, 130.
—— —— constables of; I. 480.
—— trained bands called out; II. 227.
Yorkhill Manor, Herefordshire; I. 40.
Youghal, letters dated; I. 254, 321, 348.
Young:
Mr.; I. 454.
Captain Wm.; II. 319.
Young Purpose, the ship; I. 305.
Yoxhall Lodge, letter dated; II. 412.
Ypres; I. 236.
Ysche, the river; III. 62.
Yessel, the; I. 236, 391.

Z.

Zackerley, II., brewer; I. 200.
Zamoiskey, Lord; I. 331.
Zante; I. 165, 249; II. 204.
ships of; I. 238, 482.
Zawadski, John, accredited by Poland to convey condolence to the Queen of Bohemia on the death of the Elector Palatine (1632); II. 2.
Zealand; II. 110, 145, 168.
Admiral of; I. 163.
ships, &c. of; II. 92.
Zell; II. 376–380.
description of; II. 380.
Duke of; II. 379, 388, 389, 391, 403.
Zinzan:
Sir Sigismund, an outlaw; I. 185.
Henry (alias Alexander, Henry), petitions of; I. 195, 199.
Zouche:
Sir John; I. 276; II. 56.
—— to be governor of Virginia; I. 340.
Sir Edward; I. 173, 471.
Dr., judge of the Admiralty Court; II. 91, 292.
Zurich; I. 338, 475; II. 37, 175.
letter dated; I. 338.
Zutphen; I. 17.
letter dated; II. 52.

162242
Gov.Doc. Great Britain. Historical Mamuscripts Commission
G.B. The manuscripts of the Earl Cowper,K.B.,
Com preserved at Melbourne Hall, Derbyshire.
Hi 3 vol.in 1.

DATE. NAME OF BORROWER.
May 31 48 H Macaulay Glad

University of Toronto Library

DO NOT REMOVE
THE CARD FROM THIS POCKET

Acme Library Card Pocket
LOWE-MARTIN CO. LIMITED